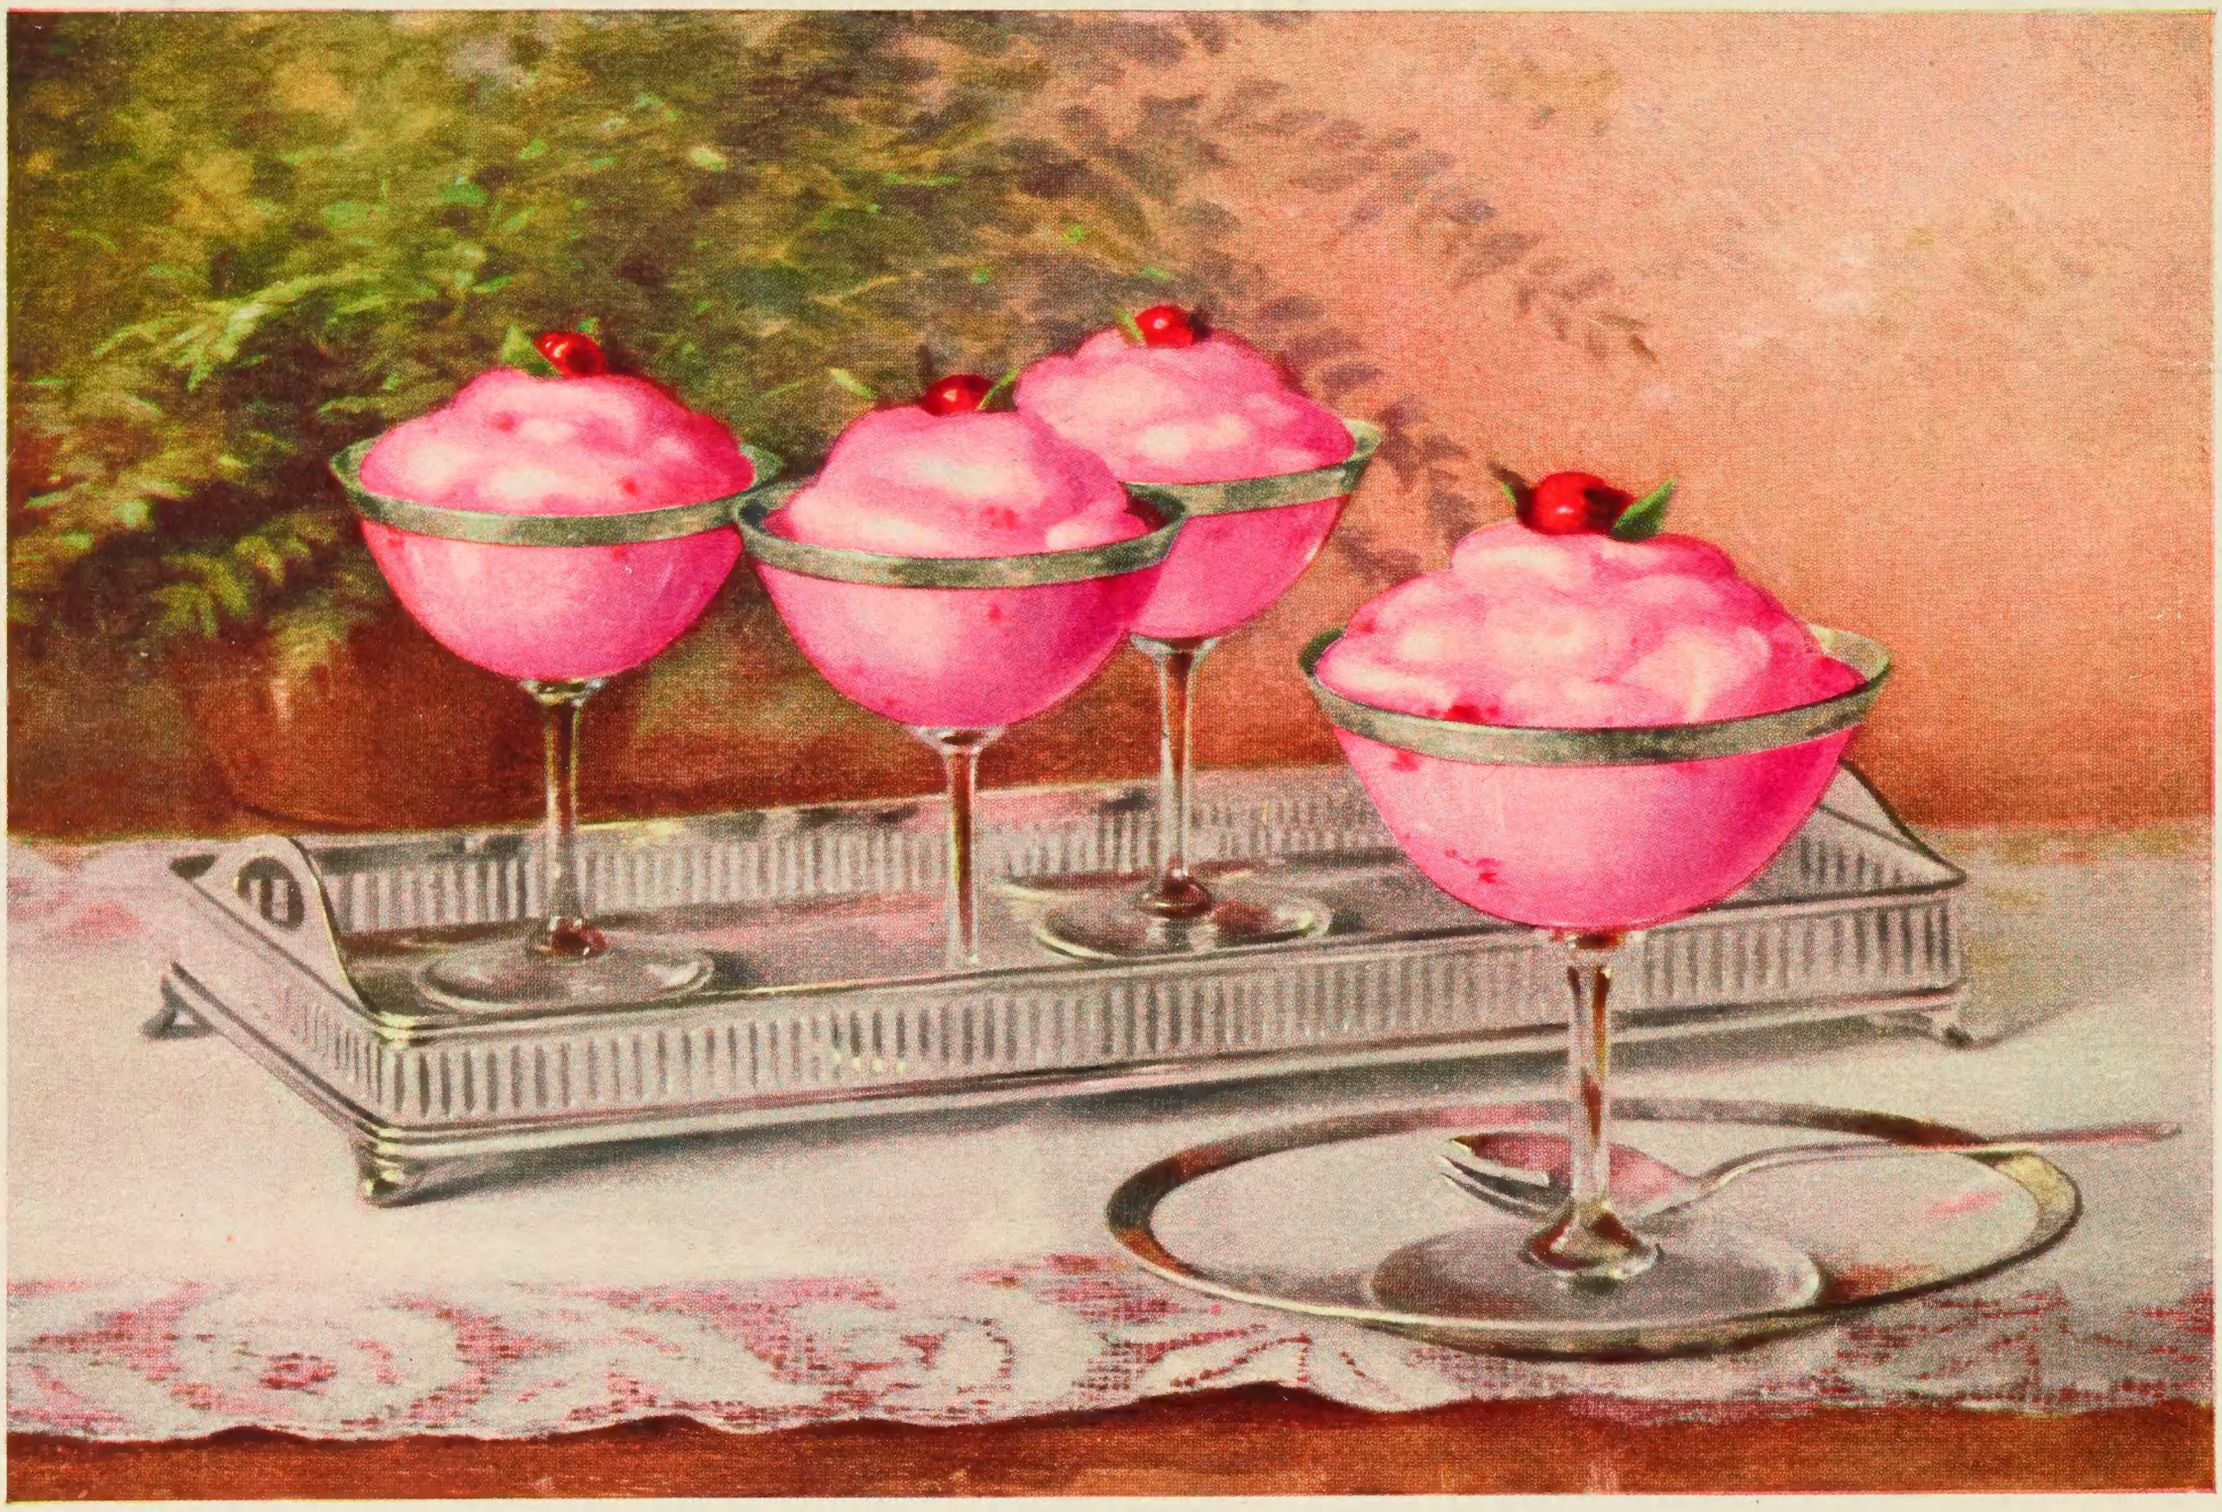
THE DELINEATOR

FROM A PAINTING BY LUCIUS WOLCOTT HITCHCOCK



KATHLEEN NORRIS ZONA GALE ELLIS PARKER BUTLER L. M. MONTGOMERY

NEW YEAR FASHIONS

ANUARY 1925

THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, NEW YORK, N. Y., U. S. A.

TWENTY CENTS THE COPY
$2.00 A YEAR—$2.50 IN CANADA

Cherry Whip

©1923 BY THE GENESEE PURE FOOD COMPANY

For Special Occasions

TEMPTING and delicious as the mould of clear, sparkling, glowing Jell-O may be, and appropriate as it undoubtedly is for almost every occasion, there are special days and special events when something even more inviting, and more beautiful and delightful, is in demand. Some holiday party, or some family fete day when the best that is to be had in sweets or delicacies, is in order. It is on these occasions that Jell-O comes to the housewife's aid most efficiently and adequately.

Cherry Whip

Dissolve a package of Cherry Jell-O in a pint of boiling water. When cold, but not yet congealing, whip to consistency of whipped cream. Pile into a glass dish or serve in individual glasses with whipped cream or custard sauce.

To whip Jell-O successfully, use a Ladd or Dover egg-beater and a dish rather deep but not large. When Jell-O has become cold and is still liquid set the dish in a pan of ice water or very cold water and whip until Jell-O is of consistency of whipped cream.

JELL-O

America's Most Famous Dessert

THE DELINEATOR

MRS. WILLIAM BROWN MELONEY Editor

W. MARTIN JOHNSON Art Director

VOLUME CVI JANUARY, 1925 NUMBER ONE

Published monthly by THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., U. S. A.

UNITED STATES BRANCHES:
2231-2249 South Park Avenue.....Chicago, Ill.
350 Mission Street.....San Francisco, Cal.
79-89 Marietta Street.....Atlanta, Ga.
105 Chauncy Street.....Boston, Mass.
1201-3-5 Washington Avenue.....St. Louis, Mo.

FOREIGN OFFICES:
27 Avenue de l'Opéra.....Paris, France
83 and 84, Long Acre .... London, W. C., England
468 Wellington Street, W....Toronto, Ontario, Can.
319 Elgin Avenue.....Winnipeg, Manitoba, Can.

George W. Wilder, President Truman S. Mersereau, Secretary Chas. D. Wilder, Treasurer

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: The price of THE DELINEATOR is $2.00 per year, or 20 cents per copy in the United States and its possessions, also Mexico and Cuba; to Canada, $2.50 per year; to all other countries in the Postal Union, $3.00 per year.

Copyright, 1924, by The Butterick Publishing Company, in the United States and Great Britain. Entered at Stationers' Hall, London, England. All rights reserved.

Entered as second-class mail matter July 12, 1879, at the Post-Office at New York, under the act of March 3, 1879. Additional entry at Los Angeles, California, San Francisco, California, and Portland, Oregon

OUR GUARANTEE: We absolutely guarantee the reliability of every advertiser in THE DELINEATOR. If any reader incurs a loss through misrepresentation of goods in any advertisement in THE DELINEATOR, we guarantee that this loss will be refunded. If the advertiser does not make it good, we will. G. W. WILDER, President of The Butterick Publishing Company.

FROM the EDITOR'S POINT of VIEW

ARE YOU A BEGGAR IN YOUR HOUSE?

ONE of the greatest needs of American life to-day is that the home be put on a definite business basis. We are convinced that many marriages fail because of financial arrangements which are neither fair nor just. And it is our belief that both the men and women are at fault in this.

In THE DELINEATOR'S Home-Making Department Martha Van Rensselaer published several articles on budgeting and on the need of business methods in running the home. In response she received thousands of letters from home-makers all over the country who asked her for help in solving their income problems.

We believe that one of the greatest services THE DELINEATOR can perform this year is to bring together the best minds available and obtain from them such wise counsel as will help every one of its readers to organize her home as simply and as efficiently as her husband has organized his business.

A few of the rocks on which homes break are: ungenerous allowances, extravagant wives, emergency purchases and a lack of planning, incomplete partnership between husband and wife in the business of home-making, and chiefly the absence of a budget for the spending of the family income.

Every successful business organization from our national government down to the smallest notion-store keeps its books and works on a budget.

If you are not willing to do the simple work necessary to keeping a budget, you are apt to be a "beggar in your own home."

It may be that your husband can not easily be convinced that you are able to handle the family income with profit. Prove it to him. Set up your own bookkeeping account; know exactly what you are spending and what you have to spend. Tell him that THE DELINEATOR will help you organize and budget your expenditures. Ask him to sit down with you and THE DELINEATOR Account Book and plan the use of your income.

Look about you at the successful men in your town. They have all been practical organizers. Look at the most successful wives in your town. They are those who know how to live within their incomes so that there is always a margin to spare.

Do not be "the beggar in your house." Be the business woman in it. Let THE DELINEATOR help train you to be the successful manager of your own home. Write to THE DELINEATOR for information on household budgeting.

REAL PHILOSOPHY

THE writer of the following letter is a woman of artistic tastes, raised in moderate ease, who since her marriage and the birth of her six children has drudged in what to one of her class is sordid poverty. She wrote to a friend out of her heart, unconscious that she had discovered anew one of the oldest and greatest of philosophic secrets, one which doubtless she had read a dozen times in the words of others but which had remained a shadowy phrase until she conceived it afresh out of her own pain.

"I have turned over a new leaf," she wrote. "I have resolved that I'm going to have happiness no matter what happens. And I am already happier than I have felt for a long, long time.

"There is so much in life I have wanted and felt was my due, yet haven't had, that I was getting bitter. So I just decided I'd stop then and there and make a violent change. If I couldn't be happy in the way I had expected and wanted, I'd be happy some other way.

"It's a wonderful plan and not nearly so hard to carry out as I had thought. Of course I backslide sometimes—especially days like to-day, when I'm tired and everything in the house goes wrong and the children are hard to manage. But I'm honestly trying to keep it up, and I believe I'll succeed. And it is so much more sensible than the other way! No woman ever gets just what she expected in life, and why should I think I'm the exception?"

Any one who achieves real happiness after the first flush of his youth and vigor and dreams have gone has either consciously or unconsciously created his own personal philosophy.

THAT MOST PRECIOUS SENSE

THROUGHOUT the ages the world has lost the work of some of its greatest geniuses through blindness.

Milton as a boy studied by the flicker of firelight and came to middle life in utter darkness. A wise parent might have saved his sight and the bitterness, grief and abandoned work which followed.

For a generation music-lovers the world over have gone to Nôtre Dame Cathedral in Paris to hear Bierne pour out his heavenly music from the great organ beneath one of the famous rose windows. Those rose windows! People who love the beautiful, no matter what their creed or faith, have sat in the great space of Nôtre Dame and been exalted by the beauty of those marvelously colored windows sifting all the lights of the world through sunbeams. And there, just beneath the window, sat the great musician, releasing heavenly music. Yet the shadows that gathered around him closer and closer never awakened his instinct for self-preservation. And so the day came when the Mass and the Vespers had to be played from memory alone, for blackness had descended upon the musician, while his soul still spoke through his slender hands.

Here in America we have had our own tragedies due to crimes against nature and the sight of men. One of the greatest publishers America ever produced was the elder Joseph Pulitzer. Coming to this country as a penniless immigrant, having to work through daylight hours for mere existence, he spent his nights and early mornings in libraries poring over books. There were no night schools in the boyhood days of Joseph Pulitzer. Education was won then even as Abe Lincoln achieved his knowledge—by a book and a night light. Librarians in St. Louis were familiar with the sight of the poorly dressed, underfed boy who sat on the steps each morning, waiting to be admitted as soon as the doors were opened. Through that labor and the patience of hard years, Pulitzer made himself a scholar. With his native talents and his hard-earned knowledge he became a power politically and financially in this country. But nature was revenged against his early abuse of his eyes. In the middle of his life, with still many years in the race to run, he stood on the deck of a ship where he was cruising in the Bosporus and on an early Spring evening said suddenly to one of his secretaries, "How early the sun has set!" That night Joseph Pulitzer knew that the sun had set for him forever.

Twenty-one per cent. of the men unaccepted in the United States Army draft in the World War were refused because of defective vision. And twenty-four per cent. of the men rejected in England were refused for the same reason.

Yet with all this history of tragedy and with all the opportunities in the world to acquire the knowledge to prevent these losses, we go on letting children read in wrong lights, letting mothers come to dim vision and fathers to loss of work because the simple rules of sight conservation are not obeyed.

The Lighting Educational Committee has been conducting an educational campaign, working chiefly through the public schools of the country, to teach the simple laws of right lighting. If the children of your family report that this work has not been carried on in their schools, write to the Lighting Educational Committee, 680 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Practically all children have the chance to have good, strong eyes, and yet before reaching high-school age forty per cent. of them have some form of defective vision. Do not let this handicap be put upon your children. No matter where you live, no matter what your work or your age, this educative campaign of the Lighting Educational Committee is important to you.

NEW-YEAR RULES FOR SUCCESS AND HAPPINESS!

The Ten-Point Success Creed

WORK AND EARN
MAKE A BUDGET
RECORD EXPENDITURES HAVE A BANK-ACCOUNT CARRY LIFE INSURANCE
OWN YOUR HOME
MAKE A WILL INVEST IN SAFE SECURITIES
PAY BILLS PROMPTLY SHARE WITH OTHERS

A FRIEND—WRONG OR RIGHT

THERE is an old judge of the Supreme Court in New York who recently in private conversation was heard to vigorously defend one of his friends who had fallen by the wayside. He was challenged for defending a man who had been proved to be wrong.

"That was only one failure," said the old judge. "Consider the fine things about him——"

"But," objected one of the critics, "I don't see how you can stand up for this fellow even if he is a friend. He certainly was wrong."

"Any man will stand up for you when you are right," replied the old judge. "But it takes a friend to stand up for you when you are wrong."

And there was silence.

WINTER SAFETY

A READER of THE DELINEATOR asks us to make the following appeal for Safety First during the Winter months:

(1) Make your sidewalks safe for pedestrians.
(2) Have new-fallen snow shoveled off promptly.
(3) Clear your icy pavements, or at any rate strew them with sawdust or ashes.
(4) Avoid broken bones.

"THE LOST SPEECH"

MOST of us think of Abraham Lincoln as an ungainly, lonely man—inspired and full of courage, gentle with weak and suffering humans, relentless in his struggle for the protection of those things he believed to be best for mankind.

Few of us think of Lincoln as a figure in romance. And yet he was a dominant influence in more than one great American love-story. Readers of THE DELINEATOR are familiar with the writings of Honoré Willsie, who at one time edited this magazine. Many of you will have read her "Benefits Forgot," a Lincoln story built on facts, which was rated as one of the best stories of 1919.

And now this gifted writer has done another great Lincoln story. It is truth interpreted dramatically and humanly. "The Lost Speech," which will appear in the next issue of THE DELINEATOR, is a romance for romance-lovers and a powerful story for you to read to your children. We believe "The Lost Speech" will survive the mass of fiction written to-day and will still be read when this generation will have passed on.

A COMPLETE TABLE OF CONTENTS WILL BE FOUND ON PAGE 70

Lib 322 1/10

T.T500
D3
v.106-107
1925

Drawing by Charles R. Chickering

The Awkward Age

By ANGELO PATRI

THE years between childhood and early maturity are years of stress for children and parents. This is natural, because adolescence is a paradoxical stage of life, when the child is all right because he is all wrong. He is an adult carrying grave responsibilities and a child crying for his toys. Weeping and laughing, as soon one as the other, he can be counted on to-day but not to-morrow. He is forward and retiring, an idealist and a self-seeker, a coward and a hero between the rising and the setting of the sun. He is torn by a score of battling selves, each one struggling to keep its precarious footing.

The anxious parents and teachers trying to adjust this rapidly changing creature are almost distracted. Pulled hither and yon by the straining child, their nerves are frazzled and their tempers testy. They long to help the child because of his great need, but the solution of to-day will not meet to-morrow's problem and each new aspect of growth is as baffling as the last.

We begin, usually, with the wrong idea. We think we must make changes in the child—we must form his mind, we must set his character. We can never do this. The child must do it all for himself. Parents and teachers may advise and guide, but on the child himself rests the burden of self-discipline, self-control and soul growth. How is he to be convinced of this? How can we show the way?

It is wise to accept at the outset the fact that the adolescent boy or girl has emerged from childhood and no longer needs or profits by the training and discipline of childhood, the time when he was unconscious of individuality and readily submitted himself to the dominance of the parental will. This will go a long way toward establishing the right relationship at home. The adolescent deeply resents any infringement upon his newly discovered personality. He is very jealous of his young and easily wounded dignity.

"I've got to get away from home. Mother won't let me alone for a minute. Jumps on me for the least little thing. She's always waiting for me to do something so she can pounce on me.

"The other day she locked up my baseball-mit because she caught me catching with Red Murray. Red's all right, but mother doesn't think so. I had to get dad to beg it away from her. Now I keep it down at Red's house. I hate anything like that. Makes you feel so cheap.

"Same thing with the girls. If I walk down street with one of them, mother makes it mighty unpleasant. I have to sneak down the side streets so she won't know anything about it. I can't stand it. I just got to get out until she makes up her mind to let me alone and give me a chance. I just got to go."

NOW this boy—and the same story holds for his sister—needs his home and his mother more now than he ever will again, if that be possible. But he must lose them both because his mother can not let go of certain fixed notions that belong to the past. She can not realize that her baby is gone and that in his place there is a stranger child with all the rights, all the dignities, all the idiosyncracies that go to make up the strange compound of a human being. She can not sense the swift growth that changes him from day to day with a speed that leaves him achingly tender. So she makes a mistake and nags him.

Real growth of mind or body or soul can not be nagged into fulness. Never. It must be given space and leisure and the gentle stimulation of wise affection. It will not help to disregard the sensitive consciousness of youth. The new personality must be recognized and accepted and nurtured.

EACH child differs from every other in the world, and in adolescence these differences, like everything else about him, are exaggerated and very marked. Unstable to the point of insanity, he is often misjudged and mistreated by his best friends. "Goodness, Helen never behaved this way." "John never thought of such things." "No child ever did anything like this. This is awful." The best we can do is to study the child in question and try to interpret the signs he throws out from time to time. Rightly understood, they will help us to guide him.

When a child gives as his reason for not getting along well in his studies that his perfectly clear-speaking teacher has a speech defect, or that he can not read her writing on the board because it is so scrawly, or that she never explains things to him, it is time for you to go to school. If he becomes short-tempered and irritable; if he says time after time when you rebuke him for disobedience, "I never heard you say that"; if when you send him for something that lies in plain sight he returns lamenting, "I can't find it, it isn't there," and when you go and show it to him, cries petulantly, "It wasn't there when I was looking"; if he complains bitterly, "You never help me," when you are forever at his elbow, make up your mind that the fault lies in his own disturbed self and try gently and firmly to remove the cause.

Look well to his health. Much of the difficulty of this age rises out of a disregard for the laws of hygiene. Great changes are taking place in the structure of the body. Like the swaying sapling on the edge of the forest, the child must be protected and shielded from the storm until his timber is seasoned.

No adolescent child should be ill. He should never feel the weight of his body, and he won't unless he is abusing it. His food must be watched, his play provided for, his exercise supervised and his work judiciously assigned.

Obedience to the laws of health are basic to the development of the adolescent character, truly disciplinary because they are inevitable and impersonal, fundamental because they react on the spiritual growth of the children. A healthy mind grows in a clean body, and from the healthy mind and fine body springs the soul, the fruition of all our living.

Everything that causes a child to stop and consider and choose between what is right and what is not is a developing process and food for his soul. Every time he makes a decision in favor of what seems right to him, his soul expands and his spiritual life is that much the richer. His must be the choice. Growth can never be forced upon him. Souls are shy private things that must not be surprised in their stillness. They must be gentled into expanding to a perfect beauty. But again, how?

For each child the different way, his way, according to his kind! His growth in his own affair; he alone can attain it. We can advise and suggest and make clear the way, but we must then stand aside and watch and hope for the happy ending.

A good way to begin is to learn to listen and so get to know the child who is close to you. Learn to gather up what he infers rather than what he says outright. His spirit speaks in the overtones and your ear must be attuned to catch them. Rarely has youth the gift of articulate speech.

Respect the personality of the child to whom you listen. Extend to him all the courtesy, all the delicate consideration, all the discretion and tactful silences that you would show an honored guest. A hint of formality flavors the contact and draws the wistful disciple toward you, whereas a rude familiarity would send him scuttling to cover.

Brush up your sense of humor and keep it in good working order. Call on the memories of your own youth. Be patient with the jokes and the riddles and the wild schemes he delights in. Bring out a few of your own riddles and conundrums and do a little planning on your own account just to keep the doors of communication open.

KEEP off your pedestal. Don't be afraid to let the children know you are human and that you, too, made mistakes and did silly things and had to pay for them too. When Helen thinks her heart is broken and John plans what to you seems a disastrous undertaking, resist the temptation to cut them off short with a sharp pronouncement and tell them a story of how it was with you. Preaching won't do, and the too evident moral is fatal. Youth must make its own deduction or go without.

Praise and encourage and flatter them. Put it on with a trowel and they will thrive under it. Nothing fills them with aspiration like good words. Plan with them. Build castles in which they as the princes and princesses will live happily ever after. Youth follows a vision.

Feed their idealism. Now is the time when life is a crusade and their cause the right cause to death or victory. Cheer for their enthusiasms and be tender toward their illusions. Help them to hold their faith in the goodness and rightness of people. Help them to see the struggle of those about them to reach toward the best.

When all things fail, when the child you have worked for and prayed for creeps away from your protection and seems bent upon his own destruction, keep your faith in him and hold on. Remember that when he was very little you taught him the way he should go, and now he is not going to depart so far from it that he will not soon find his way back. Your faith will hold him and he will come through safely—not perhaps as you dreamed, but in a better way you had not glimpsed.

"I Won't Be Home for Dinner To-night!"

How often does your husband say that?

Each time it happens you wonder, you worry. Is it really business that keeps him down-town? Is he tired of you and hungering for another woman's company?

Probably the only thing he is hungering for is food! Delicious, unusual dishes properly seasoned, delightfully served—the kind of food he gets at clubs and hotels, but not at home!

To-day there is no excuse for monotony in home cooking. The New Butterick Cook Book contains not only hundreds of recipes to suit every taste, but expert advice on serving, setting the table, buying foods, carving and scientific information on food values. No recipe can possibly fail if you follow the careful instructions given with each one in The New Butterick Cook Book.

The New BUTTERICK COOK BOOK

Just a Few Items from the table of contents

APPETIZERS
SOUPS
SOUP ACCESSORIES
GARNISHES
STUFFING AND SAUCES FOR FISH, MEAT, POULTRY AND GAME PRESSURE COOKER
FRENCH RECIPES
ENTRÉES MADE-OVER DISHES
MEAT SUBSTITUTES
CHAFING-DISH RECIPES
CASSEROLE COOKERY
FIRELESS COOKER

What Shall I Have for Dinner To-night?

Don't ask yourself this worrying question. Just turn to the chapter on menus and meal-planning in The New Butterick Cook Book, page 46. Dinners with and without meat, breakfasts, lunches, suppers, special vegetable luncheons, special menus for Thanksgiving Day, Christmas, weddings, card parties, children's parties, etc., are given in The New Butterick Cook Book.

Don't Peel To-night's Potatoes until you have seen the 40 different potato recipes given on pages 415-425 of The New Butterick Cook Book. Variety is the spice of life, especially in cooking, and you get plenty of it in The New Butterick Cook Book—50 recipes for eggs, 60 kinds of salads, etc.

53 Ways to Quench Your Thirst

Drinks for hot weather, cold weather, any weather—you will find concoctions to suit every taste in the beverage section of The New Butterick Cook Book, starting page 603.

Every Up-to-Date Housekeeper Should Have

at least one pressure cooker. This quick economical method of cooking by steam pressure is thoroughly explained in The New Butterick Cook Book. On page 639 you will find pictures of three different kinds of pressure cookers.

A Chafing-Dish Party

Seventeen delicious recipes for late-at-night suppers—lobster à la newburg, crab rarebit, etc.—you will find them in The New Butterick Cook Book. See page 617.

Unusual Recipes

En Casserole cooking, made-over dishes, meat substitutes, appetizers, garnishes—these are all found in The New Butterick Cook Book.

Every Possible Kind of Pickle, Preserve and Jelly is included in the "canning" section of The New Butterick Cook Book, starting page 673. The cold-pack method of canning, the open-kettle method, various hot water-bath processes, are all discussed; time charts for all these methods and the various foods are also given.

A Day of French Cooking for a Change

Fish en coquilles, potatoes à l'archiodoise, mocha pudding—for these and many other Parisian delicacies see pages 643-661, The New Butterick Cook Book.

Can You Serve a Formal Dinner In Russian Style?

For information on decorating and setting the table, for placing and passing dishes, for seating the guests, turn to page 67, The New Butterick Cook Book.

Can You Cook a Whole Meal In the Fireless Cooker?

The next time you are going out for the day and won't be back until just before time to prepare dinner, turn to page 632, The New Butterick Cook Book, before you go.

Can You Carve Turkey Properly?

Charles Faissole, maître d'hôtel of the Ambassador Hotel, New York, shows you with pictures on pages 83-87, the correct way to carve a turkey. In The New Butterick Cook Book you are also told how to carve roasts, fish, steaks, legs, saddles and even roast pig.

In Case of Illness

can you prepare an invalid's tray day after day so that it will be both tasty and nourishing? Beef tea, egg-nogs, chicken broth, rice jelly—these are a few suggestions in The New Butterick Cook Book. See page 662.

What Does Your Husband Really Think of Your Pie-Crust?

Not what he says, but how he eats it, will tell you the truth. A good pie-crust covers a multitude of domestic sins. Give a man good pie and good coffee and he will tell the world you are a good cook. Good pastry isn't hard to make—but you must know—not experiment; you must measure—not guess. See The New Butterick Cook Book.

On sale at all bookstores and Butterick Departments or send direct. Clip this coupon. MAIL TO-DAY!

The Butterick Publishing Company Dept. J-1
Butterick Building, New York

Please send me a copy of The New Butterick Cook Book for which I will pay the postman only $2.50 for the book, plus postage ($2.65 prepaid), when it is delivered to me. My understanding is that I may return this book after 5 days and have my money refunded if I am not fully satisfied.

NAME_____

STREET and NO._____

CITY_____ STATE _____

In Canada send coupon to The Butterick Publishing Co., 468 Wellington St., W., Toronto

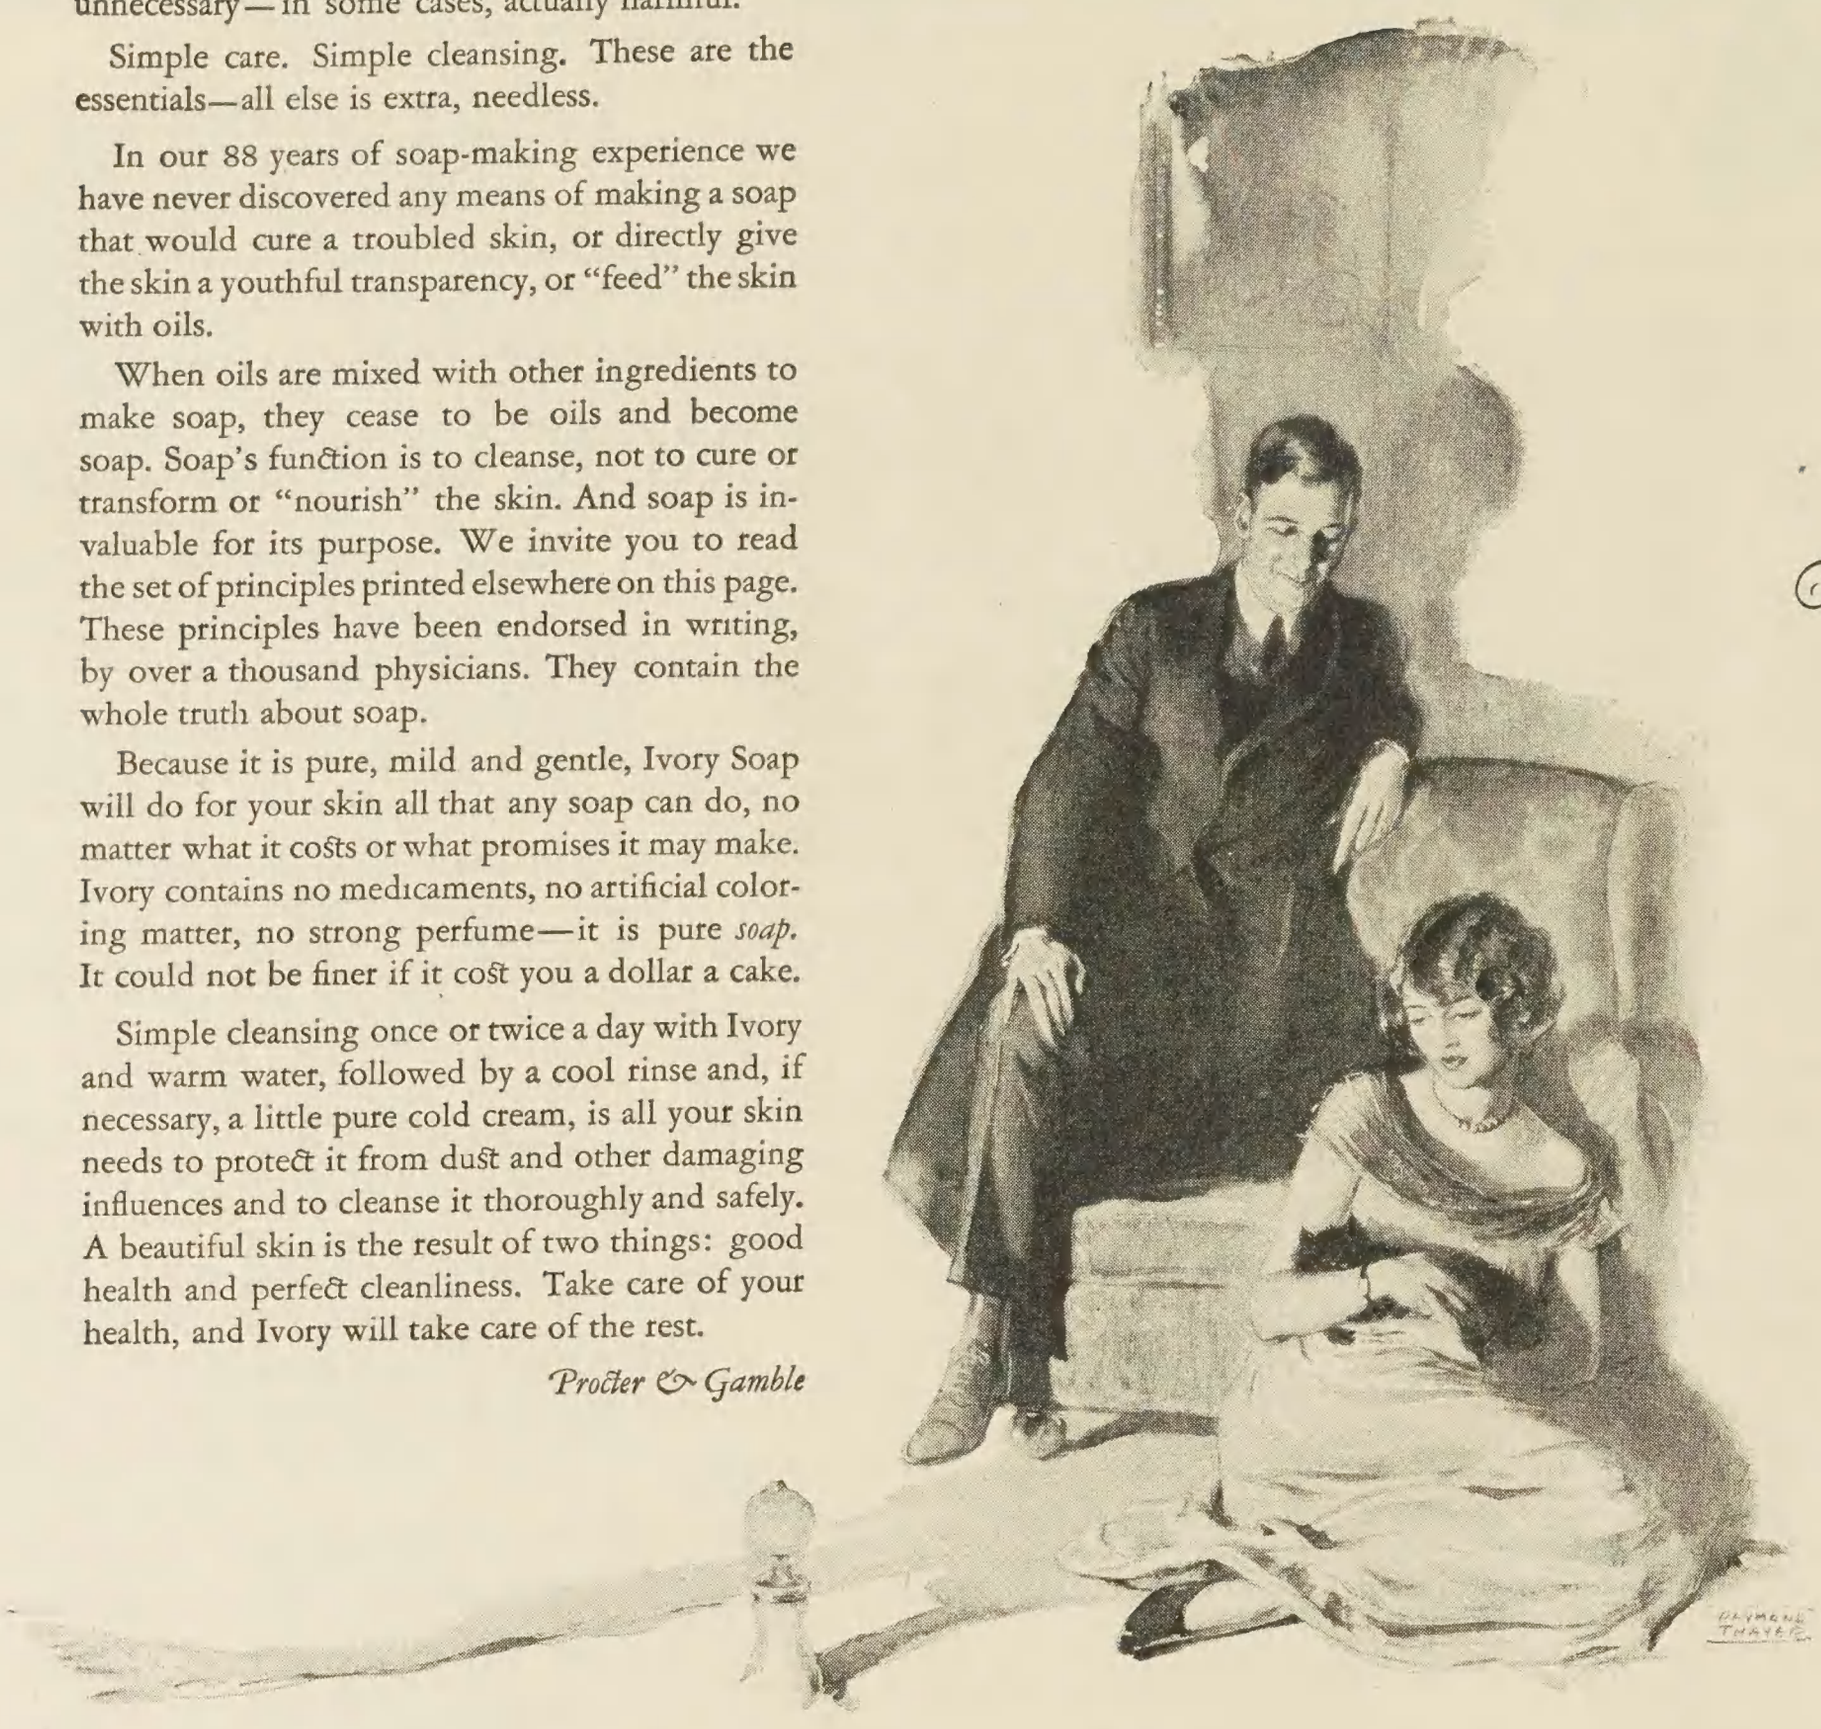
Simple as a primer; complete as an encyclopedia—The New

BUTTERICK COOK BOOK

Simple care triumphs over beauty's enemies

WHAT a relief to women who now lavish attention upon their complexions if they could talk for five minutes with a real authority on the subject! For they would find that practically all their methods and preparations are unnecessary—in some cases, actually harmful.

Simple care. Simple cleansing. These are the essentials—all else is extra, needless.



In our 88 years of soap-making experience we have never discovered any means of making a soap that would cure a troubled skin, or directly give the skin a youthful transparency, or "feed" the skin with oils.

When oils are mixed with other ingredients to make soap, they cease to be oils and become soap. Soap's function is to cleanse, not to cure or transform or "nourish" the skin. And soap is invaluable for its purpose. We invite you to read the set of principles printed elsewhere on this page. These principles have been endorsed in writing, by over a thousand physicians. They contain the whole truth about soap.

Because it is pure, mild and gentle, Ivory Soap will do for your skin all that any soap can do, no matter what it costs or what promises it may make. Ivory contains no medicaments, no artificial coloring matter, no strong perfume—it is pure soap. It could not be finer if it cost you a dollar a cake.

Simple cleansing once or twice a day with Ivory and warm water, followed by a cool rinse and, if necessary, a little pure cold cream, is all your skin needs to protect it from dust and other damaging influences and to cleanse it thoroughly and safely. A beautiful skin is the result of two things: good health and perfect cleanliness. Take care of your health, and Ivory will take care of the rest.

Procter & Gamble

The scientific basis for the use of

SOAP

The following set of principles has been endorsed by over a thousand physicians of highest standing and is offered as an authoritative guide to women in their use of soap for the skin:

1 The function of soap for the skin is to cleanse, not to cure or transform.

2 Soap performs a very useful function for normal skins by keeping the skin clean.

3 If there is any disease of the skin which soap irritates, a physician should be seen.

4 To be suitable for general daily use, a soap should be pure, mild and neutral.

5 If the medicinal content of a soap is sufficient to have an effect upon the skin, the soap should be used only upon the advice of a physician.

6 In all cases of real trouble, a physician's advice should be obtained before treatment is attempted.

Here are a few of the many comments from PHYSICIANS upon the above principles:

"This program is unassailable from any point of view."

"I am in agreement with your platform. It cannot be improved upon."

"There is nothing more to say. There can be no honest difference of opinion."

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100% Pure—It Floats

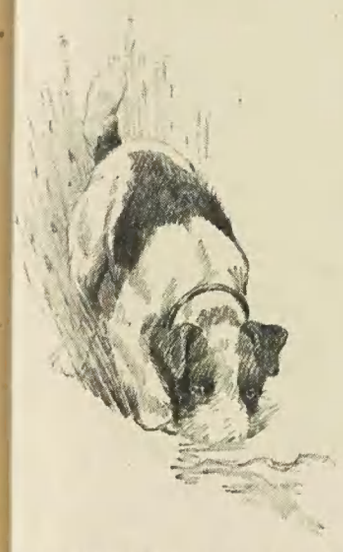
Guest Ivory, the dainty new cake of Ivory made especially for face and hands, costs but 5 cents.

© 1925 Procter & Gamble, Cincinnati

DOG WANTED: MALE

As funny a story as "Pigs is Pigs"

By America's foremost humorist
ELLIS PARKER BUTLER



Drawings by Robert Dickey.

WHEN RUMPUS WASN'T DIGGING UP MR. BURRIDGE'S TOMATO-PLANTS OR BITING THE POSTMAN'S LEGS, HE WAS CHASING CATS

IN HIS moments of loss of self-control, Mr. Burridge was apt to forget the gentler graces of civilization and, as his wife said, be off again. Mr. Burridge was bald and stout and looked overfed.

"Laura," Mrs. Burridge used to say to her daughter when she saw Mr. Burridge's face turning scarlet, "for heaven's sake be careful—your father is off again." She also used to say to her daughter: "I do wish your father wouldn't garden—it makes him so angry." This was because Mr. Burridge was one of those pinkish-looking men who take to gardening enthusiastically, but who, before all the ground is spaded, become irritated at the injustice of the world and want to bite some one's head off. Mr. Burridge always planned a much larger garden than he could handle, and the larger the garden the angrier he was apt to become.

FOGARTY'S DOG DUG UP MR. BURRIDGE'S TOMATO-PLANTS AS FAST AS HE COULD PLANT THEM

So Mrs. Burridge, watching the breakfast eggs for the exact moment to snatch the frying-pan from the stove, looked out of the window apprehensively when she heard Mr. Burridge swear, and she was just in time to see the spade clang up against the side of Mr. Fogarty's garage—the spade Mr. Burridge had thrown at Rumpus, the dog of Mr. Fogarty, who lived next door. She heard the dog give a yelp of fear and she saw Mr. Burridge swing the four-tined garden-fork above his head and throw that at the dog also. The fork missed the dog by forty feet and stuck upright in the ground near Mr. Fogarty's kitchen steps, quivering. Mr. Burridge then leaped out of his garden and picked up a box that had contained tomato-plants and threw it with all his might at the dog.

"Laura," said Mrs. Burridge to her daughter, "you had better put the coffee on the table; I think your father is through gardening."

As Mr. Burridge went to recover the garden-fork, little Mrs. Fogarty came to her small back porch.

"Oh, dear!" she said in the apologetically sweet voice that had become a permanence with her since her husband had brought Rumpus home. "Oh, dear! Has our dog been bothering you again?"

MR. BURRIDGE'S GARDEN-FORK MISSED THE DOG BY FORTY FEET AND STUCK UPRIGHT IN THE GROUND NEAR FOGARTY'S KITCHEN STEPS, QUIVERING

FOR answer Mr. Burridge turned his back on Mrs. Fogarty, jerked the fork from the soil and threw it into the middle of his garden. He brushed his hands together angrily, as if to say: "I'm through! Dogs—dogs—dogs! Ten million useless curs digging up everything a man plants!" He yanked his coat from the limb of the small tree on which it hung and strode toward his kitchen door, his mouth grimly set.

"Laura," said Mrs. Burridge nervously, "for heaven's sake be careful; your father is off again! Call Ted."

"Teh-dee! Teh-dee! Teddy! Theodore!" called Laura at the back door, but no one answered. She drew back against the door-frame and Mr. Burridge stalked past her and through the kitchen without a word. He went up to the bathroom.

From under a spiræa bush close to the Fogarty property line young Ted Burridge stuck out his head and looked toward the kitchen door. As he did not see his father, he came all the way out and Rumpus leaped toward him wagging his short tail and panting artificially in a manner he had of showing joy and delight.

BY DAY HE BARKED SIX BARKS PER SECOND, STEADILY AND CONTINUOUSLY; BY NIGHT HE WAILED, LONG SAD WAILS

"Nice old Rumpus! Good old doggie!" Ted comforted him, an arm around Rumpus's neck, patting him on the head gently. "You didn't get hurt, did you, doggie? You're a good old doggie, ain't you, doggie?"

"Ted, you come right in to your breakfast this minute!" Laura called to the boy. "If father sees you hugging that dog——"

"All right, doggie," said Ted, ignoring his sister as bossy elder sisters should be ignored. "I'll see you after breakfast, doggie."

"You and that dog!" Laura exclaimed as Ted slid past her into the kitchen. "You'd better look out, young man; father'll be terrible if he catches you petting that dog."

In the bathroom Mr. Burridge washed his hands and when the cake of soap fell to the floor he kicked it viciously. The soap leaped over the door-sill, skidded the full length of the hall and landed in the small room.

Having washed well, including the top of his head, Mr. Burridge went to his bedroom and jerked six pairs of trousers off the closet hooks, throwing five of them on the floor. He threw one shirt under the bed and tore three collars raucously, and thus dressed for business. He then threw practically all the remaining contents of his dresser into a suitcase, put it on the floor and stepped on it and locked it, and went down to breakfast. He was, it may be explained, a little irritated. This is a nice sort of world where a man can't plant a tomato-plant and then turn his back without having some confounded dog dig it up again the same instant!

"Now, listen to this!" ordered Mr. Burridge when he was seated before his eggs and coffee. "Jane— For heaven's sake, can't you pay a little attention to me once in a while?"

"Why, I— Why, yes, George! I'm listening," said Mrs. Burridge hastily.

"Well, it's a wonder! Nobody ever listens to me in this house and it's about time some one did. I want you to buy a dog!"

"A—a what?" gasped Mrs. Burridge.

"A dog. I said a dog, didn't I? I went out there this morning to plant my tomato-plants, in my garden, on my own property. And what happened?"

NOW AND THEN HE RAISED HIS HEAD AND SNIFFED THE AIR QUESTIONINGLY, THINKING CATS, BUT THERE WERE NO CATS

No one ventured to say what happened. It was not the moment for any one to make any remark. Mrs. Burridge and Laura and Ted knew from experience that father was off again and that now was the time to be silent and show deep and concerned attention.

"I worked like a slave over that garden, that's what happened," said Mr. Burridge, "and I planted those tomato-plants and that dog of Fogarty's came over and began digging. He dug them up faster than I could plant them—that's what happened. And if it's not one dog, it's another. I'm sick and tired of it. I'm through!"

No one denied that Mr. Burridge had a perfect right to be through. All tried to look as if Mr. Burridge was entirely justified in being through.

RUMPUS LEAPED FOUR FEET FROM THE FLOOR FOR THE LUMP OF SUGAR MR. FOGARTY OFFERED

"I'm through!" repeated Mr. Burridge again. "Jane, how long have I owned this house?"

"Why — why — sixteen years," said Mrs. Burridge nervously.

"Sixteen years!" echoed Mr. Burridge. "For sixteen years I've owned and for sixteen years I've been a good neighbor, and for sixteen years I've set my foot down and said 'No dog!' Ten thousand times I've said 'No dog!' How many times have you said to me, 'George, don't you think Ted might have a dog?' How many times? And what did I say?"

"Why—why—" stammered Mrs. Burridge.

"Yes," said Mr. Burridge, "and it is a nice state of affairs. Here I've got a son eight years old——"

"Nine," said Ted, and Mr. Burridge glared at him.

"Who asked you to talk?" he demanded. "You keep still till you're spoken to. Here I've got a son nine years old, a boy who deserves a dog if any boy does, and I've

Continued on page 63

"BUT I WANTED YOU TO KNOW," MINNIE WENT ON, "THAT FATHER IS RATHER HARD-PRESSED. THAT THE WEDDING MOTHER HAD SET HER HEART ON WASN'T GOING TO BE EASY TO MANAGE—SO MOTHER THOUGHT OF THIS WAY OUT"

Drawing by Charles R. Chickering

HAPPY NEW YEAR

By

ZONA GALE

Should lovers be intent on nothing but themselves?

THEY looked like figures in a painting by Millet—Michael Chapin, rough, rosy, meditative; and his wife Esther, gray, smiling, figureless. They were seventy-something, and life had taken life from them. There had been fifty years on the Ohio farm—sixty for him, for the farm had been his father's, and he had "worked 'round" there since he could remember.

Life had taken life from them. They sat by their kitchen hearth in lamplight and knew that to-night they must talk about what was left.

"It's time for Luther Burns to be here, if he's coming," said Michael.

"Not hardly." His wife always held out a hope.

"Oh, he'll come," said Michael grimly. "If it's about the money."

"It can't be," said Esther, "because he knows we haven't got it."

He smiled at her. The amusement of finding himself superior to her in wisdom never failed him. He loved her, but he had few recreations, and feeling superior to his wife was one of the best of these.

"If it is that," she replied, "it's Minnie that's put him up to it. She'll want a nice wedding for little Minnie, and what we owe them would help out."

"No use hatching up a case," said Michael uneasily. "Let's drop it. If Lute Burns comes, he comes. And if he doesn't, no harm done—what was that?" His expectation was out of key with his stolid words.

It was nothing. Esther went on with her thought:

"I don't blame her wanting to give Minnie a nice wedding."

She fell silent, but he knew. If their own little girl had lived and had married at Esther's age, they might now have been planning their granddaughter's wedding.

Into that silence filtered the roll of wheels, and Luther Burns spoke gently to his horse and came to the door, came so softly and swiftly that he was pushing it open before they knew that he had alighted.

"Good evening, neighbors," said he, and slipped instantly to a chair. He sat silent, looking up, bright-eyed and complaisant. He bore neither the aspect nor the manner of the successful farmer that he was.

They said the little things that neighbors say. Then Michael and Esther sat silent, as if they were waiting for some sentence. All three knew that, if Burns wished, he could order their little farm sold at sheriff's sale. And yet he sat there, so gentle, so quiet, even so deferential. His voice was so soft it seemed impossible that he could order a sheriff's sale. Michael and Esther liked him.

"Little Minnie all ready for her wedding?" Esther asked at length.

"Been all ready for six months," said her father, "and flying 'round like a scared hen, doing everything over twice. Her mother too. In fact, her mother the most."

"That must be nice," said Esther.

"Women like doing nothing twice over," Michael offered. There was something terrible in his eagerness to stress his fellowship with this neighbor, to recall their common ground. And Burns responded, met Michael's eye, grinned.

"Costs like the dickens, though," he offered, in his turn, looking to Michael for sympathy. Michael nodded, a swift fear in his eyes. So it was the money. "That's what I come to see you about," Burns concluded neatly.

Again Michael and Esther were silent. Fifty years ago they had entered that kitchen together for the first time. The brief funeral service for the new-born baby had been held here one bitter Winter morning. Michael had brought Esther out here in his arms to sit by the fire in that convalescence. Here they had read over both mortgages together. Innumerable days they had sat together there at the table, innumerable mornings she had worked here alone, and evenings after Michael was in bed. Was this the end—Burns sitting here, so gentle, so soft voiced, asking them for the money which they didn't have?

"I know you haven't got it," Burns's voice went on gently. "I won't pretend I don't know that. There's been some bad years—I know how it's all come out. Same time I need a little money. So I've come with a proposition."

They listened, as helpless as two in an invisible net.

"Make the farm over to me," said Burns, "with the understanding that I can sell the north forty, and nothing else, in your lifetime. And that during your lifetime mother and I are to take care of you."

He was constrained to repeat it for them in other words. There was so much to be understood. He repeated it in his soft voice, taking all pains to make everything quite clear. If he had been the one to profit as he was trying to make it evident to them that they would profit, he could not have been more gentle.

"We make the farm over to you," said Michael at last, "and you take care of mother and me the rest of our lives when we need it. And you agree not to sell any of it but the north forty while we live, and we put all that in the deed. Is that it?"

That was it. The proposition hung in the room like a cloud. Like a bell it echoed in the silence. At the end of a long day, a gray cloud and the tolling of a bell.

"If we don't do it, what then?" was on Michael's lips, but he said nothing. He would rather not know that. Or it might have been that he did know.

"Mother and I'll have to talk this thing over," Michael said at last. She had always been "mother" since that one swift sweet year; never another year like that one, but the old title held.

"No hurry," said Burns, and rose. "Suit your own convenience, you know." There could not have been a more perfect host for a mortgage.

"Is your wife pretty well?" Esther wanted to say something, so she repeated a query with which she had welcomed him.

The first note of hardness which had come to their visitor's voice touched along his words.

"She's the same old captain," said Luther Burns, checked his tone with a laugh and went away.

Esther turned to Michael. Her eyes held the terrible grief of old eyes.

"Oh, papa!" she said. "Papa!"

That was all. Then she straightened, brightened and almost made him think that this fitted in with what came next. "Ain't this a wonderful way out?" she concluded.

Michael turned to Esther.

"Why did this happen to us?" he cried passionately. "I've worked as hard as any man. What makes me the one?"

They stood before that abyss.

"It's the best we can do," he said dully.

She echoed: "It's the best we can do," and was able to add, almost gaily: "And no more worrying!"

A voice came into the room, as if it were arriving on its own account—a voice of life, a girl's voice:

"May we come in?"

In the dun farm kitchen she was like sudden lilacs, sudden spiræa.

"Darlings," she said, "I want you to know Dean. I want him to know you, too! You're all three angels—and he's also an artist."

Back of her stood Dean, looking not at the other two angels, it appeared, but at her, at "little Minnie," whose name from childhood had distinguished her from "big Minnie," her mother—Mrs. Luther Burns.

"He," this Minnie proceeded, "is my angel. At least, he's going to be mine after the wedding, though he imagines I'm going to be his." Abruptly, as she looked in the old faces, she fell silent.

"These mutual property qualifications—" began Dean gaily, and he fell silent too.

For something in the two before them, a shadow, a passion, a tear, seemed to still away light words. They shook hands silently, almost formally. It was Esther who carried it off, her eyes still misty.

"We congratulate you," she said primly. "And you must congratulate us. After fifty years of hard work on this farm, your father, Minnie, has just made it possible for us to end our days in quiet."

"What's he done?" asked Minnie, with an eyebrow of unmistakable suspicion.

ESTHER told her, doing her best to wave the information like a banner. Perched on the arm of Esther's chair, Minnie listened and said nothing. Dean, lounging in the doorway, listened and looked at Minnie, who looked at the floor and finally observed that the minute you owned anything you had to begin to figure, and that she preferred to be penniless and avoid mathematics; and—would they both come to her wedding?

"It's my wedding," she observed, "though Dean thinks it's his. Why not? I'm getting everything and Dean's getting nothing."

"You can see for yourself," Dean put in, "how upset she is in her mathematics."

These two went away in a little while, down the Summer dusk. Esther and Michael stood looking after them. Suddenly Esther laid her head on Michael's shoulder and began to sob.

"Don't, mama—don't," he said. He seldom called her that. Usually it was the more self-conscious "mother."

"They'll have something sad, too," she sobbed, and then caught herself bravely back. "Listen at me! What's the matter with me? It'll be all right for them if only they keep on loving each other the way we have."

Drawing by Charles R. Chickering

HE PUT HIS ARM AROUND HIS WIFE. THEY STOOD BEFORE THEIR OLD HEARTH. THE LIGHT OF THE ROOM FLOWED ABOUT THEM. THE WHOLE ROOM SEEMED SUDDENLY EXCEEDINGLY BRIGHT

Michael made one of the few jokes of his life, just when it was most sorely needed. He said: "It's no credit to you to be a brick. You've got the habit."

Meanwhile, down in the Middle Pasture, with the moon rising, the two lovers who should have been intent on nothing but themselves were thinking of themselves not at all.

"Mummy's done that," said Minnie Burns. "She's so shrewd I'm ashamed of her."

"But isn't there something to be said for that plan?" her lover urged. "To have all responsibility taken away——"

"Who wants all responsibility taken away?" cried Minnie. "You're talking about their farm, their home for fifty years. Now they're to live on it almost as tenants—and be taken care of till they die! I'd hate that. So would you. So would father. He has merely let mother talk him into this. Dean," she said solemnly, "if our children ever catch us being 'smart' in a business deal and doing somebody else out of something, I hope they won't stand for it."

"So do I," said Dean. "But," he added, "they'll never catch you there, my darling. You'll give away the advantage, just out of good manners."

As he stood, the shadow of box-elder leaves fell on Minnie's hair, but her little face was all in darkness and glimmered like a star. Her voice came from darkness.

"It's not only good manners," she said. "So often, in the few business things I've had, while I've argued about something, I have suddenly had the sense of being the other person. It's a strange feeling—quite suddenly I seem to feel that the other person and I are not two different beings, each with a separate point of view, but just one. Does that sound crazy, Dean?"

He answered with his cheek against hers.

"Not so long as you feel that way about me."

"That's what love is. One feels that way all the time about some one one loves. But you can't always feel that with somebody you're opposing or even only listening to. And when you do, everything changes. It takes all the starch out of you. It takes away all the fun of fighting. And sometimes—oh, I felt it just now with those two dear people—I felt as if it were my farm——"

Her voice broke. But in his arms he heard that voice, smothered against his coat, come out in a cry of indignation:

"How could mother do that? How could father let her?"

"You ought to be one even with them, you know," he suggested humorously.

She flashed up at him reproachfully: "Not when they do things like this. It won't do any good, but I'm going to tell them what I think of it."

"You do like the fun of fighting," he challenged her. "That's enough about them. I want to hear about you and me."

MOST of the countryside heard about "her and him" in the days which followed. It was to be a quiet wedding. But there is no such thing. The moment that the date was set, the love of romance in the neighbors flared up and spent itself in talk of guests and gifts, and of dishes and decorations, of trousseau and travels. Nothing remained without its speculation. All the world loves a lover, so all the world identifies itself with a wedding.

This excitement almost absorbed the minor interest, known also to all the neighbors, that Michael and Esther had "given it up" and were henceforth "to be taken care of by the Burnses." The further consideration that their farm was to belong to the Burnses when the Chapins were done with farms and farming forever figured in the accounts, but as an additional reason for sympathy with the Chapins rather than as an asset for the Burnses. And this sympathy spent itself in a way to make Michael and Esther still more miserable.

"Beats all," said Michael grimly, "how folks do love to say, 'I feel so sorry for you.'"

He did not want to go to Minnie's and Dean's wedding, but on the morning of the wedding-day this objection was composed. Luther Burns sent over a hired man with a note. The papers would be ready that afternoon, the lawyer who had drawn them would be at the house; would Michael and Esther mind signing them?

"Tell him all right," said Michael heavily.

THE wedding-day was blue and purple, washed with gold. These two crossed for the last time the land which for half a century they had called their own. The two mortgages had not seemed to matter—these left to them free will. The new arrangement mattered like a wound.

Cars were parked round Luther Burns's house and in the barnyard; guests were on the veranda and under the trees; and from within came the tentative sound of strings.

"We'll sign it away to fiddling," said Michael.

The two neat figures went up the steps, and in the hall Luther Burns met them.

"Minnie wants to see you," he explained. "Little Minnie. She's up-stairs. She wants you both to go up."

A hope leaped faintly in Esther's heart; she could not have told why. Until her name was actually written and the ink dried, her optimism would expect a reprieve. But when she faced that upper room to which they were shown, her hope failed again.

At the foot of the bed stood Mrs. Luther Burns. She was a captain of a woman, as her husband had said. She was not large, but she was incredibly definite: Pointed eyes, pointed chin, pointed nose, pointed elbows—it was astonishing that she could radiate in such sharp points without becoming a star. But she had no light, that was it. She was as blank and thick as clay.

"It was Minnie that sent for you, but it was me that wanted to speak to you," she said, "to tell you to take no stock in what she's going to say to you."

Little Minnie, in her wedding-gown and veil, rose from her dressing-table. She was looking very lovely, and quite calm. She walked straight to Esther and took her hands.

"I've failed," she said. "I thought I might have everything arranged, but—it was too much for me. Father promised me to do nothing about your farm until we got back home. But mother has gone on with it—and now it's too late."

"A bargain's a bargain," said her mother. Her voice was edged, too, like the rest of her. "It wasn't for you to come in here with your sentiment. I don't stand for such notions. A bargain's a bargain——"

"But I wanted you to know," Minnie went on, "that father is rather hard-pressed. That the wedding mother had set her heart on wasn't going to be easy to manage—so mother thought of this way out. It's only fair for you to know that father had a buyer for the north forty before he proposed what he did. And it'll be the first payment on that—on your north forty—that'll pay for our wedding." Tears were on her face now.

Esther put out her hands. "Oh, my dear," she said, "don't you mind like that. You couldn't help it. It's all right. We haven't very long——"

Minnie thought: "That's the worst part."

Mrs. Burns's voice rose. "What are you making such a fuss over?" she cried. "What do you two care about owning, as long as you're comfortable?"

Minnie faced her. "Mother," she said quietly, "I want to tell you now, on my wedding-day, that you've given me one present that you hadn't counted on, and one that I hope I can pass on to my children: That possession can be a poison, as the Chapin farm ought to be to us. I won't forget."

"Listen at that ingratitude," said her mother. "When I did it for you!"

ESTHER felt a stir of pity for the woman. "If it was me, wanting to give a wedding for my little girl that died," she said, "I might have done the same thing."

And Mrs. Burns cried: "Of course you would! Any mother would! And I was trying to make it easy for you."

"We know all about that," said Michael heavily, and nobody knew quite what he did mean.

"The papers are in my room," Mrs. Burns said briskly. "I'll have up father and a couple of witnesses—there's enough of 'em handy. Might as well sign now."

Esther looked at her curiously. In the last half-hour before her daughter was to leave her!

From suspicious proximity, Mr. Burns appeared. The witnesses, he said, were ready; and if Mr. and Mrs. Chapin and his wife would step this way— The four went into the next room.

Minnie sprang up and opened the door which led to the passage.

"Dean!" she called.

From his room the groom appeared as if he had been waiting the summons; and he came with an alacrity which seemed to say that he had in fact been waiting that summons all his life.

"Darling," he said, "how dear of you—and how lovely you look—what's the trouble?"

"Dean——"

"My heavens, you don't want to back out?"

Her kiss satisfied him, but her face still held its grief. She told him.

"But your father promised to wait until we get back!"

"It's mother—she's the one. Can't we do anything?"

He looked at her sadly. "This," he said, "is the first disappointment to come to you from marrying a poor man."

"This," she said grimly, "is one of the things that happens when your family wants property. It wasn't just the wedding. It's the poison of the greed for adding field to field."

He cried: "Dearest, this is terrible! To spend our last minutes talking so!"

Her smile came through her tears in a way which always charmed him. "Our last minutes!" she mocked. "Is that the way you feel? Then hadn't we better say good-by?"

They did, almost gaily, although her eyes were still shadowed. "With our last unmarried breath, Dean," she said, "let's promise each other——"

She hesitated, her loyalty fighting with her honesty.

"—never to handle anything the way that mother has handled this," she said bravely.

Back from the next room came her mother and father. It was all done now. The papers were signed and delivered. Minnie went to Esther in the doorway.

"Oh, my dear," she said, "my dear! Thank you—for our wedding."

Esther's simple dignity was like a mantle on the moment. "If only," she said, "if only it was that way, a little bit. Don't you see, we haven't got anybody to make a wedding for. So if it was the way you say, and if we had helped a little—oh, don't you see——"

"It's about time for you to go down now, Minnie!" cried Mrs. Burns briskly, as one checking off the next item.

Suddenly Minnie saw her mother, tired, harassed, hard-working, anxious for her children. Even the hard lines in her face were there because she had tried to make life easy for them. Minnie ran to her.

"Mother!" she cried. "Don t you think that I don't know——"

Her mother adjusted the soft veil.

"Well, go on down then, why don't you?" she said, not understanding.

THE Autumn lingered long and slipped graciously into a colored Indian Summer and into a mild November of silver and slate; so that the warm Ohio valleys were unprepared for an icy December. Early in the month a storm of sleet devasted the trees; and succeeding heavy falls of snow filled the hollows and lay deep upon the uplands. By mid-month the world was sleeping as sleep the wastes of the North, and every one remembered signs which promised a Winter of long severity.

For the Chapins, in the little gabled house at the top of the hill, the hard season was another in a chain of catastrophes. To pass from the ownership of their home had been enough. But an old ailment of Esther's had returned which, early in November, sent her to her armchair by the stove, where she prepared and cooked what Michael brought to her, and groaned to see his clumsiness struggle with the other tasks. It was on the morning of the first heavy snowfall that Michael, carrying jars and a lamp from the trap-door of the cellar, slipped backward into space and wrenched his ankle so that he crawled on hands and knees to the kitchen settle and could go no farther.

"Now we're done for," he said; and looking at Esther dully, he kept saying this over. "Now we're done for."

For some reason, when she saw that his neck was not broken, his plight made his wife unexpectedly angry.

"No, we're not," she snapped. "I guess I can get to the telephone. You always talk so silly!"

Michael shouted: "This is a pretty time to improve my habits."

And with a voice which still trembled from her agonized fear lest he had killed himself, Esther, creeping to the telephone, rasped out at him on the way:

"I know it. It's too late to do you any good."

They sat in a wretched silence until the doctor came. When he had left his direction for Michael not to step on his foot, Esther broke down and cried.

"Seems like we got out of touch with God," she said. "I feel worse about my being cross to you than I do about your ankle."

"Just like your selfishness," Michael growled, and then they laughed a little, but not much.

Archie, a son of Luther Burns, came up to feed the cow and the horse and the poultry. Noon brought Mrs. Luther Burns, with a basket.

"Well," she said, surveying them, "I s'pose I've got you both on my hands now for a while. I'm glad to do it—but I should think you might have had more sense than to get down sick."

All the while that she set out the excellent lunch that she had cooked, big Minnie scolded them for being ill and on her hands.

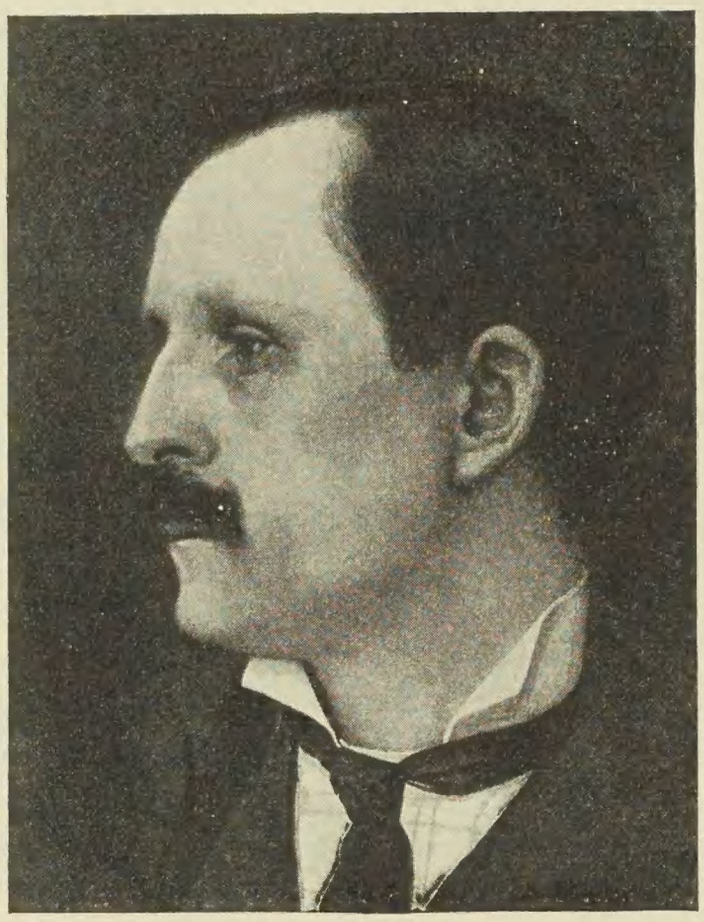
Seeing Michael shift and redden, Esther hoped to turn her thought and asked: "What do you hear from Minnie and Dean?"

"They'll be home for the holidays," said her mother. "After that Dean's got it in his head to go to Europe for his art—says they can live over there cheaper than they can here. All nonsense. I'm going to spike that, I can tell you."

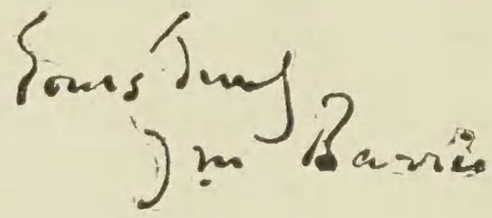
"Why not leave 'em alone?" asked Michael bluntly.

"Leave 'em alone!" cried Minnie's mother shrilly. "If I had, they wouldn't be married yet. At least, not with the decent wedding I was bound they should have—" She stopped, remembering just how she had managed that "decent wedding." To be sure, her husband's buyer had changed his mind about taking that north forty, but that wasn't her fault, and Luther had paid the bills some way. "There," she finished, "eat your dinners and maybe you can make it last for supper too."

EVERY morning for a week Archie Burns fed the Chapins' stock, and at noon either Luther Burns or his wife came through the snow with a basket. Luther was no more than friendly, but Minnie was determined to be kind.



"Don't trouble like this," Esther begged her. And big Minnie responded:



"I enjoy doing my duty."

"But don't come every day!" Esther urged.

"If I don't bear my cross this way, how am I going to bear it?" Mrs. Burns demanded.

Continued on page 55

Every once in a while, Sir James M. Barrie sits down in that wonderful little home of his in Adelphi Terrace, London, and enriches the world. It was so that he gave us "Peter Pan," "Sentimental Tommy," "The Little Minister" and a long list of truly great work.

Last year he wrote the one inspiring message to youth—"Courage." This year from the mountain-top of his knowledge of spiritual things he has seen a new day for youth. THE DELINEATOR will, next month, publish "Better Days for Girls," which has a meaning for every woman alive.

Drawing by William C. Rice

WHY I AM NOT A GOOD MOTHER

ANONYMOUS

Mothers! The love you bear your children is the purest, most unselfish love in the world. It knows no limit of self-denial and sacrifice. Yet sometimes its very power of devotion turns it into a tyrant of oppression. Read this startling confession, judge yourself candidly and form a new estimate of yourself as a mother. We would like to tell you the name of the author of this article, but for obvious reasons we can not. Suffice it to say that she is a well-known personage, a success in the professional and social worlds as well as in the realm of home-making

WHEN my daughter was born, one resolution shot its way through the welter of weariness in which I lay; I should not be a good mother. At least I should not be a good mother in the sense that had been taught me by a tortured childhood. My own mother had gone to the extremes of good motherhood. From the day I came into the world she had focused all her devotion upon me intensively and exclusively. For me she had stripped herself of other allegiances as though they were shameful treasons. Before me she had laid sacrifices so great and intricate that they amounted to a religion. Upon me, and under the license of love, she had exercised a despotism so effectual that, had it been turned in the only direction where despotism functions properly, it would have made her the noble, complete and happy monarch of herself. From me, for all this, she demanded in return payment in kind. I could not pay.

The debt she had rolled up against me was too great. Life was insistent, youth was urgent, the need for other contacts was strong. All through the years that my mother had fondly hoped she was fashioning a creature of her own, nature had been quietly about her business in me, and when the time came for me to decide definitely and finally either for nature or for my mother, I chose nature.

I fell in love and married, knowing that to fall in love and marry was the ultimate treachery to my mother. I became a person on my own account and made a life for myself, thereby forsaking my mother when years of devotion to me had rendered her useless for anything but devotion to me, just as the thrust of a cathedral is useless except to hold up another thrust. My growth into individuality and self-reliance was the overthrow of her whole scheme of existence. She lives on now amidst the wreckage which I brought down around her, as tragic as a queen sitting in the ashes of a crumbled empire. She can neither understand nor forgive nor adjust herself.

AND remembering all that, I made a compact with my daughter when she came.

"I will not be a good mother to you," I said in my heart the first time they brought her to me. "You will have no debt to me to scar your soul when you repudiate it, as repudiate it you must if you are worthy of having been brought into the world at all. I will love you, because, God help me, I can not do otherwise. I will guide you, but always with the view that one day you will walk alone.

"You are an individual, and I sacredly pledge myself not to forget it, whatever it may cost me to remember. Just as I can not possibly look at you now and think for a minute that I have created the soul behind your eyes, so I shall never thrust myself in between you and the parent of whom I am merely the symbol and the tool.

"You are an entity. And to protect your entity against my very natural tendency to feel that you are mine, that your life and spirit belong to me, I, too, shall be an entity. I shall have a world of my own in which you fill a very dear and a very rightful place, but of which you are by no means the solitary inhabitant.

"I shall be selfish, in a judicious fashion. Recollecting that I am older than you and that the desolation of years will come to me when you are still in the full fruit of yours, I shall strive to fortify myself with a reliable companion for that time.

"I shall work hard at the interlocking jobs of keeping myself in love with my husband and my husband in love with me—two enterprises requiring more time and attention than you may surmise, young lady. If it ever comes down to an issue of going riding in the family flivver with your father or of staying home to iron more white ruffles than are good for you, I shall go riding in the family flivver. I can, without bringing on serious disaster, work and earn enough to hire a laundress, but I'll be blessed if I'm going to drudge and save for you while your father asks somebody else to take his pleasure with him.

"And it will be good for you, my little one, it will be the greatest thing of all for you to see your father and your mother merging their lives. It will explain the great mystery of life, which words can never explain. It will keep you fine and clean and unashamed of the realities. And though I moved mountains for you and preached with the tongues of angels and did not keep you unashamed of the realities, life would be but the pointless joke of a ribald god before your eyes."

Years have passed since I made that covenant with my child, and as our home is untroubled by either a jazz-mad flapper or a priggish ninny, but instead is blessed by the presence of a tall, loving and self-reliant young woman, I hold that it was a righteous one. Of course, being an able-bodied and strong-willed young person, she did not come to maturity like a flower springing from the soil, unaided by training or discipline. Early in her career I realized that there was more than mere theory involved in the raising of a child. She was naughty. She seemed to be a congenital lawbreaker and a born occupant of the center of the stage. As the laws governing our household were for the mutual benefit of three people, it seemed far from right that one of the three should discard them for all and substitute chaos. She had to be taken in hand.

I discovered the efficacy of solitude. Not the "go-to-bed-and-pray-to-be-a-better-girl" sort of solitude, but the "find-your-own-world" variety. Everything that a child could reasonably require was put in her room, and thither she was sent for two hours a day. At first she rebelled. She had by this time outgrown naps, and it struck her as an outrage—like a demotion—that she should be sent back to the scene of them again. She resorted to the usual tactics of screams and kicks. Then suddenly one day the uproar ceased almost at the moment the door was closed upon her. I was frightened and looked in. She was sitting in the middle of the floor with a pair of blunt scissors and the débris of two paper boxes.

"I'm making an auto," she said, holding up a jagged and lop-sided wheel. "It's going to go."

SHE was creating. Her mind, released from the distractions of surrounding life and affairs, was functioning. The automobile didn't go, naturally, but the thought behind it did. I heard of the exploits of that car through many succeeding—and comparatively peaceful—days. It became the lodestone for a line of accessories such as no vehicle before it had ever attracted. It was the starting-point of a civilization. Pasteboard people, variously malformed, sprang into being to make use of it. Houses which only their architect could possibly call houses strung themselves along the walls as objectives for its journeyings.

When the automobile and its attendant society played out, something else, I don't remember what, took their place. Blunt scissors gave way to sharp ones, cardboard to fabrics. Doll clothes enlarged themselves with the passing of years and became garments—oftentimes thoroughly outlandish ones—which my daughter hung in her own closet. Through the wisdom gained by lost labor, the policy of good taste and good workmanship was grudgingly but inevitably adopted. Romance in books and dreams came in and filled its rightful place in her life. She had learned a lesson which thousands of impoverished souls go to their graves without learning: that solitude, in reasonable doses, is life's greatest blessing.

Continued on page 53

Enter, EMILY

By

L. M. MONTGOMERY

Author of "Anne of Green Gables"

The child whom every one loves—perhaps you have met her, little Emily of New Moon Farm? Here she makes her quaint bow, stepping from the pages of L. M. Montgomery's "Emily of New Moon" into the hearts of all DELINEATOR readers. If she is a stranger to you, we guarantee that she can not stay so long. If you happen to know her, you will rejoice, just as we do, that a series of sparkling new short stories about Miss Montgomery's favorite Emily will follow this appealing introduction to the most winning girl in fiction since "Little Women."

Drawing by Joseph M. Clement

"YOU WILL SUCCEED WHERE I FAILED, EMILY. I HAVEN'T BEEN ABLE TO DO MUCH FOR YOU, SWEETHEART, BUT I'VE DONE WHAT I COULD. DO YOU REMEMBER YOUR MOTHER, EMILY?"

EMILY BYRD STARR—she was very particular about the Byrd—slipped out of the little house in the hollow for a twilight walk. The little house was "a mile from anywhere," so Maywood people said. Ellen Greene said it was the lonesomest place in the world and vowed she wouldn't stay there a day if it wasn't that she pitied the child.

Emily didn't know she was being pitied and didn't know what lonesomeness meant. She had plenty of company. There was father and the gray cat, The Wind Woman, Emily-in-the-Glass, the spruces and pines she loved, and all the friendly lady birches. And there was "the flash," too. She never knew when it might come, and the possibility of it kept her athrill and expectant.

"You put on your hood and mind you scoot back if it starts to rain," warned Ellen. "You can't monkey with colds the way some kids can."

"Why can't I?" Emily asked rather indignantly. Why must she be debarred from "monkeying with colds" if other children could? It wasn't fair.

"Look at your pa's cough," said Ellen.

Emily didn't see how you could look at a cough. And what had father's cough to do with her going or not going bareheaded? Father had coughed just so for years. But she put on her faded blue hood over her long heavy braid of glossy jet-black hair and smiled chummily at Emily-in-the-Glass. The smile began at the corners of her lips and spread over her face in a slow, subtle, very wonderful way, as Douglas Starr often thought. It was her dead mother's smile—the thing that had caught and held him long ago when he had first seen Juliet Murray. It seemed to be Emily's only inheritance from her mother. In all else she was like the Starrs—in her large, purplish-gray eyes, in her high, white forehead, in the delicate modeling of her pale, oval face and sensitive mouth, in her little ears that were pointed just a wee bit to show that she was kin to tribes of elfland.

"I'm going for a walk with The Wind Woman, dear," said Emily to her reflection in the mirror over her bureau. "I wish I could take you, too. The Wind Woman is tall and misty, with thin, gray, silky clothes blowing all about her—and wings like a bat's—only you can see through them—and shining eyes like stars looking through her long, loose hair. She's a great friend of mine. I've known her for five years—ever since I was six. We're old, old friends, but not quite so old as you and I, little Emily-in-the-Glass. We've been friends always, haven't we?"

With a blown kiss to little Emily-in-the-Glass, Emily-out-of-the-Glass was off to her beloved spruce barrens on the hill. That was a place where magic was made. She came more fully into her fairy birthday right there than in any other spot.

And the barrens were such a splendid place in which to play hide-and-seek with The Wind Woman! She was so very real there; if you could just spring quickly enough around a little cluster of spruces—only you never could—you would see her as well as feel her and hear her. There she was—that was the sweep of her gray cloak—no, she was laughing up in the very top of the taller trees—and the chase was on again—till, all at once, it seemed as if The Wind Woman were gone—and the evening was bathed in a wonderful silence—and there was a sudden rift in the curdled clouds westward and a pale, pinky-green lake of sky with a new moon in it.

And then, for one glorious supreme moment, came "the flash."

Emily called it that, though she felt that the name didn't exactly define it. It couldn't be defined—not even to father, who always seemed a little puzzled by it. Emily never spoke of it to any one else.

"Enter, Emily," copyright, 1924, by L. M. Montgomery

It had always seemed to Emily, ever since she could remember, that she was very, very near to a world of wonderful beauty. Between it and herself hung only a thin curtain. She could never draw the curtain asid ; but sometimes, just for a moment, a wind fluttered it, and then it was as if she caught a glimpse of the enchanting realm beyond and heard a note of unearthly music.

The moment came rarely—went swiftly, leaving her breathless with the delight of it. She could never recall it—never summon it—never pretend it; but the wonder of it stayed with her for days. It never came twice with the same thing. To-night the dark boughs against that far-off sky had given it. It had come with a high wild note of wind in the night, with a shadow wave over a ripe field, with a glimpse of the kitchen fire when she had come home on a dark Autumn night, with the spiritlike blue of ice palms on a twilit pane, with a felicitous new word when she was writing down a "description" of something. And always when "the flash" came to her Emily felt that life was a wonderful, mysterious thing of persistent beauty.

She scuttled back to the house in the hollow, all agog to get home and write down her "description" before the memory picture of what she had seen grew a little blurred. She knew just how she would begin it: "The hill called to me and something in me called back to it."

Ellen Greene was waiting for her on the doorstep.

"Do you know," she said, with a ponderous sigh, "that your pa has only a week or two more to live?"

WHEN Emily was able to bear it, her father talked to her about it.

"I meant to tell you myself—and now that old absurdity of an Ellen has told you—and hurt you brutally. I wouldn't have hurt you, dear."

"Father, I can't—I can't bear it."

"Yes, you can and will. You will live because there is something for you to do. You have my gift along with something I never had. You will succeed where I failed, Emily. I haven't been able to do much for you, sweetheart, but I've done what I could. Do you remember your mother, Emily?"

"Just a little—here and there—like lovely bits of dreams."

"You were only four when she died. I'm going to tell you about her to-night. It doesn't hurt me to talk of her now—I'll see her so soon again. Emily, your mother was the sweetest woman God ever made."

His voice trembled. Emily snuggled closer.

"She was one of the Murrays from Blair Water—the 'proud Murrays,' as they were called. They live up on the old north shore on New Moon Farm. Only your aunts, Elizabeth and Laura, live there now, and their cousin, Jimmy Murray. Your Uncle Oliver and your Uncle Wallace live in Summerside and your Aunt Ruth in Shrewsbury. When your mother fell in love with me, a poor young journalist with nothing in the world but his pen and his ambition, there was a family earthquake. The Murray pride couldn't tolerate the thing at all. I won't rake it all up—but things were said I could never forget or forgive. Your mother married me, Emily, and the New Moon people would have nothing more to do with her.

"We had four beautiful years. Your mother died very suddenly. The Murrays all came to her funeral. The Murrays have certain traditions and they live up to them very strictly. One of them is that nothing but candles shall be burned for light at New Moon—and another is that no quarrel must be carried past the grave. Your Aunt Elizabeth even wore her best black satin dress to the funeral. For any funeral but a Murray's the second best one would have done. And they made no serious objection when I said your mother would be buried in the Starr plot in Charlottetown. They would have liked to take her back to the old burying-ground in Blair Water—they had their own private burying-ground, you know—no indiscriminate graveyard for them. But your Uncle Wallace handsomely admitted that a woman should belong to her husband's family in death as in life.

"The Murrays will come to my funeral—and they will provide for you. The Murray pride will guarantee that. I hope Elizabeth and Laura will take you. Laura was like your mother. Go forward to meet life fearlessly, dear. I know you don't feel like that just now—but you have yet to learn how kind time is."

"I feel just now," said Emily, who couldn't bear to hide anything from father, "that I don't like God any more."

DOUGLAS STARR laughed—the laugh Emily liked best. It was such a dear laugh—she caught her breath over the dearness of it. She felt his arms tightening around her.

"Yes, you do, honey. You can't help liking God. He is love itself. Of course you mustn't mix Him up with Ellen Greene's God, you know."

Emily didn't know exactly what father meant. But all at once she found that she wasn't afraid any longer. The bitterness had gone out of her sorrow and that unbearable pain out of her heart. She felt as if love were all about her and around her, breathed out from some great, invisible, hovering tenderness. One couldn't be afraid or bitter where love was—and love was everywhere. Father was just going beyond the veil into that world of which "the flash" had given her glimpses. He would be there in its beauty, never very far away from her. She could bear anything if only she could feel that father wasn't very far away from her—just beyond that wavering curtain.

Douglas Starr held her until she fell asleep; and then, in spite of his weakness, he managed to lay her down in her little bed.

"She will love deeply—she will suffer deeply—she will have glorious moments to compensate. As her mother's people deal with her, so may God deal with them," he murmured brokenly.

WHEN Douglas Starr died, Ellen Greene told Emily to pray to God for resignation to His will.

"That's right now," said Ellen. "That's what comes of being prepared. Your pa was so mad at me for warning you that he wasn't rightly civil to me since—and him a dying man. But I did my duty. Your ma's people will be here to-night. They're well off and they'll provide for you. Your pa hasn't left a cent; but there ain't any debts—I'll say that for him. Have you been in to see the body?"

"Don't call him that," said Emily, wincing. It was horrible to hear father called that.

"Why not? If you ain't the queerest child! He makes a better-looking corpse than I thought he would, what with being so wasted and all. He was always a pretty man, though too thin."

"Ellen Greene," said Emily suddenly, "if you say any more of—those things—about father, I'll put the black curse on you."

Ellen Greene stared.

"I don't know what on earth you mean. But that's no way to talk to me after all I've done for you. The black curse, indeed! Well, here's gratitude!"

Emily's eyes smarted. She was just a lonely, solitary little creature and she felt very friendless. But she was

Continued on page 56

Drawing by Joseph M. Clement

"FATHER WASN'T A FAILURE!" CRIED EMILY, CHOKING WITH ANGER. "YOU HAD NO RIGHT TO CALL HIM A FAILURE. NOBODY WHO WAS LOVED AS MUCH AS HE WAS COULD BE A FAILURE. I DON'T BELIEVE ANYBODY EVER LOVED YOU. SO IT'S YOU THAT'S A FAILURE"

Annals of a haunted family

The BLACK FLEMINGS

By

KATHLEEN NORRIS

Most powerful novel yet written by the author of "Mother," "Certain People of Importance," "Rose of the World," etc.

Drawing by Ernest Fuhr

"THAT'S TANA," HE SAID SOFTLY. "MY WIFE. SHE WAS THE SWEETEST WOMAN GOD EVER MADE"

SYNOPSIS

SCENE—Wastewater, ancestral mansion of the "Black Flemings." It is a house of mystery and foreboding. Situated upon a cliff above the thundering Atlantic which endlessly pounds at the bleak New England coast, this Georgian pile which, in the days of "Black Roger," had known teeming life, now the abode of his descendants, is but a place of disturbing memories.

People of the Story—"Black Roger" Fleming, once the proud and imperious master of Wastewater, though now dead, pervades the family. The consequences of his stormy youth and two brief marriages create the present situation at Wastewater.

David, oldest of Wastewater's younger generation around which this novel turns, is an artist, thirty-two, dark like all the family. He is Roger Fleming's stepson by his mother's second marriage to the proud patriarch soon after the death of her first husband, a cousin of Roger's.

Tom, Black Roger's only son, is David's half-brother. He runs away to sea after his mother's death, and though his father leaves his second wife, who is little more than a child and an invalid, to search the world for him, he is still missing when the story opens.

Sylvia, twenty, dark and beautiful, Black Roger's niece by his brother Will and Flora Fleming, a cousin whose constant love for Roger was twice spurned, is heiress to the Fleming fortune which Roger, dying, left to her (since he could not find his son), appointing David as guardian.

Gabrielle, eighteen, breaks the spell of the "Black" Flemings. Her lovely hair is tawny, her eyes star-sapphires. She is Sylvia's cousin, the daughter of Flora Fleming's sister Lily by a secret marriage with a traveling salesman long since forgotten. Her little mother—"Aunt Lily" to the rest—insane since Gay's infancy, has not been mentioned for many years.

Aunt Flora, Sylvia's dark and forbidding mother, is the present hostess of Wastewater, which has been her home since the days when Roger Fleming welcomed her and her sister Lily as poor relations to the comforts of his wealth.

The Story So Far—Following a happy childhood together, Wastewater's young people have scattered: David to his art, Tom to sea, Sylvia to college, Gabrielle to a convent school in Paris. With Gabrielle's homecoming to Wastewater, the cruel mysteries of the place seem to awake and center upon this golden girl. Flashing lights in a deserted wing; a muttering old hag found in the garden during a wild snow-storm; overpowering love awakening in Gay for David, who is pledged to her own cousin Sylvia—all these things trouble her. Then, one night, the old hag of the garden creeps muttering to Gay's bedside, calling aloud for her child. It is Gay's own mother, mad Aunt Lily, whom Aunt Flora has kept secretly hidden in the house. Merry little Gabrielle bears the shock bravely. She remains brave even when the ghastly fact of her illegitimacy is revealed. Blacker than any of the Black Flemings are the storm-clouds gathering over this single sunny head in the ancient mansion. David, pitying her, translates his pity into love, and, getting his freedom from a vague understanding with Sylvia, he asks Gay to marry him. Because she so utterly loves this David, his pat "solution" to all her troubles insults her beyond endurance. She will not listen to him. It is then that easy-going David learns what it means to suffer the torment of desire. Life that Summer at Wastewater stagnates. Aunt Lily's death does not even ripple the surface—when suddenly, like a hurricane off the ocean, the long-lost Tom returns.

PART FOUR

SO THERE was this new fact with which to deal: Tom Fleming had come home. Tom, thirty, lean, burned a leathery brown by a thousand tropic suns.

He made no particular explanation of his old reasons for departure; on the other hand, there was no mystery about it. The sea, and ships, adventure, danger, exploration, storms, had always been more real to Tom than his name and family and Wastewater. He had found them all, drunk deep of them all, between fourteen and thirty; he meant, of course, to go back to them some day.

Meanwhile, he had been ill, was still weak and shaken. In actual features, he was as handsome as his handsome father. But Tom, garrulous, boastful, simply shrewd and childishly ignorant, was in no other way like Black Roger. Roger had been an exquisite, loving fine linen, fine music and books, the turn of a phrase or the turn of a woman's wrist. All these were an unknown world to Tom, and Tom seemed to know it and to be actuated in his youthful, shallow bombast by the fear that these others—these rediscovered relatives—might fancy him ashamed of it.

Tom never was ashamed of anything, he instantly gave them to understand. No, sir! He had knocked men down, he had run risks, he had been smarter than the others, he had "foxed" them! Women had always been his friends, scores of women—mysterious Russian women, beautiful Hawaiian girls, stunning Spanish señoritas in Buenos Aires—he had held them all in the hollow of his lean, brown-hided hand.

He was a hero in his own eyes; he wanted to be a hero in the eyes of his relatives as well. It was perhaps only Gabrielle, who had wistfully longed to be claimed and admired, too, so short a time ago, who appreciated upon that strange first evening that there was something intensely pathetic in Tom's boasting.

"What was this old brick house and these women, with their fuss about vases of flowers and clean sheets, to him?" he seemed to ask scornfully. "Every one looking at him so solemnly, every one implying that this money of his father's was so important! Let 'em find out it didn't mean so much to Tom Fleming!"

"The Black Flemings," copyright, 1924, by Kathleen Norris

Yet Tom was impressed, deeply and fundamentally stirred, by this home-coming. Old memories wrenched at his heart; his wonderful father had been here at Wastewater, when Tom had last been here, and his father's frail little second wife, the delicate Cecily, who had been the object of a sort of boyish admiration from Tom. Perhaps the lean, long, sun-browned sailor, whose actual adventures had taken the place of that little boy's dreams of the sea, felt deep within himself that he had not gained everything by the change. Slowly all the fibers of soul and body had been hardening, coarsening; Tom had not been conscious of the slow degrees of the change. But he was vaguely conscious of it now.

The old house had seemed to capture and preserve the traditions, the dignified customs, of his race; the very rooms seemed full of reproaches and of questions.

His aunt he found only older, grimmer, more silent than he had remembered her; Sylvia had grown from a tiny girl into a beautiful woman, and Gabrielle's birth had not been until after his departure. But David and he had spent all their little-boy days together, and David immediately assumed the attitude of his guide, wandering about the old place with him, and taking him down to the housekeeping regions, where old Hedda and Trude and Margaret wept and laughed over him excitedly.

TOM enjoyed this, but when the first flush of greetings to the family and the first shock of stunned surprise were over, a curious restraint seemed to fall upon their relationship, and the return of the heir made more troublesome than ever the separate problems of the group.

Sylvia, from the first half-incredulous instant, had borne the blow with all her characteristic dignity and courage. She welcomed Tom with charming simplicity, with a spontaneous phrase or two of eagerness and astonishment, and no word was said of material considerations until much later. Yet it was an exquisitely painful situation for Sylvia.

She had not wanted Uncle Roger's money; she had, indeed, been a child when the will was made; Tom might easily have been supposed to return, the second Mrs. Fleming might have had children, and her own mother might have given Sylvia younger sisters and brothers.

But gradually the path had cleared before Sylvia. Tom had not come home; Sylvia's father had died, leaving her still the only child; Cecily had died childless, and Uncle Roger had died.

For years Sylvia's mother and David, watching her grow from a beautiful childhood to a fine and conscientious girlhood, had prefaced all talk of her fortune with "unless Tom comes home." But gradually that had stopped; gradually they, and her circle, and the girl herself, had come to think of her as the rightful heiress.

Now, between luncheon and dinner upon a burning Summer afternoon, all this had been snatched from her; instantly taken, beyond all doubt or question. Sylvia asked no sympathy and made no complaint. But the very foundations of her life were shaken; all the ambitions of her busy college years were laid waste, and from being admired and envied she must descend to pity and obscurity. She and her mother would have Flora's few thousand a year; plenty, of course—much more than the majority of persons had, Sylvia knew that. But she must readjust everything now to this level—abandon the little red check-book and learn to live without the respectfully congratulatory and envious glances. It was bitterly hard. Wherever her thoughts went, she was met by that new and baffling consideration of ways and means. Sylvia had said a hundred times that she would really have liked to be among the women who must make their own fortune and their own place in the world; now she found it only infinitely humiliating and wearisome to contemplate.

FLORA had borne the news with the look of one touched by death. She had not, in fact, been made ill, nor had her usual course of life been altered in any way, unless her stony reserve grew more stony and her stern gray face more stern. But David thought more than once that her nephew's reappearance seemed to affect Aunt Flora with a sort of horror, as if he had come back from the dead.

She had presented him with her lifeless cheek to kiss, when he arrived, and there had been a deep ring, harsh and almost frightening, in the voice with which she had welcomed him. Flora was not mercenary; Gabrielle and David both appreciated clearly that it was not her daughter's loss of a fortune that had affected her. But from the very hour of Tom's return she seemed like a woman afraid, nervous, apprehensive, anxious at one moment to get away from Wastewater, desolated at another at the thought of leaving the place where she had spent almost all her life.

Oddly, seeing this fear, David and Gay saw too that it was not of Tom, or of any possible secret or revelation connected with Tom. It was as if Flora saw in his reappearance the reappearance too of some old fear or hate, or perhaps of a general fear and hate that had once controlled all her life and that had seemed to be returning with his person.

"There is a curse on this place, I think!" Gabrielle heard her whisper once, many times over and over. But it was not to Gabrielle she spoke. And one night she fainted.

Tom had been telling them a particularly hair-raising tale at table, and because he really felt the horrible thrill of it himself, he did not, as was usual with him, embroider it with all sorts of flat and stupid inventions of his own. It was the story of a man stranded on a small island, conscious of a hidden crime and attempting to act the part of innocence.

"Of all things," Gabrielle had said, impressed, "it seems to me the most terrible would be to have a secret to hide! I mean it," the girl had added seriously, turning her sapphire eyes from one to another, as they smiled at her earnestness. "I would rather be a beggar—or in prison—or sick—or banished—anything but to be afraid!"

Flora, at the words, had risen slowly to her feet, staring blindly ahead of her, and with a hurried and suffocated word had turned from her place at the table. And before David could get to her or Sylvia make anything but a horrified exclamation, she had fainted.

This had been on Tom's third evening at home, a close, Summer night that had afforded Flora ample excuse for feeling oppressed. Yet Gay, looking about the circle as the days went by—David, as always, thoughtful and sympathetic, if he was more than usually silent; Sylvia, beautiful and serene, if also strangely subdued; Tom, seeming to belong so much less to Wastewater, with his strange manners and his leathery skin, than any of the others; Aunt Flora, severe and terrible—felt arising in her again all the fearful apprehensions of her first weeks there, almost a year ago.

"What was going to happen?" her heart hammered

Continued on page 58

Drawing by Ernest Fuhr

THE GIRL SCREAMED HYSTERICALLY AS THE DOOR WAS FLUNG OPEN, AND DAVID, WHITE AND SHAKY, CAME IN

Drawing by J. Scott Williams

Does Your Child Want To Be An Athlete?

By FIELDING H. YOST

Director of Intercollegiate Athletics, University of Michigan

IN MY thirty years of work with boys I have found that the youngster who does not at some time aspire to be a great athlete is decidedly the exception. And because athletics present this almost universal appeal, they afford an opportunity for influence that is seldom found in other activities. Wise mothers recognize this vital influence in the lives of their children and direct it into the channels of greatest usefulness.

It is most fortunate that the qualities of success in athletics are the same that make for success in every other field of human endeavor. When fathers and mothers recognize this fact and encourage their children in the kind and amount of motor activity that will best develop bodily health, strength and endurance and at the same time afford an avenue of approach through which they will be influenced for good in mind and character as well, then they will have gone a long way toward making useful citizens of their boys and girls.

I am often asked: "What are the principal factors that contribute toward athletic ability?" The fact that I get this question not only from aspiring athletes and from persons interested in athletics in merely an academic way, but frequently from parents, assures me that mothers and fathers are recognizing the importance of athletics in the development of their children. If I can answer this question for parents, I believe I will have given them the key-note to the all-around success of their youngsters.

There is a general impression that an innate "something" makes one boy potentially a great athlete while another is predestined to be a hopeless failure in whatever sports he attempts. Nothing is farther from the truth.

There is no one quality that makes a man an athlete. Athletic ability is a combination of numerous qualities. It may be likened to a quadrangle, whose four sides must be perfect before it can be complete. Briefly, the quadrangle's sides are physical soundness, mental alertness, character that insures clean and moral living, and initiative. No one of these is any more important than the others, though some are rarer and harder to achieve.

To be a truly great athlete one must have a body that responds instantly to all orders sent by the mind, a mind that can quickly analyze any situation and determine a plan of action, a heart that dictates a sane, rational and clean life, and a will that says, "Do things." Remember that athletic success is not a quality of being but of doing. The score-board at the end of a game shows only what a team has actually done. There is no place on the record for what the team might have done if it had had the will to do.

AFTER watching any group of boys play a game for ten minutes, I believe that I can point out unerringly those who have more than average physical ability. But when I have selected those with outstanding physical qualifications, I have only started to find the potential athletes. I have merely eliminated those who haven't a chance to become winners in athletic competition—not put my finger on those who have this chance. Physical ability is, of course, the primary consideration, since nothing will offset the lack of it in sports. But because a boy has no physical disqualification there is no guarantee that he hasn't others just as great.

Having selected from the group those who come up to the physical requirements, there remains the greater task of selecting those fitted by intelligence, temperament and character for unusual success in athletics. In this connection I am speaking in terms of stars and champions. All boys should engage in some kind of athletics according to their tastes and abilities, but here I am discussing the fellows who aspire to be all-American football players and Olympic champions, those whose aspirations have no limit.

ONE of the most desirable assets for the ambitious athlete is an early start. His development should keep pace with his growth. But he should be careful not to let his enthusiasm run away with his capabilities. Some boys miss all-American honors because they start too late in life to develop themselves, others because they go too fast while they are young. It has been my experience that only a very few men make good in college athletics without having taken advantage of opportunities to develop themselves physically in earlier life. Now and then we come across a "rough diamond" who has never played football in preparatory school, but he is an exception. Boys should learn to control and coordinate their muscles before they get to college.

"HURRY UP" YOST SAYS—

If my creed in regard to health had to be summed up in a single sentence, I believe it would best be expressed, "Don't worry."

In the program of man-building, athletics and competitive games play a vital part.

No boy or girl can violate any rule of health without paying the penalty.

The good sportsman has respect for his opponent.

If the coach could start with all the boys when they were young enough and develop them all, it wouldn't make much difference which ones he selected for his team—there would be plenty of good ones. But because he does not have this opportunity to supervise their work and play until he meets them as 'varsity candidates, he naturally selects those whose early development has been most thorough and intelligent. In other words, the boy's chances of making the team depend very largely on what has already been done by his parents and himself before he reports to the coach. Parents and boys must remember this: "Making the 'varsity starts long before the 'varsity coach ever sees the candidate."

AFTER the coach has selected the candidates who appear to measure up to all the preliminary qualifications, it is his duty to teach them the particular game that they are to play. While teaching this game, he has the additional task of building up the general qualities that are common to all successful athletes.

First let us discuss the physical qualifications, since they are the sine qua non. A boy does not have to be unusually large or strong to succeed in any game, barring heavyweight wrestling and boxing or weight-throwing. Rather he must be able to coordinate so that he will have instantly available every bit of his strength. He must use his arms to help his back and his back to help his legs, etc. "Doing things the right way" is a good explanation of physical coordination. The boy with well-developed, showy muscles may not have half the power that is found in a "skinny" youngster. In fact, being "muscle-bound" is one of the worst afflictions an ambitious athlete can have.

Quick reaction is another essential for athletic success. Laboratory experiments have established that the time required for a mental message to be transmitted from the brain to a muscle and answered by a muscle varies widely in different individuals. Some boys think and act almost simultaneously, others need an appreciable interval to translate thought into action. This does not mean that the latter class will be slow in action. On the contrary, once the message from the brain has been received, the action may be much more rapid than that of an individual who institutes the initial movement quicker.

The advantage of a quick reaction in athletics is apparent. In a football game, for example, all plays start with the snapping of the ball. All eyes should see the movement of the ball at the same instant, but some players take longer than others to get the news to the legs and as a result they are "jumped" by the opponents. That initial charge is all-important, and the boy with the quick reaction is going to have a big advantage over his opponent.

If the athlete meets the tests of good coordination and quick reaction, it will pay the coach to look farther; but if he fails in one or both of these tests, time spent in trying to make a star of him is just time wasted.

NEXT we must look for the qualities that lie on the inside. Physically the boy is all right, but what about his head and his heart? What is going to tell him what to do "in a pinch" and what is going to keep him doing the right thing in spite of all hardships and handicaps? To be a really fine athlete these days a boy must be intelligent. There are so many good athletes in America now that the "edge" goes to those with the better gray matter.

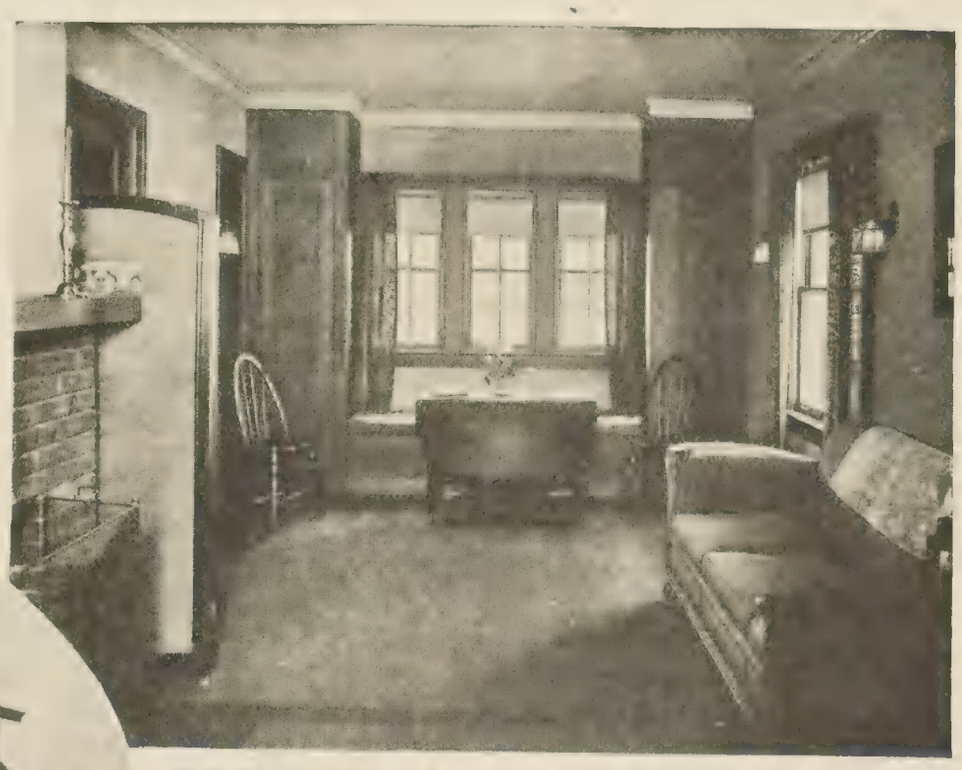
The modern version of football demands a physical type that is more plentiful than was the old "beef-to-the heel" player of twenty-five years ago. We can't depend

Concluded on page 62

"Good Homes—The Right of All Citizens"

The Story of the 1924 Campaign for Better Homes

By BLANCHE BRACE



SUPPOSE you awake some morning to find a wood and coal yard being set up next to your home—or a factory built across the street! You will be powerless to prevent such an encroachment unless your neighborhood is "zoned." Zoning is now being adopted in communities all over the United States. If you want to know how to secure zoning laws, write THE DELINEATOR, enclosing five cents in postage, and a booklet of information and directions will be sent you

"WEAF speaking. The next number on the program will be President Calvin Coolidge on the subject of Better Homes in America," came the announcement one Saturday evening in early May, 1924.

Throughout the length and breadth of the land countless radio listeners pressed the ear-pieces a little closer. Other members of innumerable families were hastily summoned. First came a preliminary cough as the radio seemed to clear its throat, and then, distinct and crisp and near, the voice of the nation's Chief Executive:

"The American home is the source of our national well-being. In it our high traditions of service and integrity are fostered. From the true home there emerges respect for the rights of others and the habit of cooperating for worthy needs."

President Coolidge went on to speak of the founding of the Better Homes movement "under the leadership of Mrs. William Brown Meloney," to commend the many national and local organizations which were fostering it and the great mass of citizens who were taking part in it, and to emphasize "the significance to the nation of a wide-spread movement to strengthen and improve the home."

THE KALAMAZOO LIVING-ROOM IS COMPLETE, WITH COMFORTABLE FURNISHINGS AND A DINING-ALCOVE

THIS IS THE "BIGGEST LITTLE HOME" IN KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN, WHICH WON FIRST PRIZE IN THE CAMPAIGN

THE KITCHEN OF THE PRIZE HOME IS AN EXCELLENT EXAMPLE OF A WELL-PLANNED, CONVENIENT, STEP-SAVING WORKSHOP

NEW-WORLD COMFORT AND OLD-WORLD BEAUTY ARE HAPPILY BLENDED IN THE HOUSE WHICH WON HONORABLE MENTION FOR FORT LAUDERDALE, FLORIDA

DONN BARBER, THE EMINENT ARCHITECT, JUDGED THIS RELAY, MARYLAND, HOUSE "THE BEST SMALL HOUSE FOR ITS PRICE"

THIS IS THE SPACIOUS, WELL-FURNISHED LIVING-ROOM IN THE GREENVILLE, SOUTH CAROLINA, HOUSE WHICH WON THIRD PRIZE

So the third great national campaign for better homes in America, one of the most important and successful experiments in human happiness ever made in the United States, was ushered in. At that moment, as President Coolidge's voice went forth through the land, on the eve of Better Homes Week, more than a thousand communities in every part of the nation—great cities, smaller cities, little towns, remote country districts beyond the reach of the radio or the motion-picture or the commercial photographer—all these were making their final preparations for Better Homes demonstrations. Tens of thousands of people were assisting in the home-betterment drive which the President thus officially opened. Hundreds of thousands of other citizens were planning to attend the demonstrations in order to learn how to make their own homes better. To a degree never before equaled in the United States public attention was directed to the subject of the American home. The nation had waked up to the fact voiced by Herbert Hoover, Secretary of the Department of Commerce and president of Better Homes in America, that "Good homes should be recognized not merely as the privilege of the well-to-do, but also as the right of all citizens."

Perhaps it may be well to pause just a moment here to review the history of the movement that led up to this third campaign. Even briefly told, with all the trimmings omitted, there are few more dramatic and inspiring

Continued on page 52

The Unnecessary Handicap

"The world is mine!"

A Plain Talk on Constipation in Children

By DR. HENRY L. K. SHAW

Recently President of the American Child Hygiene Association; Consultant of the Division of Maternity, Infancy and Child Hygiene in the New York State Department of Health

CONSTIPATION in children is a disorder, not a disease. But there is no condition outside of acute disease that causes as much anxiety to mothers. It is held responsible for more of the ills and vicissitudes of early childhood than any other ailment, with the possible exception of teething. Constipation is accused of producing all varieties of digestive disturbances and every disease from corns to convulsions. Contrary to this common belief, constipation is the source of but a few of the evils attributed to it. However, a complete daily removal of the waste material or excreta from the intestinal canal is a necessary and most desirable health habit.

The factors involved in removing this excreta are rather complex and include the brain, nerves and muscles. When the lower end of the bowel, the rectum, receives the food residue, a message is sent to the brain by way of the sensory nerves and a response is returned through the motor nerves which relaxes the muscles controlling the trap-door at the end of the canal so that the contents are expelled and the door automatically closed. This procedure is a reflex act and is done unconsciously by very young infants. After a few months a baby can be educated to move its bowels in response to some external stimulus, such as holding him in position on a small chamber. Later, with the development of intelligence, the act comes under the control of the will.

Constipation is said to exist when the stools are hard, dry or forced, when they do not move without assistance or are less frequent than is normal with the individual. Real constipation is present only when the movements are hard and dry. Even if the child has one or more spontaneous movements each day and the stool is hard and dry, it is considered real constipation. Apparent constipation exists when the bowels do not move by themselves but when aided by a suppository or enema the resulting stool is soft and normal in consistency. This distinction should be kept clearly in mind, as the latter type is the result of some trouble or inactivity in the nervous mechanism of the lower bowel.

THE CHIEF CAUSES

Constipation in infants differs in several respects from the disorder in older children and adults. It occurs more rarely in breast-fed babies than in those who are unfortunate enough to be fed artificially on cows' milk. The normal number of movements in a breast-fed baby is from one to three in twenty-four hours. A large number may be the result of overfeeding or caused by the mother taking cathartics which are eliminated through her milk. Mothers' milk contains a relatively large amount of fat and sugar which stimulate the intestines to move. Cows' milk contains more protein and much less sugar. When it is diluted or modified, it reduces not only the sugar but the fat or cream, and the food becomes constipating, as it does not contain the materials necessary to stimulate intestinal movements.

Irregularity in the feeding-hours is a factor in producing constipation. If the amount of food is all utilized and not enough in quantity, there will be insufficient residue to fill the rectum and produce a stool, for the bowels will not move unless the lower bowel contains fecal matter.

Improper feeding often results in constipation. When the food is rich in protein or contains too much cream, it is apt to produce constipation. There should be sufficient fluid intake. At least four glasses of water a day should be taken. There must be enough solid or bulky food taken to form a sufficient amount of residue.

OTHER CAUSES

Many cases of constipation in infants are a result of a reduction in the secretions from the intestinal glands and in the bile from the liver. Weakness of the muscles in the intestinal wall allows the fluid contents of the stool to be absorbed in the large or lower intestine on account of its slow progress. This is called muscular atony and is the cause of constipation in rickets and malnutrition.

There are a few rare cases of malformation of the intestinal tract, such as constrictions, kinks, narrowness at the anal opening, or a long and tortuous rectum which makes sharp turns on itself and obstructs the passage of the stool. As the infant grows older this latter condition tends to right itself. The advice and assistance of a physician are necessary in these cases.

The passage of hard fecal masses through the narrow and very sensitive rectum causes severe pain. As a result the child resists all impulses to move the bowels and a habit of constipation becomes established.

Lack of exercise is a cause of constipation. Farmers and persons engaged in active outdoor occupations rarely suffer from this condition.

Many cases of constipation are the result of overanxiety on the part of the mother to have the child produce one or more movements a day. To achieve this, she resorts to cathartics, enemas and suppositories. These weaken the normal reflexes and nature comes to rely on such external stimuli. If mothers would refrain from such practises, their babies would soon get into normal habits of defecation. If the baby does not have one movement a day but is happy, contented and gaining in weight, there is no need for worry, for it will surely have one on the second or third day. There are babies who are perfectly well who have a movement every other day, and it is a mistake to induce movements in such babies.

A BASIC HEALTH HABIT

The most frequent cause of constipation is the failure to form a regular habit. Absolute regularity is one of the chief factors in promoting the normal function of the bowels. This habit should be formed in early infancy. A young infant of four months of age can be taught to have a movement when placed on a chamber. This should be done every day at the same hour. When a local stimulus is desired in order to start the habit, a soap stick or glycerin suppository may be inserted, but this procedure should not be continued for any length of time.

Feedings can be modified so as to relieve constipation. A teaspoon of milk-sugar dissolved in a little water given to nursing babies half an hour before the feedings will tend to overcome the tendency. In bottle-fed babies, the amount of protein can be reduced to relieve the condition if the milk is mixed with oatmeal water or if malt sugar is added not to exceed five per cent.—that is, one ounce to every twenty ounces of food. Fruit-juices, especially orange and prune juice, can be given at an early age.

Constipation in runabout and older children is altogether too common and is frequently a cause of complaint by mothers. It is well to know the principal causes that may produce this condition, for such knowledge is a great weapon in their removal. As in infancy, the lack of regularity and the habitual disregard of nature's call are the chief causes. A child with a weak desire to move his bowels and a very strong desire to run out of doors to play neglects the former in favor of play, and this neglect soon turns into real inability to move the bowels. The mother then starts the use of a round of laxatives, substituting one after another.

The mother should arrange the breakfast hour so that the child will not have to rush off to school after a hasty meal with no time for the daily evacuation. The after-breakfast rush for school is bad for the digestion as well as a cause of constipation.

THE ABUSE OF CATHARTICS

Cathartics and laxatives should be reserved for rare occasions. They frequently cause digestive disturbance in young infants. A word of caution should be given in regard to castor-oil. This is not, as is popularly supposed, a panacea for all the ills to which children are heir. It should only be used as a purgative in order to clean out the intestinal tract quickly and thoroughly whenever there is fever, diarrhea, or poisons have been absorbed. It sweeps out the intestinal contents so thoroughly that a sufficient residue for defecation does not accumulate in the lower bowel for several days and in the end really produces constipation.

The abuse of laxatives is a very prevalent cause of constipation. An eminent specialist, Dr. S. G. Gant says: "In my opinion one of the most common sources of constipation in this country is the pernicious habit of resorting to drugs to secure a daily stool. It is a lamentable fact that not a few parents have an insane idea that if they do not administer a cathartic frequently to their children dire results will follow, and in their anxiety they eventually bring about or aggravate the very condition which they wish to avoid, namely, constipation."

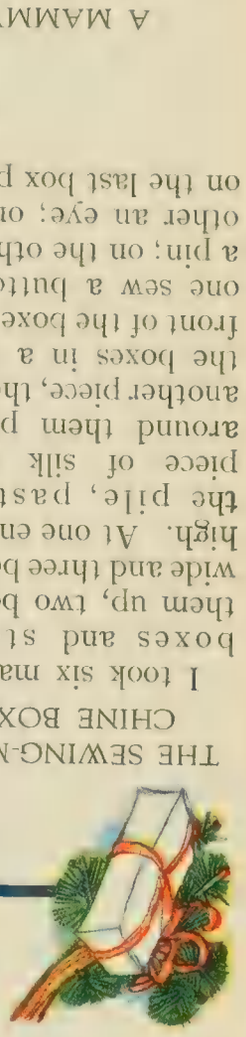
SYMPTOMS AND EFFECTS

The results or symptoms of constipation depend largely on the mechanical pressure of the hardened fecal masses in the rectum on the nerves and blood vessels of the pelvis. This affects the entire nervous system and produces a dull headache, fretfulness, irritability and disturbed sleep. These symptoms are sometimes attributed to intestinal autointoxication, which means the absorption of certain poisons from the retained fecal matter. This is found more frequently in diarrhea, where the symptoms of poisoning are more marked and may be fatal. In constipation the fact that these nervous and abdominal symptoms disappear in a few moments after defecation shows that they have been produced by pressure and not by the absorption of poisons.

Chronic constipation frequently may interfere with the general nutrition of the child. A constipated child usually becomes languid, easily tired and has a pale and sallow complexion. On the other hand, it is sometimes surprising how little constitutional disturbance chronic constipation causes in some children. Dr. L. Emmett Holt said that in most children no symptoms are present except the local ones, the general health being excellent and the nutrition being in no way disturbed.

The state of constipation in a vast majority of cases is due to faulty habit and diet. When these two points receive careful, intelligent and systematic attention, the distressing condition will be permanently relieved. If relief can be obtained, the child should be taken to a

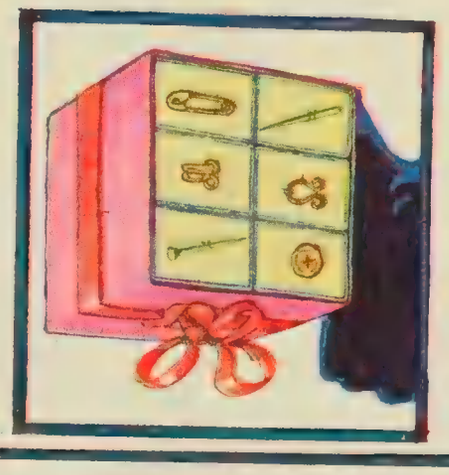
Concluded on page 62



FOUR CLUBS FOR MOTHERS

Are you the mother of—a baby-to-come, a tiny baby, a two-to-six-year-old "runabout," or a school child?

Whichever you are, THE DELINEATOR is offering you a special new medical service in the form of a monthly letter from Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw, one of the most eminent child specialists in the country. At the beginning of every month Doctor Shaw sends you a helpful letter, gives you a correct health program according to the age of your child, warns you of seasonal epidemics, and tells you how to bring your little one up in health and strength.



A membership in one of these clubs costs you only fifty cents a year—in all four, the special reduced price of one dollar. Remember there are four clubs, receiving four different letters every month. Let us know which you wish to join, and send your dues to "The Happy Child Clubs," THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

ENROLL NOW!

CHRISTMAS GIFTS TO MAKE

Sent by "Little Delineator" Readers

THE SEWING-MACHINE BOX

I took six matchboxes and stood them up, two boxes wide and three boxes high. At one end of the pile, paste a piece of silk and around them paste another piece, then tie a ribbon around the boxes in a bow-knot. On each front of the boxes, sew something. On one sew a button; on the other put a pin; on the other put an eye; on the other a needle; on the last box put a safety-pin.

DONALD LANE,
Marietta, Ohio.
(Dollar Prize.)

A MAMMY DOOR-POST

To make a door-post, take a catchup bottle, fill it with sand and cork up tight. Get one black stocking and pull it over the bottle and sew across the bottom. Stuff cotton inside the stocking around the top of the bottle and tie with black string. Leave a little of the neck of the bottle sticking out and cut off the stocking about three inches above the neck of the bottle. Fill this up tight with cotton for the head, and sew up. Sew two small white buttons on the head with black thread for eyes. With a small piece of red yarn, make thick red lips. Make arms of pieces of black stocking, stuff with cotton and sew on the doll. Get bright-colored cloth out of your mama's quilt pieces to make the dress, apron, cap and little shawl.

RUTH SCHOFIELD,
St. Louis, Mo.
(Dollar Prize.)

A YULE LOG FOR THE FAMILY

This is a really lovely gift and is easily prepared by taking a medium-sized hickory log, boring a number of holes half through it, putting copper chlorid in them and stuffing on top of this scraps of paper very tightly wedged in. When the fire reaches the chemical, the coloring of the flame is most brilliant and many-colored.

J. AUSTIN TURNER, Jr.
Shelby, N. C.
(Dollar Prize.)

A CHRISTMAS-CARD HOUSE

No one likes to throw away Christmas cards, yet there seems to be nothing to do with them. This year get

4

MY LITTLE PAGE

DEAR SNOWBALLS:

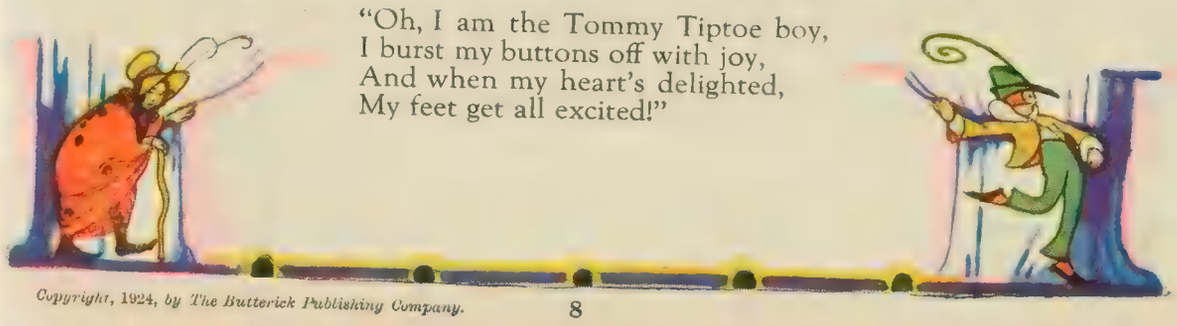
How's that for a wintry name?

I have a wonderful secret—something so many of you have wanted for so long that at last the Big DELINEATOR has let us have it. IT is about Deli-bear and THE LITTLE DELINEATOR and you and me—but sh-h-h, I can't tell yet! And each of you will have a—something, to show you are a—but, mercy me, I nearly let the cat out of the bag! ITS initials are D. C. Now can you guess IT? Well, you'll read all about IT in the Third Birthday Number next month.

Of course I'm just bursting to tell IT. So, if you write to me, I'll whisper my secret in your ear while the Big DELINEATOR's back is turned. Every child who enters the Christmas-Present Contest on page seven or who writes to your editor this month will get a special New Year's letter telling the SECRET a whole month ahead of time!

Please write me all about your Christmas plans and fun and your New Year's resolutions. And please try for the contest.

Merry Christmas! Happy New Year!



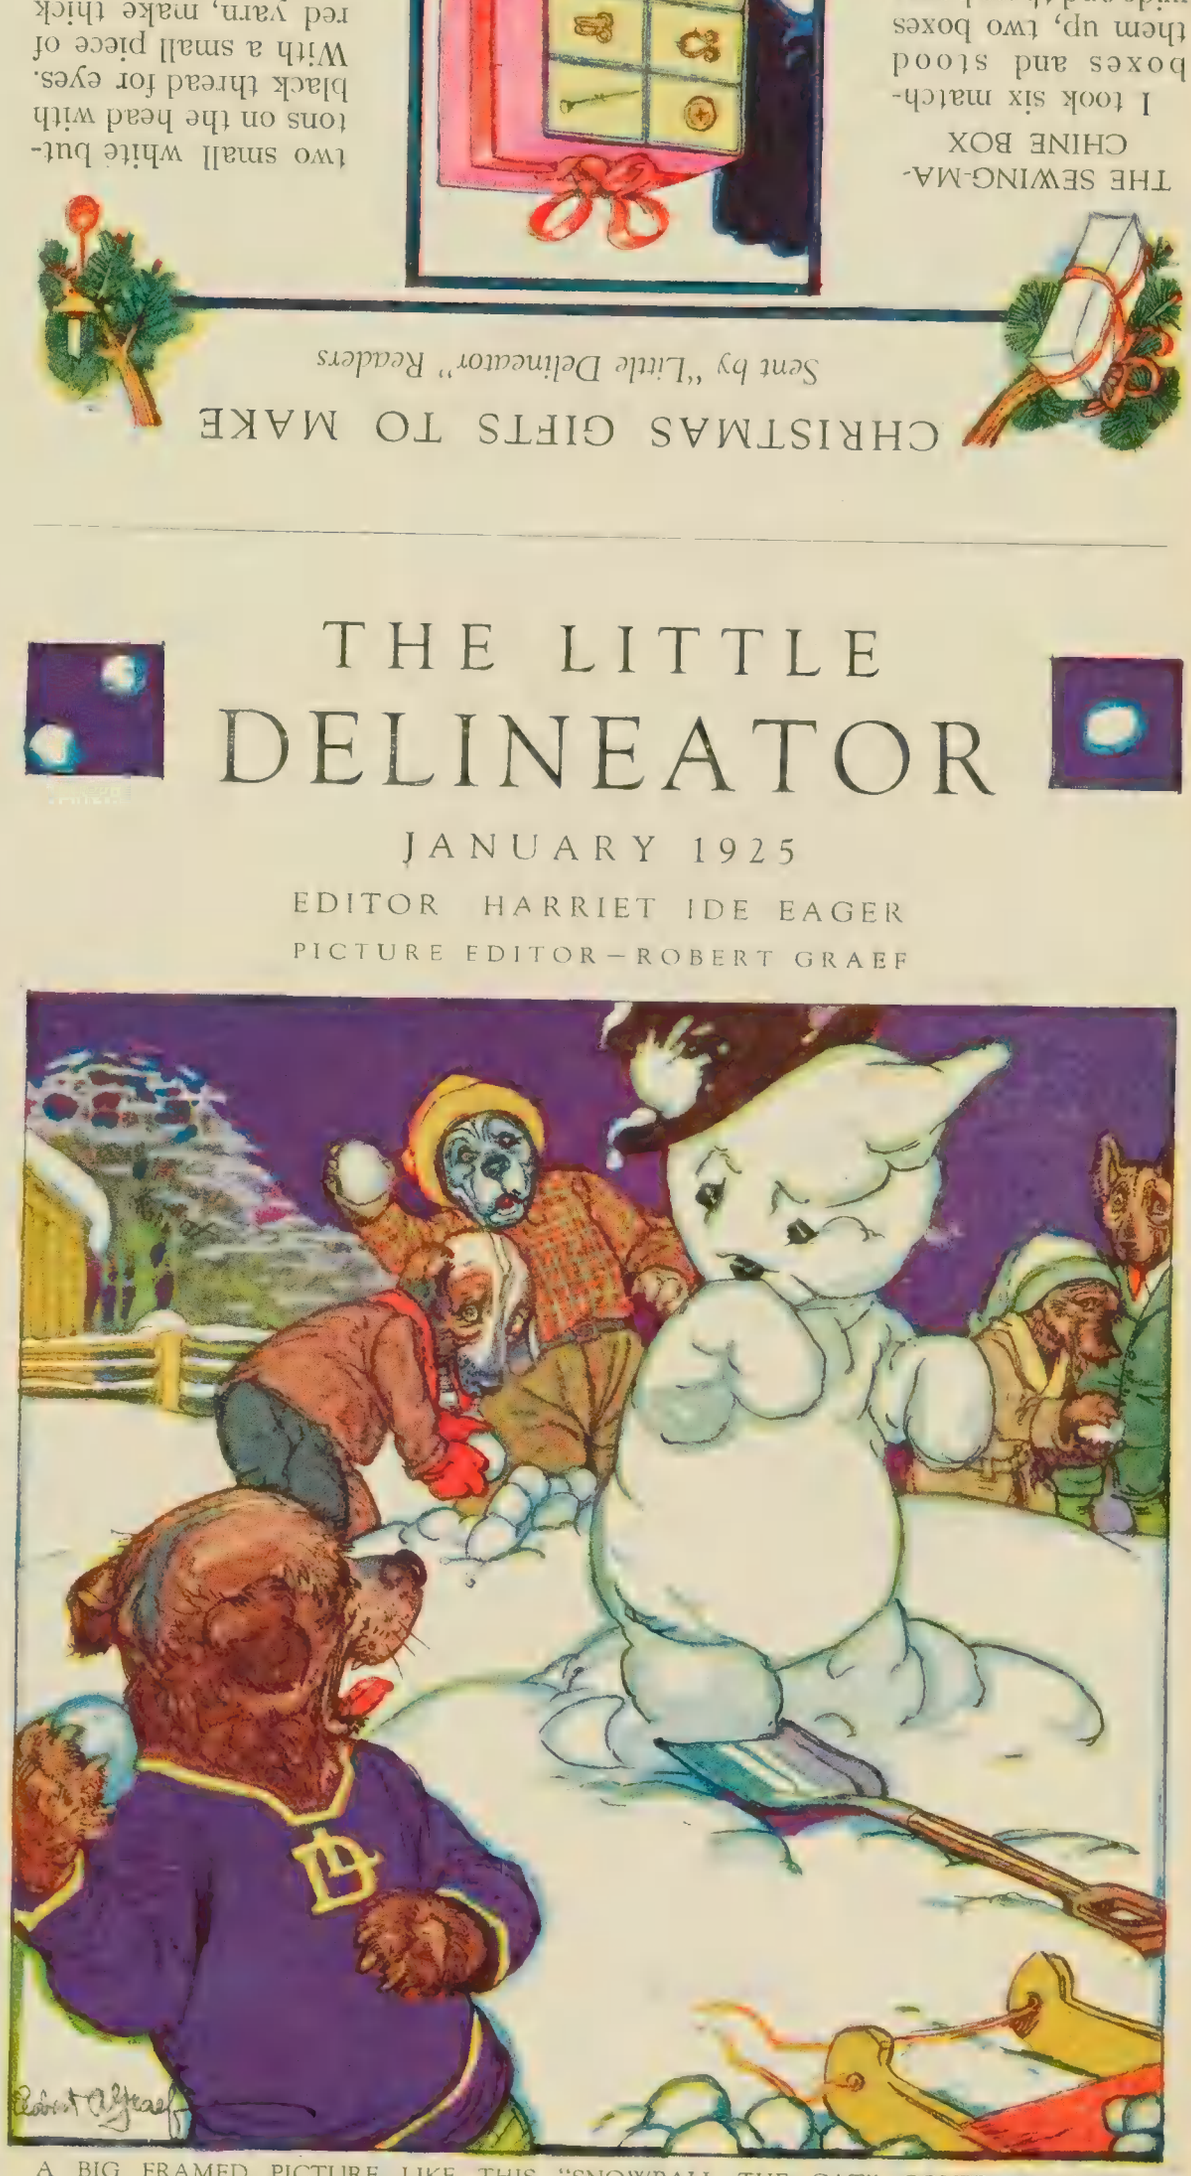
Your loving editor with a BIG SECRET!

HARRIET IDE EAGER.

TOMMY TIPTOE'S LITTLE OPERA

Here's news for you! Your editor has written a play for children, with music by Samuel Richard Gaines, called "Ladybug, Ladybug," a little opera all in verse about Tommy Tiptoe and the ladybug and her babies and other interesting nature people. If you or your teacher want to give "Ladybug, Ladybug," write to your editor for more information. Address, Editor of THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, care of the Big DELINEATOR, New York, N. Y. There are thirteen songs—this is the first verse of Tommy's "Tiptoe Song":

"Oh, I am the Tommy Tiptoe boy,
I burst my buttons off with joy,
And when my heart's delighted,
My feet get all excited!"



Copyright, 1924, by The Butterick Publishing Company.

THE LITTLE DELINEATOR

JANUARY 1925

EDITOR HARRIET IDE EAGER

PICTURE EDITOR—ROBERT GRAEF

A BIG FRAMED PICTURE LIKE THIS "SNOWBALL THE CAT" COVER IS THIRD PRIZE IN THE CHRISTMAS-PRESENT CONTEST ON PAGE SEVEN

I am sending a Christmas present any boy or girl can make, and it only costs about five cents for the ribbon and a few cents for the pictures, and mother gave me the tacks and daddy got me the blocks. You just bend the first block back flat on the next one and hold them up and they all fall down to the bottom.

KATHERINE WARWICK,
Sandusky, Ohio.
(Dollar Prize.)

THE CARROT FLOWER-POT

Here is a cheap but sweet present. Take a big carrot, cut the point off almost in the middle of the carrot, then cut the biggest part of the other end off—I mean to make it look neat. Then hollow it out from the top side where you cut the most off. When it is hollowed out very nicely, take some plain or colored cord and make a hole close to the edge of the carrot, then make one exactly opposite the first one. Then take the cord and slip it through both holes, then tie it.

This must be hung in the window and must be filled with water every day. Soon ferns will appear and will try to climb up the sides of the carrot.

JOHANNA VANDER WERF,
Grieland, Wis. (Dollar Prize.)

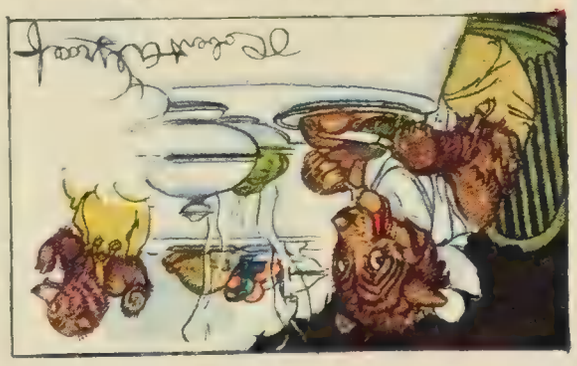
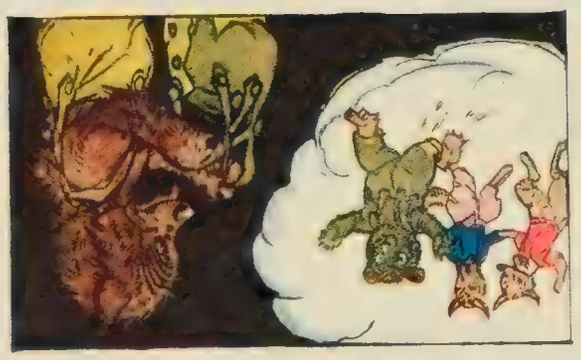
YOUR GIFT FOR MOTHER OR FATHER

Are you wondering what to make this Christmas for mother or father? Your editor knows of two very simple, useful, different gifts—one for father which girls can sew and one for mother which both boys and girls can easily make. We did not print them here, you see, because then all the family would know and your fun would be spoiled. If you want directions, send a stamped envelope addressed to yourself to Christmas Gifts, THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, care of the Big DELINEATOR, New York, N. Y.



DELI-BEAR'S NEW YEAR THOUGHTS



That lazy day he overslept so long,
And dawdled on the way to school—then everything went wrong.

So many things this year has taught: last March our Deli learned
That every wind blows something good if good is what you earned.

To see, to smell that paint-stained suit still makes him faint and hollow—
He learned, with bad companions something bad is sure to follow.

And when he fooled his Granny-bear with rain that wasn't rain,
He found sometimes a trickster's tricks are turned on him again!

He learned not to be greedy. Now, quite glad to be alive,
He counts his blessings and his hopes for nineteen-twenty-five.

The party Deli tried to give without old Granny-bear
Taught him that often things run best when grown-up folks are there.

Your Editor's Post Office

Perry, Ga.

DEAR MISS EAGER:

I have been reading THE LITTLE DELINEATOR ever since the February when it first appeared, and of the different things that have been published I think Tommy Tiptoe plays are the best. If a child sees some one acting the part of a bug he will learn whether that bug is helpful or not. He will know next time he sees a bug whether it is best to kill it or not. I have a rose garden of my own and I know that your story about the rosebush and the ladybug will help me, for I will now wage war on the "terrible aphis." I have lots of books on gardening and have read a great deal about the aphis, but I could not have told how he looked. I believe I can recognize him now after seeing the picture in THE LITTLE DELINEATOR.

Everybody where I live has rose gardens. I am going to get some boys and girls to act the "Ladybug, Ladybug" play, and I am sure that all the children that come will go home ready to fight the aphis and protect the ladybug. I believe they will tell other children, and who knows but in a few years Perry may be noted for its beautiful rose-bushes! If it is, it will be because of Tommy Tiptoe plays that were published in THE LITTLE DELINEATOR.

MARTHA COOPER. (May Cover Prize.)

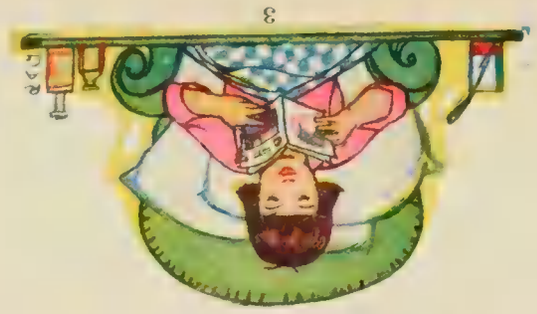
Big Spring, Texas.

I send this letter as sunshine
To you, editor dear,
Because I know
you are lonesome
Without our letters of cheer.



MARGARET BETTLE.

Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAR MISS HARRIET:

I have been sick and guess what? THE LITTLE DELINEATOR helped to cure me. Sister says it is as good as medicine, only it hasn't a nasty taste.

KATHRYN KLEIN.

The Quest of the Holy Grail

Copyright by Edward A. Abbey, from a Copley Print copyrighted by Curtis & Cameron, publishers, Boston, Mass.

SO WHEN Galahad had released the Captive Virtues, that they might bless and beautify the world, he journeyed forth once more upon the holy quest. And again he came to the Castle of the Grail, and into the presence of the Sacred Mysteries. And as he looked upon the suffering of King Amfortas, to his lips sprang the humble question: "What meaneth these things?" and lo! the spell was broken, and all awoke and were made whole in the wondrous light of the Grail.

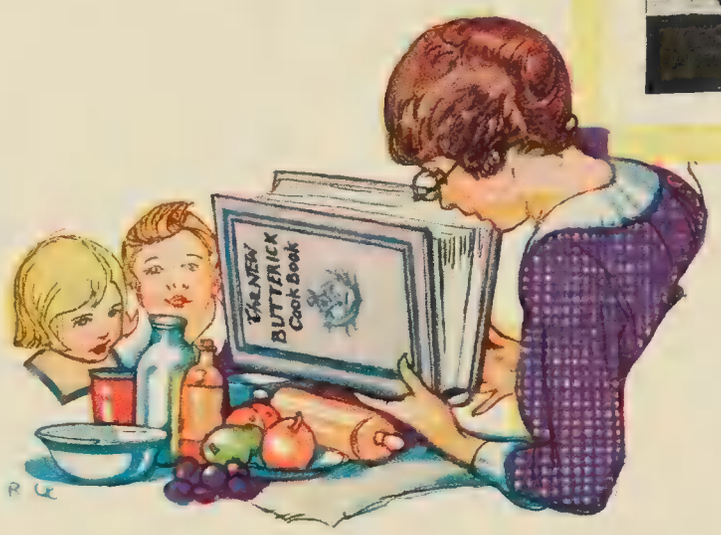
But before his eyes an Angel had borne the Grail from out the Castle, and Galahad must follow the Sacred Cup to its final resting-place across the sea.

So Galahad the Deliverer rode through the land which he had set free, and the Loathely Damsel and all the thankful folk gathered about and bade him godspeed. And so fared he forth upon his last adventure.

WIN ONE OF THESE PRIZES!

DO YOU know a Christmas present, not too hard, which a boy or girl can make, costing no more than twenty-five cents? Send the idea to your editor, explaining carefully how to make it. Don't send the things everybody knows, such as pincushions, hair-receivers, blotters, book-marks, etc., but something a little different.

For the three most simple, useful and original ideas for gifts, THE LITTLE DELINEATOR will give three prizes:



First Prize—A Deli-bear toy, all made and stuffed, with a pair of yellow overalls and a sailor suit and cap.

Second Prize—A Butterick Cook Book, with every good recipe any good cook could want. What a wonderful surprise for mother!

Third Prize—A big picture, painted by Mr. Graef, like our "Snowball the Cat" cover on THE LITTLE DELINEATOR.

First Prize—This Toy Deli-bear

Second Prize—A Butterick Cook Book for Mother

The contest closes January 20, 1925. Your editor will send a TELEGRAM to each prize-winner! Please write distinctly. Give your name, age and address. Address Christmas-Gift Contest, THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, care of the Big DELINEATOR, New York, N. Y. Send a stamped envelope addressed to yourself if you want an answer.

The Way To Save

By
MARTHA VAN RENSSELAER

Head of the School of Home Economics, Cornell University, and Head of the Home-Making Department of The Delineator

DOWN-AND-OUT people are generally down and out because their lives have not been shaped by a background of thrift. A large portion of the money now given to charity goes to caring for those who have joined or been thrust into the ranks of dependents.

Many of these persons have become dependents through no fault of their own. It is to remedy this evil that the United States is now trying to develop a constructive program which will aim to teach people the full meaning of thrift and how to acquire the health and efficiency that go with it. To teach people how to live and how to save is to attack poverty at its source.

To most of us, economy has come to mean saving money. Real economy, whether practised by us as individuals or by our nation, should mean that we are trying to build up reserves. This may be represented by money we have saved for the rainy day or by money we have spent to build up in ourselves or in our families reserves of physical and mental health. Therefore, we must always keep in mind the fact that health and education are also savings.

Of course we must give long and serious consideration to saving money. We wish to leave a financial foundation for our children, to protect them until they are ready to help themselves. And then, there is our own old age to care for.

It is well to consider our present rate of living and to ask ourselves what standards we may hope to be able to maintain ten, twenty or thirty years from now. How much must we earn to meet our present legitimate needs and to provide in addition for the time when we shall not be earning?

The American Bankers' Association selected one hundred average young men starting out in life at an assumed age of twenty-five. Their histories were tabulated. Every one was healthy and mentally alert, according to our present-day standards of health. This is what happened to them financially:

At the Age of Thirty-five: Thirty-five of these young men had saved nothing; forty had moderate means; ten were in good circumstances; ten were wealthy; five were dead.

At the Age of Forty-five: Sixteen were no longer self-supporting; sixty-five were self-supporting, but without resources; three were wealthy; sixteen were dead.

At the Age of Fifty-five: Twenty were dependent on children, relatives or charity for support; forty-six were self-supporting, but without means; three were in good circumstances; one was very wealthy; thirty were dead.

At the Age of Sixty-five: Fifty-four were dependent on children, relatives or charity for support; six were self-supporting by labor; three were wealthy; one was very wealthy; thirty-six were dead.

A New York bank gives the remedy for this financial decline in later years. It shows how much an individual must invest each month to produce a given total at the age of sixty-five, with interest at three per cent., compounded monthly. If the depositor starts at twenty years of age, he will have $5,000 at the age of sixty-five if he deposits in the savings-bank $4.37 each month and lets the compound interest do the rest.

The following table is quoted from an Industrial Savings Plan in The Journal of the American Bankers' Association dated January, 1920:

PRINCIPAL PLUS INTEREST AT FOUR AND ONE-HALF PER CENT. PRODUCES THE FOLLOWING TOTALS IN THE GIVEN TIME

Weekly deposit	1 year	2 years	3 years	4 years
$1.00	$ 52.89	$108.16	$165.95	$226.35
$2.00	105.77	216.33	331.93	452.78
$3.00	158.64	324.48	497.88	679.15
$4.00	211.52	432.65	663.84	905.56
$5.00	264.39	540.81	829.79	1,131.93

Weekly deposit	5 years	10 years	15 years	20 years
$1.00	$ 289.52	$ 651.20	$1,103.01	$1,667.51
$2.00	579.14	1,302.60	2,206.35	3,335.35
$3.00	868.68	1,953.86	3,309.40	5,002.77
$4.00	1,158.28	2,604.98	4,412.47	6,670.40
$5.00	1,447.82	3,256.43	5,515.74	8,338.39

MARTHA VAN RENSSELAER

THE FAMILY THAT WANTS TO MAKE A REAL SAVING MUST—

Spend less than its income.
Not buy more than it needs.
Not ask for extended credit.
Make regular payments on investments.
Be a steady buyer in a period of business depression.
Allow its money income to increase.
Save to-morrow as well as to-day.
Provide for reverses in business.
Insure against loss by fire and theft.
Provide for death and burial.
Begin early to save for the education of its children.
Stake its claim to a home.
Teach each of its members the value of a dollar.
Not regard saving as an end in itself.

One must, of course, have wisdom in investing savings. A postmaster-general said recently that one billion dollars are lost yearly by people of the United States who purchase fraudulent securities through the mail. To offset the danger of making ignorant and unwise investments, the Federal Government and our banks are now giving instructions to those who would save by investing. They are trying to teach the difference between speculation and investment.

The American Bankers' Association estimates that there are to-day thirty million savings-bank depositors whose deposits amount to more than seventeen billion dollars, while ten years ago the savings accounts in banks and trust companies numbered only twelve million and amounted to but eight billion dollars. In 1912 one out of every eight persons was the possessor of a savings-bank account. To-day one person out of four has money in the bank. This marks real progress.

A GOOD beginning for savings is a checking account, progressing from that to a savings account where small deposits may be invested at a rate of compound interest. There is a close relationship between the household budget and the item of weekly savings. Any money left over after the week's bills are paid can be tucked away in a savings-bank where it will be safe and without danger of being drawn, for savings-banks usually discourage the casual withdrawing of funds.

A home savings-bank started for a child in its first year will, if frequently contributed to, find the youth of eighteen with a neat sum to insure his or her college expenses.

For small investors, the national postal savings system is attractive. Postal savings certificates may be bought from ten cents up, bearing two per cent. interest for each full year the money remains on deposit. When one has added to his card one dollar's worth of stamps, he may exchange it for a postal savings certificate, which also bears two per cent. interest for each full year the money remains on deposit. Postal savings certificates may then be exchanged for postal savings bonds, bearing two and one-half per cent. interest.

A Treasury savings certificate amounting to twenty dollars will grow in five years' time to twenty-five dollars; or eight hundred dollars in the same time will amount to one thousand dollars at four per cent. compound interest. These certificates may be secured at a post-office or from the United States Treasury Department at Washington, D. C. Information about these securities may be obtained by writing to the United States Treasury.

The "Own Your Own Home" campaign, by which the householder stakes his claim in the life of the community, has been greatly helped by cooperative building-and-loan associations. Members of these organizations own the stock and receive all profits that remain after the expenses of running the organization are paid. The charge to a member assessed weekly or monthly is an investment which he can realize when his payments with interest accrued will permit him to pay for his lot and start to build his house.

Although men use most of their incomes for family living expenses and for business turnover, they are constantly aware of the fact that there is the hazard that sickness and death may in a moment cut off their income. Consequently most people secure an insurance against disaster in what has grown into an enormous protective agency with many different forms of insurance.

More and more State laws are protecting the insured, and many insurance companies are educating the public in methods of prolonging life by proper attention to health. Insurance items have an important place in the family budget, both as a means of saving and as a protection to the family.

THERE are other investments which may be regarded as speculation and which should be made only upon sound advice. Miss Ida Tarbell quoted some years ago in a famous series of articles which she wrote for McClure's Magazine:

"I am constantly asked by men and women in the professions and small positions who have saved five hundred, one thousand or two thousand dollars to invest their money. They want ten, fifteen or twenty per cent., they say. They wouldn't object to a hundred—but it must be safe. They can't afford to lose now.

"There is no man in the world who can honestly say that he can invest money and be certain of permanent large returns. The big dividends come from speculative ventures, and no one should make them unless he is willing and able to lose all he puts in.

"There is only one safe way for people to invest—and that is to choose sound, conservative bonds or stocks, and that after consultation with trustworthy brokers or bankers. In the long run it will be worth much more to them than the uncertain large dividend."

HOME-MAKING ARTICLES IN THIS ISSUE OF "THE DELINEATOR"

All these articles offer helpful advice on various phases of home-making. We invite our readers to consult us regarding their individual housekeeping problems

FOOD AND NUTRITION
French Pastry—Made in America 20
Good Old Country Dishes for Winter . . 41
Menus for the New Year 44
Keeping the Children Well at Christmas 47

EQUIPMENT AND MANAGEMENT
The Way to Save 19
How Many Miles in Your Kitchen? . . . 42
Save Dollars and Hours 49

INTERIOR DECORATION
Make It a Green Christmas Indoors . . . 21
Festive Paper Decorations 50

BUILDING
'Good Homes—the Right of All Citizens" 15

French Pastry ~ Made in America

The Secrets of these Toothsome Dainties

By EMILY REISENBERG

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University
~Martha Van Rensselaer

1—IT IS IMPORTANT THAT THE FLOUR BE STIRRED DIRECTLY INTO HOT WATER AND FAT

Is your French pastry temperamental? Are your éclairs and cream puffs "pernickety," expanding outrageously one time and refusing to at all the next? It may be that you don't understand all the ins and outs of their complex make-up. Our experts can help you if this article does not solve all your difficulties. Send your questions to the Home-Making Department, THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped envelope for our answer

3—COOL IN A BOWL AND AFTER ADDING EACH EGG BEAT UNTIL THE PASTE IS SMOOTH

BASIC recipes for making choux paste, that is, paste made with a boiled foundation such as is used in cream puffs and éclairs, can be found in every up-to-date cook-book. They may differ somewhat in regard to the relative proportions of material used, although the directions for making and baking are usually the same. But—and it is a very important but—the professional method of handling this delicate mixture employed by high-class chefs and bakers is not generally understood, and consequently the home-made product often fails to reach the desired expansion in baking and is apt to turn soft while cooling.

By carefully observing the rules for chilling, baking, etc., as set forth in this article, any cook, be she ever so inexperienced, can easily master the tricks of the trade and make the popular cream puffs and éclairs, and then pass on confidently to the other delectable dishes made with a choux-paste foundation.

Remember that in these recipes all measurements are level. Flour is sifted before measuring and then slid lightly into a half-pint measuring-cup and leveled off at the desired point. Butter is pressed into a spoon that has been dipped into water and then is leveled off even with a knife. Only strictly fresh eggs must be used, as the expansion of choux-paste products is largely dependent on the quality of the eggs.

CHOUX PASTE—THE BASIC RECIPE

1 cup water	1 cup sifted bread flour
4 level tablespoons butter	4 fresh eggs

Place the water and the butter in a small saucepan over moderate heat, and when the water is hot and butter melted add the flour. Stir until the mass clears from the sides of the pan and looks like putty. Scrape this into a round-bottomed bowl and when partly cooled add the eggs, one at a time, beating after each egg is added until the paste is smooth. At the last beat the mixture five minutes by the clock. When the paste is cold, cover the bowl and set in the ice-box until the paste stiffens. This will require several hours; if convenient, it can stand overnight. This amount will make eight large puffs or éclairs or a large trayful of small pastries.

The following rules for baking will carry you through the entire process of baking choux-paste products and cover any points you may feel uncertain about.

First—Use heavy shallow baking-pans, preferably aluminum. Do not grease them, but after warming the pans in the oven rub them with a piece of paraffin and let them cool before using. This leaves the bottom of the pastry crisp after removing it from the pans.

Second—After shaping the pastry on the pans, let them stand in a cool place until the surface of the paste has hardened so that it can be touched with a finger-tip without sticking. This prevents the paste from spreading in the oven and produces a crinkly surface during expansion. It will require about two hours or more to reach this stage. Do not try to hasten matters by placing the pans in the ice-box, as the moisture from the ice softens the paste.

2—STIR UNTIL THE MIXTURE CLEARS FROM THE SIDE OF THE PAN AND LOOKS LIKE PUTTY

Third—When it is ready to bake, place the pans on the bottom rack in a hot oven (400 to 500 degrees Fahrenheit), as the heat from below will force the mixture up. After five minutes, begin to watch the oven; and if there are signs of the pastry browning on the bottom, slide an asbestos mat under the rack. If at any time it is desirable to lower the heat, just open the oven door and let the hot air escape. This method produces an immediate change of temperature and is quite safe, as cold air can not penetrate a hot oven. When the expansion of the pastry is well under way, place the pans on a higher rack and bake with a lower degree of heat (350 to 400 degrees Fahrenheit) until done. This process takes from twenty to thirty-five minutes, according to the size of the pastry. When finished, the products will have increased in size, be a golden-brown color and light to touch. If a toothpick is inserted, it will come out clean. In fact, each pastry must be just a delicate, hollow shell. As soon as the pans are taken from the oven remove the pastry to a cooling-rack, but do not set it in a draft.

CREAM PUFFS

When the paste is made and chilled as directed, shape the puffs with a tablespoon dipped in cold water. A knife or the finger-tips can be used to form the puffs higher in the center. Cool and bake according to rules.

When ready to fill, cut the top off with a sharp knife and if any soft paste has settled in the bottom of the puffs scoop it out with a spoon. (This paste can be rebaked and crumbled into soup just before serving.)

For filling, use slightly sweetened whipped cream flavored with a little vanilla. Use powdered sugar and do not make the cream too sweet. Fill the puffs so that a little cream will show when the top is set on. Dust with sifted confectioners' sugar.

Concluded on page 65

4—AFTER MIXING, CHILL AND MOLD ON HEAVY SHALLOW PANS RUBBED WITH PARAFFIN

5—LET STAND UNTIL STIFF, THEN BAKE CAREFULLY. WHEN DONE, COOL, THEN OPEN AND FILL

6—WITH THIS SAME PASTE ONE MAY MAKE ANY NUMBER OF THE DAINTY FRENCH PASTRIES

Make It a Green Christmas Indoors

Decorations arranged by
MRS. CHARLES BRADLEY SANDERS
Director of the Department of House Decoration

"Again at Christmas did we weave
The holly round the Christmas hearth;
The silent snow possessed the earth,
And calmly fell on Christmas eve."
—TENNYSON.

A deep window-box filled with feathery branches makes an attractive base for a French window and balances the wreath that decorates the larger window-space

Plumes of Southern pine and clusters of brilliant pepper berries make a unique frame for this fireplace; in the fire-pit itself, holly surrounds the Yule log

A laurel garland forms an effective wall decoration and branches of hemlock edge the sofa top

PRIZE CONTEST

What is your idea of artistic Christmas wreathing? THE DELINEATOR invites its readers to photograph decorative arrangements of Christmas greens, either inside or outside the house. A prize of $50.00 goes to the photograph which in the opinion of the Department of House Decoration shows the most unique and effective composition. For each other photograph that is accepted and published by THE DELINEATOR a prize of $5.00 will be given.

Print your name and address on the back of each photograph submitted. Photographs must not be smaller than four by five inches, and must be received not later than February 1, 1925, by the Contest Editor, Department of House Decoration, THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y. Unaccepted photographs will not be returned unless postage is enclosed.

It seems fitting that this old sideboard-table, which for years has proffered a wealth of Christmas goodies, should be generously flanked by trees of fragrant hemlock and massed, both below and above, with sprigs of gleaming holly

This small Christmas dinner-table is simply but successfully decorated with an edible centerpiece of nuts and fruit, while sprigs of hemlock cross from corner to corner and outline the edges of the snowy cloth with deep green

SLICKER 'N' SLICKER

BY CELIA CAROLINE COLE

EVERY now and then in this long life of ours we go and sit in the top of a theater and look down on people.

Perhaps our subconscious self takes us up there because for the good of our soul we need to feel like one of those gay wise gods of the pagans, high up, looking down and judging. And we always wish that, like them, we could see down inside those people below us and say, "Ho! there's a woman who needs to be happy. We'll sprinkle her with charm and send her a born lover." "Ha! that man right down there is a little too brash. We'll give him a wife!"

But the best we can do is to look down on topknots and judge souls by them. "Ho! there's a woman who is always racing against time—every hair of her head looks exhausted." "Ah! there's a person! That sleek, daring head, as if her hair were painted on her skull! Locks shining, proud and black sweep from the rather high side part down the left side over the ear, sticking close as a brother. One broad swing of the brush brings the right side down over the ear, emphasizing the cubistic contour of the face and revealing every curve of the back of the head. Not one woman in a million would 'unbefriend' herself like that. Not a bit of a beauty, but distinction and independence in every line of her head and face!" "And there's a woman who is charming and knows it, the shining silk of her hair (brushing did that), the provocative upward curve of the wisp on her cheek, the charming poise, assured by experience. Whatever her face, not a soul, male or female, but would respond to the lure of that sweet, wavy head!"

Brown heads and black, orange and green gold, flaxen and drab, silver as a sea rippling under the moon. Like a shot, we can tell who brushes and who doesn't. You can't counterfeit real gleam with brilliantines. It's silken with life and care, or it's shiny for external reasons. And there's about the same difference between them as there is between loving because you ought to and loving because you can't help but!

The smartest shingle that is and the most picturesque coiffure that could be are of little avail if the hair is not pulsing with health and intelligent care. You can't make anemic hair fall into soft or chic lines. One of the most successful hair specialists in New York says that there are three kinds of ugly hair—too oily hair, too dry hair and too tired hair. (And we ourself add—too closely waved hair and too "hennaed" hair.)

ONE-FOURTH of the women of Paris are bobbed. And there is about that same proportion in London and New York. In spite of the cry that bobbed heads will result in bald heads, the shears go zipping on. But there is this much truth in that warning cry: These tight hats we pull down so smartly over our shingled heads cut off air and hamper circulation even more than men's hats do, and everybody knows that for generations we've been telling men that that is what makes them bald.

Also it is a most beguiling temptation to "swim" your bobbed head every time you take a bath, and this daily washing is a thing no self-respecting topknot will stand. If your hair is too dry, it makes it dryer by washing away all the natural oils. If it's too oily, it makes it worse, because oily hair comes from weakly acting glands. Continual washing weakens them still more, so that the oil does not spread out evenly down to the end of the hair but stays all in one place at the top.

Then we don't bother so with drying a bobbed head. Hair should be dried swiftly and by hand, with sun and wind as the sole helpers; never dry it with artificial heat and never allow it to lie around wet until time dries it.

And, just among us, mes-amies-of-the-bobbed-locks, do you brush your hair as much as you did when it was long? That's the most necessary thing of all! If you want us to, we'll send you instructions which tell exactly how to brush so as to cleanse and polish at the same time, and exactly the right way to massage your scalp, what is more.

To be modee and exciting and to look like an illustration in a novel, the hair should be either shingled or dressed so close to the head that it looks like paint. No more large, gnomelike heads. They're small and chic and Greek now. A dashing little head on the top of a slender, supple body not at all concealed by its extremely simple frock—that is she! Far more like a boy than a woman. And, by the way, the difference between the boyish haircut and the shingle is only in the graduation in the back; the boyish is a bit shorter at the crown. And a whisper: the old straight bob is very demodee.

Drawing by Otto J. Gatter

One's crowning glory is such a problem, what is a body to do? To bob or not to bob—and how? Or if one's hair be long, how to keep it sleek and attractive? Here Celia Caroline Cole gives you enlightening answers to these perplexing questions. And if you have any private queries to make—about hair or hands or beauty culture in general, she'll gladly advise you in a personal letter. Just write her at THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped envelope for her reply

TWO things must be considered as to the bob: the type of the person and the nature of the hair. Shingled hair is an evil to the woman with large, prominent features; she is all face and no head. The short, stout woman can very rarely wear a shingle; she needs a "thatch." Older women look better with the shingle than any other cut, because it looks more like a close, neat "coif."

The bob, like love 'n' danger in these modern days, has no age limit in connection with it. It sets more beautifully on the young to be sure, but there's no ban on it for the old except the one of doing it stupidly. Some of the most charming heads we know are silver bobbed heads. In fact, it is so chic in Paris to have silver hair that many of the smart women wear silver transformations.

Age has nothing to do with bobbed heads, but the nature of hair has. Hair that is thin will never make an attractive bobbed head. Much better to keep it long and drape it. Or hair that grows badly, unalluringly at the nape of the neck; keep it long and dress it low. Or if the neck is too fat, or too thin, or very long, better not bob the hair. Or if the back of the head is very flat, no; keep the hair long and wave it and dress it to hide the flatness.

The "friendliest" shingle is to have it cut long on the sides so as to cover the ears. The line of the hair at the side should follow the line of the chin to the ear. If the hair grows so that a point can be made in the center of the back, have your barber cut it in a point. Paris isn't doing the point much, but it is more becoming to most American women, especially if they are past their youth: a lovely sloping curve from behind the ear down to the sharp little point. Only about one out of fifty women can have it though, because the hair on most people doesn't grow down in the center of the back of the neck. If you can't have a point, have a curve. Don't have a straight line.

If a woman has a well-shaped head and the hair grows attractively in the back and the neck is not too thin, the hair is cut close to the head in the back about a third of the way up from the nape of the neck and from there on it is longer. The whole aim is to have a beautiful line for the back of the head—that loveliness one finds in the head of a young boy.

If the hair is thin or the neck "scrawny" (terrible word), the smart hair-dresser does not cut the hair close at the nape of the neck, but cuts it in one length from the crown to the nape, thinning the ends with a razor so that it will not stand out. The hair is then waved and brushed flat to the head.

Perfectly straight hair had better take two looks before it lets itself be cut. As we've said before, this straight hair takes a special kind of face. If you haven't that kind of a face, there are just two things to do—a permanent wave or constant curling. If straight hair is left long, it can be gracefully draped. In fact, one of the most thrilling heads we know has long, straight black hair, parted in the center and drawn like black velvet curtains down on either side of the head, with the face looking out, mysterious and serene, between these soft and unforgettably lovely curtains.

THE dressing of the hair means to the face and head what shrubbery and trees mean to a brand-new house: they save it from that utterly revealed look. Women who don't want to cut their hair must at least cut it a little if it is long and thick. Go to a good barber—and by "barber" we mean a woman's barber, a hair-dresser—and have him thin it out evenly, so that it can be dressed smartly close. One enticing Parisienne had her hair cut shoulder length and then rolled it up all around in a smooth, shining, firm coil which went all around her head in a low curving line from ear to ear, completely covering them, of course.

Only a very beautiful woman dares attempt that coiffure. A gay, rollicking (in these days a terrifying sleekness) coiffure is for hair shoulder length, sweeping around from the part on the side to a fetching little "bun" over one ear. Very attractive, that one.

The part in the middle is as smart for bobs as for long hair and the "curtain" effect can be achieved just as effectively. Bobbed-headed Madonnas are seen every day. And long or short, the hair must be very neat—no more tousled heads—brushed until it shines, and for most faces waved in large, loose undulations. Hair with a slight natural curl will take a bewitching water wave and stay from one shampoo to another.

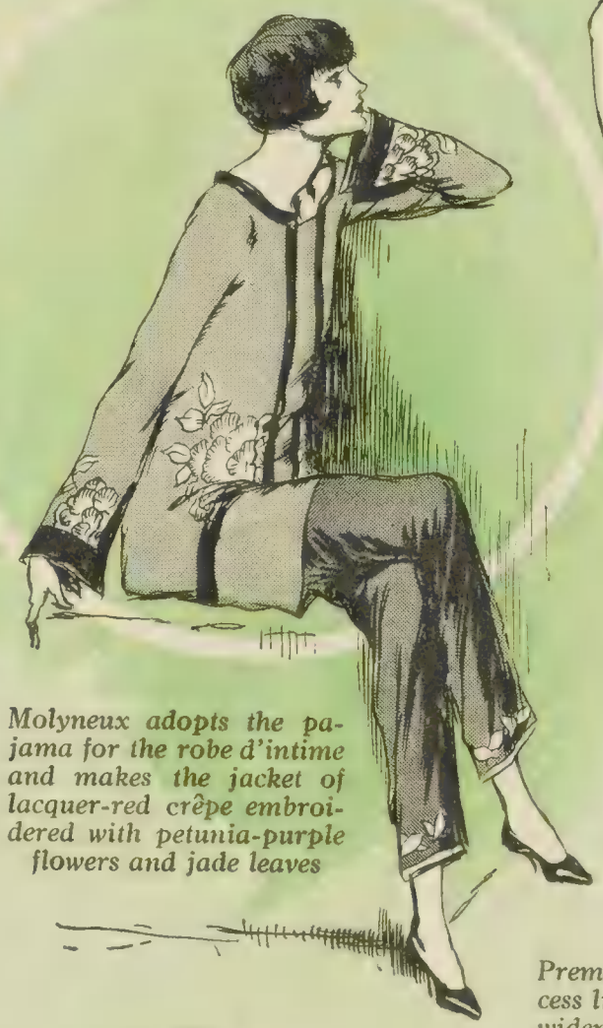
When you are having the hair cut for the first time and you haven't absolute confidence in your barber, a good idea is to arrange it yourself the way you like it about your face, pin it and then have the barber cut so that you can keep that line.

For the boy type, no combs; for the chic, soignee, Spanish or sophisticated types, yes. They are very beautiful and subtle, those combs.

Gray bobbed hair should keep itself like a shining silver cap. There is a tonic at a certain heaven-sent shop that can take the yellow look away from silver hair, and with it are secret instructions as to how to bring out high lights in it and how to help it never to get a yellow tinge.

Any one who has had short hair knows the joy of it—cool and free, easy to care for and nice to buy hats for. The disadvantage is the bother of having to have it cut—and you must go often, because bobbed hair too long is very ugly. If it is naturally curly, give thanks every day; you're one in a million. Bobbed hair well cut and cared for looks much better groomed and dressed than any coiffure the average long-haired woman can arrange for herself.

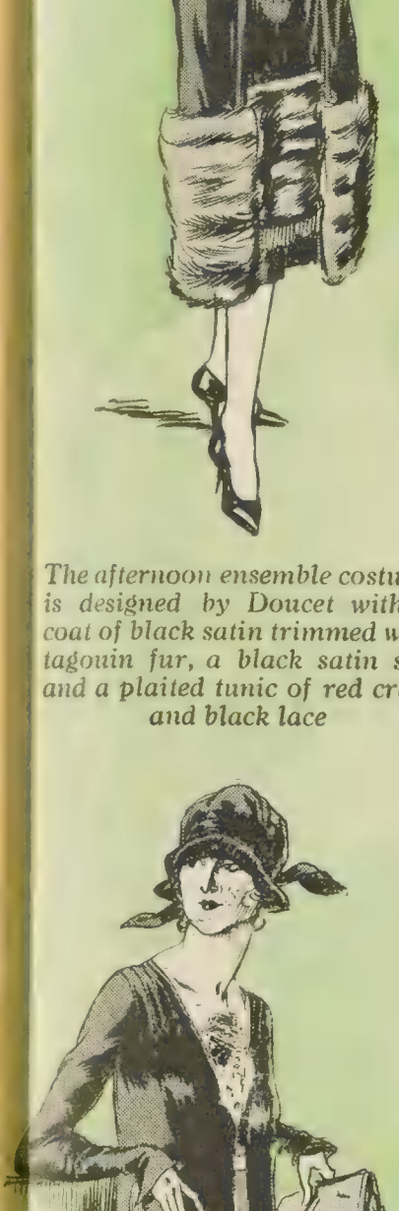
Brown heads and black, orange and green gold, flaxen and drab, silver as a sea rippling under the moon. What is going on inside of them? What is this new little year going to do to them? All the time slicker 'n' slicker on the outside and all the time keener and kinder on the in?



SOULIÉ'S SKETCHES SENT FROM THE DELINEATOR'S PARIS ESTABLISHMENT SHOW INTERESTING DIGRESSIONS FROM THE SHEATH SILHOUETTE

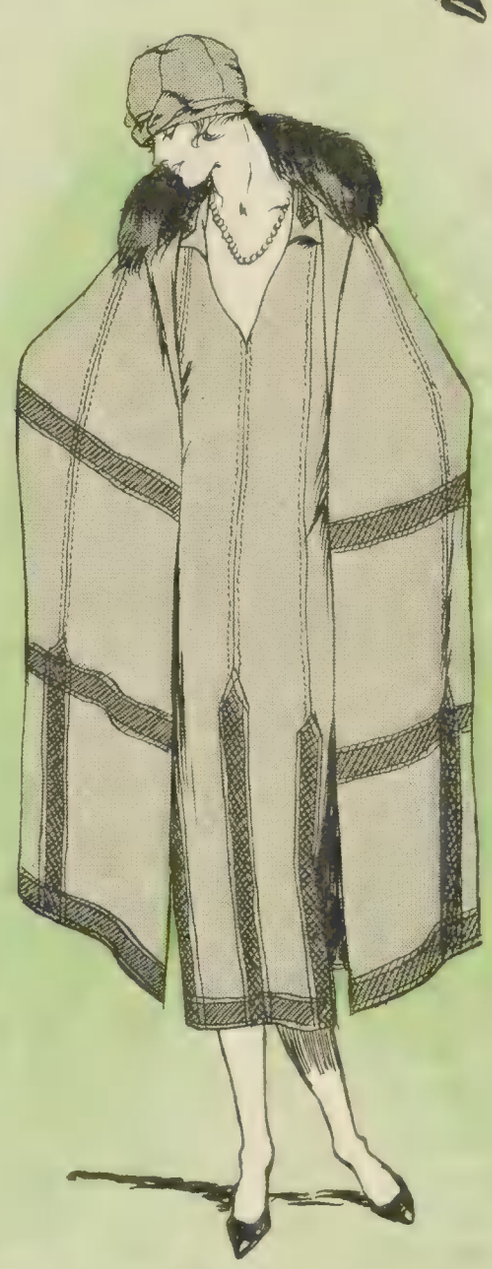
The afternoon ensemble costume is designed by Doucet with a coat of black satin trimmed with tagouin fur, a black satin slip and a plaited tunic of red crêpe and black lace

Lanvin's coat of beige rally kasha flares into godets at the lower part and is trimmed with a very small collar and very large cuffs of antelope and leopard skin. With it is a muff



Molyneux adopts the pajama for the robe d'intime and makes the jacket of lacquer-red crêpe embroidered with petunia-purple flowers and jade leaves

Premet follows the somewhat princess line of the narrow upper part widened below the hip in a frock of yellow Georgette stamped with red velvet and with spiral frills of Georgette headed with fur



Chanel makes her famous sports frock of mixed beige and tobacco wool with a sweater blouse and an inverted plait at the front and back of the skirt which is not excessively narrow

Patou uses four godets in a frock of black satin and lets an edge of each ride free. The silhouette however remains almost as straight and narrow as the tassel of beige silk, drawn through wooden molds, that hangs from the neck

Molyneux makes a cape costume of black and red Cumberland tweed shawls. The narrow cape is worn over a coat tunic of the tweed

Natural-colored kasha with quilted bands of red wool on the straight frock and narrow cape is used by Patou for the cape costume which promises to be immensely popular in Paris this season

Agnès (Mme Havet) makes a frock characteristic in elegance and coloring of tobacco-brown velvet embroidered spaciously in gold

Lanvin uses the new "glass blue" for a gown of vermeil satin with sleeves and tunic of silk lace dyed the same color. The embroidery is worked in silver mirror sequins. The effect of the whole frock is very brilliant

NEW ENSEMBLE AND TUNIC-BLOUSE COSTUMES, A COAT WRAP AND DRESSES

Coat 5720
Dress 5650

Dress 5773

5773

Tunic blouse and slip 5771
Embroidery design 10246

Dress 5778

5777

5778

Dress 5777

5773—The long upper part of this slip-over dress joins a contrasting one-piece lower part, giving one an opportunity to use the new color combinations—black with old blue or burnt russet, brown with banana yellow or amber, dark blue with bottle green, etc. This dress fits closely at the hipline. Use wool rep, soft twills, cashmere or kasha with satin crêpe, plain silk crêpe or crêpe de Chine in self or contrasting color for upper part; or use heavy satin with plain silk crêpe or crêpe de Chine, faille silk with satin materials, etc.

36 bust requires 1¾ yard 39-inch satin crêpe for upper part, 1⅜ yard 39-inch faille silk for lower part, etc. Lower edge 43½ inches.

The dress is smart for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5720—5650—A plaid dress to match the plaid lining of one's coat makes a smart and practical ensemble costume. This coat has a straight lower edge and pockets which may be set in or on the lining. The narrow one-piece slip-over dress fits closely at the hipline. Use cashmere coatings, soft pile fabrics, kasha or broadcloth for coat and line it with flannel, kasha or duvetyn. Use plaids, stripes, checks, flannel, soft twills, cashmere dress materials, etc., for dress.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 54-inch kasha, 2⅜ yards 54-inch wool plaid and 2⅛ yards 54-inch wool plaid to line coat. Lower edge of coat 45½ inches; of dress 44 inches.

The coat and dress are for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5650

5771

5720

Coat wrap 5621

5621

5777—An attached or detachable vestee and cuffs of white corded silk, a sash-end of crêpe de Chine to match the color of the dress, and bone buttons in a contrasting color are very smart for this draped wrap-around one-piece dress. Use cashmere dress materials, soft twills or broadcloth; or use faille silk or heavy satin crêpe with crêpe de Chine vestee, bone or crystal buttons. Lower edge 42 inches.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch twill, ⅜ yard 35-inch corded silk for vestee and cuffs and ⅝ yard 39-inch crêpe de Chine for sash-end.

The dress is attractive for ladies 34 to 46 bust.

5778—This slip-over dress with its tucked straight skirt joined at a low waistline is very becoming and easy to wear. For Southern wear use cotton voile, fine cotton crêpe or fine lawn with collar, cuffs and vestee of cotton Brussels net trimmed with frills of Val lace edging. One may use cotton Georgette, crêpe de Chine, Georgette or silk voile for entire dress.

36 bust requires 3¾ yards 39-inch cotton voile and ½ yard 36-inch cotton Brussels net for collar and cuffs. Lower edge 1⅝ yard.

The dress is becoming to ladies 34 to 52 bust.

5771—10246—A slip-over tunic blouse of satin crêpe, crêpe faille or Canton crêpe and a separate one-piece slip make a fashionable costume. Use the dress material for the binding and lower part of the slip. The two-piece circular lower part of the tunic blouse is joined at the hipline. An embroidered banding down the front is effective. Work the design in outline and one-stitch. Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

36 bust requires 3⅜ yards 39-inch satin crêpe.

The tunic blouse and slip are for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5621—One of the smartest evening wraps is the coat wrap of velvet or heavy satin in a color to harmonize with all of one's evening dresses. A black velvet or black satin wrap lined with silver cloth is practical.

36 bust requires 3¾ yards 50-inch velvet. Lower edge 49 inches.

The coat wrap is good style for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

TAILORED DRESSES HAVE SIDE CLOSINGS, CAPES, PLAITS AND BUTTONS

Coat dress 5775

Dress 5779
Embroidery
design
10246

Dress 5761

Coat dress 5747
Embroidery
design 10233

Box coat 5656
Dress 5729

Dress 5781
Embroidery
design 10112

5775

5779

5761

5781

5656

5747

5729

5779—10246—The cape of this one-piece slip-over dress is detachable. The embroidery is attractive. Work it in outline and one-stitch. Use crêpe faille, crêpe satin or silk crêpe with self bindings, bone buttons and embroidery on sleeves; or use cashmere dress materials, soft twills, light-weight flannel or wool jersey bound with silk braid and trimmed with bone buttons, etc.

36 bust requires 3¾ yards 40-inch crêpe faille. Lower edge 43½ inches.

The dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5775—The surplice closing over a vestee of piqué or corded silk and the plaits on the skirt make this a particularly becoming style. Stout women as well as slender will like this one-piece coat dress. It may have a French lining. Use soft twills, cashmere dress materials, wool crêpe, silk-and-wool crêpe, kasha, broadcloth or serge.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 54-inch soft twill. Lower edge 48 inches.

The coat dress is attractive for ladies 32 to 50 bust.

5761—For this one-piece dress which closes on the left side of the vestee front, use soft twills, wool rep or kasha in brown, navy or black trimmed with tan braid and white bone or nickel buttons. The scarf is lined and the sleeve faced with tan crêpe de Chine. One may use faille silk, bengaline or satin in black, brown or navy trimmed with white or tan braid and crystal or colored bone buttons, the scarf lined and sleeve faced with crêpe de Chine to match braid or buttons.

36 bust requires 2⅞ yards 56-inch wool rep. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The dress is becoming to ladies 33 to 48 bust, also misses.

5656—5729—Twills or cashmere suitings for the box-coat and the straight lower part of the slip-over dress make a smart suit. The long upper part of the dress may be plain silk crêpe or crêpe de Chine in self or contrasting color or printed designs; or use check wool and plain wool. The dress fits closely at the hipline. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 2⅞ yards 54-inch cashmere suiting for coat and lower part of dress and 1⅝ yard 39-inch silk crêpe for upper part.

The box-coat is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses; dress for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5747—10233—The coat dress which closes on the side and has long close-fitting or wider sleeves is extremely smart in wool or silk. Wool rep, soft twills and kasha are suitable to use and silk bengaline, silk faille, crêpe satin or heavy silk crêpe are the most fashionable silk materials. The embroidery is attractive. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch kasha.

The coat dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5781—10112—The slashed tunic of this one-piece slip-over dress gives the new flare to the dress. The tunic is joined at a close-fitting hipline. The neck may be cut higher and sleeves set into normal armholes for a daytime frock. When the dress is made of satin crêpe, a beading design should be used for trimming. Heavy silk crêpe or satin crêpe should be embroidered.

36 bust requires 3 yards 35-inch satin crêpe. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 52.

Dress 5767

Dress 5765

Dress 5725
Embroidery design 10229

Coat 5721

Coat 5654
Skirt 5042

Dress 5737

Other views and descriptions are on page 66

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 52.

Dress 5741
Embroidery
design 10246

Dress 5759

Dress 5712

Tunic blouse 5699
Costume slip 5724
Embroidery design 10138

Dress 5749

Tunic blouse and slip 5708
Embroidery design 10207

Other views and descriptions are on page 66

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 52.

Dress 5736
Embroidery design
10254

Dress and bloomers 5730
Embroidery design 10243

Dress 5734

Dress and bloomer
slip 5746

Suit 5756

Coat 5701
Hat 5744

Toy animal
10302

Dress 5695

Dress 5722
Tam-o'-shanter 5416

Dress 5693

Dress 5742

Other views and descriptions are on page 67

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 52.

Dress 5757
Embroidery design
10138

Dress 5735

Dress 5696
Tam-o'-shanter
5458

Dress 5686
Hat 5549

Dress 5702

Other views and descriptions are on page 68

Dress 5755

Dress 5714

Dress 5743

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 52.

Dress 5733

Dress 5723
Embroidery design 10246

Dress 5688

Dress 5682

Other views and descriptions are on page 69

Coat dress
5745

Dress 5710
Embroidery
design 10199

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 52.

Tunic blouse 5766
Slip 5685
Hat 5549
Embroidery design
10155

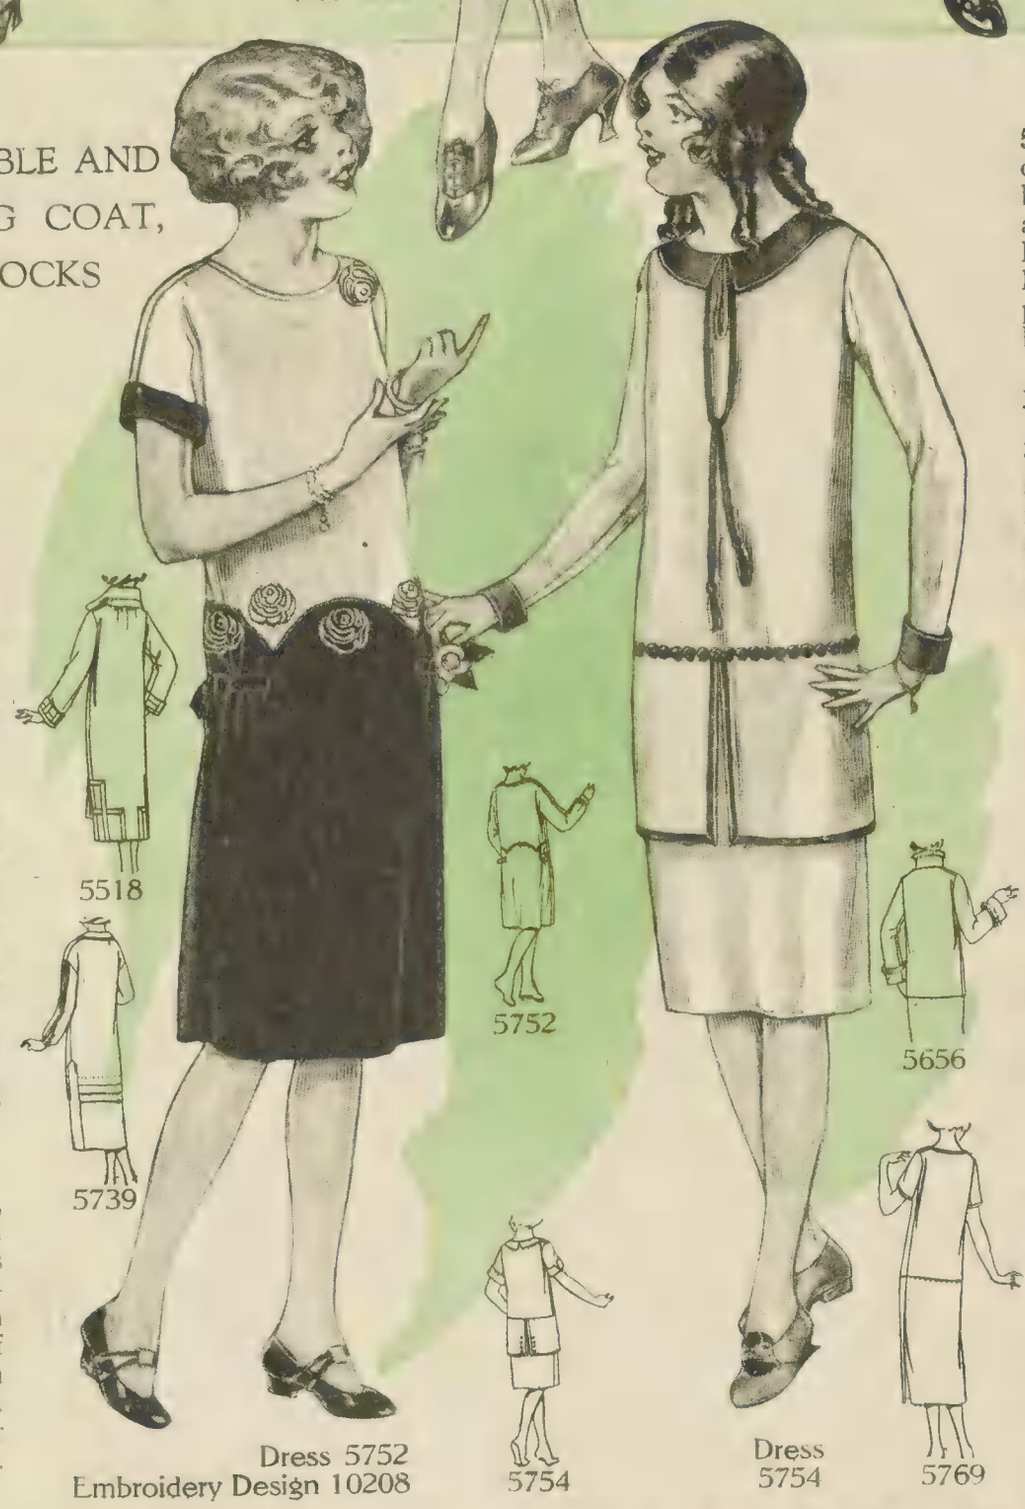
Tunic blouse 5758
Slip 5638
Embroidery
design 10312

Tunic blouse 5681
Slip 5685

Tunic blouse 5764
Slip 5631
Embroidery design 10272

Other views and descriptions are on page 69

Coat 5520
Tunic blouse 5740
Skirt 5581



Tunic blouse 5762
Slip 5724
Embroidery design 10138

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 52.

Tunic blouse 5750
Slip 5726

YOUNG GIRLS CHOOSE THE ENSEMBLE AND TUNIC BLOUSE COSTUME, A LONG COAT, A BOX-COAT SUIT AND NEW FROCKS

5518—5739—5549—This smart ensemble costume is composed of a coat to be worn in wrap-around or straight-line style over a slip-over dress with a long upper part joined to a two-piece lower part under a cluster of tucks in tunic effect. Use cashmere suitings, kasha, soft twills, wool rep, etc., with upper part of dress of crêpe satin, etc. Her hat has a four-gored crown.

16 years or 33 bust requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch wool rep, 2½ 35-inch silk crêpe for upper part and ⅝ yard 54-inch rep for lower part of dress. Lower edge of coat 46 inches; of dress 44 inches.

The coat is for misses 16 to 18 or 33 to 35 bust, also ladies; dress for misses 15 to 20, also small women; hat for misses and ladies.

5717—At Mid-Year's when both spirits and the temperature are at a low ebb, one wants a coat which is really warm. For extra warmth one may use a flannel, kasha or duvetyn lining in this coat which is worn either in straight-line or wrap-around style. It has a pocket inside the panel at each side. Use cashmere coatings, camel's-hair, homespun, plaids, stripes or wool rep for the coat.

17 years or 34 bust requires 3½ yards 54-inch wool plaid. Lower edge 47 inches.

The coat is attractive for misses 16 to 18 or 33 to 35 bust, also ladies.

5752—10208—The junior will love such colors as rose, jade or French blue with black velveteen, or brown with tangerine or tan, etc., for her slip-over dress. It has an upper part joined to a lower part in decorative fashion. The rose motifs are attractive. Work them in harmonious colors. Use velveteen with upper part of wool crêpe or flannel; or use wool crêpe or flannel with contrasting color, crêpe de Chine with contrasting, etc.

13 years requires 1 yard 39-inch crêpe de Chine for upper, 1½ yard 35-inch velveteen for lower part, etc.

The dress is becoming to juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5750—5726—A velvet tunic blouse over a soft satin costume slip is a smart frock. The slip-over tunic blouse has collar and cuffs which may be detachable and it may be shorter. The costume slip has a straight lower edge and either a 3-inch or a deep shadow-proof hem. One may use faille silk, bengaline, satin crêpe, plain or printed crêpe de Chine or Canton crêpe for blouse and crêpe meteor, crêpe de Chine, etc.. for slip.

16 years requires 2¼ yards 39-inch velvet and 2⅜ yards 35-inch satin. Lower edge of slip 42 inches.

The tunic blouse is smart for figures 15 to 20 years, also 38 bust; slip for misses 16 to 20 years; also small women.

5678—A plaited apron and loose plaited panels on the front of the body of this one-piece slip-over dress give a two-piece effect. Use crêpe faille, Canton crêpe or crêpe de Chine with band in contrasting color, buttons to match dress and sewed on with same color as band or use crêpe satin with band of the reverse side of the material and crystal buttons sewed on with contrasting color.

17 years requires 4⅛ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine and ⅜ yard 39-inch contrasting material. Lower edge 45½ inches.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5656—5769—4886—Twills, worsteds, men's wear suitings, velours, checks, etc., make a smart suit. The box coat covers the long upper part of plain silk crêpe, crêpe de Chine, etc., of the slip-over dress. The straight lower part which matches the coat is in wrap-around style. Her velvet hat is in tam-o'-shanter style.

17 years requires 2¾ yards 54-inch material (including lower part of dress) and 1⅜ yard 39-inch plain for upper part of dress. Lower edge 41 inches.

The box-coat is for misses 16 to 18 or 33 to 35 bust, also ladies; dress for misses 15 to 20, also small women; hat for misses or ladies.

5754—Buttons and collar, cuffs and bindings in a contrasting color trim this one-piece dress for juniors. It slips on over the head and has a slightly draped tunic joined at the hipline. Use soft twills, wool crêpe, serge or flannel; or use heavy silk crêpe with silk crêpe in contrasting color for collar, etc., and buttons to match collar, etc.

13 years requires 1¾ yard 54-inch flannel for the dress.

The dress is suitable for juniors and girls 8 to 15 years.

5655—5641—This is one of the smartest styles in an ensemble costume. The coat may be worn in wrap-around or straight-line style over the narrow slip-over dress with a long upper part and a wrap-around lower part. It fits closely at the hipline. The coat may have pockets on the outside or in the lining. For an ensemble costume use soft-surfaced cashmere coatings for coat and for the lower part of the dress, with the upper part of plain silk crêpe in a contrasting color, etc. Lower edge of coat 48 inches, of dress 44 inches.

36 bust requires 3½ yards 54-inch material (including lower part, etc., of dress) and 2¼ yards 35-inch material for upper part of dress.

The coat is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses; the dress for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5784—When you use soft materials for the new puff of the sleeves to this one-piece slip-over dress, the puff has a fulness at the top. This fulness is omitted when wool materials are used for the puff. The dress fits closely at the hipline. Make it of soft twills, cashmere dress materials, wool rep, wool crêpe, kasha or ribbed silks with plaid silk and bone buttons to match dress; or use satin or heavy silk crêpe with collar and puff of same material in contrasting and embroidered in self-color, etc.

36 bust requires 2 yards 54-inch soft twill and ⅝ yard 35-inch plaid silk. Lower edge 44 inches.

The dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5785—Bows of matching grosgrain ribbon and tiny nickel buckles are very smart on a tailored one-piece slip-over dress which fits closely at the hipline. With soft twills, hairline striped twills or cashmere dress materials, use piqué for the detachable collar and cuffs, and a silk tie of contrasting color. One may use striped flannel with collar and cuffs of white flannel bound with satin to match predominating color in stripes, and a satin tie. Wool embroidery on plain flannel, kasha or heavy wool jersey is smart. With light or bright colors use self-colored embroidery, black satin bindings and tie, or with dark colors use harmonizing colors, etc. Lower edge 46½ inches.

19 years or 36 bust requires 2⅛ yards 54-inch cashmere.

The dress is for ladies 38 and 40 bust, also misses 15 to 19 years.

5782—10290—Many of the midwinter dresses are made with their adaptability to the ensemble costume in view. This slip-over dress has a straight, wrap-around lower part of cashmere suitings, kasha wool rep, soft twills or heavy satin and an upper part of plain silk crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine in self or contrasting color or of printed silk crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine. The lower part has a tuck at the edge of the closing and is joined at a close-fitting hipline. The embroidered motifs are decorative. Work them in beading.

36 bust requires 1½ yard 39-inch silk crêpe for upper part and 1 yard 54-inch material for lower part, etc. Lower edge measures 44 inches.

The dress is becoming to ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5786—A tunic of brocaded velvet on Georgette over a separate one-piece satin slip is another version of the frock for an ensemble costume. The tunic of this slip-over dress may be cut lower in the neck, sleeves omitted and the armholes cut down for evening wear. For evening, use Georgette or chiffon bound with self-material for tunic, and a slip of metallic fabric or satin to match; or use lace with satin slip, satin crêpe for tunic and lower part of slip, etc.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 35 or 39 inch brocaded velvet for tunic and 1⅜ yard 35-inch satin for lower part of slip. Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

The dress is smart for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5783—5402—10233—The surplice line is very smart for tunic blouses as well as dresses. This tunic blouse which may be longer, is worn over a separate one-piece slip. Use satin crêpe, plain Canton crêpe or crêpe faille embroidered, printed Canton crêpe with plain to match, crêpe faille with satin or chiffon velvet with satin. The banding is effective. Work it in outline-stitch. The tam-o'-shanter is attractive in velvet, duvetyn, velours, satin, etc. Lower edge of slip 45 inches.

36 bust requires 3¼ yards 39-inch satin crêpe for blouse and ⅞ yard 35-inch contrasting material for lower part of slip.

The tunic blouse and slip are for ladies 34 to 48 bust; tam-o'-shanter for ladies, misses, girls, children.

DRESSES IN TUNIC OR TWO-PIECE EFFECT ARE SMART FOR YOUNG GIRLS, WHILE JUNIORS FIND SIMPLE STYLES BECOMING

5772—10592—Doll 10296—Smocking and feather-stitching in a contrasting color is a smart trimming for this slip-over dress with a straight lower edge and separate bloomers. Use pongee or crêpe de Chine; or use pin-check gingham with poplin collar and cuffs edged with narrow filet or Irish lace, or chambray with dimity collar and cuffs, etc. One may omit the smocking. The French doll is easily made.

5 years requires 2½ yards 32-inch chambray.

The dress is adorable for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5739—As a part of the ensemble costume or as a separate frock this slip-over dress is smart. It's two-piece lower part is joined to a long upper part under a cluster of tucks in tunic effect. Use wool cashmere, wool rep, kasha, soft twills or velvet, with upper part of crêpe satin, etc.

17 years requires 2½ yards 35-inch silk crêpe for upper part and ⅞ yard 35-inch faille silk for lower part. Lower edge 45 inches.

Dress is for misses 15 to 20, also small women.

5748—10243—This little slip-over frock for wee girls is slashed up the sides to show the separate bloomers. Use velveteen or corduroy with pongee bloomers; or use pin-check gingham, chambray, cotton crêpe, cotton or silk broadcloth, cotton prints, dimity or flannel. The embroidery is effective. Work it in colors.

5 years requires 1¼ yard 32-inch velveteen for dress, etc., and 1 yard 32-inch pongee for bloomers and binding.

The dress is for little girls 1 to 6 years.

5738—In the years when one is as straight as a ramrod, a one-piece slip-over dress of this type is most becoming. Plaited sections are inserted at each side of the dress. Make it of light-weight flannel, kasha, wool crêpe, soft twills or serge.

13 years requires 3½ yards 27-inch flannel.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15 years.

5760—3496—10939—This exceedingly well-cut middy blouse of flannel, serge, or fast-colored cottons of good weight, etc., has slightly shaped underarm seams. It is trimmed with the regulation emblem. The knickers have a reenforced seat and wide or narrower bands.

16 years requires 2⅛ yards 35-inch drill and 1⅛ yard 54-inch serge.

The middy blouse is for misses 15 to 20, also small women; knickers for misses and girls 8 to 18 years, also ladies.

5669—Very often the most becoming dresses are the simplest to make, as is the case with this one-piece slip-over dress opening on the left shoulder. Use velveteen with gold braid loops and brass buttons and gold-colored satin for sleeve-facings and slash bindings. One may use plain silk crêpe, crêpe de Chine, taffeta, printed silk crêpe or crêpe de Chine, etc.

12 years requires 2¼ yards 35-inch velveteen.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15 years.

5713 — 4898 — Mixtures, cashmere coatings, camel's hair, homespun, plaids and stripes make a smart coat on these lines. The tam-o'-shanter is smart in velvet, duvetyn or satin with satin pipings.

13 years and 21¾ inches head measure requires 2⅛ yards 54-inch cashmere coating for coat and ½ yard 35-inch velvet for tam-o'-shanter.

The coat is for juniors and girls 8 to 15; tam-o'-shanter for girls, misses and ladies.

5728—The collar and cuffs of this one-piece slip-over dress may be detachable. Use wool crêpe, flannel, soft twills or serge with collar, cuffs and bindings of contrasting color flannel, tie-ends of ribbon and bone buttons.

12 years requires 1¾ yard 54-inch wool plaid.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15 years.

5763—Back to school with something new—perhaps this slip-over dress with a two-piece lower part joined under a tuck to the upper part. Use light-weight flannel, cashmere, dress materials, wool jersey, faille silk, Canton crêpe, satin crêpe, crêpe de Chine or plain tub silk. Use a ribbon or silk tie and a belt of the fabric or leather. Lower edge 44 inches.

17 years requires 2 yards 54-inch flannel.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5659 Dress 5659

5659—Rosettes picoted with silver or contrasting color and a ribbon girdle are smart French trimming for this slip-over dress of taffeta or crêpe de Chine. It closes on the left shoulder and the draped basque and full straight skirt join an underbody. When you use Georgette for the skirt, use taffeta for a drop skirt as well as a basque and rosettes. One may use flowered or plaid taffeta, printed silk crêpe or moire with contrasting ribbon and bindings for trimming.

12 years requires 2½ yards 36-inch taffeta.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5731—A practical type of one-piece slip-over dress for school or business has a straight lower edge and collar and cuffs which may be detachable. Use wool jersey tubing, wool jersey or flannel with white linen collar and cuffs bound with self material, a Roman-striped belt and ribbon tie, or use heavy crêpe de Chine, Canton crêpe or crêpe faille, etc., with white or corn-colored crêpe de Chine collar, etc.

16 years requires 2 yards 54-inch flannel. Lower edge 50 inches.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5711—10275—A very simple feather-stitching in color trims this adorable frock. This trimming is attractive on chambray. One may, however, use pin-check gingham, pin-dot swiss, dimity, fine cotton crêpe, etc. The dress has a straight skirt joined to a deep yoke and separate bloomers.

5 years requires 2⅛ yards 32-inch chambray and ⅜ yard 32-inch contrasting.

The dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5676—5561—The young girl claims a detachable collar, cuffs and frills as her prerogative for a one-piece slip-over dress with inserted godets. Crêpe satin or silk crêpe with corn-colored or white crêpe de Chine or lace collar, etc., is smart. Use silver-colored or crystal buttons on crêpe satin. The wrap-around hat is good style.

16 years requires 2⅞ yards 39-inch silk crêpe for dress. Lower edge 40½ inches.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20, also small women, and for ladies 38, 40 bust; hat for misses and ladies.

5711

5744—Black narrow velvet ribbon and tiny sprays of artificial fruit or flowers and leaves trim this hat of faille silk, crêpe de Chine or taffeta in rose, French or Copen blue, reseda or amande green, henna, navy blue or dark green. On a chiffon velvet hat use narrow satin ribbon with fruit or flowers. When possible have the hat match the coat in material, or at least in color.

The hat is for girls 2 to 12 years.

5703 5687 5776

5731

Hat 5744

5676

5727 Dress 5776

5776—This is an extremely dainty dress for parties or dancing-class. The tucked straight skirt is joined at a low waistline. Use cotton voile, cotton Georgette, fine lawn, batiste, organdy, crepê de Chine or Georgette with frills of Val lace and a ribbon girdle. One may use cotton voile with frills and bindings of organdy in color on white or white on color, the ribbon and hemstitching to match the color of frill, etc.

13 years requires 2¾ yards 39-inch Georgette.

The dress is attractive for juniors and girls 8 to 16 years.

5727—5218—10301—A wool jersey tubing, wool jersey or flannel dress with detachable linen collar bound with bias fold tape to match the wool embroidery is attractive for young girls. Work the embroidery on dress, hat and scarf. The one-piece slip-over dress has a straight lower edge. The flannel hat and scarf of flannel, kasha or wool plaids are attractive.

17 years requires 1⅞ yard 54-inch wool jersey for dress. Lower edge 54 inches.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20, also small women; hat and scarf for misses and ladies.

5687—The typical English middy suit has a slip-over blouse and straight trousers. The collar is detachable. Make this suit of tweeds, serge or garbardine; or for a tub suit use drill, duck, chambray, linen-finished cottons, linen or rep. It is easily made.

5 years requires 1¼ yard 54-inch serge for the suit.

The suit is good style for little boys 3 to 7 years.

5703—5601—4038—If you can do so, use the same color for coat, hat and leggings. Pockets may be outside on this coat of soft pile fabrics, cashmere coatings, broadcloth, kasha; or if inside pockets are used velvet or corduroy. The hat is smart in chiffon velvet, crêpe de Chine, faille silk, taffeta, or Georgette, and the leggings in material like the coat or of heavy stockinette.

4 years requires 1¼ yard 54-inch kasha for coat.

Coat is for little girls 2 to 6; hat for girls 2 to 12; leggings for children 2 to 14 years.

5753—Housewives may start the New Year afresh with this wrap-around one-piece house dress with a straight lower edge. Use gingham, chambray, percale, madras, cotton poplin, linen-finished cottons, cotton broadcloth, cotton crêpe or cotton prints. Lower edge 54 ins.

36 bust requires 3¾ yards 32-inch gingham.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5751—Gingham, chambray, madras, percale, cotton prints or cotton crêpe with pearl buttons and white organdy frills picoted in the same color as the dress, makes a becoming slip-over house dress. It has a straight lower part joined to a long body. Lower edge 58 ins.

36 bust requires 3⅜ yards 32-inch gingham.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 46 bust.

5768—Trim this French chemise and bloomers of radium silk, crêpe satin or crêpe de Chine with machine-hemstitching and French flowers. The bloomers have a reenforced seat. Use lace and machine-hemstitching with nainsook or longcloth, or use glove silk or sateen untrimmed.

36 bust requires 2½ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine.

The chemise and bloomers are for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5780—These well-cut overalls are the type worn by most workmen and are splendid for gardening. Make them of denim, khaki, drill or duck.

36 waist requires 3¼ yards 27-inch denim.

The overalls are for men or youths 30 to 42 waist.

5732—This outing or negligée shirt has a low one-piece collar or neckband, and either cuffs in regulation or French style or wristbands. Both collar and cuffs are fastened to the blouse. Use cotton or silk broadcloth, madras, batiste, percale, oxford, pongee, silk shirtings, light-weight cheviot, light-weight flannel or galatea for boys.

15 neck requires 3⅛ yards 31-inch madras.

The shirt is for men or boys 11 to 18½ neck.

5774—The shell trimming on this graceful negligée is very easily made. Use crêpe-back satin, printed silks or printed crêpe de Chine with satin ribbon for shell trimming; or without trimming use corduroy.

36 bust requires 4¼ yards 39-inch crêpe-back satin. Lower edge 51½ inches.

The negligée is for ladies 32 to 46 bust.

5726—Under tunic blouses or dresses this costume slip will give the slender silhouette. It has a straight lower edge and either a three-inch or deep shadow-proof hem. Use crêpe meteor, soft satin or crêpe de Chine, etc.

16 years requires 2⅜ yards 35 or 39-inch radium silk. Lower edge 42 inches.

The slip is for misses 16 to 20, also small women.

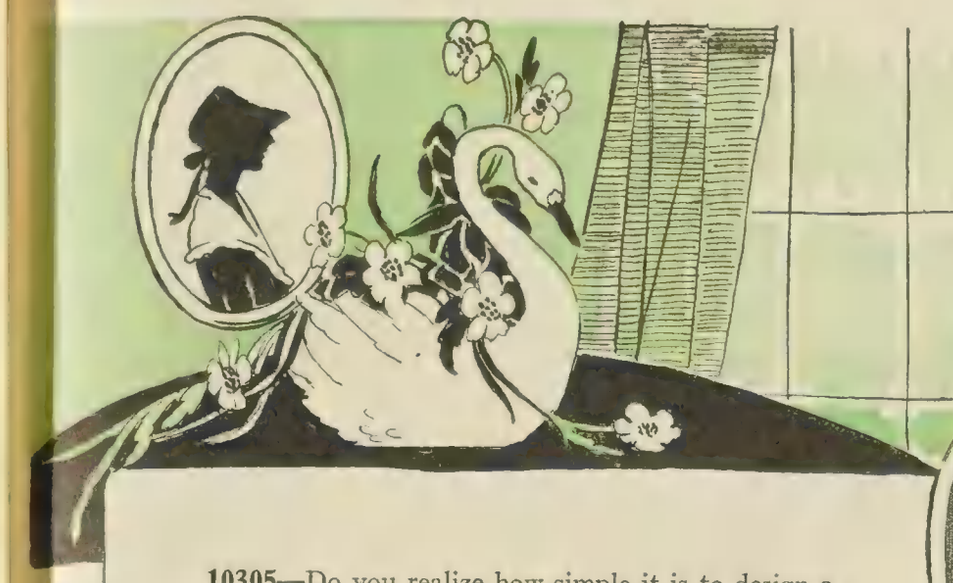
5691—To obtain the straight unbroken line of to-day's st... most women wear the boneless corselette. It is very easily m... of flesh pink or white brassière material, broché coutil or ... washable satin.

36 bust requires 1 yard 35-inch brassière material.

The corselette is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

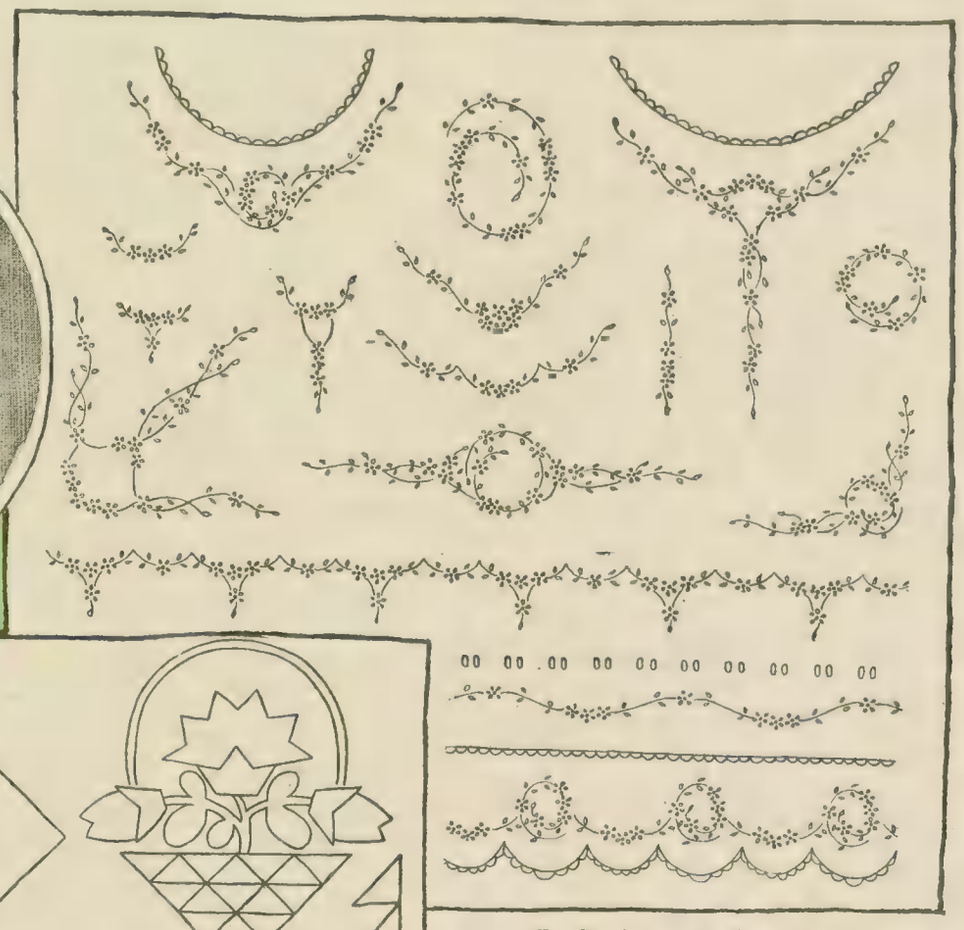
5770—How often you have wanted a pretty apron like this! ... slips on over the head and has a straight lower edge. ... gingham, chambray, percale, striped madras, cotton crêpe, ca... chintz or printed sateen. Lower edge 58 inches.

36 bust requires 3⅛ yards 35-inch sateen.



The apron is attractive for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

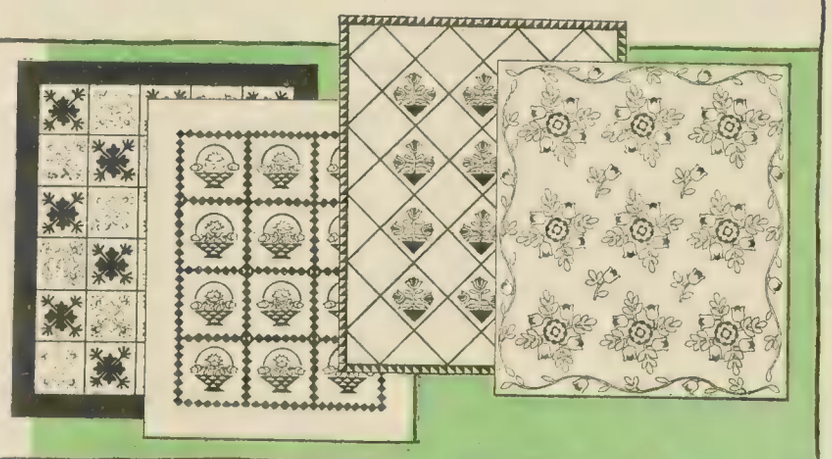
5724—This costume slip with a straight lower edge and a th... inch or deep shadow-proof hem, is an especially good design. ... soft satin, crêpe meteor or crêpe de Chine under tunic blou... or these materials or sateen under transparent dresses, and rad... silk, habutai silk, glove silk, silk jersey or sateen, under ... transparent dresses Lower edge 44 inches.

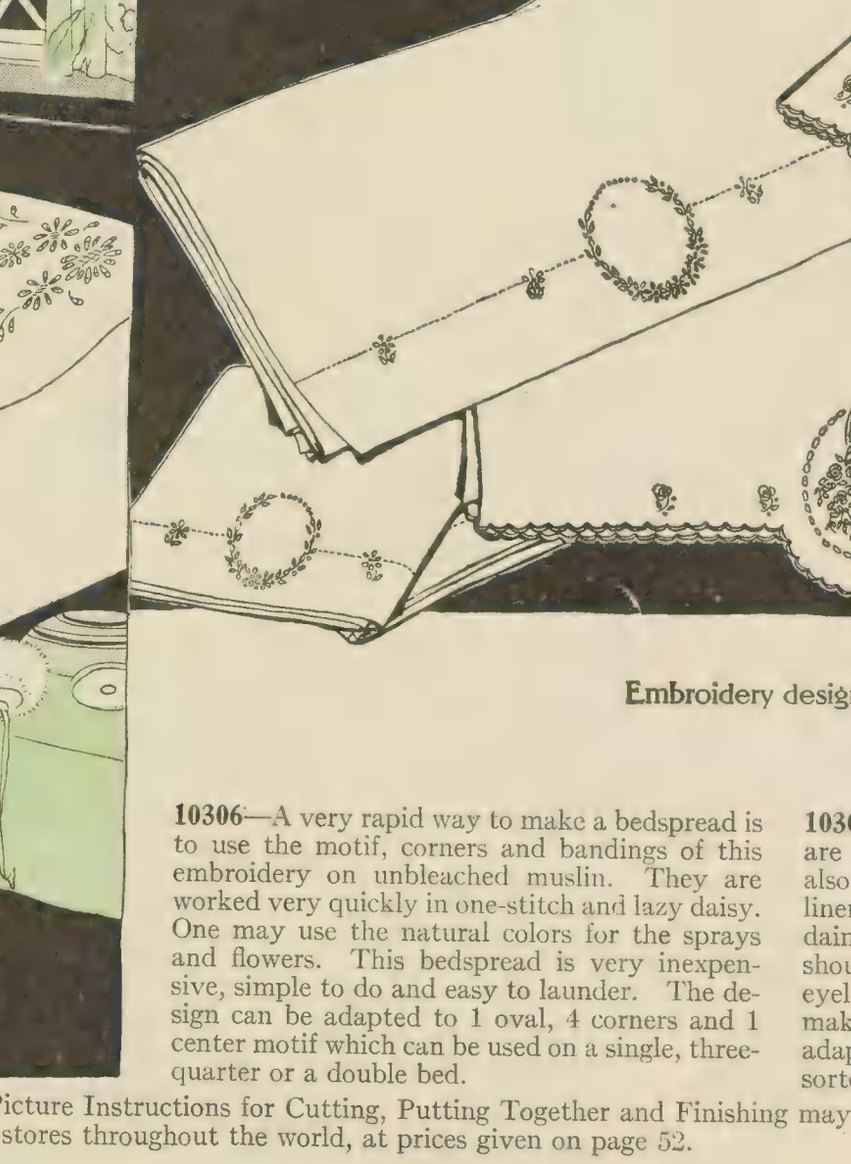


36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 35-inch satin.

The slip is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

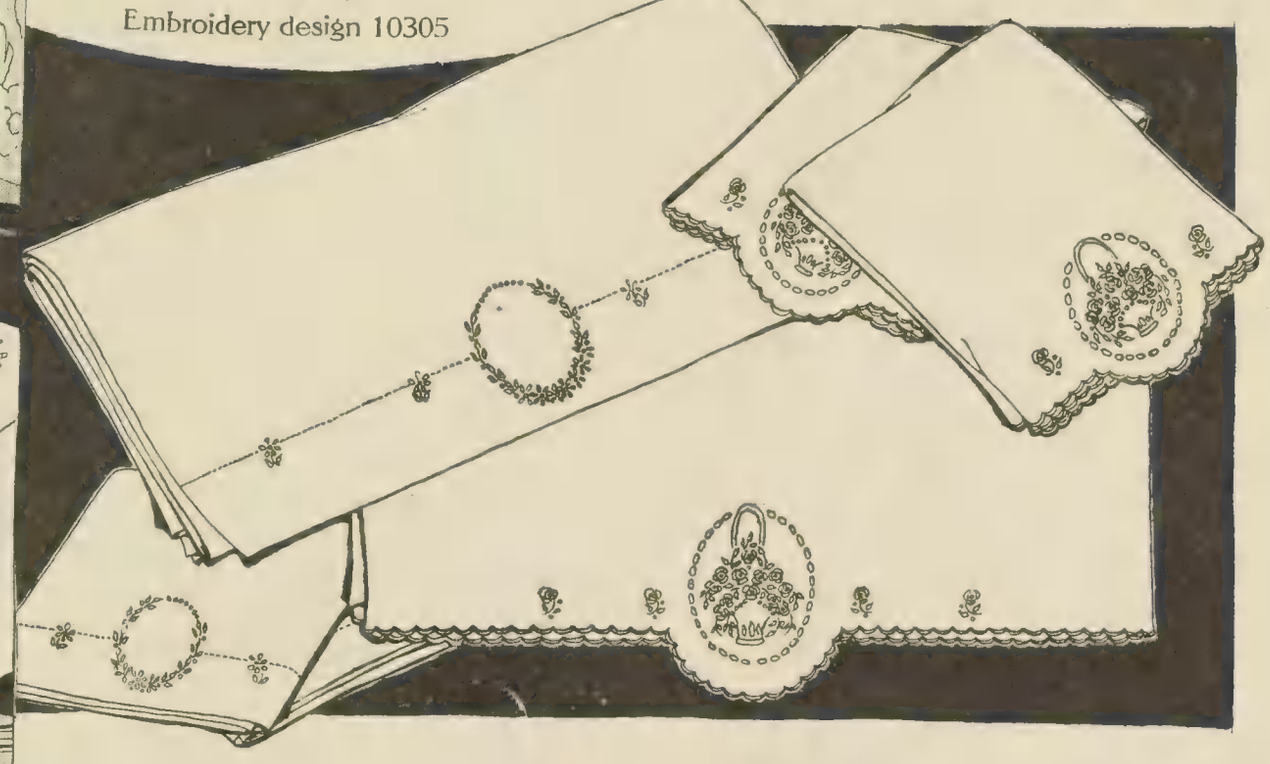
START THE NEW YEAR WITH A PATCHWORK QUILT, AN EMBROIDERED BEDSPREAD AND FRESH LINENS





Embroidery design 10308

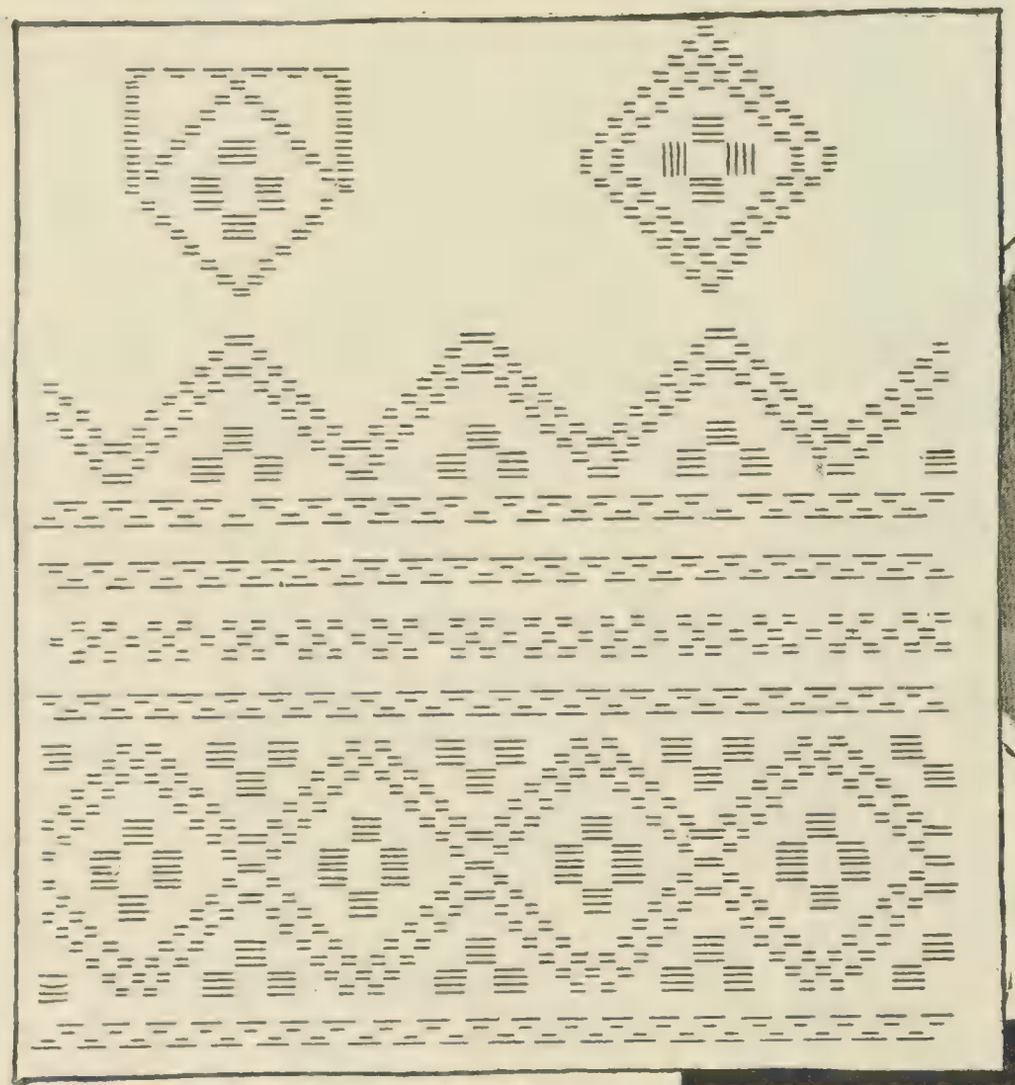
10305—Do you realize how simple it is to design a patchwork quilt? To make such a quilt, you select one of the five styles of motifs in this new embroidery and use it in the way illustrated in the small squares below, applying the particular motif you have chosen as many times as necessary to complete your quilt. You may select any one of the three bandings. This design can be adapted to 9 motifs in 5 assorted styles and a little of each of the 3 styles of bandings. Any of the motifs and bandings can be used as often as desired on the quilt.



Embroidery design 10305

10308—The flowers and sprays of this embroidery are as tiny as can possibly be embroidered on baby dresses, yokes, bibs and caps. They are so small that one need not use any padding. The bandings, beading and sprays are also suitable for one's own lingerie or neckwear. Work this design in satin-stitch, eyelets, French stemming and buttonholing. It can be adapted to 1¾ yard banding in each of 3 styles, ⅞ yard ribbon beading and 52 sprays in 12 assorted styles.

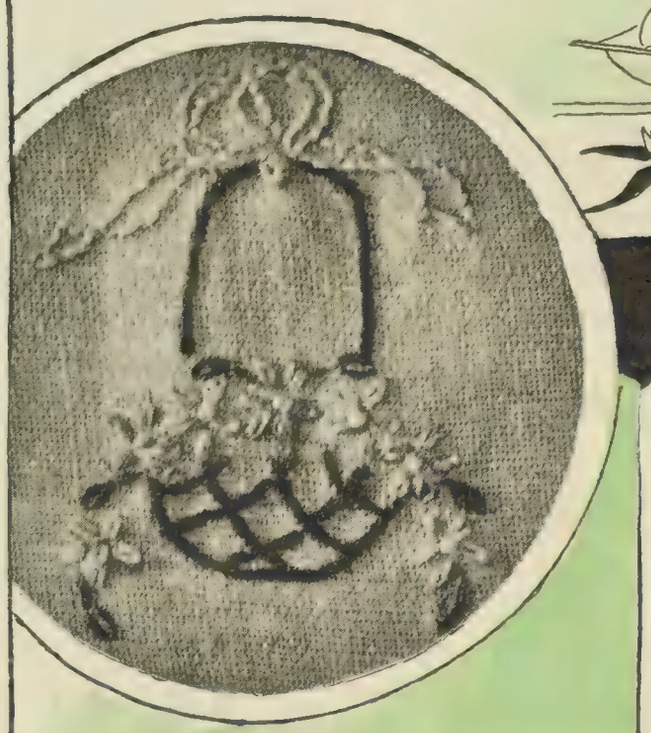
Embroidery design 10306



Embroidery design 10307

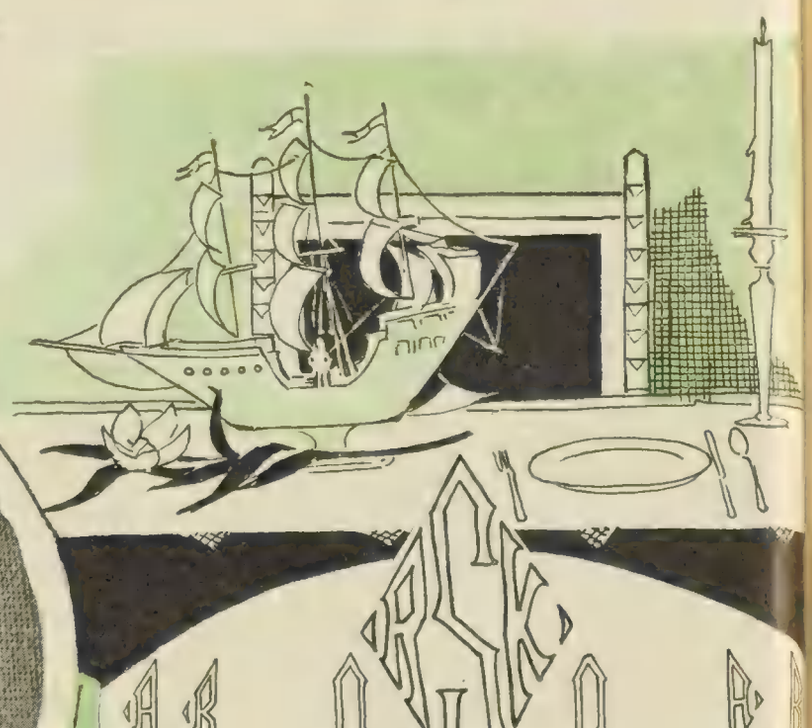
10306—A very rapid way to make a bedspread is to use the motif, corners and bandings of this embroidery on unbleached muslin. They are worked very quickly in one-stitch and lazy daisy. One may use the natural colors for the sprays and flowers. This bedspread is very inexpensive, simple to do and easy to launder. The design can be adapted to 1 oval, 4 corners and 1 center motif which can be used on a single, three-quarter or a double bed.

10307—Sheets, pillow-cases and towels which are fitting mates to the new bedspread should also be embroidered, and for decorating such linens, oval sprays or French baskets are very dainty. The motifs and banding of this design should be worked in satin-stitch, buttonholing, eyelets and French stemming. These linens make exquisite gifts. The design can be adapted to 2 sheets and 4 pillow-cases in 2 assorted styles.



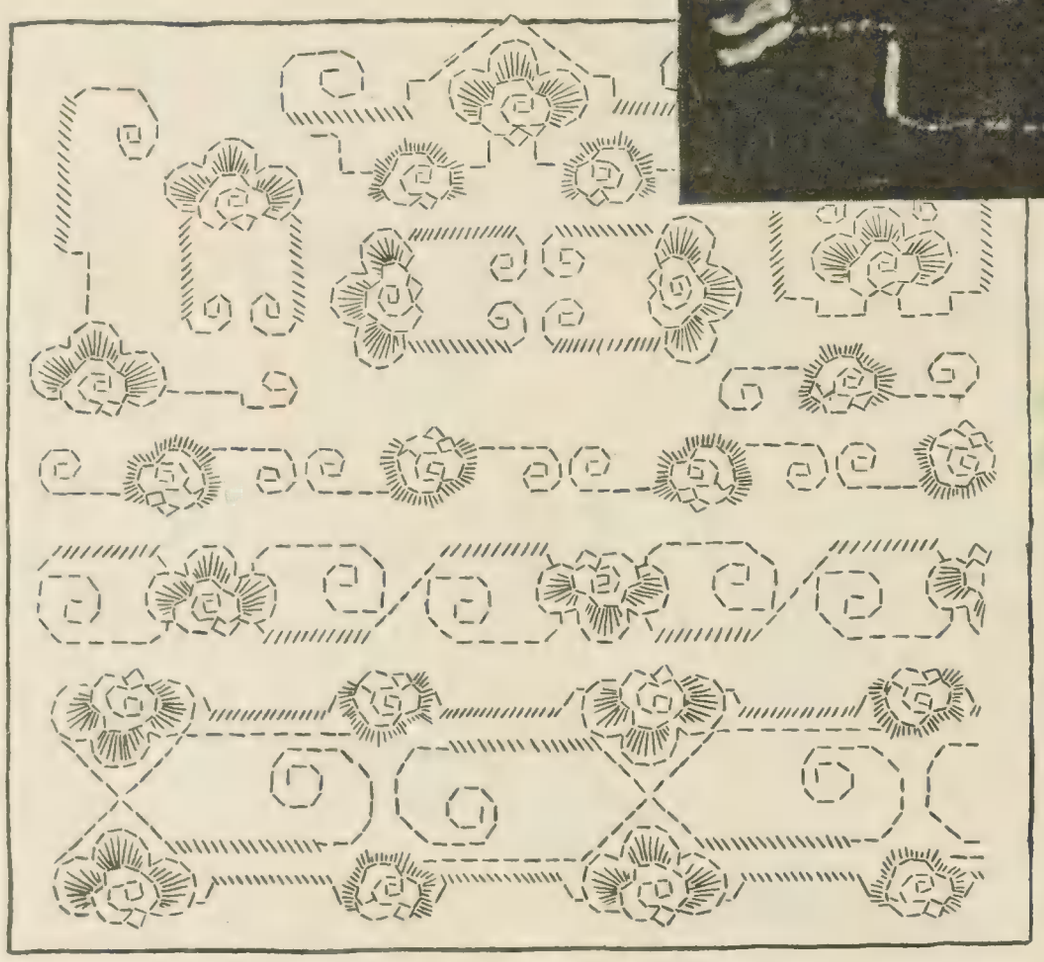
Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 52.

EMBROIDERY MAKES A HAPPY BEGINNING WITH NEW ALPHABETS AND HAS FRESH IDEAS ON ONE-STITCH AND BASKET DESIGNS



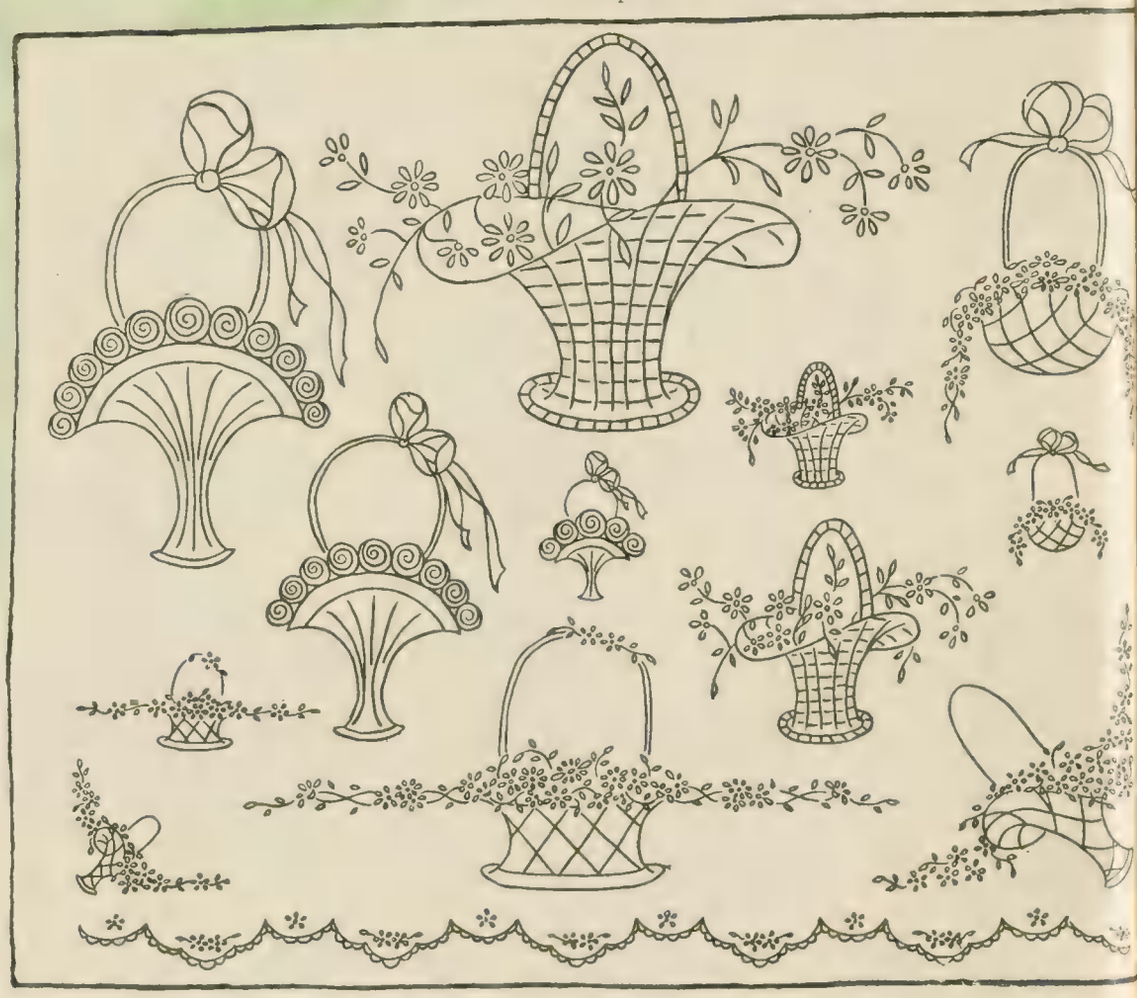
Embroidery design 10312

10312—There are enough different widths of bandings in this design to trim a dress or coat or a blouse. Children's clothes may be trimmed also with the bandings or motifs. One may introduce a great deal of color by one-stitch into this very simple but effective design. It can be adapted very easily to 1⅝ yard of banding 5¾ inches wide, 3 yards of banding 3⅛ inches wide, 3⅜ yards each of banding ⅝ and ⅜ inch wide, 6 motifs 4⅜ by 4¼ inches and 6 motifs 3¾ by 3¾ inches.



Embroidery design 10309

10309—Most attractive monograms for dre blouses, scarfs and household linens can be m from these alphabets. The letters are shape that you must use one from each alphabet to ma single monogram. You can make 1 mono 3¾ inches high, 2 monograms 2¼ inches high 2 monograms 1¼ inch high. Work the monog in satin-stitch or French stemming filled in French knots. The design can be adapted monograms or 15 complete alphabets so shaped it requires 3 letters to form a single monogram.



Embroidery design 10310

Embroidery design 10311

10311—Wherever there is a need for a rapid simple embroidery to decorate one's new dress, one-stitch fills the demand very nicely. The one-stitch motifs and bandings of this design are also suitable for blouses, coats and even hats. The design can be adapted to 2⅝ yards of banding 5 inches wide, 5¼ yards each of bandings 2 and 1½ inches wide and 3 motifs in 6 assorted styles.

10310—French baskets and spray banding have great decorative possibilities. They are very dainty on tea cloths or tea napkins and the larger motifs are effective on curtains and scarfs. Work them in outline, lazy-daisy, satin-stitch, scalloping, eyelets or French stemming. The design can be adapted to 5 yards of edging 1⅛ inch wide and 52 baskets in 11 assorted sizes and 4 assorted styles.

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 52.

Often the only kind of meal you want!

Often you don't want a heavy meal, with a number of different dishes. But you are hungry for sustaining food and a generous plateful of hearty soup suits your appetite exactly.

Delight it and satisfy it with tempting spoonfuls of Campbell's Vegetable Soup.

See what a splendid luncheon it is at such times—what a wholesome and sufficient supper!

This is one of the best of foods for the children, too. It's rich in the healthful vegetable nutriment which is so good for them.

Fifteen different vegetables and thirty-two ingredients in this one delicious blend!

21 kinds 12 cents a can

Luncheon

Dinner

Supper

Soup for health—
every day!

Grandmother's Old Stone Cookie Jar

ONE of the things you love to remember is your childhood visits to Grandmother's old stone cookie jar.

I don't believe you ever were disappointed, for although Grandmother had to stand and roll and cut cookies she always found time to do it.

Today we have an easier, quicker way to make cookies than Grandmother had. The cookies on this page call for no rolling and cutting. I am sure they will gladden the heart of any child.

Save these recipes. When you see how quick and easy it is to make them you will not let your children grow up without Mother's wholesome Crisco Cookies to remember and tell their children about.

Nut Wafer COOKIES

Sliced instead of rolled and cut. Use Crisco and see how easy it is to cream with sugar. Crisco keeps so long you can double this recipe and keep the rolls in the ice box a long time, slicing and baking as you need them. Grease your pans with Crisco and you won't need to wash them between bakings.

All measurements level

- 1 cup brown sugar
- 1 cup white sugar
- 1½ cups melted Crisco
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 5 cups pastry flour, sifted twice
- 3 eggs, well beaten
- 2 teaspoons soda
- 1 teaspoon cinnamon or other spices
- 1 cup chopped nuts (blanched almonds are best)

Cream Crisco with sugar. Add eggs slowly mixing thoroughly. Add nuts. Then dry ingredients sifted together twice. Shape into roll about 2½ to 3 inches in diameter. Put in Criscoed pan in ice box overnight. When ready to bake, slice and bake in hot oven (425° F.). Makes about 75 cookies.

Caramel or Butterscotch COOKIES

Another sliced cookie — without nuts. Crisco will keep these cookies fresh, too, both before and after baking. The flavor improves if they are kept in an air-tight container. Try empty Crisco tins and send a Crisco can of Crisco Cookies to the boy or girl away at school. Grease your pans with Crisco to keep every cookie whole.

All measurements level

- 4 cups dark brown sugar
- 1 cup melted Crisco
- 4 beaten eggs
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 7 cups pastry flour
- 3 teaspoons baking powder

Follow the method for Nut Wafer Cookies. Makes about 125 cookies.

Grandmother's Old Fashioned Ginger COOKIES

Made the new easy way—no tiresome rolling or cutting. Crisco is always ready for instant use and is easy to cream with the brown sugar. Grease your pans with Crisco and drop the cookies far enough apart to keep them round. Crisco saves washing the pans between bakings, so you won't mind using a lot of them.

All measurements level

- 1 cup brown sugar
- 1 cup molasses
- ½ cup Crisco
- 1 egg, beaten
- 1 teaspoon ginger
- 1 teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon soda
- 1 cup sour milk
- 4½ cups pastry flour

Cream Crisco, sugar and salt together. Add molasses and ginger, then egg. Dissolve soda in sour milk. Add, mix thoroughly. Last add flour. Drop teaspoonfuls of the batter on a Criscoed baking pan and bake in a medium oven (375° F.). Makes about 50 cookies.

Grandmother's Sugar COOKIES or Boston Drops

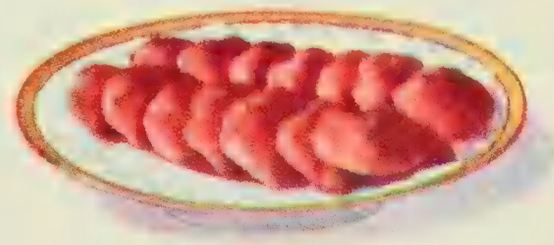
These cookies are dainty and delicious when made with Crisco. Be sure and grease your pans with Crisco and save washing them between bakings.

All measurements level

- ¾ cup Crisco
- ⅔ cup sugar
- 2 eggs, unbeaten
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 1 teaspoon vanilla
- 1½ cups pastry flour

Cream Crisco, add sugar gradually, beat to a light cream. Beat in eggs, salt and vanilla. Last add the flour. Stir until smooth. Drop by teaspoonfuls on Criscoed baking pans about 4 inches apart. Bake in a medium oven, 375° F. about ten minutes. This makes about 25 cookies.



Sour Cream COOKIES

They are delicious when made with Crisco, and Crisco helps to make them wholesome, too.

All measurements level

- 2 cups brown sugar
- 1 cup Crisco
- 2 eggs
- 1 cup sour cream
- ½ teaspoon salt
- ½ teaspoon nutmeg
- 1 teaspoon soda
- 4 teaspoons baking powder
- 4½ cups pastry flour
- 1 cup raisins
- 1 cup nut meats

Cream Crisco, salt and sugar together, add beaten eggs, nuts and raisins. Mix well and add cream. Add all dry ingredients sifted together. Mix well and drop by spoonfuls on Criscoed baking pans. Bake in hot oven, 400° F., 15 minutes. Makes 50 cookies.

Chocolate Drop COOKIES

Grandmother's sugar cookies with chocolate, nuts and raisins added. Try them with afternoon tea, and iced tea in summer. Of course, make these with Crisco. Grease your pans with Crisco, too, and see your cookies come out whole.

All measurements level

- 1 cup sugar
- ½ cup Crisco
- 2 eggs, well beaten
- 3 squares chocolate from ½ lb. cake
- 1½ cups pastry flour
- ½ cup sweet milk
- ½ teaspoon vanilla
- ¾ cup nuts
- ¾ cup raisins
- 2 teaspoons baking powder
- ½ teaspoon salt

Cream Crisco, add sugar. Add eggs and melted chocolate. Then add milk, vanilla, nuts, raisins, mix well, then add baking powder and flour. Drop by teaspoon on hot Criscoed pan and bake in a medium oven (375° F.). Makes about 25 cookies.

Crisco is the trade-mark for a superior shortening manufactured and guaranteed purely vegetable, by The Procter & Gamble Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S. A.

To make COOKIES in half the time

1 Lay out on your work table and measure accurately all the ingredients the recipe calls for. Get out all utensils needed.

2 To measure Crisco accurately. If one half cup is needed fill cup one half full of water, add enough Crisco to bring water to the top, drain water off. Then follow method given in the recipe you are using.

3 Grease pans with Crisco and stack on the table. Drop spoonfuls of the batter far enough apart to prevent running together.

4 When baked, remove to board to cool. Use the same pans over and over without washing. Simply shake out possible crumbs and brush over with Crisco.

Crisco also makes wonderful cakes and pies and is ideal for frying.

FREE! 200 Tested Recipes

Gathered from the whole wide world by Olive Allen. To secure this cook book free send your name and address to Section F-1 Department of Home Economics, The Procter & Gamble Company, Cincinnati, Ohio.

© 1924 by The Procter & Gamble Company, Cincinnati, Ohio

GOOD OLD COUNTRY DISHES FOR WINTER

By Frieda Winn

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

WHEN I was a little girl, I lived in the country and walked a long, long way to school. One of my most delightful experiences, and one I like to remember, was coming in on a cold Winter's night after the long walk to a piping-hot supper. Nowadays nothing tastes as delicious as did some of those country dishes which seem to have disappeared from our tables.

Even discounting the enchantment of the long ago, the effects of hunger and the healthy appetite of youth, these dishes have much to recommend them in flavor, novelty and in the simple and easy way they can be prepared.

One of the most satisfactory as well as one of the most satisfying of these hearty dishes is pea soup, which is almost a meal in itself. With pea soup as the pièce de résistance of the repast, a crisp vegetable salad with crackers and cheese and a light fruit dessert are all that is required to complete the menu.

Liver and bacon may be a glorious dish if served with rings of fried apples and a mound of golden buttered carrots

PEA SOUP WITH DUMPLINGS

1 cup split peas
3 quarts cold water
1 ham bone
½ teaspoon sugar
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon flour
1 onion cut in small dice

Wash the peas well and let them drain. Add the three quarts of water and soak them in it overnight. Next morning add the ham bone and put the mixture over the fire to cook. Bring it to the boiling-point and let it simmer for two hours.

Add the onion and the sugar and continue to let it simmer two hours longer, or until the peas are soft. Add the dumplings, cover tightly and cook for twenty minutes, or until the dumplings are cooked through.

Remove the dumplings to a plate; cream the butter, add the flour and mix thoroughly. Dilute this to a smooth paste with some of the hot soup. Pour this paste into the soup, stirring constantly until the mixture bubbles. If necessary, add more salt and a little pepper.

If a ham bone is not available, substitute two ounces of lean ham or bacon cut into dice. To this add an onion cut into slices and fry until they are a delicate brown color.

This soup acquires a different flavor as well as added nutritive value if vegetables are cooked in it. For this recipe allow one turnip, two carrots, three or four stalks of celery and a small leek if it is available. These should be cut into dice and may be fried with the ham or bacon or added about two hours before the soup is done.

If a more piquant flavor is desired, add one-fourth of a teaspoon of dried powdered mint and a dash of Cayenne.

DUMPLINGS MADE WITH BREAD DOUGH

Form pieces of bread dough (which has risen once) into balls about an inch in diameter. Place these on a bread-board dusted with flour. Cover with a cloth and let them rise until they are very light. They are then ready to drop into the soup. If the bread dough is not available, the dumplings may be omitted or ordinary baking-powder dumplings used.

Pea soup is also delicious if served with farina balls instead of the dumplings.

FARINA BALLS

2 cups milk
1 slice onion
½ cup farina
¾ teaspoon salt
Dash of Cayenne
2 egg-yolks

Scald the milk in which is placed the slice of onion. Mix the farina into a smooth paste with a little cold milk. Remove the onion from the scalded milk. Dilute the farina with the hot milk, add the salt and Cayenne and cook for thirty minutes. Stir in the beaten yolks and pour the whole into a shallow dish.

When cool, shape into balls about an inch in diameter. Coat them thoroughly by rolling them in crums, then in a slightly beaten egg diluted with water and again in crums. Fry in deep fat at 365 degrees Fahrenheit until a delicate golden brown. The flavor may be varied by the addition of a tablespoon or two of finely minced pimiento or green pepper. Corn-meal may be substituted for the farina.

LIVER AND BACON—COUNTRY STYLE

Another delicious country dish is liver and bacon accompanied by rings of fried apples and a dish of chopped buttered carrots.

Bacon—Put the slices of bacon in a hot pan. As soon as it becomes transparent, turn it and lower the heat. Continue cooking and turning until the bacon is crisp. Remove and drain on brown paper.

Liver—The liver may be prepared in either of two ways:

1. It may be cut in slices one-fourth of an inch thick, dredged with flour, seasoned with salt and pepper and cooked in the hot bacon fat, browning first on one side and then on the other. The heat is then lowered and the cooking continued until the liver is done. When the liver is cut only one-fourth of an inch thick, it requires very little cooking after it has been browned on both sides.

2. Another way is to cut the liver in slices one-half an inch thick. It is then covered with the boiling water, set off the stove and allowed to stand for about five minutes. The liver is then removed, wiped dry, dredged with flour and seasoned with salt and pepper. It is cooked in the bacon fat but requires a longer time to cook than the liver which is cut thinner. The heat must be lowered after the initial browning.

Chopped Carrots—Wash and scrape medium-sized carrots and cook in boiling salted water until tender. Drain and chop into small pieces. Season well with butter, salt and pepper.

Fried Apples—Wash and wipe dry medium-sized apples and cut in slices one-half inch thick. Do not remove the skin or cores. (If, however, it seems advisable to remove the cores, the slices must be cut one inch thick.) Fry in bacon or other fat until tender but not soft enough to lose their shape.

Service—Arrange the chopped carrots in a mound in the center of a large hot platter or chop-plate. Surround them with the slices of liver and bacon placed alternately and border the whole with the slices of fried apple. Arranged in this way the dish presents an attractive study in orange and brown.

Plain boiled potatoes may be served with this meal. They should be cooked in their jackets, the jackets being removed as soon as the potatoes are done. In this case a gravy may be made from the bacon fat remaining in the pan after the liver is cooked. Add two tablespoons of flour to the hot fat and stir until the mixture bubbles. Add sufficient hot water (still stirring constantly) to make a gravy of the desired consistency.

HEAD CHEESE

For head cheese use the head and feet of a hog. The head is thoroughly scraped and the eyes, ears and snout removed. It is then soaked in cold water for eight or ten hours and again scraped to remove any blood or dirt. If there is a large quantity of fat on the head, some of it may be removed and tried out for lard. The feet are also thoroughly cleaned and scraped.

Put the head and feet in a large kettle and cover with hot water. Bring this to a boil, then let the whole simmer until the meat falls from the bones. Pour the mixture into a colander and save the liquid.

Remove the bones and pieces of skin and cut the meat in small pieces. Weigh, and add three-fourths to one cup of the liquid for each pound of meat. Return the whole to the fire, season with salt and pepper, a little bay-leaf or powdered seasoning if desired and let it simmer for fifteen minutes. Pour into shallow pans.

Head cheese cut in thin slices and served with hot baked potatoes and a well-seasoned cabbage salad makes an excellent luncheon dish for a cold Winter's day. Head cheese may be used also as a sandwich filling if hearty sandwiches are desired.

DOMMION LOBBY

Another old-fashioned favorite is called Dommion Lobby. Vegetables are the main constituent of this dish.

6 very thin slices of salt pork
1 small rutabaga or 1 white turnip
3 medium-sized carrots or 2 parsnips
4 onions
5 or 6 potatoes

Put the slices of pork in an iron kettle and fry until they are crisp and brown.

Remove the pork, but keep it hot. Add the turnip which has been peeled and cut in six slices and the rest of the vegetables cut in halves to the fat with enough water to make a good gravy. A bit of bay-leaf and a little pepper or other seasoning may be added. Simmer until the vegetables are tender.

Cream one tablespoon of butter, add a tablespoon of flour and mix well. Dilute to a smooth paste with some of the hot liquid. Add to the stew, mix well and let boil.

To serve, arrange the vegetables attractively on a hot platter, add the gravy and, if desired, garnish the whole with the slices of pork.

This is an easy and attractive method of serving Winter vegetables and makes a hearty supper dish for a cold night. It should be accompanied with either a crisp salad, a light fruit dessert or both.

Then there are country desserts usually rather substantial but to be indulged in with impunity if the rest of the meal consists of lighter foods and the digestive apparatus is in good working condition.

SQUASH PIE

(The following recipe is sufficient for one pie)

1 cup squash-pulp
⅞ cup sugar
Grated rind and peel of ½ lemon
½ teaspoon nutmeg
¾ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons cream
1 beaten egg
1½ cups scalded milk
¾ teaspoon powdered ginger

Mix the ingredients thoroughly. Line a pie-tin with pastry and also lay a narrow piece of pastry around the edge. Fill with the mixture and put in a hot oven (about 450 degrees Fahrenheit) for five minutes, or until the crust is set. Lower the heat to between 375 degrees and 400 degrees and cook until the filling is set. Either canned or home-prepared squash may be used, but in either case it should be very dry.

If the squash is prepared at home, proceed as follows:

Select a medium-sized firm Hubbard squash. Wash it, cut it in quarters, then in smaller pieces. Remove the skin and soft inside part and steam the squash until tender. Rub through a coarse sieve. The squash is now ready to be made into pies.

Pumpkin may be prepared in the same way.

CORN-MEAL GRIDDLE-CAKES

1 cup corn-meal
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon salt
2 cups boiling water
2 eggs
1½ cups milk
2 cups flour
4 teaspoons baking-powder
2 tablespoons melted fat

Put the meal, sugar and salt in a mixing-bowl and pour over them the boiling water. Let stand until the meal swells, then add the cold milk.

When the mixture is quite cool, stir in the flour and baking-powder, mixing well, and lastly add the eggs, well beaten, and the melted fat. The cakes should be small, well browned and thoroughly cooked; they need a little longer cooking than wheat griddle-cakes.

RAISED DOUGHNUTS

1 cup scalded milk
1 teaspoon salt
¾ cup sugar
2 tablespoons shortening
3½ to 4 cups flour
1 yeast-cake softened in ¼ cup lukewarm water
1 egg
½ teaspoon grated nutmeg

Add scalded milk to fat, sugar and salt. When lukewarm, add the softened yeast. Add one and one-half cups of flour. Allow the sponge to stand in a warm place until it is so light that it will fall at the slightest touch. Add the eggs, nutmeg and remainder of the flour and knead. The dough should be softer than bread dough. Cover and set in a warm place to rise.

Toss on a lightly floured board and roll until three-fourths inch thick. Cut with a doughnut-cutter and let rise. When frying, put the raised side of the doughnut down in the fat. The heat will cause the top side to rise by the time the doughnut is ready to turn.

When drained, toss in a paper bag with powdered sugar to cover, if desired.

WHAT TEMPERATURE?

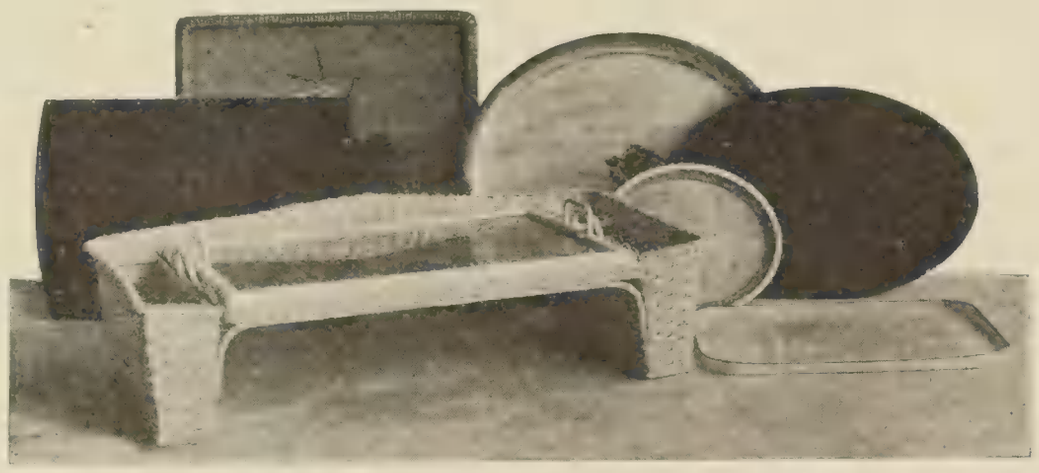
Do you know how hot your oven should be for baking two such different things as a loaf of bread and a lemon tart—and how long to cook each of them? Oven-thermometers and stove-regulators now make it possible to control heat with skill and certainty. And the new DELINEATOR Temperature Chart gives you the exact temperature and time for baking, frying and cooking everything from breads, puddings and pies to meats, vegetables, jellies and sweets. Write for it to THE DELINEATOR'S Home-Making Department, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y. It costs you nothing but a stamped, self-addressed envelope

HOW MANY MILES IN YOUR KITCHEN?

By Ruth M. Kellogg

Assistant Professor of Household Management at the School of Home Economics, Cornell University

DOES the end of a day in the kitchen find you dead tired? "I've hardly been out of this room all day," you sigh perhaps, "but I feel as though I'd walked miles." And maybe you have! For many a weary woman is paying the penalty for a badly planned kitchen. The number of steps from dining-table to sink and from sink to cupboard when multiplied by a good many trips do make a most appalling distance.



Of course the best thing to do would be to have your kitchen replanned along step-saving lines. But this more often than not is a difficult and expensive problem. The next best scheme is to eliminate all extra steps and reduce your "mileage" to a minimum. You will find in this connection that a tray or a service-wagon is a very real help. Once you have formed the habit of using one or both of these conveniences for setting or clearing the table, for procuring food kept in the cellar, or for carrying things to the pantry or the refrigerator, you will be surprised at the number of steps and the great amount of time you can save.

GENERAL-UTILITY TRAYS

Ordinary trays which are made in a large variety of shapes, round, oval, oblong and square, will assist in these services. When it comes to real use, however, more equipment can be placed on an oblong tray than on any other shape. If you want to stand a tray on its side or end, either an oblong or square one is less likely to roll off and away than is a round or oval shape. Also, if you need a tray upon which to serve an occasional meal, the oblong one can be arranged more conveniently and attractively.

Trays differ as much in material as they do in shape. Most metal trays have a steel foundation, but the finish varies greatly. The very inexpensive metal trays are finished usually with paint or varnish and are described as japanned. These are about the same in price as the light-weight tinned ones. The cheaper trays may give service for a considerable length of time, but they are easily bent out of shape. The nickeled tray is more expensive in its initial cost than the japanned metal or tinned tray but is very durable and attractive. This is almost a "dress-up" tray—which, at the same time, is sturdy enough to be used for ordinary purposes.

Aluminum trays are no longer a novelty. They make no pretense of being decorative, but are very evidently made for work. The first cost of one of good weight may seem high to you, but remember that it will last for years. Also, it makes an excellent cookie baking-sheet, as its sides are low and the metal itself is such an excellent conductor of heat. If you pour cold water on the tray when it is very hot, let the water run over the entire surface instead of over just a part of it. Ordinarily you will have no more trouble keeping the aluminum tray in good condition than you have with any other aluminum utensil.

Trays for every purpose—big ones for much carrying or serving—small ones for lighter work—and a breakfast-in-bed tray for invalids and tired people

Perhaps you may prefer a paper tray finished with paint or varnish, or japanned. These may be found in one of two styles: white with a gold band, or a black background dotted with many gold stars. Paper trays are light, there is no discordant metallic sound when something is placed on them, they are inexpensive and they are easily kept clean. If treated carefully, they give service for a long time.

FANCY TRAYS

Woven grass or reed trays are attractive and satisfactory. Large sizes must be reenforced to prevent sagging in the middle when heavy objects are placed on them. The tray must be woven smoothly enough to insure a flat, even surface. Wooden trays in which the lovely grain of the wood shows are most practical, but they should be given a finish that is not easily affected by moisture or heat. Again, a clear glass tray surrounded by a wooden or reed frame may appeal to you. A bit of gay cretonne, grandmother's sampler, or some appropriate treasure of your own choosing placed underneath the glass makes an effective finish. Glass trays, however, are not entirely practical for every-day use. If handles are necessary on this or any other tray you select, be sure that they are comfortable to hold.

Then there are attractive trays of real enamel—a glass mixture fired on steel—that have surrounding borders of nickeled steel. These are pleasing for the tea-party and are kept clean easily. Silver-plated trays or trays of copper or brass in good lines and designs are attractive and decorative. These are employed for more formal service than the trays previously mentioned.

SERVICE-WAGONS

That enlarged edition of the tray, the service-wagon, on which the dishes from an entire meal may be placed, is decidedly useful. Many of the old, doomed-to-the-attic wash-stands furbished up a bit and equipped with wheels or casters are now reappearing as these conveniences. Often old wash-stands are of good material and workmanship and possess such welcome attributes as a drawer and towel-bars that may be used as handles.

One of the first things to demand of a service-wagon is that it have four swivel wheels or casters instead of one pair of swivel and the other pair of set wheels. If it has four swivel wheels, it can be handled at the sides or either end and easily turned in any direction. The wheels or casters work better if they are not less than three inches in diameter. Rubber tires are most desirable. A ledge around the shelf or tray of the service-wagon is another worth-while characteristic, as it prevents objects from sliding off. The whole thing should be easy to keep clean.

At least one commercial wagon now on the market uses a composition product for the trays that resembles plain linoleum in appearance and is as easily washed as linoleum. This particular design, though capable of holding a considerable number of dishes, is smaller than the average service-wagon, can be rolled through narrow passages and does not take up a large amount of floor-space. Another commercial wagon is made of wood throughout. This model is larger in size and has correspondingly larger swivel wheels. Still another one with swivel wheels is made of wood with a mahogany finish, has a glass tray resting on top of the table and a shallow drawer directly beneath the top. The type last mentioned brings us close to the regular tea-table. While there is no special difference between the two, service-wagons are made primarily for work while the tea-table serves a more social purpose. In contrast to the service-wagon, two set wheels, instead of all four swivel wheels, are a real advantage in the tea wagon or table, which should stand still and firm after it has been drawn into place.

TWO UNUSUAL TRAYS

A mahogany tray which may be transformed into a table by means of two levers which control two sets of legs has many uses.

Another unusual tray table is called the invalid's or bedside table. It can be extended out over the bed, raised or lowered in height, set level to hold a tray or tilted to the desired slant so that a book may be rested on it. Realize also that this table is not for the bedside alone. Sometimes you may like to settle down to work in a big easy chair. This table will extend across your lap at the height you wish. Or again you may play games on it.

Another one of the conveniences is that the top may be turned to a vertical position and the table set back against the wall where it takes up little room.

One of the essentials for the enjoyment and efficient use of a service-wagon is a straight floor between the kitchen and dining-room, the hall and rooms through which the tea-cart will be passed. A door-sill between the kitchen and dining-room necessitates the lifting of the tea-cart or bumping it, which may spill the cream and disturb the tray. A carpenter can remove the door-sill for you.

When the home-economics specialists planned the "Home Sweet Home" house in Washington, they made a contribution to the Better Homes movement by emphasizing the labor saved by attaching four rollers to the kitchen table and the use of a tea-wagon.

Where there are only two members of the family at home for luncheon, the wagon may be arranged immediately after breakfast, ready for service and wheeled into the dining-room. This relieves the necessity of using the table.

Many women who live alone use the tea-cart for all of their solitary meals, thus saving time and labor.

A tea-cart is a great help in serving an early dinner or supper for little children who do not come to the table. It is easy to bring the cart to the high-chair and the tray catches most of the crums which may be dropped by little fingers.

If the young people in the house plan to go to the movies or the theater, the evening is never complete without refreshments. There is nothing cozier than to come home and find the tea-wagon before the fire loaded out with sandwiches, cookies and hot chocolate. A thoughtful mother or sister takes pleasure in preparing this surprise. It eliminates a kitchen sink piled high with soiled dishes and untidy scraps when time for breakfast.

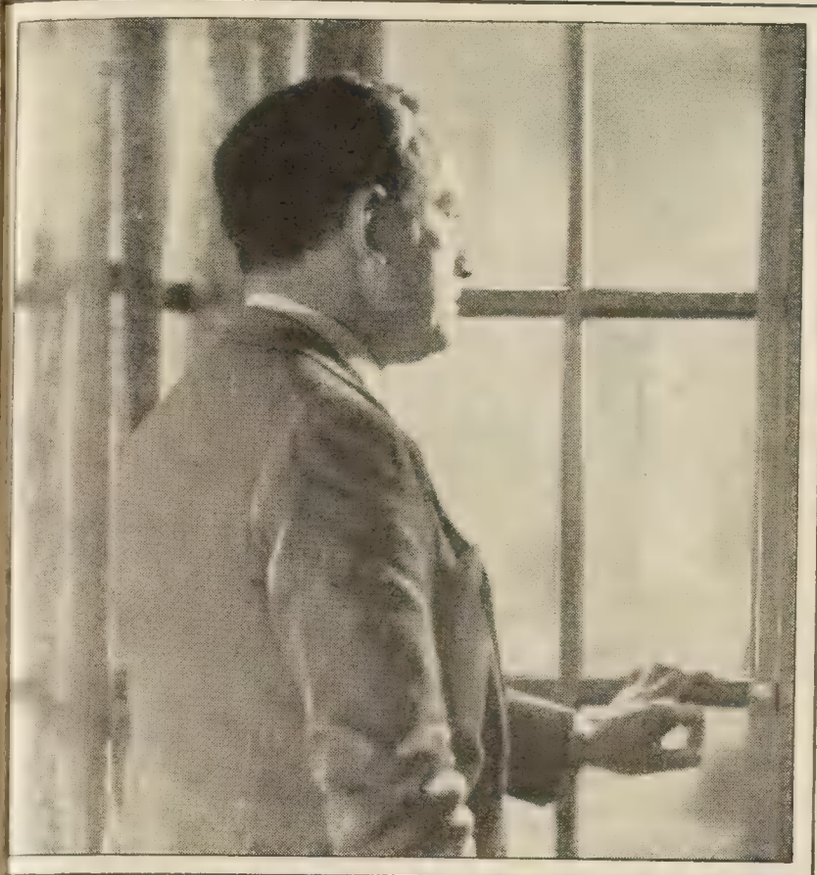
Between meals, the tea-wagon may serve as a decorative bit of furniture if one of the little Japanese gardens, found in so many florists' shops, which are so daintily complete in their gaily colored bowls, is placed upon it. This one article is easily removed at meal time, and the tea-cart then makes a most convenient service-table.

As a Christmas gift, a good serviceable tray or tea-wagon is certain to be appreciated.

HAVE YOU EVER SAT DOWN

—after a busy day's housework and wondered how many miles you'd walked?

And have you ever longed for a practical way to reduce this exhausting mileage?



If you want a plan for shortening the lines of travel in your work, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

The tea-table is by far the most elegant and most socially minded member of the tray family

For general usefulness select a sturdy service wagon with swivel wheels and washable

(At left)

"A physical wreck—I was irritable, nervous, debilitated. I tried the rest cure, the milk diet, and nearly every curative treatment known to science, but to no avail. I was simply depleted of nervous energy. When I heard of Fleischmann's Yeast I was skeptical of the wonderful results attributed to it. In a week's time, after using the yeast, my digestion became better, my complexion brighter, and I slowly regained lost vitality. Is it any wonder that I am a convert to the curative qualities of Fleischmann's Yeast?"

(Extract from a letter of Mr. Clair C. Cook of Los Angeles, California)

(At right)

"We restaurant eaters must force greasy, quickly fried food into our stomachs in a hurry. No wonder they get sluggish and refuse to perform their duties. And our next move is 'take one of these pills each night!' Even the best stomach cannot stand such treatment. It must soon stop functioning and instead of taking nourishment and health out of our food, it becomes semi-active and just passes it on.

"On the advice of a friend I ate my first yeast cake. Now I feel like the man who puts coal on a fire. He gets heat units, while today I'm enjoying health and vigor units, and am glad to be out of the 'glass of water and pill' class."

(Mr. Thomas Leyden, of Elizabeth, N. J.)

(At left)

"I knew my headaches and unwholesome complexion were caused by constipation. To take frequent cathartics was my regular program and even by doing this I was tired and dopey. 'I like what yeast does for me' said one of my customers and asked if I had ever tried it. I acted on this suggestion and began to drink yeast in milk regularly. Soon people began to comment on how well I was looking—my husband said I grew younger—the mirror told me my complexion and eyes were clear and bright. Cathartics are now a thing of the past."

(A letter from Mrs. Mabelle Conomikes of Marathon, N. Y.)

(At right)

"'And my Fleischmann's Yeast cakes as usual.' For almost three years I have given this order to my grocer several times each week and will continue indefinitely. Three years ago as a young mother in a run-down condition, with boils rendering me almost helpless, I felt that the end of my endurance had been reached. In desperation I sent for Fleischmann's Yeast cakes. The boils began to dry up. I slept better—had a keener appetite, felt better and by Spring had regained my strength and vivacity. Now I eat Fleischmann's Yeast cakes to keep me feeling 'top notch'."

(A letter from Mrs. Helen M. Raup of Linthicum Heights, Maryland)

FOUR KINDRED ILLS - - -

Lowered Vitality - Stomach Troubles Constipation - - Skin Disorders

One simple food to banish them - -

THESE remarkable reports are typical of thousands of similar tributes to Fleischmann's Yeast.

There is nothing mysterious about its action. It is not a "cure-all," not a medicine in any sense. But when the body is choked with the poisons of constipation—or when its vitality is low so that skin, stomach and general health are affected—this simple, natural food achieves literally amazing results.

Concentrated in every cake of Fleischmann's Yeast are millions of tiny yeast-plants, alive and active. At once they go to work—invigorating the whole system, clearing the skin, aiding digestion, strengthening the intestinal muscles and making them healthy and active.

Fleischmann's Yeast for Health comes only in the tinfoil package—it cannot be purchased in tablet form. All grocers have it. Start eating it today! You can order several cakes at a time, for Yeast will keep fresh in a cool, dry place for two or three days.

Dissolve one cake in a glass of water (just hot enough to drink)

before breakfast and at bedtime. Fleischmann's Yeast when taken this way, is especially effective in overcoming or preventing constipation. Or eat 2 or 3 cakes a day—spread on bread or crackers—dissolved in fruit juices or milk—or eat it plain.

Write for a free copy of our latest booklet on Yeast for Health. Health Research Dept. D-12, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington Street, New York.

6 Minutes from package to table

If everyone knew how quickly a delicious breakfast can be prepared with Pillsbury's Pancake Flour, pancakes would soon become the national breakfast.

First put on your griddle. While it heats, add water or milk to Pillsbury's, and you have a rich, smooth, creamy batter. Pour it on the griddle. Let the heat brown the batter into fluffy cakes and, six minutes in all, they're ready to serve.

Pillsbury's Pancake Flour contains only highest-grade Pillsbury-standard ingredients mixed and sifted to powder-fineness by the Pillsbury process. Light-textured and tender as they are, Pillsbury pancakes are wholesome, substantial.

Have these delicious pancakes for breakfast tomorrow!

Just a postcard request will bring "Better Pancakes and How to Make Them," a little book of helpful recipes.

Make This Test Yourself

Pour a little Pillsbury's Pancake Flour into your hand. Note the creamy-white color due to Pillsbury's high-grade flours. Rub it with your finger—see how smooth it is—its fine, velvety texture. Now you know why Pillsbury's makes such perfect pancakes.

Pillsbury's Buckwheat Pancake Flour makes equally delicious cakes with a real old-fashioned buckwheat flavor.

PILLSBURY FLOUR MILLS COMPANY
MINNEAPOLIS, U. S. A.

Pillsbury's Family of Foods

Pillsbury's Best Flour Pancake Flour
Buckwheat Pancake Flour Health Bran Wheat Cereal
Rye Flour Graham Flour Farina

Pillsbury's Pancake Flour

One of the family

MENUS FOR THE NEW YEAR

By Jessie A. Boys

These menus were planned to provide correct nutritional values within the means of an average household budget. They were edited by Martha Van Rensselaer, Head of the School of Home Economics, Cornell University

MANY people like to entertain on New Year's Day, so a menu for an afternoon tea has been included for that time. The chicken-and-almond sandwiches are much more delicious if salted rather than unsalted nuts are used. Novelty is added to the refreshments if crushed rock-candy is provided for the tea instead of the usual loaf sugar.

In the supper menu a fig sundae can be substituted for the suggested dessert by serving preserved figs over either vanilla or chocolate ice-cream.

In the Sunday-supper menu the onion should be finely chopped and added to the mixture of ground cheese and mayonnaise for the sandwich filling. A faint suggestion of onion is savory and tasty, but large slices are far from appetizing.

No bread is suggested in the Saturday dinner, as the crust of the meat-pie is a baking-powder biscuit mixture and there is plenty of starchy food provided in the rest of the meal.

SUNDAY

BREAKFAST

Apricots and Prunes
Bacon Omelet Coffee Cake
Marmalade
Milk Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Cheese-and-Onion Sandwiches
Shrimp-and-Celery Salad
Cocoa

DINNER

Roast Chicken Brown Gravy
Giblet Stuffing Sweet Potatoes
Creamed Celery
Jellied Cranberries Hot Rolls
Frozen Peaches White Cake
Milk Coffee

MONDAY

BREAKFAST

Bananas
Corn Flakes with Top Milk
Ham and Eggs Creamed Potatoes
Hot Rolls Cocoa

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Corn-and-Tomato Soup Split Crackers
Pineapple-and-Cheese Salad
Nut Bread
Milk Tea

DINNER

Casserole of Pork Chops and Mixed Vegetables
Cabbage-and-Pickle Salad
Apple Jelly Rice Muffins
Peach Cobbler Lemon Sauce
Milk Coffee

TUESDAY

BREAKFAST

Orange-Juice
Pinhead Oats with Top Milk
Crisp Toast Marmalade
Milk Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Onion-and-Potato Pie
Beets with Sour Sauce
Canned Fruit Drop Cookies
Milk Tea

DINNER

Swiss Steak Brown Sauce
Riced Potato Brussel Sprouts or Cabbage
Chunk Pickle Rolls
Apple Pie Cheese
Milk Coffee

WEDNESDAY

BREAKFAST

Grapefruit
Creamed Codfish Potato Cakes
Doughnuts
Milk Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Scalloped Oysters Celery
Fried Potatoes Stewed Tomatoes
Whole-Wheat Bread
Fruit Whip Oatmeal Wafers
Milk Tea

DINNER

Vegetable Soup
Stuffed Pork Tenderloins
Baked Sweet Potatoes Spinach
Piccalilli Graham Bread
Baked Rice Pudding with Cream
Milk Coffee

THURSDAY (New Year's Day)

BREAKFAST

Baked Apples with Jelly and Cream
Grated-Potato Pancakes
Buttered Eggs Crisp Bacon
Currant Jelly
Cocoa Coffee

AFTERNOON TEA

Chicken-and-Almond Sandwiches
Orange-Marmalade Sandwiches
Decorated Cakes Scottish Fancies
Turkish Delight Salted Pecans
Russian Tea Reception Chocolate

SUPPER (Special Menu if Dinner is Omitted and There are Guests)

Oysters and Mushrooms à la King on Toast
Buttered Asparagus Tips
Jellied Relish Hot Biscuit
Chocolate Fig Ice-Cream
Sponge Cake Fruit Cake
Milk Fruit Punch Coffee

NEW YEAR'S DINNER

Clam Cocktail
Celery Olives
Consommé
Roast Duck Hot Orange Sauce or Apple Sauce
Hominy-and-Horseradish Croquettes
Potatoes in Cream Buttered Peas
Dinner Rolls
White-Grape-and-Nut Salad Water
English Plum Pudding Foamy Sauce
Toasted Crackers Cream Cheese
Milk Coffee

FRIDAY

BREAKFAST

Canned Cherries
Granulated-Wheat Cereal with Top Milk
Poached Eggs on Toast
Milk Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Gingered Sweet Potatoes
Crab-Flake-and-Celery Salad
Raisin Bread Fruit
Milk Tea

DINNER

Salmon Loaf Creamed Peas Baked Potatoes
Mint Jelly Corn Bread
Chocolate Blanc Mange with Cream
Milk Coffee

SATURDAY

BREAKFAST

Grapefruit
Buckwheat Cakes Sirup
Link Sausage
Milk Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Corn Chowder Crisp Crackers
Graham Muffins
Jellied Fruits Whipped Cream
Hot Chocolate

DINNER

Meat-Pie Parsley Potatoes
Mashed Squash Stewed Tomatoes
Celery-and-Cabbage Salad
Lemon Tarts
Milk Coffee

Piping hot, nourishing and tasty—that's the kind of food your husband and children need this crisp cold weather. Serve them a casserole of chops and vegetables—or any of the other sturdy dishes suggested here—and see if they don't pass their plates for "seconds." If you want recipes, just write to Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped return envelope.

OUR OFFER: The handiest loose-leaf receipt book ever designed. Includes strong, flexible cover, complete set index cards, and 50 blank sheets for your favorite receipts. Size 6 x 8 inches. Lies flat, stays open. Would cost $2.00 in any retail store, but you send actual cost to us—only $1.00—to get one prepaid to your door. Includes many of our choicest Walnut receipts but no advertising in or on the book. Just enclose ■ money order, check, or $1.00 bill with your request.

Between Ordinary "Walnuts" and "Diamond" Walnuts

—note the difference this Christmas—Try them and see

YOU'RE going to have Walnuts for Christmas,—a good opportunity to compare ordinary "walnuts" with extra delicious "Diamond Walnuts."

Walnuts come from many foreign countries as well as California.

But through our great cooperative association in California, we, the growers,—4186 of us—specialize in their production. Climate and soil are more ideal here than anywhere else in the world. Years of specialized experience have taught us how to make Walnut trees do their best.

We grow 50,000,000 pounds a year—the finest Walnut Crop the world knows.

We take out, by our own patented suction machine, all that are even slightly underweight or withered. Then we sort them three times by hand, to get the best. In this way we discard about 5,000,000 pounds to get "Diamond" quality.

The result is far more than merely "Walnuts"—you'll note the difference in their appearance, the way they crack, the way they taste, and in their yield of better and more kernels per pound.

Here are clean, thin shells that crack without crushing the crisp, plump, flavory, tender kernels.

Expect differences like these when you buy Diamond Walnuts.

As the price of Diamond Walnuts is usually about the same as for other walnuts, surely it is worth while insisting that the Grocer take yours from the famous Diamond bag illustrated below.

Try it this Christmas.

MOST DIAMOND WALNUTS—about 50,000,000 pounds a year—are sold in shells. But you can also buy these same delicious Walnuts shelled—just the kernels alone. Halves for topping mixed with pieces for filler and salads in large and small tins. Both "Vacuum Packed" so they come to you with the incomparable DIAMOND flavor and freshness intact.

CALIFORNIA WALNUT GROWERS ASSOCIATION
Dept. B-7, Los Angeles, California
A Purely Cooperative, Non-profit Organization of 4186 Growers
Our Yearly Production 50,000,000 Pounds

DIAMOND California's finest WALNUTS

Crackin' Good Walnuts

Far wiser than cosmetics is "an Ounce of Prevention"!

WILL YOU NEVER learn, my friends, you who seek loveliness in the rouge pot, that cosmetics are merely subterfuges employed to hide the ravages of neglect?

Beauty, flawless skin, flashing eyes are the normal, outward signs of inner health. Remember Nature's simplest law if you would win the "golden apple"!

Faulty elimination is the cause of more bad complexions, more sallowness of skin, more dull and listless eyes than all other causes put together.

Correct this condition! Prevent intestinal sluggishness! Thus you will accomplish more beauty miracles than with all the cosmetics in this country and France.

A health formula for everybody, every day

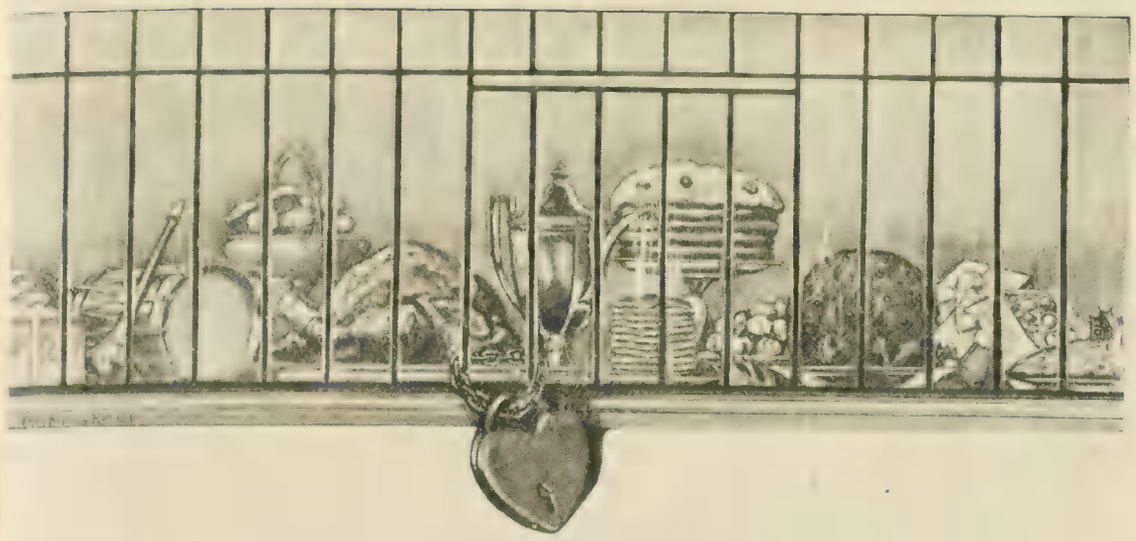
Your own doctor has told you to eat bran because he realizes that you take too little exercise and that your intestines need bulk if they are to function normally.

You tried ordinary bran, perhaps, and found it unpleasant. Now please try bran in this new delicious form:

Post's Bran Flakes are really a delightful food. You may eat them with milk or cream, every day, just as you eat Post Toasties, or Grape-Nuts. Bran in this form makes wonderfully light, fluffy muffins and good wholesome bread. It provides the intestines with needed bulk and at the same time brings to the body such vital food essentials as: phosphorus and iron, proteins and carbohydrates and the highly essential Vitamin B.

Eat Post's Bran Flakes in one form or another every day. You will be surprised how quickly they restore regular habits and how much better you look and feel.

Send for "An Ounce of Prevention," a free trial package of Post's Bran Flakes and our booklet showing different ways of serving Bran. Postum Cereal Company, Inc., Dept. 1-104, Battle Creek, Michigan. Makers of Post Health Products: Post Toasties, Post's Bran Flakes, Postum Cereal, Instant Postum and Grape-Nuts. If you live in Canada address Canadian Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., 45 Front St., E., Toronto, Ont.



everybody
every day

eat

POST'S
BRAN FLAKES

as an ounce of prevention

KEEPING THE CHILDREN WELL AT CHRISTMAS

By Flora M. Thurston

Uncle Sam's Nutrition Specialist in the Extension Service at Cornell University

Edited and approved by Martha Van Rensselaer, Head of the School of Home Economics, Cornell University

IN VACATION-TIME mothers can't look solemnly at the clock and say to their youngsters, "Johnnie, it's time for you to be in bed—there's school to-morrow, you know," because there isn't any school to worry about. In the morning the clock can tick past seven and then past eight while Johnnie snuggles farther under the blankets.

Even meals are different, because Christmas time brings sweetmeats and turkey dinners with plenty of nuts and plum pudding. And it takes less persuasion to get candy between meals. There are parties and sleigh-rides, teas and banquets that seriously upset the hour for bed for young and old. And with all of these festivities come elaborate meals or refreshments which are less easily digested because of their intrinsic richness.

For the oversensitive or overactive child, Christmas week, with its expectancy and exciting actuality, may prove to be too stimulating. The very thought of Christmas morning may be enough to cause restless sleep for several nights before.

OF COURSE all this may seem a happy break in the yearly routine; and in the face of any objection the average person may remark, "Oh, let the children have their fun." But to the teacher and to some mothers the undesirable results of a vacation with all rules off are but too clear.

After several months of school work children need both a rest and a change. They need a period long enough to make good any loss they may have suffered during the first lap of the school year in order to maintain a huskiness that even the dangers of the Winter season can not weaken. Too often they experience a change which may do much to clear their minds and release their spirits, but strains rather than builds up their health. In discontinuing temporarily the routine of work, they also abandon their habits of health and depart as far as possible from the schedule of the average day.

Vacation should mean recreation in its real sense—not slumping into negligence merely for the sake of novelty, but throwing oneself heartily into a daily program that provides a stimulating and wholesome change of interest. The daily routine can not be disregarded without paying the price.

THE Christmas vacation comes at a time when it is particularly important to guard the health of the family. If one were to chart the health curve of the average family or community, one would find that it begins to go down some time near the first of the year. Acute sickness, especially the dread respiratory diseases, are not as common in the Summer and Fall months as they are during the Winter. Frequently these difficulties begin in the late Fall and become more and more prevalent as the Winter advances. When Spring appears with its sunshine and fresh food, they mysteriously disappear.

Any mother who would preserve both the traditions of Christmas and the health of her family will do her utmost to make the wholesome food the most attractive. If one is resting more than usual during the vacation, the need for food is less, especially along the line of sweets and fats, which are so conspicuous in holiday fare. The necessary foods in festive attire should continue to be the mainstay of the diet. Too often the meats and desserts receive the major part of the artistic ability of the cook, while the more wholesome fruits and vegetables appear in accustomed form. Such attention is justified if the dessert takes the form of a fresh fruit or a light fruit pudding or ice. Why not steal a bit of time (and money) from the meat course for the preparation of the salad and use all one's ingenuity toward the discovery of alluring vegetable dishes?

Let the food luxuries such as nuts, pastries and bonbons assume only the rôle of high spots. Roast turkey, plum pudding and confections are not undesirable foods in themselves, but when they are all parts of the same meal it is too much to ask the average alimentary tract to digest them. By serving them only in moderate amounts and by using them as accessories rather than as main articles of diet one may make them extend over a number of meals.

Sugar candies should be used to replace part of the chocolates, and better still are the fruit confections. Only limited amounts of nuts should be used, and pastries should be reduced to a minimum. Gravies and rich sauces and highly flavored foods should become only the extras of a meal, to flavor but not to overshadow the other foods.

UNNECESSARY eating between meals should be looked upon as a dietary, and therefore a social, indiscretion, while overeating should be considered an indulgence unworthy of any member of the family. One of these temptations might be avoided if fruit, such as oranges, dates or raisins, were used to replace the usual bags of highly colored candies that one finds on Sunday-school Christmas trees.

Although not so serious as overeating, one of the greater objections to vacations is the irregularity of sleep. Since rest is one of the most important of health habits, regular rest hours should be strictly observed. It may be necessary to set a new standard for social functions to make this possible, and it is likely that the school which is most proud of its health record will be first to have for its slogan for social affairs: "Make them short, make them early."

Wise parents will enlist the interest of their children in setting standards of moderation. They will be willing to give more rather than less attention to health habits as a means of maintaining and improving the vigor of the family throughout the year. Although the children may find it difficult at first to withstand the pressure of temptation to eat irrationally and rest inadequately, they will have pride in going back to school feeling fit and with health habits that will stand the test more firmly established than ever.

Little engines that burn up energy

3 out of 10 "run down" because their fuel supply is not equal to their needs

"LITTLE bundles of energy"—that's the way we think of active children. As we watch them play they seem to us inexhaustible.

And yet they're not. In fact, 3 out of 10 are suffering from exhaustion. You can see them in any school—poor tired little tots; listless, underweight, because undernourished!

This does not mean that they do not have enough to eat. It means they do not have the right things to eat. Dr. W. A. Evans, nutrition authority of Chicago, states that one of the greatest causes of undernourishment is an improper breakfast!

A child should have a good nourishing breakfast of food known to be very rich in energy and very easy to digest. And for such food you need look no farther than good old Cream of Wheat!

In Cream of Wheat you get a vital store of energy nourishment because it is so rich in carbohydrates or energy-giving elements. And it is so easily and quickly digested! In fact, digestion of Cream of Wheat begins in the mouth.

It is this combination of rich energy and easy digestibility—a combination not often found in foods—that nutrition authorities specially value in Cream of Wheat.

For an energy-breakfast then—Cream of Wheat cooked with dates, prunes, raisins, or figs! It is perfectly delicious—rich, creamy with a delicately blended flavor of fruit and grain. Or you may prefer it with butter and salt. Children love it with brown sugar, syrup or fruit sauce.

Two interesting booklets for you—FREE

We have a splendid new book of helpful information on feeding children. And our recipe booklet gives 50 delightful ways to serve this fine energy food. We will gladly send both free; mail coupon.

Free! these booklets—mail coupon

The Cream of Wheat Company
Dept. 10-C, Minneapolis, Minnesota

☐ Please send me, free, your booklet, "The Important Business of Feeding Children."

☐ Please send me, free, your recipe booklet, "50 Delicious Ways of Serving Cream of Wheat."

☐ Please send me sample box of Cream of Wheat for which I enclose 5c to cover postage.

Name .....

Address .....

Cream of Wheat

The Cream of Wheat Company, Minneapolis, Minnesota
In Canada, made by the Cream of Wheat Company, Winnipeg

© 1925, C of W

Pattern 5636—The vague line of floating draperies is very flattering

PARIS SAYS

The circular movement is new and smart, introduced so cleverly by godets, flares or flounces at bottom of skirt or overdress that the silhouette still remains straight . . . Straight and shorter than before, the beltless frock is stronger than ever . . . The Directoire influence shows in revers, collars, double-breasted effects . . . Tunics are being shown by all the best houses . . . Clever manipulation of fabrics, braid, buttons and scarfs are approved details.

Pattern 5608—The Directoire revers and double-breasted effect are new

The Winter Silhouette grows shorter and more slender in spite of Flounces and Tunics

WHILE the silhouette is of pencil slenderness the new Paris mode is for godets, circular movements, and calls for the most expert handling to avoid adding an inch of apparent width.

This beautifully modeled, new outline offers no difficulties if you follow the Deltor. First the Deltor shows you just how to cut your dress out of the least possible material—very important as circular movements can eat up material unless you have an individual cutting layout for your size and view and your width material—which other patterns fail to give you.

Then the Deltor shows you exactly how to put your dress together, circular movement and all, just as Paris would. Finally, the Deltor shows you in detail how to give the dress its real French finish. With every Butterick Pattern the Deltor is furnished free by Butterick of New York, of Paris, of London.

Pattern 5616—A frock adopts the Parisian way of attaching its scarf

Pattern 5644—The tunic is a typical feature of the Fall mode

Pattern 5604—The band trimming and long sleeve are interesting points of this frock

Pattern 5606—Tunic, buttons, and scarf express three very smart Winter fashions

Pattern 5600—Bands beneath a blouse fall in drapery at the side

Pattern 5622—The narrow silhouette is challenged by the circular skirt

Pattern 5626—The tailor influence brings the redingote with stand-up Chinese collar

BUTTERICK PATTERNS WITH THE DELTOR

SAVE DOLLARS AND HOURS

Hints from successful housewives

If you have discovered some clever little way to save time or labor or fuel or food or anything else connected with housekeeping, tell us about it—and if we can use it in these columns we will pay you five dollars for it. Write on only one side of the paper and address your letter to The "Savers" Editor, THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y. (If you wish to have your suggestion returned in case we can not use it, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

Save oven heat by toasting croutons in a corn-popper

SAVE HEATING THE OVEN

Croutons can be made very easily in a corn-popper. Cut the bread into pieces the desired size, place them in the popper, and shake it very carefully over the coal-stove fire or the gas-burner. The corn-popper may be used also for broiling meats and fish over the open fire when camping. Sometimes it is a convenient utensil for holding fresh fruits, dried fruits, beans or rice when rinsing them.—M. C. C., Kelso, Wash.

SAVE WALLS FROM DUST STREAKS

The line at the bottom of a picture, formed by the accumulation of dust, may be prevented by gluing a thin piece of cork on the back of the picture in the two lower corners. These keep the picture from the wall and enable the dust in the air to circulate rather than accumulate.—MRS. J. L. B., Wellesley Hills, Mass.

SAVE THE CHILDREN DIFFICULTY IN DRESSING

The children can easily pull their stockings on over the legs of their union suits if a piece of tape is sewed on the end of each leg of a union suit so that the tape fits underneath the foot. This is a great help to the mother who has several children whom she must help to dress.—MRS. C. F. B., Stephenson, Miss.

SAVE THE LIFE OF FLOWERS

A florist recently taught me a clever secret for prolonging the beauty of cut hot-house flowers, especially roses. When the flowers have reached their prime, at the first sign of fading drop an aspirin tablet into the water. The flowers will revive as if by magic and remain fresh and beautiful for several days longer.—C. L. M., Newark, Ohio.

SAVE TROUBLE IN SORTING CRANBERRIES

Cranberries may be sorted easily by pouring them in a thin layer on a tray or platter and then tilting the platter. The sound berries will roll off easily while the soft or partially spoiled berries tend to stay in place on the platter.—MRS. L. J. McE., Clyde Park, Mont.

SAVE BREAKING NUT-MEATS

Brazil nuts may be removed from their shells without breaking the nut-meat if they are first placed in a moderate oven until warm. If the shells are then cracked, the nuts will come out whole and the skins can be loosened easily.—MRS. E. G. U., Ainsworth, Neb.

SAVE ON WATER-BOTTLES

When rubber hot-water bottles begin to leak, their usefulness can be prolonged in many cases by mending them in exactly the same manner that a patch is vulcanized on a tire-tube. Nearly every home garage is equipped with a vulcanizer, and it is the work of only a few minutes to reclaim a hot-water bottle that has been accidentally punctured or that has given out at the seams.—MRS. H. P. VAN H., Canon City, Colo.

SAVE DIFFICULTY IN SEPARATING SLICED BACON

To separate very thinly sliced bacon without mutiliating it in the least, place the package in the oven, but do not leave it long enough for the fat to melt. The slices may be separated very easily even in cold weather if this plan is used.—MRS. E. K., New Brighton, N. Y.

SAVE ON SLIPPERS

When wearing galoshes over light-colored slippers of satin or suède, I slip the feet of an old pair of stockings over the slippers and thus prevent the slippers from becoming soiled by the galoshes.—MRS. H. E. G., Rockford, Ill.

SAVE STOCKINGS AT THE KNEE

When children's stockings become worn at the knees, reinforce the weak spots by darning them. Then cut the stockings off at the ankle, turn the leg back side front and sew on the foot again. This gives a new surface at the knee and lengthens the life of the stocking.—W. E., Ithaca, N. Y.

SAVE BOOKS AND PAPERS FROM MICE

If moth-balls are scattered through boxes of books and papers, mice will not touch them. When books and magazines are stored away in Summer camps or in the attic, it is a comfort to know that they are safeguarded from the havoc that mice can create.—MRS. M. L. S., Farnam, Neb.

SAVE A POSSIBLE FLOOD

The woman of the house should know the location of the shut-off of the water pipes. A friend of mine had a disastrous experience because she had no idea where to shut off the water leading to the bathroom. The pipe burst while the men of the family were away, and before the plumber could reach the house, the ceiling of the room below was soaked with water and the plaster had loosened and fallen. The expense of replastering and a great deal of inconvenience might have been avoided had she known how to shut off the water.—M. R., Traverse City, Mich.

WEAR! WEAR! WEAR!

That's what Kayser hosiery does

Every desirable color

Every new feature

Marvel-Stripe stops laddering*

And then, also, those with sandal feet and low spliced heel

Slipper Heel slenderizes ankles*

Every wanted style

$1.50 per pair and up

Kayser

*Trademarks Registered

FULL-FASHIONED THREAD SILK HOSIERY

HOSIERY — UNDERWEAR — GLOVES

If Teeth Grow Dingy

Combat the film

That's how millions gain new beauty

YOU see glistening teeth now wherever you look—teeth you envy, maybe. They come from combating the dingy film.

This offers you the method which millions now employ. A ten-day test is free. Try it and see the changes that occur. You will be surprised and delighted

That cloud is film

Film is what clouds the teeth's luster. At first it is viscous—you can feel it now. No ordinary tooth paste effectively combats it, so much of it clings and stays.

Soon that film discolors, then forms dingy coats. That is how teeth lose their beauty.

Film also causes most tooth troubles. It holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Germs breed by millions in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

All who leave those film-coats may suffer some of these effects.

Now easy to combat

Dental research has now found two ways to fight that film. One disintegrates the film at all stages of formation. One removes it without harmful scouring.

Many careful tests have proved that these methods bring long-desired results. A new-type tooth paste has been created to apply them daily. The name is Pepsodent.

Leading dentists everywhere began to urge its use. Now careful people of some 50 nations enjoy the benefits it brings.

Old ways wrong

Research has also proved that old methods bring unfortunate effects. They reduce the alkalinity of the saliva, which is there to neutralize mouth acids. They reduce the starch digestant in saliva, which is there to digest starch deposits.

Pepsodent brings opposite effects. It multiplies the alkalinity, multiplies the starch digestant. Thus it gives multiplied power to these great natural tooth-protecting agents.

These things mean new beauty, new cleanliness, new safety. You will never go without these results when you know them. Let this test prove them to you.

Protect the Enamel

Pepsodent disintegrates the film, then removes it with an agent far softer than enamel. Never use a film combatant which contains harsh grit.

PAT. OFF.
Pepsodent
REG. U. S.

The New-Day Dentifrice

1589

10-DAY TUBE FREE

THE PEPSODENT COMPANY,
Dept. 395, 1104 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Mail 10-day tube of Pepsodent to

.....

.....

Only one tube to a family

Results are quick

Send this coupon for a 10-Day Tube Note how clean the teeth feel after using. Mark the absence of the viscous film. See how teeth become whiter as the film-coats disappear.

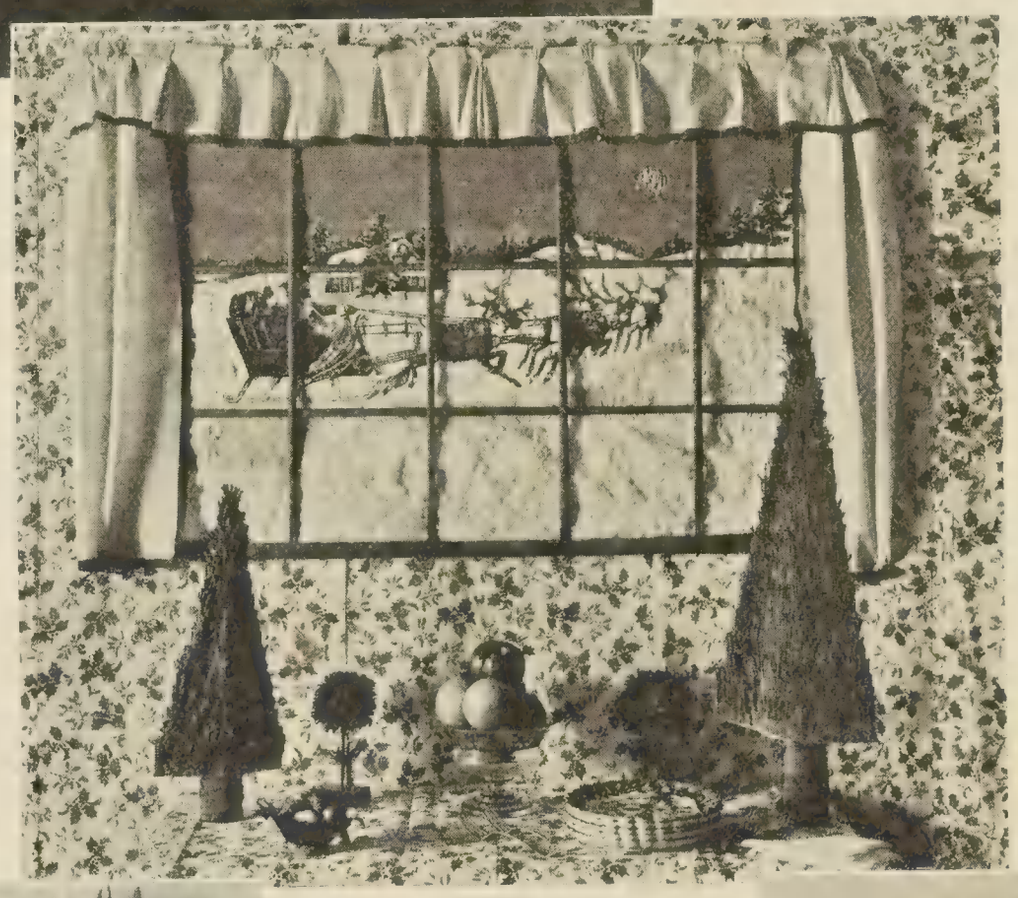
A few days will show you the priceless benefits it brings.

CUT OUT THE COUPON NOW

FESTIVE PAPER DECORATIONS

For Christmas and New Year's time

What a surprise for the holiday festivities are these gay paper decorations! It's loads of fun to make them; and if you live where greens are expensive or hard to get, you'll find them invaluable. Mrs. Sanders will gladly send you the directions. Write to her, care of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope



This mammoth poinsettia makes a very effective centerpiece for the Christmas-dinner table. Leafy baskets and sturdy little green trees mounted on red boxes which can hold nuts add a holiday decoration to each guest's place

The vivid reds and deep greens of these chrysanthemums contrast delightfully. An artistic spray placed in a tall basket or a low bowl will give a bewitching note of color to a somber corner

Bright red berries gleam among the green foliage of this festive ball which forms the centerpiece of the table. Place-cards are attached to the individual favors, which are decorated with holly and tinsel

This Christmassy window design—all of paper—forms a gay background for the buffet-supper table. And who would suspect that the two sentinel pines which guard the fruit-dish are bottles cleverly covered?

Paper hats are a delightful and amusing addition to the festivities at Christmas time. Make them with dignified plumes for the grown-ups, and for the younger generation decorate them with saucy pompons

ASK US

Ask us anything you want to know about housekeeping and we will answer it personally. From our recent correspondence we publish the following questions and answers as being of general interest to all home-makers

QUESTION—I am having my kitchen floor covered with linoleum. What is the best way to put it down?

Answer—After it has been measured and cut to fit the floor, it should lie loose on the floor for two or more weeks. If it is fastened to the floor as soon as it is laid down, it soon begins to buckle. After it has stretched, seal the whole linoleum to the floor, as this prevents water from running under and rotting the linoleum and then wax.

Question—What are scones? Will you please give me a recipe for them?

Answer—Scones are really baking-powder biscuits modified by adding more shortening or egg. The following recipe makes delicious scones:

2 cups flour
4 teaspoons baking-powder (level)
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
⅓ to ½ cup milk
1 egg
4 tablespoons fat (level)

Mix and sift together the flour, baking-powder, sugar and salt.

Chop the fat into the flour mixture or work it in with the tips of the fingers, keeping some flour between the fingers and the fat.

Beat the egg and add it to the milk.

Fold the liquid into the flour mixture, using enough to make a medium-soft dough.

Put the dough on a floured board and pat it lightly or roll it out until it is about one-half inch in thickness. Cut it into diamond shapes with a floured knife and put in greased pans.

Brush each shape with egg mixed with water in the proportion of one tablespoon of water to one egg.

Bake in a hot oven (450 to 460 degrees Fahrenheit) for twelve to fifteen minutes.

Question—My feather pillows are very much soiled. How can I wash them?

Answer—The feathers may be washed in the ticking if the ticking is not too soiled. If the ticking is very much soiled, make as many cheese-cloth bags as the number of pillows you wish to wash at a time. The bags should be slightly longer than the ticking cases and one end should remain unsewed. Run a heavy, firm basting-thread across the ticking one inch from the end which is to be ripped open; then rip open this end of the ticking. Sew together with a long stitch and a firm thread the open end of the cheese-cloth bag and the loosened end of the ticking. Remove the basting-thread from the ticking and shake the feathers from the ticking into the cheese-cloth bag. Baste together the edges of the open end of the cheese-cloth bag and then rip the two bags loose from each other.

Wash the ticking thoroughly inside and out. Rinse in warm water, wring, stretch thoroughly and hang to dry in the sun. Put the cheese-cloth bags containing the feathers into lukewarm water containing one tablespoon of borax to each gallon of water. Souse them up and down in the water until the feathers seem free from all dirt. Do not rub them, as it breaks the feathers. Rinse and hang to dry in the sun. A windy day is best for washing pillows, as it aids greatly to liven them. When they are dry, transfer them back to the ticking, using the same method described for getting them into the cheese-cloth bag and being sure to close the ticking before separating the two bags.

ASK THE DELINEATOR

We are glad to offer our readers the following services; and we hope they will have no hesitation in consulting our department experts on any personal or household problem. Be sure (1) to address your inquiry to THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.; (2) to give us your return address; (3) to enclose the cost of the pamphlet or other literature (in each case a minimum amount fixed to cover cost of printing and postage)

Babies and Children—In its Happy Child Department, THE DELINEATOR offers mothers the medical advice of nationally known baby and child specialists.

The following pamphlets, which are reprints of articles that have appeared in THE DELINEATOR, may be had for ten cents each: "The Expectant Mother and the New Baby," by Dr. Ralph Lobenstine; "The General Care of the Baby," "Maternal Nursing," "Artificial Feeding" and "Diet Problems of Childhood" (four separate booklets), by Dr. L. Emmett Holt; "Early Childhood," by Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw; "The Mental Health of the Child," by Dr. Thomas W. Salmon; "The School Child," by Dr. William Palmer Lucas; "The Child's Teeth," by Dr. Harvey J. Burkhart; "Three Dread Diseases of Childhood: Diphtheria (by Dr. William H. Park), Tuberculosis (by Dr. L. Emmett Holt) and Diabetes (by Dr. Henry Rawle Geyelin)," and "Play, Eyes and Movies," by Dr. Ward A. Holden and Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw. There is also a treatise on "Correct Posture," by Dr. Alan De Forest Smith, to be had for ten cents; and a cloth-bound "Baby's Record Book," by Dr. Bird T. Baldwin, which costs one dollar.

Housekeeping—The Home-Economics Department has more helpful leaflets than can be listed here. Write for a list of subjects. Ask any question that troubles you in your household management. Always send a self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

Building and Decoration—If you want to build, write for pictures of all Donn Barber's model houses, costing you only two cents for return postage. Then for one dollar you may order a print of floor-plans and elevations of the house you decide upon.

Ask Mrs. Sanders, the editor of this department, about furnishing and decorating (not more than five questions at one time, please). Be sure to give dimensions, exposure and full description of rooms—and a two-cent stamp for reply.

Special bulletins, "Good Floors," "Curtains and Draperies," "Walls, Woodwork and Ceilings," "Furnishing the Home" and "How to Choose, Frame and Hang Your Pictures," may be had for twenty-five cents each.

Beauty and Health—You can improve your appearance with a little time and careful study. The Beauty Editor will answer personal questions and send folders prepared by experts on the care of the skin, hands and hair, on lotions and cosmetics. These folders are free. Tell us which you want. Be sure to enclose postage.

Etiquette—Don't make social blunders. Mrs. John Cabot Kimberley will answer any personal quandary or send you instructive leaflets on the various phases of etiquette. Some of the most popular are: "Courtesies of To-day between Men and Women," "Introductions, Invitations and Replies," "Entertaining," "Travel," "House Weddings," "Etiquette at the Table," "Letter-Writing," "Calls and the Use of Cards." These leaflets cost you nothing but the postage, which should be estimated at two cents for three folders.

Entertainment—Ask us about any dinner, dance, shower or entertainment that you may be planning. We have two new parties, "A Cubist Christmas Tree" and "An Up-to-Date Reception Up to Date," a party for the New Year. We also have some new suggestions for Mah Jong parties. Two cents will cover return postage.

The most important New Year's Resolution you can make

A CREED OF HEALTH FOR EVERY MAN AND WOMAN

I want to be well---By "well" I mean positively, buoyantly well. I am not satisfied merely to be "not sick"---I believe that being completely well is the condition most fundamental to happiness and success---I realize that I cannot get something for nothing. I realize that to achieve buoyant health, I must regulate my life in accordance with certain natural laws---But I am convinced that nothing which I must deny myself is worth a fraction of that which I will gain---Therefore during this coming year I shall as far as possible live the natural life which makes for health.

THIS is the personal platform of those who would make 1925 an outstanding year. It will mean new energy, new optimism, a firmer grip on life for every one who adopts it and practices it. And it is not a difficult program.

Health is natural. Sickness is man-made. In the midst of all our achievements we would do well to remember with shame that we have so largely disregarded the laws of nature as they apply to our own bodies.

We neglect exercise. We try to see how little sleep will suffice us. We deny ourselves fresh air. We eat the wrong things. And worst of all, we unthinkingly load our systems with drug stimulants which contribute nothing of real value, but which slowly and surely rob the body of its reserve strength.

Perhaps the most widespread offender among these artificial stimulants is caffein. It has absolutely no food value. It seems to give new energy, but actually it lashes the tired nerves to action when they really need rest and nourishment.

For the last twenty-six years, the Postum Cereal Company has been preaching right living. This is not a campaign to sell merely a product. It is a campaign to sell health! Postum is not a cure-all. Of course, it is not a substitute for exercise, fresh air, or sleep. It is simply a delicious drink, made of roasted whole wheat and bran, intended to take its place on the tables of those who wish to be wholly well. By drinking Postum, and leaving off caffein, millions of people have eliminated one of the causes of nervousness, headaches, indigestion and sleeplessness. They have taken one big step toward enriching their lives with health.

IF YOU ARE LOOKING FORWARD TO A NEW YEAR, with new opportunities—and, we hope, a new record of physical fitness. As one easy step in the right direction, we want you to try Postum for thirty days. This is only a step—but it is a part of the most important New Year's resolution you can make! Accept the offer of Carrie Blanchard, famous food demonstrator.

Carrie Blanchard's Offer! "I want you to try Postum for thirty days. I want to start you out on your test by giving you a week's supply, and my own directions for making it.

"You will be glad to know, too, that Postum costs much less per cup.

"Will you send me your name and address? Tell me which kind you prefer—Instant Postum or Postum Cereal (the kind you boil). I'll see that you get the first week's supply and my personal directions right away."

Convenience and economy!
Your grocer sells Postum in two forms. Instant Postum, made in the cup by adding boiling water, as easy as any drink in the world to prepare. Postum Cereal (the kind you boil) is also easy to make, but should be boiled twenty minutes. Either form costs less than most other hot drinks.

© 1924, P.C.Co.

POSTUM CEREAL CO., Inc., Battle Creek, Mich. D.D. 1-25

I want to make a thirty-day test of Postum. Please send me, without cost or obligation, the first week's supply of

INSTANT POSTUM . . . . . ☐ Check which
POSTUM CEREAL . . . . . ☐ you prefer

Name.....

Street.....

City.....State.....

In Canada, address CANADIAN POSTUM CEREAL CO., Ltd., 45 Front St., East, Toronto, Ont.

Free—mail coupon now

Prices of Butterick Patterns with the Deltor

Buy patterns at the nearest Butterick agency. But if this is not convenient, they will be sent, post free, from the Main Office of The Butterick Publishing Company, Butterick Building, New York, or the branch offices listed below, at the following prices:

No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.
424	25	5582	45	5643	35	5704	45	5765	45
425	25	5583	45	5644	45	5705	30	5766	35
5521	35	5584	35	5645	50	5706	50	5767	45
5522	45	5585	45	5646	45	5707	35	5768	35
5523	35	5586	45	5647	45	5708	50	5769	45
5524	45	5587	45	5648	50	5709	35	5770	30
5525	35	5588	45	5649	30	5710	45	5771	50
5526	45	5589	45	5650	40	5711	30	5772	30
5527	30	5590	35	5651	45	5712	45	5773	45
5528	45	5591	45	5652	45	5713	35	5774	35
5529	30	5592	35	5653	45	5714	45	5775	45
5530	30	5593	40	5654	45	5715	35	5776	35
5531	45	5594	35	5655	45	5716	45	5777	45
5532	35	5595	45	5656	45	5717	45	5778	40
5533	45	5596	25	5657	30	5718	45	5779	45
5534	25	5597	30	5658	45	5719	45	5780	30
5535	30	5598	30	5659	35	5720	45	5781	45
5536	45	5599	35	5660	45	5721	45	5782	45
5537	35	5600	45	5661	35	5722	35	5783	45
5538	45	5601	25	5662	45	5723	45	5784	45
5539	30	5602	35	5663	35	5724	35	5785	40
5540	50	5603	30	5664	45	5725	40	5786	45
5541	30	5604	45	5665	35	5726	35
5542	45	5605	25	5666	45	5727	40
5543	30	5606	45	5667	35	5728	35
5544	45	5607	35	5668	45	5729	45
5545	35	5608	45	5669	35	5730	30
5546	45	5609	35	5670	45	5731	45
5547	30	5610	45	5671	35	5732	40
5548	50	5611	30	5672	45	5733	45
5549	25	5612	45	5673	35	5734	35
5550	50	5613	45	5674	45	5735	45
5551	35	5614	45	5675	30	5736	35
5552	40	5615	35	5676	45	5737	45
5553	35	5616	50	5677	35	5738	35
5554	45	5617	30	5678	45	5739	45
5556	45	5618	45	5679	35	5740	35
5557	25	5619	30	5680	50	5741	50
5558	45	5620	45	5681	35	5742	35
5559	45	5621	45	5682	45	5743	45
5560	45	5622	45	5683	25	5744	25
5561	25	5623	30	5684	45	5745	45
5562	40	5624	45	5685	35	5746	30
5563	30	5625	45	5686	45	5747	45
5564	45	5626	45	5687	30	5748	30
5565	30	5627	30	5688	45	5749	45
5566	45	5628	45	5689	35	5750	35
5567	35	5629	35	5690	45	5751	35
5568	50	5630	45	5691	30	5752	35
5569	45	5631	35	5692	45	5753	35
5570	45	5632	45	5693	35	5754	35
5571	35	5633	30	5694	35	5755	50
5572	45	5634	45	5695	30	5756	30
5573	35	5635	40	5696	45	5757	50
5574	45	5636	50	5697	30	5758	35
5575	35	5637	35	5698	45	5759	45
5576	50	5638	35	5699	35	5760	30
5577	45	5639	35	5700	45	5761	45
5578	45	5640	45	5701	30	5762	35
5580	35	5641	45	5702	45	5763	45
5581	35	5642	45	5703	30	5764	35

TRANSFER DESIGNS

No.	Cts.
10281	30
10282	30
10283	30
10284	50
10285	30
10286	40
10287	40
10288	30
10289	30
10290	40
10291	40
10292	30
10293	30
10294	40
10295	30
10296	40
10297	30
10298	30
10299	30
10300	30
10301	40
10302	40
10303	30
10304	30
10305	40
10306	50
10307	30
10308	30
10309	30
10310	30
10311	40
10312	30

We guarantee every Butterick Pattern to be correct in every detail

Every new Butterick Pattern contains a Deltor and the price of the Pattern includes the Deltor

CHICAGO, ILL., 2231-2249 South Park Avenue
ST. LOUIS, MO., 1201-3-5 Washington Avenue
BOSTON, MASS., 105 Chauncy Street
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., 350 Mission Street
ATLANTA, GA., 79-89 Marietta Street
TORONTO, CAN., 468 Wellington Street, West
WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, 319 Elgin Avenue

Mother Nature — the Great Conditioner

IF YOU will only let Her do so, Mother Nature will correct bodily ills. An invisible power for health, she is ever at your side, wise beyond all discoveries of Science. And Her methods are simple, harmless—SURE.

Mother Nature is embodied in NR Tablets, so appropriately named "Nature's Remedy." NR Tablets are all-vegetable. They constitute Nature's own method of correction.

Physicians agree that human beings would not fall heir to indigestion, constipation, sour stomach, biliousness, headaches, and the attendant ills, if they could only assimilate the natural correctives in food. Nature's Remedy does just this. It puts a sparkle in the eye, creates a genuine zest for the job.

NR JUNIORS—Little NRs

ONE-THIRD of regular dose. Made of same ingredients, then candy coated. For children and adults. Have you tried them? Send us a 2-cent stamp for postage on liberal sample in the attractive blue and yellow box.

All Druggists Sell the Dainty 25 CENTS BOX.

A. H. LEWIS MEDICINE CO., Department 2-B, St. Louis, Mo.

GOOD HOMES—THE RIGHT OF ALL CITIZENS

Continued from page 15

stories than the development of the concerted effort to raise the standard of the nation's homes known as Better Homes in America. It is a story which proves the swift power of a great idea, the potency of home love, the general hunger for home betterment, the first place that home takes with every one from the leaders of our nation to its humblest citizens.

The great idea of the movement came to Mrs. William Brown Meloney, editor of THE DELINEATOR. One sentence, spoken by the late President Harding in a speech at Marion, Ohio, in 1921, proved a spark which fired her mind with the plan for home betterment which has since swept through the United States. She immediately asked the President's endorsement of an organization the objective of which was to be better homes all through the country. This was enthusiastically given. The Better Homes in America movement was formally initiated the following year by Mrs. Meloney and an advisory council of which Calvin Coolidge was honorary head and Herbert Hoover chairman. The tremendous public response to the first national campaign for better homes by means of home demonstrations in October, 1922, proved that the people of the country were ready for just such a movement. During the following year the organization spread with a rapidity that would have been impossible if it had put forth a less universal appeal. Nearly a thousand communities held the second Better Homes demonstrations in June, 1923.

By this time the Better Homes in America movement had definitely taken its place as a national educational force of the first importance. It therefore seemed best to Mrs. Meloney and the advisory council that it should be reorganized on a broader scale. Accordingly, early in 1924, Better Homes in America was incorporated as a national educational organization on a permanent basis, with Herbert Hoover as president, Dr. James Ford as executive director, and President Coolidge as chairman of an advisory council made up of Government officials and representatives of the most important national organizations of women's clubs, welfare and health organizations, and farm and home bureaus of the United States.

SO MUCH for history. Now for history's offspring, the 1924 campaign for better homes. It is doubtful whether any previous community movement in the United States ever so stirred the imaginations and the hearts of the citizens—and not only their imaginations and their hearts, but their energies and their ambitions as well—as did this 1924 campaign for better homes.

"An infinite improvement and an infinite promise!" Donn Barber characterizes the 1924 campaign for better homes, and Mr. Hoover outlines some of its achievements in detail in the following statement to THE DELINEATOR:

"The Better Homes movement, so finely fostered with such vision by Mrs. William Brown Meloney in its first years, has now finished the first campaign since its reorganization on a broader foundation.

"There are four outstanding achievements of this year's campaign. It reached several hundred new communities, more than a thousand cities, towns and villages having participated. It included much more of the rural population than has been reached in preceding years. The quality of the demonstrations has continued to develop. In general, attention has been concentrated upon the problem of providing convenient and beautiful homes for families of restricted incomes. Good homes should be organized not merely as the privilege of the well-to-do, but also as the right of all citizens. They can be made accessible to all, not by legal enactment, but by intelligent concerted activity of local citizens. The Better Homes campaign has given impetus and direction to the activity of tens of thousands of community leaders to solve this urgent problem in their own city, town or village. These citizens have already made a significant contribution which gives promise of profound influence upon the standards of American home life."

The best story of the 1924 campaign is the one told by the demonstration homes themselves, for homes are the hieroglyphics in which nations write their deepest and most intimate history. To that history the 1924 campaign of Better Homes in America contributed an important chapter, a chapter full of vivid and compelling pages.

Naturally, the first place of all in this inspiring record belongs to Kalamazoo, Michigan, winner of the first prize in the 1924 campaign of Better Homes in America.

"We will build a home for average Americans," the Better Homes Committee of Kalamazoo decided. "A home for a family with very little money to spend and all their own work to do. A little home."

"But the biggest little home in Kalamazoo!" declared the chairman, Caroline Bartlett Crane.

So, with the cooperation of representative citizens and coming citizens, all the way from the mayor to the first-graders—and all the other students—in the schools, "the biggest little home in Kalamazoo"—a five-room cottage costing $7,128.21—was planned after a rough sketch drawn by Mrs. Crane, financed by the creditors who advanced labor and materials on the deferred payment plan, built, furnished, equipped, and thrown open to the public during Better Homes Week. It was the most livable home of all the hundreds demonstrated in the 1924 campaign for a family of limited income in which the mother does all the work. It did not waste an inch of space anywhere, from the basement, with its laundry-tubs and water-softener and instantaneous heater, to its trunk and linen rooms under the attic eaves. It is to be described in detail in a later article.

THIS year, as before, Atlanta, Georgia achieved notable results in its effort for home-betterment, winning second prize in the national contest with its demonstration of three bungalows ranging in value from thirteen thousand five hundred dollars to three thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars and planned for families of proportionately varying incomes. The third one was a negro home built by a colored development company (within a block of the new high school for colored students) and furnished almost entirely from negro stores.

All three of the bungalows in Atlanta were ready to be lived in by imaginary families of five members, complete to the very vegetables in the garden, the food in the larder, the wardrobes in the closets, and the layette in the nursery, made by girls in the local schools.

"Greenville, South Carolina, has the best secret in the nation!" its citizens are accustomed to boast.

The mystery they mean is their Better Home, the location of which was kept a sealed book again this year right up to the opening day of Better Homes Week. The boast is justifiable, for the secret, when revealed at last, was so good that their Better Homes demonstration, held under the auspices of the Woman's Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce, with Mrs. H. McBurney as chairman, won third prize in the 1924 campaign.

THE almost uniform excellence of several of the home demonstrations in the 1924 campaign exacted considerable deliberation from the busy and distinguished members of the Advisory Council of Better Homes in America who acted as judges. At length the problem of the fourth prize was solved by awarding it to four communities—New Rochelle, New York; West Palm Beach, Florida; Fairmont, West Virginia, and Lockport, New York.

New Rochelle, the first mentioned of the fourth-prize winners, entered the campaign on a really heroic scale. Under the chairmanship of Mrs. Charles Gregory, it not only contributed four "better homes" for families of varying income, with careful worked-out budgets for each, but also an architectural exhibit in the public library with a specialist on hand to help solve problems of home construction, a home-health exhibit, conducted in a store in the down-town section, and a home-ownership campaign. The House Practical, a six-room eight-thousand-dollar home designed to meet the needs of preferably a newly married couwith an annual income of about two thousand four hundred dollars, was visited by scores of brides in the present and future tense.

Concluded on page 53

The second listed of the fourth-prize winners, West Palm Beach, Florida, was a young America project, first and last. Two Better Homes—both entirely deserving the adjective—were demonstrated, the first an unusually attractive stucco house, built for eight thousand five hundred dollars, to be sold at a profit in order to help finance local directors for the Girl Scouts, and the other a livable three-room negro cottage, the house borrowed from the railroad company for the week and the furniture loaned by the County Industrial School.

Fairmont, West Virginia, another fourth-prize winner under the leadership of Mrs. A. J. Beck, asks THE DELINEATOR to announce to the nation that already seven highly important results of their campaign have proved to every citizen that a Better Homes demonstration is distinctly worth while:

The sum of one million five hundred thousand dollars has been raised for a building and loan association; a new building code has been compiled by the chamber of commerce and accepted by the city commissioners in cooperation with the Better Homes Committee and funds provided; a city-planning commission has been established and funds provided; better fire protection in future has been agreed upon; a new city incinerator to further safeguard the health of Fairmont's homes has been decided upon, and the city has determined to enhance the value and beauty of its homes by improving the appearance of its highways and its approaches.

All these improvements, Fairmont says, grew out of the exhibition of two demonstration homes, one a modest but well-built house in the better part of town, the other a cottage in the miners' section, a plain and ugly three-room house, desperately in need of repair, as poor a home as can well be imagined. The expenditure of fifteen dollars for paint, paper, window-lights, cretonne, porch and window boxes, and the cooperative hard work of all Fairmont accomplished the complete regeneration of this little home, which, when thrown open to the public, represented as startling a transformation in a home as was to be seen anywhere in the nation.

Lockport, New York, last of the fourth-prize winners, held so successful a demonstration, with Miss Rosamond Wendall as chairman, that the realtors of the city have already announced that they are willing to build a Better Home next year in the working-men's section. This year's demonstration was a six-room house, valued at six thousand dollars and admirably furnished on a one-thousand-two-hundred-dollar budget. A carefully worked-out budget of living expenses proved as helpful as the house itself.

SO MUCH for the prize-winners. We come now to the Better Homes which received honorable mention in the 1924 campaign, any one of them worth a story all to itself for its splendid services to its community. Unfortunately it is impossible to do more than mention the outstanding quality of each.

Proof of what home betterment can do was taught by comparison in the Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, campaign, under the chairmanship of Herbert E. Atkins. Two houses stood side by side, one ugly, inconvenient, entirely unimproved, the other made over into a Better Home. And no citizen of Wilkesbarre, however unobservant, could miss the point of those two houses, side by side, but with all the distance of the poles between them in comfort and beauty.

The demonstration included an intensive campaign to induce the young people of the community to join a building and loan association, in order to be able to build a home when they should desire one.

Economy, comfort, beauty were the outstanding features of the Cleburne, Texas, Better Home demonstration, where a pretty bungalow, attractively furnished, complete even to the electric washing-machine and vacuum cleaner, water-heater, phonograph, porch furniture, and with the family car in the garage, cost only six thousand dollars. The whole country owes its thanks to Mrs. F. R. Pettengell, the chairman, and her committee for proving that a large amount of money is not an essential for a satisfying home.

Efficiency in home-making was the chief characteristic of two Better Homes demonstrations many miles apart—in Newport News, Virginia, and in Albert Lea, Minnesota. Another point shared by these two demonstrations was the notable cooperation of the community in each instance.

Newport News, with Mrs. Fenno Heath as chairman, showed two remodeled houses, each perfectly furnished and equipped with a garden for the family with a moderate income. Albert Lea, under the chairmanship of Mrs. John P. Meighen, exhibited a small fire-proof house of excellent construction, tastefully furnished and complete even to a group of incubator chickens and their foster mother in the back yard.

Thoroughness was the key-note of the Better Home demonstration in Sacramento, California. The city entered the 1924 demonstration whole-heartedly with four Better Homes, exhibited under the auspices of the Woman's Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce, with Miss Geneva Watson as chairman. Two of the houses were built by furniture dealers and two by contractors. Their cost was respectively six thousand dollars, six thousand five hundred dollars, nine thousand dollars and nine thousand five hundred dollars.

Cooperation in city and rural sections alike was emphasized in the Better Homes demonstration in Spartanburg, South Carolina, where Mrs. R. B. Beal served as chairman. A county day for the rural population and a model-kitchen contest for the entire county made the demonstration of especial value to farm families.

Economy and quality were the outstanding characteristics of the Logansport, Indiana, Better Home, one of the fifty in the 1924 campaign built for less than five thousand dollars. This delightfully homey four-room bungalow was built under the chairmanship of Mrs. D. C. Arthur.

FROM every part of the country tributes to the 1924 campaign have poured into the headquarters of Better Homes in America.

One of the finest tributes of all came from a humble source. An Italian woman, whose husband had made a considerable amount of money in the United States, but who had never been able to learn how to spend it with any satisfaction to the family, brought her three children—a boy of twelve, and two girls of ten and eight, all scrubbed until they shone, to the Better Home in a certain community. In the living-room she delightedly pointed out the fireplace.

"That's the fire, to sit around and talk all together, not stand around the sidewalks," she earnestly told her children. "And that fine piano's to make music for your minds!"

In the kitchen she waved her hands and cried: "All while no grease! No smells! We must learn to live like that!" And in the bedrooms she observed: "In rooms like this, clean minds. And this for clean bodies," she added, as the quartette moved on to the bathroom.

As she turned to go from the Better Home, she said, with tears in her eyes, to her children:

"Here's the place where they learn you how to live! This is what America means!"

WHY I AM NOT A GOOD MOTHER

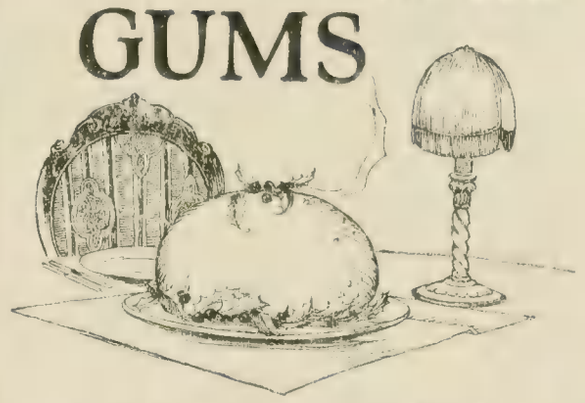
Continued from page 9

She had hours to herself and thoughts to herself and activities to herself. There was a part of her life in which she assumed the supreme command, and she grew into a dignity worthy of that honor. Her personality never became twisted and cramped by secretiveness through fear that her privacy would be spied upon. Her privacy had been granted her; she did not have to steal it. She assumed other rightful and decent privileges for herself with the same confidence that she assumed her liberty in her own room. She knew that her diaries and her letters and her first literary efforts, for which she felt a very becoming shame, would not be read without her permission. She did not hide things. The girl who does not hide things is either brazen or free—and there is a whole world of difference between the two.

I DO not mean to imply that two hours alone every day will straighten out the kinks in a fractious child. They didn't in mine. They helped, but they didn't perform the whole work. Other measures had to be resorted to upon occasion. Times came when punishment had to be dealt out. But I think I can honestly say that it was always decently and fairly administered. No advantage was ever taken of her; no play upon her emotions was used to bring her into ignorant and hopeless obedience. This may sound cryptic, but it refers to that terrible and well-meaning crime which some mothers perpetrate when, abandoning spanking and its equivalents as barbaric and obsolete, they dominate a sensitive and loving child by convincing him that his naughtiness hurts them more than it does him. There is no limit to the malevolent brood that may fly out when that Pandora's box of power is opened.

To begin with, the statement is a lie. A child's mistakes are either too negligible to hurt anybody very much or they react upon him personally, exactly as effect upon cause throughout the rest of creation. To point out and make it stick with Willy that since he smashed Mrs. Jones's window with a rock the money to buy the ball he wanted must be spent for repairs sounds a note which reverberates through his small being with the detonation of a cosmic truth. But for his mother to lose sight of the real consequence of his act and substitute a false one by presenting to him the spectacle of herself bowed under the tragedy of his depravity is either to stimulate his self-preservative secretions until they incase him in a shell of heartlessness or to bind him with the first shackles of a lifelong servitude.

Vicarious atonement should be left to Deity. God is the only mind vast enough and unselfish enough to encompass the horrors that wait upon it and to nullify them. No mother has the right to assume even the appearance of the punishment which justly belongs to her child. It is dangerous, both to the child and to the parent. It gives the mother the first taste of a power so absolute in the case of a tender child that her craving for it is apt to grow from the very submission it feeds upon. It unbalances the universe for the child and makes him fear, not the immutable laws of right and wrong, but the tears of her to whom he is bound by the most sensitive cord in the whole social organization. He casts himself perpetually before the altar of her changing moods and worships.



I NEVER recovered from my mother's first emotional intoxication. From then on my father meant less and less in the domestic scheme, and her grudge against him grew into a sweeping sex antagonism. From then on I meant more and more to her. My importance to her assumed proportions too great for any child. Her life had been spoiled; my father himself had said it, and she constantly piled up evidence in proof of his statement. Her only hope for happiness now lay in expressing herself through me. I became the key-note of her life, and if I "flatted" or "sharped," the whole domestic symphony crashed and shrieked in frightful dissonance.

It was not only my own life that I led—it was hers as well. I had to keep her happy. I had to think and plan and contrive against the hysterics which speedily became a habit. Right and wrong had no characteristics of their own to me. Right came to mean something which pleased my mother. Wrong assumed the hydra-headed shape of the innumerable things over which she brooded or wept. There was never any dispassionate talk of principle between us, any discussion of facts to set me back hard upon my own obligation to myself. It was always obligation to her, and that obligation was there, plain to see. She baked and washed and sewed and slaved for me. She had eliminated everything else in life but me. She could not give up her labor nor her concentration on me if she wanted to, because there was nothing to take its place if she did. She had bought me with a price which only my immolat on on her altar could pay.

But nature would not let a healthy child

Concluded on page 54

SOFT FOODS cause tender GUMS tender gums bring trouble to teeth

ROUGH, COARSE FOOD once gave to the gums a healthy stimulation, but modern food, soft and creamy, gives little or no exercise, and gums today are growing soft and flabby.

They are unable to cushion and nourish the teeth correctly, and in consequence teeth today are less healthy—more subject to decay, to pyorrhea and to other infections.

Does your toothbrush "show pink"?

Ask any dentist. He will tell you how tooth troubles due to soft gums are on the increase. Probably he will also tell you that Ipana is the great enemy of the "pink tooth-brush" and how he prescribes its use to keep the gums healthy and firm.

In stubborn cases of soft and spongy gums, he may also advise a gum massage with Ipana after the ordinary cleaning with Ipana and the brush. For Ipana Tooth Paste, because of the presence of ziratol, has a decided tendency to strengthen soft gums and to keep them firm and healthy.

Send for a Trial Tube

Ipana not only takes care of your gums, but cleans the teeth perfectly. And its taste, as you will find if you send for a trial tube, is unforgetably good.

IPANA TOOTH PASTE

—made by the makers of Sal Hepatica

A trial tube, enough to last for ten days, will be sent gladly if you will forward coupon below.

Bristol-Myers Co.

Dept. B-1
42 Rector St.
New York
N. Y.

Kindly send me a trial tube of IPANA TOOTH PASTE without obligation on my part.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

Not Just Playing—Growing

THEY think it's play when they go romping out in the snow—sliding down hill and trudging up again. But it's really the way that Nature makes them work to grow. Sturdy little bodies are built by fresh air, exercise, rest and nourishing food.

See that your children have plenty of strength-giving, energy-making foods in their diet.

Best Foods

Nucoa

The Wholesome Spread for Bread

furnishes more than twice the quantity of strength and energy which the same amount of sugar or starchy foods produce.

You know how nourishing cocoanuts are. Many people in southern countries live almost entirely upon them. It is principally from rich, ripe cocoanuts that Nucoa is made. The fat is pressed from the delicate, snow-white meat and blended with pasteurized milk. Nucoa, a table delicacy of exquisite flavor and rich nutriment, contains the Vitamins essential to growth and health.

Use Nucoa on your table and lavishly in your cooking. You can afford to—it costs so much less.

Finest Table Quality about half the price-

THE BEST FOODS, Inc.
New York Chicago San Francisco

WHY I AM NOT A GOOD MOTHER

Concluded from page 53

sacrifice herself completely. My desires flickered away from my mother, and to cover that fact and the means I took to gratify my desires I told lies by twos and threes and fours. As I said before, the real issue of lying had been lost during that first emotional frenzy. I grew so clever at deceit that my mother really thought she was filling my life as I filled hers.

At first such crums of time and attention as were left over from me my mother let fall to my father. Gradually these diminished. A kind of chivalry in me silently took his part. Since championing him would have displeased my mother, it must be wrong, and the easy, open, give-and-take love a free child would have accorded him became in me a suppressed and desperate passion. When my mother did not know it, I crept up to the lonely room which had become his haven from household storms and dusted the books that he had gathered there for comfort. I do not know why I was so desolated by that lonely room. Such propaganda as my mother threw out when she could force herself to even approach the subject of human relationship was to the effect that lonely childless rooms were the one clean weapon against a hideous institution. Now I know that nature cried in me for her perversion and misunderstanding. At any rate, there I would go and weep on my father's pillow, and one day my mother found me.

When the ensuing whirlwind had subsided, she spoke in the still small voice of one who is forced to tell something they had hoped never to tell. She repeated the accusations my father had made against himself long before. He was a failure. She said it as though to fail was a crime. Feeling the wind in her emotional sails again, she went further. Everything I had, she said, came from her and not from him, since the little money for raw materials was as nothing compared to the labor that turned out the finished product. She hinted at some delicate process which had brought me forth, immaculate and all hers. I think to this day she believed that. I owed my father no loyalty, and it was disloyalty to her to give it to him. Anyway, he no longer loved her. After her life had been sacrificed to his insufficiency, he was unappreciative. Didn't he withdraw more and more from the living-room of evenings? Did he ever ask her to go out to a theater or a concert or a lecture any more? Not that she would go—she despised the dull, plodding things that he went to—but he owed it to her to ask her to places at least. Last Christmas he had given her a pair of shoes for a present, the sort of gift one would give a servant! Men were like that.

MEN! There had never been any discussion of sex between us, but now we skirted the subject, widely and insidiously. Love had long been a subject for jeers and bitter tirades, and therefore it must be wrong, wrong with an ugliness exceeding any other wrong, since we could discuss quite calmly such deeds as murder and arson. Now, up there in my father's room, my mother and I came as near to a talk about marriage and the relationship between man and woman as we ever came in our lives. And I writhed in an agony of shame both for the things she said and the things she left unsaid.

In the end she broke down and had to go to bed. My father and I had dinner alone that night. We cooked it together, tiptoeing in and out of the kitchen. He made a terrible milky pudding which seemed at the time the most heavenly food I had ever tasted. I made him some toast, because he was fond of toast. Sitting there beside him, the shame under which I had burned all day was suddenly gone. The awful things my mother had tried to explain lost their substance. There seemed to be nothing to explain. Everything was all right. I reached out along the table and my father took my hand. A little spring of peace welled up in the hectic area of my life.

But it didn't bubble long. Finding me in my father's room was a goad to my mother. She began to quarrel openly with him, and he, having some spirit, fought back. Times too numerous to mention I listened to disputes and waited for their inevitable consequence, hysterics on the part of my mother, withdrawal to his room on the part of my father. Loving them both, suffering for them both, I lived in the spiritual No Man's Land between them and bled from the munitions launched by both sides. I can remember now the suspended heart-beat with which, in stolen moments of play, I would realize that my father was home and a quarrel in progress and I not between the combatants to absorb the shock. I can see myself sitting down to meals and frantically searching my immature mind for safe topics of conversation, talking, laughing, talking against the explosive silence.

THROUGH all the years that I was growing up my mother almost literally worked her fingers to the bone for me. She made my clothes, and they were lovely ones. She laundered, first my aprons, later my shirt-waists and white duck skirts, as beautifully as the finest French laundress could have done them. When I at last needed an evening frock for a high-school dance, she gave up her one silk dress to go under the chiffon. In those days society still endured recitations with Delsarte accompaniments. By practising rigid household economy, she eked out enough for me to have lessons in the unpleasant art. She paid for a piano on the instalment plan and gave dinners to a little music-teacher in return for my instruction. She taught me to run a house as thriftily as she ran one. She decided that I must see something beyond the town where I was raised, and forced my father to find a way to finance a trip to a large city for us. When other girls gave parties and had their names in the paper, she grew jealous for me and baked super cakes and ground out celestial ice-cream for whom I would invite.

My recitations were liked by older people, who waxed sentimental because I delivered them with my eyes upon my mother. It was their ideal of the utmost in filial piety. My piano-playing was condemned by all, and justly so. I didn't mind that. It let me off from playing for people. But black tragedy stalked onto the scene of my parties. Determined still to be eye to eye and heart to heart with me, my mother committed the ultimate indiscretion in the judgment of the youth which came to eat her cake and consume her ice-cream. She flung herself wholeheartedly into the fun and had a better time than anybody at the gatherings. Girls snickered at this and boys became mad. Such decency as I had rose up to guardian her. I told her I didn't like "kids," that she was all I wanted. There was never any attempt at an honest analysis of the situation. We simply stopped giving parties.

But we did try to go out a little. In that small town with its informality and unpretentious society my mother adopted the platform that no young man need think for a minute he could take her daughter out unchaperoned. She would go along. I feel sure now that her ultimatum was the spontaneous combustion of her long-suppressed desire for pleasure, and that if she had cooperated and compromised more with my father in the matter of amusements the edict would never have been delivered. But she insisted, and after a few trials of the mother-and-daughter combination eligible escorts asked other girls to accompany them, and I was left at home.

During the two years that followed my last invitation from a young man, I went to two Masons' balls and a chamber-of-commerce reception with my father. The dear soul introduced me to men enough to fill my program. It was not his fault that they were as old as he and that I cried in my bed for hours after we came home.

At the end of these two years the little business into which my father had put as much courage and self-respect as survived the conflict at home failed. Middle-aged, he had to start over again. Even my mother's miracles with food and needle failed to make up the discrepancy in income.

I went to work. Within a year I was engaged. The man I loved didn't come to the house. He wanted to. But my mother had taught me that love was a hateful thing and I was ashamed. Every night I took from my purse the letter from him that had com to me at the office. My mother loved me thoroughly that she went through my b longings. There was no place in the hou that I could hide a thing and keep it for m eyes alone. My love-letters were read on and destroyed. I have no bundle of the now, tied with ribbon and laid away.

With a raise in salary, which I kept secre I bought material and lace. I made my wed ding-dress at the home of a girl I had kno in school who was married and had a tin flat down-town. She hadn't been able t afford a sewing-machine, so that the dre used up many noon hours of hand-stitchi before it was completed. With a single set new things to go under it, it constituted m trousseau. The dowry I brought to my hus band was a dozen napkins, bought at a sa and hemmed at the office.

MY FATHER bore the brunt of my elop ment at home. I have been told sinc by those who blame me for deceivin mother who had given her whole life to that her screams could be heard through th entire block. But it was the first time my life, after reaching sensible age, that didn't care whether she screamed or not was too happy.

And so when my daughter came a ye later and I lay still and exhausted with tim to think over the miseries I had borne fro an absolutely devoted mother, on the pain had inflicted and the ruin I had precipitate how could I do otherwise than promise th atom of life at my side that I would not be good mother to her? And I have not been have not baked and washed and sewed a scrubbed except as those activities ha come in the reasonable process of making a keeping a home. My daughter has ne been able to compete with the best-dres girls at school, as I was. She has had goo serviceable and pretty clothing, augment these later years by the fripperies she h made for herself. She has been loved as w as any child was ever loved, and sacrifi have been made to give her such advanta as she has had. But they have never be sacrifices that reduced me to the status of drudge or that warped my mind into bitt self-pitying distortions. She has gone u chaperoned to dances and has driven th family bus without questioning, but s cares for neither gin parties nor petting the park. Three times she has thought he self in love and confessed as much to m But each time she has recovered from the a tachment which provoked the confiden partly, I believe, because in talking it o she discovered it was not the real thing.

She knows the facts of sex as nearly as an body can know those strange and pote blendings of material and spiritual elemen She was a very small girl when she came me with the question. It had to do with sudden cry from the Smiths' washerwom and a hurried call for the ambulance a the things whispered by the crowding ch dren on the sidewalk. I did not like the of answering her question truthfully. H there been an alternative truth to give her should have preferred that. But there w no alternative truth. She took what I s quietly and solemnly and turned it over her modesty to care for. We have talked pretty nearly everything under the sun sin then. The glimpse that I got into the clea liness of her soul cleansed mine of fear.

AND now my girl has finished school a the years have come in which I know s will soon leave me. She has too much beau and sweetness and capacity and love not want to give them and for them not to sought. I do not think that she will hesita to tell me when her time of going arrives. deprive me of the joy of helping her ma ready. Nothing that I can recall in our re tionship should make her anything b proud of love. She will go when she rea wants to go—and nothing that I could po sibly do now would keep her. If I shou take to hysterics, I feel sure she would h at me with cool, diagnosing young eyes a call her father to come and take me ridi for my nerves. Or, worse than that, she mig summon a psychoanalyst. Long ago I ga her to herself, and now she is too strong be taken into bondage.

And I——

I have been such a bad mother that I ha had time to keep my husband in love wi me, and—better even than that—myself love with my husband. And life is so rich work and interest that even if I wanted repine for my fledgling when she flies th would be scant time for it.

HAPPY NEW YEAR

Continued from page 8

A week of this, and there came the second snow. For hours the roads were impassable. It was noon before any one arrived to feed the stock; then it was Luther and his hired man, who had broken a road down the valley and had brought a basket of cold food. The next day his wife drove over in the cutter and delivered her decision:

"I am going to bundle you two up this afternoon," she said, "and take you up to our house."

"Oh no, no!" Esther cried.

"Yes," said big Minnie firmly. "I am going to do this thing right."

Michael looked up at her, and something of the Gaelic and Scottish blood of his mother surged into the stolid face. He spoke as with the terrible authority of premonition, but it may have been rather his intuition of the woman's thought.

"Yes, and we'll never get back. Yes, and we'll never get back." he almost chanted.

"Not till these roads break up," said Mrs. Burns grimly. "Where's a hand satchel? I'll pack it up for you."

In an hour they were driving back with her over the thick white highway. It was big Minnie who had packed their bags, secured the windows, beaten down the kitchen fire and helped them out to the sleigh. On the toilsome way from chair to gate Michael had gone, leaning heavily and chanting heavily:

"Yes, and we'll never get back——"

In the sleigh, the two bowed figures sat, with big Minnie on the edge of the seat, urging forward the laboring horse. The sky was now vivid blue above the whiteness, the crystals sparkled in yellow light, the smoke curled gray against the distance—but the old eyes saw none of these. At the top of the last hill Michael twisted in his seat and looked back at the low house from whose chimney no smoke rose. His chant became a wail of mourning, loud and terrible, like the keening of the Gael:

"Yes, and we'll nev-er get back!"

Mrs. Luther Burns's silence was more sinister than her words. As if she might have been thinking: "Well, and what if you shouldn't?" And the two figures bowed beside her, as if they were devastated by her thought.

She put them in a low clean room, bare and warm with its Philadelphia heater. They sat down in the two padded rocking-chairs, on the braided rug.

"Now," said Michael, "we can wait to die."

"Don't let's wait—long," said Esther.

Big Minnie's voice came charging up the stairs and down the passage, as if it had on boots.

"Telegram telephoned up," she shouted. "Minnie and Dean'll be here to-night!"

THE North Express was hours late, and all the way from the station the drifts lay deep. But to Minnie and Dean, warm in the robes while the little car gallantly attacked the highway, the night might have been that one in Autumn when they had first driven away together.

"It seems as if we'd been together forever," he said. "For many Winters like this and for just as many Summers."

"So long that you're tired of me?"

"So long that I couldn't live a day without you."

"Darling, don't brag so. I couldn't live without you, either."

They were quiet for a time, then she said: "There's the little Chapin house all dark. The Chapins, who paid for our wedding."

"Bless them," he said. "Minnie, I thought I was happy when we drove down this road the last time."

"And you weren't?"

"I didn't know," he said reverently, "anything about being happy."

The door of the Burnses' house came open and golden gaslight flared across the blackness.

"Darling!" Dean cried. "Look at it!"

They stood together, looking at the yellow flood sweeping down the dark and gilding the white boughs. That strange world melted and flowed in brightness and in depths.

He said: "If I could paint that——"

"What you standing out there in the cold for, freezing us to death keeping the door open?" cried Mrs. Burns on the threshold. "Come into this house."

Her very welcomes were warlike, even though there were tears in her eyes. This welcome was also businesslike. "Now," she said, while her husband was still offering his subdued greeting, "there's two folks upstairs that wouldn't go to bed until you come. You'd best march right up and see them. Who? The Chapins. We brought 'em up here, bag and baggage, to end their days——"

"Mother! They'll hear you!"

"Well, but they know it," said big Minnie, and led the way.

In that bare room sat Michael and Esther, looking like figures in a painting by Millet: Worn, tired folk, two of the millions like them, whom nobody wanted, whose scant possessions others waited for, while a dole of kindness passed for relationship. Minnie was startled at Esther's whisper: "Let me kiss you—let me kiss you!" and divined that the kisses of life were for her chiefly remembered kisses.

Mrs. Burns poured it all out, the cold, the ailment, the accident, the snow, and, "we're going to keep them here right along," she ended complacently.

"But do you want to stay?" her daughter demanded of them.

"It's the best way," said Esther; "I can see that."

"It's the best way," said Michael, and muttered something else; but no one heard.

MRS. BURNS had not intended to make her proposition that night, but she always felt that there was no time like the present, and she went on:

"And I was thinking: Your going to Europe to study art is all nonsense, Dean. Dragging Minnie across the ocean. Why don't you two settle right down here in the Chapin house this Winter and be comfortable?"

"Mother!" cried Minnie.

But to her utter amazement, she heard Dean saying: "Yes, why don't we?"

She stared at him.

"Those snow effects," he said, "such as we had to-night—there's nothing like those in Paris. Why not settle down and let me paint here this Winter? I'd like the Chapin house——"

"Be nice to think of somebody in it," said Esther. "I've wondered if it didn't miss us——"

In their room Minnie turned to her husband uncertainly: "Darling," she said, "what made you say that? Of course I understand—but your future is more important than the Chapins——"

She had never seen his healthy normal face with so strange a look.

"Minnie," he said, "it was a queer thing and a wonderful thing: but in there with them, I got the sense—just for a minute—that you told me about once. I felt as if I were both of them. It was quick, it came and went like a flash, but it was just as if I were sitting there in their chairs, looking at you and me. I know how they feel—I tell you I know from the inside how they feel."

"Just as I knew it that night at their house?"

"Darling! If we know, how can we forget? These four months—what does it matter? We can stay there together till Spring—we can take them home. Why, they're dying from homesickness. Anybody can see that! I tell you, there in that room I felt as they feel, and I can't bear it——"

She put her arms about him. In their kiss there was something infinitely strange and infinitely familiar, some sudden understanding of life and of love and of all mystery that was deeper than in their happiest hours together.

The little delights of gift-giving and gift-receiving were overshadowed in the Burns house that Christmas—and for varying reasons! In Luther and his wife by the joy of having "the children" at home, and in their decision to stay in the Chapin cottage. In Michael and Esther by the aching sense of comparison and finality. In Minnie and Dean by happy plans, of which they said nothing to any one. Archie Burns was the only normal Christmas person in the house.

The morning after Christmas Luther Burns drove them down through the snow to the little house, with a man and a woman to help. And on the way Luther Burns said:

"You know, he fell down on buying that north forty, Eldridge did. So when Summer comes, you'll have plenty of woods to paint in——"

"Father!" cried Minnie. "Father! If I ask you something, will you promise not to tell mother?"

"Yes, I will!" cried Luther Burns, with such fervor that they looked at him in astonishment. "Your mother is a regular captain—sometimes," he ended lamely, and said no more.

BY THE day before New Year's their work was done. Mrs. Burns had inspected it and had offered certain golden-oak additions from her own parlor. These loans they evaded, and everything in the little house remained as it had been. There were fires in all the stoves and on the one open hearth, holly and ground-pine on the walls; the little first floor bedroom was aired and warmed; and lamplight was everywhere. Also there was a pantry stocked with things which little Minnie had prepared.

"I never knew you to act so sensible," said her mother admiringly.

"You're all coming here for dinner New Year's eve," Minnie reminded her.

"Oh, yes, we're all coming," Mrs. Burns assented. "And I can leave some cold things on a tray for the Chapins."

"The Chapins are coming too!"

"I don't think that's necessary," said Mrs. Burns decidedly.

"'Necessary!'" said her husband suddenly. "What do you mean by 'necessary?'"

"That's unnecessary, Luther," said his wife crisply; and Luther said no more.

"The Chapins are coming, too," Dean repeated quite gently, and something in his face abruptly silenced Mrs. Burns, save for an ineffectual comment having to do with "utter nonsense."

The Chapins were moving heavily about their room. The walnut bedstead, the braided rug, the picture of Grant's family had never made them feel really at home there. Nor had Mrs. Burns's sewing-machine and the extension-table leaves which she kept in one corner helped to make them comfortable, though "They don't look really bad," Mrs. Burns had defended them.

"I don't want to go," said Michael.

"No. Nor I. But then I don't want to stay here, either," said Esther.

"I expect we'd ought to be ashamed," said Michael, "but I'm not."

"No, sir!" cried Esther. "I'm not ashamed of hating to eat a meal in my own house as a guest. Michael, last New Year's eve I can remember just as well. I set bread sponge."

"I dredged the flour for you," said Michael. "I remember."

She whispered: "I can't think of anything to comfort us. It'll never be any different——"

"I can think of something," said Michael. "I'm going to get out in the wood-shed and chop 'em up a batch of kindling to-night. I'd like the feeling——"

Minnie's voice called them from the passage. They were ready; and when the two neat slow figures had gone down to the sleigh, Minnie ran back and put their few belongings into their bags and slipped them in the front of the car. Mrs. Luther Burns was engaged in tucking the Chapins into the back seat—tucking them so carefully that Michael rasped out:

"I'm not a baby!"

"Mercy!" said Mrs. Burns. "Well, one would think so."

"That'll do, mother," said Luther, surprisingly, from the middle seat.

From the hill-top they saw the lights shining in all the windows of the gabled house. And Michael said with a groan: "It's it and it ain't it!" So that Mrs. Burns cried: "What on earth do you mean by that?" To which Michael answered nothing.

They went into the kitchen, and there was the odor of potatoes baking in the oven.

"Michael—Michael!" said Esther, and caught back her cry.

"What's the matter?" asked Mrs. Burns in concern. "Did you hurt you?"

Esther did not answer. She had off her coat. She was going about the kitchen touching things. Michael sat down by the fire. "It's it and it ain't it," he muttered.

In the pantry Minnie put her arms about Dean and held him close.

"It isn't the house or the farm that mattered to them," she said. "It's their whole time here together—it's—it's their love and their life, Dean."

Concluded on page 56

Better than fresh and cooked ready to serve

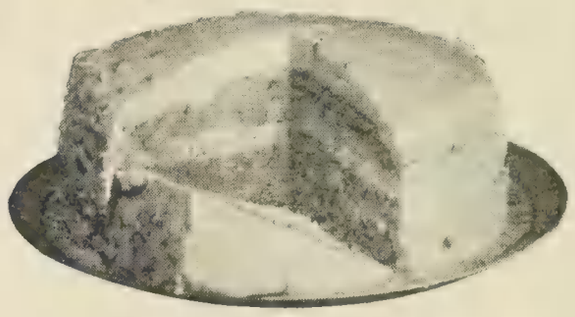
DEL MONTE Canned Spinach will give you a new idea of how delicious this healthful vegetable can be.

Fresh, full-flavored and tender—it's a treat the whole family is sure to enjoy.

And at the same time it's one of the simplest and easiest dishes you can serve. No washing—no long cooking. Simply take the can from your pantry shelf. You will find it free from grit—ready for use on any occasion—at less expense than if you had prepared it at home.

For your health's sake and your own enjoyment, serve spinach often. But serve it at its best. Ask for DEL MONTE—and get the quality you want.

California Packing Corporation
San Francisco, California



Be sure you say

DEL MONTE SPINACH

The secret of many a good cook's reputation

"The best cook I ever knew wrote this recipe in my bride's book."

So wrote the woman who sent us the recipe for the wonderful Pineapple cake shown above.

We want you to try it—as an example of the endless variety of tempting "second-helping" dishes (desserts, salads, ices, sundaes, pies, etc.) that may be made with Hawaiian Pineapple.

Serve both kinds—the Sliced and the Crushed. Use the Crushed in the cake recipe below:

PINEAPPLE LAYER CAKE: Cream ½ cup fat and 1 cup sugar together until light and add 2 well-beaten egg yolks. Mix and sift 2 cups flour, ¼ teaspoon salt, and 4 teaspoons baking powder. Add alternately with ¾ cup sirup drained from Crushed Hawaiian Pineapple. Fold in two stiffly beaten egg whites. Bake in a moderate oven 20 to 25 minutes. Spread with Pineapple icing.

PINEAPPLE ICING—Beat 2 egg whites to a stiff froth. Add 2 cups sifted powdered sugar and ¾ cup well-drained Crushed Hawaiian Pineapple. Beat well and add additional sifted powdered sugar until mixture holds its shape.

HAWAIIAN PINEAPPLE

Sliced Crushed

—For serving right from the can and for quick desserts and salads.

—For sundaes, ices, pies, cake filling, salads & hundreds of made-up dishes.

SEND FOR THIS FREE BOOK!

Dept. 131, Ass'n of Hawaiian Pineapple Canners, 451 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, California

Please send me, free of charge, your new book, "Ninety-nine Tempting Pineapple Treats."

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

HAPPY NEW YEAR

Concluded from page 55

"You bet it is," said Dean. "We wouldn't have known that last Fall. But now we know."

"What you two whispering about in here?" asked Mrs. Burns in the doorway. "Isn't there enough for supper?"

The turkey was still on the table when Minnie began to speak. She had meant to wait until afterward, but her mother gave her an earlier opportunity.

"We'll have to eat and run," Mrs. Burns announced. "I feel as if I had two children to put to bed."

Esther flushed dully, and Michael sat looking down.

Minnie spoke quickly:

"Perhaps you won't have to hurry, mother. Dean and I want Mr. and Mrs. Chapin to stay here to-night."

"Your mother wouldn't like that," said Esther low.

"To-night, and as long as we stay here," Minnie went on. "We—you see, we need you here to help us."

"Nonsense," said Mrs. Burns promptly. "Dean don't want anything to bother him if he's going at his painting."

Minnie looked at her father. And for once in his life, Luther Burns spoke out.

"What's more," he said clearly, "Eldridge has backed out of taking that north forty. So, Michael, if you want your farm back, want to try it for another year, I'm willing"

Michael got to his feet, trembling. "Do you mean that?" he asked. "Do you?"

Luther nodded. "More than willing, in fact," he said.

Esther was still looking at Minnie. "You mean you want us here?" she whispered.

"It's 'Do you want us here' now!" cried Dean. "If you're willing, we'd like to stay for a while, and pay our board, and—and help around until—well, maybe until after the crops are in, if you'll have us."

The eyes of Esther, of Michael, of Minnie, of Dean and of Luther Burns himself now turned automatically to "the captain," to big Minnie, to Mrs. Luther Burns. She was leaning back in her chair, and she brought her large arms to her waist and set her head on one side.

"Well, say," she said. "I don't know but that's a good idea. We've managed to pay for the wedding somehow—even without the north forty. And I must say, it's been a good deal of a chore to have you two folks to wait on."

And though nothing could well have been more ungracious, at her words a breath of warm relief stirred in all the others.

Mr. and Mrs. Luther Burns took their leave early—Luther Burns humming a bit, underbreath, as if something pleasant had happened.

"Happy New Year!" he turned back in the doorway to say.

"Come along," said his wife's voice from the darkness. "No use wishing folks what they've got."

"Oh, yes, there is, Minnie," he told her. "Yes, there is."

When the sound of the car had died away, the four stood in the warm, bright kitchen.

"We can't tell you—" said Esther.

"No use trying," said Michael.

He put his arm round his wife. They stood before their old hearth. The light of the room flowed about them. The whole room seemed suddenly exceedingly bright.

"We're going up-stairs now," Minnie said to them. "Your things are in your old room."

"You lock up and put out the lights," said Dean.

Michael suddenly straightened.

"Maybe I might as well chop up a little kindling for morning," he suggested.

Esther laughed happily. "I d'know," she said, "but I better set some bread."

They moved before their old hearth. The light of the room flowed about them in that exceeding brightness.

UP IN their low room, Minnie and Dean looked at each other breathlessly.

"Dean," she said, "did you——"

He nodded with: "Did you——"

She cried: "I knew you did too! Just now. It was exactly as if we were the two of them—we both felt it—oh, I think we were then, just for a minute."

"As if we were in their places and felt as they do, looked from their eyes at this home. . ."

"Dean, it was wonderful!"

" 'As if mankind were all one substance,' " he quoted solemnly. "Minnie, to feel that even once is better than Paris."

She was falling asleep when she heard him say:

"And I'll paint them for all Paris, by Jove. Two peasant figures, in monotype done in snow and in light——"

"Listen!" she said.

The kitchen clock was striking twelve. The stair door opened. They heard the two voices:

"Happy New Year!"

They answered. And it was as if the four voices were one voice.

ENTER, EMILY

Continued from page 11

not at all remorseful for what she had said to Ellen, and she was not going to pretend she was.

"Come you here and wipe the dishes for me," ordered Ellen. "It'll do you good to have something to take up your mind and then you won't be putting curses on people. If your Aunt Ruth takes you, she'll soon cure you of that."

"Is Aunt Ruth going to take me?"

"I don't know, but she ought to. She's a widow with no chick nor child, and well-to-do."

"I don't think I want Aunt Ruth to take me," said Emily, after a moment's reflection.

"You won't have the choosing, likely. You ought to be thankful to get a home anywhere. Remember you're not of much importance to anybody."

"I am important to myself," cried Emily proudly.

"It'll be some chore to bring you up," muttered Ellen. "Your Aunt Ruth is the one to do it, in my opinion. She'll learn you sense and do you a world of good."

"I don't want to learn sense and be done a world of good to," said Emily, with a quivering lip. "I—I want somebody to love me."

"Well, you've got to behave yourself if you want people to like you. You're not to blame so much—your pa has spoiled you. I told him so often enough, but he just laughed. I hope he ain't sorry for it now. The fact is, Emily Starr, you're queer, and folks don't care for queer children."

"How am I queer?"

"You talk queer—and you act queer—and at times you look queer. And you're too old for your age. That comes of never mixing with other children. I've always kept at your father to send you to school instead of teaching you himself—but he wouldn't listen to me, of course. I don't say but what you are as far along in book-learning as you need to be, but what you want is to learn to be like other children. In one way it would be a good thing if your Uncle Oliver would take you, for he's got a big family. But he's not as well off as the rest, so it ain't likely he will. Your Uncle Wallace might take you—but his wife fancies she's delicate."

"I wish Aunt Laura would take me."

"Laura won't have no say in it. Elizabeth is boss at New Moon. Jimmy Murray runs the farm, but he ain't quite all there."

"What part of him isn't there?" asked Emily curiously.

"Laws, it's something about his mind, child. He's a bit simple—some accident or other when he was a youngster. I don't reckon the New Moon people will want to be bothered with you. They're too set in their ways. Now, you'd better go up-stairs and lie down a while."

"I'm going up-stairs, but I'm not going to lie down," said Emily. "I've got a lot of thinking to do."

"There's one thing I advise you to do," said Ellen, determined to lose no chance of doing her duty, "and that is to kneel down and pray to God to make you a good and respectful and grateful child."

Emily paused at the foot of the stairs and looked back.

"Father said I wasn't to have anything to do with your God," Emily said gravely.

Ellen gasped foolishly and appealed to the universe.

"Did any one ever hear the like?"

"I know what your God is like," said Emily. "I saw His picture in that old sermon book of yours. He has whiskers and wears a nightgown. I don't like him. But I like father's God."

"And what is your father's God like, if I may ask?" demanded Ellen sarcastically.

Emily hadn't any clear idea what father's God was like, but she was determined not to be posed by Ellen.

"He is clear as the moon, fair as the sun and terrible as an army with banners," she said triumphantly.

"Well, you're bound to have the last word, but the Murrays will teach you what's what," said Ellen, giving up the argument. "They're strict Presbyterians and won't hold by any of your father's awful notions. Get off up-stairs."

Emily went up to her little room feeling very desolate.

"There isn't anybody in the world who loves me now," she said, as she curled up in the old wing chair by the window. But she was determined she would not cry. The Murrays, who had hated her father, should not see her crying. How very big and empty the world had suddenly become! Nothing was interesting any more. It did not matter that the little squat apple-tree in the yard was now a thing of rose-and-snow beauty—that the hills beyond the hollow were of green silk, purple-misted—that the daffodils were out in the garden—that the birches were hung all over with golden tassels—that The Wind Woman was blowing white, young clouds across the sky. None of these things had any charm or consolation for her now. In her inexperience she believed they never would have again.

"But I promised father I'd be brave," she whispered, "and I will. I won't let the Murrays see I'm afraid of them—I won't be afraid of them."

THE Murrays came to the funeral. Aunt Elizabeth wore her best black satin dress. Emily would never have forgiven her if she hadn't.

Emily was in a state of miserable suspense as to her fate. She hoped desperately that she might go to New Moon.

"We'll talk the matter over this evening," she overheard Uncle Wallace say, and some instinct told her just what "the matter" was. She would have given one of her pointed ears to have heard the discussion with the other. But she knew she would be sent out of the way. So she was not surprised when Elder said to her after supper:

"Go up-stairs, Emily. Your aunts and uncles want this room to talk over their business."

Emily lingered reluctantly. How could she sleep to-night if she did not know what was going to happen to her? Her eyes fell on the oblong table in the center of the room. Its cloth was of generous proportions, falling in heavy folds to the floor. There was a flash of black stockings across the rug, a sudden disturbance of drapery, and then silence. Emily on the floor under the table arranged her legs comfortably and sat triumphant. She would hear what was decided and nobody would be any the wiser.

She had never been told that it was not considered strictly honorable to eavesdrop and she considered that it was a bit of pure luck that she had thought of hiding under the table. She could even see dimly through the cloth.

In they came; down they sat around the room: Uncle Wallace, dark and grim, with frowning, bristly brows and stern, unpitying mouth; Aunt Eva, with the fretful face of the imaginary invalid; Uncle Oliver, big and rosy and jolly looking; Aunt Addie, ditto; Aunt Ruth of the cold gray eyes and pinched lips; Cousin Jimmy, with his little elfish face and forked gray beard; Aunt Elizabeth, stately, handsome, austere; and Aunt Laura, with her beautiful soft voice and the kind blue eyes Emily loved already.

For a few moments nobody spoke, though Aunt Eva sighed long and heavily. Then Uncle Wallace cleared his throat and said:

"Well, what is to be done with the child?"

Nobody was in a hurry to answer. Emily thought they would never speak. Finally Aunt Eva said with a whine: "She's such a difficult child. So odd. I can't understand her at all."

"She is not a Murray, that is plain to be seen," said Elizabeth decidedly and disapprovingly.

"I wouldn't call her a Starr either," said Uncle Oliver. "Seems to me she's more like Douglas Starr's mother's people—the Byrds. She's got their hair and eyes."

"She's got old George Byrd's nose," said Aunt Ruth, in a tone that left no doubt as to her opinion of George's nose.

"I think," said Aunt Laura timidly, "that she has what I have heard called an artistic temperament."

"She's a spoiled child," said Aunt Ruth bluntly. "There's work ahead to straighten out her manners, if you ask me."

The little eavesdropper shot a scornful glance at Aunt Ruth through the table-cloth. "I think that your own manners have a slight curve."

Emily did not dare even to murmur the words under her breath, but she shaped them with her mouth; this was a great relief and satisfaction.

"I agree with you," said Aunt Eva, "and I, for one, do not feel equal to the task."

EMILY understood that this meant Uncle Wallace didn't mean to take her, and she rejoiced thereat.

"I would like to take Emily," said Uncle Oliver slowly, "but I feel I can hardly do it. I've a large family to provide for."

"She'll not likely live long to bother any one," said Aunt Elizabeth crisply. "She probably will go into consumption like her father."

"I won't—I won't," exclaimed Emily—at least she thought it with such vim that it seemed to her that she exclaimed it. She forgot that she had wanted to die soon so that she could overtake father. She wanted to live now, just to put the Murrays in the wrong. "I haven't any intention of dying. I'm going to live—and be a famous authoress. You'll just see if I don't, Aunt Elizabeth Murray."

"She is a weedy-looking child," acknowledged Uncle Wallace.

Emily relieved her freshly outraged feelings by making a face at Uncle Wallace through the table-cloth.

"If I ever possess a pig, I am going to name it after you," she thought—and felt quite satisfied.

"Somebody has to look after her as long as she's alive, though, you know," said Uncle Oliver.

"It would serve you all right if I did die and you suffered terrible remorse for it all the rest of your lives," Emily thought. Then in the pause that happened to follow she dramatically pictured out her funeral, selected her pall-bearers and tried to choose the verse she wanted engraved on her tombstone. But before she could settle this, Uncle Wallace began again.

"Well, we're not getting anywhere. We have to look after the child——"

"I wish you wouldn't call me 'the child,' " thought Emily bitterly.

"—and some of us must give her a home. Personally, I feel that Eva's health is not equal to the care and training of a child——"

"Of such a child," said Aunt Eva.

"Poor little soul," said Aunt Laura.

Something frozen in Emily's heart melted at that moment. She was pitifully pleased over being called "poor little soul" so tenderly.

"Don't you think we might take her, Elizabeth," went on Laura timidly.

Aunt Elizabeth stirred restlessly. "I don't suppose she'd be contented at New Moon, with three old people like us."

"I would—I would," thought Emily.

"Ruth, what about you," said Uncle Wallace. "You're all alone in that big house. It would be a good thing for you to have some company."

"I don't like her," said Aunt Ruth sharply. "She is as sly as a snake."

"I'm not!" Emily was very indignant. But in the background of her mind she knew how she could get even. As soon as possible she meant to write a full description of that conclave ring of Murrays and put down exactly what she thought of them.

"With wise and careful training, many of her faults may be cured," said Uncle Wallace pompously.

"I don't want them cured!" Emily was getting angrier and angrier all the time under the table. "I like my faults better than I do your—your—" she fumbled mentally for a word, then triumphantly recalled a phrase of her father's—"your abominable virtues."

"I doubt it," said Aunt Ruth, in a biting tone. "What's bred in the bone comes out in the flesh. As for Douglas Starr, I think that it was perfectly disgraceful of him to die and leave that child without a cent."

"Did he do it on purpose?" asked Cousin Jimmy blandly. It was the first time he had spoken.

"He was a miserable failure," snapped Aunt Ruth.

"He wasn't—he wasn't!" cried Emily, suddenly sticking her head out under the table-cloth between the end legs of the table.

For a moment the Murrays sat as silent and motionless as if her outburst had turned them to stone. Then Aunt Ruth rose, stalked to the table and lifted the cloth, behind which Emily had retired in dismay, realizing what she had done.

"Get up and come out of that, Em'ly Starr."

"Em'ly Starr" got up and came out. She was not specially frightened—she was too angry to be that. Her eyes had gone black and her cheeks crimson.

"What a little beauty—what a regular little beauty," said Cousin Jimmy. But nobody heeded him. Aunt Ruth had the floor.

"You shameless little eavesdropper!" she said. "There's the Starr blood coming out—a Murray would never have done such a thing. You ought to be whipped."

"Father wasn't a failure!" cried Emily, choking with anger. "You had no right to call him a failure. Nobody who was loved as much as he was could be a failure. I don't believe anybody ever loved you. So it's you that's a failure."

"Do you realize what a shameful thing you've been guilty of?" demanded Aunt Ruth.

"I wanted to hear what was going to become of me. I didn't know it was such a dreadful thing to do—I didn't know you were going to say such horrid things about me."

"Listeners never hear any good of themselves," said Aunt Elizabeth impressively. "Your mother would never have done that, Emily."

The bravado all went out of poor Emily. She felt guilty and miserable—oh, so miserable. She had disgraced the Starrs.

"Go up-stairs," said Aunt Ruth.

Emily, with quivering lip, turned to go, but Cousin Jimmy intervened.

"Let her stay here till we've decided who's to take her," he said.

"That will be harder than ever to decide now," snapped Aunt Ruth.

"Then don't decide it," said Cousin Jimmy. "Leave it to luck. Draw lots."

The Murrays, in their perplexity, grasped at the suggestion. Emily, in her shame and humiliation, hardly heeded what was going on. But presently she found herself standing by Aunt Elizabeth and Aunt Elizabeth was saying:

"Emily, I have our names written here, on these slips of paper. You shall draw one and the one whose name is on it will give you a home."

Aunt Elizabeth held out the slips of paper. Emily trembled so violently that at first she could not draw one. This was terrible—it seemed as if she must blindly settle her own fate.

"Draw," said Aunt Elizabeth, inexorable as fate.

EMILY set her teeth, threw back her head with the air of one who challenges destiny, and drew. Aunt Elizabeth took the slip from the little shaking hand and held it up.

On it was her own name. Laura Murray suddenly put her handkerchief to her eyes.

"Well, that's settled," said Uncle Wallace, getting up with an air of relief. "And if I'm going to catch my train, I've got to hurry. Of course, as far as the matter of expense goes, Elizabeth, I'll do my share."

"We are not paupers at New Moon," said Elizabeth. "Since it has fallen to me to take her, I shall do all that is necessary, Wallace. I never shirk my duty."

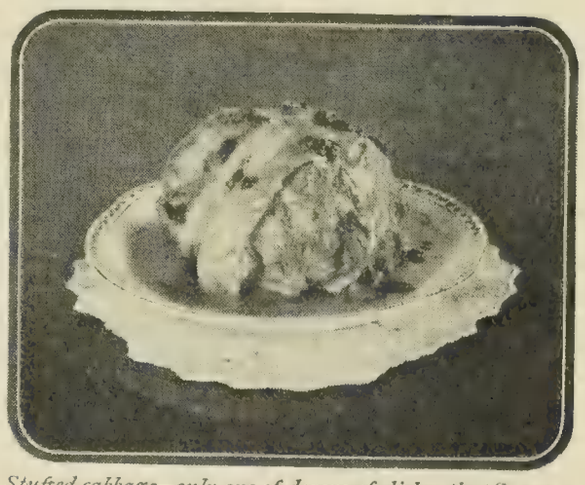
"I am her duty," thought Emily. "Father said nobody ever liked a duty. So Aunt Elizabeth will never like me."

"You've got more of the Murray pride than all the rest of us put together, Elizabeth," laughed Uncle Wallace.

They all followed him out, except Aunt Laura. She came up to Emily, standing alone and shamed, and drew her into her arms.

"I'm so glad, Emily—I'm so glad," she whispered. "Don't fret, dear child. I love you already—and New Moon is a nice old place, Emily."

"It has—a—pretty name," said Emily, struggling for self-control. "I've—always hoped—I could—go with you, Aunt Laura. My manners are not so bad as you may think—I'll never listen like that again—I wouldn't have listened to-night if I'd known it was wrong."



"Of course you wouldn't," said Aunt Laura.

"But—I'm not a Murray, you know."

Then Aunt Laura said a queer thing—for a Murray.

"Thank heaven for that," said Aunt Laura.

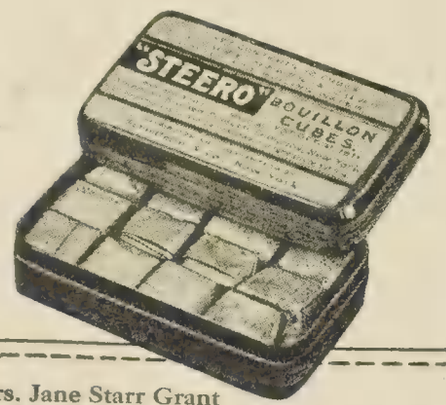
NOTE—There will be another "Emily" short story in the February issue.

Stuffed cabbage—only one of dozens of dishes that STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes make far more tempting

Flavor your food as famous chefs do

Now by using this little cube the food you cook can be more tempting

By
MRS. JANE STARR GRANT



LET me take you with me to the kitchens of a famous hotel. Meet my friend the chef—he of the fabulous salary. Watch his lieutenants at work on dishes that bring captains of finance, well-known professional people, epicures of all sorts, miles out of their way to taste. "What is the secret?" you ask him. But he shrugs his shoulders. He is unable to tell you how he has brought the preparation of food to an art, a science, a religion.

You notice a salad dressing being made. A mysterious little cube is dropped into boiling water and set aside to cool. Again you see the same sort of cube being dissolved and mixed in with some green peas. "Is that one of the secrets?" you wonder, and the wonder is that it is.

Chefs long ago discovered that the flavor of beef made many kinds of food more delicious. In the STEERO bouillon and flavoring cube they now find this flavor in a convenient form and so perfected that everywhere it is becoming as great a necessity as pepper and salt.

Use STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes in the preparation of gravies and sauces, vegetables, soups, macaroni and spaghetti, eggs and omelets, fish and other sea food, salads and salad dressings, poultry and fish dressing, meats and left-overs, souffles, jellies and game. In fact, there are so many dishes that these cubes improve that thousands of women have made for them a permanent place in their kitchen cabinets.

free*—STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes. I want you to try STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes. I want you to taste the delicious bouillon they make. I want you to see for yourself what a wonderful flavoring agent they are in dozens of different dishes. I want to send you a sample package. Mail me the coupon and I will personally see that you get the free sample. If you wish the 64-page STEERO Cook Book, send ten cents with the coupon.

Mrs. Jane Starr Grant
American Kitchen Products Co.
Dept. F-18, 281 Water St., New York City

☐ Send me the free sample package of STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes.

☐ Sixty-four-page Cook Book (enclosed 10c).

Name.....

Address.....

.....

Statement of the ownership, management, circulation, etc., required by the act of Congress of August 24, 1912, of THE DELINEATOR, published monthly at New York, N. Y., for October 1, 1924. State of New York, County of New York, ss.: Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared MARIE M. MELONEY, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that she is the Editor of THE DELINEATOR and that the following is, to the best of her knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management (and if a daily paper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 443, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit: 1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are: publisher, THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, a corporation, Spring and MacDougal Streets, New York City; Editor, MRS. WILLIAM BROWN MELONEY, 223 Spring Street, New York City; Managing Editor, none; Business Manager, JAMES BIRMINGHAM, 223 Spring Street, New York City. 2. That the owner is: (If the publication is owned by an individual his name and address, or if owned by more than one individual the name and address of each, should be given below; if the publication is owned by a corporation the name of the corporation and the names and addresses of the stockholders owning or holding one per cent. or more of the total amount of stock should be given.) Owner: THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, a corporation, Spring and MacDougal Streets, New York City. Stockholders: KATHERINE G BRAKER, 2 East 56th Street, New York City; Estate of W. H. GELSHENEN care of the Garfield National Bank, 190 Fifth Avenue, New York City; THOMPSON BROTHERS, Milroy, Pa.; FEDERAL PUBLISHING COMPANY, a corporation, 15 Exchange Place, Jersey City, N. J., stockholder of FEDERAL PUB. CO.; THE BUTTERICK COMPANY, a corporation, Spring and MacDougal Streets, New York City, stockholders of BUTTERICK CO.: GEORGE B. BLACK, 812 Lincoln Avenue, Mendota, Ill.; S. R. LATSHAW, Butterick Building, New York City; LAURA J. O'LOUGHLIN, 514 West 114th Street, New York City; MRS. ARETHUSA POND, 575 Riverside Drive, New York City; ABBY L. WILDER, 43 Fifth Avenue, New York City; B. F. WILDER, Butterick Building, New York City; C. D. WILDER, Butterick Building, New York City; G. W. WILDER, Butterick Building, New York City. 3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent. or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.) WILDER, EWEN & PATTERSON, New York City; THE DIME SAVINGS BANK, Brooklyn, New York; CORPORATION OF TRINITY CHURCH, New York City. 4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders and security holders as they appear upon the books of the company but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by her. 5. That the average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the six months preceding the date shown above is: (This information is required from daily publications only.) (SIGNED) MARIE M. MELONEY. Sworn to and subscribed before me this 30th day of September 1924, WM. DEWAR, JR., Notary Public. (My commission expires March 30th, 1926.)

The SALAD DRESSING of a hundred uses

WHEN company is coming, when you want something to surprise your guests, when you want to give the family a treat, then is the time for Premier. Premier has all the piquancy and sharpness of a French dressing with the smoothness and body of a mayonnaise. In Premier you find that scientific blending of seasonings and ingredients that makes it the best dressing to combine with salads, sandwiches, sauces, cold meats, and many other delicacies. That is why it is used in more than a million American homes. Write for recipe book today.

FRANCIS H. LEGGETT & COMPANY
NEW YORK

Cauliflower à la Premier—the best way to serve cauliflower.

Premier REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
Salad DRESSING
TRY PREMIER COFFEE TOO

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Continued from page 13

incessantly. "What was going to happen?"

"I am afraid!" Gabrielle whispered to herself, more than once, as the blazing blue days of August went by and the moon walked across the sea in the silent, frightening nights. David and Tom were there, seven or eight maids, gardener, chauffeur, stableman—yet she was afraid. "If we are only all out of here before Winter comes!" she would think, staring at the high, merciless sky, where distant wisps of cloud drifted against the merciless bright distances of the Summer sea. She could not face another Winter at Wastewater!

David was quiet in these days, spending long hours with Tom, painting, taking solitary walks before breakfast. The girl would look at him wistfully; ah, why couldn't they all seem as young as they were! Why weren't they all walking, talking, picnicking together, as other families did. David was always kind, always most intelligently sympathetic in any problem; but he seemed so far away! She could not break through the wall that seemed to have grown between them. It made her quiet, unresponsive, in her turn.

David, watching her, thought what a mad dream his had been, of Gabrielle as his wife! She was as inaccessible, from the standpoint of his poverty, his stupid silences and inexperience, as a star.

David felt himself, bitterly, to be a failure. Had he taken his place years ago in the world of business and professional men, had he risen to a reputation and an income, he might have had the right to speak now!

AS IT was, he had to see her every day, the woman who filled all the world with exquisite pain for him—and agonizing joy. She came down-stairs pale and starry-eyed in her thin white gown and shady hat on these hot days; she asked him a simple question, she pleaded without words for his old friendship and understanding.

He could not give it. And one day Sylvia asked him if he had noticed that Tom was falling in love with Gay.

David stood perfectly still. For a few seconds he had a strange, brassy taste in his mouth, a feeling that the world had simply stopped. Everything was over. Hope was dead within him.

"Haven't you noticed it?" Sylvia said. "Ah, I do hope it's true!"

They were in the down-stairs sitting-room, which had been darkened against the blazing heat of the day. All four of the young Flemings had been down on the rocks by the sea on a favorite bit of beach. But even there the day had been too hot for them, and now, at five, they had idled slowly toward the house.

Of course, that was it. She would marry Tom.

The thought had never crossed his mind before; he seemed to know the fact now, and his heart and mind shrank away from it with utter unwillingness to believe. A month ago, poor as he was, he might have done anything——

Now it was too late.

"I see him just as you see him, David," Sylvia was saying. "A big, lax, good-natured sort of boastful boy. But I don't believe she sees him that way! And—it would be a wonderful marriage for her. Fancy that youngster as mistress here. And isn't he exactly the sort of rather—well, what shall I say?—rather coarse, adoring man who would spoil a young and pretty wife?"

"She likes him?" David managed to say slowly.

"I think she's beginning to. She has a nice sort of friendly way with him," Sylvia said. "He doesn't seem to bore her, as he does me. He wearies me almost to tears."

"I thought—it seemed to me it was just—her way," David reasoned. And the darkest shadow that he had ever known at Wastewater fell upon his heart then. Of course; she would be the rich and beloved little Mrs. Fleming of Wastewater—he must not stand in her way——

A few days later he went off for a fortnight's tramp, with Rucker, he said, somewhere in Canada. He left no address, promising to send them a line now and then. And Gabrielle, bewildered with the pain of his composed and quiet parting, watching him out of sight, said to herself again, "I am afraid!"

Tom had made her his special ally and confidante of late, and only Gabrielle knew how far her friendship had been influential in keeping him at home at all. He disliked his Aunt Flora and felt that Sylvia looked down upon him, as indeed she did. David, affectionately interested as he was, was a forceful, almost a formidable, element, wherever he might be, and nobody knew it better than Tom. David might be, comparatively speaking, poor; he might wear his old paint-daubed jacket; he might deprecatingly shrug when a discussion was under way; he might listen smilingly without comment when Tom was noisily emphatic—yet Tom knew, and they all recognized, that there was a silent power behind David. He was a gentleman; books, art galleries, languages, political and social movements, David was quietly in touch with them all. He was what Tom would never be—that strange creature, a personality.

But Gay was unexacting, friendly, impressionable, and she combined a most winning and motherly concern for Tom's physical welfare with a childish appetite for his tales. She felt intensely sorry for Tom, chained here in the unsympathetic environment he had always disliked, and she assumed an attitude that was somewhat that of a mother, somewhat that of a sister, and devoted herself to him.

She liked him best when he talked of the sea, as they sat on the rocks facing the northeast, sheltered by the rise of the garden cliff from the afternoon sun. And it seemed to Gabrielle, and to them all, that as the days went by Tom lost some of his surface boastfulness and became simpler and more true.

ONE afternoon, when he had been at home for several weeks, he and Gay were alone on the rocks. It was again a burning afternoon, but Tom liked heat, and Gabrielle's dewy skin still had the child's quality of only glowing the more exquisitely for the day's warmth. Sylvia and her mother had gone to Crowchester; David was still away.

Tom had taken a rather personal tone of late with Gabrielle, a tone that the girl found vaguely disquieting. Now he was asking her, half-smiling and half-earnest, if she had ever been in love. And as he asked it he put his lean brown hand over hers as it lay on the rocks beside him. Gay did not look down at their hands, but her heart rose in her breast and she wriggled her own warm fingers slightly, as a hint to be free.

"Have I ever been in love? Yes, I think so, Tom."

"Oh, you think so? As bad as that!" Tom jeered good-naturedly. "If you'd ever been in love, you'd know it."

"I suppose so," Gabrielle agreed amiably.

"Well, who is it?" asked Tom curiously. "David, huh?"

Gabrielle felt as if touched by a galvanic shock. There was a choking confusion in all her senses and a scarlet color in her face as she said:

"David? David is—Sylvia's."

"Oh, zat so?" Tom asked interestedly. "Is—that—so? Say, my coming home must have made some difference to them?"

"Only in this way," the girl said quickly, with one hand quite unconsciously pressed against the pain that was like a physical cut in her heart. "Only in that now he will feel free to ask her, Tom!"

"Sa-a-ay!" Tom drawled, with a crafty and cunning look of incredulity and sagacity. "He'd hate her with a lot of money tied to her—I don't think!" But a moment later a different look, new to him lately, came into his face, and he said more quietly and with conviction: "I don't know, though. I'll bet you're right."

Immediately afterward he fell into a sort of study in a fashion not unusual with him. He freed Gabrielle's hand and sat staring absently out across the ocean, with his lean body sprawled comfortably into the angles of the rocks.

"I wish to God I knew if I was going to get well and back to sea again," he said presently in a fretful sort of voice.

Gabrielle had relievedly availed herself of this interval to shift by almost imperceptible degrees to a seat a trifle more distant. But when she saw the big, pathetically childish dark eyes staring up wistfully, a sudden little pang of pity made her say gently:

"I don't know, Tom. But you're young and strong; they all say you will."

"I'm in no condition to ask a girl to marry me!" Tom said moodily.

"Oh, Tom"—Gabrielle was interested at once—"have you a girl?"

He looked at her as she sat at an angle the great shaded boulders with a sort of se shine trembling like quicksilver over he She was in thin, almost transparent whi with a wide white hat pushed down over h richly shining tawny hair and shadowing h flushed, earnest face. The hot day had dee ened the umber shadows about her beauti eyes; tiny gold feathers of her hair lay li a baby's curls against her warm forehe Her crossed white ankles, her fine, lock white hands, the whole, slender, fragra youthful body might have been made for study of ideal girlhood and innocence a sweetness and Summer-time.

"Lemme tell you something," the m began in his abrupt way; and he took fr his pocket a slim, flat leather wallet, bro once, but now black and oily, and containi only a few papers.

One of these was an unmounted print o woman's picture. She was a slim, da woman, looking like a native of some trop country, wearing a single white garme barefooted, and with flowers about her sho ders and head. The setting was of palms a sea. The woman was smiling, but the fa was clumsily featured: the mouth large a full, and the expression, though bright happy, was stupid. The picture was dir curled by much handling.

"She's—sweet," Gay said hesitatingly, a loss.

"Sweet, huh?" Tom echoed, taking ba the picture, nursing it in both cupped han and studying it hungrily, as if he had ne seen it before. "That's Tana," he said soft "Tana?"

"My wife." There was no bragging in tone now. "She was the sweetest wom God ever made," he said somberly.

"Your— Tom, your wife?"

"Certainly," Tom answered shortly. "N go tell that to them all!" he added, alm angrily. "Tell them I married a girl who part nigger, if you want to!"

His tone was the truest Gabrielle had e heard from him; the pain in it went to heart.

"Tom, I'm so sorry," she said timi "Is she dead?"

"Yep," he said, like a shot, and was sti

"Lately, Tom?"

"Two years. Just before I was ill."

GABRIELLE was silent a long time, bu was her hand now that crept tow his and tightened on it softly. And so th sat for many minutes without speaking.

Then the girl said: "Tell me about he

Tom put the picture away reverent carefully. For a few dubious minutes felt that she had hurt him, but suddenly began with the whole story.

He had met Tana when she was only fo teen, just before the entrance of the Uni States into the war. Her father was a na trader, but the girl had some white bl Tom had remembered her, and when he wounded and imprisoned he had escaped make his way back to the tropical island the group of huts and Tana. And T had nursed him and married him solem according to all the customs of her tribe, they had lived there in a little corner Paradise, loving, eating, swimming, sleep for happy years. And then there had Toam—little, soft, round and brown, ne dressed in all his short three years, ne bathed except in the green warm fringes the ocean, never fed except at his moth tender, soft brown breast until he was enough to sit on his father's knee and his meat and bananas like a man. Th were plenty of other brown babies in settlement, but it was Toam's stagger little footprints in the wet sand that Tom membered, Toam standing in a sun-flood open reed doorway, with an aureole about curly little head.

Tom had presently drifted into the serv of a small freighting line again, but never long trips, never absent for more than a days or a week from Tana and Toam. so the wonderful months had become ye and Tom was content, and Tana was m than that—until the fever came.

Tom had survived them both, laid the brown body straight and bare beside straightly drawn white linen that cove

Tana. And then his own illness had mercifully shut down upon him and he had known nothing for long months of native nursing. Months afterward he found himself in a spare cabin upon a little freighter bound eventually for the harbor of New York. Tana's family—her village, indeed—had been wiped out, the captain had told him. They had put into a score of harbors, and Tom was convalescent before the grim, smoke-wrapped outlines of New York had risen before him. And Tom, then, sick and weary and weak and heart-broken, had thought he must come home to die.

But now, after these weeks at home, a subtle change had come over him and he did not want to die. He told Gabrielle, and she began indeed to understand it, how strangely rigid and unlovely and lifeless domestic ideals according to the New England standards had seemed to him at first; how gloomy the rooms at Wastewater, how empty and unsatisfying the life.

But he was getting used to it all now. He thought Sylvia was a "beautiful young lady, but proud." Aunt Flora also was "O. K." And David was, of course, a prince.

"I'm glad about him and Sylvia," he added, after thought. "Engaged, are they?"

"Well, I suppose they will be. There was an understanding between them——"

"Do you suppose it's money that's holding them back?"

"I don't imagine so. I think, perhaps, it's all the change and confusion, and the business end of things——"

"I could fix 'em up!" Tom suggested magnificently. "I wish to God," he added uneasily, under his breath and without irreverence, "that something would happen! The place makes me feel creepy, somehow. It's—voodoo. I wish David would marry and take that death's head of an old woman off with him—Aunt Flora. And then I'd like to beat it somewhere—Boston or New York—see some life—theaters, restaurants—that sort of thing!"

Gabrielle did not ask what disposition he would make of herself under this arrangement. She knew.

SHE was down among the flowering border shrubs of the garden on the quiet September day when David unexpectedly came home. She had come out alone to scramble for half an hour along the shore, her busy eyes upon the twinkling low-tide life among the rocks, her thoughts a jumble of strange apprehensions and fears. Now she was lingering in the garden, reluctant to surrender herself once more to all the shadows and unnamed menaces of the house, picking a few of the brave bronze zinnias and the velvet wallflowers.

She started as David's figure loomed suddenly through the soft veils of the Autumn fog, close beside her, and laid her hand with a quite simple gesture of fright against her heart. The color ebbed slowly from beneath the warm cream of her skin. Her eyes looked large and childish in their delicate umber shadows.

David saw the fine, frail linen over her beautiful young breast rise and fall with the quickened beat of her heart; the soft moist weather had curled her tawny hair into little damp feathers of gold against her temples. An ache of sheer pain, the pain of the artist for beauty beyond sensing, shook him. She was youth, sweetness, loveliness incarnate, here against a curtain of flowers and gray mist with wallflowers in her hand.

David gave her his hand, and she clung to it as if she would never let it go, as if she were a frightened child, found at last.

"David—thank God you're home!" she said. "But you've tired yourself," she added, instantly concerned. "You look thinner, and you look pale."

"I'm fine," he said, with his good smile. "But why did you want me back?" he asked, a little anxiously, in reference to her emotion at seeing him.

"Oh, I don't know. Things—" she said vaguely, with a glance toward the looming black shape of Wastewater, "things have—made me nervous. I'm not sleeping well."

"Aunt Flora looks like a ghost," the man said. "And Sylvia seems twitchy, too. What's the matter with us all?"

"Us all?" She caught up the phrase accusingly. "Then you feel it, too?"

"I think I have always felt—something of it here!"

"It?" Gabrielle repeated the monosyllable thoughtfully, and as they turned toward the house: "Horror—" she said, under her breath. "David, David, can't we all get away!"

"We must get away," he amended. "It isn't a good atmosphere for any one! Perhaps next Summer——"

He stopped. Sylvia had given him another significant hint a few minutes ago. But he dared not ask Gabrielle to confirm it.

"David," she said quickly and distressedly when they had reached the little alley under the grape-vines, where Gay had seen her mother almost a year ago, "will you advise me?"

His face was instantly attentive; of the sudden plunge of his heart there was no sign.

"Gladly, dear."

"Tom has asked me to marry him, David," Gabrielle said.

Their eyes met seriously. There was a long pause, while neither moved.

"You have promised him, Gabrielle?"

"No. I couldn't do that. But—I couldn't say no. I tried," Gabrielle went on, quite unconsciously clinging to David's hands, "I did try to prevent it, David. You don't know how I tried! He has been talking about it—oh, since before you went away! He told me he liked a girl, and he would tell me all about her, pretending that she was not I. I—prayed," Gabrielle went on passionately, "that it was not I!"

"Gabrielle, I would have spoken to him, saved you all this!"

"No, no, no, I know you would! Aunt Flora would have told him. But, David, we couldn't have that! Why, it would have broken his heart! You see, he's proud, and he feels—feels that there is—a difference between us and himself. He has been like a child about this, a child with a wonderful surprise for me. I am to have jewels and travel and cars—and everything."

"If you marry him?" David asked slowly.

"If I marry him. And I like him, David—ah, truly I do! I feel so badly for him. I feel as if it would be a real—a real life for me," persisted little Gabrielle gallantly, feeling for words, "to fill Wastewater with guests and hospitality and happiness again. I can't bear to have him feel that poor as I am, and—and nameless—and he knows I am nameless—still I couldn't love him. It will make him bitter, and ugly, and he'll go off again, and perhaps die. I've had to be kind, to put anything definite off, and so I've said nothing to anybody—not even Sylvia. I've had to—to—fight it out alone," finished Gabrielle with a trembling lip and swimming eyes, "and it has made me—nervous!"

"My dear girl," David said slowly, heavily, "you're sure you wouldn't be happy? You would be very rich, Gabrielle, and you could teach him to make the most of his money. I think it would make Aunt Flora and Sylvia very happy."

Gabrielle was moving ahead of him toward the house now. She half-turned to look at him over her shoulder.

"David, do you think I should say yes?" she whispered.

"I think perhaps you should consider it gravely, Gay. You say you like him, and what other woman is he ever apt to find that would understand him, or even like him, so well? Imagine what harm his money is going to do to him, once he is better, mixing in the world again? All sorts of social thieves will be upon him——"

"That's what I think of!" she responded eagerly, so childishly, so earnestly concerned that David felt his heart wrung afresh with a longing to put his arms about her, comfort her, kneel at her feet, put his lips to her beautiful young hands. "If—if only we can get out of here!" she whispered, with another strangely fearful glance at the old house. "His affairs straightened out, Sylvia and Aunt Flora and I—going somewhere—anywhere! David, we mustn't spend another Winter here. And yet now, now— I don't know what Tom thinks! He may think—indeed, I know he does think—that everything will be as he wishes! What could I do? I only told him he must not think of such things until he was much, much better. But he seems to have taken that as a sort of—as a sort of—consent, in a way——"

"Shall I talk to him, dear? Tell him you need more time?"

"Oh, no, please, David! Leave it to me!"

"Sometimes, I've been given to understand," he said, "a girl feels this way when she really is sure, or when, at all events, it develops that the doubt and hesitation were all natural enough, and part of—of really caring. Take time about it, Gabrielle. Money and position do count for something after all, and he is a Fleming. It isn't," added David, with a change in his tone, "it isn't the other man of whom you spoke to me, last June?"

For a moment Gay did not answer. Then she said, in a peculiar voice:

"I've often wondered what you meant by that conversation, David. Whether you remembered it? What was it? Had you consulted Aunt Flora and Sylvia as to my destiny—as to the problem of what was to become of me?"

"I—yes, I had written Sylvia; or no—not exactly that," David stammered, taken unawares and turning red. "I—it was just an idea of mine; it came into my head suddenly," he added, with a most unwonted confusion in his manner, as he remembered that old bright dream of a porch on the seaward side of the Keyport farmhouse and himself and poor little unwanted, illegitimate Gay breakfasting there. "I wrote Sylvia about setting her free of a sort of understanding between us," David went on, with a baffled feeling that his words were not saying what he wanted them to say. "As a matter of fact, a letter from her, saying the same thing, crossed mine."

"You didn't say you—cared," Gabrielle said very low. "You simply put it to me as a sort of—solution."

"I see now that it was an affront to you, Gay," David answered sorely. "I have regretted it a thousand times! I wanted to offer you—what I had. But God knows," he added bitterly, "I have nothing to offer!"

"So that you—would not—do it again?" Gabrielle said, hardly above a breath, and breathing quickly, yet with an effort to appear careless

"I would never offer any woman less than—love again," David answered.

"'You see, you did not care for me, David," the girl reminded him, in a low strained voice, and not meeting his eyes, when they were at the gloomy side door.

"I had been thinking about it for days," he said. "It had—I don't know how to express it—it had taken possession of me."

Gabrielle, her shoulder turned toward him, flung up her head with a proud little motion.

"Tom—loves me," she said steadily. Yet he saw the hand that held the flowers shake and the beautiful mouth tremble.

"Tom," his half-brother said, still unable to shake off the wretched feeling that they were talking at cross purposes, "would make you a devoted and generous husband, Gabrielle."

Neither spoke again. They went into the dark hallway and up-stairs and the gloom of Wastewater sucked them in and wrapped them about with all its oppressive silences, its misunderstandings and its memories.

THE weeks that followed seemed to Gabrielle Fleming, even at the time when they were actually passing, strangely and darkly unnatural, and afterward they remained a fearful memory in her life.

Outwardly, as the serene Autumn darkened and shortened into Winter, the household seemed merely what the return of the heir had made it: Tom invalided, restless, in love with his cousin, Gabrielle; Sylvia beautiful and confident as she faced the changed future; Aunt Flora silent, coughing with her usual Autumn bronchitis; David, grave and kindly, managing, advising, affectionate with them all.

Actually, Gabrielle felt sometimes that they were all madmen in a madhouse, and vague disturbing thoughts of her own unfortunate little mother would flit through her mind, and she would wonder if her own reason would sustain much of this sort of suspense.

"Sylvia, does it make you feel as if you would like to scream sometimes?" Gay asked one day, in the bare sunlight of the garden.

"Does what?" But in Sylvia's dark eyes there was perfect comprehension. "It is almost," she added in a low tone, "as if people did really stay about a place to haunt it. That poor little Cecily—the second Mrs. Fleming—who died, and your mother, and my father, and Uncle Roger——"

"And all their passions and all their hates!" Gabrielle said, in a fearful whisper, glancing up at the grim outlines of the enormous pile, "and all those dusty, empty halls and locked rooms!"

"Gabrielle, don't!" Sylvia said quickly, with a nervous laugh.

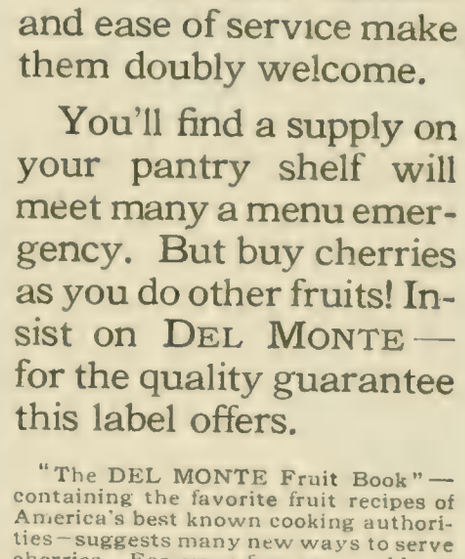
"No, but Sylvia, you feel it, too?"

"Ah, of course I do! Mama so ill and silent, Tom so strange, David not—" Sylvia's lip trembled, as much to her own surprise as Gay's. "David is not himself," she said hurriedly. "He came back from this trip—changed! Whether it is Tom's return, with all the memories and changes, I don't know. Only," added Sylvia, quite frankly

Continued on page 60

The FINEST CHERRIES GROWN any time you want them

When you hunger for fruit, but can't decide just what to have, try, for variety, these plump, juicy Royal Annes.



DEL MONTE brings them to you at their best—the pick of California's famous cherries, gathered with all their orchard-sweetness and packed at once in sunlit kitchens.

Their unusual, fresh flavor adds a new touch to cold-weather meals; and their convenience and ease of service make them doubly welcome.

You'll find a supply on your pantry shelf will meet many a menu emergency. But buy cherries as you do other fruits! Insist on DEL MONTE—for the quality guarantee this label offers.

"The DEL MONTE Fruit Book"—containing the favorite fruit recipes of America's best known cooking authorities—suggests many new ways to serve cherries. For your free copy, address Department 28B, California Packing Corporation San Francisco, California.

Be sure you say DEL MONTE

TWO ARE FREE

I Keep New

These things I use form the last words in beauty helps

By Edna Wallace Hopper

Here are some facts all women should consider:

That I spent 40 years in a world-search for the utmost in beauty.

That I consulted countless authorities Have made many trips to France.

That my results are beyond compare These things made me a famous beauty. They gave me a glorious career. And now, at a grandmother's age, they keep me looking like a girl

These are supreme

These are the supreme helps. They are exactly what I use, and my whole career depends on beauty.

They are up to date. Every new discovery comes to me. Every scientist knows that millions of women are ready to use what I use.

I have a great laboratory which tests every new idea. When they find anything better than I use, I instantly adopt it. That is important. The whole science of beauty has been revolutionized in the past decade. Nearly every old idea is taboo.

These four products combine 52 ingredients. Each for its purpose is the best men know. I beg you to try them at my cost and learn what they mean to you.

My Youth Cream

A matchless cream which applies 11 beauty helps. That contains products of both strawberry and lemon. Also all the best that science knows to soften, whiten, feed and smooth the skin.

My Facial Youth

A liquid cleanser which I found in France. It contains no animal, no vegetable fat. It cannot assimilate in any way with the skin. It simply cleans to the depths, then departs. All the dirt and grime, dead skin and clogging matter come out with it.

The leading beauty experts of the world now use and advise this formula. You will never realize what a clean skin means until you try my Facial Youth.

My Hair Youth

The method which gave me luxuriant hair. Thick, silky, lustrous—finer far than 40 years ago. I have never had falling hair or dandruff, and never a touch of gray.

A concentrated product combining many hair helps. I apply it with an eyedropper directly to the scalp. It combats hardened oil and dandruff which stifle hair roots. It tones and stimulates. In my Hair Youth you will find the greatest hair helps in existence.

White Youth Clay

A new-type clay, white, refined and dainty. The final result of 20 years of scientific study.

It combines two clays with many other skin helps. It purges the skin of all that clogs and mars it. It draws from the skin the causes of blackheads and blemishes. It brings the blood to the skin, so it leaves a rosy afterglow. It combats all lines and wrinkles. Many women seem to drop ten years with one application.

No woman can look her best without using my White Youth Clay.

Say which you want

Edna Wallace Hopper's beauty helps are now supplied by all druggists and toilet counters.

My office will send you a sample of any you request. Just send this coupon, checking which you want. My Beauty Book and a sample of my powders will come with it.

Mail this coupon now. You owe yourself a test of these things I have found for you.

Your Choice Free

Insert your name and address. Mark sample desired. Mail to Edna Wallace Hopper, Inc., 536 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago, Ill. 715-ABC

☐ White Youth Clay ☐ Youth Cream
☐ Facial Youth ☐ Hair Youth

Name.....

Address.....

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Continued from page 59

blinking wet eyes, "only I have noticed a change in him, just lately, and it has—worried me! I don't sleep well," she confessed. "I don't believe any of us do. I don't think we should stay here. If Tom has to go away——"

She stopped. It was impossible not to assume now that Tom's plans depended upon Gabrielle. The very words made Gabrielle's blood run cold. It was in vain that she tried to imagine herself married, rich, going about the world as Mrs. Tom Fleming Every fiber of body and soul revolted; she liked Tom, she would have done almost anything to please him, but somehow the thought of him as her husband made her feel a little faint.

Yet how, after all this kindly talk, after these hours of listening, of companionship, suddenly break free? Gabrielle dared ask no help; Sylvia or Aunt Flora would only hurt him a thousand times more than she would; even David's touch could not be trusted here. Besides, she did not feel herself deserving of help or extrication; she had brought this most uncomfortable state of affairs upon herself; she had been too kind to Tom, she had let him drift happily into the idea that they cared for each other.

The girl began to feel with a sort of feverish terror that she must be free—free if she had to run away into the world alone. From a distance she could write them, she could explain! But she could not go on in this fashion, with every hour deepening the misunderstanding between herself and Tom, tightening the net.

NOVEMBER came in bare and cold, with a faint powdering of snow upon the frozen ground. Suddenly Summer-time and shining seas and sunshine seemed but dreams; life had become all Winter, there would never be warmth and flowers again. Wastewater was bleakly cold; oil-stoves burned coldly, the halls were frigid, the family huddled about fires.

David was still immersed in the business of the estate; Flora was wretched with rheumatism and malaria; Gabrielle, of them all, was the least anxious to suggest a change and so precipitate a settlement with Tom.

On the fourth day of the month came "the great wind." Keyport and Crowchester, and indeed all the towns along the coast for miles, would long talk of it, would date domestic events from it.

The day broke gray and cold, in a hurricane that racked and bowed the trees and bushes, laid the chrysanthemums flat, rattled dry frozen leaves and broken branches on the porches. Whitecaps raced on the gray, rough sea, doors slammed, casements rattled and at regular intervals the wind seemed to curl about the house like a visible thing and whined and chuckled and sobbed in the chimneys.

The family was at breakfast, with the lights lighted, when one of the oldest maples came down, with a long splintering crash that was like a slow scream. During the morning two other smaller trees fell. After luncheon, John came in to say that his wife and little girl were so nervous that he was going to take them in to Crowchester. He could get the papers——

"No," David said; "I may walk into Keyport later."

"You'll never keep your feet on the roads, sir. I never seen such a blow in my life."

David only smiled and shrugged, and at three o'clock went down to the side door, belted into his thick old coat. As he slipped out and dragged the door shut behind him, the wind snatched at him, and for a moment he really doubted his ability to make even Keyport, less than three miles away.

Wastewater stood upon a point, and there was less uproar on the highway than upon their own cliffs. The wind faced him steadily here, stinging tears into his eyes and pressing a weight like a moving wall against his breast. There was no escaping it, there was no dodging. David bent his head into it, knowing only that the road was hard and yellow beneath his staggering feet.

He jumped and shouted as a hand touched his arm, and he saw at his elbow Gabrielle's blown and laughing and yet somewhat frightened face. Unsure of her welcome, she caught her arm tightly in his and pushed along gallantly at his shoulder.

"I couldn't stand it!" she shouted above the shriek of the wind. "I had to get out!"

"Gay, you were mad to do this!" David shouted, after a hard mile.

"Oh, I'm loving it!" answered her exulting voice.

"I'm loving it, too!" he said. And suddenly they were both human, free of the shadows, able to laugh and struggle, to catch hands and shout again.

On their left the sea raged and bubbled, above them swept the wild airs; clouds and cold sunshine raced over the world, and the wind sailed with foam and mad leaves. But perhaps to both the man and woman the physical struggle after these weeks of mental strain was actually refreshing; at all events, they reached Keyport after an hour's battling in wild spirits.

THE piers were deserted except for a few anxious gulls that were blown crying above lashing waves; a group of tippeted boys exclaimed and shouted over the tide that had caught the end of River Street. David guided his companion into Keyport's one forlorn little restaurant, and they sat at a narrow table spread with steel cutlery and a damp, spotted cloth, drinking what Gabrielle said was the best coffee she had ever tasted.

"You crazy woman!" David said affectionately, watching her as she sipped her scalding drink from a thick cup and smiled at him through the tawny mist of her blown hair.

He had with some difficulty made arrangements for their being driven back in the butcher's car at half-past five. David did not dare risk the walk home in the early dark, and Gabrielle now began to feel through her delirious relaxation a certain muscle-ache, and was willing to be reasonable. So that they had a full hour to employ, and they spent it leaning upon the little table, sharing hot toast and weak coffee and talking, talking, talking as they had never talked before.

Gabrielle poured out her troubles like an exhausted child; her eyes glowed like stars in the gathering dusk, her cheeks deepened to an exquisite apricot-pink under their warm creamy colorlessness.

David watched her, listened, said little. But he began to realize that she was genuinely suffering and depressed, and in the end a clean program was planned, and David promised to put it into immediate execution.

Gabrielle liked Tom, but not as much as he thought she did. She wanted to get away at once—to straighten out her thoughts and to see the whole tangle from a distance. Very good, said David, drawing a square on the table-cloth with the point of a fork. Aunt Flora should be told the whole story and Gay should go in to Boston at once to see—well, to see a dentist. She must develop a toothache to-morrow morning. She could telegraph the nuns to-night and be with them about this time to-morrow.

When he saw how her eyes danced and how impulsively she clasped her fingers together at the mere notion, David was able to form some idea of the strain she had been under.

"Meanwhile," David proceeded with his plan, "I'll get Tom to go off with me somewhere, just for a few weeks. Norfolk, maybe, or Palm Beach—it may clear up his mind, too. And perhaps I can explain to him that, while you do like him, you don't feel quite ready to be any man's wife."

"Ah, David, what an angel you are! But, then, what about Sylvia and Aunt Flora?"

"Well, they can follow you in to Boston. Sylvia spoke to me about doing either library work or teaching in some girls' school. But the main point is," ended David, "that you get out of it, at once, before you make yourself sick."

"It seems so cowardly," said Gabrielle, fairly trembling in her eagerness and satisfaction.

"No, it's not cowardly. I suppose it's what all girls feel," David said, in a somewhat questioning voice, "before they get married?"

"That's just it," Gay confessed, her cheeks suddenly scarlet. "I don't know what most girls feel, and I haven't any mother——"

She paused. But David, looking at her over his cigaret, merely flushed a little in his turn and did not speak.

"But I know this," Gabrielle went on, feeling for words, "I know that what makes me feel so—so doubtful, about marrying Tom, isn't—isn't being afraid, David," she struggled on, her eyes pleading and her cheeks childishly red. "It's—not—being afraid!"

Their eyes met across the sorry little board, and for a moment the strange look held and neither spoke.

"I have been playing a part with Tom," Gabrielle said, "and I could go on playing it. I could marry him to-morrow, and—and still like him, and be kind to him! But David," she said in a whisper, "is that enough?"

"I don't know, dear," David answered, with a dry mouth. "You mean, that it could be different—that it would be different, if it were that other man—of whom you spoke to me one day?"

The girl only nodded in answer, her eyes fixed with a sort of fear and shame and courage upon his. "If it were the other man!" she thought—"if it were David!" And at the mere flying dream of what marriage to David would mean—going out into life with David—Gabrielle felt her heart swell until something like an actual pain suffocated her and her senses swam together.

He sat there, unconscious, kindly, everything that was good and clever, handsome and infinitely dear, and she dared not even stretch out her hand to lay it upon his. His black hair was blown into loose waves, his fine dark eyes and firm mouth expressed only sympathy and concern. She dared not think what love might do to them.

"I want—to be afraid, when I married," she said. "I want to feel that I am putting my life into somebody's keeping, going into a strange country—not just assuming new responsibilities in the old!"

"I think I understand," David said. And feeling that further talk of this sort was utterly unsafe for him, and likely to prove only more unsettling to her, he proposed that they walk to the Whittakers', a few blocks away, and see how the family was weathering the storm.

The Whittakers—mother, two unmarried daughters, two young sons, married daughter with husband and baby—were having a family tea that looked enchanting to Gabrielle and David, coming in out of the wind.

The big room was deliciously warm, and Mrs. Whittaker put Gay, who was a little shy, beside her, and talked to her so charmingly that the girl's heart expanded like a flower in sunshine.

"Ah, but now do do this again soon, you dear children!" their hostess said, when the hooded butcher's delivery-wagon was at the door. And Gabrielle went out, clinging to David's arm, into the roaring darkness, with the motherly good-by kiss warm upon her forehead.

THE delight of this long afternoon of adventure and the prospect of escape to-morrow kept her laughing all the way home and even when they got there she seemed to carry something of the wholesome Whittaker fireside, something of the good out-of-doors with her into Wastewater.

But swiftly, relentlessly, the chilling atmosphere of repressions and fears shut down upon them all again; outside the night rioted madly and the old house creaked and strained like a vessel at sea.

The girls wore their heavy coats to dinner and after dinner went up to Tom's study and built up the fire until the air-tight stove roared and turned a clear pink. Tom lay on his couch; he had been oddly moody and silent to-night; Gabrielle played solitaire talking as she played; Sylvia scribbled French verbs in the intervals of the conversation.

David and Aunt Flora had been with them until something after nine o'clock; then Flora had somewhat awkwardly and heavily asked him to come down with her to the sitting-room; she wished to talk to him.

This was a common enough circumstance for business matters were constantly arising for discussion. But her manner was strange to-night, Gabrielle thought, and the girl's heart beat quickly as they went away.

A quiet half-hour went by, and then Sylvia stretched herself lazily and admitted that she was already half-asleep. Tom had been lying with half-shut eyes, but with a look of steadily fixed upon Gabrielle that the girl was heartily glad to suggest that they all go down-stairs. There had been something sinister, something triumphant and yet menacing in that quiet, unchanging look. She had met it every time she looked up from her cards, and it had finally blotted everything but itself from her thoughts.

Tom rose obediently, and Sylvia folded his rug for him and went about straightening the room The girls were accustomed to perform small services for Tom, who really was not strong enough to be quite independent of them yet. All three went downstairs together, Gabrielle loitering for a few minutes in Sylvia's room, not so much because she had anything to say, as because the nervousness and the vague apprehension that possessed her like a fever made her fear her own company.

When she turned back into the hall again, Gabrielle was surprised to see Tom standing in his doorway.

"Did I leave my pipe up-stairs?" he asked, in an odd voice.

"Oh, did you, Tom?" Gabrielle asked eagerly, always glad to be useful to him, the more so as she found it more and more difficult to be affectionate. "No, let me! Let me!" she begged. "I'll not be two minutes!"

Again—she remembered afterward!—he was smiling his odd, triumphant yet threatening smile. But he said nothing as she took the lighted candle and started on the long way up-stairs to the study.

Tom's study was two floors above Gabrielle's room, three above his own, and in a somewhat unused wing. Just as she reached for the handle of the study door her candle went out, and Gabrielle with a pounding heart groped in the warm blackness for the table and the matches and blessed light again.

Her investigating hands found the brass box of matches; she struck one and held it with a shaking hand to her candle.

Gabrielle, holding her light high the better to search the room for the pipe and swallowing her fears resolutely, turned slowly about and stopped——

SHE thought that she screamed. But she made no sound. There was a man standing behind her and smiling at her with an odd, sinister smile. But it was not that alone that froze her into a terror as cold as death, that held her motionless where she stood, like a woman of wood. It was that the man was Tom.

"Well, what's the matter?" Tom asked, slowly and easily. His voice restored Gabrielle to some part of her senses.

"You frightened me!" she answered, her heart still pumping violently with the shock, and with a sort of undefined uneasiness, bred of the dark night and the howling wind and her solitariness far up here in the lonely old house.

Tom had lighted the lamp.

"Sit down," he said. "I want to talk to you!"

"Oh, Tom—it's after ten!" Gabrielle said, fluttering.

"Well, what of it? Here—" He pushed an armchair for her, and Gabrielle sat down in it and blew out her candle. Tom opened the stove, dropped wood and paper inside, and the wind in the chimney caught at it instantly, with a roar. "I wanted to talk to you," Tom added, "without Sylvia or any of the others around. They're always around!"

One of them would be welcome now, Gabrielle thought, in a sort of panic. For Tom's face looked stern and strange, and there was a rough sort of finality expressed in his manner that was infinitely disquieting.

She did not speak. She sat like a watchful, bright-eyed child, following his every word and every movement. Tom would not hurt her—Tom would not kill her—said her frightened heart.

"Here's what I want to know, Gabrielle," he began abruptly, when he had taken a chair close to her own. "What's the idea? You know all about me—you can't keep up this stalling forever, you know."

"Stalling—?" Gabrielle faltered.

"Bluffing—kidding—you know what I mean!" the man elucidated shortly. "I'm getting kind of tired of it. I'm getting damned tired of it! You know what I think about you, and you ought to know that I'm not the kind of man that lets anybody else walk off with my property. You're mine, ain't you—you're mine! Tell me that."

His manner had grown so alarming, so actually threatening, that Gabrielle drew back a little in her chair and her great eyes were dilated with a sort of terror as she answered, placatingly:

"You—you know I like you, Tom!"

"Yes, and I've had about enough of that sort of thing!" Tom answered harshly. "I've had enough of that kind of 'Of course I like you—let me think about it!' You can make up your mind now. You're going to marry me, and soon, too. I'm going to tell them all to-morrow morning, and you and I'll go into Boston some day next week and get married. And then when you want to go off with some other man for the whole afternoon and come back laughing and whispering, you can ask me about it first!"

"Why, Tom," Gabrielle said. "You're not jealous?"

"Yes, I am; I'm damn' jealous!" he answered, roughly catching her wrist and drawing her to him without leaving his seat. "I want you. You've as good as said you'd marry me, a hundred times! I've got money enough to give you everything in God's world you want. You can't go back now on all you said—you can't keep on bluffing and putting me off like a kid!"

"Tom, please— You never did this before!"

He stood up, still holding tight to her wrist, and caught her in the grip of an iron arm.

"No," he said in a low voice, "I never did this before! But there's no reason I shouldn't kiss my girl. What are you afraid of?"

His big left hand gripped her cheeks and he turned her face up to his and kissed her violently, more than once—a dozen times. Gabrielle, smothered, frightened and struggling, pushed at his breast with all the strength of her young arms.

THE opposition seemed to enrage Tom, for he only held her the tighter, his superior height as well as strength giving him all the advantage.

"Tom—" the girl panted. "I shall call!"

"Call!" he answered. And the wild screams of the winds, whirling over the high roofs of Wastewater, seemed to echo the contemptuous note of angry laughter in his voice.

"No, but Tom—please—please——"

"Ah, well, that's better! Now you say please, do you? Now you're not quite so cold," Tom uttered, kissing her hair and forehead and raising the two hands he had caught tightly in one to kiss the finger-tips. "Now you'll not be so cool, putting me off, asking for time, huh? Kiss me, Gay. You love me, don't you?"

She would be out of it all to-morrow, safe with the quiet nuns in Boston, Gabrielle reminded herself. If she could but get away now, down to lights and voices, into the peace of her own room, and to-morrow—away!

Gabrielle held herself as far away from him as the iron grip about her shoulders permitted and rested her hands perforce upon his shoulders.

"Tom, you will be ill—" she began pleadingly.

"Cut that stuff out!" he commanded. "You give me your word to marry me next week and I'll let you go!"

The convent to-morrow. The chapel, the refectory, the quiet footsteps and pleasant voices——

"Tom, don't be angry with me. Of course I will. Of course I will—if——"

"You'll not sneak to Aunt Flora and say Tom scared it out of you and get David to talk me off——"

The girl was silent during a second in which she sought words. But he saw the flicker of self-consciousness in her eyes and instantly his fury returned again.

"Promise me, as God is your judge. Swear it!" he said, in a low voice that shook with a passionate effort at control. "Swear it—or I swear I'll——"

The rest was lost. Gay was smothered in his arms again, her whole body bent backward so that she staggered in the struggle to keep her feet, her jaw caught in the grip of his hard fingers and her lips stinging and burned and hurt under his kisses. The rich coil of her hair was loosened and fell in a web upon her shoulders, and through her choked throat and crushed mouth her voice came thickly:

"Tom! Tom—for God's sake—David!"

And suddenly, above the wild envelopment of the wind, she heard her name shouted in answer: "Gabrielle!"

The girl screamed hysterically as the door was flung open, and David, white and shaking, came in.

Then there was a pause. Tom dropped his arms, and Gabrielle crossed to David; and quite automatically, and without moving his eyes from Tom, David put his arm about her. And Gabrielle laid one hand upon his shoulder and hid her face wearily against his breast and clung there.

Tom stood beside the table, upon which he rested one big, knotted hand. His hair was in disorder, his head hung forward menacingly, like the threatening jowl of a bulldog. He was the first to speak.

"Well, Dave, you can keep out of this," he said in a slow, measured voice. "She's going to marry me. She promised me to-night—didn't you, Gabrielle? Tell him so—tell him you promised me. What's—" Tom's voice, under David's steady look, and opposed to the strange silence in the storm-bound room and the strange and awful paleness of David's face, faltered slightly and became less confident—"what's the trouble?" he said.

"Shall we talk about this to-morrow, Tom?" David asked in a constrained tone.

"No, by God, we'll talk about it now! I may be sick—or I may have been sick, for that's more like it! But you've no need to talk to me as if I were a baby!"

"David—" Gabrielle breathed, against his breast.

"I'll not leave you, dear," he answered, very low, his lips against the tawny hair. "Tom, old boy, shall we go down-stairs? We're all nervous and upset to-night. I've got to talk to you——"

"Tell him you are going to marry me, Gay!" Tom said savagely, without altering his position.

"No, Tom," David said, strangely and sadly. "You can't—I'm sorry, Tom. But you two—you two—" he went on, stammering and looking from Gay's face to the man's with infinite pity and distress. "You can't marry her, Tom, now or ever. I've—I've got something to tell you that will make a difference——"

"By God, you can't tell me anything that will make a difference!" Tom said, deep in his throat, still in the same position and without moving his eyes. "You keep your hands off her—keep out of my affairs!"

"David—don't be angry with him—" Gabrielle pleaded. "Don't be angry with him! It's partly my fault—it's partly my fault!"

"Angry with him?" David echoed. "My dear Gay—Tom—you mustn't be angry with me. Aunt Flora's just told me something, Tom. Gay's father was not the man named Charpentier—as we had all believed! Uncle Roger never knew it—but Gay is your half-sister, Tom—born in the year after you ran away, when he was hunting all over the world for you——"

"What are you talking about?" Tom said, in a terrible voice. Gabrielle, her face ashen in the lamplight, was staring at David with dilated eyes. Now through her parted lips she breathed with utter horror:

"No—David, no——!"

"It's true," David said simply. "There's a curse upon the place, I think, and upon us all! It has killed them—one after the other—it is killing Aunt Flora now. Gay—Tom, old fellow, we have to pay with the rest! You must believe it. You're brother and sister, Tom."

THEN for a long time there was silence in the room.

"Who told you that?" Tom asked then. And instantly he added, in a changed tone: "Look out for her, David—she's falling!"

Gabrielle, indeed, with a long, deep sob that ended with a sigh, had pitched against his shoulder. David caught her in his arm. Her eyes were shut and her whole body hung limp, her beautiful hair falling free.

"Help me get her down-stairs, Tom!" David said, everything else forgotten. "Open the door——"

Tom slowly, and watching him as if he were under some enchantment, moved to obey. The lamp flared again, a blast of wind whined and sang about the windows and the casement burst open with a wild shout of streaming air.

But Tom and David neither saw nor cared. The opened hall door had shown the lonely passage outside lighted with a sickly pinkish glow that flickered on the weather-stained walls and sent lurching shadows along the passage. Above the creaking and crashing of the hurricane and the howling of the gale and the sea in the dark night, they could hear now a brisk crackling and the devouring sound of red lips of flame. The wind that instantly rushed upon them brought the acrid taste of smoke, and even in their first stupefied look they saw a detached banner of fire blow loose, far down the long hallway toward the stairs, twist on the wind a moment like a blown handkerchief and lose itself in a thick rolling plume of approaching smoke.

Tom slammed the door shut behind them; they were in the hall.

"Fire!" he shouted. "By God, the old place is on fire!"

Continued in the February DELINEATOR

Insure your family against constipation

It is a serious condition. Not only does constipation hinder nutrition and proper growth in your children but may leave them a prey to serious diseases in later life. "In fact," says a famous specialist, "so great is the misery produced in adult life by constipation that if this condition can be prevented or overcome in childhood, we shall see fewer chronic invalids, dyspeptics and neurasthenics."

Don't delay. Take action as soon as you recognize constipation in your children. Biliousness, fretfulness, loss of appetite — all warn that poisons from clogged intestines are flooding the child's body. If allowed to continue these poisons may lead to grave disorders. More than three-quarters of all illness has its origin in unnatural conditions in the intestines.

Laxatives start dangerous habit

Noted specialists point out that the continued use of laxatives brings only temporary relief from constipation at the expense of permanent injury. They start a dangerous, often life-long habit. An authority on child care advises mothers that lubrication is the best method of obtaining internal cleanliness (freedom from constipation). Lubrication has none of the disadvantages of laxatives and cathartics and does tend to correct the trouble permanently.

Without griping, Nujol gently lubricates and softens the food waste, enabling Nature to secure regular, thorough elimination. Thus it both prevents and overcomes constipation.

Nujol for entire family

Nujol is not a medicine. Like pure water it is harmless. Hospitals use it. Physicians all over the world are recommending it for infants and children and people of all ages.

Take Nujol yourself as regularly as you wash your face or brush your teeth. Nujol makes internal cleanliness a habit — the healthiest habit in the world. For sale by all druggists. Made by Nujol Laboratories, Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey).

Nujol

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

For Internal Cleanliness

Tested and Approved by the Good Housekeeping Bureau of Foods, Sanitation and Health

4-DAY TRIAL FREE!

Nujol, Room 802-C, 7 Hanover Sq., N.Y.

For this coupon and 10c (stamps or coin) to cover packing and postage, send trial bottle and 16-page booklet, "Internal Cleanliness". (For booklet only, check here ☐ and send without money.)

Name.....

Address.....

TRIAL BOTTLE FREE

I know how to stop GRAY HAIR

It's a sure way, and an easy one. And absolutely safe. This I will prove with a free trial bottle if you'll fill out and mail me the coupon.

By return mail I will send you my special patented free trial outfit, with full directions for testing on a single lock. Then you will know, positively, that no one need have gray hair—at any age!

Combing Does It

My hair color restorer is very easily applied, simply by combing it through the hair. No skill or outside aid required.

It is a clear, colorless liquid, clean as water. It leaves your hair soft, silky and fluffy.

No streaking or discoloration, no artificial "dyed" look. No interference with shampooing, nothing to wash or rub off. The restored color is perfectly even and natural in all lights.

Fill it out carefully, stating accurately the natural color of your hair. If possible enclose a lock in your letter.

By return mail, postage prepaid, you will receive my special patented free trial outfit. This is an offer which is truly, absolutely free.

When you know what Mary T. Goldman's is and what it will do, you will be anxious to restore all your hair. Then get a full-sized bottle from your druggist or direct from me.

Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer

Over 10,000,000 Bottles Sold

Please print your name and address

Mary T. Goldman, 499-AGoldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.
Please send me FREE trial bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer. The natural color of my hair is:
Black..... dark brown..... medium brown.....
auburn (dark red)..... light brown.....light auburn (light red)..... blonde.....

Name .....

Address.....

CANARIES

Send dealer's name for illustrated Bird Book Free

GUARANTEED SINGERS $10

HAVE ONE of these sweet-voiced companions to bring cheer the year round. Entirely different from ordinary canaries. Educated and sing with artificial light.

The Living Music Box

(Reg. U. S. Pat. No. 50853)

Expressed anywhere in U. S. or Canada. Guaranteed alive at express office. Mrs. Anthony, Piney Forks, O., writes: "My bird is wonderful. Would not take $200 for it."

Max GEISLER BIRD CO. Est. 1888

Largest bird and pet animal house in world

420 Geisler Building, OMAHA, NEB., or 10 Cooper Square, NEW YORK CITY

MAKE MONEY AT HOME

YOU can earn money at home in your spare time making show cards. No canvassing or soliciting. We show you how, supply you work at home no matter where you live and pay you cash for all work done. Full particulars and booklet free. Write today.

AMERICAN SHOW CARD SYSTEM, Ltd.
222 Adams Building, Toronto, Canada.

RED, CHAPPED HANDS made soft and smooth by anointing freely with gentle, antiseptic Mentholatum

Write for free sample

Mentholatum Co., Buffalo, N.Y., Wichita, Kans.

THE UNNECESSARY HANDICAP

Concluded from page 16

experienced physician for thorough examination and study.

The establishment of the habit of regular daily stools is difficult and requires the patient cooperation of the mother or nurse. The best time for stimulating the habit is in the morning about fifteen minutes after breakfast. The entrance of the food in the stomach stimulates intestinal activity and fecal material is pushed down into the rectum, where the reflex causes a desire to have the bowels move. This invitation should never be refused. Unless the same time each day is chosen for the movements, it is impossible to form regular habits. When a small child is placed on a toilet seat, his legs should not dangle but should have solid support on a small box. The best position is a squatting one with the knees higher than the thighs. This permits more effective action on the part of the abdominal muscles.

DIETARY HELPS

The diet should be chosen with a view to supplying not only bulk to furnish enough residue, but also sufficient vegetable acids and salts to stimulate the muscular movements of the intestines. Too much milk may cause constipation in children who consume a quart or more each day. In such cases this quantity should be reduced to one pint and more solid food added to the diet. The digestion and individual tastes of the child should be considered. In general, the foods that are laxative and permissible for young children are coarse cereals such as oatmeal, corn-meal, cereals made from the whole grain, whole-wheat bread, bran bread and muffins, gingerbread, figs, prunes, dates, oranges, apples, peaches, plums, rhubarb, raisins, spinach, boiled onions, boiled cabbage, tomatoes, carrots, asparagus, etc. The so-called concentrated foods, such as cheese, butter, nuts, etc., in which cellulose is lacking, should be avoided, as well as the refined foods such as white flour and starchy substances.

Some mothers, in order to prevent constipation, give their children altogether too much fruit. This may cause diarrhea, but more often brings about indigestion and loss of appetite. Raw fruits can be given at the commencement of breakfast or in the afternoon between dinner and supper. Care should be taken in regard to its ripeness, freshness and cleanliness. Stewed or cooked fruit may be given for supper. There is an element of truth in the old adage that fruit is gold in the morning and lead at night.

Exercise is an important aid in the correction of constipation. The setting-up exercises or the junior "daily dozen" are of decided value. The exercises which strengthen the abdominal muscles are most important. In cases of bad posture with flabby "pot belly," an abdominal support should be worn in conjunction with the exercises. Active and free play in the open air afford an abundance of good exercise.

THE USE OF CORRECTIVES

Enemas have been given to relieve constipation since the days of antiquity. One of the oldest treatises on medicine, an Egyptian papyrus dating about fifteen hundred B. C. and now in the Royal Museum in Berlin, gives directions for the preparation and administration of enemas. Hippocrates wrote that enemas were preferable purgatives in constipation. This is true as to the relief of constipation, but they are not desirable for steady and prolonged use in the cure of constipation.

For a prompt removal of the rectal contents, there is nothing better than an enema consisting of two to three teaspoons of glycerin in three to six ounces of water. The amount of water to be used in an ordinary soap or soda enema depends on the age of the child. A new-born baby requires one ounce, a baby one year of age six ounces, and for a child eight years old one pint.

An oil enema or injection has a curative effect and is recommended in chronic cases. One-half to two ounces of warm sweet oil or mineral-oil is inserted about five inches in the rectum after the child has gone to bed and a napkin held over the anus until the desire to expel the oil has passed. The oil remains in the rectum and softens the hard masses and the child has a movement next morning after breakfast. A nightly repetition of this procedure for several weeks, then every other evening, will often break up a stubborn constipation habit.

Suppositories stimulate the rectal reflex and are useful only when the trouble is in the rectum and a slight irritation is necessary to start the muscular action. They should not be continued for any length of time or the bowel will depend upon the irritation and a bad habit will be established which will be difficult to overcome. The old-fashioned cone of oil-paper is still popular and is not objectionable. A more modern adaptation is a simple glass rod with rounded ends, slightly bent and lubricated with petroleum jelly or oil and inserted until a movement results. A piece of soap cut to about the size of a lead pencil makes an excellent suppository. Glycerin suppositories are very popular, but if used frequently they will produce much rectal irritation. Gluten suppositories cause less irritation but are slower in their effect.

Massage of the abdomen is efficacious in some cases, and especially in young infants. This is done by gentle rubbing and kneading across the top of the abdomen from right to left and then down the left side. Five minutes night and morning is sufficient and in bottle-fed infants it can be done while the baby is taking the bottle.

Doctor Holt in his text-book on the diseases of children states that drugs play the least important part in the management of chronic constipation. An English specialist goes so far as to prohibit the giving of cathartics to children excepting under medical supervision. He feels that they are not only habit-producing drugs, but in certain cases of intestinal obstruction they prove fatal. Cathartics and laxative drugs will not cure constipation—in fact, they aggravate the condition. A cure can be accomplished only by careful training, rational diet, proper exercise and good health habits.

NOTE:—A list of previous articles in this "Happy Child" series that are available in pamphlet form will be found on page 51 on crushing any opponent by sheer weight and power any more. We have to teach our players more football, drill them longer in execution and imbue them with more "pinch brains" than the other team has.

DOES YOUR CHILD WANT TO BE AN ATHLETE?

Concluded from page 14

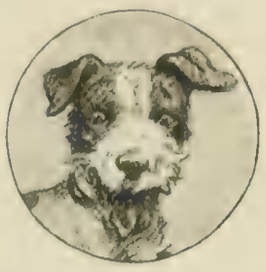
Experience, if made the basis for study and analysis, is a great asset to an athlete. Every contest in which a boy participates should make him just a little better prepared for the next one. This rule holds true right up to the time he is ready to graduate from college. I have often felt that if the 'varsity men were allowed to play for ten years instead of three, they would come somewhere near realizing all the possibilities of football. So coaches are always glad to get boys who have actually played games in school, knowing that they are likely to have more poise under fire than those who haven't had a taste of competition.

THE third side of our quadrangle is the moral side, the side having to do with the emotions and the habits of living. The body and the mind must be properly cared for or they will soon lose their efficiency. A boy who does not adhere strictly to sound rules of health and sane standards of morality is of no use to a team. The athlete must eat wholesome food, he must get plenty of fresh air, he must exercise his body every day, he must keep regular hours and get plenty of sleep. Furthermore, he must refrain from indulgences that will in any way sap his vitality or impair the normal functioning of any of the vital organs of his body. He must do nothing that will work against his having the reserve energy that means so much in an emergency. And athletic sports are full of emergencies.

Now we assume that we have the physical, mental and moral foundation upon which to build athletic success, but we are a long way from a champion. We have something that is pretty to look at but which without something more than the three things listed will never win any battles. There are still lacking certain qualities of character and temperament that are essential to victory. So far we have what might be compared to a new, shiny, powerful automobile. We can't get anywhere without gasoline. For the human machine, "gasoline" is supplied by volitional power or the will to do. Perseverance, industry and determination are involved in volitional power. These are the driving forces; these are the things that make a man go on and on when he is suffering, that make him do his best when the going is hardest, that make him surest and most powerful when the stakes are highest. These give him the will to do that means perseverance through long hours of practise.



Napoleon said: "Victory belongs to the most persevering," and this is as true in football as in war. One of the mottoes on the football field is: "There is only one thing you can achieve without effort, that's failure." There is another saying: "The man who says he can't is almost invariably right." Still another is: "A winner never quits and a quitter never wins." All of these are worth remembering.

The real athlete always does more in an emergency than he or any one else had considered it possible for him to do. I have seen many games turned from defeat to victory through the sheer power of some boy's will. The real testing time is when the game is going against you. Then you have to back on the physical, mental, moral and will-power quadrangle so that you can keep your head up, your jaw set, your spirits high and summon up more strength than you knew was in you. If there is a flaw in the quadrangle, you are going to know it at such a time.

BOYS and their parents should remember that there is not so much difference between original ability as there is in the effort made to develop it. It isn't what nature gives you—provided she doesn't actually handicap you—that determines how far you will go in athletics; it is what you do with yourself. The well-developed athlete is the man who, while a boy, engaged in the right kind and amount of physical exercise.

Mothers have always done more to develop champion athletes than have professional coaches. If the mother is wise enough to encourage her boy in the right kind of sports, she sees that he gets the right kind of food and enough sleep. if she makes sure that her boy is decent and clean, then she is doing more than the best coach in the country can do to make him an athlete—and a man. The mother gets in her work when it counts. The coach can merely finish up what the mother has started to build, and what is true of boys is equally true of girls. The same laws of physical growth apply to each.

The reason I have always been so deeply interested in boys and athletics is that in this work I find my greatest satisfaction. I have been coaching football teams for thirty years and I hope to continue to direct the athletic activities of boys for many years to come. My satisfaction comes from the knowledge that in building athletes I am also building men, men who will be able to play the game of life better because of the development of all the factors which go to make a winning athlete.

DOG WANTED: MALE

Continued from page 5

never let him have a dog. Why? I'll tell you why: because I wouldn't harbor an animal that might annoy my neighbors. And what do I get for it?"

It seemed that no one cared to say.

"A boy, nine years old, my own son, begging and whining for a dog for the last sixteen years, and I refuse him, and what happens? How many dogs are there on this block?"

"Fourteen," said Ted promptly.

"Fourteen dogs!" declared Mr. Burridge. "Fourteen worthless curs yelping and whining day and night and digging up my garden. I'm through! I'm done! Do you understand that?"

"Yes, George," said Mrs. Burridge.

"Now, you listen to this!" ordered Mr. Burridge, bringing his fist down on the table. "We're going to have a dog. I've got to go out to Chicago to-day, but when I come back I want this family to have a dog. Do you understand, Jane?"

"Oh, boy!" exclaimed Ted rapturously.

"Keep still! I'm talking to your mother. Do you understand, Jane?"

"Yes, George; but—" said Mrs. Burridge.

"No 'but' about it," declared Mr. Burridge. "I tell you to buy a dog, and you'll buy a dog!"

"I was only going to say," said Mrs. Burridge meekly, "that perhaps it would be better to wait until you get home. You know so much more about dogs."

"You wait nothing!" said Mr. Burridge. "You'll buy a dog—a dog like Fogarty's. I want a dog that will run all over this neighborhood and be a confounded nuisance. What kind of dog is that dog of Fogarty's?"

"It's a wire-haired fox-terrier," said Ted promptly.

"You get a wire-haired fox-terrier," said Mr. Burridge, "like Fogarty's. And I don't want to come back and not find one. Understand that? I'll see if for once in my life I can have one of my wishes carried out. How much did that dog of Fogarty's cost?"

"He cost fifty dollars," said Ted.

"Nonsense! You get one for twenty-five; that's enough to pay for the best dog that ever lived," said Mr. Burridge.

Then he departed for Chicago, where he was to be engaged for a week.

MR. FOGARTY, whose business required him to leave his house an hour earlier than Mr. Burridge usually left, did not hear of the tomato-plant episode until he returned that night. He found his wife far from happy.

"Tom, dear—" she said as she was getting dinner.

"What, Mary?" Mr. Fogarty asked.

"I know you don't like me to be talkin' of it all the while, but don't you think we could be gettin' rid of Rumpus?"

"We can not! What's he been doin' now?"

"Ah, Tom, if you knew the worry the dog is to me," said Mrs. Fogarty. "Three terrible fights he was in to-day, and the Langham's dog got chewed in the ears! I was that weak after it all I had to lay on the bed. And diggin' up Mr. Burridge's garden this morning and him throwin' the spade and fork at him, that angry! And me alone to stand it all. And he bit the postman in the leg of the pants again to-day."

"Them postmen have a right to wear leather leggins, with all the dogs everywhere," said Fogarty. "Blowin' them whistles like they do, no wonder the dogs get mad at them."

"And for two hours he had the Giffings' cat up a tree, and him barking like a thousand, and Mrs. Giffing weepin' and cryin' terrible," said little Mrs. Fogarty, weeping into the fried potatoes.

"Well, things has come to a nice pass if a dog can't tree a cat now and again," said Mr. Fogarty. "Why don't they keep their cats in the house? If it comes to that, why don't you keep the dog in the house, Mary?"

"And don't I try, and him slippin' out every minute when the baker's boy and the butcher's boy and all come to the door. Do I tie him up he yells his head off and they're all telephonin' me could I stop the dog from howlin'? He's a terrible dog, Tom! He's the worry of the whole neighborhood, and everybody thinkin' hard thoughts of us."

Fogarty considered the dog as it reposed on the floor, its ears briskly cocked and its eyes sparkling.

"It's not such a bad dog at that, as dogs go," he said.

"It's not as if we needed a dog, but us with no children or anything, and so lately come into the neighborhood and no use for a dog but to get all the neighbors down on us," said Mrs. Fogarty. "And my nerves gettin' that jumpy that I weep most of the day whilst you are off to your work and never thinkin' of dogs at all."

"It's a shame," said Fogarty, "but I can't take a dog with me, that's sure."

"It's not as if we had kids that could play with him, and maybe keep him busy and out of devilment all day long," argued Mrs. Fogarty.

"Well, that may be, too, one of these days, hey, honey?" cheered Mr. Fogarty, pinching his wife's chin.

"If God wills," said Mrs. Fogarty, "and no doubt that's what makes me so nervous and all with the worry of him. Ah, Tom, be a good fellow and get rid of the dog for me; it would all be so nice and pleasant. I'd not have a trouble in the world. Won't you be rid of the dog, Tom? Until we have a boy of our own, maybe; then I'd not be sayin' a word."

Fogarty looked at his pretty wife and smiled fondly.

"Have it your own way, then," he said. "Get rid of the dog, if you want to, but bear in mind it was a good fifty dollars he cost me. He's worth every cent of it, too, the troublesome rascal. Here, Rumpus, you imp! Up!"

He held a lump of sugar high and the dog leaped four feet from the floor. He had strong hind legs, that dog.

"If you can't get more, you might take twenty-five dollars for him," said Fogarty. "Twenty-five or thirty-five. Only, get him in a family where a boy is—that's what he needs, a boy in the family, to work some of the pep out of him. And what you get for him you can have, Mary—to blow in for stuff for them little dresses and things you're piling up, hey?"

"Oh, Tom, you're the love of my life!" cried Mrs. Fogarty, throwing her arms around his neck. "You make me that happy! I'll see that the dog is off your hands and into a decent family by the time you get back from Baltimore, I promise you!"

Rumpus, sitting and watching this little love episode with bright eyes, thumped his tail on the floor. Mrs. Fogarty stooped and scratched the wiry hair about his collar, which was what he loved best in the way of a caress.

"You're a nice dog, at that, so you are," she said. "Give him another lump of sugar, Tom, seein' he'll be gone by the time you're back home again, the fond brute."

"Jump!" said Fogarty, holding the sugar high again, and then: "Did Mr. Burridge say anything nasty to you, Mary?"

"He said nothing at all," she said. "We had no words."

"And lucky for him," said Fogarty, "for if he had I'd make him eat them, fat as he is!"

BEFORE ten o'clock the next morning Mrs. Fogarty, happy indeed, went to her telephone. First she telephoned her butcher, telling him apologetically that she wanted only one chop; then she telephoned her grocer; and then she telephoned the office of The Westcote Daily Eagle and put a "Dog For Sale" advertisement in its want column. "FOR SALE—Wire-haired fox-terrier, male, $50. Might take less if good home guaranteed. Telephone Westcote 2165," was what the advertisement said, but Mrs. Burridge—who at the same moment was telephoning to the office of The Westcote Evening Star—did not know this. She never did know it, because the Burridges never took the Eagle. "DOG WANTED," was what Mrs. Burridge's advertisement said: "Wire-haired fox-terrier, male. Good home guaranteed. Might pay $25. Telephone Westcote 7651." Having arranged for this advertisement, Mrs. Burridge telephoned her butcher and her grocer for her day's requirements.

It was about eleven o'clock that Mounted Officer Haggerty, riding up Elm Avenue on his handsome chestnut horse, stopped at the curb before the Fogarty home and dismounted. He rapped on the frame of the screen door five times. At the first rap Rumpus, tied in the cellar against the coming of a purchaser, barked madly. At the second rap he barked and leaped, throwing himself heels over head when he reached the end of his rope, and barked and leaped again in an ecstacy of eagerness to be up and doing. At the third rap he leaped and the rope parted, so that when Officer Haggerty rapped the fourth time Rumpus was at the screen door. The sight of Officer Haggerty seemed to fill him with rage. He barked as if he thought Officer Haggerty was a postman. As Officer Haggerty rapped the fifth time, Mrs. Fogarty appeared, carrying a broom. She hit at Rumpus and he backed away into the hall. Mrs. Fogarty opened the screen an inch or two.

"Your dog," said Officer Haggerty—and Rumpus dashed for the door and leaped through the opening and disappeared across the street—"is loose without a muzzle."

"Oh, dear!" said little Mrs. Fogarty, and began to cry.

"Well, now, don't get excited, mam," said Officer Haggerty. "I'm not goin' to eat you up. I'm only warnin' you the word is there's to be less dogs goin' loose without muzzles, now that hot weather is on us. A word to the wise, from a cop, ought to be sufficient. When you catch the dog, keep him tied or muzzled, mam. But mind you do!"

"Oh, yes!" said Mrs. Fogarty, wiping her eyes. "I will!"

"There, there, now!" said Officer Haggerty, and went back to his horse.

FOR five days Mrs. Fogarty did not leave the house lest the telephone ring while she was out; but no one telephoned wanting to buy a wire-haired fox-terrier, male. When Rumpus returned for his dinner, she chained him in the coal-bin, and there he howled. By day he barked, six barks per second, steadily and continuously; by night he wailed, long sad wails.

In the adjacent home no message came telling Mrs. Burridge of a wire-haired fox-terrier, male, for sale. With much to do about the house, Mrs. Burridge let one day follow the other, and it was not until the sixth day of Mr. Burridge's absence that Mrs. Burridge began to be worried.

"Ted, do try to find a dog for sale," she pleaded.

"Well, ain't I?" her son demanded in an injured tone. "Gee, don't you think I've been lookin'? I ain't done nothin' but look, have I?"

"But we must have a dog by the time your father gets back, Theodore," Mrs. Burridge said. "Your father said to get a dog. If we don't have a dog, your father will be off again. You know how your father is."

"Gee, yes!" said Theodore, but he found no dog. It was not until the morning of the last day that Mrs. Fogarty, sweeping her kitchen porch, spoke across to Mrs. Burridge, who was shaking out a dust-cloth. From the cellar came the continuous and irritating barks of Rumpus.

"Oh, dear!" Mrs. Fogarty complained to Mrs. Burridge. "The way that dog keeps barkin' is drivin' me fair crazy, but I don't dare let him loose, if somebody comes to buy him. 'Sell the dog, Mary,' Tom says——"

Mrs. Burridge stopped in the middle of a flap of her dust-cloth.

"You say you want to sell the dog?" she asked.

"Oh, but I do that!" cried Mrs. Fogarty. "If you know anybody that wants to buy a dog——"

Mrs. Burridge hung her dust-rag on the railing and crossed the yard.

"It's a male, is it?" she asked. "It's a genuine wire-haired fox-terrier? How much do you want for him?"

"Tom was after payin' fifty dollars for him, with a pedigree as long as your arm, and I don't know what all, and the collar two dollars extra, and the chain and a muzzle he won't wear, and a box of them dog biscuits. But if I could get him in a good home, with a boy like, I'd jump at thirty-five for him, or even twenty-five," said Mrs. Fogarty. "He's a fine dog, but a terrible nuisance, Mrs. Burridge."

"Would you sell him to us for twenty-five dollars?" asked Mrs. Burridge. "Not that I want a dog myself," she added, "but Mr. Burridge was saying, just before he went to Chicago, that a boy Ted's age ought to have a dog. And he did say a dog like yours was the sort of dog he would like to have.

Continued on page 64

. . . . You ask how I do it? In three little minutes which I call my own.

When the car slid out into the sunlight she gazed at me. Then asked impulsively—"How do you do it? That clear skin! So natural and flower like."

So I told her of those "three golden minutes" each night at bed time when I wipe the day's dirt from my skin with the perfect cold cream that cleanses and revives the skin; that one so pure doctors prescribe it—Daggett & Ramsdell's Perfect Cold Cream.

To keep your complexion youthful and clear, make it your rule never to let your face touch its pillow until your skin has been thoroughly cleansed with this perfect cold cream.

For sale at department and drug stores—the white package with the red bands. Tubes, 10c, 25c, 50c. Jars, 35c, 50c, 85c, and $1.50.

There's a "Try-It-Yourself" trial tube for you—Free. Just send the coupon below.

* * *

How to use those "Three Golden Minutes"

I—Smooth a coat of this perfect cold cream over your face and neck.

II—Leave it on a minute to sink in.

III—Wipe off the cleansing cold cream with a smooth cloth and finish with a dash of cold water.

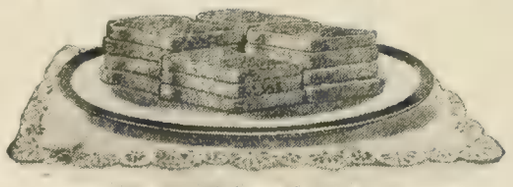
Daggett & Ramsdell's

PERFECT COLD CREAM

Daggett & Ramsdell, Dept. 3015 214 West 14th St., New York

Please send me the free trial tube of the Perfect Cold Cream you offer above.



Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

In Canada: Daggett & Ramsdell, 105 Dufferin St., Toronto.

TWO LEMCO DISHES
WELL WORTH TRYING

Lemco Toast

An excellent savory and a favorite with children.

Dissolve a teaspoonful of Lemco to a creamy consistency. Mix with equal amount of butter, spread thinly on toast, season with salt and pepper, and serve.

Lemco Biscuits

Take sufficient quantity of flour and equal amount of butter. Cream the butter. Add flour, cayenne pepper and salt, and a teaspoonful of Lemco to each 2 oz. of the mixture. Mix and roll into little balls. Flatten out to shape, and bake in a slow oven.

LEMCO COOK BOOK FREE

Send a 4 oz. Lemco wrapper for "Dainty Dishes with Lemco" to Lamont, Corliss & Co., 131 Hudson Street, New York, U. S. Distributors for Oxo Ltd., London, Eng.

Lemco is the original and only genuine Liebig Company's Extract of Beef. It is the most highly concentrated form of beef known.

$1000.00 IN CASH PRIZES
For the Best Reasons Why
SKINNER'S is The Superior
MACARONI-SPAGHETTI-AND PURE EGG NOODLES
PARTICULARS IN FREE BOOKLET.
DUPLICATE PRIZES IF TIES.
SKINNER MFG. CO. OMAHA, U.S.A.

Choicest Seeds

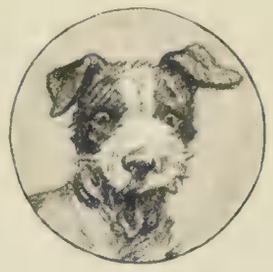
CHANCE does not enter into your gardening when you sow the flower and vegetable seeds listed in

THE STORRS & HARRISON CATALOG FOR 1925

All are proved varieties that consistently secure the best results. This catalog covers everything your garden, lawn or orchard needs. It is free. Write for it today.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO.
Nurserymen and Seedsmen for 71 years
Box 568 Painesville, Ohio

Safe Milk



For Infants, Children, Invalids, Nursing Mothers

Avoid Imitations

Big Profits in Home Cooking!

Alice Bradley, famous expert, shows just how to make home cooking, cake-making, candy-making give big profits. How to cater, run profitable TEA ROOMS, motor inns, cafeterias, etc. Write for free booklet, "Cooking for Profit."

American School of Home Economics, 846 E. 58th St., Chicago

DOG WANTED: MALE

Continued from page 63

Twenty-five dollars seems an awful lot to pay for a dog, but Mr. Burridge said to pay twenty-five dollars. Would you take that for the dog?"

"Would a fish swim?" asked Mrs. Fogarty. "If it wasn't that the dog is so valuable and all, I'd give fifty to be shut of him, the worry that he is! Wait a quarter of a minute and I'll get him from the cellar."

"I'll get the money," said Mrs. Burridge, and the two women parted. A minute later Mrs. Fogarty was waiting with the dog, who was leaping wildly at the end of his chain, for a cat was singing somewhere in the far distance and he was eager to be off and about the important business of chasing that cat up a tree.

"Hold tight to the chain. He's a strong dog if ever there was one," said Mrs. Fogarty jerkily as Rumpus yanked at her arm. "Twenty-five is right," she said, fingering the money with her left hand. "He's your dog, Mrs. Burridge."

"He's no dog of mine," said Mrs. Burridge. "I don't want a dog. He's Mr. Burridge's dog."

As she said this she took the chain and at the same moment a stray cat crossed the far corner of the tomato garden. Instantly she felt a sharp pain in her right shoulder, her right arm shot out as stiff as a ramrod, she stumbled two long and ungraceful steps toward the cat, and the steel chain was jerked from her hand. The cat and Rumpus disappeared.

"You should have held on to him tighter," said Mrs. Fogarty reproachfully. "I told you he was a strong dog."

Mrs. Burridge was rubbing her shoulder.

"He'll be coming back before eatin' time, never fear," said Mrs. Fogarty comfortingly. "Only, when you let him loose like this, you want to put the muzzle on him, mam; the cops are takin' notice of the dogs that ain't muzzled."

She gave a great sigh of relief.

"Well, now that we've got rid of the dog," she said, "I guess Tom will be after havin' a vegetable garden. It ought to do well in our back yard, if we can keep the dogs out of it."

LATE that afternoon the Westcote Palace Theater was showing the famous super-film, "A Prince of the Aztecs," the picture that had had a run of a full year in New York, and Mrs. Burridge, no longer worried over the problem of getting a dog, had taken Ted and Laura to see it. Mrs. Fogarty, too, no longer worried by the problem of getting rid of a valuable dog, was also seeing Douglas Fairfield in his wonderful rendition of Montezuma, the Aztec prince, and the two houses standing side by side on Elm Avenue were locked and deserted, except for Rumpus, who lay in the shade of a spiræa bush, in a hole he had dug in Mr. Burridge's tomato garden. He was working on a large bone that had not even a trace of meat on it. Now and then he raised his head and sniffed the air questioningly, thinking cats, but there were no cats. At other moments he uttered low growls, thinking postmen's legs, but there were no postmen.

Rumpus was entirely happy. The ten feet of chain attached to his collar did not bother him; he probably considered it something classy in the way of a lavaliere. The hole he had dug was not deep but it was large, and the cool earth was grateful to his warm body. The bone was a mere makeshift, a pleasant toy with which to pass the time until something more interesting transpired, and he had just decided to bury the bone and visit some of the neighbors when he saw something that made him lift his head and raise one side of his lip, showing his teeth. This thing was Mr. Burridge, remembered as the man who had thrown the spade, who was approaching from the direction of the North Westcote station, carrying an umbrella and a suitcase.

From where he lay in Mr. Burridge's tomato garden, under Mr. Burridge's spiræa bush, Rumpus could not see Mr. Fogarty approaching from the opposite direction, carrying a suitcase but no umbrella. Neither could he see Mounted Officer Haggerty slowly approaching at the end of the block on his handsome sorrel horse. Rumpus, getting to his feet, raised his lips on both sides, showing both of his handsome incisor teeth, and growled. It was an unfortunate moment for Rumpus to choose for growling from a hole in Mr. Burridge's garden, for Mr. Burridge was just muttering, in a bitterly disgusted tone, "Out! They're out, I bet!"

Mr. Burridge said this as he looked at the house with its closed doors and windows, and he said it with especial bitterness because he had not been able to get a lower berth on his train, and there had been no taxi at the North Westcote station. Mr. Burridge was in exactly the right temper to be off again. "Yah!" he was saying. "If I was away a thousand years, there wouldn't be a chance in a million that I could come back and find my family anywhere but out! And the door locked and nothing to do but sit on the porch like a nummy until the whole caboodle gets ready to leave some idiotic picture show that——"

THEN he saw Rumpus. At the same moment he saw Mr. Fogarty. Instantly angry blood rang in Mr. Burridge's ears and his eyes saw crimson. He dropped his suitcase and ran at Rumpus, swinging his umbrella over his head, shouting:

"Out of there! Get out of there, you—dirty—cur!" he shouted, and brought the umbrella down on Rumpus's back. The dog backed against the spiræa bush and barked and Mr. Burridge drew back his right foot and kicked at Rumpus. Instantly the dog set his teeth in Mr. Burridge's trousers leg and there was a rending of cloth and again Mr. Burridge whacked the dog with the umbrella, shouting with uncontrolled rage.

"Here, you! Here, you!" yelled Mr. Fogarty. "Don't you hit that dog!" and he dropped his suitcase and ran. "I'll not have you hittin' my dog, you big brute!" and he swung his thin arm and struck Mr. Burridge in the chest with his full fist. Mr. Burridge dropped the umbrella, grunting as the blow reached him. He staggered but he did not fall, for he threw his arms about Mr. Fogarty's neck.

To Officer Haggerty, reaching a point where he was able to see the battle, it looked as if Mr. Burridge was holding Mr. Fogarty suspended by the neck so that Mr. Fogarty could rain short-arm blows at Mr. Burridge's ribs. Coincidentally Mr. Burridge seemed to be trying to win the battle by yanking Mr. Fogarty's head off. Each time Mr. Fogarty hit Mr. Burridge in the ribs, Mr. Burridge grunted. Mr. Burridge seemed to be able to utter nothing but grunts, but Mr. Fogarty was making continuous and excited remarks in a voice that showed he was very much vexed. They were principally to the effect that he would show Mr. Burridge if he could hit that dog. As Officer Haggerty leaped down from his horse, Mr. Burridge introduced a new tactic: he threw his right leg behind Mr. Fogarty's knees. This might have been a better idea if he had not let Mr. Fogarty fall on top of him when they toppled. As it happened, the weight of Mr. Fogarty as the two fell in under the spiræa bush jolted most of the breath out of Mr. Burridge. It might have gone ill with him had Officer Haggerty not arrived just then.

RUMPUS was barking loudly and rushing in to nip at any foot that was nearest when Officer Haggerty slapped him in the ribs with the flat of his hand and sent him yelping through the spiræa bush.

"Come out of there, youse!" the officer shouted at Mr. Fogarty and Mr. Burridge. "A nice way for two family men to be actin'. Stop it and come out of there."

As they did not stop or come out, Officer Haggerty drew his club and rapped briskly on the soles of the four feet that protruded from under the bush.

"Ouch!" said Mr. Burridge.

"Quit that, you big elephant!" shouted Mr. Fogarty.

"Come out of there, then," repeated the policeman. "Or will I hit youse again? A nice way to be actin'. Youse'll have the whole neighborhood scandalized. Come out, I say!"

Mr. Burridge was willing, but Mr. Fogarty was on top of him, and Mr. Fogarty was willing, but Mr. Burridge was hugging him tight; and Officer Haggerty grasped the handiest foot and pulled, putting his bull strength in the job, and drew them out from under the bush, through the hole Rumpus had dug, and debouched them in the tomato garden's soft soil.

"Now, get up, the both of youse," he said. "What's this row about?"

"He hit me pup," panted Mr. Fogarty. "He took his big brute of an umbrella and hit him, and no man can wale me pup and get away with it. A poor little pup, and a big oaf like him assaultin' it!"

"Pup! He says pup!" panted Mr. Burridge, wiping his face on his arm. "The meanest, viciousest, snappiest full-grown dog in this town. And loose—loose, officer, without a muzzle on. I won't hit that dog, won't I? I'll knock his head off! My heavens, how much does a man have to stand from a dog like that?"

"NOW, wait a bit!" cautioned Haggerty, lifting the finger of the law. "Here's where I come in, I shouldn't wonder. Was the dog without a muzzle?"

"Of course he was!" exclaimed Mr. Burridge, who was still panting. "Look at my pants there. You can't keep a muzzle on that dog. Nobody could keep a muzzle on that dog. A dog like that is an infernal nuisance. It ought to be shot. It's always loose; it's all over the neighborhood, digging up gardens, killing cats, biting people, yowling all night—a general nuisance. It's a wonder the whole neighborhood isn't in a fight all the time, with a worthless cur like that everlastingly roaming everywhere. A man that owns a dog like that ought to be run out of town. A man that keeps a dog like that ought to be fined the limit—he ought to be jailed."

"The man's a liar," said Mr. Fogarty. "The dog is a fine dog——"

"A fine dog!" scoffed Mr. Burridge. "A dirty, snarling, mangy, flea-bit, fighting nuisance——"

"And affectionate," said Mr. Fogarty. "Kind at heart, and gentle, and well-bred——"

"And what is he anyway? Nothing but a mutt," said Mr. Burridge. "A gutter pup and a garbage hound. Not worth the powder to blow him up——"

"Now, wait a bit!" urged Officer Haggerty. "You saw that he had no muzzle on him, did you?"

"Muzzle? Of course he had no muzzle on him," said Mr. Burridge, clearing some of the tomato garden out of his ear with one finger. "You couldn't keep a muzzle on the cur if you riveted it on him. He's always running around without a muzzle."

"I know! I know!" said Officer Haggerty. "'Tis not the first dog I've had to do with. But are you willin' to swear he had no muzzle on?"

"Certainly!" said Mr. Burridge.

"And was not tied up?"

"Hah! Tied up!" scoffed Mr. Burridge. "He looked as if he was tied up! Of course he was not tied up."

"That'll be a fine," said Officer Haggerty, taking out his note-book. "Th' magistrate is finin' them from two dollars t' twenty-five these days——"

"You let me tell him about this dog and it'll be no two dollars," said Mr. Burridge. "A man that owns a dog like this ought to get fifty dollars and a year in jail just for owning such a dog."

"And I may do better than that for you," said Officer Haggerty. "You say the dog is a vicious dog? He's incorrigible and uncontrollable? He has a mean spirit and a nasty temper? He's a wanderer and a cat killer?"

"I give you my solemn word," said Mr. Burridge, "that that dog——"

AROUND the corner of the house came Ted, running eagerly. He stopped short as he saw the three men.

"What's the matter?" he asked. "Has Rumpus been doing anything?"

"You keep still! This is none of your business," said Mr. Burridge. "I give you my solemn word, officer, that that dog is the biggest——"

"But, father—" said Ted. "Father, what's the matter?"

"Hah! Plenty's the matter," said Mr. Burridge viciously. "I've got this cur of Fogarty's where I want him at last. And tell me, officer, if a dog is a vicious brute and a neighborhood menace, can the magistrate order him killed?"

"He can that," said Officer Haggerty, "and that's what I'm gettin' at. If you will go to court and swear——"

There was a jangle of garbage-pail and a chorus of yelps and growls in yard beyond Fogarty's, and Mr. Fogarty leaped to rescue Rumpus or to pull him off the other dog, as might be needed. Officer Haggerty went to assist, and Mr. Burridge would have joined them if Ted had not held his sleeve.

"But, father," Ted said, "he's our dog. He's your dog. Mother gave Mrs. Fogarty twenty-five dollars for him for you."

FOR a moment Mr. Burridge stared at his son. Then he coughed gently. He took out his handkerchief and wiped his forehead.

"Now, to purceed," said Officer Haggerty, finding his place in his note-book when he and Mr. Fogarty returned, with Mr. Fogarty dragging Rumpus at the end of the chain. "You was sayin'——"

"I was saying," said Mr. Burridge, "that all I want, officer, is to be friendly and on good terms with all my neighbors. You understand that. And it has to be give and take, officer. Now and then a man may get a little excited over things—over dogs, for instance—but what does it amount to in the end? We've got to be reasonable. This dog is no worse than any other dog."

It was now Officer Haggerty's turn to stare, and he stared at Mr. Burridge.

"Of course," said Mr. Burridge, looking at his torn pants leg, "if you excite a dog and jump at him and hit him with an umbrella, he may bite back. Any dog—any self-respecting dog—would do that. But this dog is no worse than any other dog. Why, he's better than most of the curs on this block—far better! He behaves better. There isn't a vicious drop of blood in him. Playful, yes! But you can ask Fogarty—has any one ever complained of the dog? Really complained?"

"You slang a spade at him," said Mr. Fogarty a little resentfully.

"Oh, well!" said Mr. Burridge. "When I was angry. When he dug up a tomato-plant. But what does one tomato-plant amount to? Two cents!"

Officer Haggerty closed his note-book.

"Now, this is fine!" he said. "This is more like it. It's a pleasure to come between two men that are gentlemen, like youse. 'Tis a good endin' of what might have been worse. So we'll say no more about it. We'll let it pass this time, if that's satisfact'ry to all."

"It suits me," said Mr. Fogarty.

"It's entirely satisfactory to me," said Mr. Burridge, and Officer Haggerty walked away and mounted his sorrel horse and rode off.

"AND now," said Mr. Burridge briskly, "I'll thank you to turn my dog over to me."

"Your dog!" exclaimed Mr. Fogarty.

"My dog," repeated Mr. Burridge, and Mr. Fogarty understood. He tossed the end of the chain into Mr. Burridge's hands. He turned his back and walked away, but when he had gone a few steps he turned back.

"And look here!" he said. "Mind you keep the animal chained up, for I'm havin' a garden in me yard from now on, and I'll have no dogs clawin' it up."

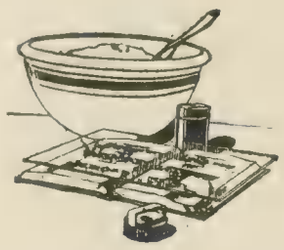
"Aw, go chain yourself up!" called Mr. Burridge coarsely. "If you don't want dogs in your garden, why don't you build a fence around it," and with that he walked around his house. As he went he pulled Rumpus after him.

"See here!" he said to Ted. "If that man annoys my dog, you let me know—do you understand?"

"Yes, sir," said Ted meekly.

"Well, take this chain then," said Mr. Burridge. "And you keep your dog muzzled—you keep your dog muzzled or tied up. I'm not going to have your dog be a nuisance to me. Understand that?"

"Yes, sir," said Ted.



"And you tell your mother," said Mr. Burridge, "that now that she's got a dog, she'll have to take care of it. You tell her I'm not going to pay for any damage this dog of hers does."

"Yes, sir," said Ted.

Mr. Burridge picked up his suitcase. He looked a minute at Rumpus.

"The idea of an ignorant cop saying a dog like this is a nuisance!" exclaimed Mr. Burridge. "What does he expect a dog to be. I'd like to know! A dog has some rights!"

And this was a pretty fair sign that the dog was the Burridge's dog now, the world being as it is.

FRENCH PASTRY—MADE IN AMERICA

Concluded from page 20

CHOCOLATE ÉCLAIRS

Form the paste into oblongs rounded at the ends and narrow in the center. These can be modeled into shape with a knife dipped into cold water. They should be well raised in the center. Bake according to rules.

Éclairs are split through the center and any soft paste that may remain inside is removed. They are then filled with vanilla custard and the top is iced with chocolate icing.

SMALL FRENCH PASTRIES

When baking a variety of French pastries, try a few choux-paste novelties, or make an entire tray of trifles, shaping, filling and decorating them in various ways.

With a pastry-squirt or a paper cone with an opening the size of a lead pencil, form rings that will fit some pastry rounds made previously. When these rings are ready to be filled, split them and stick the bottoms on the pastry rounds with a little icing. Fill the rings with a delicate jelly or custard and ice the tops. Then fill the center with sweetened whipped cream and top off with a candied cherry.

Other shapes can be made by forming a letter S, small oblong or round mounds, or little finger strips. Fill them as your fancy may dictate, using jellies, cream custard, etc., and decorate with different icings, chopped nuts, candied fruits, etc.

FRUIT ICING

Rub sifted confectioners' sugar smooth with different kinds of fruit-juices, such as orange, lemon, strawberry, cherry or pineapple.

FLAKY PASTRY

1 cup sifted pastry flour
½ cup sifted bread flour
½ teaspoon salt
½ cup sweet lard and butter
3 tablespoons of cold water

Sift all the dry ingredients together, rubbing the shortening in with the finger-tips. Add the water and work the whole into a smooth ball. Chill and then roll out as thin as cardboard, cutting it with a round cutter and baking in flat pans (400 to 450 degrees Fahrenheit) until light brown (about fifteen or twenty minutes). The finger strips can also be built up on a strip of pastry cut in a suitable size with a pastry wheel or knife.

FRENCH CRULLERS

¾ cup water
¾ cup sifted bread flour
1 level tablespoon butter
2 fresh eggs

Cook and chill as directed in the choux-paste recipe. When ready to shape, flour some baking-sheets and with a pastry-squirt form rings about the size of a small doughnut. Let these stand until the surface is hardened and the rings can be taken up with a flat spatula. This will take from two to three hours.

Have ready a kettle of hot vegetable fat, and when a small bit of bread will brown while you deliberately count forty (375 degrees Fahrenheit), begin to slide in the crullers. Do not crowd them, as they expand a good deal. Watch the fat, and if it colors the crullers too rapidly, draw it from the flame. While frying, the crullers may burst or puff up in unexpected places. After they are light brown on both sides, you may begin to test them with a toothpick. It will take each batch at least ten to fifteen minutes to dry out entirely, for if the center is the least bit soft they will get limp as soon as they are cold. When nicely browned and crisp, take them up separately on a slit spoon. Drain well on a wire rack, never on paper, and keep the rack where they will cool. Before serving, ice lightly.

ICING FOR CRULLERS

Rub sifted confectioners' sugar into a smooth paste with a few drops of any desired extract and a little hot water. The icing must be glossy but not too thin.

WINDBEUTEL

If you wish to save time or the weather is warm, make so-called "wind-bags." When the fat is hot (375 degrees Fahrenheit), take the chilled paste from the ice-box and dip a dessert-spoon into the fat and then take up a small spoon of the paste. Drop into the fat and fry as you would crullers, but do not think they are done when merely browned; they must puff and become crisp and hollow inside. Ice when done or dust with confectioners' sugar before serving.

ORANGE SOUFFLÉ

1 cup milk
¼ cup sugar
1 teaspoon orange extract
3 fresh eggs
½ cup sifted bread flour

Place the milk, extract and sugar in a small saucepan and heat almost to the boiling-point. Add the flour and stir until the paste clears from the sides of the pan. Now scrape the mixture into a round-bottomed bowl and let it cool. Separate the eggs, adding the yolks one at a time to the paste, beating as each is added to thoroughly blend the mass. In a large bowl beat the whites until they stand up stiff when lifted on the whip and when the bowl is reversed. Now beat the first mixture into the whites. When well blended, pour into a buttered pudding-dish and set this into a pan of hot water. Bake in a moderate heat (350 degrees Fahrenheit), for twenty minutes.

If you are not quite ready to serve them at the end of twenty minutes, open the oven door and lower the heat, but do not remove from the pan of hot water until ready to serve. Serve directly from the pudding-dish with cream sauce flavored with orange rind.

CREAM SAUCE

½ cup sifted confectioners' sugar
2 tablespoons soft butter
½ cup thick cream
Few gratings of the yellow rind of an orange
Hot water as needed

Cream the butter and sugar, adding hot water by the drop until the sauce is soft enough to fluff up. Whip the cream until stiff and beat into the first mixture and add the orange. Pile into a dish and keep on the ice until ready to serve.

SPONGE DUMPLINGS

½ cup water
Few gratings of nutmeg
1 egg-yolk
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup sifted bread flour

Place the water, salt and nutmeg in a small saucepan over moderate heat and when hot add the flour and stir until the paste is clear from sides of the pan. Scrape into a bowl and when partly cold add the yolk of the egg and beat until smooth. Cool, then cover and set in an ice-box to stiffen (this will require a few hours). If convenient, mix the paste the day before using and set in the ice-box overnight. Fifteen minutes before serving have the soup at the boiling-point and with a teaspoon dipped in the hot soup take up small oblong portions of the paste, the size of half a pecan nut, and drop into the liquid. Cook in an open kettle for five or ten minutes. Serve these dumplings with any light broth, chicken or vegetable soup.

PATTIE SHELLS

Use the cream-puff recipe, following all directions as stated. Form into egg or boat shaped shells and when ready to fill cut the top of the shell so as to leave a slightly curving rim. Scrape out all soft particles of the paste from the interior, then insert the top to reenforce the bottom of the patty.

Chicken or tuna fish, either creamed or in the form of salad, can be used as a filling. These shells are also very suitable for fruit salads, especially when one wishes to combine the salad course and dessert, as for an informal luncheon or supper. The fruit salad can be topped with whipped cream or the fruit may be arranged to form a floral design.

Why I Look For The Big Red "One"

By Mrs. Alma Alt

"I know there's no better oil than 3-in-One. And I know there are a lot that are not so good.

"That's why I always look for the Big Red 'One' on the label—and always get it."

3-in-One

The High Quality Household Oil

is exactly right for all light mechanisms about the house. Penetrates quickly. Oils perfectly. Won't gum or dry out. Try on vacuum cleaners, sewing machines, etc.

3-in-One cleans and polishes fine furniture, woodwork, painted or varnished floors, oilcloth, windows and mirrors. Also prevents rust and tarnish on all metal surfaces.

Sold at all good stores in 1-oz., 3-oz. and 8-oz. bottles. Also in 3-oz. Handy Oil Cans. The 8-oz. Household Size is the economical size. Contains more oil for the money.

FREE—Generous sample and illustrated Dictionary explaining all the many uses for 3-in-One. Write for both on a postal.

THREE-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY
130 I E. William St., New York, N. Y.
Factories: Rahway, N. J. and Montreal
HR94

"It's the Prettiest Dress I Ever Had"

"AND I made it all myself! Thanks to the Woman's Institute, I can now make all my own clothes as they should be made and have two or three dresses for the money I used to spend on one!"

No matter where you live, or what your circumstances or your needs, you, too, can learn right at home, in your spare time, to plan and make stylish, becoming clothes and hats at great savings, get a position, or earn $20 to $40 a week as a dressmaker or milliner.

WRITE FOR FREE BOOKLET
"Making Beautiful Clothes"

and learn from the experience of hundreds of delighted members what the Woman's Institute can do for you. Mail the coupon or postal to-day.

WOMAN'S INSTITUTE
Dept. 41-N, Scranton, Penna.

Without cost or obligation, please send me one of your booklets and tell me how I can learn the subject which I have marked below:

☐ Home Dressmaking ☐ Millinery
☐ Professional Dressmaking ☐ Cooking

Name.....
(Please specify whether Mrs. or Miss)

Address.....

PISO'S for coughs

Quick Relief! A pleasant effective syrup
35c and 60c sizes.
And externally, use PISO'S
Throat and Chest Salve, 35c

As Your Hair Grows Grayer

—does he notice other women more?

Smart women never let themselves look old! Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age.

We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance.

Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When your hair fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks rely upon this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully; besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You simply moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

WYETH'S
Sage and Sulphur

An ELIZABETH ARDEN Treatment

Says Elizabeth Arden

COARSE pores are a symptom of a sluggish skin. Waken and tone the skin by patting briskly with Ardena Skin Tonic. Then smooth Pore Cream over the gaping ugly pores, particularly on the nose and chin. This astringent cream closes the open pores, corrects their relaxed condition, refines the coarsest skin. Apply Pore Cream at bedtime, leave it on the skin over night.

ARDEN VENETIAN PORE CREAM, $1, $2.50
ARDENA SKIN TONIC, 85c, $2, $3.75

ELIZABETH ARDEN

LONDON: 25 Old Bond Street NEW YORK: 673 Fifth Avenue PARIS · 2 rue de la Paix

Arden Venetian Toilet Preparations are on sale at smart shops everywhere

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 26

5767—The collar of this one-piece slip-over dress may be detachable and either lace or crêpe de Chine. Use crêpe faille or crêpe satin with self-bindings and glass buttons, or Canton crêpe or crêpe de Chine with self-bindings and bone buttons. The dress has a straight lower edge. Lower edge measures 54 inches.

36 bust requires 3⅜ yards 35-inch satin.

The dress is becoming to ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5725—10229—Wool jersey tubing, wool jersey or flannel trimmed with wool embroidery and a linen collar bound with bias-fold tape to match color of embroidery make a becoming one-piece slip-over dress. It has a straight lower edge and the collar may be detachable. Work embroidery in satin-stitch, etc.

36 bust requires 2 yards 54-inch wool jersey tubing. Lower edge 54 inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5654—5042—The separate short coat of fabric fur and the two-piece skirt of plaids, checks or stripes are a suitable outfit for sports, general wear, etc. One may use plush, velvet or novelty velours for coat and kasha, homespun, cheviot, etc., for skirt. Lower edge 1½ yard.

36 bust and 38 hip require 2¼ yards 50-inch fur fabric and 2¼ yards 40-inch material.

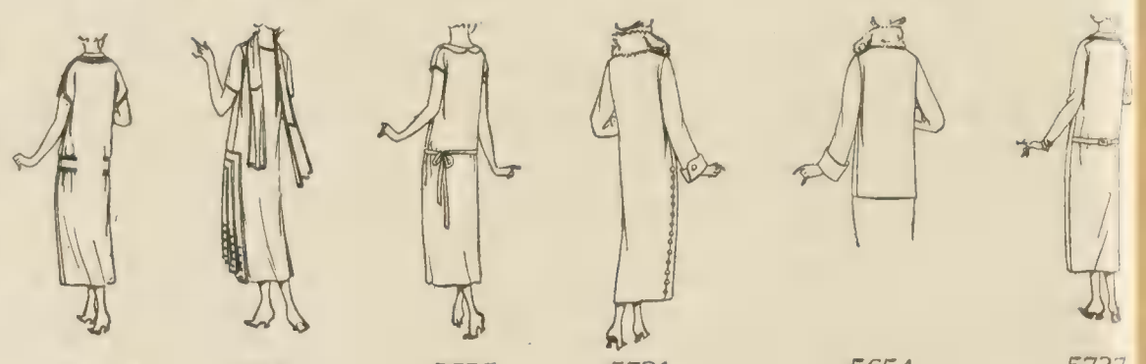
Coat is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses; skirt for ladies 35 to 52 hip.

5765—The lower front of this slip-over dress is in triple-apron effect and joined at a close-fitting hipline, and the back is cut in one piece. Use wool rep, wool crêpe, soft twills, cashmere dress materials or broadcloth, with center of scarf of crêpe de Chine to match or in contrasting color and braid binding.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch wool rep and ⅜ yard 39-inch crêpe de Chine for center of scarf. Lower edge 44 inches.

The dress is smart for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5721—This is an attractive utility coat, one which can be worn in straight-line or wrap-around style. The pockets may be inside or outside. Use plaids, stripes, chinchillas, double-faced coatings, fleece coatings, Teddy bear, homespun or camel's-hair. With inside pockets use soft pile fabrics or fabric fur.



36 bust requires 3 yards 54-inch camel's-hair. Lower edge 49½ inches.

The coat is good style for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5737—A detachable vestee and cuffs are tailored points to this one-piece slip-over dress with slightly deep armholes. Use soft twills or cashmere dress materials with vestee and cuffs of linen, piqué, crêpe de Chine or organdy; or use light-weight flannel or wool jersey with linen or piqué.

36 bust requires 4⅜ yards 27-inch flannel and 1 yard 27-inch plain material for vestee and cuffs. Lower edge 45½ inches.

The dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5767 5765 5725 5721 5654 5737

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 27

5741—10246—If you use chiffon velvet for this one-piece slip-over dress, face the drapery in a contrasting color or one to match the dress. The dress wraps around at the lower part and the lace collar may be detachable. The embroidered motif is smart. One may use faille silk, crêpe satin, plain flat crêpes, broché or printed silk crêpe, etc. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 3 yards 39-inch velvet.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5712—Silk crêpe in contrasting color for the collar, facing, cuffs and bindings is a smart trimming for this silk crêpe one-piece dress with a tiered front. It fits closely at the hipline and slips on over the head. One may use crêpe satin with contrasting crêpe satin, faille silk with contrasting satin. Brown with amber, navy blue or black with terra cotta, and black with greenish-blue are smart.

36 bust requires 3⅝ yards 39-inch silk crêpe. Lower edge 44 inches.

The dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5749—Use Georgette, crêpe de Chine, crêpe satin or chiffon velvet for this slip-over dress, with the upper part of the long body lining of metal tissue, lace or flesh-colored indestructible voile. Under lace one should wear a satin or crêpe de Chine slip. A silver ribbon at the hipline, a hand-made flower and ostrich trimming are smart. The straight skirt is joined to a long body at a close-fitting hipline. Lower edge 1⅞ yard.

36 bust requires 2⅞ yards 39-inch Georgette.

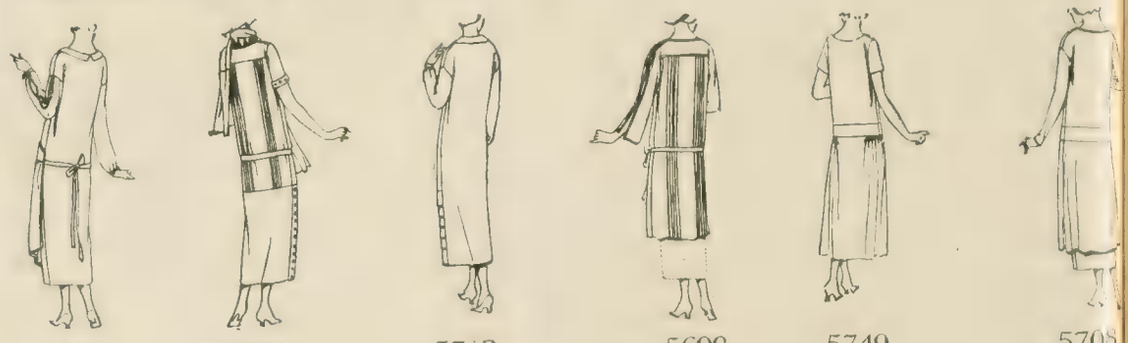
The dress is smart for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5759—Bone buttons, worked buttonholes and the contrasting material are trimming enough for a slip-over dress with a yoke and attached two-piece lower part. Use cashmere suitings, soft twills, wool rep or kasha with flat crêpe in self or harmonizing color. With silk faille, satin or velvet use flat crêpe and crystal buttons. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 2½ yards 39-inch silk and 1⅜ yard 54-inch cloth.

The dress is smart for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5699—5724—10138—This slip-over tunic blouse is plaited in clusters to a yoke and the costume slip has a straight lower edge. The embroidery is attractive. Use crêpe de Chine, Canton crêpe or Georgette for blouse and soft satin, crêpe de Chine, etc., for slip. Lower edge of slip 44 inches.



36 bust requires 2½ yards 39-inch Canton crêpe, ⅞ yard 39-inch contrasting material for yoke and bindings, and 2⅝ yards 35-inch material for slip.

Tunic blouse is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses; slip for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5708—10207—The slip-over tunic blouse with a two-piece circular lower part joined at the hipline is one of the newest silhouettes. The one-piece slip is separate. The embroidery is most effective. Use crêpe-back satin, crêpe faille, silk crêpe, with upper part of slip of lining silk; or use cream lace over black or brown satin slip.

36 bust requires 3 yards 39-inch crêpe-back satin including lower part of slip. Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

Tunic blouse and slip are for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5741 5759 5712 5699 5749 5705

Children's Musterole-Mild

Of course, you know good old Musterole; how quickly, how easily it relieves rheumatic and neuralgic pain, sore joints and muscles, stiff neck and lumbago.

We now want you to know CHILDREN'S MUSTEROLE, made especially for use on infants and small children.

CHILDREN'S MUSTEROLE is just good old Musterole in milder form. Unexcelled for the relief of croupy coughs and colds; it penetrates, soothes and relieves without the blister of the old-fashioned mustard plaster.

Keep a little white jar of Children's Musterole handy. It comes ready to apply instantly, without fuss or bother. The price is so small—35c a jar—no mother can afford to be without it.

The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio

CHILDREN'S MUSTEROLE
WILL NOT BLISTER
MILD
BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

Mavis
Undahose
REGISTERED

A full length sheer wool flesh color understocking

Worn beneath silk hosiery to give warmth and protection to the toes, feet, ankles, and legs. Absolutely invisible. At your dealers. If not $1.50 write us . . .

A product of the
MAVIS HOSIERY CO., Inc.
19 Madison Ave., New York City

EARN MONEY AT HOME

YOU can make a substantial amount weekly in your spare time writing show cards. No canvassing or soliciting. We instruct you by our new simple Directograph System, supply you with work and pay you cash each week. Write today for full particulars and free booklet.

WEST-ANGUS SHOW CARD SERVICE LIMITED
Authorized Capital $1,250,000.00
100 Colborne Building, Toronto, Can.

Maybelline
DARKENS and BEAUTIFIES
EYELASHES and BROWS
INSTANTLY, makes them appear naturally dark, long and luxuriant. Adds wonderful charm, beauty and expression to any face. Perfectly harmless. Used by millions of lovely women. BLACK or BROWN, obtainable in solid cake form or waterproof liquid. 75c at your dealer's or direct postpaid.
MAYBELLINE CO. CHICAGO

PISO'S for COUGHS
Quick Relief! A pleasant effective syrup
35c and 60c sizes.
And externally, use PISO'S
Throat and Chest Salve, 35c

Cuticura
Loveliness
A Clear
Healthy Skin
Insured by Every-day
Use of Cuticura Soap

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 28

5736—10254—Embroidered motifs trim this slip-over dress with a straight lower edge and the yoke and sleeve cut in one. Work them in colors. Use flannel, wool crêpe, plain Canton crêpe in contrasting color or printed Canton crêpe, with velveteen yoke, etc.

13 years requires 1½ yard 39-inch wool crêpe and 1 yard 35-inch velveteen.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5746—For parties this slip-over dress and separate bloomer slip is very dainty. Use crêpe de Chine, taffeta, Georgette, net, organdy or cotton voile, or pin-dot swiss or voile trimmed with fine lawn or organdy.

6 years requires 2¾ yards 39-inch Georgette.

The dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5730—10243—Crêpe de Chine, taffeta, pongee, chambray, pin-check gingham, cotton prints, fine cotton crêpe, dotted swiss or dimity are suitable for this slip-over dress in raglan style and with separate bloomers. It may have a scalloped or straight lower edge. Work the flowers in one-stitch, etc.

5 years requires 2 yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine.

The dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5756—Use chambray, linen, cotton rep, pongee, linen-finished cottons or silk-and-wool jersey in two colors for this suit. It has a waist and straight trousers, and the collar and cuffs may be detachable.

4 years requires 1 yard 35-inch linen for waist and 1 yard 35-inch linen.

The suit is for little boys 2 to 6 years.

5734—Straight flounces and a fine lace collar and cuffs (which may be detachable), trim this one-piece slip-over dress of plain crêpe de Chine, Canton crêpe or taffeta.

12 years requires 2⅛ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5722—5416—A slip-over dress of light-weight twill, wool crêpe or kasha and a velvet tam-o'-shanter make a smart school outfit. One may use all one material or the body of the same material or of silk crêpe in contrast, or of printed silk crêpe; or use flannel or serge all one material or with contrasting color for this dress with its box-plaited two-piece skirt joined at the hipline. The collar may be detachable.

12 years requires 1¾ yard 54-inch light-weight twill for dress.

Dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15; tam-o'-shanter for girls, children, misses, ladies.

5695—10302—Quaint and very English is a frock with a straight skirt joined to the waist at a point slightly above the normal waistline. Use striped or printed cottons, dotted swiss or voile, dimity, fine cotton crêpe, chambray, lawn, etc., trimmed with organdy. The toy animal is easily made.

5 years requires 1⅜ yard 35-inch cotton print.

The dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5701—5744—For this coat use soft pile fabrics, cashmere coatings, broadcloth or kasha trimmed with fur, stitchings or braid and with buttons to match coat. It may have a turn-over collar. The hat is smart in faille silk, crêpe de Chine, taffeta, etc.

6 years requires 1⅜ yard 54-inch cloth.

Coat is for little girls 2 to 6; hat for girls 2 to 12 years.

5693—Make this one-piece slip-over dress of flannel, wool crêpe, heavy cotton crêpe, linen or linen-finished cottons.

8 years requires 1⅜ yards 27-inch flannel, 1¼ yard 27-inch flannel for bosom, etc.

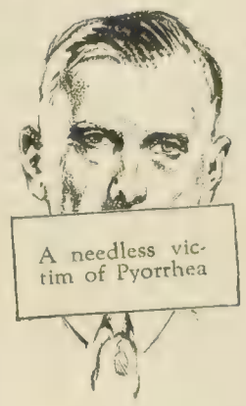
The dress is smart for girls 4 to 10 years.

5742—Bands of the shiny side of crêpe satin are smart trimming for a slip-over dress made of the dull side. It has a gathered straight skirt joined at a low waistline. One may use crêpe de Chine with contrasting.

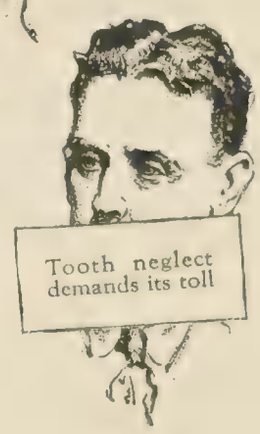
12 years requires 2⅜ yards 39-inch crêpe satin (using dull and shiny sides).

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5736 5746 5730 5756 5734



5722 5695 5701 5693 5742



4 out of 5

Dental statistics show that four out of every five over 40—and thousands younger, too—are victims of dreaded Pyorrhea. Will you escape?

Protect your gums and save your teeth

Just as a ship needs the closest attention under the water-line, so do the teeth under the gum-line. If the gums shrink, serious dangers result.

The teeth are loosened. They are exposed to tooth-base decay. The gums themselves become tender and bleed easily. They form sacs which become the doorways of organic disease for the whole system. They often disfigure the mouth as they recede.

Prevent Pyorrhea with Forhan's

If used in time and used consistently, Forhan's will prevent or check Pyorrhea's progress. Forhan's is safe, efficient and pleasant-tasting. It preserves gum health and corrects tender gum spots, hardens gum tissues so they will offer proper support to the teeth, and keeps your mouth fresh and healthy.

If gum-shrinkage has already set in, start using Forhan's twice a day and consult your dentist immediately for special treatment.

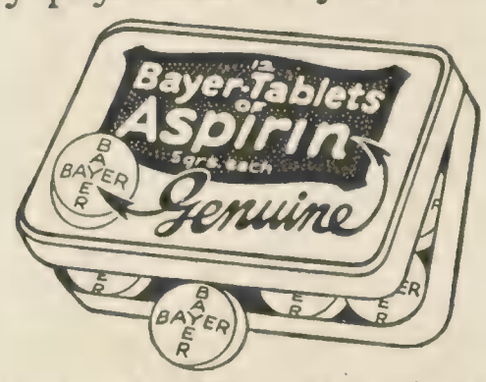
Forhan's is more than a tooth paste; it checks Pyorrhea. Thousands have found it beneficial for years. For your own sake ask for Forhan's For the Gums. All druggists, 35c and 60c in tubes.

Formula of R. J. Forhan, D. D. S.
Forhan Company, New York

Forhan's
FOR THE GUMS

More than a tooth paste—it checks Pyorrhea

Genuine



ASPIRIN

SAY "BAYER ASPIRIN" and INSIST!

Unless you see the "Bayer Cross" on tablets you are not getting the genuine Bayer Aspirin proved safe by millions and prescribed by physicians 24 years for

Colds	Headache
Pain	Neuralgia
Toothache	Lumbago
Neuritis	Rheumatism

Safe — Accept only "Bayer" package which contains proven directions.

Handy "Bayer" boxes of 12 tablets
Also bottles of 24 and 100—Druggists.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

How She Got The Money to Buy The Things She Wanted

"I don't see how she does it," said Mrs. Allen. "John tells me Mr. Clark's salary is less than his. Yet, I can not begin to dress as well as Mrs. Clark.

"She had on the most stunning dress when I saw her the other day," continued Mrs. Allen, "and her home is a jewel—nothing expensive, but she has the things every woman wants to make her home cozy and comfortable."

Mrs. Allen was having one of those little gossipy chats with a neighbor. They envied Mrs. Clark because she possessed many of those small luxuries so necessary to comfort and real happiness. And this was all the more surprising when, apparently, Mr. Clark's income was not exceedingly large.

The Secret Explained

It was only a year ago that Mrs. Allen envied Mrs. Clark—oh, there were so many things she wanted which Mrs. Clark had. But one day soon after, she learned the secret. It was simply that of using her spare time profitably. She had plenty of spare time and very quickly began earning all the extra money she needed through devoting it to DELINEATOR Subscription Work.

Hundreds of women are buying beautiful new clothes, home furnishings, etc., with our practical money-making plan. The same opportunity is offered to you. We will pay you liberally for your spare time. And you will be surprised how readily your earnings will mount up because of the widespread appeal of THE DELINEATOR.

No experience is necessary. There is no obligation. We teach you how to start and cooperate with you at all times. Write for particulars—to-day!

Box 1140, Butterick Building, New York City

ANALAX

THE FRUITY LAXATIVE

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 29

5686—5549—For this one-piece slip-over dress use crêpe satin or silk crêpe with plaitings and bindings of same material in contrast and buttons covered with dress material, etc. It fits closely at the hipline and has a tiered front. Her satin hat has a four-gored crown.

17 years requires 2⅝ yards 39-inch silk crêpe and ⅜ yard 35-inch contrasting material for dress. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20, also small women; hat for misses and ladies.

5757 — 10138 — This one-piece slip-over draped dress is wrapped around at the lower part. Use crêpe satin, plain flat crêpe or faille silk with embroidery on the pocket. Work this embroidery in harmonious colors.

17 years requires 2¾ yards 39-inch velvet, ¾ yard 39-inch Georgette. Lower edge 44 ins.

The dress is for misses 16 to 20 years, also small women.

5696 — 5458 — The wrap-around straight lower part joins a long upper part in tunic effect in this slip-over dress with detachable collar and cuffs. Use wool cashmere, twills, wool rep, kasha, etc., with silk crêpe or satin. Her velvet gored tam-o'-shanter is smart.

16 years requires 2 yards 39-inch material for upper part and ½ yard 54-inch wool rep for dress. Lower edge 41 inches.

Dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women; tam-o'-shanter for misses, ladies, girls, children.

5735—For afternoon occasions this is a picturesque slip-over frock. It has a full straight skirt joined to a basque at a slightly low waistline and closes under the left arm. Use taffeta, moire taffeta or crêpe faille with ribbon loops and ends to match dress in color, white or corn-colored crêpe de Chine collar, etc. Lower edge 2 yards.

16 years requires 3¼ yards 35-inch taffeta.

It is for misses 15 to 20, also small women.

5702—Inserted godets give the very new silhouette to this one-piece slip-over dress which fits closely at the hipline. Use velvet with godets and scarf-ends of satin to match and Georgette for center of scarf, etc.; or use both sides of crêpe satin. Lower edge 45 ins.

17 years requires 2¾ yards 35-inch velvet, 1½ yard 36-inch satin and ⅜ yard 39-inch Georgette for center of scarf.

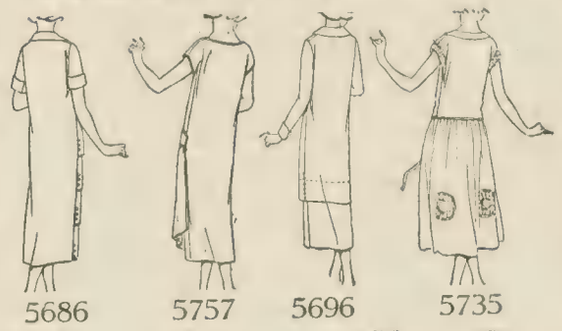
The dress is for misses 16 to 20 years, also small women.

5755—The basque, pointed both in front and in back and joined to a full straight skirt, is a picturesque style for young girls. This slip-over dress closes under the left arm and may have normal or cut-down armholes, an afternoon or evening neck, etc. Use taffeta, crêpe satin, Canton crêpe, chiffon velvet, etc.

18 years requires 3¾ yards 35-inch taffeta. Lower edge of skirt 2⅞ yards.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women and ladies 38 bust.

5714—Petals of changeable taffeta are a lovely and inexpensive trimming for the young girl's slip-over frock. It may have a higher neck for daytime and the straight gathered skirt is joined at a slightly low waistline. Use Georgette or crêpe de Chine with center of flower of ribbon in a darker tone, petals of changeable taffeta, etc.



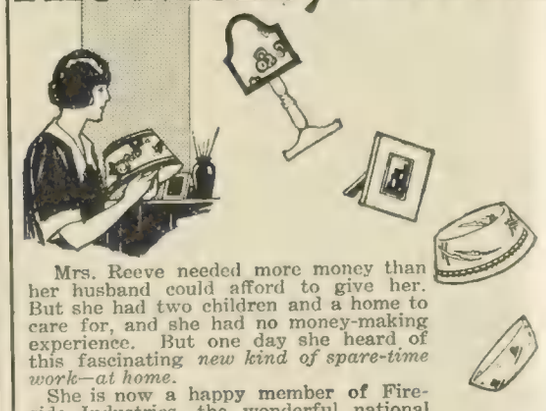
17 years requires 2⅝ yards 39-inch Georgette. Lower edge 2⅛ yards.

It is for misses 15 to 20, also small women.

5743—Georgette or crêpe de Chine makes a delightful slip-over dress with a full straight skirt joined at a slightly low waistline. It closes under the left arm. One may use rose-pink with shaded pink ribbon for rosettes and silver or gold ribbon for rosette-centers.

16 years requires 2½ yards 39-inch Georgette. Lower edge 2¼ yards.

It is for misses 15 to 20, also small women.



5686 5757 5696 5735

5702 5755 5714 5743

How Mrs. Reeve Solved The Money Problem

Mrs. Reeve needed more money than her husband could afford to give her. But she had two children and a home to care for, and she had no money-making experience. But one day she heard of this fascinating new kind of spare-time work—at home.

She is now a happy member of Fireside Industries—the wonderful national organization that provides a new, delightful and profitable kind of spare-time home work.

WRITE FOR FREE BOOK

No woman need ever want for money now, for here is a marvelously easy money-making idea for women at home—in spare hours or full time. Write today for the free book that gives all the details. You'll be grateful all the rest of your life!

FIRESIDE INDUSTRIES
Dept. 291 Adrian, Mich.

Fireside Industries, Dept. 291, Adrian, Mich.

Please send me, FREE, the book of Fireside Industries, which tells about the fascinating new kind of work I can do at home to earn money—also particulars of your Money-Making Guarantee and special privileges of membership. I enclose a 2 cent stamp.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

$500 a Year Extra

earned by many women in their spare time

Think what you could do with $500 extra every year! That's what scores of women are earning—all over the country—as special local representatives of The Delineator.

This pleasant work offers you a remarkable chance to earn $5, $10—and more—every week in your spare time. We are now engaging new representatives in every community. Do you want the appointment in your town? Write immediately—there is no obligation.

Box 1141, Butterick Building, New York City

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

Removes Dandruff – Stops Hair Falling

Has been used with success for more than 40 years.

Restores color and beauty to gray and faded hair.

60¢ & $1.00 at Druggists

HISCOX CHEMICAL WORKS
PATCHOGUE, N.Y.

When washing hair always use Floreston Shampoo

Improve Your Nose Quickly and Easily

Model No. 25 Junior for children

Trados Model No. 25, latest improved nose shaper, U. S. and Foreign Patents, corrects now ill-shaped noses quickly, painlessly and comfortably at home (excepting cases caused by an improper bone structure). It is a superior, safe, and guaranteed device that will actually give you a better looking nose. 87,000 satisfied users. For years recommended by physicians. 16 years' experience in manufacturing nose shapers is at your service.

Write for Free Booklet

M. TRILETY, Specialist, Dept. 2177, Binghamton, N. Y.

STOP COUGHING

FLORIDA MENTOPINE COUGH DROPS

The MENTOPINE CORPORATION — Philadelphia, Pa.

After 17 Years

Infantile Paralysis

For 17 years Harless E. Potter suffered the effects of Infantile Paralysis. Then he came to McLain Sanitarium. Letter and photos show results of 5½ months' treatment.

For 17 years my life was miserable. I could walk only a few steps without falling. 5½ months after entering McLain's I walked forth with a perfect foot and a thankful heart. I gladly recommend McLain's.

HARLESS E. POTTER,
Yeager, Kentucky.

Write to Mr. Potter or direct to McLain Sanitarium.

For Crippled Children

Parents of crippled children should know about McLain Sanitarium, a thoroughly equipped private institution devoted exclusively to the treatment of Club Feet, Infantile Paralysis, Spinal Diseases and Deformities, Diseases of the Hip, Knee, and other Joints, Wry Neck, etc., especially in children and young adults. Write for these FREE books: "Deformities and Paralysis" and "Book of References."

McLAIN ORTHOPEDIC SANITARIUM
932 Aubert Ave. St. Louis, Mo.

H783

ASTHMA

The assurance of comfortable repose appeals to every sufferer from asthma.

The popularity of Vapo-Cresolene is due to—

Continuous treatment while the patient enjoys undisturbed rest.

Avoidance of internal medication.

Prompt relief. Unquestionable merit.

Vapo-Cresolene EST. 1879 "Used while you sleep"

The Household remedy for bronchial troubles

Send for descriptive booklet 70-B

Sold by druggists

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO.
62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Bldg., Montreal, Canada

SULPHUR IS BEST TO CLEAR SKIN

Any breaking out or skin irritation on face, neck or body is overcome quickest by applying Mentho-Sulphur, says a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, nothing has ever been found to take the place of this sulphur preparation that instantly brings ease from the itching, burning and irritation.

Mentho-Sulphur soothes eczema and leaves the skin clear and smooth. It seldom fails to relieve the torment or disfigurement. A little jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur may be obtained at any drug store. It is used like cold cream.

Whitehall Pharmacal Co., Inc., New York, N. Y.

THE HOOP THAT NEVER NEEDS TO BE WOUND ~ IT HOLDS TIGHTLY

VELVETY, non-slip cork cushions—strong spring tension—patented shield preventing pinching—light, strong, beautiful. Approved by MODERN PRISCILLA Proving Plant, NEEDLECRAFT MAGAZINE and FARM & HOME Testing Station. Made in 3, 4, 5, 6, 7/11 rounds, 20c each, 1 set. If your dealer can't furnish, send his name, price, state sizes wanted, and we will send postpaid (add 5c each west of Rockies). Also made in "ADJUSTO" model (positive screw lock) at 25c each, $1 set—4, 5, 6 7/11 rounds. Either set fine for gifts, prizes, etc.

THE EMBRO MANUFACTURING CO., Canton, Ohio

BECOME A NURSE

THIS school during 25 years has taught nursing to 30,000 women in their own homes—beginners as well as practical nurses.

Our Graduates Earn $30 and $35 a Week

Ideal vocation for self-supporting women. You can try our course without cost if dissatisfied. Write today for catalog and specimen pages.

THE CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING
309 Main Street Jamestown, N. Y.

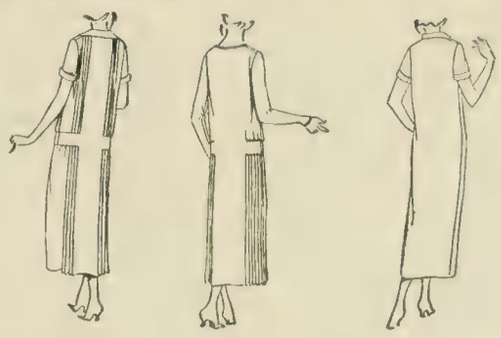
OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 30

5723—10246—Clusters of plaits at each side of the one-piece front and back make this slip-over dress becoming to any type of figure. The embroidery is effective. Work it in harmonizing colors. Use crêpe satin, crêpe faille, plain or printed Canton crêpe, crêpe de Chine or Georgette, etc.

36 bust requires 3⅞ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine. Lower edge, plaits out, 1⅝ yard.

The dress is attractive for ladies 32 to 52 bust.

5745—The coat dress which closes on the side is very smart in wool rep, soft twills or kasha, as well as silk bengaline, silk faille, crêpe satin or heavy silk crêpe. The dress may have a body lining.



36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 56-inch wool rep. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The coat dress is becoming to ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5733—Use wool rep, cashmere dress materials, soft twills, wool crêpe, kasha, broadcloth, flannel or corded silks, etc., for this one-piece dress which fits closely at the hipline. Crêpe de Chine frills in contrasting color and bone or wood buttons to match frills are smart trimming.

36 bust requires 2 yards 56-inch wool rep. Lower edge 44 inches.

The dress is good style for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

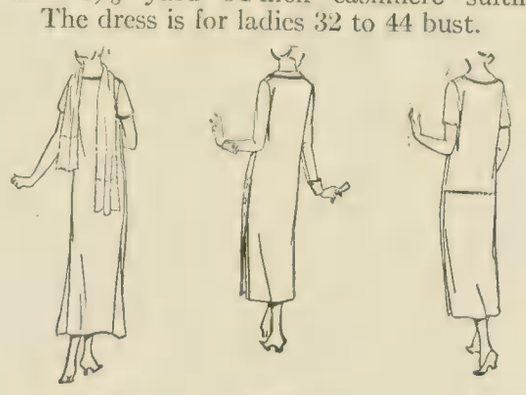
5723 5688 5733

5682—The inserted godets of this one-piece slip-over dress, which fits closely at the hipline, give one an opportunity to use the two sides of crêpe satin, and a trimming of crystal buttons, etc.; or use gray, tan or beige Canton or Marocain crêpe with satin in a darker tone of same color, etc. Lower edge 49 inches.

36 bust requires 3⅝ yards 39-inch crêpe satin (using dull and shiny sides).

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5688—Loose panels at the sides give an exceedingly graceful effect to this one-piece dress of the slip-over type. Make it of crêpe faille, crêpe satin, Canton crêpe or crêpe de Chine.



36 bust requires 4¼ yards 39-inch crêpe satin. Lower edge 46 inches.

The dress is very becoming to ladies 36 to 52 bust.

5710—10199—Use wool rep, cashmere suitings, kasha or soft twills for the straight wrap-around lower part of this slip-over dress and plain silk crêpe or crêpe de Chine in self or contrasting color or printed designs for the long upper part; or use heavy satin with plain crêpe de Chine, etc. The embroidery is smart. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 1½ yard 39-inch silk crêpe and 1⅛ yard 54-inch cashmere suiting.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5682 5745 5710

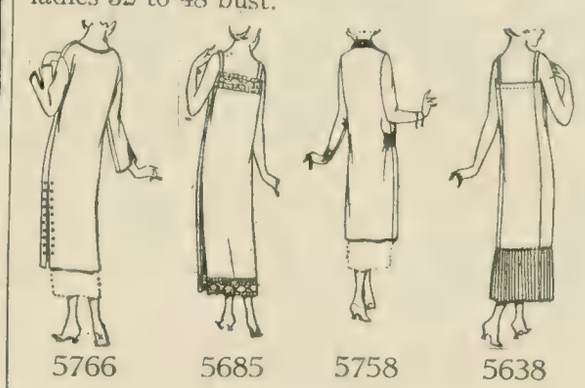
OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 31

5766—5685—5549—10155—A slip-over tunic blouse of crêpe de Chine, Georgette, crêpe satin, silk crêpe, etc., embroidered or beaded, this length or longer, and a soft satin costume slip make a smart frock. The embroidery is easily done. The satin hat has a four-gored crown. Lower edge, plaits out, 1½ yard.

36 bust requires 2⅜ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine and 2½ yards 35-inch satin for slip.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 52 bust; slip for ladies 36 to 52 bust; hat for ladies and misses.

5681—5685—This slip-over tunic blouse of crêpe satin, crêpe faille, Canton crêpe or crêpe de Chine may be a shorter length. For the costume slip with inverted plait below waistline at each side, use crêpe de Chine, crêpe meteor or soft satin.



36 bust requires 3⅛ yards 39-inch crêpe faille and 2½ yards 39-inch contrasting material for slip (including trimming). Lower edge, plaits drawn out, 1½ yard.

Blouse is for ladies 36 to 52 bust; slip for ladies 36 to 52 bust.

5764—5631—10272—The wide inserted band of this slip-over tunic blouse may be of the reverse side of crêpe satin, of contrasting color or of lace banding. The costume slip has an inverted plait at each side below a low waistline. The embroidery is smart.

36 bust requires 4⅞ yards 39-inch satin crêpe (including slip), 1⅛ yard 40-inch contrasting satin crêpe for band and center of scarf. Lower edge, plaits out, 54½ inches.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5766 5685 5758 5638

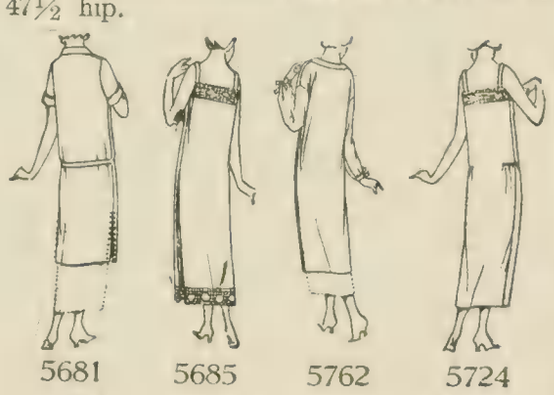
5764 5631

5758—5638—10312—Embroidery and fur trim this slip-over tunic blouse of satin, Canton crêpe or crêpe de Chine which one wears with a costume slip which has a plain lower part. The slip may be worn with other tunic blouses. The embroidery is very simple to do.

36 bust requires 4¼ yards 39-inch silk crêpe (including slip). Lower edge 44 inches.

Blouse is for figure 32 to 48 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 46 bust; also misses.

5762—5724—10138—This slip-over tunic blouse is trimmed in Russian-closing effect and may be shorter. The costume slip has a straight lower edge and either a three-inch or deep shadow-proof hem. The embroidered motifs are effective.



36 bust requires 2⅜ yards 39-inch silk crêpe and 2⅝ yards 35-inch contrasting material for slip (including bands). Lower edge 44 inches.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5520—5740—5581—This ensemble costume is composed of a kasha coat with a straight lower edge and three-piece, step-in, wrap-around skirt which has a wide underlap, and a slip-over tunic blouse. Lower edge of coat 45 inches, of skirt 43½ inches.

36 bust requires 4¼ yards 54-inch kasha (including skirt with camisole top) and 2¼ yards 39-inch material for blouse.

Coat is for ladies 32 to 44 bust; blouse for figures 33 to 50 bust; skirt for ladies 35 to 47½ hip.

5681 5685 5762 5724

5740 5581 5520

Beauty

A Gleamy Mass of Hair

35c "Danderine" does Wonders for Any Girl's Hair

Girls! Try this! When combing and dressing your hair, just moisten your hair-brush with a little "Danderine" and brush it through your hair. The effect is startling! You can do your hair up immediately and it will appear twice as thick and heavy—a mass of gleamy hair, sparkling with life and possessing that incomparable softness, freshness and luxuriance.

While beautifying the hair "Danderine" is also toning and stimulating each single hair to grow thick, long and strong. Hair stops falling out and dandruff disappears. Get a bottle of "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter and just see how healthy and youthful your hair appears after this delightful, refreshing dressing.

To Stop a Cough

This Home-Mixed Syrup Is Famous

Millions of people, for over 20 years, have found Pinex the most effective source of relief for coughs, bronchitis, hoarseness, etc., in adults or children.

A small bottle of Pinex, mixed at home with plain sugar syrup, makes a full pint—a family supply—of pure, wholesome cough syrup, really superior in every way. Makes a difference in the family drug bill.

The way it takes hold of a cough is really amazing. Tastes good, too—children take it willingly.

Insist on genuine Pinex, 65c, at all druggists. Money promptly refunded if you are not glad you tried it.

The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

For Coughs

PINEX

STERIZOL THE ANTISEPTIC

Ask Your Druggist

Dissolves quickly in water. Makes a reliable Antiseptic for Gargle or First Aid at a cost of only 3 cents a pint. A $1.00 Jar makes 40 pints.

The Sterizol Co. 11 Water St. Ossining, N. Y.

THE LAST WORD

A Page of Shop-Talk, Gossip, and Comment

From the Creator of Peter Pan

Sir James M. Barrie, he of "Sentimental Tommy," "Peter Pan" and other contributions to the world's too limited stock of sheer charm in literature (why mention other titles? Every Barrie reader has his favorite) will be a contributor to the February DELINEATOR. "Better Days for Girls" is a captivating essay addressed to girls of school age and having all the magic qualities that constitute the Barrie charm. It is whimsical, tender, sympathetic, sincere, and, along with delightful glimpses of remembrances from his own youth, the author deftly manages to combine a word or two of sage counsel with a hint of prophetic vision.

The Lady Who Had No Name

Scarcely a month goes by, probably, that some reader who has written to one of our service departments doesn't wait in vain for a reply, wondering meantime why her request is neglected. Occasionally the disappointment is acute and the reader writes an indignant protest to the editor. We believe that our service facilities excel those of any other woman's magazine. We are proud of our record in that respect and are keenly disappointed when anything occurs to mar it, but even our most competent service editors are not gifted with second sight. They are accustomed to dealing with the problems thrust on them by the inquirer who forgets to enclose return postage, as required by the post-office, or who neglects to remit the purchase price of expensive bulletins and illustrated booklets, but are completely baffled when the reader omits her home address, a form of carelessness that occurs with surprising frequency. For the most part it is impossible to trace such inquiries to their source, though our correspondents make every effort that ingenuity can suggest. For example, THE DELINEATOR's recent offer of home-budgeting service brought to Miss Van Rensselaer a letter requesting help from a woman in a small Oklahoma town who neglected to sign her name. Miss Van Rensselaer wrote to the postmaster of the town, enclosing the envelope and asking if he could identify the sender. The postmaster could, and did, and the woman got her service. Obviously it is out of the question to repeat that sort of luck very often, and in an effort to head off such occasions for disappointment we urge: write as often as you like and make full use of what THE DELINEATOR has to offer outside of its text and advertising pages, but to get prompt and efficient service remember to give your post-office address in full, to enclose return postage for a reply, and to enclose a remittance for any bulletins or booklets for which a charge is made. A complete list of these appears each month in "Ask THE DELINEATOR."

A Yarn for After Dinner

There exists a widely known sanatorium presided over by a prominent physician whose examinations of new patients are conducted precisely as indicated in the following story. Thus far we can vouch for its authenticity; as for the rest, why inquire too closely into facts that would add nothing to an amusing anecdote? A young man who arrived at the institution without having made advance arrangements was greeted by the office nurse in charge at the time and asked if he had an appointment.

"No, I have not," was the reply.

The nurse consulted her appointment-book and remarked, "The doctor will have a few minutes to see you after the next patient, so please go into that room and undress."

"Not I," replied the young man, "I don't want to undress for anything."

"Then you can't see the doctor. That's the rule here."

The young man, seeing no chance of appeal, entered the designated waiting-room, complied with instructions, and was stark naked when the doctor arrived.

"Well, sir," was the latter's greeting, "what can I do for you?"

"Doctor," replied the young man, "I called to see if you want to renew your wife's annual subscription to THE DELINEATOR."

For the Gardener and Home-maker

Among the more practical contents in next month's issue one of the most important will be Frances Duncan's article, featuring THE DELINEATOR'S Gold-Medal Garden. Last year, through the Garden Club of America, we offered a gold medal for the best design for a small home garden combining flowers and vegetables. The prize was awarded by the club at its last annual show to Mrs. Ejnar Hanson of Ridgefield, Connecticut, a member of the Ridgefield Garden Club. Miss Duncan describes the garden, tells how to go about planning and developing a similar one and offers a diagram, with planting instructions, to amateur gardeners. With the aid of the diagram, any one can lay out a model home garden based on the prize-winning pattern and with the help of Miss Duncan's detailed instructions plant and cultivate it so as to insure satisfactory results.

A seasonable culinary article of unusual interest will feature a collection of Colonial recipes from the Washington home at Mount Vernon. Recipes for dishes favored by the family of the Father of His Country have been tested and modernized by the Department of Home Economics at Cornell University under the supervision of Miss Martha Van Rensselaer.

Many of the quaint recipes called for ingredients now rare. Cream of tartar, for instance, was often specified where modern recipes substitute baking-powder.

AS A CHRISTMAS GIFT

we suggest

"THE DELINEATOR"

AS A NEW YEAR'S GIFT

we suggest

"THE DELINEATOR"

BECAUSE

"The Delineator" provides not only entertaining stories, stirring articles, up-to-the-minute advice on home-making, hints on house decoration, precious information on raising children, inspiring articles about beauty, health and a dozen other topics,

BUT

it also provides a free consulting service of "The Delineator's" entire staff. A subscriber has the privilege of presenting her most difficult household problems to "The Delineator's" specially trained experts for solution. When you subscribe to "The Delineator" you get not only "The Delineator" MAGAZINE but "Delineator" SERVICE as well.

Subscribe now—either for yourself or for a friend.

CONTENTS for JANUARY, 1925

FICTION

		PAGE
Dog Wanted: Male	Ellis Parker Butler	5
Happy New Year	Zona Gale	6
Enter, Emily	L. M. Montgomery	10
The Black Flemings (serial) Part Four	Kathleen Norris	12

ARTICLES AND SPECIAL FEATURES

The Awkward Age	Angelo Patri	2
Why I Am Not a Good Mother	Anonymous	9
Does Your Child Want to Be an Athlete?	Fielding H. Yost	14
The Unnecessary Handicap	Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw	16
THE LITTLE DELINEATOR	Harriet Ide Eager	17
Slicker 'n' Slicker	Celia Caroline Cole	22
Ask THE DELINEATOR		51
The Last Word		70

HOME-MAKING

"Good Homes—the Right of All Citizens"	Blanche Brace	15
The Way to Save	Martha Van Rensselaer	19
French Pastry—Made in America	Emily Reisenberg	20
Make It a Green Christmas Indoors	Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders	21
Good Old Country Dishes for Winter	Frieda Winn	41
How Many Miles in Your Kitchen?	Ruth M. Kellogg	42
Menus for the New Year	Jessie A. Boys	44
Keeping the Children Well at Christmas	Flora M. Thurston	47
Save Dollars and Hours		49
Festive Paper Decorations		50
Ask Us		51

FASHIONS 19, 38, 66, 67, 68, 69

MIX and SERVE

Edited with Willing Hands and a Mean Pencil by a Mere Man

A CEDAR RAPIDS, Iowa, woman is being examined, properly enough, by an insanity commission for refusing to marry a man worth $50,000. At first the lady consented, but later changed her mind, explaining that she hadn't known the man long enough! ◈◈◈ The old question, "Why does a woman step off a street car backward?" is being revived again in Germany. The tramway authorities in Berlin had a prize competition among their employees for the best suggestions to prevent accidents. The winner suggested that a mirror be placed in such a position at the exit of each car that it will just naturally attract the eyes of women, who will then be facing in the right direction to step off in safety ◈◈◈ Still another news item shows that German women are pretty much like their sisters the world over. An enterprising promoter conceived the novel idea of running off an ostrich race in one of the unused trotting parks. An enormous crowd gathered and everything was rosy until the ostriches were led out into the paddock. Then the women precipitated a riot by overpowering the trainers of the birds and pulling out their plumage ◈◈◈ Restoration of the parish church in Wymington, England, has brought to light wall paintings indicating that bobbed hair was the fashionable coiffure for women when the church was built in 1350 ◈◈◈ Speaking of hair reminds us that just twenty years ago American department stores were advertising 28-inch switches, best quality, weighing 2½ pounds, for $8. What price crown of glory now? ◈◈◈ From London, England, comes the annual wail from Bond Street tailors because the extravagance of Englishwomen in the matter of dress leaves no money for the men to spend on their own raiment. Putting forward the theory that it is more necessary for a man to be well dressed than a woman, because clothes with a man are a business asset, one tailor declared that "everywhere one sees badly dressed husbands accompanied by extravagantly dressed wives, while shabby business men dictate letters to stenographers wearing the latest thing from Paris. It is time," he continued, "that men rebelled. As things are, women spend at least three times more than men. It has become necessary for men to make a stand and to insist on being as well dressed as their wives or daughters or stenographers." ◈◈◈ At this time of year it is customary for all forward-looking editors to make plans for forthcoming months. For our part we shall continue to toil in our tiny editorial vineyard with a view to uplifting, instructing and edifying the never-sufficiently-praised sex along much the same lines as heretofore ◈◈◈ More specifically, we shall advocate a few original reforms and improvements; for instance—the home treadmill for idle wives, the idea being that when friend wife has a little time on her hands she can step into the machine, grind away for an hour or two and accumulate enough power in a storage-battery to run the electric dishwasher and the ice-cream freezer. The scheme neatly combines wholesome exercise, practical results and opportunity for profitable meditation ◈◈◈ A European institution that we will endeavor to popularize in this country is the dot, so that every woman of marriageable age will have something put by against the rainy day that may befall the best of husbands. Even the poorest of continental girls never comes to the altar empty-handed. If nothing more, her father planted a tree the day she was born and by the time she becomes a bride there is at least a few weeks' supply of firewood in case of necessity and a plentiful crop of switches with which to discipline the next generation ◈◈◈ Among other things noted on our calendar for attention in 1925 are the observance of a Mind Your Own Business Week, during which all chatterers, blatters and tattlers will be rounded up in the public pound, and the appointment of a new Federal official, attached to the Children's Bureau, whose humane duty it will be to wring the little necks of squalling infants on Pullman sleepers. The pernicious practise of paying alimony also cries for reform, and we may have some constructive criticism to offer the alimony-receiving sex ◈◈◈ Of course our fair pewholders have already guessed the thing we will urge in season and out, namely, to wit, and as follows: Always mention THE DELINEATOR when writing to advertisers ◈◈◈ To all we do wish a very, very Happy New Year

CRANE BEAUTY IN THE OPEN; CRANE QUALITY IN ALL HIDDEN FITTINGS

For many home-makers, the clear white of porcelain or enamel fixtures is the essential seal of cleanliness in bathroom fixtures.

To such, the new Crane Corwith bath will appeal instantly. Of cream-white enamel on iron, its lustrous surfaces are given added interest and distinction by the graceful modeling in four planes of its sides and ends. Play of light on these planes gives the Corwith a character that is lacking in severely plain fixtures.

Your plumbing contractor will show you or secure for you a Corwith bath or any other plumbing or heating fixture in the wide variety that Crane supplies at prices within reach of all. Let us send you a booklet of color schemes, "The New Art of Fine Bathrooms."

CRANE

GENERAL OFFICES: CRANE BUILDING, 836 S. MICHIGAN AVE., CHICAGO
CRANE LIMITED: CRANE BUILDING, 386 BEAVER HALL SQUARE, MONTREAL

Branches and Sales Offices in One Hundred and Forty-eight Cities
National Exhibit Rooms: Chicago, New York, Atlantic City, San Francisco and Montreal
Works: Chicago, Bridgeport, Birmingham, Chattanooga, Trenton and Montreal

CRANE EXPORT CORPORATION: NEW YORK, SAN FRANCISCO, SHANGHAI, CHINA
CRANE-BENNETT, LTD., LONDON
CIE CRANE: PARIS, NANTES, BRUSSELS

Crane Y branch drainage fitting

Here is a new Victor product
The Music Arts Library of Victor Records

Just as a certain amount of reading is part of everybody's life experience, so too there is a proportionate amount of music with which every man and woman wishes to be familiar. That is the keynote of the Music Arts Library of Victor Records, six volumes of which are now ready. The Music Arts Library of Victor Records serves a purpose which can be served so well in no other way. No one interested in music will want to miss seeing these books and hearing the records in them. The finest efforts of the world's greatest artists are represented—artists and music of the same high caliber as you see on this page.

© Underwood & Underwood

ALDA
Victor Artist

The amazing versatility of Frances Alda's soprano is one of the most conspicuous of the many gifts bestowed upon her by nature in a prodigal mood. When Alda sings in opera or ballad, there is an intensity of temperament, a thrilling quality that grips the imagination—equally when you hear Alda or any of her many Victor Records, of which these are a few:

		Double-faced
The Bells of St. Mary's If Winter Comes (Summer Will Come Again)	525	$1.50
By the Waters of Minnetonka Deep River	527	1.50
Bohême—Mi chiamano Mimi Carmen—Micaela's Aria	6038	2.00

© Kubey-Rembrandt

STOKOWSKI
Victor Artist

Leopold Stokowski has brought the playing of the Philadelphia Orchestra to an almost unparalleled degree of perfection—a hundred minds, each one a chosen intellect, in instantaneous response to his own. That so great an achievement can be adequately perpetuated by any process of recording is in itself a triumph of science and of art, in proof of which we recommend the following records:

		Double-faced
Carmen—Prelude to Act I March of the Caucasian Chief	796	$1.50
Blue Danube Waltz Invitation to the Waltz	6237	2.00
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 2 Largo from "New World" Symphony	6236	2.00

RUFFO
Victor Artist

Listen to the ringing quality of Ruffo's voice on a Victor Record and you will smile with us over the dictum of his first teachers, who after two years of instruction declared his vocal equipment inadequate for operatic work! How thoroughly the famous baritone has negatived their conclusions, his world successes and these few selections from his complete Victor list show:

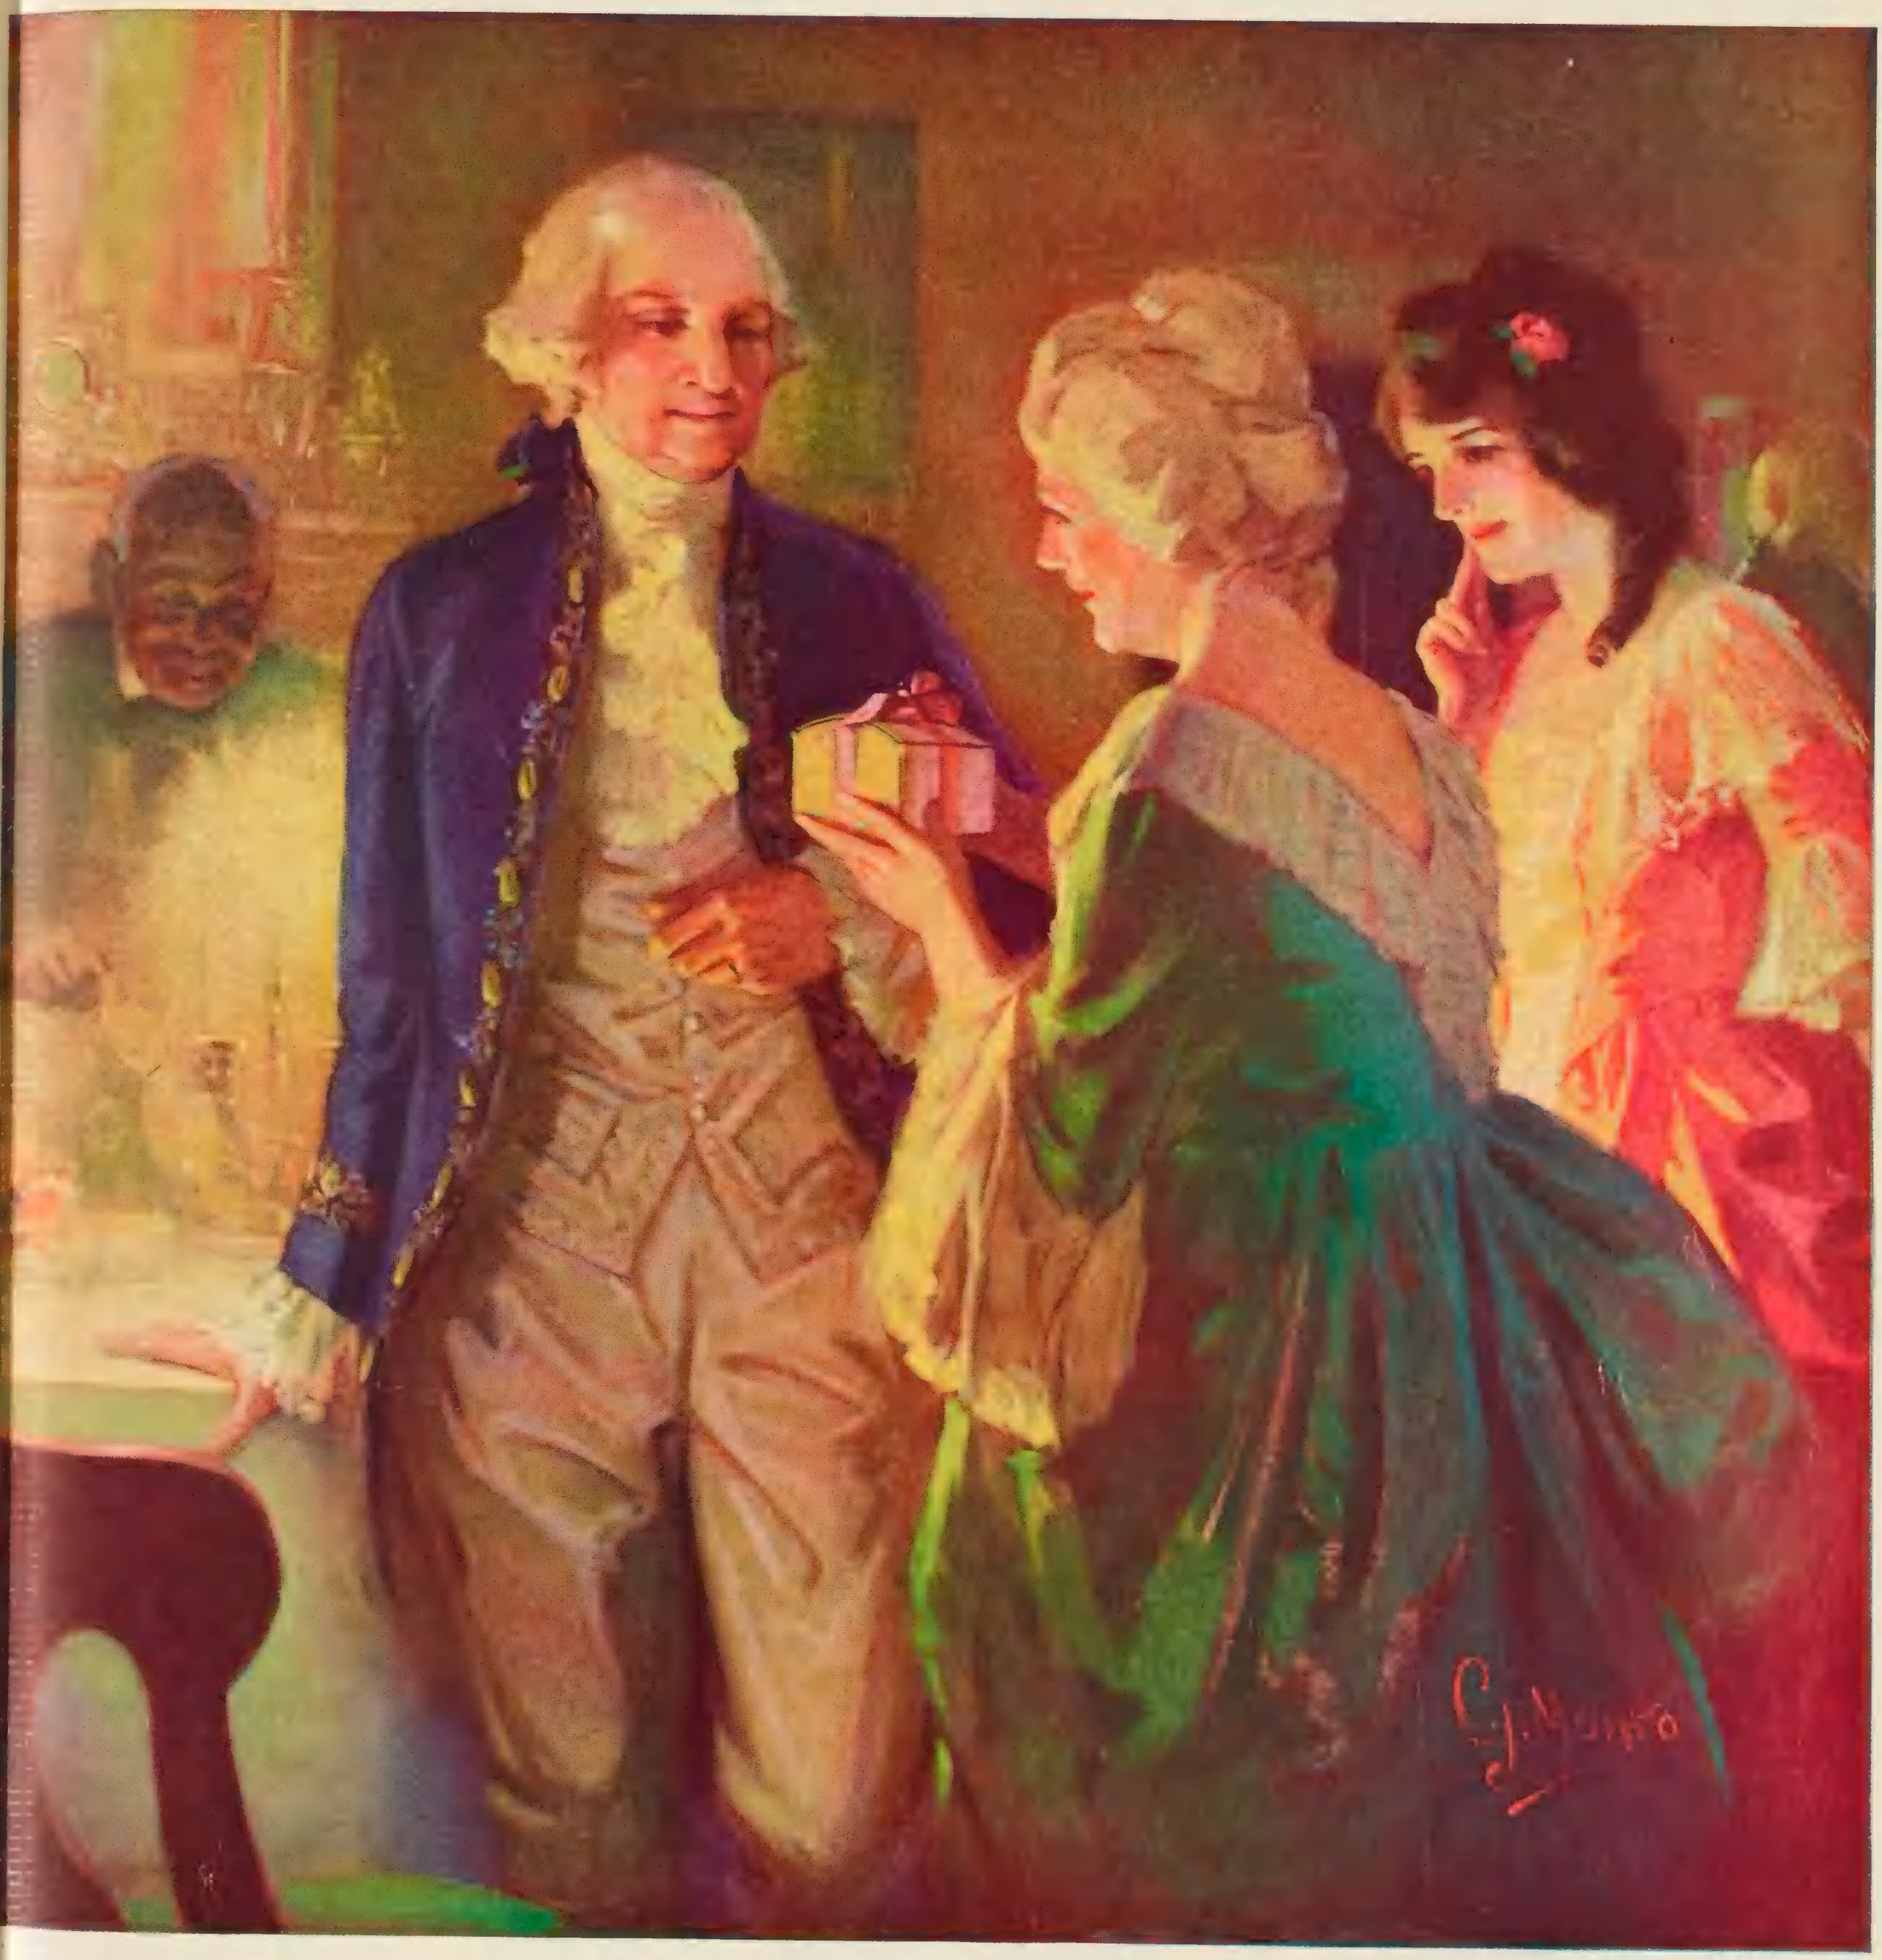
		Double-faced
Barbiere de Siviglia—Largo al factotum Rigoletto—Monologo—Pari siamo	6263	$2.00
Pagliacci—Prologo, Part I Pagliacci—Prologo, Part II	6268	2.00
Querida El Relicario	822	1.50

Victrola No. 100
$150
Mahogany, oak or walnut

Victrola No. 210
$110
Mahogany, oak or walnut

Victrola No. 230
Mahogany, $375; electric, $415
Walnut, $440; electric, $480

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"
REG U S PAT OFF



There is but one Victrola and that is made by the Victor Company—look for these Victor trade marks

TRADE MARK
Victrola
REG U S PAT OFF

Victor Talking Machine Company, Camden, N. J.

Victor Talking Machine Co. of Canada, Ltd., Montreal

THE DELINEATOR

Washington's Birthday in 1790

FROM A PAINTING BY C. J. MONRO

SIR JAMES M. BARRIE

HONORÉ WILLSIE MORROW

KATHLEEN NORRIS

STYLES FOR EARLY SPRING

FEBRUARY 1925

THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, NEW YORK, N. Y., U. S. A.

TWENTY CENTS THE COPY
$2.00 A YEAR—$2.50 IN CANADA

On the floor is shown Gold-Seal Congoleum Art-Rug No. 379. In the 6 x 9-foot size it costs only $9.00.

Pattern No. 321

Pattern No. 518

Pattern No. 386

Pattern No. 538

"Beautify Your Home With Gold-Seal Congoleum Art-Rugs," an interesting booklet by Anne Lewis Pierce, shows all the beautiful patterns in their full, rich colors. Write our nearest office today for your copy. It is free.

CONGOLEUM-NAIRN INC.

Philadelphia New York Boston Chicago Kansas City
San Francisco Minneapolis Atlanta Dallas Pittsburgh
New Orleans London Paris Rio de Janeiro
In Canada Congoleum Canada Limited, Montreal

GOLD SEAL CONGOLEUM GUARANTEE

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED OR YOUR MONEY BACK

REMOVE SEAL WITH DAMP CLOTH

COPYRIGHT 1917 AND 1920, CONGOLEUM COMPANY, INC.

Important Warning!

There is only one "Congoleum" and it is identified by the Gold Seal pasted on every pattern. "Congoleum" is a registered trade-mark and the exclusive property of Congoleum-Nairn Inc. If you want "Congoleum" be sure to ask for it by name and look for the Gold Seal.

"I must have a Congoleum Rug for my room, too!"

And when she does get her Congoleum Rug she will fully appreciate the many unusual qualities that have made these rugs so popular with up-to-date women everywhere. Then she will readily understand why Gold-Seal Congoleum Rugs are replacing old-fashioned woven carpets in thousands of homes.

Congoleum Rugs are as easy to clean and as durable as they are attractive. Their seamless, smooth surface is unharmed by dust, dirt, grease or spilled things. Just a few easy strokes with a damp mop and spots vanish without leaving a trace. Moreover, they lie perfectly flat on the floor without fastening of any kind.

There are patterns to fit into the decorative scheme of any room—at prices that are a pleasant surprise.

6	feet x 9	feet	$ 9.00	Pattern No. 386 (shown below) is made in all the sizes. The other patterns illustrated are made in the five large sizes only.	1½	feet x 3	feet $ .60
7½	feet x 9	feet	11.25		3	feet x 3	feet 1.40
9	feet x 9	feet	13.50		3	feet x 4½	feet 1.95
9	feet x 10½	feet	15.75		3	feet x 6	feet 2.50
9	feet x 12	feet	18.00

Owing to freight rates, prices in the South and west of the Mississippi are higher than those quoted.

Gold Seal
CONGOLEUM
Art-Rugs

THE DELINEATOR

MRS. WILLIAM BROWN MELONEY Editor

W. MARTIN JOHNSON Art Director

VOLUME CVI FEBRUARY, 1925 NUMBER TWO

Published monthly by THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., U. S. A.

UNITED STATES BRANCHES:
2231-2249 South Park Avenue.....Chicago, Ill.
350 Mission Street.....San Francisco, Cal.
79-89 Marietta Street.....Atlanta, Ga.
105 Chauncy Street.....Boston, Mass.
1201-3-5 Washington Avenue.....St. Louis, Mo.

FOREIGN OFFICES:
27 Avenue de l'Opéra.....Paris, France
83 and 84, Long Acre.....London, W. C., England
468 Wellington Street, W.....Toronto, Ontario, Can.
319 Elgin Avenue.....Winnipeg, Manitoba, Can.

George W. Wilder, President Truman S. Mersereau, Secretary Chas. D. Wilder, Treasurer

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: The price of THE DELINEATOR is $2.00 per year, or 20 cents per copy in the United States and its possessions, also Mexico and Cuba; to Canada, $2.50 per year; to all other countries in the Postal Union, $3.00 per year.

Copyright, 1925, by The Butterick Publishing Company, in the United States and Great Britain. Entered at Stationers' Hall, London, England. All rights reserved.

Entered as second-class mail matter July 12, 1879, at the Post-Office at New York, under the act of March 3, 1879. Additional entry at Los Angeles California, San Francisco, California, and Portland, Oregon

OUR GUARANTEE: We absolutely guarantee the reliability of every advertiser in THE DELINEATOR. If any reader incurs a loss through misrepresentation of goods in any advertisement in THE DELINEATOR, we guarantee that this loss will be refunded. If the advertiser does not make it good, we will. G. W. WILDER, President of The Butterick Publishing Company.

FROM the EDITOR'S POINT of VIEW

SYMBOLS OF OUR HISTORY

WHEN one of the New York historical societies unveiled a tablet on the Butterick Building in New York to commemorate the proud American history made on this spot, President Coolidge wrote: "Here is the site of Richmond Hill mansion, where General Washington made his headquarters during the Long Island campaign in 1776, where John Adams lived in 1789 and Aaron Burr in 1797. Here were entertained Alexander Hamilton, Thomas Jefferson and other leaders of America and Europe. This tablet is raised in reverence for great deeds of the past, that it may be an altar to the faith of the future."

In discussing the marking of this historical spot, President Coolidge said to the Editor of THE DELINEATOR: "The men and women who band together to preserve the traditions, the standards and the records of this country are the true preservers of the nation."

There are thousands of women and men in America who are entitled to belong to some one of our patriotic organizations. Many of you, our readers, are perhaps not conscious that this right is yours. It may be that some of your family fought in the Revolution, in the Civil War, the Indian Wars, the Spanish-American War or the World War. If this be true, you are entitled to membership in one of the societies commemorating these wars. It may be that some of your forbears were among the pioneers who settled the West. If this be true, you have the right to belong to one of the most interesting, forward-looking groups in this country. Perhaps one of your girls was overseas with the "Y," the Knights of Columbus or the Salvation Army.

All of these groups have come together, not merely for social interests, but for fine, high American motives. Many historical dwellings and landmarks would have entirely disappeared and have been lost to history had it not been for the activity of the Daughters and Sons of the American Revolution. Museums all over the country have been enriched by priceless manuscripts, letters, pictures and ancient works of art contributed by the descendants of the old settlers.

The birthplace of Washington, as well as his home, Mount Vernon, was saved to the nation by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The most colossal monument in all history, Stone Mountain Memorial, eleven hundred feet long and two hundred feet high, costing several millions, has been made possible to the world through the sentiment and conservative activities of the Daughters of the Confederacy.

There is an immeasurable power for good in groups of people brought together in a sacred interest to their country. There is a common bond in the heritage of its history. These are the peace-time defenders of the nation. And they have only begun to make their power felt.

What prouder heritage can you give your children than the record of the part, no matter how simple or how humble, which their forbears had in the making of a great nation? In these patriotic societies the great-granddaughter of a colonel ranks no higher than the descendant of that colonel's orderly. It frequently happens that one whose ancestors served in an obscure way may be the leader in the present-day organizations. Nowhere is our democracy more justified and evidenced than in the evolution of the descendants of our early defenders.

THE DELINEATOR, as a February gift to its readers, has collected information about the most important of the patriotic societies—how to know if you are eligible, how to join, what the costs are, what the insignia is and what the aims and accomplishments of these organizations are. If you are interested in the records of your own family and in being a part of the proud patriotic societies of this country, write to us for this information. It will be given to you merely for the cost of printing.

THE LABOR OF LITTLE CHILDREN

ONE of the cruelest injustices in the world—one which weighed heavily upon the heart of that great child saver, the late Dr. L. Emmett Holt—is child labor.

When Doctor Holt undertook his direction of the Happy Child Department of THE DELINEATOR, he made two stipulations: first, that the very highest standard of child health should be presented; and second, that at least once a year, until such time as the laws of the land insured protection for our helpless little ones, THE DELINEATOR should make a plea for legislation to regulate child labor.

Last year Doctor Holt himself wrote an appeal to the women of the country, and particularly to those fortunate mothers whose children have enough financial means to be given a chance. He also asked Dr. Owen Lovejoy, General Secretary of the National Child-Labor Committee, to prepare a stern article recounting the labor conditions of little children in the United States up to December 1, 1923.

Doctor Holt's sudden death in China some months after he had voiced his earnest appeal leaves upon us the obligation to urge the readers of THE DELINEATOR to register their strong protest against any law which authorizes life-destroying and spirit-breaking labor for children. We beg you to support the Child-Labor Law Amendment, which has already been passed by Congress and is now coming before forty-two State legislatures when they meet in 1925. Thirty-six States must ratify this amendment in order to make it a part of the Constitution of the United States.

The census of 1920 showed that over one million children from the ages of ten to sixteen were working in the United States in factories, mills, canneries and other industries. When one State prohibited child labor, the young workers were taken to another State which permitted it. Trainloads of them have been carried to the beet-fields.

Do not listen to the argument that poor people need the earnings of their children. Child labor does not lessen poverty; it reproduces it. Putting a child to work to support its mother is a remedy far worse than the disease. Regulation does not throw children into the streets; it sends them into the schools. Every community owes the children within its confines an education, the right to live and the right to health.

In the name of that great lover of children, Doctor Holt, who gave his life to the service of the young, we ask you to do your part to carry on energetically for the abolition of harmful child labor—not merely to approve in a general way the Child-Labor Law Amendment, but to be sufficiently conscious of your civic obligation to go to a library and look up the amendment, to read it yourself and think about it, to ask high-minded men and women to advise you if you are still in doubt, and then to act so that the children of this country may have an honest chance.

The American Legion

The Society of Mayflower Descendants

The Daughters of the American Revolution

Badge, United Daughters of the Confederacy

The Plymouth Society of New England

The American National Red Cross

Descendants of Signers of Declaration of Independence

Woman's Roosevelt Memorial Association

United States Daughters of 1812

The United Daughters of the Confederacy

The Daughters of Holland Dames

Overseas Chevron of the Y. M. C. A.

A NATION'S GREATEST INHERITANCE IS PRIDE IN THE NOBLE DEEDS OF ITS PAST

A COMPLETE TABLE OF CONTENTS WILL BE FOUND ON PAGE 100

A Home Built around a Mother

The story of the Kalamazoo "BETTER HOME" in America

By BLANCHE BRACE

DIGNIFIED SIMPLICITY IS THE KEY-NOTE OF THIS HOME WHICH FITS THE NEEDS AND THE POCKETBOOK OF THE AVERAGE AMERICAN

IT REALLY amounts to this: Kalamazoo, Michigan, has created a new style of architecture, a new type of home.

"Kalamazoo wins the first prize for the best demonstration home in the 1924 campaign of Better Homes in America." This is the news that the Associated Press wires flashed around the nation one hot day in early July.

Everybody was interested in that dispatch. It was a matter of national import. More than a thousand communities throughout the United States had exhibited demonstration homes in the national contest. There was not a State in the Union in which good citizens had not done their best to hold up the banner of better homes before their people. Houses of many types had been entered in the campaign—Spanish, Italian, Colonial, straight American, imposing residences, cozy bungalows, big houses, little houses, expensive houses, cheap houses. They ranged in size from three rooms to eight, and in price from less than one thousand dollars to twenty-three thousand dollars.

CLOSET-SPACE APLENTY, DOUBLE DRAIN BOARDS AND A SINK JUST THE RIGHT HEIGHT IN THIS COMPACT, SHIPSHAPE, "FIVE-BY-SEVEN" KITCHEN

And that five-room cottage in Kalamazoo, with its cream-colored clapboards and its prim green shutters, won out over them all! Why did it? That's the question of real importance. Just what features won it the distinction of coming out first in the national campaign?

To put the thing in a sentence, what made that little cottage the best Better Home in the land was the fact that, as was said in the beginning, the Kalamazoo house was planned after a new style of architecture. It was, in short, a home built around a mother! A home in which the key-note was the mother's comfort, convenience, happiness!

People have built their homes around many things. They have built them around economy, ostentation, ambition, pride, love, and "what the neighbors may say." Miss Julia D. Connor, administrative assistant of Better Homes in America, tells of one woman who wrote in to the national headquarters to ask for "plans of a house with a built-in ironing-board," making no other specifications. A tired housewife—oh, undoubtedly tired!—who wanted to build her home around an ironing-board! But the better-homes committee in Kalamazoo is the pioneer in building a home around a mother. And for that reason the detailed story of their Better Home is a vivid and vital account.

Caroline Bartlett Crane, beloved in Kalamazoo as a minister and a good citizen, and known throughout the country as a woman vitally interested in the welfare of America, was appointed chairman of the better-homes demonstration in that city. She called her committee together.

"We will build a home suitable for the average American family of small income, a family in which the father has a hard time to make both ends meet and the mother does all the work," decided the committee.

"Then we must build our home around the mother!" cried Mrs. Crane. "We will make the mother's room the most important place in the house, even if we have to let the dining-room go, and we will have to let it go, because we want this to be the kind of a home that the average American family can afford."

So they told the architects of their decision. And the architects, without exception, were at first unwilling to draw plans of a house with so radical a departure from conventional lines as a mother's room where they believed the dining-room ought to be. In fact, it required a woman, no other than Mrs. Crane herself, to diagram the idea for them by making a detailed drawing of the house as it lived in the committee's mind. Then the architects showed their clear-sightedness and sportsmanship by according her plans their warm approval.

"This house will be a factory for the manufacture of good citizens," one of them declared in what later turned out to be the best description offered up to date of the Kalamazoo home.

"We want this to be the best Better Home in the United States," urged Mrs. Crane. "Everybody will have to help."

And everybody did! That fact was no small part of the intrinsic value of the Kalamazoo better home. The mayor endorsed the project. A leading architect of the city turned Mrs. Crane's plans into blue-prints. A contractor, so successful that he usually undertook only large and important structures running up into enormous amounts of money, cheerfully agreed to build it. Materials and labor were furnished on trust, or, rather, on the deferred-payment plan, described later, which made all the creditors and workmen stockholders, so to speak, in the project.

The day came when ground was broken for the better home with a large percentage of the Kalamazoo public present, school children and Boy Scouts lustily singing their young heads off and grown-ups joining in just as lustily. Another day followed when everybody helped lay the corner-stone. Then small boys and girls with their little wagons hauled top soil and planted a vegetable garden in the back yard, under a tree which was to become the "better home" for bluebirds. All the way from the first grade straight through to the domestic-science and the manual-training departments of the high schools, the schools gave their effort and interest in every possible way to make a success of the better home. The library furnished books. The garden and landscape committees bent aching, enthusiastic backs over their task. It was "the house that everybody built," this better home in Kalamazoo.

Came the first day of Better-Homes Week. Up the front walk, past the dear dwarf Christmas trees in front, to the brick-paved stoop came the mayor of Kalamazoo. Waiting in homey fashion in the open door, a mother with her four children held out the keys of the better home to him. After him flocked, during the demonstration week, twenty thousand citizens of Kalamazoo. Let's flock after them, too, and see what they saw, a home built around a mother, the best better home in the land'

We'll follow the route the others took, not going directly to the mother's room, which is the key-note of the house. The committee saved that for a glad surprise. First, we'll pass through the charming vestibule, noting the graceful line of the stairs that lead to the rooms above. One of the hostesses stops us to point out the advantages of the ample coat-closet with its hangers and hat-shelves and racks for rubbers that opens off the vestibule

Continued on page 66

AND WITHIN THESE FOUR WALLS, CENTERED ABOUT THE OPEN FIREPLACE, ARE GATHERED ALL THE NECESSITIES FOR A REAL LIVING-ROOM

The strongest endorsement ever given to any musical instrument

The names that really count, the names that everybody knows, are those of Victor artists. On this page are three of them, and in other magazines you will find group after group of other famous Victor artists. Together they constitute an all-star cast of great artists without a parallel in the annals of music. Every one of them is identified with the noteworthy musical performances of our day, from the great music of the world to the most alluring dance or the trickiest bit of jazz.

© Mishkin

MELBA
Victor Artist

"Heavens, it's me!" was Melba's first comment on her first Victor Record. From that day to this she has never varied in her opinion. That Victor recording should have scored so great a triumph in so diversified a repertoire will be the more readily understood by listening to the following:

		Double-faced
Rigoletto—Caro nome Traviata—Ah, fors' è lui	6213	$2.00
Faust—Air des bijoux Hamlet—Scène et Air d'Ophélie	6215	2.00
Good-Bye Oh, Lovely Night	6222	2.00

© Mishkin

SCHIPA
Victor Artist

Schipa's Victor Records testify that here is a tenor who sings with ease of production, with lyric smoothness, yet with wholesome manliness, everything he does. A singer of original mind choosing to sing only what suits his voice and method, he is an excellent judge, as a hearing of the following of his records will show:

		Double-faced
Granadinas Princesita	827	$1.50
Pagliacci—Serenata d'arlecchino Manon—Il Sogno	828	1.50
Barbiere di Siviglia—Eccoridente in cielo Barbiere di Siviglia—Se il mio nome	965	1.50

© Townsend

WERRENRATH
Victor Artist

Werrenrath's baritone, clear, smooth and sympathetic is at its best today. He began early making records for the Victor Company and gained instant favor with the large Victor public. By sheer merit, he has won a place among the greatest in the Red Seal section, and that this was inevitable is amply indicated in the following:

		Double-faced
Dreaming Alone in the Twilight Love Sends a Little Gift of Roses	843	$1.50
Story of the Rose Tell Me Daisy	846	1.50
Danny Deever On the Road to Mandalay	6360	2.00

Victrola No. 50 (Portable)
$50
Mahogany or oak

Victrola No. 125
Mahogany, $275; electric, $315
Walnut, $325; electric, $365

Victrola No. 400
Walnut, $250; electric, $290
Victrola No. S 400 (Special)
Mahogany, $265; electric, $305
Specially designed to accommodate any radio receiving set

"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Real Victrolas are marked Victrola

TRADE MARK
Victrola
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Victor Talking Machine Company, Camden, N. J.

Victor Talking Machine Co. of Canada, Ltd., Montreal

A silken chemise and a kitchen apron should never meet in the hamper

It was naturally a fastidious woman who made this important discovery.

At first, the thought of her dainty undersilks in a damp, dark hamper with all the other household laundry was merely an unpleasant idea.

Then she learned that it actually shortened the life of her fragile things by months to expose them to the action of perspiration acids. Such garments should never lie in a damp, stuffy hamper for days after they are worn. Perspiration and dampness together rot silk, and wool, too. And there is perspiration in all garments that come into contact with the skin —even though they may not look soiled.

More and more women are coming to realize this. Considerations of personal daintiness, added to this danger, require for their delicate garments a quick tubbing in a bowlful of Ivory suds as soon as possible after being worn. This takes only a few minutes and results in the luxury of fresh garments every day—and in longer wear from them.

The choice of the soap for this quick, pleasant task is vitally important.

Ivory suds, from Ivory Soap or Ivory Flakes, are distinctively suited to this daily tubbing because they are pure—the delicate skin of millions of women records Ivory's purity and gentleness. So, of course, an Ivory sudsing, no matter how frequent, will injure nothing that water alone will not harm.

Do you know of any other soap offered for delicate garments, in any form, to which you would think of trusting your complexion—even once?

PROCTER & GAMBLE

Have you ever considered this?

A great many women do their entire household laundry with Ivory Soap — for their hands' sake, as well as for the sake of the clothes. Why not try Ivory for your weekly wash and other household tasks?

Your* PERSONAL *laundry

Every one of the modern garments listed below requires the care and protection provided by Ivory (cake or flakes).

silk stockings *	dresses
silk lingerie *	handkerchiefs
silk nightgowns ▪	ties
silk blouses *	cuffs and collars
sweaters	sport skirts
scarves	silk negligees

▪ The garments indicated thus should be tubbed in Ivory suds as soon as possible after being worn.

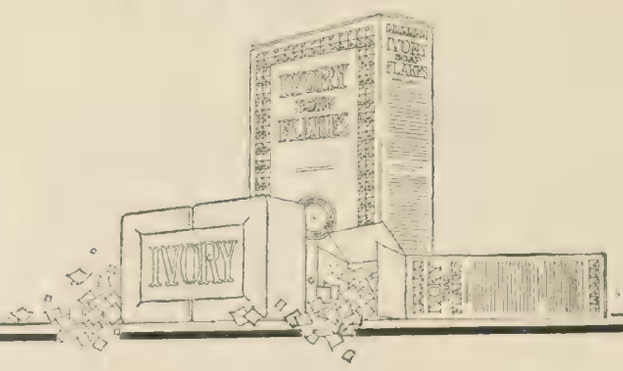
IVORY
Flakes



For a very special need
—a sample*—FREE

If you have a particularly precious garment that will stand the touch of pure water, let us send you a sample of Ivory Flakes to wash it with. With the sample will come also a beautifully illustrated booklet, "The Care of Lovely Garments," which is a veritable encyclopaedia of laundering information. Address a postcard or letter to Section 17-BF, Procter & Gamble, Cincinnati, Ohio.

IVORY SOAP

CAKE or FLAKES

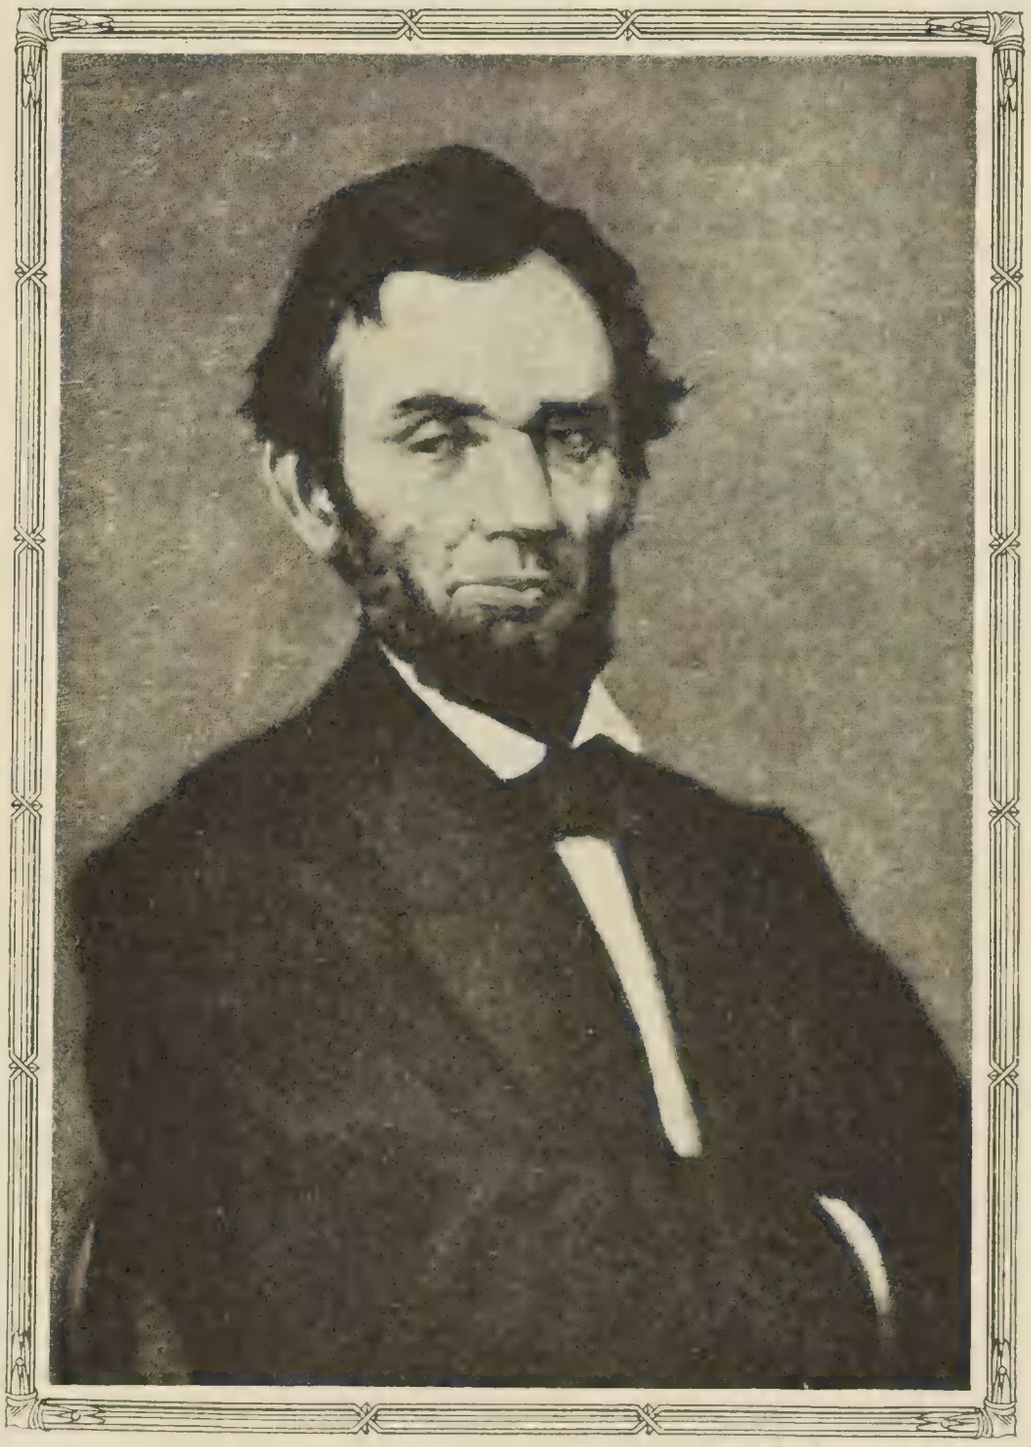
It Floats ⌙ 99 44/100% Pure

© 1925, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati

When Abraham Lincoln fought for more than party victory

THE LOST SPEECH



A great story of a great love

By HONORÉ WILLSIE MORROW

ON MAY 29, 1856, very early in the morning, Rose Franklin walked up the chief thoroughfare of Bloomington, Illinois, with her small brother dragging on her hand. In her gray silk frock, with its crinoline-distended skirt, Rose was an imposing figure. She was so imposing, in fact, that, even when the fragrant May wind had not wrapped him in the folds of his sister's billowing skirt, young Bodie was almost imperceptible to the naked eye. And young Bodie, at that, was not without his own splendors, for he wore a velvet suit and a stiff hat with long streamers and was eight years old and had a classic perfection of feature. He looked like his fair-haired mother, who had died at his birth.

Rose, however, looked like Ichabod Franklin, the father of the two. And Ichabod had a dwarfing effect on nearly every one but his daughter. She was twenty-eight, with her father's intelligent brown eyes and her father's intelligent forehead, only partially concealed by the parted hair waving on either side of it. She had in lesser degree her father's massive neck. The black curls, caught back loosely in a net, only served to accentuate its ivory strength. She carried her head a little forward, like Ichabod, and only recurrent dimples at the corners of her lips prevented her slender mouth from being too firm, like Ichabod's. Her shoulders were broad and straight, so broad that, contrasted with them and with the undulating crinoline, her waist was of astounding slimness.

She was, to quote her father, who was noted for a curious jealous devotion to her, "a splendid-looking woman, though too large for most men's taste, thank heaven!" Not every man's taste, however. Among her father's political friends and enemies there were half a dozen men who would have been passionately glad to marry Rose Franklin: Rose, splendid in mind as well as in body. She bore the impress of her pioneer mother, who had been fearless and thoughtful and who had taken on with other women of her day the responsibility not only of bearing children but of commonwealths as well.

From a painting by C. J. Munro

SHE moved slowly along the street, looking about her with interest, until Bodie pulled impatiently at her hand. "Rose, I'm hungry. My stomach feels naked."

"Don't whine," said Rose. "You insisted on seeing the town before breakfast."

"But the town's awful long for such a little town, and I thought it wouldn't take you so long to dress, and——"

"Good heavens, Bodie! If it is as serious as all that, we'll go directly back to breakfast."

"There's father, now, on the hotel steps," said the boy. "Look, Rose; there's a man with him that's taller than he is. I thought father was the tallest man in the world."

"That's Mr. Lincoln. I'm glad he's come!" exclaimed Rose, quickening her pace. "I want to ask him something."

"Who's Mr. Lincoln?" whined Bodie. "I can't go so fast; it makes my stomach growl. I wish my legs were as long as yours."

"Mr. Lincoln's a friend of father's." Rose's voice was patient. "He's only a country lawyer, but he's a very smart politician and you must be polite to him."

"I wish father was a politician instead of just an editor, then he'd have his picture in the paper like—" began Bodie.

But Rose was not heeding the child. She again quickened her pace as her father turned into the hotel and Mr. Lincoln moved slowly down the steps.

"Mr. Lincoln!" she called.

The tall man paused as Rose came up, a little breathlessly. He removed his high hat and smiled.

"If the Illinois Central trains had your speed, Miss Rose, that Chicago Special wouldn't be two hours late this morning."

The dimples flashed at the corners of Rose's mouth. "Poor Bodie finds my speed much less enjoyable than train speed!"

Mr. Lincoln looked down at the panting youngster. "So this is Ichabod's boy! Nice new suit you've got, son."

"Velvet!" snarled Bodie with the startling effect of an oath. "Wish I was dead!"

Lincoln chuckled, dug a copper from his pocket and handed it to Bodie. "Get yourself some horehound drops, son, and forget your clothes. That's my method."

Bodie took the copper and flew along the street to a grocery-store whose proprietor was just opening his door for the day. Rose spoke in a low voice.

"Mr. Lincoln, has father said anything to you of the trouble between him and Owen Bashford?"

The lawyer shook his head. "No. Of course I know they're always fighting each other through their two papers."

"It's worse than that now!" exclaimed Rose. "Day before yesterday in Chicago there was an indignation meeting of citizens over the attack in the Senate on Charles Sumner—Surely, Mr. Lincoln, Congressman Brooks will be punished for that."

Mr. Lincoln looked troubled. He shook his great head slowly. "It's hard to tell. Sumner himself will be the best judge of that, when he recovers from the beating, if he ever does. Adequate punishment of Brooks might set the whole South on fire."

"Let it!" exclaimed Rose, her dark eyes flashing. Then she returned to the object of her interview. "That was a wild meeting, Mr. Lincoln. Father and Owen Bashford led opposing sides. Father was for forbidding any member of the Democratic party who did not declare himself against Brooks to come to this anti-Nebraskan convention. That made Owen furious, and their arguing really broke up the meeting."

Mr. Lincoln nodded. "Your father has been talking to me of the same thing, but he didn't speak of Owen with particularity, knowing, of course, how fond I am of the boy. I think I've beguiled your father from the thought of bringing up the Brooks attack at the convention to-day. This is a convention to unite all parties in a stand against slavery. The whole point of the gathering is to avoid a party strife. I think your father sees that now." The lawyer looked at Rose keenly, but with a little smile. "Does that remove your fears?"

"It—it at least makes me more hopeful," replied Rose. "I—I hesitate to say it, but you will understand, I'm sure. I can't help thinking that, almost unconsciously to himself, father's intense feeling against Owen's politics has been stirred up mostly by the friendship between Owen and me. I don't think that even if Owen turned Whig, which he never will, father would soften toward him."

"WE'LL turn both Owen and your father into this new party, the Republican party. It's a good name."

"If we only could!" exclaimed Rose. "But so far their differences are irreconcilable."

"And a reconciliation would mean a great deal to you, Miss Rose?" asked Lincoln gently.

Rose met his deep-set gaze squarely. "Yes, Mr. Lincoln!" Then she added with a sudden, almost childish, trembling of her delicate lips: "But I've almost given up hope."

"Oh, don't say that!" cried Mr. Lincoln. "You are too young to say that. Leave hopelessness to old fellows like me."

"You! Why, Mr. Lincoln, we all feel that you are just beginning your career. I'm expecting to address you as Senator Lincoln in the not distant future."

Lincoln shook his head slowly, but before he could speak Bodie ran up, a long brown stick of candy protruding from his mouth. His nose had been bleeding.

"I had a fight with the grocer's boy," he explained thickly. "He said these were girl's pants. After the fight his father gave me three sticks of horehound for the penny."

Mr. Lincoln laughed delightedly. "And then what happened?"

"Oh, him and me are going fishing, if Rose will let me."

Rose smiled as she took the grimy little hand in hers. "Let's have breakfast first. Will you not share it with us, Mr. Lincoln?"

"Oh, I ate an hour ago!" replied the lawyer. "I'll see you later." He swung into his long stride down the street, and Rose led her little brother into the dining-room of the hotel.

Ichabod Franklin was sitting alone at a small table. He was writing on a reporter's pad and did not look up until Rose and Bodie had finished eating their corn-meal mush. Then he raised his head and gazed at Rose abstractedly. His was a heavily masculinized edition of his daughter's head, the black hair shot with gray, a deep line extending from the corner of either nostril to the corners of the mouth.

"Chicago train is late, I hear," he said. "I'm glad we came down last night."

AS HE CEASED TO SPEAK, THEY BURST FORTH IN APPLAUSE THAT WAS HALF WORSHIP, SEIZED HIM AND CARRIED HIM TO THEIR HEARTS

Rose nodded. Bodie looked at his father without speaking. It was characteristic of the relations between the two that the little boy did not mention the fight that he had boasted of to his sister.

"Is Mr. Lincoln going to speak to-day?" asked Rose.

"No. He said there were so many other speakers he wouldn't be needed. I think he's wise. He's a good country lawyer, but as a politician he lacks polish. He wouldn't get far with the sort of men who are coming to this convention."

Rose moved impatiently. "You underestimate Mr. Lincoln, father."

"Not at all. There's no man in Illinois I like more or have a higher opinion of in an advisory capacity. But he's been trying to get somewhere politically for a long time and he's never gotten anywhere. He's too easy-going."

"Yet you take his political advice! Father, he has a great character."

"Pshaw! More of your unaccountable hero-worship," returned her father irritably. "Bodie, leave the table, sir."

Bodie, who had been quietly concentrating on measuring the capacity of his mouth by ascertaining the amount of biscuit he could cram into it, jumped so hastily from his chair that he choked and deposited the mouthful of biscuits on his father's black broadcloth sleeve. Ichabod Franklin's wild temper flared. He sprang to his feet with an oath that paralyzed traffic in the dining-room, seized Bodie by the ear and led him from the room. Rose stared after them, scarlet-faced, then with obvious effort went on with her coffee.

ICHABOD returned shortly. "You spoil that brat, Rose," he snarled.

"He has no mother," replied Rose in a low voice. "He hasn't even the memory of her, as I have. She would have been gentle with him. The thing that I fear is that, looking so much like you, I may as I grow older develop your irascible disposition, too. If that should happen, life would be a pretty unhappy affair for Bodie."

Ichabod stared at Rose, the great veins on his forehead swelling. "You are impertinent, madam."

"No, father! Pardon me! I'm twenty-eight and merely losing the capacity for hero-worship you accuse me of. You'll never have a more ardent admirer of yourself as a great newspaper editor than I am. But——"

"But what?" snapped Ichabod.

"But you are letting your irritability hamper your career. And you are making a little boy unhappy."

"Owen Bashford, on the other hand," growled Ichabod, "(the blank—blank!) is a paragon of sweet temper."

"He's even-tempered when he doesn't discuss politics with you," returned Rose. "What did you do with Bodie, father?"

"I sent him to his room. Don't go up there and coddle him. But for God's sake, take that velvet suit off the boy as soon as you possibly can. He looks like a girl!"

The dimples appeared at the corners of Rose's mouth as she thought of Mr. Lincoln's genial appraisal of Bodie's suit, which, enhancing the boy's beauty as it did, she hadn't the slightest intention of discarding. But before she could reply to her father there was a commotion in the lobby and a group of frock-coated men filed into the dining-room. The Chicago train had arrived. Ichabod Franklin scanned the entering faces eagerly.

"They're all here, by Jove! This is throwing down the gauntlet to Douglas with a vengeance! And there's some of the State crowd—Selby and Davis and ex-Governor Reeder!"

THE editor rose with a fine smile illuminating his brown eyes, and the entering delegates surged toward him. Ichabod was the rallying-point for the Illinois Whigs, and men gladly recognized this while shrugging their shoulders at his distempers. In a moment tables had been shoved up to lengthen the Franklin table and ten or twelve men were calling for breakfast while they answered Ichabod's staccato fusillade of questions.

"Where is Owen Bashford?" asked Rose. "Oh, there he is!" answering her own question, as a tall slender man of perhaps thirty-five appeared in the door. Impulsively Rose beckoned to him. Owen advanced smiling. He was as fair as Bodie, but with a hawklike aquilinity of feature. His eyes, very blue and very intelligent, were fastened on Rose.

"How are you, Rose?" he asked, shaking hands.

"Sit down, Bashford!" cried the delegate from Jacksonville. "Room for one more!"

"One moment, please!" exclaimed Ichabod. "Bashford, have you decided to repudiate Brooks and declare that the attack was inexcusable?"

"Franklin," exclaimed a man with a white beard, "I beg of you, let that matter drop! You are jeopardizing a very great affair by your attitude. We all know Bashford's stand against slavery and we all recognize the enormous influence of his newspaper. We need him at this convention."

Rose, with a little nod of approval, turned to Owen Bashford with a deep, tender look. Ichabod saw that look and brought his fist down on the table.

"Gentlemen, I await the courtesy of a reply from Mr. Bashford."

Owen lifted his chin a little. He spoke with a slight drawl, for which his Virginia mother may have been responsible.

"Charles Sumner practically called Brooks's uncle a skunk in a speech that was filled with studied insult for all the Southern Congressmen. It was a speech containing more exquisite indelicacies than any that Sumner, with all his proficiency in that line, has ever attempted before. The very men who scorn what they call Abe Lincoln's coarseness hold Sumner's refined insolence up to praise. For myself, I prefer Lincoln's method. Sumner deserved punishment, but Brooks's methods were unfair and too rough. Both men should apologize, Brooks for the brutality of his arm, and Sumner for the brutality of his tongue."

Again Rose nodded, and as again Ichabod saw the approbation in his daughter's face, he rose, leaned across the little table that separated him from Owen and struck him on the chin. It was a heavy blow. For a moment there was utter silence in the dining-room. Even the waitresses, with their noisy movements of raw country girls, were still.

It was Owen Bashford who broke the silence. "But, Mr. Franklin," he drawled, "this puts you in the class with Brooks, does it not?"

"Come out and fight, you hybrid Democrat, you!" shouted Ichabod.

Half a dozen hands seized him as he again lunged at the motionless Owen. Rose, now on her feet, looked wildly from her father's face to Owen's. She knew that it was her presence beside the younger editor which was driving her father to this unprecedented excess, but she hesitated to seem to run away. It was Bodie who offered her a solution. A chambermaid who had not witnessed the episode hurried up to Rose.

"Your little brother's yelling bloody murder for you," she said in a whisper that carried across the dining-room. "He's disturbing all the folks that ain't out of bed yet."

ROSE turned quickly from the embattled breakfast-table and made her way up to Bodie's room. The little boy was sitting on the edge of the bed, howling with all the abandon of a disconsolate puppy. Rose closed the door after her, and, taking Bodie's hand, she led him to a rocking-chair beside the window. She caught a towel from the washstand as she passed. Bodie, big boy as he was, snuggled gratefully in her lap when she had seated herself and began gently to wipe his face. She did not speak until his wild weeping had given way to an occasional sob.

"There, dear! Feel better?" she asked.

"How would you feel if your ear had been pulled out by the roots? I hate him, the old black pirate!"

"No, no, no! Bodie, you must not speak so of him. He's your father."

The child's chin quivered. "Well, he never pulled your ear. You said mother wouldn't let him. The great, big, old bully, picking on a little boy! How did I know the old biscuits would fly that way? I had a right to see how much I could chew at once, didn't I? Aren't my teeth mine either?"

Rose gathered the boy to her shoulder, rested her cheek against his hair and began to rock.

"Mother loved him, Bodie—oh, so much! She looked on his temper as his affliction, like heart disease would be or consumption. You look very like her. I suppose every time he sees you he's reminded over again of his terrible loss. For he'll never get over missing her. Just think! He's the greatest editor west of the Alleghenies, and she will never, never know it! Poor father!"

"WHAT DO YOU MEAN, SIR?" ROARED ICHABOD. "WHAT I SAY," REPLIED COOPER, WITH A GULP. "THERE ISN'T A REPORTER HERE WHO TOOK DOWN THAT SPEECH!"

Bodie was tall and precocious for eight, yet he snuffled like a very little boy and buried his cheek deeper on his sister's shoulder. "Tell me some more," he said huskily. "It makes my throat stop aching."

"When I was little like you," Rose went on, "father lost his temper with me, and mother came into the room just as he was going to whip me. And mother just put her hand on his arm and said, 'Ichabod, you are ill again.' And father dropped his cane and stared at her and finally he said, 'Yes, Isabel, God forgive me, I'm ill again!' You see, Bodie, when God took her away, He took from father his very mainstay."

The child did not speak for a moment, then he asked: "Why did God take her away?"

"I don't know, unless He thought life was too hard for her. She was not strong. I think, even though she loved father so deeply, she was glad to go where there was perfect peace."

"You're like mother, Rose, aren't you?"

"No, I'm like father, only so far I've had enough of mother's strength to make me able to fight down my temper. You are like mother. You see, Bodie, father has tremendous cares on his shoulders. America is in trouble."

THE boy sat erect. "America's in trouble? What do you mean, Rose?"

Rose looked at her small brother thoughtfully. "I don't think I can make you understand it all, Bodie. But men like father and Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Bashford are afraid that the North and the South will quarrel so over slavery that America will be hurt, terribly hurt. Perhaps fall apart, like a house shaken by an earthquake. Father, your own father, Bodie, got the idea of calling together several hundred men in Illinois who love America as he does and who don't want slavery and who can make their neighbors think as they do. He wants them to form a huge party to fight against slavery and to keep America from falling apart. And that's why we have come down from Chicago, and why all those splendid men have come to Bloomington, to carry out father's idea. His idea might save the nation if enough States took it up. Think of that, Bodie! Poor, crazy-tempered father!"

Bodie stared out the open window. It was prairie Spring without. The street on which the hotel was set ended in endless prairie green—green and still more green. The heavenly scent of it poured in through the window.

"That's America out there, isn't it, Rose?" asked Bodie.

"Yes, hundreds of thousands of miles of it. And father carries on his shoulders the weight of thinking that he must save it. That's rather wonderful, isn't it, little Bodie?"

As the child nodded silently, there came a rap on the door. "Come in," called Rose. The door swung open, disclosing Mr. Lincoln and Ichabod Franklin on the threshold. Ichabod stared at the two in the rocking-chair, but before his elders could speak the little boy slid from his sister's knee and went quickly up to his father, holding out his hand:

"You see, father," he said clearly, "I didn't understand until Rose explained. You can twist my ear all you want to if it will help you to bear America's troubles."

Ichabod looked at Rose in utter bewilderment. She spoke quickly. "You've forgotten, father, that you punished him for coughing all over your coat."

"Oh, I remember clearly enough now. Don't let it happen again, sir."

Rose thrust Bodie toward the door. "You can go over and play with the grocer's boy until I call for you, Bodie."

MR. LINCOLN spoke for the first time. "In the handsome velvet suit?"

"I'm not going to take it off for him!" replied Bodie. "I've got him licked." He bolted from the room.

"Mr. Lincoln wants to talk to you, Rose," said Ichabod abruptly. "I've told them we keep the little parlor at the end of the hall clear for you."

Rose moved toward the door. "You are coming with us, father?"

"No, I have other matters—in my room."

Rose led the way to the parlor, her face filled with anxiety. Mr. Lincoln seated her, then walked slowly up and down the room. "Miss Rose, how did you beguile the little boy into an apology?"

"I didn't want him to apologize, Mr. Lincoln. I wanted him to forgive. I want Bodie not to have an unhappy childhood, and—and—he's growing to hate father. So I've explained to him the very big things father is doing."

The lawyer nodded. "You did a good job. I remember your mother. She had that same power, Miss Rose; you'll have to use it again, I think. Your father by his action to Bashford just now has roused all the partisan bitterness that we'd hoped to dissolve by this convention. He's hurt his leadership so that some of the best men say they won't stay to be led by a man who could say and do what he did to Owen Bashford. It's very bad! Miss Rose, this convention must not fail."

"What can I do?" asked Rose.

"I hesitate to ask you. But from what you told me, yourself, and from what your father's friends and yours tell me, I must believe that much of Ichabod's enmity toward Owen is based on his jealousy of your friendship for Owen. If your father could receive a promise from you that you would give up Owen——"

Mr. Lincoln paused. Rose whitened. "You are asking me to make father a promise that— Mr. Lincoln, does Owen know of this?"

"No," said the lawyer. "Neither your father nor Owen know. But if you make that promise, I shall ask them to abide by it."

Rose drew herself slowly from her chair and stood facing Mr. Lincoln. The lawyer, preoccupied as he was, gave her a glance of appreciation. She was, indeed, a splendid-looking woman: her massive head, her broad shoulders, her slender waist, her sweeping skirts. Here was a presence, he thought, that royalty might envy. She twisted her hands together until the knuckles cracked.

"It's too much," she said breathlessly. "That I can not do."

"You are very sure, Miss Rose? Take time. It's a momentous decision. The fate of the nation may hinge on this convention."

"It's too much," repeated Rose. "I haven't Bodie's forgiving disposition. Friendship after friendship his temper or his jealousy has broken. But they were only friendships. This—this feeling between Owen and me—Mr. Lincoln, did you—no, you never could have felt for any woman as I do for Owen or you would not ask me to destroy that feeling."

Mr. Lincoln's face suddenly became livid. "You can say that? Although it was common talk that I almost lost my mind when Ann Rutledge was laid in her grave! Do I not know?"

"And would you have given her up for such a reason?" cried Rose.

LINCOLN turned his gaunt face toward the window, and again Rose followed another's gaze out to the green of the prairies that pressed upon the little town. Again she was conscious of the May wind drenched with the nameless sweetness of the plains.

"I don't know," replied the lawyer slowly. "I pray God that I could have, had the need arisen. And equally I thank Him that the choice was not forced upon me. And yet, I'm counting on your strength, Miss Rose, and on your knowledge. No man in Illinois knows better than you the awful need of the hour."

"It's not fair! It's not right!" Rose's voice was as low as Mr. Lincoln's, but where his was sad hers was vehement. "Natures like my father's—that give to the world while they draw from their family like—leeches! Must one give one's last drop of blood to them?"

"I think so," replied Mr. Lincoln carefully. "I have found it to be so."

"I can not do it!" panted Rose, never raising her voice and never ceasing to twist her long fine hands together.

"By sheer force of intellect," the quiet man went on, "your father has made himself the leader of the best minds in the West. Miss Rose, I am full of uneasy foreboding. Unless the men who are against slavery cease quarreling among themselves, we face national disaster. Your father must change his stand on Owen Bashford

Continued on page 72

ALMOST HALF FAIRY ARE THOSE ADORABLE CREATURES WHOM BARRIE'S IMAGINATION HAS CREATED FOR OUR DELIGHT—THE GIPSY BAB, SENTIMENTAL TOMMY AND LITTLE PETER PAN HIMSELF

Better Days for Girls

By Sir James M. Barrie

The charming and whimsical author of

"PETER PAN"

"THE LITTLE MINISTER"

and

"SENTIMENTAL TOMMY"

PRACTICAL FOLK, TOO, MOVE QUIETLY THROUGH SIR JAMES'S STORIES—HIS MOTHER MARGARET OGILVY, JESS FROM "A WINDOW IN THRUMS," AND TOMMY'S GRIZEL

IT WAS Thackeray, I think, who said that he never met his old schoolmaster without becoming a boy again and obsequiously raising his hat. He also said (in a still happier moment) that he never saw a schoolboy without wanting to tip him. The two thoughts are really one, and perhaps come most readily to literary characters, the small as well as the big ones, for this did I feel the other day when I found myself among a congregation of teachers and pupils in a great secondary school.

The pupils were not boys, it is true—they were girls of all ages, from six to nineteen; but as I thought of my school-days and of the events in them that continue to shine down the years because of some unexpected coin slipped into my hand at parting (what a choice way of shaking hands!), I wanted, like Thackeray, to tip all those girls instead of delivering a formal speech to them. There were, however, many hundreds of them, so I hope they will not read these remarks and communicate with me on the subject, but rather take them as a passing thought (just as they were, I expect, in Thackeray's case). Girls, I remember now, can be very literal, and I recall with sudden misgivings an occasion when I had to say "a few words" to the hundreds of young ladies at Smith College, Massachusetts, and began by telling them that as a battalion they scared me, but that if they would meet me at the door one at a time I would make a speech to each of them. That was perhaps the most regretted assertion I ever made.

As for the headmistress of the English school I had to talk to, I am sure I felt for the time being far more awe of her than Thackeray felt toward his once headmaster. I was visiting one of the many secondary schools that have sprung up in Britain, and in America also, and that have already begun to make a noble change in the outlook for women in both countries. That, however, was not what alarmed me. The staggering thing was that the headmistress, who with one look could make all those girls merry and with another look make them as still as a monument, was my niece, who all the time I talked to them kept bobbing up before my mind's eye as smaller and younger than any of them.

IT WAS with a queer mixture of emotion and bewilderment that I saw her the sagacious head of this institution, and looking as if she had never been anything else. I remembered, for instance, one day when she was about a year old. I think she was dressed—let me speak as a novelist learned in the fashions and say our heroine was dressed in one of those white things that were so fashionable that year, and she wore such a pretty bonnet. The scene was a pleasant Scottish town, and a very great man was passing at the end of our road. So I whipped up our heroine in my arms and ran with her to the gate, in order that she might be able to say in after years that she had once seen Thomas Carlyle. In my own school-days I had often seen him in his great shovel hat and cloak and thunderous staff—Jove come down for a stroll in his favorite county—and scores of times I had doffed my hat to him, but, alas! with no response. Some one to be able to boast of having been spoken to by Carlyle once asked him on that same road how far it was to Lockerbie; but the sage just pointed with his staff to a milestone and stalked on.

My school-days! The trivial things that one remembers so vividly about his school-days and the important things that one so blithely forgets! I attended a "mixed" day-school, one of the most noted of its kind in Scotland, and on an unfortunate day for me the girls took a plebiscite about which boy had the nicest smile. I won—with the result that I lost my smile. I suppose it is still jigging about somewhere in the void, but it has never come back to me. A tragedy in a nutshell.

HERE is something of a still darker character. In those tender days I used, when in funds, to devour secretly penny dreadfuls, magazines containing exclusively sanguinary matter. They were largely tales about heroic highwaymen and piracy on the high seas, but what most enamored me were the stories of goings-on at English boarding-schools. How different from the dreadful humdrum of my day-school! The masters were sneaks and the boys blew them up with gunpowder. I felt that those were the schools for me. My mind became so set on explosions that when a Sassenach sent me a box containing mysterious little red and blue tubes I placed them one by one near the fire and then darted back, in confidence that they would explode. I dare say I wept when I discovered that they were only colored chalks. I continued, however, to read the breathless tales. Soon came the awakening and the moral, stalking toward me like two little policemen.

In the pages of a very different sort of juvenile periodical, called Chatterbox—a word that makes me quake and look behind me still—I read an article on the dire future in store for those who read penny dreadfuls. I tried to stand up to it—but no, no, not when black night fell. On such a night—the better for my fearful deed—I stole off to a distant field, my pockets stuffed with back numbers of my favorite magazine, a shovel concealed up my little waistcoat and deep in the bowels of the earth I buried the evidence of guilt. If you would know how I felt for days afterward, I refer you to the similar story of Jonas Chuzzlewit.

Many years afterward Robert Louis Stevenson, writing to me from Samoa of a visit he had lately paid to Sydney, told how he had gone into a book-seller's shop where they showed him all the newest and choicest books. But he said to them, "I want no thoughtful works to-day; show me 'Sixteen-String Jack, the Footpad,' or 'Black Bill, the Buccaneer.'" If I had preserved that fatal copy of Chatterbox, I should certainly have sent it to Mr. Stevenson.

I noticed that after the war it was a common thing for distinguished generals to revisit their old schools, nearly always famous public schools, and to say, amid general rejoicings, that they had always sat at the bottom of their forms. Well, if I was like that, at least I shall never boast about it. If I was an idler, I am very sorry for it now, as the children of to-day will yet be if they are in the same case. Even the generals might have been still more wonderful in the war if they had worked at school. Another moral: Not to work is to miss the best of the fun.

THOSE great English public schools! I never feel myself a foreigner in England except when trying to understand them. I have a great affection for one of them at least, but they will bewilder me to the end. I am like a dog looking up wistfully at its owner wondering what that noble face means, or if it does have a meaning. To look at, those schools are among the fairest things in England. They draw from their sons a devotion that is deeper, more lasting than almost any other love, and I well know that from them come some of the finest men in this country. Those schools must be great—and yet I don't quite see how it comes about. Of course, yearly, they send on their way a few good scholars and not so few eminent in the games that we love in this land and are right in loving; but the other four-fifths or so, what do they get from their famous schools? The generals and other illustrious old boys answer that question triumphantly at the school festivities we have been speaking of, but leave the outsider still benighted. What they get from these schools is not scholarship—pooh!—it is not even physical prowess. It is not an awakened soul nor any exclusive manliness nor even a superior way of wearing waistcoats.

They describe it briefly and unanswerably as a Something, and perhaps wisely leave it at that, putting us in our place forever and satisfying the youth still at school who may have been worrying a little on the subject. This mysterious Something is got with no effort. You just become enrolled a member of that school, and gradually you acquire the Something. So far as I can understand, it oozes out of the historic old walls and penetrates through your clothes. It is said there were never so many applications as now to get sons into those houses, never have parents made mightier sacrifices for this great end. Everybody is after the Something. Will the old walls that provide it hold out? Let us hope so, but life is becoming more strenuous. Somebody somewhere, somehow will some day have to submit a piece of that Something for scientific examination.

I AM NOT desirous of saying one word against those romantic institutions. Even if I wanted to, it would be quite useless. No one could move them. When the last trump sounds and all other buildings fall, they will

Concluded on page 82

TO ALL LOVERS OF BARRIE!

For each of you who have come to know and love the man who gave us "Peter Pan," "Wendy" and "Tinker Bell" we have a copy of this charming etching by Paul Roche. The impression is made from the original plate and is printed on India tint paper in a rich sepia tone. If you will send $1.25 and your address to THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., it will be our glad privilege to forward it to you.

From an etching by Paul Roche

I should like to give these girls a motto—something to strive for. I should like to see it blazoned over the entrance to their schools:

"That every child born into the world should get an equal chance"

Jas M Barrie

TOO FEW COOKS

Wherefore Emily saves the broth — and something else

By

L. M. MONTGOMERY

Drawing by Joseph M. Clement

"DON'T YOU DAST!" SHOUTED ANDY IN A FURY. "DON'T YOU GO TELLING GOD ON ME! I WON'T BE PRAYED FOR!"

"She will love deeply—she will suffer deeply—she will have glorious moments to compensate." Emily's dear writer-father made this prophecy just before he died. And how lonely Emily was in her little Prince Edward Island world after he left her! Gone, the one person who could understand her budding ambition to write, her sensitiveness to all beauty. Then came her proud Murray aunts, and they—but that has already been told by Miss Montgomery in the January DELINEATOR. Now she gives us a new and complete short story about the same winsome heroine—a story packed with charm and laughter as only this spokesman for the beauty spot of Canada knows how. "Even better than her 'Anne of Green Gables,'" you'll agree, after you have read it.

WHEN Emily Byrd Starr came from the little house in the hollow at Maywood to New Moon Farm at Blair Water, she thought for the first few weeks that she was going to die of homesickness and loneliness and almost wished she could. Everything, so it seemed, had been torn out of her little life at once—her father, her home, her dreams, her pet pussy, her beloved lady birches, her nooks of fancy and fairy-led roaming. She was alone in a strange new world where there were only Aunt Laura Murray, of the kind blue eyes, and Cousin Jimmy, of the elfish face and rosy cheeks, to comfort her—and where there was a bewildering number of Murray traditions that must be lived up to.

Not but that she admired many things about New Moon. Cousin Jimmy's old-world garden, where the prim lombardies kept guard, was very beautiful; the great white house, with its Grecian columns, its old-fashioned furniture and deep-silled windows, was very splendid in her childish eyes; the outdoor Summer cook-house and the dairy, girdled with its great pans of cream, were intriguing places; the sun-dial against the fir wood was a fascinating thing; and the orchard, full of white and purple, blue and pink columbines, looked as if fairies might live there if they still lingered anywhere in the world. In fact, Cousin Jimmy said: "We grow columbines on purpose for the fairies."

But not all the splendors of New Moon could stifle the anguished ache of longing for her father and the shabby little house in the hollow where they had loved each other so. If it had not been for the little black note-book Cousin Jimmy had given her—her "Jimmy-book," as she called it—she did not think she could have lived at all. When her pain and longing grew unbearable, she wrote it all out in her "Jimmy-book" and so won relief.

BUT at eleven one can not grieve for ever. Though her pillow was often wet with secret, nightly tears, Emily insensibly became happy again. Aunt Laura and Cousin Jimmy loved her; even Aunt Elizabeth, of the iron-gray hair and stern mouth, was not unkind, though very strict. Emily began to be a little glad again in sunset and bird song, early white stars, moonlit nights and singing breezes, fields creamy with clover, the gray mist of rain over the spruce barrens down by the harbor; in the great old trees around New Moon—no mushroom growth of yesterday, but trees that had loved and been loved by three generations; in the madcap music the Wind Woman made among the firs behind the barn when she blew straight up from the great blue St. Lawrence Gulf.

She found herself liking her background of old ancestral acres—meadows and woods where her mother had played when a child; she liked the old house, with its goblin firelight and its candles, its old clock that for a hundred years had struck for funerals and weddings, goings and comings, its closets full of silk dresses of a day when it was an encomium for silk to say it would stand alone. Her days became vivid and interesting, full of little pleasures and delights like tiny opening buds on the tree of life. There was a certain charm about the old house which Emily felt keenly and responded to, although she was too young to understand it. It was a house which aforetime had had vivid brides and mothers and wives, and the atmosphere of their loves and lives still hung around it, not yet banished by the old-maidishness of the régime of Laura and Elizabeth Murray. "Why—I'm going to love New Moon," thought Emily one day, quite amazed at the idea.

If she could only have written stories, she would have been fully content.

EMILY had always written stories and verses ever since she could handle a pencil. She had a stack of little note-books filled with them. Aunt Elizabeth was horrified when she discovered this. Fiction of any kind was an abominable thing. Elizabeth Murray had been trained up in this belief in her youth, and in her age she had not departed from it. She honestly thought it a wicked and shameful thing to read or write novels. No Murray of New Moon had ever been guilty of writing stories or wanting to write them. This was the Starr coming out. It was an alien growth that must be pruned off at once. Aunt Elizabeth issued an ultimatum. Emily must, at once and forever, give up "this scribbling nonsense."

"But, Aunt Elizabeth," gasped Emily, "I have to write. You see——"

"No; don't argue. You ought to have learned by this time, Emily, that when I say a thing I mean it."

"I am not arguing—only explaining," persisted Emily. "You see, it's this way. It is in me—I can't help it. Father said I would be famous some day. Wouldn't you like to have a famous niece, Aunt Elizabeth?"

"If you must talk, Emily, talk sense. Novels are wicked books and have ruined many souls."

"Oh, I'm not writing novels yet. I can't get enough paper. These are just short stories," said Emily.

"They are lies," said Aunt Elizabeth sternly. "Once and for all I command you to give up entirely this writing nonsense of yours."

Emily sat very still and cold. No more air-born fancies in verse—no more tales of wonder and horror—no more sketches of delightful hodge-podge, humorous or tragic as the notion took her. Oh, bitterness! Emily could not keep her tears back. The dead and gone Murrays seemed to look down accusingly from their dark frames on the wall. They had no sympathy with "Jimmy-books"—with the pursuit of unwon, alluring divinities.

"I won't have tears and repining, Emily," said Aunt Elizabeth. "You are to be grateful and obedient. What would you have done if you had had no friends to take you in when your father died? Answer me that."

"I suppose I would have starved to death," admitted Emily, instantly beholding a dramatic vision of herself lying dead, looking exactly like the pictures she had seen in a missionary magazine depicting famine victims.

Continued on page 78

"Too Few Cooks," copyright, 1925, by L. M. Macdonald.

DOORS

By
ALMA and PAUL ELLERBE

But a strong man may break in, even to a woman's heart

Drawing by Joseph A. Mateyo

"IT'S DOWN," HE SAID. "SMASHED. BROKEN. YOU ARE FREE. YOU CAN WALK OUT OVER IT IF YOU WANT TO. BUT IF YOU WON'T—NEITHER WILL I"

THANKFUL AMES awoke with the sound of a crash in her ears. She jumped out of bed and went to the window. Down the hill, at the edge of the Bradleys' wood lot, a car lay on its side, its lights shooting off through the trees. Its engine beat out a wild and plunging rhythm in the quiet night.

She wondered as she hurried into her clothes if it would wake her brother in the house next door. Probably not. Orrenus slept, and woke, heavily. But Rose, she thought, would be awake and trembling. But she wouldn't do anything about it. Her brother had picked a pretty wife several strata below him, from the ruck of the village mill hands, and had drawn a coward and a shirker. She wouldn't help at a time like this, and he'd take too long to get under way. Thankful lit a lantern and put on a brown-hooded cloak and went alone.

The clock she had inherited from Great-grandmother Hatch piped three times, like a brisk exclamatory little woman, as she opened the back door. She ran down the hill through the rustling goldenrod.

The lights of the car bored a brilliant tunnel into a grove of birch-trees. Their delicate sinuous lines shone in patterns of startling white. The frustrate engine beat like the heart of the night.

She searched quickly through the undergrowth and found a man sprawled face downward, like a patch of shadow, in a frost-blanched bed of bracken.

She bent toward him, when something stopped her. Something red was moving amidst the shining white of the birch-trees. Some one was coming out of the woods along the lane of light—some one in a scarlet cloak.

Thankful stood up as straight as the village church and waited. There was only one scarlet cloak in town. Every one knew it. It belonged to her brother's wife.

It was muddy now and covered with leaves and twigs. The girl inside of it broke into a stumbling run.

"It's me, Thankful! There—there wasn't anything between us! He was just bringing me home from a dance at Bridgeford. Orrenus didn't get back from Milburn, and I had to go somewhere! There wasn't any harm in it, Thankful! I—I swear there wasn't!"

Her thin lips twitched. Her delicately modeled face—too slight for the chisel of events like these—had gone as white as the birch-trees.

"I believe you," Thankful said.

"Yes, but Orrenus won't! You know he won't! He'd throw me out in the street for this!"

SHE went to the overturned car and fumbled desperately up and down the dashboard, shaking like a red sapling caught in a wind. "I thought if I left the lights on and the engine running somebody'd be sure to come and find him. Oh, my God, where is that switch!"

And then she found it, and let her breath go in an exhalation of relief. The white trees went back into the blackness. The engine stopped.

In the sudden still dark the high terror-shaken voice grew softer. "You look at him, Thankful! I'm afraid to touch him! He—he's not dead, is he!"

Thankful set down her lantern and knelt beside the man.

"I'll see," she said in a voice as matter of fact as Orrenus's.

Her sister-in-law's indecent flow of emotion made her cold; but deep in her congealing heart she envied Rose her emotions. Yes, even Rose.

She turned the man over, while Rose moaned like a frightened animal. The dim lantern light revealed a broad face, alert, intelligent, with the tang of humor even in unconsciousness; youngish but lined with thought and feeling. A vitality looked out of it that made her feel that the man had spoken to her. She unbuttoned his clothes and thrust her hand inside upon his bare warm breast. Under the firmly mounded muscles his heart was beating as tranquilly as if he were asleep.

"He's not dead."

She got to her feet.

Rose stopped moaning. "For the sake of the family—" she began, a little glib already.

But Thankful cut her short. The phrase, in Rose's mouth, was unpleasant. "I'll help you keep this from Orrenus if I can. Go home and get into bed. I'll wake Mr. Bradley and we'll get him to the hospital somehow. I'll say I found him here alone—which is the truth. Maybe, when he comes to, we can get him to promise not to tell that you were with him." She couldn't bear gratitude from Rose, so she added quickly: "I'll do that much 'for the sake of the family.'"

AND it would have gone at that, if Old Tom Griffith hadn't worked late that night. While the words still hung in the air, the lights of his car topped the hill and fell on Rose Ames as relentlessly as the finger of judgment. Thankful, in her brown hooded cloak, screened by the trunk of a tree, saw the scarlet cloak flare like a torch—her brother's wife flung up, as it were, into the eyes of the village.

The oncoming car dipped for a moment into a hollow and "That's the end of me!" Rose said, with a kind of despairing shrug in her tone.

For a few pulse-beats they faced each other. The dim light of the lantern straggled up between. Behind them invisible antagonistic cohorts ranged themselves in the night. Thankful could feel them there. The spirits of all the old unyielding Ameses, Merrimans, Woodhulls and Hatches whose bodies crowded the five cemeteries of Granite Village thrust with singleness of purpose against her soul. She stared over in sharp surmise at the stranger whom she mocked with the name of sister and wondered what wild and ragged army clamored faintly for utterance through her thir and frightened lips. And suddenly the helplessness of them both, the uselessness of her own life, the youth of the girl, and the need of the man lying crumpled on the ground, touched her to pity.

"Quick!" she said, and snatched off the scarlet cloak and muffled Rose in her own. "Go home through the woods. I—" She swung the flaming folds about her as the light streamed down the hillside. "I'm going to take your place. What's the man's name! And where does he live!"

"Scott—Gaskell." Rose's voice came as thin as paint from a clogged tube. She cowered back into the wide and merciful dark. "I don't know where he lives. I never saw him till to-night. He—he didn't know I was married."

"Scott Gaskell." Thankful repeated carefully; and, red-clad and strangely confident, stepped into the light.

At five o'clock Thankful took off the scarlet cloak and went to bed. At seven she got up again, as if it were just another day like all the days. She stretched out her hand for her old gray gown, and stopped, remembering

Continued on page 84

"Doors," copyright, 1925, by Alma and Paul Ellerbe.

Annals of a haunted family

The BLACK FLEMINGS

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

Most powerful novel yet written by the author of "Mother," "Certain People of Importance," "Rose of the World," etc.

Drawing by Ernest Fuhr

DAVID AND GABRIELLE LOOKED AT IT, NODDING. STILL TO BE SEEN WAS A FINELY EXECUTED HAND, A MAN'S HAND, LAID UPON THE HEAD OF A BEAUTIFUL GREYHOUND

SYNOPSIS

SCENE — Wastewater, ancestral mansion of the "Black Flemings." It is a house of mystery and foreboding. Situated upon a cliff above the thundering Atlantic, endlessly pounding at the bleak New England coast, this Georgian pile, which in the days of "Black Roger" had known teeming life, now the abode of his descendants, is but a place of disturbing memories.

People of the Story—"Black Roger" Fleming, once the proud and imperious master of Wastewater, though now dead, pervades the family. The consequences of his stormy youth and two brief marriages create the present situation at Wastewater.

David, oldest son of Wastewater's younger generation around which this novel turns, is an artist, thirty-two, dark like all the family. He is Roger Fleming's stepson by his mother's second marriage to the proud patriarch, soon after the death of her first husband, a cousin of Roger's.

Tom, Black Roger's only son, is David's half-brother. He runs away to sea after his mother's death, and though his father leaves his second wife, who is little more than a child and an invalid, to search the world for him, he is still missing when the story opens.

Sylvia, twenty, dark and beautiful, Black Roger's niece by his brother Will and Flora Fleming, a cousin whose constant love for Roger was twice spurned, is heiress to the Fleming fortune which Roger, dying, left to her (since he could not find his son), appointing David as guardian.

Gabrielle, eighteen, breaks the spell of the "Black" Flemings. Her lovely hair is tawny, her eyes star-sapphires. She is Sylvia's cousin, the daughter of Flora Fleming's sister Lily by a secret marriage with a traveling salesman long since forgotten. Her little mother—"Aunt Lily" to the rest—insane since Gay's infancy, has not been mentioned for many years.

Aunt Flora, Sylvia's dark and forbidding mother, is the present hostess of Wastewater, which has been her home since the days when Roger Fleming welcomed her and her sister Lily as poor relations to the comforts of his wealth.

The Story So Far—Following a happy childhood together, Wastewater's young people have scattered: David to his art, Tom to sea, Sylvia to college, Gabrielle to a convent school in Paris. With Gabrielle's home-coming to Wastewater the cruel mysteries of the place seem to awake and center upon this golden girl. Flashing lights in a deserted wing; a muttering old hag found in the garden during a wild snow-storm; overpowering love awakening in Gay for David, who is pledged to her own cousin Sylvia—all these things trouble her. Then, one night, the old hag of the garden creeps muttering to Gay's bedside, calling aloud for her child. It is Gay's own mother, mad Aunt Lily, whom Aunt Flora has kept secretly hidden in the house. Merry little Gabrielle bears the shock bravely. She remains brave even when the ghastly fact of her illegitimacy is revealed. Blacker than any of the Black Flemings are the storm-clouds gathering over this single sunny head in the ancient mansion. David, pitying her, translates his pity into love, and, getting his freedom from a vague understanding with Sylvia, he asks Gay to marry him. Because she so utterly loves this David, his pat solution to all her troubles insults her beyond endurance. She will not listen to him. It is then that easy-going David learns what it means to suffer the torment of desire. Life that Summer at Wastewater stagnates. Aunt Lily's death does not even ripple the surface—when, suddenly, like a hurricane off the ocean, the long-lost Tom returns. He falls in love with Gay and imagines his love returned. Realizing that she has been playing a game with him, she resolves to escape from the spooky house and all its problems. But the night before her intended flight Tom catches her in a far-off room—and he fights with all the primitive in him to force her passion. In her wild struggle Gabrielle screams for help. The word that comes to her lips is "David!" And miraculously David appears. Shaken, he brings news which Aunt Flora has just imparted. Gay's father was no traveling salesman—but Black Roger Fleming himself. Tom is Gabrielle's own brother! In the paralysis of this revelation, a far roar and a blast of wind reach them. They run to the hall, where they are astonished by a brisk crackling. "Fire!" Tom shouts. "By God, the old place is on fire!"

PART FIVE

"SHE'S all right—she opened her eyes a few minutes ago—she'll be all right——"

The voice was droning away close to her ear in the howling noise and blackness. Gabrielle made an effort to think and to move her head. But her senses all reeled together in a sort of vertigo, and her temples hammered. She relapsed into blackness again.

David's voice, of course. She was lying in some bitterly cold place—out-of-doors—the sea never sounded so close inside——

Beyond and above the sound of the sea, breaking on the rocks, was a constant rushing of high winds and the creaking and dashing of bare branches. And there was another sound, of sucking and roaring, deep crashes—like the cascading of bricks——

"No, no, she's all right—she's coming round—" This was that droning voice. David's voice. Then a mutter of other voices.

"I feel like Bill the Lizard!" Gabrielle thought, finding the idea very funny, and immediately beginning to cry. And she opened eyes brimming with tears and looked into David's anxious face, close above her own, against a background of red lights and shadows.

Dizziness overcame her and she shut her eyes again, but not without a bewildered and weary smile that tore at the man's heart. And then there followed another period of utter darkness during which she could not quite tell if the roaring and crackling were inside her head or outside of it.

Suddenly she remembered. They were in Tom's study, she and Tom and David, and David had come up to say——

And Gay instantly sat upright and looked at David with wild and frightened eyes. She wore the velvet gown in which she had dined, such endless ages ago, and about her, as she half-lay in David's arms, a heavy blanket had been wrapped. David's face was grimed and sooty, and in the queer lurid light in the summer-house she could see that it was anxious and pale.

They were in the summer-house—that was it. But why should they be here upon this bitter, wild night, and whence came the queer, pinkish glow that was lighting the black garden and the bare trees in so unnatural a way? John and Trude were draping great curtains—were they the curtains of the old library?—against the latticed walls.

"Gabrielle—dearest—" David said. And she felt a hot tear on her face and put up her finger to touch it wonderingly. "You're all right, dear!" he added tenderly. And then, to some one behind him: "She's all right, Sylvia. Tell Aunt Flora she's all right."

Gabrielle heard a thick, fretful murmur in answer, and asked in a child's awed whisper:

"Is Aunt Flora sick?"

"Frightened," David said in answer. "And you fainted, dear. Tom and I got you down by the kitchen stairway——"

Recollection was beginning to come back rapidly now, and Gay frowned with the pain of it as she said:

"Tom—you came up— I remember now. But David, was that true?"

"All true, dear. But don't think about it now!" David said. And Gabrielle closed her eyes for what seemed a long time again. The man her poor little mother had loved had been Roger Fleming! Roger was her father.

"Does Tom believe it?" the girl whispered after a while.

"Oh, yes. He is very—very fine about it, Gay," David said. "There will be no arguing, no trouble for you, dear. Can you—can you not worry about it?"

"But David," she was more like herself every minute now and spoke with a voice full of its own peculiar vitality, "what happened?"

"Fire, dear. Wastewater's going, Gabrielle! In an hour the old place will be gone!"

"Wastewater!" she echoed in a whisper. And for the first time she turned her eyes toward the source of the glow. Three hundred yards away, and lighting up the whole black world upon the wild Winter night, the old house was one roaring mass of flames.

"The Black Flemings," copyright, 1925, by Kathleen Norris.

"Tom?" the girl asked instantly. "Did he—he was with us—did every one——"

"Every one is safe, dear. Sylvia was the coolest of all. She was asleep, but she had time to grab some clothes—got out easily! Aunt Flora was in the down-stairs sitting-room, where I had left her—she's here. I think the shock has been terrible, but she is safe. You fainted, seemed to come to just as we got down here, and then fainted again. But now you feel all right?"

"Perfectly! But David—I want to see Tom——"

"Tom! He was with John and the girls, saving what they could, until it was too late. But he's here now. Tom!" David said, raising his voice. And immediately Tom, who had been standing with the group of maids in the doorway, watching the fire, turned and came toward them.

He was grimed and sooty, his black hair tossed about wildly. Gabrielle saw the look on his handsome face, half-desperate, half-shamed, all questioning, and as he knelt before her, with a sudden impulse she opened her arms and laid her wet face against his.

Tom tightened his own arms convulsedly about her and for a long minute they clung together.

"Is it all right?" Gabrielle whispered. And Tom, gently putting the silky, tangled web of her disheveled hair back from her earnest face, answered:

"We got you out, huh?"

"Tom," she said, clinging to him and looking into his face anxiously, "I'm so glad! I have never had anybody—of my own——"

"Are you?" he said awkwardly, yet pleased, in a low, gruff tone, as she stopped. "You've got a brother now, huh?" he added with a sort of clumsy lightness.

For answer, still resting her pale and soot-streaked cheek against his own, she tightened her arm about his neck and he felt her breast move on a deep sigh, half of weariness, half of content.

And David saw his half-brother very reverently, very gently, kiss her upon her closed eyes.

"The wind's straight out of the northwest," Tom said. "The whole place is bound to go. Nice thing if we'd gotten 'em into John's house, like you suggested!"

"No, you were right about that," David conceded, as Gay, still a little dizzy, got to her feet. "John tells me the barn roof has caught!"

"South wing, sir—everything!" Walker, the chauffeur, said, from the group of watching maids and men in the doorway.

"Keep this blanket about you, Gay, and over your head!" David commanded, as they joined the others. "Good-by, Wastewater!" he added under his breath. "Do you see that the library wing has collapsed already—you're looking straight across at the woods beyond! She's going like tinder."

SOMEWHAT sheltered in the black old shabby doorway of the long-unused summer-house, Gabrielle felt David's arm tight about her shoulders. Was he conscious of it? She did not know. But she was exquisitely aware of it, even under her vertigo, weariness and excitement; and so reenforced, she might have endured a score of such wild nights.

They all stood in the shelter, exclaiming and looking over each other's shoulders at the fearful conflagration that was sending great whirls and showers of sparks far up against the black Winter sky. Flora alone made no move. She sat in the summer-house's one chair, with her bare head disheveled and dropped back and her eyes closed in a leaden face that even in the hideous light of the fire looked deathlike.

"This night's work will kill her," Hedda whispered once, glancing over her shoulder at her mistress. And Trude solemnly nodded.

The flames of Wastewater swept southward, howling like fiends as they flung themselves up into the dark, crowded always from their places, as waves are crowded onward, by fresh roaring surges of fire.

"There won't be a wall left standing," Tom said. "And she's not been burning an hour!"

"What I can't understand," David said, "is why five hundred men aren't here from Keyport or Crowchester—of course there's a terrible tide, and that road through the dunes to Tinsall's may be under water. But you'd think that a mob would be out here to watch the old place go!"

"You mean that they might have saved it, David?" Sylvia asked, shuddering with cold and nervousness.

"Oh, no—nothing could do that!" he said.

"David, we were all up-stairs. Did you and Tom get me down the stairs?" Gabrielle asked presently.

"That's one of the things we'll talk about to-morrow," David said. But immediately he added quietly: "Tom saved us all. My instinct was to rush away from the flames. His, being a sailor, was to get through them. And if we had run away, I believe we would have been trapped. Hedda tells me the only stairway in the far wing, where I would have gone, has been locked for years. Tom got us back of the wind by crossing the upper hall, and we climbed over that strip of roof to the old sewing-room and broke the window, and after that it was easy, down the kitchen stairway."

"The fire was coming—where?"

"Straight up that main stairway, as if it were a furnace!"

Gabrielle shivered. And for a while they all watched the fire in silence.

"John's wife and little girl, and Daisy and Sarah, luckily went in to Crowchester yesterday," David presently explained. "It seems that John saw it first; it started in the billiard-room wing. John saw one of the windows all pink, but he thought that probably some of us were down there, and he actually went to bed. But after fifteen minutes or so he got up and looked out again——"

"My God, my heart turned to water!" John himself said simply, as David paused. "The fire was bursting out of a dozen windows at once. She must have been burning since late afternoon, to get that start. I yelled for Frank, the Eyetalian, and Walker, and we all run to the house——"

"They ran up and roused Aunt Flora," David added, "and got her out here—and Sylvia had the presence of mind to grab a sheet full of clothes and things; the maids got out all the blankets that were in the store-closet, and their own trunks—but there won't be much saved!"

Sylvia had gone back into the summer-house and was

Drawing by Ernest Fuhr

"YOU TOLD ME—YES, BUT I THOUGHT MY MOTHER—I THOUGHT LILY—I ONLY THOUGHT THAT SHE HAD LOVED UNCLE ROGER, INSTEAD OF THE MAN CHARPENTIER!" GABRIELLE STAMMERED. "I—I AM THEIR CHILD—" SHE WHISPERED

leaning anxiously over her mother. They could hear Flora's feeble, hoarse murmurs in reply to the girl's tender inquiries.

An hour later there were shouts in the garden. A motor-car rattled in, driven already with a strange disregard for what had been the stately boundaries of Wastewater, straight over the ashy garden. It was the Keyport carpenter, with fifteen or twenty excited young men hanging on his car. The high tide had washed out a hundred feet of the road, he announced: "Couple hundred people watching the fire from the other side, in spite of the wind!"

"Some fire!" said Harry Trueman. He had had to drive twelve miles out of his way to get here at all. He added cheerfully that he had thought he might find the whole family burned to cinders.

A stiff wind was still blowing, but its violence had enormously abated; the air was warmer every instant, and the fire, less than four hours after it had been discovered, had done its work and had actually been blown out against many a shattered remnant of black wall.

Now it was safe to move the women to what was left of John's house. The windmill, collapsing, had inundated the lower floor, and one side of the house had been caught by the flames. But on the south side a bedroom, dining-room and kitchen were intact, and Gabrielle and Sylvia found a lamp and turned down the bed where John's little Etta had slept for most of her fifteen years. Flora was lowered tenderly into the sheets, and the blankets and little blue comforter spread over her.

Down-stairs, in John's dining-room, was heaped the incongruous salvage from Wastewater, just such a miscellany as maids, chauffeur and gardener had been able to snatch and carry away by the light of the fire itself.

Gabrielle and Tom worked valiantly at storing the mixed assortment at one side of the room; John lighted a coal fire in his own grate, and Hedda and Trude toiled kitchenward. They extricated a coffee-pot from the crushed and saturated kitchen, and finding among Etta's neat stores all the necessities for a meal, they served it in the dining-room at four o'clock. Sylvia was now up-stairs with her mother, and David called Gabrielle aside and with a grave face advised her to go up to her cousin.

"SHE gathered a good deal from Aunt Flora's muttering, Gay, and I've just been explaining things to her. Poor Sylvia—it's come like a thunderbolt to her! Suppose you go up and tell her we want her down here, that we're having some coffee?"

Gabrielle went up obediently. The lamp in young Etta's bedroom was shaded now, and Flora seemed asleep. Sylvia was sitting in the shadow, but Gabrielle saw that she had been weeping. She rose at once and followed Gabrielle into the little upper hall, and Gabrielle put her arm about her. Sylvia seemed confused and shaken; she said in a worried, quick tone:

"Mama is very, very ill! David tells me he thought she was, even before she had the shock of the fire. I feel as if I were in a terrible dream—I can't believe what he tells me," added poor Sylvia. "I can't—I shall never believe that my mother could be—could be capable—my mother, whom I love so dearly—" She stopped.

"It doesn't mean that one can't love—one's mother," Gabrielle suggested timidly. "She did it to protect—Uncle Roger. We always knew she loved him."

"Oh, gracious—how little you understand—how little anybody understands!" Sylvia exclaimed, under her breath, in despair. "You tell me that I needn't stop loving her—and David tells me that it makes no real difference in my own life—as if I could—as if I could go on living and believing that my mother had been—" Sylvia's voice deepened "—had been living a lie all these years! I tell you, I simply couldn't bear it! I'm wrong, perhaps, it's all just pride, perhaps—but I never could look anybody in the face again, never hold up my head——"

"Sylvia, do come down-stairs," Gay pleaded. "It isn't as bad as that—really it isn't!"

"Oh, what do you know, Gabrielle?" Sylvia exclaimed impatiently. "You think being the child of an unknown—agent," she asked, astonished, "is much the same as being Uncle Roger's own daughter?"

"I would rather have the name of Charpentier honorably than any name as I have it," Gay answered proudly and shortly.

"As you have it?" Sylvia echoed. "I don't believe you understand," she added bewilderedly.

She let Gabrielle guide her down-stairs and slipped into her place at the improvised table quietly, not looking up or tasting the solids, although she drank her hot coffee gratefully.

"David, could we possibly get mama in to a doctor—to a sanitarium?" she asked presently in a low voice.

"John and Walker have gone 'round the long way to Crowchester for the doctor," David said, glad to talk. "The road's washed out, you know. They ought to be back in another hour, and then we can tell something."

"She looks—like death—" Sylvia said, with suddenly trembling lips.

"I think it is only shock," David answered. Gabrielle had dropped her beautiful disheveled head against the back of her chair; Tom had flung himself upon the little sofa and was already asleep. David replenished the fire, and he and Sylvia sat watching it, sometimes exchanging a few words, or sometimes going up-stairs to look at the invalid, who seemed sleeping.

The doctor came and went at five without waking either Tom or Gabrielle; a cold dawn was over the world when the girl stirred under her heap of comforters and sat up blinking and rosy, wondering for a long stupefied minute where she was and why Tom should be stretched out sound asleep a few feet away. Margaret had come out from Keyport, John's wife and daughter were lamenting and sympathizing in the disordered kitchen, and two or three score of sightseers were already picking their way about the ruins of what had been Wastewater.

GAY, going out with Tom just as the Winter sun rose dazzling and clear, looked about her in blank amazement. Where the house had stood for more than a century was only a singed and hideous stretch of wreckage now, heaps of blackened bricks, tumbled masses of half-burned plaster and cement. Twisted pipes glistened wet in the rain; the whole smelled acridly; here and there some hidden heap of wood or paper smoldered sullenly.

When, between David and Tom, with her hair twisted up in a great coil and one of John's coats buttoned about her, she walked slowly about the incredible desolation of the walls, the villagers drew back a little and eyed the family curiously.

When they walked past what had been the sitting-room, Tom climbed over a mass of bricks and kicked free with his foot a segment of charred and soaked frame, to which a tattered strip of canvas still clung.

" 'Member this?" he asked.

David and Gabrielle looked at it, nodding. There were but a few useless inches of it left; but they could see it had been a painting. Still to be seen was a finely executed hand, a man's hand, laid upon the head of a beautiful greyhound.

"Uncle Roger." David said gravely.

"My father," said Tom.

"And mine," Gabrielle added softly, a warm young vital hand in David's, her beautiful eyes not raised from this tragic little last glimpse of the splendid and victorious Black Fleming of Wastewater.

The doctor returned with another doctor in the course of the strange disorganized day. Sylvia, who had been lying down, went up-stairs with them, Gabrielle waiting restlessly for their opinion.

Almost immediately after they had come down, however, David called her. She went out of the dining-room to find him on the stairway.

"Gay, dear, Aunt Flora wants to see you." His tone frightened her.

"She's not very sick?"

"We hope not, dear. But they are not—satisfied. She wants to see you and me and Tom."

"But, David, we can get her in to Boston, can't we? Didn't Hedda say something about an ambulance?"

"It's a question of whether the roads are passable. They are discussing that now."

A GREAT awe fell upon Gabrielle as she went up to the crowded little bedroom. She could see nothing except Aunt Flora, lying straight in the girlish little bed; Aunt Flora looking sunken-cheeked and ghastly, and living only in her restless and tortured eyes.

"How do you feel now?" David said cheerfully, sitting down beside the bed and patting her hand. She did not smile. But she moved her eyes to his face and fixed them there.

Sylvia was at one side of the bed, David and Tom took chairs at the foot, and Gabrielle quite naturally sank to her knees beside Sylvia, so that the two girls' faces were close to Flora's.

Flora moved her solemn gaze to Gabrielle's face.

"I am very sick," she whispered.

"Oh, Aunt Flora, you'll feel so much better when you get into a comfortable hospital," Gabrielle said gently, infinitely distressed.

"No," the sick woman said, shaking her head, "they'll not move me! David told you and Tom something yesterday," she added, wearily shutting her eyes and hardly moving her lips. "You should have known it long ago. You—and Tom are angry at me?"

"Oh, Aunt Flora—no!"

"You are Roger Fleming's daughter, Gabrielle," Flora whispered, clutching her hand and eying her anxiously.

"So David said," Gabrielle murmured, with a troubled glance at him.

"You should have known it long ago," Flora repeated, beating gently on Gabrielle's hand. "It was the sin—the terrible sin of my life. But David," she interrupted herself, appealing to him, "I did not mean to harm them!"

"I'm sure of it, Aunt Flora! But why worry yourself with it now? We are all safe, all well—couldn't it wait?" David urged with infinite gentleness.

"No—no—no!" she exclaimed, raising herself to a sitting position and struggling almost as if they were constraining her physically. "I must talk now—and then I shall sleep! You must let me talk, and then I shall sleep! I want you all to understand."

"Did you ever know," she went on, seeming to feel her way for the right phrases and sinking back into the pillows with shut eyes, "did you ever know how I happened to come first to Wastewater? My father was John Fleming, Roger Fleming's cousin—he was a dentist, in Brookline. We were very poor when I was a child, and the first days I remember were of a little Brookline flat and my mother sewing at a sewing-machine. My sister Lily was a delicate little baby then—Lily was six years younger than I. For days and days and days of rain I remember the sewing-machine, and the crying of the baby, and my mother murmuring at the hall door to men who came about bills. In the Spring I had to take the baby out, and sometimes the wind would chap both our faces, and we would sit crying in the park. It seems to me we were always cold——"

"Dearest, do you want to talk now?" Sylvia asked tenderly, as the harsh, deep voice paused.

Flora opened the eyes that had been slowly sinking shut and widened them anxiously.

Continued on page 87

FAMILY—OR LOVE?

So often a girl must make a choice between them. When heredity and happiness clash—what a tremendous love-story it makes! And we've got it for you—

"THE PEEL TRAIT"

by

Joseph C. Lincoln

Her name is Lettice—Cap'n Peel's lovely daughter—whose heart becomes the plaything of men and of forces hopelessly stronger than her own strong will. She has just one way of escape. Does she find it?

This brilliant novel by Mr. Lincoln will set another high-water mark of popularity for one of America's most popular writers. "Shavings," "The Portygee," "Dr. Nye," "Rugged Water"—these and many others are the reason why his books are literally worn to shreds from use in all the libraries throughout the country. And no wonder! For the yarns he spins of Cape Cod life are as snappy and refreshing as the salt sea wind that blows there.

In the March DELINEATOR you will find the first instalment of Joseph C. Lincoln's latest Cape Cod triumph.

Don't Miss It!

Drawing by J. Scott Williams

Why Boys and Girls play differently

By FIELDING H. YOST

Director of Intercollegiate Athletics, University of Michigan

SOME one has said that if you want to know what the child is, study his play; if you want to influence what he is to become, direct the form of his play. This being true, it is of the utmost importance to parents to see that their children have intelligent supervision during their play hours as well as during the hours devoted to school work. The child that "just grows" like the celebrated Topsy may grow in a direction altogether different from that which his parents would have selected. Furthermore, the most rigid supervision of school work will often be offset by a laxity of supervision over the play periods. Play is much more interesting to the child and, therefore, much more of an element in determining his character than what he does in the classroom. The average child, until he reaches an age where he has some definite ideas of the relation of work to reward, does a good deal of his studying because he dreads the immediate consequences of not doing it. But he puts his whole heart and soul into the business of play, and it becomes a part of him.

Just as long as men and women are different, the play of boys and girls will differ. This is as it should be, for the world has need of the stern virtues of manhood as well as and in contrast to the gentler virtues of womanhood. I rejoice in the extension of woman's privileges and in her changed outlook on participation in games that would have been called "unladylike" in the age when it was considered a mark of fine breeding to "enjoy poor health," when an attack of the "vapors" was the standard equipment of the heroines of novels, and no day was considered complete without at least one swoon. But at the same time I am bitterly opposed to any "standardization" of the sexes. Mannish women and effeminate men are equally abhorrent to me.

GIRLS should be encouraged to play active games, but they should select the active games suited to their temperament and physique. Football would never do for a girl's game, because of its danger to players who lack a rugged physique and a good muscular development, and because of its intensely combative nature. Games in which the personal-contact element is strongly emphasized I do not recommend for girls, because the feminine athlete is not so good a competitor as the masculine, on account of her supreme partisanship and her more emotional nature.

The question of whether girls and young women should play competitive games along with boys hinges on the question of what the woman of to-morrow is going to be. If she is constantly to widen her field of competition with men, she should get her training for that competition in the games of men. In other words, if she is going to lead the same life as a man, she ought to have the same preparation for it. The more closely the activities of men and women approach each other, the more closely related will the play of the two sexes become. The world needs both the masculine and feminine natures, and neither can approximate the other without sacrificing some of its own merit. We must have the power and vigor of barbaric manhood, but we also must have the kindliness, sympathy, and forbearance of gentle womanhood. Both men and women should have a share of these virtues, but they will best be preserved by having each sex retain the qualities that primarily belong to it.

The play of the two sexes has been getting more and more alike with the advance of civilization. In the early history of mankind when the tribe was the unit man's life was very different from woman's. The man was the hunter and the fighter. He had to be strong and athletic to live, for his success as a hunter depended on his ability to run and throw. The weaklings got no meat. And just as soon as the man had acquired something worth having, he had to fight for it against other savages, in his own tribe, or with his tribe against another tribe. A woman was then no more than a piece of property, belonging to the man strong enough to hold her by his fighting ability. The female devoted herself entirely to looking after her lord and master and to rearing children. Since she had to do a great deal of manual labor in order to live, the matter of physical training did not worry her much.

IN THOSE ancient days the play of boys and girls was as radically different as the activities of their parents. The boy in his play imitated the hunting and fighting of his father; the girl, who knew that she would never hunt nor fight, gave expression to the maternal and domestic instincts. As woman has achieved emancipation, the advance of science has reduced the amount of manual labor required of her and the competitive element in the play of girls has become stronger. The intelligent director of play for girls has placed increasing emphasis on games that make for the development of a strong and healthy body. It is now fashionable to be healthy. Continued illness that can be attributed to neglect of proper exercise and diet is plain "bad form." Some day, so the scientists tell us, it may actually be listed as a crime to be sick, on the theory that a sick person is a liability to society.

The fact that fresh air, exercise, sunshine, a well-regulated diet, and plenty of water are just as important to a girl who is being trained for a career in "society" as to a boy who is going to be a manual worker, is now generally recognized. In fact, it seems ridiculous that any other idea should ever have prevailed. Yet it did, and until very recently, for the history of modern methods of directing the play of girls is a very short one. In our grandmother's day, the very idea of a "nice" girl playing basketball or indoor baseball or playground ball in public would have caused swoons galore. Yet in my opinion the modern type of girl is preferable to any that preceded her, though there are some things about the present-day miss that may have to be adjusted before we can hail her as perfect. It hardly would be fair to expect perfection to accompany such rapid evolution, however, and taking all things into consideration, the girl with her new-found freedom is doing wonderfully well.

Notwithstanding this recent, radical change in the activity of women and in the play of girls, there still remain certain very real differences in the play of the two sexes. And these differences are of such a fundamental character as to indicate certain characteristic differences in the nature of boys and girls.

Although all the great natural play instincts are found in both boys and girls, various studies of the subject have yielded the conclusion that they differ in intensity in the sexes, some being stronger in boys and others in girls. Also, the general instinct frequently takes different forms of expression in boys and girls.

We find the creative instinct strong in both sexes, but boys are more apt to construct articles of larger size, huts, forts, etc., that require less detailed accuracy, while girls are inclined to make smaller but more painstaking articles, such as articles of clothing.

SINGING and dancing games give expression to the rhythmic or poetic instinct. In some boys this instinct is marked; but in general it is much stronger in girls and is responsible for the great popularity of dancing and chanting games among them.

The instinct to nurture or care for is very pronounced in girls, and gives rise to the almost universal liking for dolls and doll play. It also explains why young girls usually enjoy playing with babies more than boys do. In boys the instinct is more apt to find expression in caring for pets or gardens.

The inquisitive instinct is the basis of the numerous plays of imitation, exploring, collecting and classifying. It is strong in both boys and girls, but is probably more pronounced in boys.

Hunting and fighting are primarily masculine instincts, although the hunting instinct is strong also in girls. The hunting instinct is the foundation of the many tag and chasing games that nearly every boy and girl plays between the ages of seven and twelve. All competitive games grow out of the fighting instinct and belong primarily to boys and men. The fighting instinct makes boys want to win. Frequently girls will play the same games; but usually when they play there is not the same determination to come out ahead. Boys are absorbed by the contest element, girls play more just for the fun of playing.

Concluded on page 94

"Hurry-Up" Yost Says—

Sportsmanship is an essential of democracy.

The fundamental purpose of education is to build men and women.

The only reason that child's play is more fun than man's work is because the child puts more of himself into it.

Fear is the great killer—not only of the body, but of the joy that health and success will bring.

What Parents should know about Whooping-Cough

"The World is Mine"

By DR. HENRY L. K. SHAW

Recently President of the American Child Hygiene Association; Consultant of the Division of Maternity, Infancy and Child Hygiene in the New York State Department of Health

THE cause of whooping-cough was a source of dispute for centuries and many fanciful theories concerning it were advanced. Its infectious and contagious nature was not emphasized until the last century. Now it is universally accepted as a highly communicable and contagious disease.

A word of explanation should be given as to the terms "infectious," "contagious" and "communicable." The word "infection" is derived from two Latin words meaning "to enter in." "Contagion" is also derived from two Latin words signifying "to touch together." Diseases caused by microorganisms are called infectious. The process by which these are transmitted is known as infection; and the mode of transmission as contagion. Diseases transmitted by direct contact were called contagious. For all practical purposes these terms are synonymous, but the word "communicable" is now in more general use to describe all diseases that can be communicated directly or indirectly from one person to another.

For many years it seemed certain that whooping-cough was caused by a definite and specific germ, but this organism was not discovered and isolated until 1906. The germ is named the Bordet-"Gengou bacillus" in recognition of the two French scientists who first proved that it caused and spread the disease. These germs are found in large numbers in the sputum and nasal discharges of children in the first few weeks of the disease. After the fourth week the germs can only be detected in about ten per cent. of the cases and are only rarely isolated after the eighth week. The cough may persist for months after these germs have disappeared, however.

The germs of the disease are found only in the discharges from the nose and throat. The disease is spread by the dissemination of these germs through the fine and almost invisible spray and tiny droplets of sputum thrown out during the acts of coughing, sneezing or speaking, and by direct contact. It is not air-borne in the sense that the infection travels through the air. The infective distance is probably not more than five feet. The disease is rarely, if ever, carried by a third person. Direct contact is probably the most common means of transmitting the germs. Outside of the body the germs are very short-lived, so that it is very doubtful if articles of clothing, toys, books, etc., which have been handled by children suffering from the disease, can transmit it unless they are used by particularly susceptible children almost immediately. Children often receive infection from neighbors' children, or at school, moving-picture shows and other indoor places where children congregate.

It is most important to know that whooping-cough may be communicated from the very beginning of the catarrhal stage when the only symptoms are those of a cold with a slight cough and running nose. It is most contagious before the typical whoop appears. Its communicability depends on the presence of the germs, which are rarely found after the whoop or spasmodic stage. Doctor Comby of the Children's Hospital in Paris will admit children with whooping-cough in the wards, provided they have a well-defined whoop, and he claims that in many years no susceptible children with whom the whooping-cough patients associated ever contracted the disease.

WHO CATCHES IT?

The susceptibility of young children to whooping-cough is very great. It is essentially a disease of early childhood, as over eighty per cent. of all cases occur in children under five years of age.

This disease is always present in a community, but epidemics are liable to recur every two or three years, or as soon as a new generation of children make fertile soil for a new crop of cases. One attack almost always protects a person against further infection throughout life. Alleged second attacks in the same person are generally errors in diagnosis and may be cases of influenza, nervous or sympathetic cough, etc. Older persons who contract the disease are those who escaped it in their childhood. A study made of four hundred and one susceptible children exposed during an epidemic in a small town showed that three hundred and sixty-six, or ninety-one per cent., contracted whooping-cough, and it is very possible that some of the thirty-five who escaped will have an attack in later life.

All the statistics of this disease in different cities, in different countries and in different years show that girls are more susceptible than boys, both in the number of cases and in the number of deaths. This is the only infectious disease attacking both sexes in which there is such a marked and constant predominance of cases among girls. No satisfactory explanation has been advanced. Some attribute it to certain anatomical differences in the throat and larynx, while others believe it is due to the greater susceptibility of the nervous system in the female. Pregnant women are said to be more susceptible than other adults. The incidence of cases among girls is fifty-six per cent. as compared with forty-four per cent. in boys. Mortality statistics on whooping-cough in the United States covering a period of twenty-nine years show one hundred and eight deaths in girls to one hundred in boys in the first year of life, and one hundred and fourteen deaths in girls to one hundred in boys in the second year, and this ratio increases as the age advances.

Whooping-cough attacks children of every land and nation. Negro children are more susceptible than white, and the negro death-rate is three times that of the white race.

It is of interest that whooping-cough cases are nearly twice as frequent during the Winter and Spring months as in the Summer and Autumn.

Just how long a time after exposure one can look for symptoms of the disease is somewhat uncertain. The very gradual onset of the cough makes it difficult to fix an exact date. The general opinion is that the symptoms first appear seven to fourteen days after exposure. If no symptoms of a cold or cough appear sixteen days after exposure, the probabilities are that the disease has not been contracted.

THE THREE STAGES OF WHOOPING-COUGH

The course of the disease covers a period of six to ten weeks, or even longer, and is divided into three distinct stages. The first or catarrhal stage is indistinguishable from an ordinary head cold with a cough. The attack is very gradual and insidious, and it is often difficult to make a diagnosis during this stage. The cold symptoms grow worse instead of better, and the cough increases in frequency and severity. It is generally more marked at night and soon becomes the dominant symptom. There is little or no fever such as would be present in bronchitis or a severe cold. The cough becomes paroxysmal and the child has "fits" of coughing and choking. This stage of the disease gradually shades into the second. The first stage usually lasts from seven to fourteen days, although individual cases show considerable variation.

The second stage is the spasmodic or paroxysmal stage and is ushered in when the cough is so severe that the child becomes blue in the face, loses his breath and the typical and characteristic whoop is heard. There are very mild cases in which a whoop never appears, but the cough is spasmodic and occurs in paroxysms.

A child can usually tell when a paroxysm of coughing is coming. He will run to his mother or seize some object for support. A series of ten to fifteen short explosive coughs comes on in such rapid succession that the child can not catch his breath between them. The eyes water and seem to protrude, the face becomes congested and purple, the tongue puffed and bluish. The child is in terrible distress. Then a sudden rush of air through the narrow glottis produces the loud and crowing sound known as a "whoop." Immediately there is a repetition of the cough, followed by another whoop. In a single severe paroxysm lasting from two to five minutes a child may whoop a number of times until a small amount of thick and sticky mucus is expelled. In young children vomiting is almost certain to follow, especially if food has been taken recently. Bleeding from the nose occurs with nearly every paroxysm, but usually is not severe or dangerous. Children are often prostrated after a severe attack and are hardly able to stand alone. These paroxysms may appear spontaneously during sleep or may be brought on by fright, sneezing, eating, drinking cold water, a draft or even by hearing some one else cough. They are more frequent at night and occur more often in a close room than in the open air. The number varies, according to the severity of the case, from five to fifty in twenty-four hours. Death from choking or loss of breath is practically unknown. This stage lasts until the disappearance of the whoop, which is usually in about six weeks, although not infrequently it is protracted to two or three months.

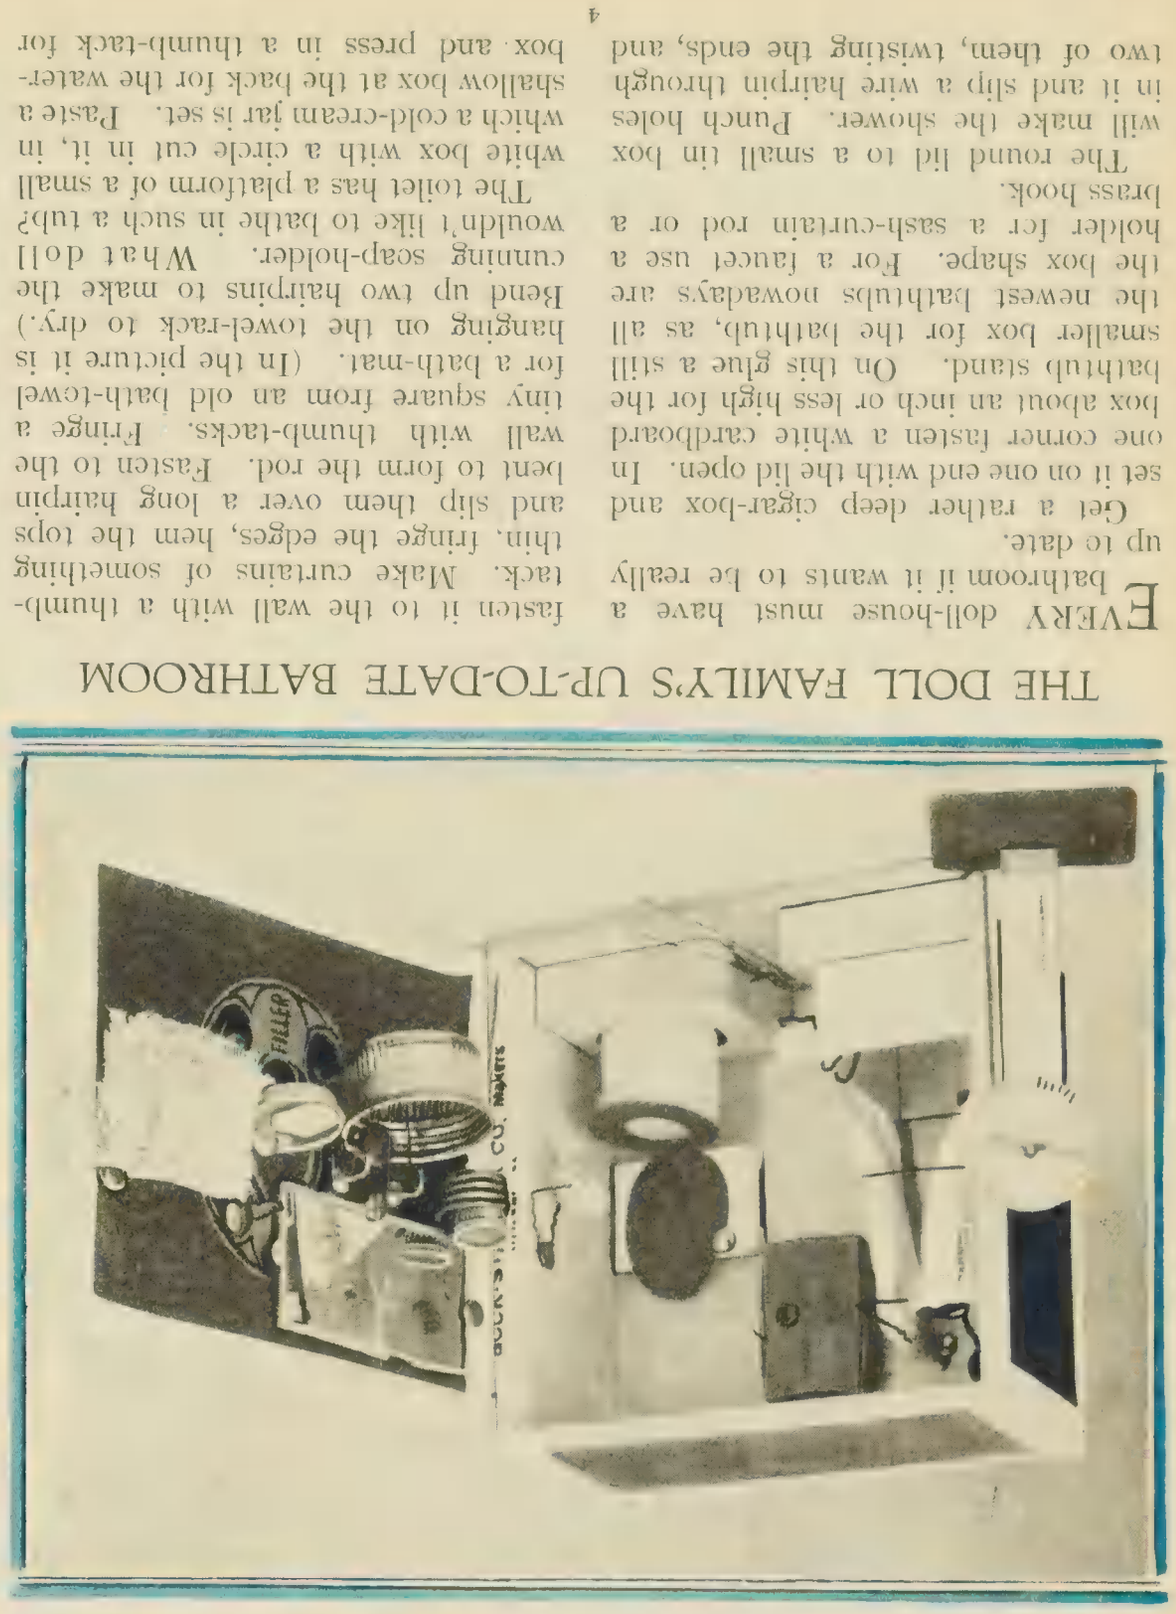
The third stage, or the period of decline, lasts from one to five weeks. The cough in this stage resembles that of ordinary bronchitis and may persist for months, especially during the Winter season. If the child catches cold after the cough has subsided, the latter will again become spasmodic with a whoop. There is no danger of spreading infection during such recurrences.

The most serious complications of whooping-cough are those affecting the respiratory system. Of these the most dangerous is pneumonia, which is responsible for about seventy per cent. of the deaths under two years of age. The digestive system is frequently involved and during the Summer months infants with whooping-cough are very apt to suffer from diarrhea. Vomiting is a frequent and distressing complication, because the child can not retain enough food to sustain his weight and nourish him.

Convulsions, stupor and paralysis are the most serious complications on the part of the nervous system. Convulsions are not uncommon in young infants who have rickets, and are often fatal.

The diagnosis of whooping-cough is very difficult in the early stage. If a child has been exposed to whooping-cough, any cough that develops within three weeks should be considered suspicious. In such cases a physician should be consulted, as he can make certain blood tests, examine the sputum and arrive at a definite diagnosis. Every spasmodic cough, however, is not whooping-cough. Concluded on page 71

MOTHERS!



Join our "Happy Child Clubs"

Whooping-cough is not the only disease which brings you worry and fear. Your child's slightest "upset" is frightening if you are ignorant of its true nature. In our new service Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw, the eminent baby specialist, gives you a monthly health talk according to the age of your child, warns you of epidemics and tells you how to keep your child strong and well. His letters are timely and helpful.

There are four clubs: One for expectant mothers; a second for mothers of tiny babies; a third for mothers of two to six year old runabouts; the fourth for mothers of school children. Membership in each club is only fifty cents—or in all four at the special price of one dollar.

Enroll at once! Address "The Happy Child" Clubs, THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing your membership fee and stating whether you wish to become a member of "The Baby-to-Come Club," "The New Baby Club," "The Runabout Club" or "The School Child Club."

THE DOLL FAMILY'S UP-TO-DATE BATHROOM

EVERY doll-house must have a bathroom if it wants to be really up to date.

Get a rather deep cigar-box and set it on one end with the lid open. In one corner fasten a white cardboard box about an inch or less high for the bathtub stand. On this glue a still smaller box for the bathtub, as all the newest bathtubs nowadays are the box shape. For a faucet use a holder for a sash-curtain rod or a brass hook.

The round lid to a small tin box will make the shower. Punch holes in it and slip a wire hairpin through two of them, twisting the ends, and fasten it to the wall with a thumb-tack. Make curtains of something thin, fringe the edges, hem the tops and slip them over a long hairpin bent to form the rod. Fasten to the wall with thumb-tacks. Fringe a tiny square from an old bath-towel for a bath-mat. (In the picture it is hanging on the tower-rack to dry.) Bend up two hairpins to make the cunning soap-holder. What doll wouldn't like to bathe in such a tub?

The toilet has a platform of a small white box with a circle cut in it, in which a cold-cream jar is set. Paste a shallow box at the back for the water-box and press in a thumb-tack for the button. Bend a hair-pin and roll over it a strip of tissue-paper for the toilet-paper and fasten to the wall with thumb-tacks. Cut a seat and top of brown cardboard and fasten to the bottom of the water-box.

On the lid of the cigar-box, fasten the washstand. The top of a salad-dressing bottle makes the bowl and is held by a thumb-tack put through a small hole which you will have to punch with a nail. Screw tiny brass hooks back of the bowl for the faucets. Two smaller tops of the right shapes make the soap-dish and tumbler-holder. An aluminum thimble makes a splendid tumbler. A small mirror from an old pocketbook of mother's is fastened above the bowl with three thumb-tacks, one on the bottom and one at each side. Bend a strong wire hairpin to make a towel-rack and fringe two little squares of cloth for towels. Cut tiny squares of soap for the two soap-dishes.

In case the dolls are sick some-time, you had better have a medicine case. Use the inside of two small match-boxes to make it. Cut one box in half and fit it into the other to make the shelves and glue a piece of cardboard at the side for the door, using a brass paper-fastener for the knob.

The stylish thing now is to have scales and a measure for your height, and one for the dolls is easy to make. Get a tiny block of wood, such as you get when you buy a dozen thumb-tacks, and glue to it a tall slim box. Draw little marks all around a milk top and with a thumb-tack fasten it through the middle to the top of the box. You can cut out a hand from heavy brown paper. Bend a wire hairpin and fasten at the back with glue and paper for the height measure.

If you think of anything that's left off, write to your Editor and tell her what it is. Your doll family will appreciate this bathroom, especially Mrs. Doll.

A CORRECTION—In the November number of THE LITTLE DELINEATOR we omitted printing under the Holy Grail picture "The Key to the Castle" this notice: "Copyright by Edwin A. Abbey, from a Copley Print copyrighted by Curtis & Cameron, publishers, Boston, Mass." We make this correction with apologies to Curtis & Cameron. Read the story on page 2.

DEAR VALENTINES, pretty and comic! It's our LITTLE DELINEATOR'S THIRD BIRTHDAY, so let's celebrate with a PILE of letters.

I've offered to send you the Holy Grail list and the D. C. badge, with Club secret letter and the Patriotic Program, and the cover prize. These are my birthday gifts to you.

Now, in return I'm asking you for a present: I want each of you to write a cheer-up letter to some sick child in a New York hospital.

Hours, you know, drag very slowly in a hospital bed, when you lie and stare at the ceiling, and your back aches and you feel more lonely and blue every minute. You lucky youngsters who are well and strong and playing gayly about in the crisp Winter air—couldn't you take time to write one cheer-up letter to one sad, sick child?

It may seem strange not to know their names ahead of time, but just say: "Dear Boy," or "Dear Girl," or "Dear Friend," or "Dear"—some funny name. Tell about yourself and your school and home and friends, and especially your fun.

Now, that's the birthday present your editor wants from you on our LITTLE DELINEATOR'S third birthday. Please, please send it. Perhaps your teacher will let every child in your class write a hospital letter for language work if you take her this page.

If you want to send valentines and scrap-books and toys and books, of course that will be splendid. But just one cheer-up letter will be welcome.

Good-by, valentines. "Roses are red, violets are blue"—but you know the rest!

Your loving valentine editor,

HARRIET IDE EAGER.

P. S. Address your letter: Hospital Birthday Letter, THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, New York City, and send a stamped, self-addressed envelope for an answer.

WIN THE BIRTHDAY COVER

The most helpful letter telling what you like best in this month's LITTLE DELINEATOR and why will win a big framed picture like the cover. Contest closes February twentieth. Address February Cover Contest, THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, New York City.

Copyright, 1925, by The Butterick Publishing Company

THE LITTLE DELINEATOR
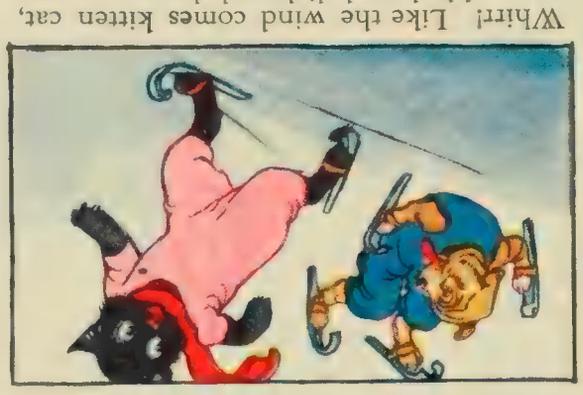
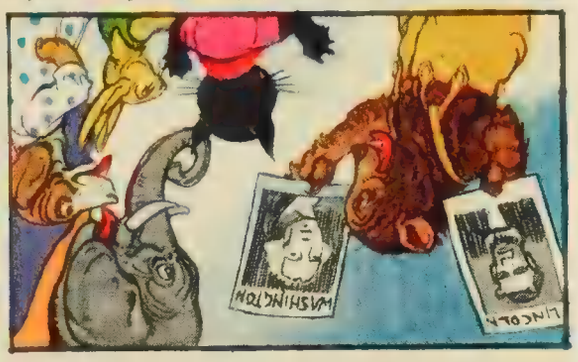
FEBRUARY, 1925
BIRTHDAY NUMBER
EDITOR—HARRIET IDE EAGER
PICTURE EDITOR—ROBERT GRAEF

OUR "LITTLE DELINEATOR" IS THREE YEARS OLD THIS MONTH—HURRAY!



Oh! Ha, ha, ha! Here's elephant a lumber-rumbling last!
Crick! Crack! The ice! Quick, off the field all racers scurry fast.



So, after all, fat elephant wins race and praise and prize—
A giant cake with candles three to suit his giant size.

Hurray! the long-eared boy's ahead in leaps and rabbit jumps,
His nimble knees and toes are used to lumps and humps and bumps.

Whirr! Like the wind comes kitten cat, so black and slick and sly;
Down falls the awkward puppy-dog and kitty whizzes by.

"There's Lincoln's birthday, Washington's and good St. Valentine," Says Deli-bear "Let's have a race to feast their days and mine!"

So all the Deli-animals, from monkey up,
were there,
The man who drops the flag for "Go!" was our own Deli-bear.

DELI-BEAR'S BIRTHDAY ICE RACE

A DELI-CLUB OF YOUR OWN

HERE'S the BIG SECRET I promised you last month!

At last we have our own Deli-Club!

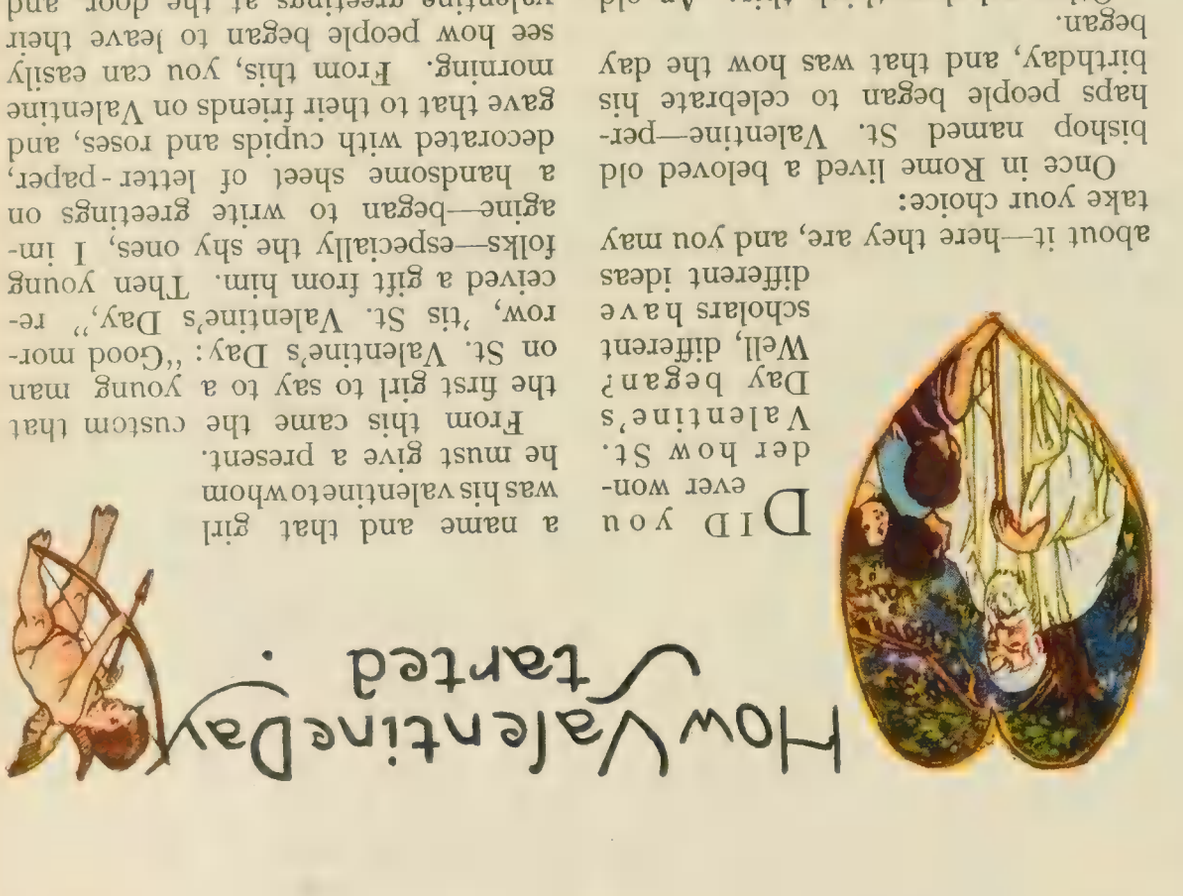
Send a two-cent stamp, and besides that a stamped envelope addressed to yourself, and say: "I want to be a member of the Deli-Club. Please send me my badge." You will get a blue badge like the picture on this page, and a letter telling all the news about the Club that there isn't room for here. You don't need to be a subscriber—just a reader of THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, and it doesn't matter whether you've ever written before or not. So don't be afraid—new readers are especially welcome.

Each month every D. C. member who sends a stamped, self-addressed envelope will get a "Club Secret" letter, telling what to do at club meetings, and new games to play, and all sorts of fun and interesting Deli-Club news.

Of course, if you can get some of your friends together and all send for badges and hold regular meetings, that will be the most fun. Perhaps your teacher will let your class become a big school Deli-Club.

But even if you live off in the country, or if you are an only child or a very little boy or girl without many playmates, you may be a member anyway and wear the blue badge and send for the "Club Secret" letter this month and every month hereafter.

If you already have a club of your own, you may make it a part of our big Deli-Club and receive the "Club Secret" letter just the same. If you are a Girl Scout or a Boy Scout or a Campfire Girl, you may use our D. C. ideas for games and entertainment at your meetings.



Won't it be fun? LITTLE DELINEATOR readers can recognize each other on the street now by the blue badge!

Oh, I've so many exciting things to tell you in my "Club Secret" letter! So write for it now.

Send a stamped envelope addressed to yourself, and besides that a two-cent stamp to pay for your D. C. badge.

Address "D. C.," THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, care of the Big DELINEATOR, New York City. Hurry up, hurry up, hurry up!

Copyright by Edwin A. Abbey, from a Copley Print copyrighted by Curtis & Cameron, publishers, Boston, Mass.

NOW did Galahad and his knights embark upon the Ship of Solomon, and at the prow sat the Angel of the Grail. So to Sarras they came and were cast into prison to starve by the wicked king, yet by the power of the Grail were they fed. And the king fell sick and repented and prayed for mercy. And when he was forgiven he died, and Sir Galahad ruled the city.

One year he reigned over Sarras, full wisely and well. Then was his hour come, for had he not builded to its last branch his Golden Tree of good works? "Now blessed Lord, would I might not longer live, if it might please Thee, Lord—" after this wise did Galahad pray, and he cast down the crown and scepter of his earthly kingdom and from his shoulders dropped the red cloak of life. And lo! angels stood about, and he beheld at last the Holy Grail, and his soul made one with God.

THE END

If you want to read more about Galahad, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope for the "Holy Grail" letter.

The Quest of the Holy Grail

How Valentine Day started

DID you ever wonder how St. Valentine's Day began? Well, different scholars have different ideas about it—here they are, and you may take your choice:

Once in Rome lived a beloved old bishop named St. Valentine—perhaps people began to celebrate his birthday, and that was how the day began.

Other scholars think this: An old word for "lover" was "galant." But people mispronounced it, until the word turned into "valant," and then "valantan" and finally into "valentine." Now before the days of Christ there used to be an old Roman feast-day in February. But the Christians chose to celebrate their own feast—and they made it a lover's day—or "Valentine" Day—when young people came together and dropped the names of all the girls, on slips of paper, into a box. Then each boy drew a name and that girl was his valentine to whom he must give a present.

From this came the custom that the first girl to say to a young man on St. Valentine's Day: "Good morrow, 'tis St. Valentine's Day," received a gift from him. Then young folks—especially the shy ones, I imagine—began to write greetings on a handsome sheet of letter-paper, decorated with cupids and roses, and gave that to their friends on Valentine morning. From this, you can easily see how people began to leave their valentine greetings at the door, and later, to buy valentines ready-made and to send them through the mail, as we do nowadays.

So with each pretty valentine that you give or receive on February fourteenth, just remember how it all started centuries ago among people who never dreamed they were inventing a custom to give you fun!

Write for the "Patriotic Program" for school or Sunday school, and enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Address THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, New York City.

From a painting by C. J. Monro

As Martha Washington Dined

By JESSIE A. BOYS

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

ONE can imagine the bustle and stir in the executive mansion when Mistress Martha Washington undertook the preparation of a State dinner. The first First Lady of the Land rose early to supervise the baking of the ham, attend to the mixing of the great rich cakes and see that a bountiful array of jellies, jams, pickles and preserves was brought from the storeroom.

In those days no one ever heard of balanced menus or adequate meals. Vitamins and calories were as unknown as bobbed heads and radios. Mistress Washington would have considered herself an unworthy hostess if her table had not offered an overwhelming number of the home-made delicacies and famous dishes that the gentlewomen before her had invented and served.

Quaint indeed are those Colonial cook-books! But a modern housewife throws up her hands in horror at such items as eighteen eggs and a pound and a half of butter for a single cake.

Hospitality—Southern style! What well-filled larders, what pantries groaning with pies and cakes, what tables piled high with delicious viands those words suggest! The new country was a land overflowing with milk and honey, and, as some one said, the Southern hostess often sacrificed European elegance for Virginian liberality.

No meal was ever complete without its beaten biscuit, light and airy, or its golden-brown waffles served with honey or amber maple-sirup. Many a Dixie cook has established a reputation on these two articles alone. Hot corn bread, thick, rich and golden—quite different from the johnny-cake of New England—was served with creamed chicken, and it is still a popular dish throughout the Southland.

A STATE MENU IN MARTHA WASHINGTON'S TIME

Giblet Soup Vol-au-Vent with Oysters
Baked Virginia Ham Creamy Mashed Potatoes
Maryland Chicken Cream Gravy
Candied Sweet Potatoes
Currant Jelly Waffles Mustard Pickles
Beaten Biscuit Spoon Bread
Creamed Onions Baked Squash
Currant Pound Cake Syllabub
Nuts Coffee

Recipes for some of these appetizing old dishes you'll find with this article. Others we'll gladly send you, if you'll mail us a stamped envelope bearing your name and address. Send it to THE DELINEATOR'S Home-Making Department, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

But baked ham was given the place of honor on the menu. Ensconced in dignified state it was skilfully carved by the head of the household. The cooking of this dish amounted to a ritual. No effort or pains were spared to preserve just the right amount of moisture, tenderness and flavor. The baking of the ham was considered so important that we even find a recipe for it written on the fly-leaf of a Bible belonging to a contemporary of Washington.

The recipe states, "To eat ye ham in perfection, steep it in half milk and half water for thirty-six hours, and then having brought the water to a boil, put ye ham therein and let it simmer for four or five hours according to the size of the ham, for simmering brings ye salt out and boiling drives it in." Practical culinary advice that!

Vegetables were as popular then as now. We find cabbage, turnips, sweet and white potatoes, lettuce, radishes, asparagus, celery, beets, onions, spinach and sweet corn frequently mentioned. But the Colonial housewife knew nothing about the cold-pack method of preserving them—the art of canning had not been perfected. Consequently, after the season was over only so-called Winter vegetables which would keep in large bins during the cold months supplied variety to the menu.

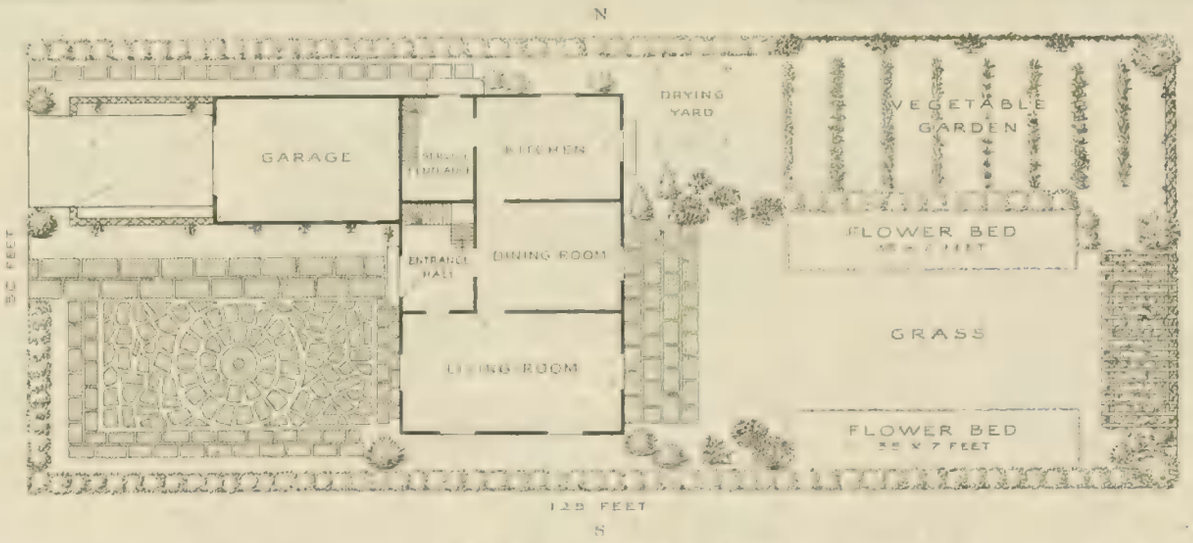
Our ancestors were justly proud of their orchards. Apples, pears, quinces, plums and apricots, cherries, melons and berries of all kinds were raised in profusion, and the housewife of Martha Washington's time spent many a warm Summer's day thriftily preserving fruits for Winter use. Apples and peaches were dried for pies and tarts. Delicious jams, clear jellies, spicy preserves were "done up" and put away. Huge crocks of pickled or

Concluded on page 93

Your Gold-Medal Garden

With a plan for its planting and care

By FRANCES DUNCAN



THOUGH DONE IN MINIATURE, THIS MODEL REVEALS ALL THE DETAILS OF A SUBURBAN HOUSE AND GROUNDS

THIS IS THE DELINEATOR GOLD MEDAL WHICH WAS WON BY MRS. EJNAR HANSEN OF RIDGEFIELD, CONN.

THE REAR VIEW OF THE MODEL SHOWS A PRACTICAL VEGETABLE GARDEN JUST OUTSIDE THE KITCHEN DOOR

AND HERE IS THE WORKING PLAN OF THE MODEL GARDEN WHICH THE DELINEATOR IS OFFERING IN LARGE "PATTERN" SIZE WITH COMPLETE DIRECTIONS FOR PLANTING

A GARDEN brings a touch of the divine to the humdrum life of every day. It radiates cheer from the first yellow crocus to the last tawny chrysanthemum. How welcome is its cool fragrance on a hot Summer's day! Twittering birds and lengthening shadows make it a place for quiet communion in the evening.

And a garden can serve many a practical purpose. Children can play safely in it and the home-maker working in it can enjoy healthful out-of-door exercise. Vegetables, from parsley to turnips, can be eaten fresh or thriftily preserved. Trees may give fruit as well as shade and beauty.

Our children should have the memory of a garden that has blessed their childhood, of the coming of Spring with lilac-bushes and daffodils, not in a park, but in their own dooryard. Even on the smallest plot of ground some sort of garden is possible.

THE DELINEATOR wishes to make lovely and useful gardens not only possible but probable. Instead of giving suggestions which require some garden wisdom and experience to carry out, we shall offer a "Garden Pattern," a plan of a garden, which is as easy to follow as a Deltor pattern of a child's frock. Each pattern will give complete directions for planting and care, not of gardens in general, but of a particular garden, with approximate cost and suggestions for less expensive alternates which will give much the same effect. It will tell just what should be done during the various months of the year in order to make the garden a success and a delight.

At the 1924 flower show in the Grand Central Palace there was a fascinating array of miniature gardens. These were very ingenious in construction, very clever in the use of materials which were used to represent shrubs, trees, flowers, fencing, grass and hedges. Small branches made realistic the blossoming trees; sponges dyed green and clipped into shape became evergreen hedges. On the daintiest of lattices grew luxuriant tiny roses which might have served in fairy millinery.

No feature of the entire exhibit attracted more attention or was more carefully studied than these little models, and many a gardenless person went away with the determination to go and do likewise, if only he or she could find out precisely how to go about it.

THE DELINEATOR believes that "better gardens" go with Better Homes. For this reason, last year we offered a gold medal for the plan of a garden best suited to a typical American back yard. The garden was to combine practical features with beauty; it was to be simple enough for a housewife, with the aid of her children, perhaps, to manage.

This gold medal was won by Mrs. Ejnar Hansen, a member of the Garden Club of Ridgefield, Connecticut, who exhibited her model at the flower show. The plan of her garden is given here with a photograph of the model itself, showing the form and arrangement of the garden but not, of course, doing justice to its charming color.

You will notice its admirable grouping arrangement. Follow the plan as we describe it: A hedge of arbor-vitæ forms the boundary of this plot, giving the place a comfortable appearance in Winter, while tall specimen evergreens placed at the north corner of the living-room terrace afford protection to the house. Both dining-room and living-room have the morning sun, and from the east windows and on each side of the terrace the grouping of shrubs, lilac, forsythia and syringa, connecting the house with the long flower-beds, makes a charming outlook.

SOMETHING NEW IN GARDENS

A Garden Pattern All Made for You

Laid out on a big sheet of paper—just like a pattern! The garden space all mapped out—flowers, vegetables, trees and hedges! Directions for planting—how, when and where! All you need is the ground and the plants.

You don't have to be an experienced gardener; this plan is made for amateurs. With its help, any home-maker can have a beautiful, fragrant garden full of sweet blooms and succulent vegetables.

If you've ever played with a garden—or if you've never played with a garden but have longed to—send for this pattern with its clear, easy-to-follow directions. It's the first time such a plan has ever been offered to you. And the cost is only twenty-five cents. Address The Home-Building Department, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

SEND FOR IT!

An especially interesting feature of this plan is the flagged court in the angle formed by garage and living-room. A rose-covered trellis carries the line of the garage wall to the driveway entrance, completely separating the house entrance from both the drive and service entrance and framing the little court on two sides. The arbor-vitæ hedge frames the remaining two. Between the irregularly placed flags greensward is seen and in the sod are tucked many of the tiniest bulbs, crocus, scilla, grape hyacinth, chionodoxa and the like. Next to the garage and the trellis enough of the flagged path has been removed to permit the planting of a climbing rose to adorn the living-room wall. Roses are grown against the wall of the garage and on the trellis, as south and southwest exposures are excellent for these flowers. At their feet, along the garage wall, are early flowering bulbs.

OF ESPECIAL interest to housewives is the placing of kitchen and drying-yard. The latter is conveniently accessible from the kitchen and yet is screened from the living-room windows by shrubs. Thus the Monday wash does not form part of the view from living-room or terrace.

From the terrace, flagged like the court, one looks down a long, straight stretch of greensward, framed by flower borders gold and white with daffodils and narcissi in the early Spring and bright with a profusion of blooms through the Summer. There is a pergola or arbor at the end which serves both as boundary to the garden and, having lattice at the back, as a screen to shut off either neighbor or street. It also makes a quiet resting-place where one may cultivate pleasant thoughts in cool shade. Wisteria is the vine suggested for this, though wild-grape and trumpet vine might serve as understudies.

Separating the long flower border from the kitchen garden is a hedge of evergreen, which serves as a background for the flower border. When the flowers have finished blooming, the thick soft green keeps the look of warmth and comfort.

The flower-beds are lovely. Against the evergreens rise tall hollyhocks, with monk's-hood in shades of pink and purple. In the corresponding bed, at the back, hollyhocks mingle with tall perennial larkspur and purple foxgloves. And in front of these grow campanulas and a touch of white in valerian and achillea.

Blue is the note in the earlier garden—blue in campanulas, blues and purples in the iris, with a touch of pale yellow in the day-lilies. The note of blue is kept in the garden the entire Summer—in the deep blue of larkspurs, in platycodon, in annual larkspur, in scabiosa and monk's-hood. In late July and August pink predominates—in tall hollyhocks and perennial phlox, in lupin and snapdragon, zinnias (which are in flesh tints only here), with lavender in phlox and scabiosa.

Shades of scarlet, crimson and magenta are absent

Concluded on page 93

Why I Design Delineator Houses

By

DONN BARBER

Fellow of the American Institute of Architects

THIS "DELINEATOR" HOUSE—OR ANY OF THE OTHERS WHICH MR. BARBER HAS DESIGNED ESPECIALLY FOR "DELINEATOR" READERS—IS AS PRACTICAL INSIDE AS IT IS ATTRACTIVE OUTSIDE

Perhaps you have decided to make a dream come true and this year build a home of your own. Wouldn't you like to have it planned by one of the best architects in America, Mr. Donn Barber? By selecting a DELINEATOR house-plan, you get an architectural service that most builders of small houses could never think of engaging if they were paying all the costs themselves

THE COTTAGE WHERE EDGAR ALLEN POE LIVED AND WROTE HIS IMMORTAL "RAVEN" FURNISHED THE INSPIRATION FOR THIS CHARMING FOUR-ROOM HOUSE, WHICH MR. BARBER HAS CAREFULLY DESIGNED

Mr. Barber has already designed fourteen model houses for DELINEATOR readers. We'll send you reprints of all of them—so you can see which you like best—if you'll send us a stamped envelope. And if you want workable blue-prints of floor-plans and elevations, we can supply those at one dollar a house. Address The Home-Building Department, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

IT HAS been my privilege during the last three years to design some fourteen houses for THE DELINEATOR. The housing shortage throughout the country due to the interruption of building during the years of the war, the high cost of materials and the uncertainty of values all contributed to the decrease in small-house building. The small houses built during this lax period were unsightly, cheaply constructed, carelessly planned and of an uninteresting character as a general rule. In other words, house-building, both in quantity, design and execution, was on the down grade until 1919 or 1920.

The small house as a type of building has had too little architectural attention throughout the country. The cost of preparing plans and rendering service for a small house is apt to be as great as that for a large dwelling, and unfortunately the small-house builder has come to consider the architect a nonessential. The owner or builder who builds a small house is apt to practise economy in eliminating the architect's fee, which is a most disastrous conclusion to reach. The value and life of a small house will be as long as good design and material will last, and design and material are the responsibility of the architect.

In almost every field of endeavor in this country except in architecture, methods have been evolved and developed to serve the masses through quantity production and wide distribution. In the older countries no architect has ever been necessary in the building of small houses. So many families inherit their homes and live, generation after generation, under their original roof. Even slight modifications or improvements do not seem to be necessary. Comparatively few small houses have had to be built of late years, except in the case of those districts devastated by the war, and here the houses have been rebuilt almost entirely on the plans and schemes of those destroyed.

When new or additional houses have been built, they have usually followed the traditional type of house in each country. The small house in Europe has a uniformity of design which is typical of its nationality and environment.

In America, convenience, practicability, labor-saving devices and economy are the controlling factors in building homes. Beauty and good design have never been considered of first importance. We are improving rapidly in this regard, however, and during the last few years surprising progress has been made throughout the country in bringing beauty into the designing and planning of the small house.

ABOVE IS DONN BARBER WITH HIS DAUGHTER BETTY, WHO IS FOLLOWING HER FATHER'S ARCHITECTURAL FOOTSTEPS. BELOW ARE FOUR OF MR. BARBER'S "DELINEATOR" HOUSES—ALL ON ONE STREET

The press of the country is full of ideas and inspirations in small-house building, but much of this material is misleading both as to suggested economy and as to intrinsic beauty. A technical problem is not always given a correct answer when it is solved by an amateur. House-building is a highly technical matter. It should be controlled by those who have had practical experience and should be developed by brains skilled in this particular work. Recently photographs of houses built from DELINEATOR plans which I designed have come into my possession. The results have been so gratifying that I am continuing the work with keen interest.

THE NATIONAL "BETTER HOME IN AMERICA" IN WASHINGTON, D. C., WAS BUILT FROM A "DELINEATOR" PLAN

HELP FOR THE HOME-BUILDER

The theory of the presentation of house-plans in THE DELINEATOR is to show a simply and directly planned house of a given number of rooms having a suitable and attractive exterior appearance. Those interested in these houses can obtain figured plans, in blue-print form, giving interior dimensions of rooms, sizes of windows and doors, heights of ceilings, etc., with suggestive details and a list of suitable building-materials. The information given on the blue-prints which are furnished by THE DELINEATOR is ample to build from, but I suggest that, if the various schemes suit any individual's needs, the blue-print be taken to a local architect or a competent builder who can modify the scheme to meet local conditions of site, available building materials, and the use of local mechanical trades in heating, plumbing and lighting. Transportation facilities, local conditions and personal taste vary so that it is impossible in one definite plan to meet the demands and requirements of every home-builder. Thus, we urge that, after reviewing the sheets showing floor-plans and elevations, the prospective home-builder decide what he requires and prefers in the way of exterior materials and interior trimmings and order the blue print showing the house most suited to his needs. These plans, which give you full detailed arrangements, will be sent to you upon request.

THE DELINEATOR is thus rendering a service that no other publication or architectural medium has thus far attempted. It has been criticized by various architectural societies who feel that the architect's prerogatives are being usurped. But since we do not attempt to furnish elaborate final drawings or detailed specifications, we feel that we are not launching a service that will in any way harm the architects of the country. In fact, it has been proved that in very many cases where these houses have been built the owner has sought and used the assistance of some competent architect, and that THE DELINEATOR plan has merely curtailed the architect's process of study.

WORKING WITH THE PLANS

The small house in America needs to be fostered by the architectural profession in this country. I have had lately an opportunity to demonstrate what I hoped would happen in the use of DELINEATOR house-plans. A client for whom I am designing a large Tudor manor house expressed a desire to build four small houses for some of his tenants.

Concluded on page 95

Free!

By CELIA CAROLINE COLE

"BEAUTY," said the philosopher, Mr. George Santayana, "is pleasure objectified."

When one looks at a beautiful thing, he doesn't feel it only with his eyes, he feels it all over him. Something warming and comforting spreads through him, like a smile beginning in the eyes and widening and reaching out all over his body. Personally, whenever any beauty, in thought, or music, or object, or person suddenly bursts on us, we revert to our early Methodist upbringing and feel a longing to leap to our feet and cry, "Lord, I believe!"

You can't divorce beauty from pleasure. It may be so keen a pleasure that it's an ache; but it's pleasure just the same, and feels like an ache only because we realize abruptly how hungry we have been for beauty. What a freeing, softening thing it would be to know that one's mere appearance in a room or on the street or anywhere was an occasion for pleasure to spread over the beholder like a dawn! We don't need to be blindingly beautiful to give that. We don't need even to have that stirring harmony of line and color that is grace. Beauty is more elusive than that, more ineffable. It has in its mystery the beauty of your daily thinking, your impulses, your decisions, you.

Back of the supple firmness of your body, the charming contour of your face, the luminous quality of your skin, and the delightful pattern of your coloring, there must be something more wonderful than these, or the pleasure will not endure.

Last Summer we knew a woman who was so tired, body and mind, that she felt if anyone touched her she'd disintegrate. And she didn't much care if she did, life seemed such an effort. As a result, whatever beauty she had fled from her like rats from a sinking ship. That did matter! She couldn't stand the added feeling of depression her mirror gave her. So she set very earnestly about the business of building up some beauty. Long nights of sleep to harden the tissues and muscles, a cold shower or plunge in the morning to stimulate the circulation, careful patting in of rich cold cream around the eyes, the faithful application of that most delicious oil in all the world for the impoverished tissues, with a fragrant astringent or tonic afterwards to tone them up, exercise for the thickened waist, massage for the weary underfed scalp, daily, glorious horseback rides over the moors, and a little nap after lunch. Once a week the circulation mask, and stern, hard astringent patting under the chin.

GRADUALLY, color and line came back. Once more people greeted her with that cheering, "How well you're looking!" (What a funny old difference it makes, doesn't it?) But the real thing wasn't there in her face and she knew it. It would be there momentarily when she rode like a wild thing over the moors, the wind almost tearing her from her saddle, and the moors and the sea flying past like molten rubies and sapphires and emeralds and gold. She would long to stand up in her stirrups and shout, "Thank you, God!" for making so wonderful the wind and the moors and her horse and herself. It was there in her then—the kind of beauty that makes pleasure flash over one in a thrill. But it wouldn't stay.

So she began to read philosophy and poetry instead of sleeping so much. The real thrill of beauty came oftener then. But still it wasn't permanent. She realized that something had gone wrong with her magnetism, that, although people found her clothes charming and herself "looking well," the old ability to enter a room looking as if she had just made a sunrise and to have everybody instantly respond to her as if she really had made one had deserted her. So, being wise and resourceful, she concluded that as her physical magnetism had waned (she was now in her forty-fourth year) she must have the spiritual charm of understanding. She tried always to see other people instead of herself; in place of entering a room with a sunrise in her palm, she made herself as lovely as possible externally. Then she made her contact with people with but one wish, to draw up her physical senses within her the way a tortoise draws his legs up into his shell, and use that sixth sense for which there is no name (unless you know one, and if you do please send it to us), but which begins with sympathetic understanding, selfless love.

Real beauty at last—mysterious, ineffable and dynamic as thunder.

On the other hand, ugliness has its power, too. Consciousness of a conspicuous defect is a little like an aching tooth. When you are aware of it, it's very hard for you to think freely, or to behave with all the charm you can. It's always there, between you and the people you are with.

For instance, superfluous hair—a mustache, "sideburns," or a chin dark with a growth of hair—spells humiliation, self-consciousness to any woman. And it need not be. There are many good depilatories, waxes, liquids and powders on the market, splendid for the arms or legs, and for stubborn growth of hair on the face, there is something better than any of these. We know a special electric machine and a very skilful graduate doctor specialist who does nothing at all but remove superfluous hair from the faces of women.

We interviewed him and his patients one night about six o'clock, and never have we met so many grateful women! He enthusiastically praised all those best depilatories which we had investigated and put on our list as safe and good (we'll send you that list if you like), and said certain of them were all right for light growths on the lip or chin, but that it was best for young girls to have the roots killed by the gentle, slow process he had perfected, and that for women of forty-five or fifty who have suddenly found themselves battling with superfluous hair on the face, the electric machine was best.

Superfluous hair seems to be closely connected with puberty and menopause. It will appear at these two periods and cause great humiliation at a time when a woman is most sensitive.

This doctor has never had a failure. He discovered his process for removing hair in treating a skin disease on a man who wore a beard. He invented a machine which perfected the process, and for twelve years his twenty-four machines have been in constant use. There is absolutely no return of the growth, and women in a highly nervous condition have found the treatment beneficial to their general health. We should be glad to send you privately any information you wish in regard to this matter. We feel how great is this man's gift to women, freedom from sensitiveness and self-consciousness. As we have said before, we think that self-consciousness, and not money, is the root of all evil.

English women who have gone to India or Africa to live have almost invariably found themselves having to fight superfluous hair after a time. It is nature's way of protecting the skin. But there is no possible excuse for continued suffering with this condition to-day when there are so many effective ways of removing it. It can always be made less conspicuous, moreover, by the simple application daily or twice a day of three parts peroxide and one part ammonia with a bit of absorbent cotton.

Another definite aid to the beauty, and hence the freedom of women, that we have been investigating for some time is a small commodity which is everywhere on the market and which is a part of every household's kitchen supplies. Its remedial effect on acne, sallow or mottled skin, boils, depleted vitality, and constipation has been established by two years' experience in one of the largest hospitals in America.

ACNE of the skin, and so many people who have acne think they have only "pimples" and let it drift along, is nearly always associated with tired nerves and depleted vitality. In every case in which this remedy has been tried, the acne has been greatly alleviated and often cured, increasing the vitality and eliminating body poisons by its effect upon the intestines.

There has now been devised a most successful and comfortable way to take it, and all over the world men and women are finding clearer skins, brighter eyes, more vivid color, and greater energy as a result.

Winter is a time of strain for most of us. We need a little something to increase our vitality. We need an exercise or two to keep the muscles of our throat and chest firm and smooth. Here is one we have found which gives beautiful results.

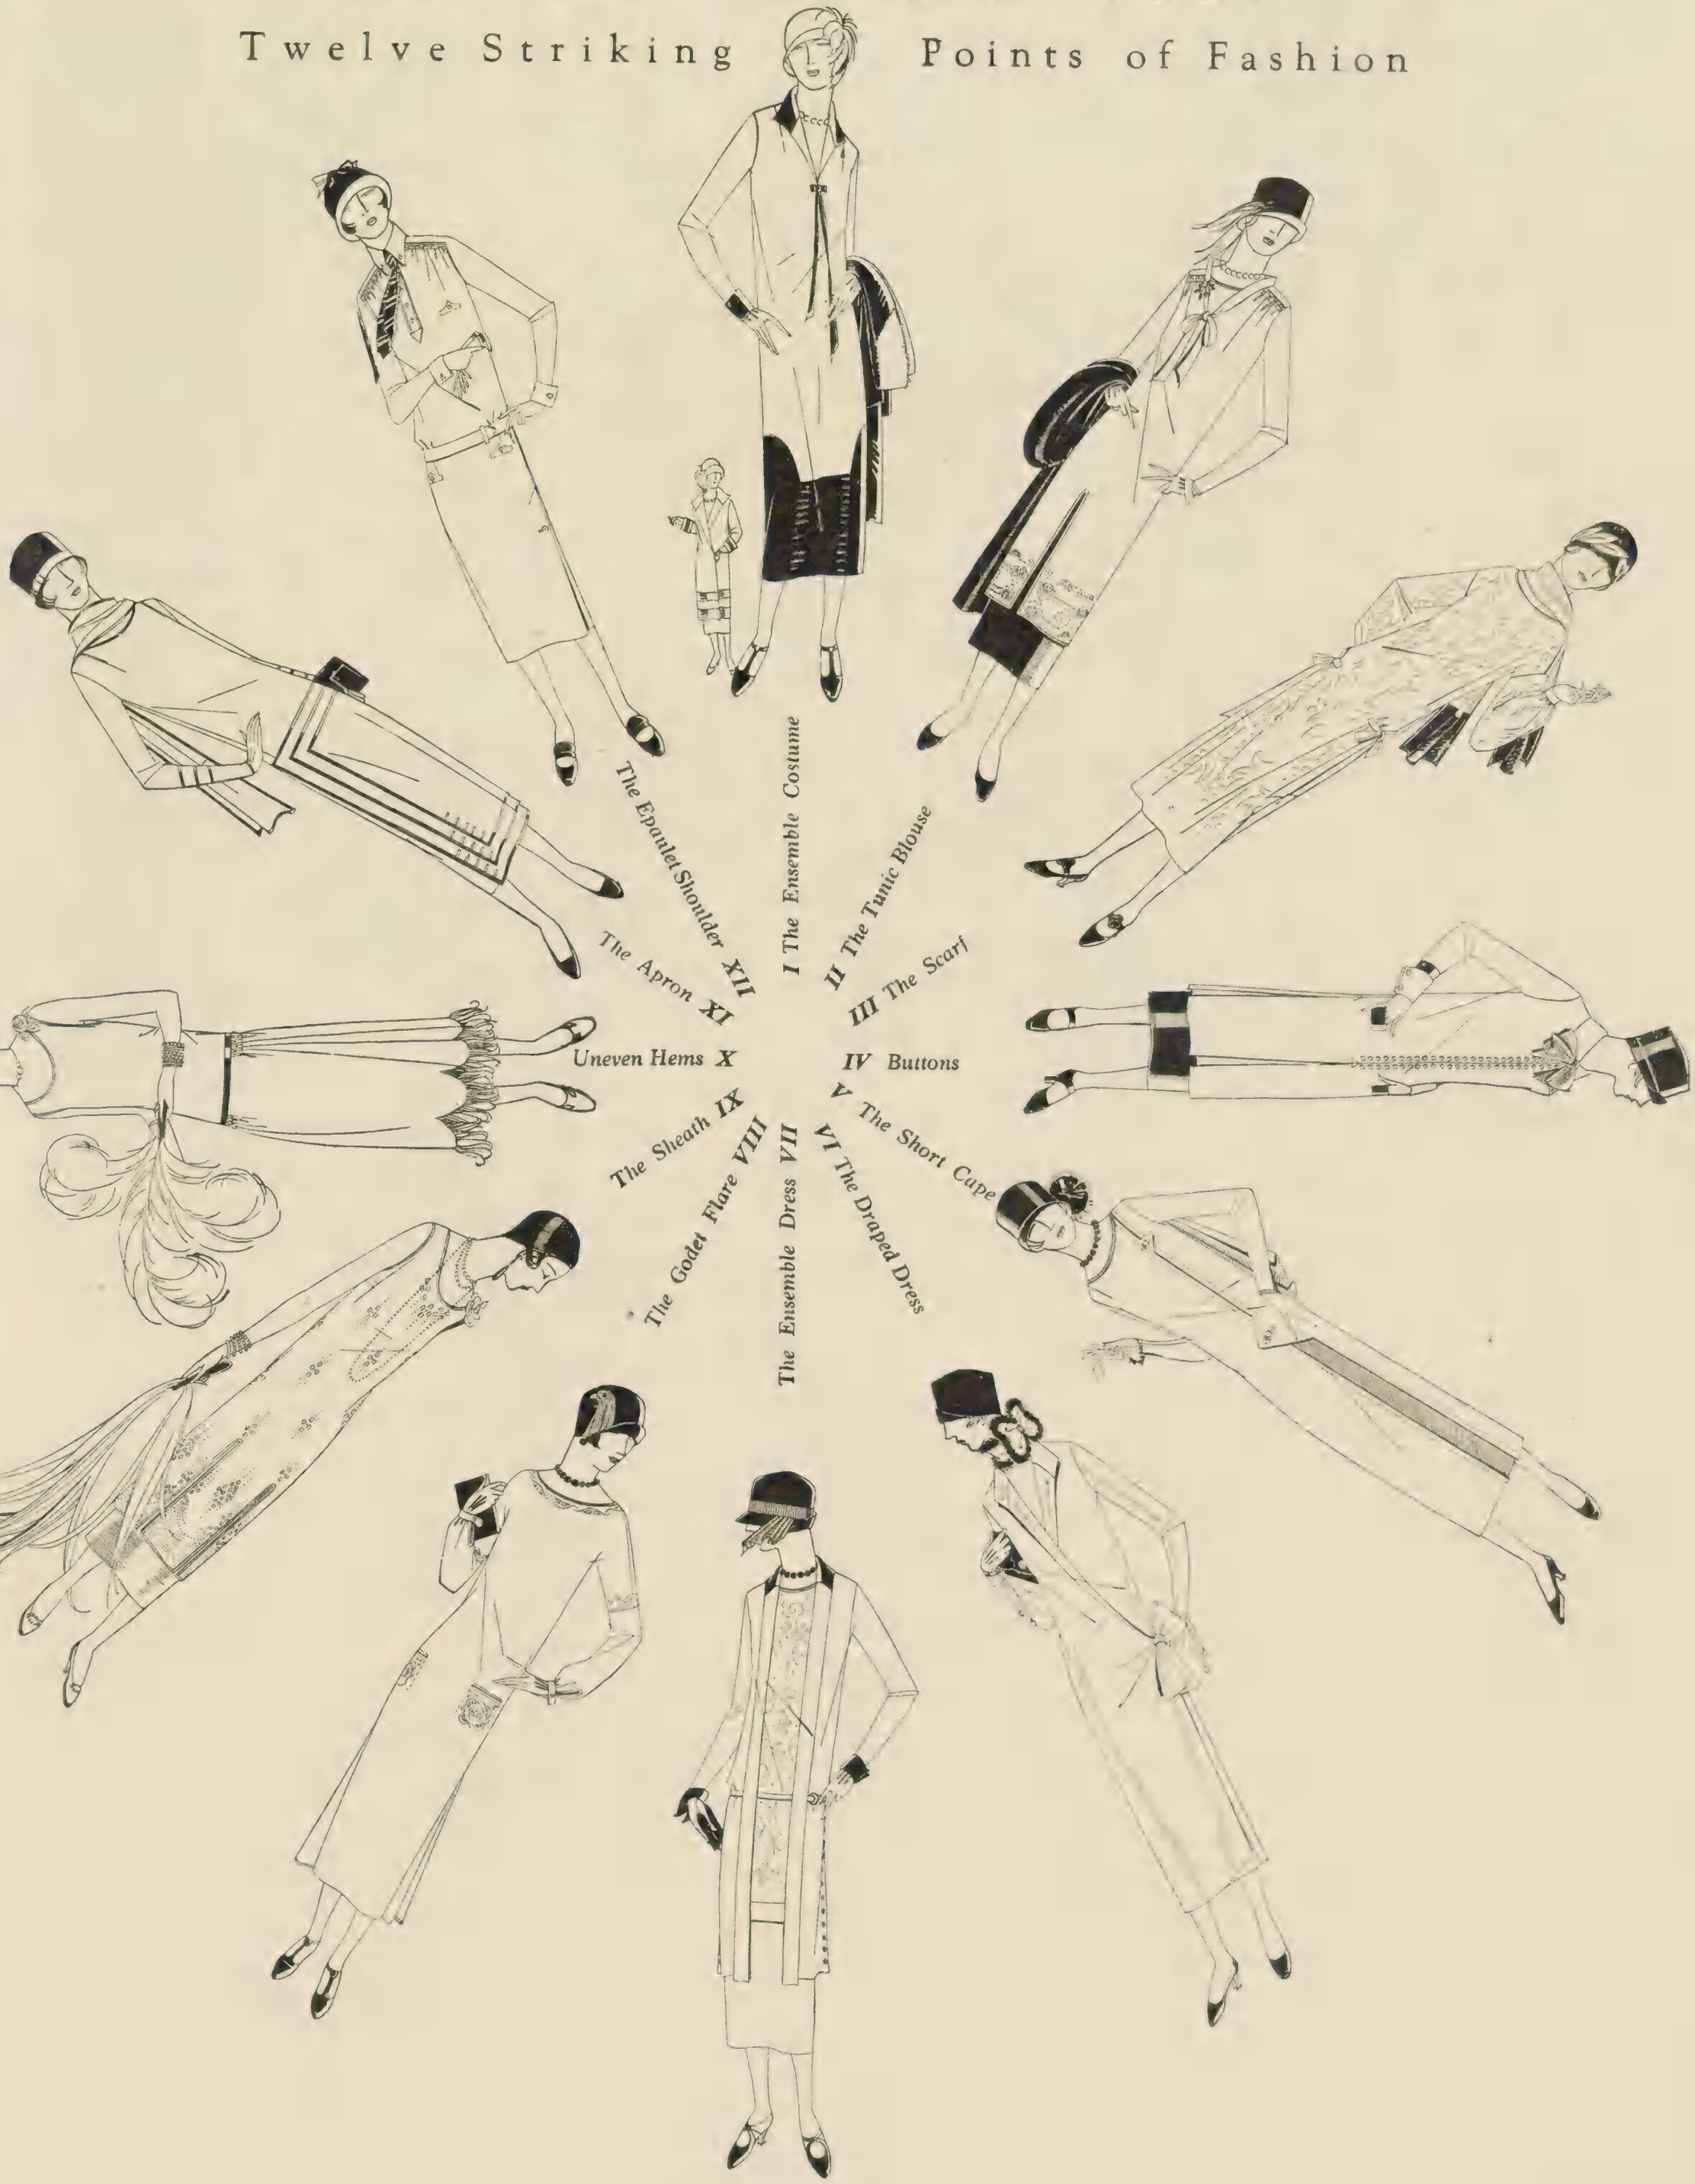
Lie face down on the floor; keep the knees and the toes on the floor; slowly raise the head and chest, drawing back with the head until you feel a strong pull at the base of the neck and down the entire chest; lift the whole torso from the floor if possible; in this position turn the head and look directly over the right shoulder, then slowly turn head and look directly over the left shoulder. Repeat ten times. Rest. Repeat ten more times.

Those flabby double chins and throats stand up and behave after a little faithful application of this exercise. Then they should be patted with a strong tonic or astringent. There's a delightful tonic (not at all expensive) that seems to have the virtue of an astringent and yet is not so drying.

The line from the point of the chin to the base of the throat is such a betraying line. After thirty one must not neglect it. Correct, high carriage of the head, is important. Think always of the ribbon at the base of the neck leading up to the high skies and a plane of light from the back of the head pulling your whole self up to the high skies. This not only holds the head correctly, but pulls back and up those floppy abdominal muscles and gives you a firm, hard, young waist. The West Pointers have a strong and vivid way of getting and keeping that glorious wasp waist of theirs. It's a slogan. Ask your nearest army relative what it is. If he doesn't tell you, we will!

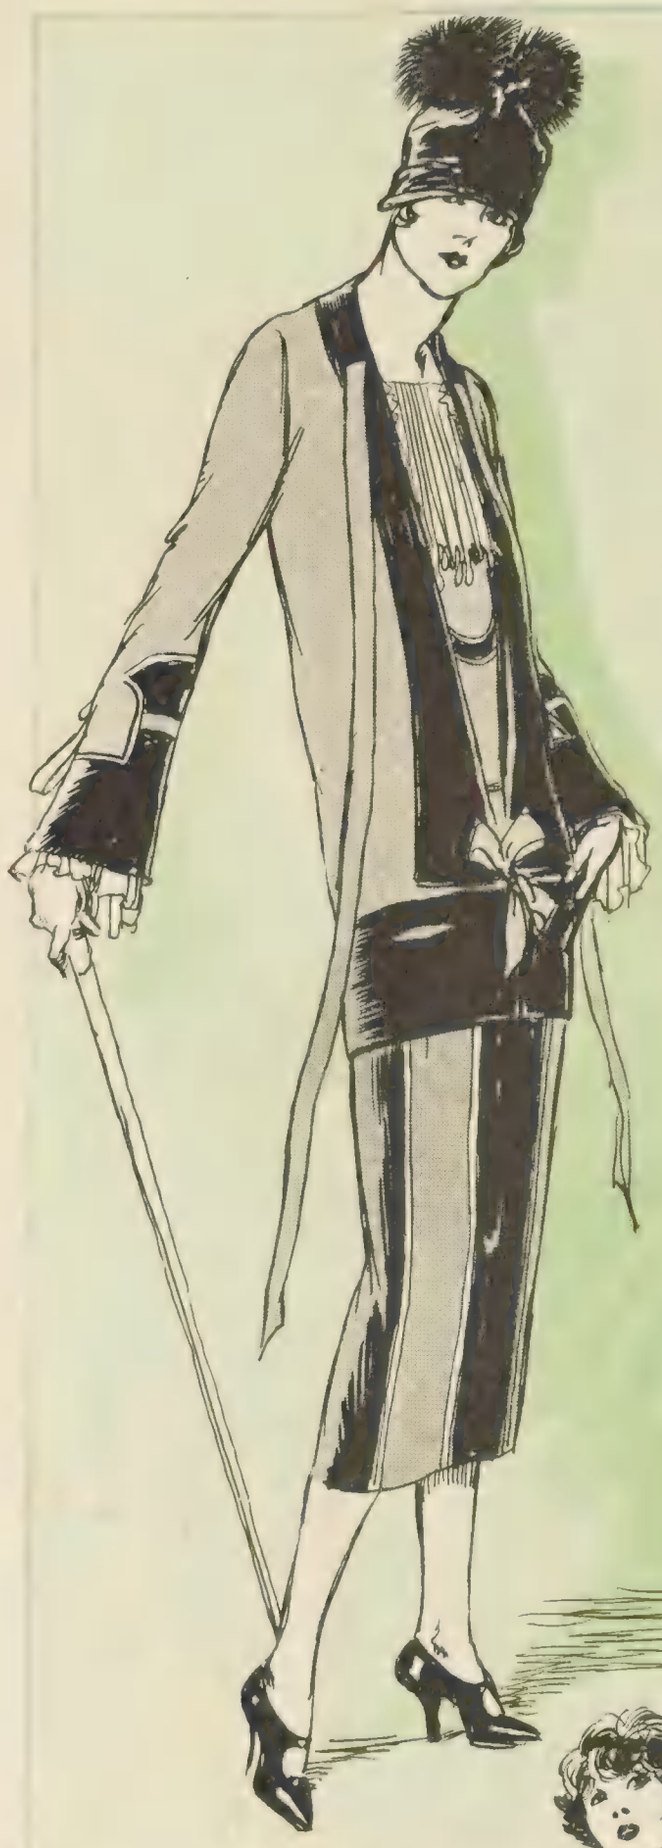
WOMEN in general are more attractive to-day than ever before, because they have desired charm and power. In a certain play in New York the high note is the line, "Have faith in the dreams of me." We are lovelier to-day than ever in the history of our sex, because the women before us have dreamed deeply. Their wish to be lovely and desirable has widened over the whole race of women. And behold the beauty, the power of the modern Eve.

Freedom from self-consciousness! Freedom from defects!



What a glorious warm wide world to live in when one has attained that freedom!

DON'T!



"I wish they wouldn't feel that way," said Celia Caroline Cole the other day, looking a bit wistfully at a reader's letter which began, "I know I am presuming" . . . "How can I make every mother's daughter of them see that I want to answer her questions about good looks and how to have them?" So don't—please don't hesitate to send your own private beauty problem — and a stamped, self-addressed envelope—to Mrs. Cole at THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y. Ask her anything you really want to know about the way to loveliness.

THE NEW IN NEW YORK

Twelve Striking Points of Fashion

SOULIÉ'S SKETCHES, SENT FROM THE DELINEATOR'S PARIS ESTABLISHMENT, SHOW THE FRENCH MODE IN AN ORNATE MOOD

The fashion for cutting up material and sewing it together again takes the form of wide stripes of pistache-green shantung and black silk Ottoman joined together with white satin pipings in an early Spring suit from Georgette. The jabot and undersleeves are of fluted organdy with indented edges

The smartest way to employ color this season is to combine several shades of the same color in one costume. The frock of an ensemble from Lucien Lelong is made of grège and castor check rep with grège collar and cuffs and brown buttons and belt. The dress is narrow but the tunic flares

A zigzag of shaded faille ribbon makes it three diamonds on the front of a tiny frock of rosy mauve crêpe satin. The ribbon outlines a drop shoulder at the front and ties with long ends at the back. From orange

Fairyland plants the seed of the ensemble costume firmly in the young mind with a coat of double-faced blue and amber-yellow kasha vitrail with yellow collar, cuffs, ball buttons and pockets. Slashes at the side reveal the yellow frock beneath, and the hat is of yellow felt with a band of blue galon

A frock that would be altogether charming for the "fille d'honneur" of a wedding-procession, begins and ends with a yoke and band of green chiffon. The frock itself is of white mousseline de soie garlanded with pink and green embroidered roses and leaves. From orange

"Much in little" should be the name of Fairyland's rose-colored frock with its plaited tiers and volants. The color is a clear rose, and chenille flowers worked in dégradé shades from flesh to crimson are placed at the low waistline

FLARE ENOUGH IN THE NEW FASHIONS BUT NOT ENOUGH TO WIDEN THE SLIM STRAIGHT SILHOUETTE

Philippe et Gaston take a new slant on plaids in a bias-cut frock of beige and rose kasha forming a double-bias overdress edged with rose-colored suède. The pointed yoke and cuffs are of the suède and the frock is worn very short

The newest type of sports frock chosen by the Parisian élégante is of white kasha trimmed with narrow bands of amber. The very soft coloring, the tiny band collar and the very short plaited skirt are extremely smart. From Charlotte

The Parisienne choses white for her midwinter in the South, but it is white wool. Drecoll uses the sheath silhouette flared at the knee in a frock of white rep embroidered with red wool and steel paillettes on the hip pocket and at the top of the plaited flounce

Color is coming back not so much to the Parisienne's cheek as to her clothes. Louiseboulanger offers an afternoon frock of the overblouse type of cyclamen-colored kasha trimmed with cording at the neck and low waistline and on the long close sleeve

Five silver bands of braid, starting at the low waistline and bringing it still lower, are used by Lucien Lelong on an evening gown of silver and pale turquoise. The godet tunic divides at the front and back, disclosing the very short and excessively narrow skirt beneath

The square neck and the plaiting below a yoke are used in different forms by the French dressmakers. Bernard combines them in a tunic of navy Georgette with rickrack insertions of dull brick-red Georgette. The knee-length slip beneath is very narrow

TRIPLE APRONS, PUFFED SLEEVES, DETACHABLE CAPES AND DRAPERIES ARE SMART

Dress 5816
Embroidery
design 10317

Dress 5765

Tunic blouse 5807
Slip 5827

Dress
5834

Dress 5788

Dress 5842

Other views and descriptions of these costumes are on page 96

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 92.

Dress 5804

Dress 5767
Embroidery design
10961

Tunic blouse and
slip 5808

Dress 5777

Dress 5779
Embroidery design
10258

Dress 5796

Other views and descriptions of these costumes are on page 96

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 92.

Dress 5805

Sleeveless dress and bloomers 5809
Embroidery design 10243

Dress 5797

Dress 5752

Dress 5819

Dress 5799
Hat 5557
Embroidery design 10155

Middy blouse 5791
Skirt 5793
Embroidery design 10939

Other views and descriptions of these garments are on page 97

Suit 5811

Dress and bloomers 5748
Embroidery design 10931

Dress 5754
Tam-o'-shanter 5458

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 92.

Dress 5802

Dress 5739

Dress 5784

Dress 5810

Dress 5792

Tunic blouse 5795
Slip 5667

Dress 5785

Other views and descriptions of these costumes are on page 98

Box-coat 5829
Dress 5769
Embroidery design 10138

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 92.

Dress 5765

Box-coat 5829
Dress 5729

Coat dress
5747

Tunic blouse 5787
Slip 5638
Embroidery design
10318

Dress 5761

Other views and descriptions of these costumes are on page 99

Dress 5794

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 92.

THE LONG BODY IN CONTRAST OR A STRAIGHT SIMPLE FROCK ARE SMART FOR ENSEMBLE SUITS, AND BOWS, BUTTONS AND SCARFS ARE CHIC

Dress 5800

Dress 5798

Dress 5759

Dress 5824

Dress 5818

AN INVENTORY of the Winter's fashions discloses styles for every taste. The frock for the ensemble costume claims first consideration and frequently has a lower part to match the coat and an upper part in contrast. Women who like to wear the straight unbelted dress may choose the beautifully tailored frock with the new epaulet sleeve running to the neck. A soft drapery at one side will soften too straight a line in a dress of faille silk, heavy silk crêpe or crêpe satin. Many beltless dresses have the surplice closing, which is very generally becoming. Women who prefer easier lines will like frocks with scarfs, yokes, soft gathers or the V neck to give an easier width to the body of a dress.

Other views and descriptions are on page 99

Coat dress 5830
Embroidery design 10215

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 92.

RESORT FROCKS ARE HAND-DRAWN OR HAVE FAGOTED YOKES, BORDERS, ETC.

5849—Clusters of plaits at each side in front and back give an easy width to this one-piece slip-over dress with a fagoted yoke. Use cotton voile, fine cotton crêpe or cotton Georgette for Southern wear, or flat crêpe, silk Canton crêpe, crêpe de Chine, crêpe satin, chiffon voile or Georgette.

36 bust requires 3⅛ yards 39-inch cotton voile. Lower edge, plaits out, 59 inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5851—Hand-drawn linen or cotton broadcloth dress lengths make up very prettily into a one-piece slip-over dress. With or without hand-drawn work you may use linen, linen-finished cottons, plain cotton broadcloth, heavy cotton crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine; but without drawn-work use striped cotton broadcloth or wash silks, gingham, etc.

36 bust requires 3 yards 39-inch material. Lower edge 46 inches.

The dress is attractive for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5820—Stripes either in wash silks, cotton broadcloth or cotton crêpe are smart for Southern wear. This slip-over dress has a one-piece upper part and a straight band at the straight lower edge. Use the striped materials with plain to match, or plain wash silks, silk Canton crêpe, cotton broadcloth or cotton crêpe. Lower edge 54 inches.

36 bust requires 3⅞ yards 35-inch striped tub silk.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5814—Printed scarfs or panels of certain widths, half-and-half 34-inch printed fabrics and printed Georgettes, etc., are very attractive in a slip-over dress with a yoke and short sleeve cut in one piece, a straight lower edge and a straight band. One may use printed with plain Georgette, crêpe de Chine, silk crêpe, etc. Lower edge 54 inches.

36 bust requires a printed scarf or panel measuring 36 by 72 inches and 1¾ yard 35-inch plain material.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5852—10246—Fine cotton crêpe, cotton voile or cotton Georgette makes a very soft frock for warm climates. It is the one-piece slip-over style and has a straight lower edge. The embroidery is very easily done. Or use printed fine cotton crêpe with plain to match, etc.

36 bust requires 3 yards 39-inch fine cotton crêpe. Lower edge 54 inches.

Dress is for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5848—Drawn-work cotton voile dress lengths make a dainty lingerie frock of the one-piece slip-over type. It has a straight lower edge and the collar and cuffs may be detachable. One may use plain cotton voile, fine cotton crêpe, cotton Georgette, crêpe de Chine, chiffon voile, Georgette, etc.

36 bust requires 3⅛ yards 39-inch cotton voile. Lower edge 55 inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5832—This one-piece slip-over dress with a straight lower edge has the new long sleeves and detachable or attached collar. Use 54-inch wide-bordered prints or printed crêpe de Chine, silk crêpe, Georgette, chiffon, chiffon voile, cotton voile, cotton Georgette or cotton crêpe, etc.

36 bust requires 3½ yards 39-inch printed silk. Lower edge 53 inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 92.

SIMPLE SOUTHERN FROCKS HAVE YOKES, TUCKED, FLOUNCED OR FULL SKIRTS

5828—The fancy yoke is very decorative on this one-piece slip-over dress with a cluster of plaits at each side of the front and back. For Southern wear use cotton voile, fine cotton crêpe or cotton Georgette; for a silk frock use flat crêpe, silk Canton crêpe, crêpe de Chine, crêpe satin, chiffon voile or Georgette.

16 years requires 2⅝ yards 39-inch voile. Lower edge, plaits out, 54½ inches.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5776—Hand or machine hemstitching is the simple trimming on this dress with a tucked straight skirt joined at a low waistline. Use cotton voile, cotton Georgette, fine lawn, batiste, organdy, crêpe de Chine or Georgette with Val lace frills and a ribbon girdle, or with frills and bindings of same material in contrasting color (color on white or white on color), etc.

13 years requires 2¾ yards 39-inch Georgette.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 16.

5817—The yoke and short sleeves of this one-piece slip-over dress are cut in one piece and are of plain material to match when the dress is of printed crêpe de Chine or silk Canton crêpe. One may use plain crêpe de Chine, silk Canton crêpe, plain or printed cotton voile for entire dress. It has a cluster of plaits at each side of the front and back.

13 years requires 1⅞ yard 39-inch printed and ⅝ yard 39-inch plain silk.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5831—She may wear this slip-over dress to parties or graduation as well as for the South. It has a ruffled straight skirt joined at a low waistline and the collar and cuffs may be detachable. Use Georgette, crêpe de Chine, chiffon, cotton voile, cotton Georgette or organdy with ribbon girdle and flower; or use taffeta or crêpe de Chine with lace collar and cuffs.

13 years requires 2½ yards 35 to 39 inch crêpe de Chine.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5844—10246—A one-piece tucked dress of plain cotton voile, cotton Georgette, batiste, plain Georgette, chiffon, chiffon voile or crêpe de Chine is delightful for Southern wear or graduation. This slip-over dress has a straight lower edge. The embroidery is effective. Work it in outline and one-stitch. Lower edge 58 inches.

17 years requires 3¼ yards 39-inch Georgette.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5734—When you make this one-piece slip-over dress with straight flounces of dotted swiss, the organdy collar and cuffs should be a color to match the dot. They may be detachable. One may use novelty cotton voile with white or colored organdy to match, tub silks with plain to match; or use plain crêpe de Chine, Canton crêpe or taffeta with fine lace, etc.

13 years requires 2½ yards 32-inch dotted swiss.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

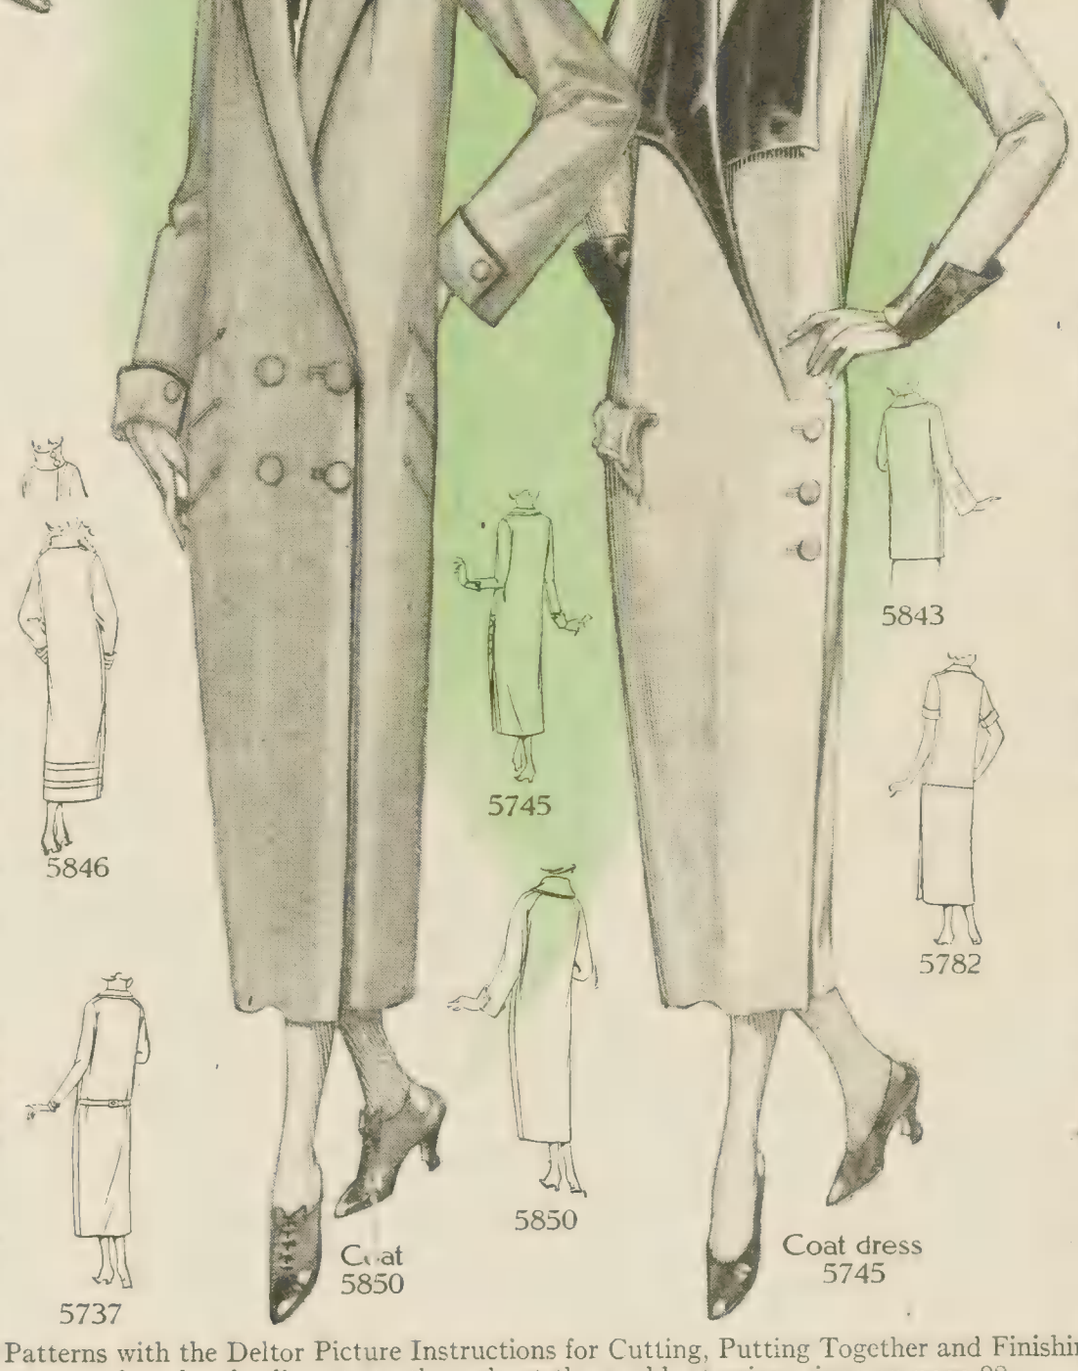
5823—When the junior graduates or goes South she needs a dainty cotton or crêpe de Chine frock. This one-piece slip-over dress may be of cotton voile, organdy or cotton Georgette, or of crêpe de Chine or Georgette. Without the lace insertion one may use taffeta. It has a straight lower edge.

12 years requires 2¼ yards 39-inch cotton voile.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5825—5683—Tucked straight skirts are very becoming to juniors. The skirt of this slip-over dress is joined at a low waistline. Use Georgette, chiffon, crêpe de Chine, cotton voile, cotton Georgette or organdy with a ribbon girdle, bow and shoulder flowers. The hat of faille silk, taffeta, crêpe de Chine or Georgette may have bias folds or a plain facing.

12 years requires 2¾ yards 39-inch voile for dress.



The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15 years; hat for girls 2 to 12 years.

5810—10228—Exotic flowers trim this quaint slip-over frock which closes under the left arm and has a gathered straight skirt joined to the basque at a slightly low waistline. The bertha may be detachable. Use organdy with a deep hem, dotted swiss with organdy to match dot, etc. Lower edge 2 yards.

16 years requires 2⅞ yards 39-inch organdy (with 9-inch hem).

The dress is for misses 15 to 20, also small women, and for ladies 38 bust.

5846—This coat may be worn in wrap-around or straight-line style as part of an ensemble suit or as a separate coat. Use cashmere coatings, twills, ribbed wools, broadcloth or kasha with narrow fur banding and novelty braid; or use broadcloth with inserted bands of the reverse side of the same material, or wool rep with reversed cords. It has inside or outside pockets.

36 bust requires 3 yards 54-inch cashmere coating. Lower edge 49½ inches.

The coat is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5737—5218—A detachable vestee and cuffs of linen, piqué, crêpe de Chine or organdy give a tailored effect to this one-piece slip-over dress of soft twills or cashmere dress materials. It has a slightly deep armhole and the new shoulder. With lightweight flannel or wool jersey use linen or piqué. Use flannel, kasha, etc., for hat and scarf.

36 bust requires 2⅜ yards 54-inch soft twill for dress. Lower edge 45½ inches.

The dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses; hat and scarf for ladies and misses.

5850—One may wear this coat with raglan sleeves in straight-line as well as wrap-around style. Use kasha or tweed flannel either with or without pipings or facings of same material in contrast, cheviot with or without facings in contrast, twills with or without facings of ribbed silk; or use camel's-hair, homespun, napped sports suitings or tweeds of one material with or without machine-hemstitching.

36 bust requires 3 yards 54-inch kasha. Lower edge 49 inches.

The coat is for ladies 33 to 46 bust, also misses.

5826—One may wear this slip-over dress on the street in early Spring, for it has a coat front over an underfront and a one-piece back. The lower part is joined in tunic-blouse effect. Use ribbed silk, heavy silk crêpe, soft twills, kasha, cashmere dress materials or ribbed wools with underfront of printed, novelty or bordered silks, etc.

36 bust requires 3⅞ yards 39-inch corded silk, ¾ yard 40-inch contrasting material for underfront. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

A DRESS IN ENSEMBLE SUIT-
NEW COATS FOR THE
STREET

5821—5773—This ensemble costume is composed of a coat worn over a slip-over dress with a one-piece lower part of the coat fabric and a long upper part of satin crêpe, plain silk crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine in contrast. The coat has a straight lower edge and a set-in pocket or a pocket on the lining. Use kasha, cashmere or soft twills for coat and lower part of dress, etc.

36 bust requires 4⅝ yards 39-inch corded silk (including lower part of dress, etc.) and 1¾ yard 39-inch silk crêpe. Lower edge of coat 45½ inches; of dress 43½ inches.

Coat is for ladies 32 to 44 bust, also misses; dress for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5843—5782—5561—Use twills, kasha or cashmere suitings for the coat and the straight wrap-around lower part of the dress in this ensemble costume, and silk crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine for the upper part of the dress. It has a tuck at the closing edge. Her wrap-around hat is smart in satin, corded silks, flannel, duvetyn or velours.

36 bust requires 3 yards 54-inch soft twill (including lower part of dress, etc.) and 1½ yard 39-inch material for upper part of dress. Lower edge of dress 44 inches.

Coat and dress are for ladies 32 to 44 bust; hat for ladies and misses.

5745—Most wardrobes need a smart coat dress of this order. The revers are new and the dress closes on the side and may have a body lining. Use wool rep, soft twills, kasha, silk bengaline, silk faille, crêpe satin or heavy silk crêpe.

36 bust requires 2⅜ yards 54-inch soft twill and ⅞ yard 35-inch satin. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The coat dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

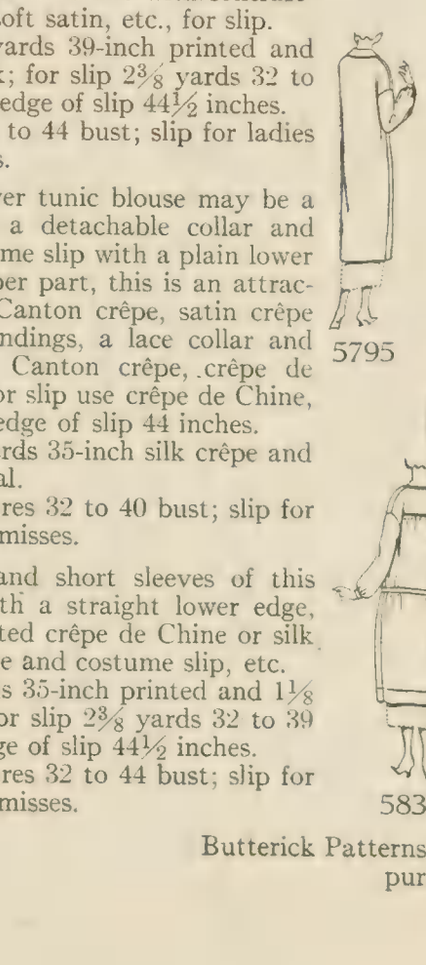
EFFECT, TUNIC BLOUSES AND ENSEMBLE AND SMART COSTUMES

5801—5827—If you use the same material for the costume slip and the straight band of this slip-over tunic blouse, you will have a smart costume. The upper part of the tunic blouse has a straight lower edge and the slip may have a three-inch or deep shadow-proof hem. Use printed crêpe de Chine with plain; or use the two sides of crêpe satin, or silk Canton crêpe or crêpe de Chine with contrasting color for blouse and soft satin, etc., for slip.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 39-inch printed and ¾ yard 39-inch plain silk; for slip 2⅜ yards 32 to 39 inch material. Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5795—5638—This slip-over tunic blouse may be a longer length and have a detachable collar and cuffs. Worn over a costume slip with a plain lower part joined to a long upper part, this is an attractive costume. Use silk Canton crêpe, satin crêpe or faille silk with self-bindings, a lace collar and cuffs; or use satin, silk Canton crêpe, crêpe de Chine, faille silk, etc. For slip use crêpe de Chine, crêpe satin, etc. Lower edge of slip 44 inches.



36 bust requires 2⅜ yards 35-inch silk crêpe and 2⅝ yards 35-inch material.

Tunic blouse is for figures 32 to 40 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 46 bust, also misses.

5833—5827—The yoke and short sleeves of this slip-over tunic blouse with a straight lower edge, are cut in one. Use printed crêpe de Chine or silk crêpe with plain for blouse and costume slip, etc.

36 bust requires 2 yards 35-inch printed and 1⅛ yard 35-inch plain silk; for slip 2⅜ yards 32 to 39 inch material. Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

Tunic blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5803—5508—An inserted plait at each side of the front and the close-fitting hipline give a slight flare to this one-piece sleeveless dress of the slip-over type. The collar and cuffs of the slip-over blouse may be detachable. Use plain flannel, kasha or soft twills for dress, and heavy crêpe de Chine, silk or cotton broadcloth, etc., for blouse.

36 bust requires 3¾ yards 27-inch flannel, 2 yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine. Lower edge 55 inches.

Dress is for ladies 33 to 48 bust, also misses; blouse for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5787—5724—10189—Embroidery outlines the slash at the lower part of this slip-over tunic blouse. It may be shorter. The costume slip with a straight lower edge may have a three-inch or deep shadow-proof hem. Use crêpe de Chine for blouse and slip; or use satin crêpe, crêpe faille or silk Canton crêpe with soft satin slip.

36 bust requires 2½ yards 39-inch satin crêpe; for slip 2⅝ yards 35-inch material. Lower edge of slip 44 inches.

Tunic blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5813—5638—10317—Rose motifs are a fashionable trimming for a slip-over tunic blouse made of the two sides of crêpe satin. One may use heavy crêpe de Chine for blouse and costume slip with the band, etc., of contrasting color; or use silk Canton crêpe in two tones of the same color, etc., for blouse.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 39-inch silk Canton crêpe and 2⅝ yards 39-inch satin crêpe (including slip). Lower edge of slip 44 inches.

Tunic blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 46 bust, also misses.

5835—5638—10311—A satin crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine tunic blouse and costume slip make a smart costume. Work the embroidery in one-stitch. One may use bengaline or faille bound with silk braid in self-color, etc., for blouse and crêpe de Chine, crêpe satin, crêpe meteor, etc., for slip.

36 bust requires 5⅛ yards 39-inch satin crêpe (including slip). Lower edge of slip 44 inches.

The blouse is for figures 36 to 52 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 46 bust, also misses.

5806—5561—Inverted tucks, a collar and cuffs of silk faille which may be detachable, and bone buttons in self-color trim this one-piece slip-over dress of light-weight cashmere, soft twills, wool crêpe or silk-and-wool crêpe. The front and back tunics are joined at the hipline. Her satin wrap-around hat is smart.

16 years requires 3¾ yards 39-inch cashmere. Lower edge 41 inches.

Dress is for misses 16 to 20 years, also ladies 38 bust; hat for misses and ladies.

5837—Chambray with trimmings in contrasting chambray or white rep, makes an adorable slip-over frock with a straight lower edge. The collar and cuffs may be detachable and the bloomers are separate. One may use crêpe de Chine, pongee, light-weight wool jersey with contrasting color, etc.

4 years requires 2⅜ yards 32-inch chambray. This dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5790—5549—The tunic blouse of this slip-over frock has inserted plaits at the front and side seams and is worn over a narrow one-piece slip. The collar and cuffs are detachable. Her hat has a four-gored crown.

16 years requires 1¾ yard 54-inch kasha and 1 yard 35-inch satin. Lower edge of slip 41 inches.

Dress is for misses 16 to 20 years, also ladies 38, 40 bust; hat for misses and ladies.

5847—4838—4038—It is smart to use one color for the coat, hat and leggings. Use kasha or broadcloth with fur or braid, etc., for coat.

4 years and 19¾ inches head measure require 1½ yard 54-inch broadcloth (including hat) and ½ yard 36 or more-inch material for leggings.

Coat is for little girls 2 to 6; hat for girls 2 to 12 years; leggings for children 2 to 14 years.

5845 — 5214 — Soft-nap coatings, camel's hair, homespun or mixtures are suitable to use for this coat with the new shoulder. The hat has a gored crown and may have a plain or corded brim.

12 years requires 2¼ yards 48-inch cashmere for coat.

Coat is for juniors and girls 8 to 15; hat for girls 2 to 12 years.

5812—Use broadcloth or cashmere dress materials for the wrap-around straight skirt of this slip-over dress, and an upper part of satin or silk Canton crêpe to match or in a lighter shade. The collar may be detachable and matches the upper part of dress. One may use ribbed wools with flat crêpe, soft twills with flat crêpe, etc.

17 years requires 1⅝ yard 39-inch silk Canton crêpe and 1¼ yard 54-inch kasha. Lower edge 42 inches.

The dress is for misses 16 to 20 years, also ladies 38 bust.

5789—5557—Homespun, camel's hair, small plaid coatings, wool-pile fabrics or chinchilla make a becoming little coat in raglan style. The hat with a four-gored crown should match the coat in color. It may be of soft-pile fabrics, satin, corded silks, etc.

6 years requires 1½ yard 54-inch camel's hair for coat.

Coat is for little girls 2 to 6; hat for girls 2 to 12 years.

5822—For this one-piece slip-over dress which fits closely at the hipline, use soft twills, cashmere dress materials, wool rep, wool crêpe, kasha or ribbed silks with plaid silk and bone buttons. The collar and cuffs may be detachable.

17 years requires 2 yards 54-inch soft twill and ⅞ yard 35-inch plaid silk. Lower edge 42½ inches.

The dress is for misses 16 to 20 years, also ladies 38, 40 bust.

5841—5815—A reefer and a sailor tam of serge or cheviot make a costume small boys can wear to school or for general wear. You may use tweeds or checks for the reefer and broadcloth for the sailor tam.

6 years and 20¾ inches head measure require 1⅝ yard 44-inch serge (including tam).

Reefer is for boys 2 to 10 years; tam for 19½ to 22¼ inches head measure.

3555—She wears more than one heart pasted on her ballet or Pierrette costume of paper muslin, taffeta, gold tissue or pineapple cloth and a ruff of tarlatan or net.

The costume is for ladies, misses and girls 24 to 38 bust.

5625—The Spanish dancer wears a dress of satin with plaited or gathered flounces, a shawl drapery of flat silk crêpe and large flowers embroidered on her dress.

The costume is for ladies, misses and girls 26 to 38 bust.

4048—A black clown's suit with silver or white decorations and wool or silk floss pompons makes a gay costume. Use paper muslin, sateen or silesia with tarlatan ruff, etc.

The suit and cap are for men and boys 22 to 44 breast.

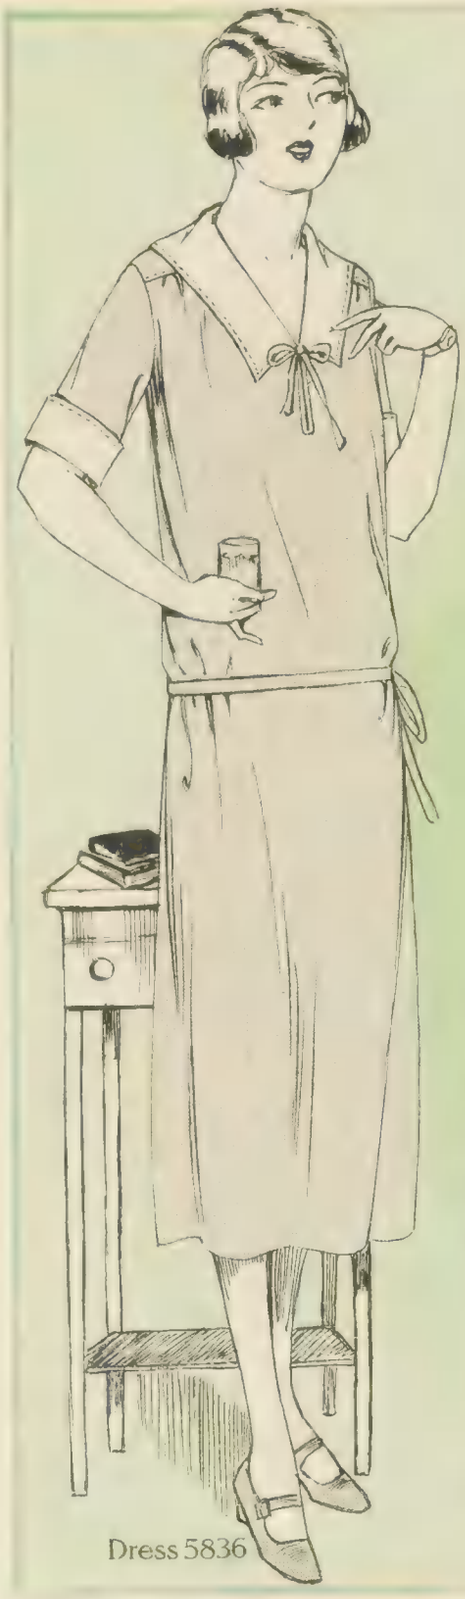
4258—For the Martha Washington costume use flowered lawn or organdy with fichu and ruffles of white lawn or organdy; or use paper muslin, sateen, silesia, cambric, lining satin or flowered taffeta in any becoming bright color, or white with lace, etc.

The costume is for ladies, misses and girls 26 to 42 bust.

4785—Pierrot wears a costume of sateen, silesia or paper muslin trimmed with pompons of wool or silk floss and a tarlatan ruff. His suit may be of satin with a maline ruff.

The costume is for men and boys 28 to 44 breast.

5839—Shy big girls wear this one-piece slip-over dress and separate bloomers to fancy-dress parties. Use check gingham, chambray or chintz, with organdy collar and cuffs, etc.



The dress is for ladies, misses and girls 26 to 38 bust.

4262—This Continental suit, which is composed of a coat, vest, knee breeches, jabot and hat, may be made of sateen, mercerized fabrics, paper muslin, cambric, lining satin, etc.

The suit is for men and boys 26 to 44 breast.

5510—If one dresses as the devil, he wears a jacket, trunks, cape and hood of sateen, mercerized fabrics or lining satin trimmed with velveteen bands, or of paper muslin or cambric with contrasting shade of same material, or of satin with velvet bands, etc.

The costume is for men and boys 28 to 40 breast.

Dress 5836

Outfit 5836

Dress 5838

Dress 5840

Negligée 5774

Apron 5770

5770

5836—This is the regulation outfit used in food laboratories of the School of Home Economics of Cornell University. The one-piece slip-over dress has a straight lower edge. The collar and cuffs may be detachable. Use chambray in any color with white cambric, etc.

19 years or 36 bust requires 3¼ yards 32-inch chambray for dress. Lower edge 55½ inches.

The dress is suitable for misses 15 to 20 years.

5838—Use striped wash silks, cotton broadcloth or cotton crêpe with plain to match for this one-piece slip-over dress with a straight lower edge. One may use plain cotton broadcloth, etc. Lower edge 1½ yard.

36 bust requires 3⅜ yards 32-inch striped tub silk.

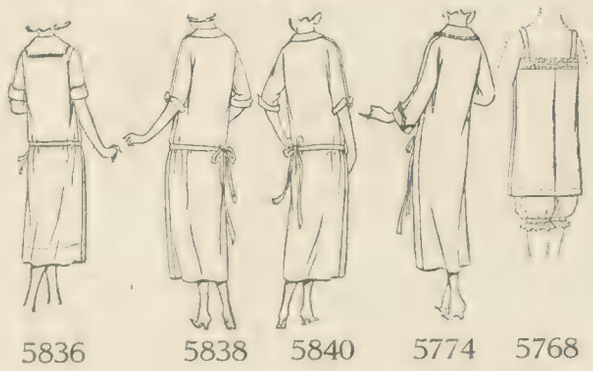
The dress is good style for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5840—Hand-drawn cotton broadcloth dress lengths are ideal for this one-piece slip-over dress with a straight lower edge. You yourself may do the hand-drawn work on plain cotton or silk broadcloth or crêpe de Chine. Lower edge 54 inches.

36 bust requires 3 yards 36-inch cotton broadcloth.

The dress is attractive for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5774—Shell trimming of satin ribbon is delightful on a negligée of printed silks or crêpe de Chine or of crêpe-back satin. One may use a net collar and cuffs on printed or plain cotton crêpe.



36 bust requires 4½ yards 36-inch printed silk. Lower edge 51½ inches.

The negligée is lovely for ladies 32 to 46 bust.

5768—Under the present narrow lines, one should wear a French chemise and bloomers of radium silk, crêpe satin or crêpe de Chine trimmed with machine-hemstitching and French flowers. The bloomers have a reenforced seat. One may use glove silk or sateen.

36 bust requires 2½ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine.

The chemise and bloomers are for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5836 5838 5840 5774 5768

French chemise and bloomers 5768

Slip 5827

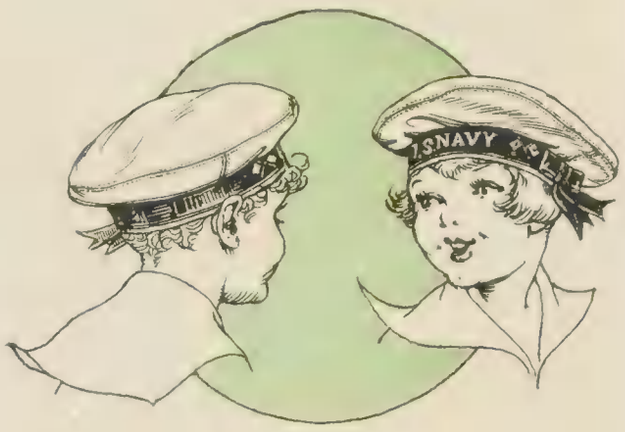
5827

5770—Use chintz, printed sateen, gingham, chambray, percale, striped madras, cotton crêpe or calico for this slip-over apron with a straight lower edge.

36 bust requires 3⅛ yards 35-inch printed sateen. Lower edge 58 inches.

The apron is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5827—To wear under tunic blouses make this costume slip of silk crêpe, soft satin, crêpe meteor or crêpe de Chine; under non-transparent dresses use radium silk, etc. It may have a deep shadow-proof hem or a three-inch hem.



36 bust requires 3½ yards 35 to 39-inch crêpe de Chine for slip with shadow-proof hem. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The slip is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5815—Serge, cheviot, broadcloth or pongee make the smart regulation sailor tam so becoming to boys.

20¾ inches head measure requires ⅜ yard 32 to 48 inch material.

The sailor tam is for 19½ to 22¼ inches head measure.

Sailor tam 5815

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 92.

Campbell's
CONDENSED
EXPOSITION UNIVERSELLE INTERNATIONALE 1900 VEGETABLE SOUP
CAMPBELL SOUP COMPANY
CAMDEN, N. J., U.S.A.
Real food in delicious soup!
Often nothing tempts
the appetite like a hot plate of good hearty soup!
Luncheon Dinner Supper
21 kinds
12 cents a can

Deep Fried Foods

A wonderful variety . . . . simple to cook . . . . . as quick as broiling a steak

"I prefer deep frying to any other form of cooking"

OF all the ways of cooking foods, I prefer them fried. It is the only way to give vegetables, fish, chicken, fritters, etc., that lovely, golden brown crispness. But I had found deep frying expensive, because I could only use the fat two or three times before I had to throw it away. And I didn't like the smoke and smell of burnt fat in the house. So in spite of my fondness for fried foods I had given up frying.

I had heard of Crisco but never used it, as I thought of it simply as another fat. One day some friends who were very enthusiastic about Crisco told me it was not an animal fat but a wholesome vegetable shortening. This impressed me so favorably that I decided to try it and used it first for French fried potatoes.

They told me Crisco would not smoke at the proper frying temperature. I was rather doubtful, as I had been taught to wait until the fat smoked before putting the food in, otherwise the fat would soak in. However, I took an ordinary saucepan and put into it between two and three pounds of Crisco and heated it slowly. When the Crisco was hot enough to brown a bread cube in 20 seconds I put the potatoes in and they cooked to a most beautiful brown without any smoke. I never saw or tasted better French fried potatoes, a beautiful, crisp, golden brown all over with no scorched ends.

Do you know of anything nicer with a broiled steak? And have you, like many others, thought you could find them in only the best hotels and restaurants? The next time you have steak at home, give your family a real treat. Serve French fried potatoes with it and see how much quicker you can deep fry them in Crisco than you can boil, mash or bake them.

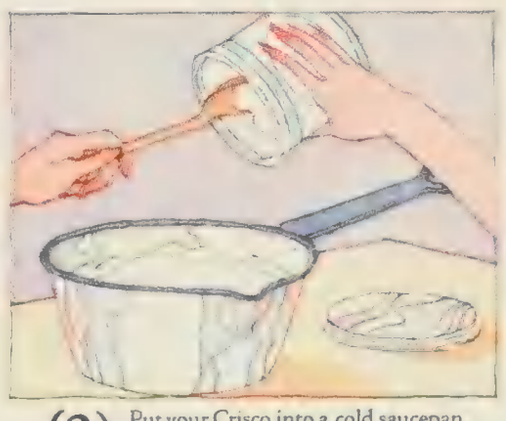
When you are through frying, simply push your kettle of Crisco to the back of the stove where it will cool and be ready for the next time you want to use it. You can use it over and over again for frying all kinds of food. Crisco doesn't absorb food flavors and the moment you put the food in hot Crisco, a crust forms on the outside which prevents the Crisco soaking in and keeps the true flavor inside. Therefore the first two or three pounds you use to start your deep fat kettle will last a long time and you can cook in it a surprising variety of foods, straining it occasionally, if necessary.

I use the same kettle of Crisco for frying doughnuts, fritters, croquettes, chicken, etc., and each one good without a trace of taste from any of the others.

My first really good pie

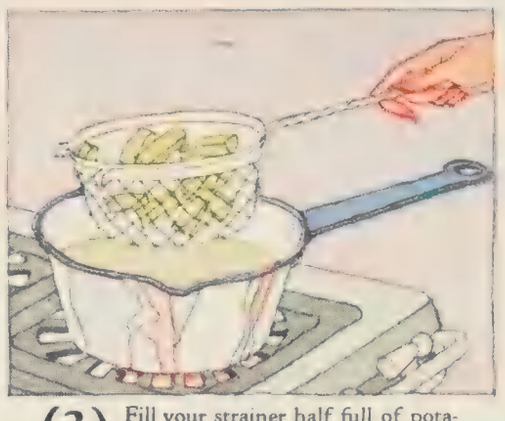
This first experience with Crisco was so pleasant and helpful and gave such surprising results that I used it for pies. One thing I found particularly helpful was that I did not have to keep Crisco on the ice as I did other shortenings. Therefore, it was always the right consistency to use. I never had such delicious, attractive looking pies, such tender and flaky crust, not greasy as it had been when I used other shortenings. And so simple to make, always with the same results when I followed directions. I never worry any more about how my pie is going to turn out. When I make it with Crisco, I know.

My economical way of making delicious cakes

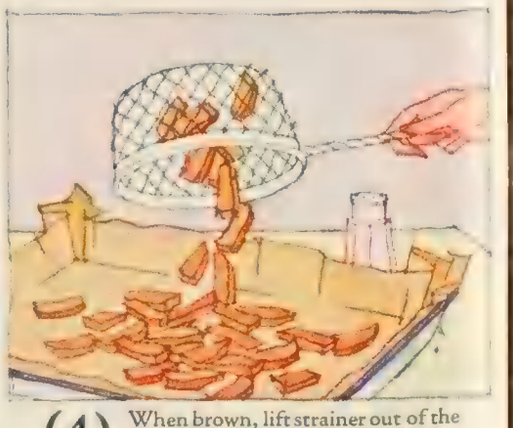


One day when I wanted to make a loaf of cake I used Crisco instead of butter, although I had always believed that nothing but butter would make good cake. I had also heard people say that they could always tell when a cake was not made with butter. I made the cake with Crisco using my usual recipe. Everyone that tasted it said: "Why, that cake is as good as the cakes you make with butter." The only difference, I, myself, could see was that the Crisco cake was a little lighter than the butter cakes, and came out of the pan, which had been greased with Crisco, whole and even, with a beautiful golden brown on all sides.

Since then, I have made all my cakes with Crisco—plain, layer, loaf, afternoon tea dainties, cakes of every description. I find it easier to use and more economical. Whenever a recipe calls for shortening I use Crisco, adding one teaspoonful of salt to every cupful.



I like Crisco so much I use nothing else, as it fills every need for shortening, cake making and frying. I find Crisco clean, sweet, economical and wholesome. It is convenient to use. It makes the best pie crust I ever ate; lighter and flakier biscuits; and in frying it keeps my kitchen a delightful place to work in. It helps to make cooking a pleasure instead of a drudgery. W. S. C.



(1) All you need is an ordinary saucepan, a strainer and a 3-pound tin of Crisco.

(2) Put your Crisco into a cold saucepan and heat slowly. When a cube of bread browns in 20 seconds your Crisco is ready for frying potatoes. Don't wait for Crisco to smoke.

(3) Fill your strainer half full of potatoes and lower it into the Crisco. Increase the heat, as the cold potatoes naturally cool the Crisco a little.

(4) When brown, lift strainer out of the fat, shake lightly, drain the potatoes on brown paper and sprinkle with salt.

. . lovely to see . . . . delicious to eat

Boulettes

Delicious Meat Balls from Left-Overs

How an old Southern mammy made left-over meats famous in New Orleans. When fried in Crisco they are cooked evenly all over with a crisp outside and tender and juicy inside — no smoke from burnt fat.

1 pound of lean raw meat or left-over meat
1 tablespoon Crisco, melted
1 teaspoon salt — 1 grated onion
Juice of 1 lemon — ⅛ teaspoon pepper
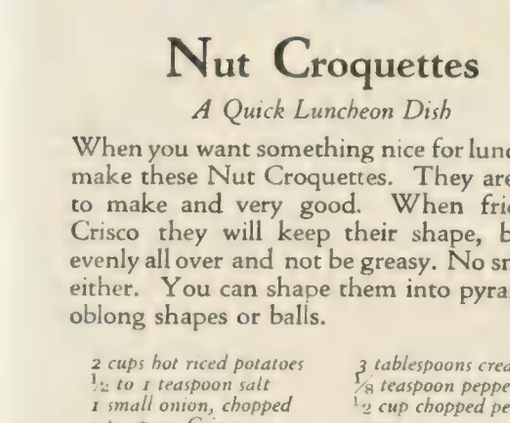
Dash of cayenne

Mince and chop the meat very fine. Add the chopped onion, Crisco, salt, pepper, cayenne and lemon juice. Mix together thoroughly with a fork. Form the meat into balls. It will make 6 or 8. Do not use any flour. Drop in deep Crisco kettle when it is hot enough to brown a bread crumb in 60 seconds (360°F.). Cook until well done or leave them rare, as you like. Drain on paper. Serve with Chili Sauce in lemon cups and garnish with parsley.



Nut Croquettes

A Quick Luncheon Dish

When you want something nice for luncheon make these Nut Croquettes. They are easy to make and very good. When fried in Crisco they will keep their shape, brown evenly all over and not be greasy. No smoke, either. You can shape them into pyramids, oblong shapes or balls.

2 cups hot riced potatoes — 3 tablespoons cream
½ to 1 teaspoon salt — ⅛ teaspoon pepper
1 small onion, chopped — ½ cup chopped pecans
1 teaspoon Crisco — 1 egg
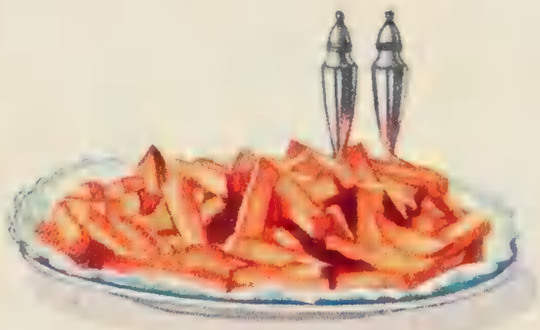
Bread crumbs

To the hot riced potatoes add the salt, pepper and onion. Add the cream and pecans, and last, the Crisco. Mix all together thoroughly. Roll in bread crumbs, then in beaten egg and then in bread crumbs again. Drop in deep Crisco at 390° F. or when a bread crumb browns in 20 seconds, and cook until brown. Serve hot with any desired sauce. This makes ten croquettes.

(5) When you have finished, strain your Crisco back into the can and set it aside to cool. Then it is ready to use over and over again for anything you want to fry. The taste of one thing will not be carried to another.



Salted Nuts

A New Easier Way

Did you ever hear of browning them in the deep Crisco kettle? Try them once and you will never do them any other way. Crisco will brown them evenly all over, any shade you like, no burnt places and no toasting the face and hands before the hot oven.

Almonds are usually used, but you can use raw peanuts, walnuts, or pecans. Remove skins from the almonds by letting them stand five minutes in boiling water. Then drain; cover with cold water. The skins will slip off easily between the thumb and finger. Drain; then dry in a towel to prevent sputtering when you put them in the hot Crisco. Put the nuts in a wire basket or wire strainer; lower into the deep Crisco heated to 390° F., or when a bread crumb browns in 20 seconds. Keep stirring with a fork until the desired shade of brown. Drain on paper and sprinkle with salt.

French Fried Potatoes

A real treat at home. When fried in Crisco they will be perfect—a crisp even brown, no greasy outside and no smoke in your kitchen.

Allow one medium-sized potato for each person. Peel potatoes, cut in strips about one-half inch square. Let stand in cold water about an hour, or they can be kept in the ice-box overnight if covered with water. When ready to fry, drain, dry in a towel, and put a few at a time into hot Crisco (395° F.), or when a bread crumb browns in 20 seconds. When brown and tender, drain on brown paper, sprinkle with salt, and serve.

Fry raw or cooked sweet potatoes the same way, but do not soak them in water.

Never wait for Crisco to smoke, as it would be too hot to fry if it were hot enough to smoke.

Snowballs

A dainty drop doughnut, dropped from a spoon instead of rolled and cut. When fried in Crisco they will not soak the fat and you will have no smoke in your kitchen, either. Fry them in the same kettle of Crisco you use for everything.

2 eggs — ½ cup sugar
1 cup milk — 3 cups pastry flour
1½ teaspoons salt — 3 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 tablespoon melted Crisco (from kettle)

Beat the eggs until light. Add the sugar, milk and vanilla. Stir in the flour, baking powder and salt, sifted together. Add the melted Crisco. Drop by teaspoons into hot Crisco (360° F.), or when a bread crumb browns in 60 seconds, and fry like doughnuts. When cool, dust with powdered sugar. To make perfect balls, hold teaspoon of dough under fat and scrape off quickly with another spoon. Turn as it rises.

Orange Fritters with Mint

A Los Angeles chef made this California Orange Fritter recipe for Crisco. They are as delicious as they are different, with a real chef's touch.

3 or 4 Oranges — Sugar
Few mint leaves to flavor
*Fritter batter — Hot Crisco

Peel the oranges as you would an apple. Then pick out each section whole. Place in a bowl, sprinkle with sugar; add the mint leaves and keep marinated for about two hours, taking care not to break the sections. Then take the orange sections out of the syrup and strain out the mint leaves. Dip each section into the batter and drop into the deep Crisco kettle, heated to 375° F. or 385° F., or when a bread crumb browns in 40 seconds. Fry until brown. Drain. Heat the syrup and serve with the fritters.

Fritter Batter

2 cups pastry flour — 1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon sugar — ¼ teaspoon salt
3 eggs — ½ cup milk
1 teaspoon melted Crisco

Beat the eggs; add the milk; flour, baking powder, salt and sugar sifted together. Stir in melted Crisco.

Mock Cherry Pie

Make your pastry with Crisco and see what a tender, flaky crust you have. Brush the inside of the lower crust with melted Crisco and dust with flour to prevent filling from soaking in.

2½ cups pastry flour — ¾ cup Crisco
1 teaspoon salt — Cold water

Sift the flour and salt and cut the Crisco in with two knives. This will make the crust flaky. Finger tips may be used to finish blending materials. Add gradually only enough water to hold together. Cover the pie plate with one-half the pastry. Add the filling prepared as follows:

Filling

1 cup cut raisins — 1 cup halved cranberries
1 cup sugar — 1 teaspoon vanilla
1 tablespoon cornstarch — ¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup boiling water

Cut cranberries in half, covering with cold water, and let stand until seeds have come out. Drain. Mix cornstarch, sugar and salt. Add boiling water and cook mixture until it boils, stirring constantly. Add rest of ingredients. Cool and fill the pie plate. Cover and bake in hot oven (375° F.).

Apple Sauce Cake

You Will Like It

A very good cake which keeps well. Crisco makes a light delicious cake. It is more economical too, easier to cream with the sugar. Grease your pans with Crisco and see your cake slip out easily and whole. Not a break in it.

½ cup Crisco — 1 cup sugar
1 egg, beaten — 4 tablespoons hot water
2½ cups pastry flour — ½ teaspoon salt
1½ cups thick cold apple sauce
1 teaspoon soda — 1 cup raisins (or dates)
½ cup nuts
1 teaspoon cinnamon, ½ teaspoon each of cloves and nutmeg

Cream the sugar and Crisco, add egg, beat well. Stir in apple sauce and hot water. Add raisins and nuts, then dry ingredients sifted together twice. Bake in a moderate oven (360° F.) 45 minutes to an hour. Makes two small loaves.

Free!

200 Tested Recipes

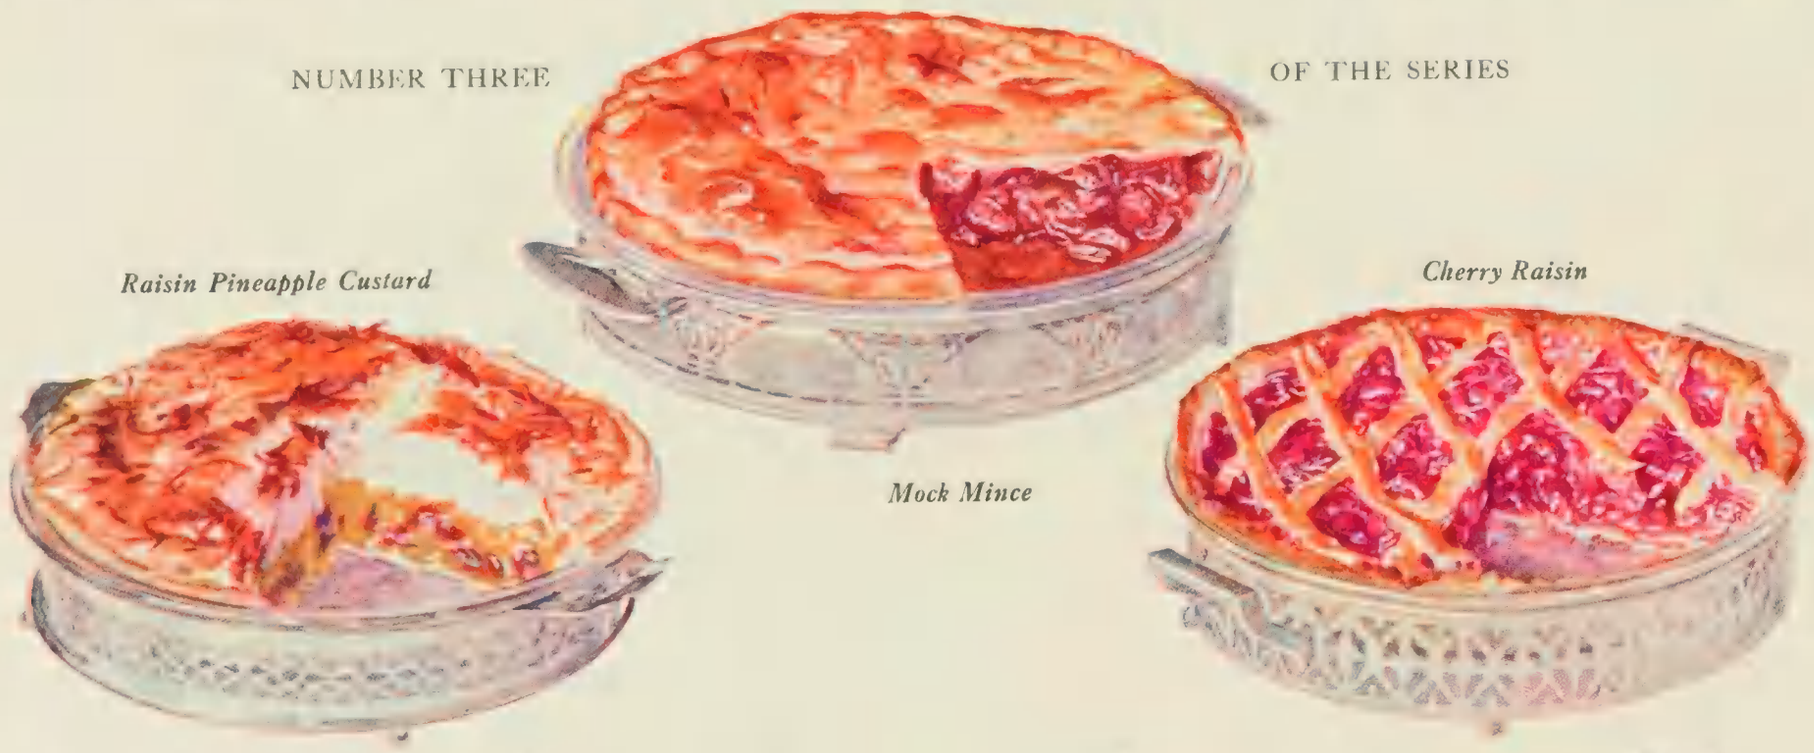
The cook book illustrated above contains 200 recipes gathered by Miss Olive Allen from the whole wide world. It contains a great many unusual recipes not to be found in any other cook book. To receive this book, free, simply fill in and mail the coupon

Crisco is the trade-mark for a superior shortening manufactured and guaranteed purely vegetable, by The Procter & Gamble Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S. A.

© 1925 by the Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati

The Procter and Gamble Co.,
Dept. of Home Economics, Sect F-2,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

Please send me, free, the cook book entitled "200 Tested Recipes."



Name .....

Street Address .....

City ..... State .....

RAISIN COOKERY LESSONS BY FAMOUS COOKS

NUMBER THREE OF THE SERIES

Raisin Pineapple Custard

Mock Mince

Cherry Raisin

Winter fruit pies that men like

By MRS. CHRISTINE FREDERICK, Household Efficiency Expert; Director, Applecroft Home Experiment Station; Lecturer; Author: "Household Engineering," "The New Housekeeping," etc. Advisory Food Consultant

"Pie" is the most truly typical American dish; and pie is the most popular of all desserts, especially with men! Winter and summer a fruit pie is always "just right" as a fitting top-off to any meal.

Raisins are the ideal fruit filling because no matter what the season, your hand can instantly reach them on your pantry shelf. There is no waste, no picking over, no loss through a "short" box or basket.

In their dried and compact form raisins hold the stored vim and vitamin of the grape—the Fruit Royal of the ages. Their winey and spicy flavor and rich natural sugar combine deliciously with crispy crust or flaky pastry. A cup or more of raisins added to ordinary fillings will give a note of individuality and make common materials into a "something different" dish.

Raisins do for plain ingredients of the kitchen what fancy neckwear, ruche or ribbon, does for a simple frock—makes it distinctive at little cost. Again, raisins by their shape and firm texture help give a desirable "body" and thus prevent usual fillings from being sticky or monotonous. Their high sugar content makes them blend especially well with all more acid fruits, such as apple, lemon, rhubarb, pineapple, etc.

And let me whisper a secret learned from a real chef in France. Before adding them to other fillings, "plump" raisins about ten minutes in simmering water or fruit juice variously flavored with a pinch of spice, a "pouf" of lemon or orange rind. Thus you release their own natural sugar and flavor and combine it with those of your other ingredients. Will you try this? Be generous with raisins and you will have an all year fruit pie filling of infinite variety.

Mrs. Christine Frederick

There is a difference in raisins

There is a difference in flavor, sweetness, size, color and cleanliness. To make certain of the finest results, be sure that the raisins you use are Sun-Maids.

For Sun-Maids are made from the tenderest and sweetest grapes, grown where they reach perfection—in the beautiful San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys of California. They come to you in sanitary packages—raisins large, plump, juicy, with an inimitable delicacy of flavor. Thoroughly cleaned and sterilized, they do not require washing before use.

You can use these perfect raisins freely, for they are inexpensive now—cheaper than they have been in years. Buy a package today and try them in the recipes which Mrs. Christine Frederick has given you here.

Raisin Pineapple Custard Pie

1½ cups rich milk; ½ cup sugar; 2 level tablespoons cornstarch; 2 egg yolks; ¼ teaspoon salt; 1 cup Sun-Maid Seedless Raisins; 1 cup drained pineapple pulp; ¾ cup pineapple juice; 2 tablespoons lemon juice; 1 teaspoon vanilla. MERINGUE: 2 egg whites; 2 tablespoons powdered sugar; 1 teaspoon vanilla; ⅛ teaspoon salt; 1 cup shredded cocoanut Flaky Pastry.

Heat milk in double boiler, stir in sugar, salt and cornstarch sifted together; cook until a thick custard, then pour on well beaten egg yolks and cook three minutes more. Remove from fire. In enamel saucepan heat pineapple and lemon juice and in it simmer the raisins ten minutes until plump. To the cooked custard add the raisins, the pineapple pulp and the remaining juices. Fold the two mixtures carefully together, adding the vanilla. Pour into a baked shell of rich flaky pastry. Cover with a meringue made of the egg whites and sugar; sprinkle with shredded cocoanut and bake ten minutes in a slow oven until meringue is delicately browned.

Mock Mince Pie

1 cup boiling water; 1 cup sugar; 2 cups Sun-Maid Seeded Raisins; 2 cups finely chopped tart apples; ½ cup grape-juice (or cider); 2 tablespoons lemon juice; 1 tablespoon grated lemon rind; 2 tablespoons orange juice; 1 tablespoon grated orange rind; ½ teaspoon powdered cinnamon; ½ teaspoon powdered clove; ⅛ teaspoon grated nutmeg; 2 tablespoons butter; ½ cup chopped walnut meats; 2 tablespoons flour. Flaky Pastry.

To the boiling water in enamel saucepan add sugar, grated rinds, grape and fruit juices and spices. Blend, then add raisins and chopped apples and simmer in the spiced syrup ten minutes until raisins are plump and apples softened. Add butter and stir until melted, then the flour which has been mixed to a paste with cold water. Stir mixture carefully a few moments over a low flame until thickened. Pour into a pie plate lined with flaky pastry, cover with a top crust and bake 40 minutes in moderate oven. Sufficient for one large pie, two small ones, or a dozen mince tarts.

Cherry Raisin Pie

2 cups tart canned cherries; 1 cup cherry juice; ¾ cup (or less) sugar; 1 cup Sun-Maid Seedless Raisins; 1 tablespoon orange juice; 1 teaspoon almond extract; ½ teaspoon vanilla; 1 tablespoon butter; 2 tablespoons flour; ½ cup sifted crumbs. Flaky Pastry.

Pour cherries and orange juice in enamel saucepan, add sugar and raisins and simmer ten minutes until raisins are plump. Add butter and stir until melted, then the flour which has been mixed to a paste with cold water, stirring a few moments over a low flame until thickened. Add the cherries and the almond and vanilla flavoring. Remove from fire and pour into a pie plate lined with flaky pastry, the bottom of which has been sprinkled with crumbs to absorb excess juice. Finish top with criss-cross strips of pastry lattice fashion, and bake 25 minutes in moderate oven. (In winter use two cups cranberries cut in half to entirely replace cherries, adding more sugar and simmering the berries in sugar and 1 cup water instead of juice.)

Paste this chart in your cook book

JUST ADD SUN-MAID RAISINS to YOUR

Biscuit Dough

Raisin biscuits
Raisin roll (roll out, spread with raisins, sugar and cinnamon, roll and bake)
Cinnamon twists
Steamed Raisin Dumpling

Breakfast Breads

Raisin muffins
Raisin doughnuts
Raisin cornbread
Sally Lunn
Cinnamon buns

Breakfast Cereals

Oatmeal
Cream of Wheat
Cornmeal mush

Pies

Apple, rhubarb, pumpkin, lemon, butterscotch, peach, cranberry, cocoanut

Simple Puddings

Rice, custard, bread, tapioca, cornstarch, brown betty

Cakes

Layer, tea, drop, spice, loaf. (Flour raisins slightly before adding to batter)

Candies

Raisin and nut balls (ground raisins and nuts made into balls and rolled in sugar)

Raisin fudge, penoche, caramels

Raisins dipped in sweet chocolate

NOTE: Practical recipes for these and many other delightful foods can be had by mailing the coupon below

COUPON

Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California
Dept. A-202, Fresno, Calif.

Please send me "Recipes with Raisins."

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY

STATE

[FREE The new Sun-Maid cook book, 130 unusual and practical recipes, suggestions for afternoon teas, luncheons, children's dishes. Compiled and tested by Mrs. Belle De Graf. Just mail the coupon]

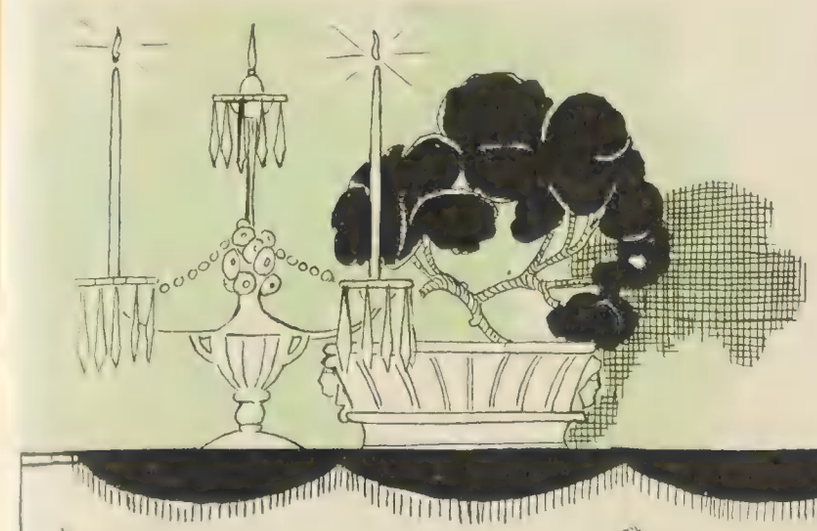
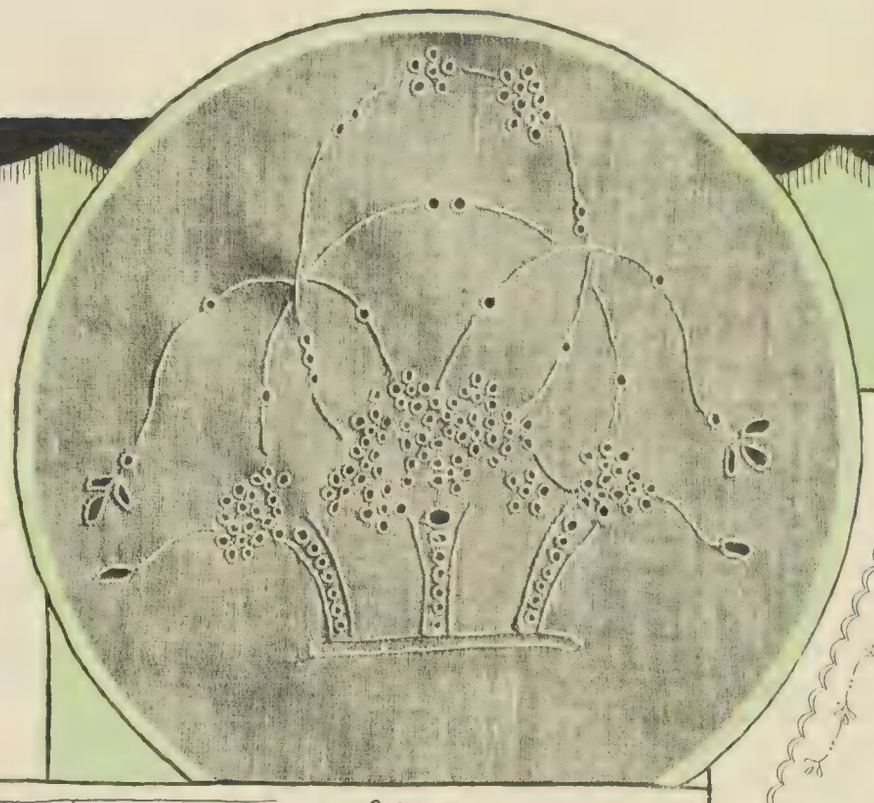
SUN-MAID RAISIN GROWERS OF CALIFORNIA, FRESNO, CALIF.

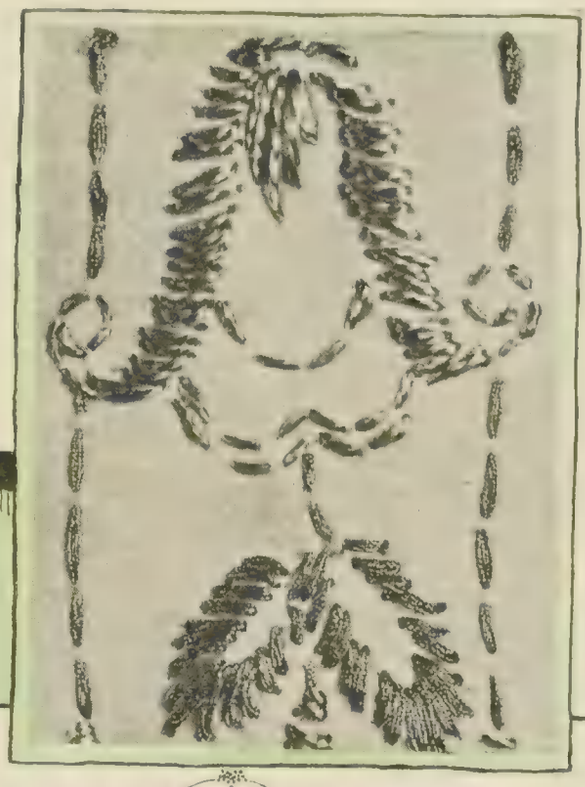


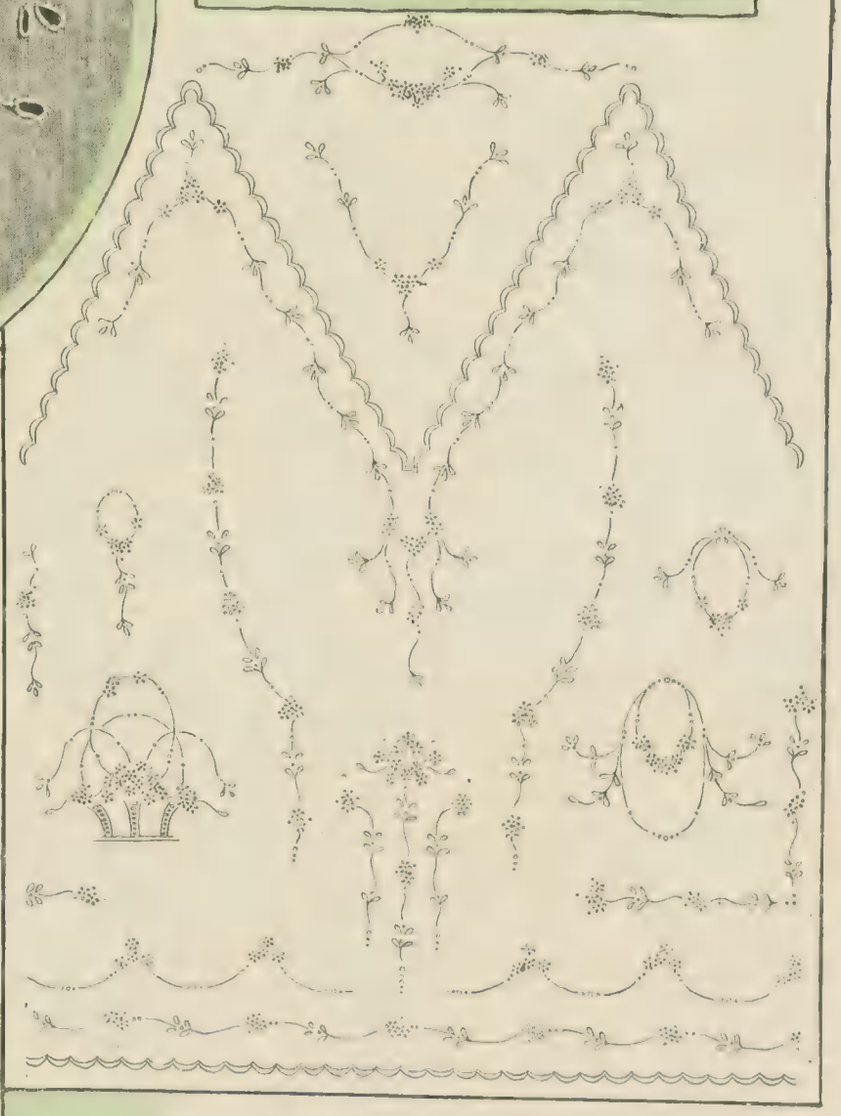
Sun-Maid Raisins

THIS is the Sun-Maid Girl—an insigne of quality the world over. Look for her on products of the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California



CHOOSE AN EMBROIDERY FOR THE NEW TUNIC BLOUSE, YOUR NEW FROCK, FINE LINGERIE OR LINENS

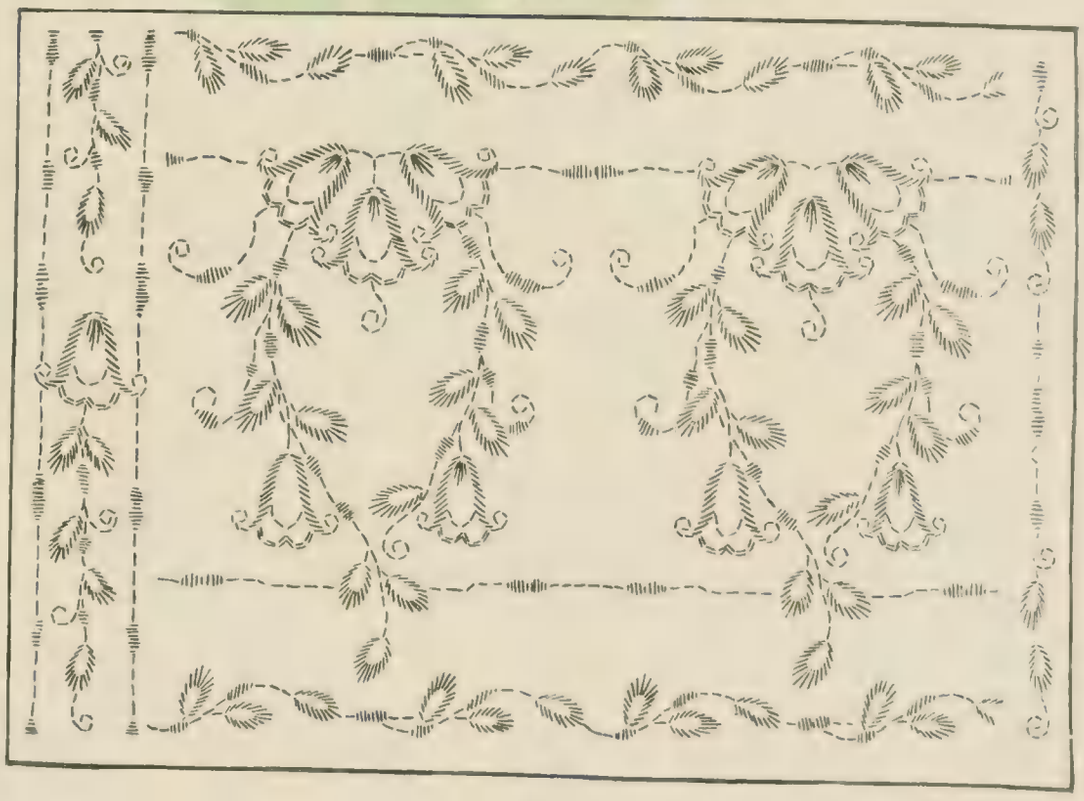




Embroidery design 10317

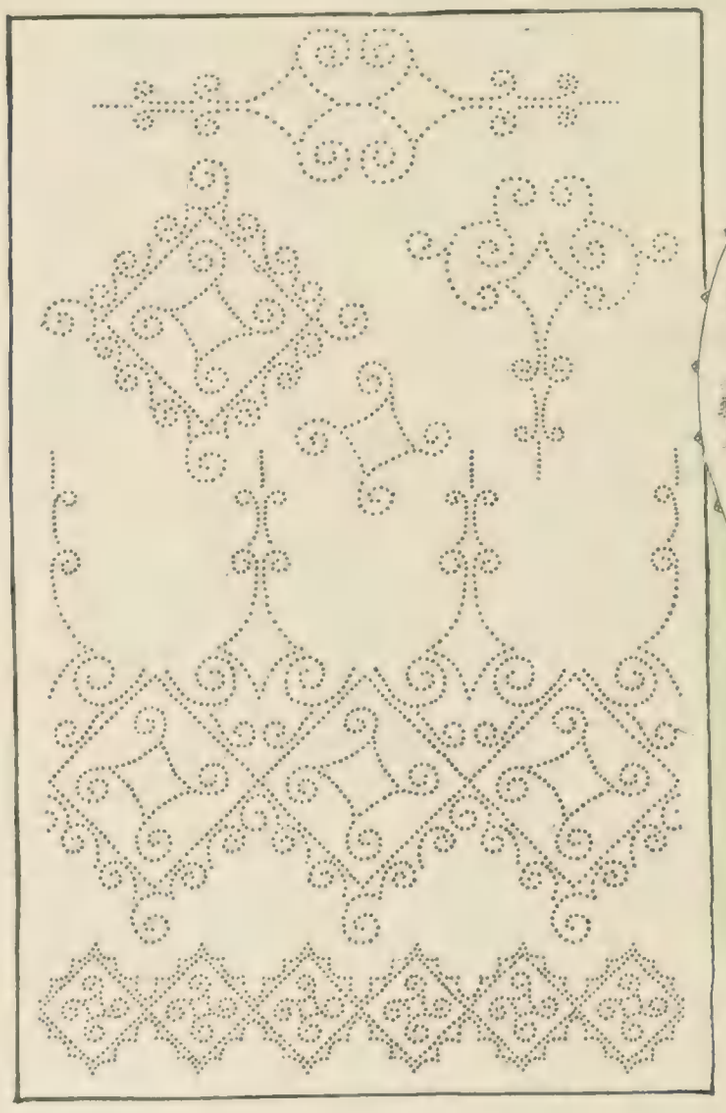
10317—Clusters of roses or a single rose make an adequate and effective trimming on many of the smartest frocks. It is possible to use several color combinations; you may choose any one of them and work it out in the banding and motifs of this embroidery. It is also suitable to use on blouses, hats or even household linens. Work it in one-stitch, outline-stitch and-lazy daisy embroidery. This design can be adapted to 2½ yards of banding 4⅝ inches wide, 2¼ yards of banding 3 inches wide, 4⅞ yards of edging ⅝ inch wide, a long motif and 21 small motifs in 5 assorted styles.

Embroidery design 10315



Embroidery design 10313

10315—How many places there are for the corners and motifs of this new design! On tea cloths and napkins the small corner garlands are very dainty, while for a luncheon-set or scarfs hemstitching and the motifs for drawn threads or cut-work are used a great deal. One may also use the motifs for other household linens. The various corners and motifs should be worked in one-stitch, lazy-daisy, outline, satin-stitch, eyelets, cut-work, hemstitching and drawn threads. The design can be adapted to 20 large corners in 5 assorted styles, 34 small corners in 5 assorted styles and 2 long motifs.



Embroidery design 10318

10318—Many of the newest tunic blouses have a wide band near the hem of contrasting color or material. It is very fashionable to embroider the band with a design of this character. The bandings are very easily worked in one-stitch and are also appropriate for blouses, skirts, waists, etc. The design can be adapted to 2⅝ yards of banding 17 inches wide, 2⅝ yards of banding 2¾ inches wide and 2⅝ yards of edging 1 inch wide.

10313—Lingerie should be embroidered with a very fine design of this type. The banding and motifs, which are decorative for nightgowns, camisoles, chemises, combination undergarments, etc., should be worked in eyelets, French stemming, satin-stitch, scalloping, outline or lazy-daisy embroidery. The design can be adapted to 3½ yards of straight banding 1¼ inch wide, 3½ yards of banding ½ inch wide, 3½ yards of scallops, 1 pointed neck outline, 1 neck motif and 56 small motifs in 9 assorted styles.

DELIGHTFUL NEEDLEWORK FOR MIDWINTER EVENINGS

Embroidery design 10314

10314—Whenever you want a border for your scarf, or a motif or bandings for a new dress or blouse, you can use the bandings and motifs of this new design. They may be worked in beading or French knots. The design can be adapted to 2⅝ yards each of banding 12 inches wide and 3¼ inches wide and 21 motifs in four assorted styles.

Embroidery design 10320

10320—The flower garlands of this new embroidery are arranged in the points of a star, an arrangement most effective for a round centerpiece. There are also special motifs for pointed scarfs. Both centerpiece and scarfs should be worked in a combination of French knots, lazy daisy and one-stitch. The design can be adapted to one 36-inch centerpiece and motifs for the end of a large and a small pointed scarf.

Embroidery design 10319

10319—You may get perfectly delightful color effects by using both large and small beads in this beading design. The bandings and motifs may be used to trim dresses or tunic blouses, skirts, etc. The design may be worked in French-knot embroidery. It can be adapted to 1¾ yard of 25-inch banding, 1¾ yard of 2¾-inch banding, 1½ yard ¾-inch banding and 12 motifs.

Embroidery design 10316

10316—The morning glories which trail from a French basket on this bedspread should be embroidered in blanket-stitch, one-stitch, outline and satin-stitch. The motif on the bolster-roll is effective. The design can be adapted to an oval motif 29⅝ by 21 inches, 2 corners and a motif for the bolster-roll to use on single, double or three-quarter beds.

BELOW PAR··?

from constipation, lowered vitality, skin and stomach disorders?

Boundless energy in this simple fresh food!

THESE remarkable reports are typical of thousands of similar tributes to Fleischmann's Yeast.

There is nothing mysterious about its action. It is not a "cure-all," not a medicine in any sense. But when the body is choked with the poisons of constipation—or when its vitality is low so that skin, stomach and general health are affected—this simple, natural food achieves literally amazing results.

Concentrated in every cake of Fleischmann's Yeast are millions of tiny yeast-plants, alive and active.

At once they go to work—invigorating the whole system, clearing the skin, aiding digestion, strengthening the intestinal muscles and making them healthy and active.

Fleischmann's Yeast for Health comes only in the tinfoil package—it cannot be purchased in tablet form. All grocers have it. Start eating it today! You can order several cakes at a time, for Yeast will keep fresh in a cool, dry place for two or three days.

DISSOLVE ONE CAKE IN A GLASS OF WATER
(just hot enough to drink)

before breakfast and at bedtime. Fleischmann's Yeast when taken this way is especially effective in overcoming or preventing constipation. Or eat 2 or 3 cakes a day—spread on bread or crackers—dissolved in fruit juices or milk—or eat it plain. Write us for further information, or let us send you a free copy of our latest booklet on Yeast for Health.

Address: Health Research Dept. D-13, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington Street, New York.

"I WAS a wreck and I knew it. Although young, scarcely twenty, indigestion had taken a firm hold; my complexion was bad, vitality gone and life looked black. I had tried everything and yeast had been recommended to me. 'How absurd,' I mused. 'Yet if I only dared hope!' At the end of a month my complexion was noticeably improved, my stomach working properly and my entire system rejuvenated. Miracles like this cannot happen in a day, but now I am the picture of health."

(An extract from a letter from Mrs. Arthur R. Pagnam, R. F. D. No. 29, Stamford, Conn.)

"AT the age of forty I found myself slipping in health. I was troubled with indigestion, constipation and nervous debility. I had read about people taking Fleischmann's Yeast, and ordered some. A while later, in answer to a friend's inquiry, I was surprised to hear myself reply, 'I feel like a prize-fighter' and realized then that I had not felt any sign of indigestion for some time, and was putting in ten to twelve hours' hard brain work daily. I knew I was back again."

(A letter from Mr. W. L. King of Washington, D. C.)

"FIVE years ago as an office worker in Milwaukee, I could answer to the description of the 'rundown, nervous, suffering woman' in the patent medicine ads. My sallow complexion was my greatest worry and I was always troubled with constipation. I had taken medicine for four years, but the doctor said that drugs could not effect a permanent cure. Two years ago I learned from the girls in the office to eat Fleischmann's Yeast. Today I am frequently complimented on my fresh complexion and am told I don't look more than twenty-two. I hold the championship record for swimming and tennis in our club. I still have one incurable habit—half ■ cake of Fleischmann's Yeast daily with a glass of milk."

(Extract from a letter of Mrs. Ella Fitzgerald, of Ypsilanti, Michigan.)

Yeast is especially delicious on toasted crackers or as a sandwich "filler" with jam or peanut butter.

"I WENT fishing up North about 250 miles from Vancouver in the Spring of 1920, and had an attack of boils in ■ very bad form, which lasted for one year and five months—from 7 to 10 at a time. I tried all kinds of remedies. A fisherman friend made me a bet that Fleischmann's Yeast would cure the boils if I took 3 cakes a day. He said he would buy the yeast cakes. In 10 days my boils began to dry up, in 4 weeks only the marks were left and no new boils coming. I lost the bet and paid for the cakes, but I have not been troubled with boils since."

(Extract from a letter of Mr. John Faulkner, of Nanaimo, B. C.)

"WHEN I commenced to eat yeast about two years ago, I was the grouchiest grouch that ever nursed a grouch. I realized that my Nemesis was that curse of mankind—constipation. About every cathartic on the market went through my system. My grocer suggested that I give Fleischmann's Yeast a trial. Since I began eating it my bowels function perfectly night and morning—the proverbial kitten has nothing on me for sound slumber. I do not claim Yeast to be a universal 'cure-all'—but it certainly gave me an excellent start on the road to health."

(A letter from Mr. Cyril A. Gendermann of 1022 Tenth Avenue, Brooklyn)

Why suffer agony from burns and scalds

when in your own home you can have the same remarkable remedy now used by hospitals and physicians everywhere

A HOT oven-door—a pot of scalding water—a sharp paring knife—a jagged edge of a can . . . accidents no home seems able to avoid!

Today medical science has developed a remedy that gives almost instant relief.

A remedy so effective that it is now being used by physicians and hospitals throughout the entire country—in accidents where the most intense suffering must be relieved.

This remedy is Unguentine.

* * *

For burns and skin injuries of every kind—apply Unguentine at once and bandage lightly where necessary. Almost the minute it's applied, you notice the relief!

But Unguentine does more than simply relieve the pain. Highly antiseptic—it immediately kills dangerous germs of infection that need but a slight break in the skin to gain a foothold.

Unguentine is not the least bit harsh or irritating. Even on an open wound its effect is immediately soothing. It stimulates the quick healing of the tissues, and often prevents the formation of an unsightly scar!

There is nothing like Unguentine made today. No medicine cabinet should be without it. 50 cents at your druggist's. Or the coupon below will bring you a trial tube free of all charge.

Made by The Norwich Pharmacal Company, Norwich, New York.

Canadian Agents: H. F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., Toronto

Doctor says Unguentine saved this boy's life

"My little boy, two and a half years old, put a French ivory comb in the gas grate and before anyone could reach him he was a mass of flames. My wife heard him scream and had presence of mind enough to grab her coat and smother the flames. Immediately afterwards she called the doctor and while waiting for him got the tin (1 lb.) of Unguentine and used all she had of it—then wrapped him up as best she could until the doctor arrived. Two of the fingers were so terribly burned we thought he would lose them, and the doctor claims that by using Unguentine as soon as we did there is no doubt but that it saved the little fellow's life."

— —, Chicago, Ill.

FREE—A generous tube

Norwich — a trusted name on pharmaceutical preparations

The Norwich Pharmacal Co.,
Dept. B-2, Norwich, New York

Please send me trial tube of Unguentine and booklet, "What to do," by M. W. Stofer, M.D.

Name .....

Street .....

City and State .....

MENUS FOR FEBRUARY

By Jessie A. Boys

These menus were carefully planned so as to have correct nutritional values. They were edited and approved by Martha Van Rensselaer, Head of the School of Home Economics, Cornell University

FEBRUARY is the month of illustrious birthdays. If it was too hot last Summer, or if one was away from home, or if for any reason at all the occasion was neglected, this is a splendid month to catch up by having a birthday party with the notables.

The birthday cake can be dressed up by putting candles in rose-shaped candle-holders which are inserted in the top of the cake. Or roses can be made of frosting forced through pastry-bag and rose-tube on the frosted cake. The candles should be put into the centers of these before the frosting has entirely dried. Children are more fascinated by the use of sparklers instead of candles.

SUNDAY

BREAKFAST

Grapefruit
Toasted Whole-Wheat Biscuit with Hot Milk
Scrambled Eggs and Bacon
Toasted Rolls Milk Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Welsh Rabbit Cabbage-and-Pickle Salad
Apricot Short-Cake
Milk Tea

A BIRTHDAY DINNER

Grapefruit and Pomegranate-Seed Cocktail
Club Celery Oyster Bouillon Olives
Wafers
Fillet of Beef, Brown Mushroom Sauce
Chantilly Potatoes Sautéd Bananas
Croquettes Hominy and Horseradish
String-Beans Parker House Rolls
Lettuce Salad, Cheese Dressing
Finger Sandwiches
Neapolitan Ice-Cream Birthday Cake
Salted Nuts Coffee Hard Candies

MONDAY

BREAKFAST

Stewed Prunes
Whole-Wheat Cereal, Top Milk
Buttered Eggs Toast
Milk Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Cream Pea Soup Crackers
Macaroni with Tomato Sauce Cabbage Salad
Canned Fruit Cookies
Milk Tea

DINNER

Swiss Steak, Brown Gravy
Boiled Potatoes Buttered Asparagus
Cottage-Cheese and Pineapple Salad
Mixed Pickles Brown Bread
Preserved Strawberries Nut Cake
Milk Coffee

TUESDAY

BREAKFAST

Baked Apples
Liver and Bacon Corn-meal Muffins
Marmalade
Milk Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Potatoes au Gratin Apple-and-Celery Salad
Peach Marmalade Nut Bread
Milk Tea

DINNER

Tomato Soup
Sautéd Ham Candied Sweet Potatoes
String-Beans Mustard Pickles
Graham Bread
Lemon Meringue Pie
Milk Coffee

WEDNESDAY

BREAKFAST

Hominy Grits with Raisins
Liver Omelet Bran Muffins
Tart Apple Jelly Cocoa

SUPPER OR LUNCHEON

Ramekins of Ham and Eggs
Cole Slaw Spoon Bread
Fruit Bread Pudding
Milk Tea

DINNER

Carrot Soup Wafers
Veal Birds Cream Gravy
Beet Greens Mashed Potatoes
Perfection Salad Finger Rolls
Baked Jelly Apples, Whipped Cream
Milk Coffee

THURSDAY

BREAKFAST

Sliced Oranges
Baked Eggs with Cheese Toast
Milk Coffee

SUPPER OR LUNCHEON

Link Sausage with Tomatoes
Waffles Sirup
Milk Coffee

DINNER

Minute Steak
Turkish Pilaf Creamed Onions
Cider-Apple Jelly Whole-Wheat Bread
Fruit Whip Sweet Wafers
Milk Coffee

FRIDAY

BREAKFAST

Apple Sauce
Rolled Oats, Top Milk
Crisp Toast Milk Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Fish Chowder Cheese Crackers
Jellied Fruit Salad Finger Sandwiches
Milk Tea

DINNER

Broiled Shad, Sauce Tartare
French Fried Potatoes Spinach
Lima Beans Hot Rolls
Orange Pudding
Milk Coffee

SATURDAY

BREAKFAST

Canned Cherries
Corn Flakes Whole Milk
Soft-Cooked Eggs Wheat Muffins
Milk Coffee

SUPPER OR LUNCHEON

Beef Soup with Noodles
Rye Bread and Cheese Sandwiches
Blackberry Jelly
Baked Caramel Custard
Milk Tea

DINNER

Ham Loaf Savory Rice
Corn Pudding Harvard Beets
Chow-chow Baked Brown Bread
Apple Cobbler Lemon Sauce
Milk Coffee

As soon as you hear "Chantilly potatoes" and "Harvard beets," you know something unusual and interesting has happened to plain "pertaters 'n' beets." And don't veal birds, Turkish pilaf and finger sandwiches suggest all sorts of alluring treats? If you'd like to know how to make any of these dishes, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to The Home-Making Department, THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

PORTRAIT OF LADY DIANA MANNERS IN HER WEDDING GOWN, BY SIR JAMES J. SHANNON, R. A.

"BEAUTY is the touchstone of life. Without it we might as well live on the burnt-out Moon! So, for her own, for everybody's sake, it's every woman's duty to foster her beauty. She can effectively accomplish this loveliness by the Pond's Method, by using Pond's Two Creams."

Diana Manners

The Lady Diana Manners

—most beautiful woman of the English Aristocracy praises this care of the skin

LADY DIANA MANNERS is the most beautiful woman of her generation, the Lady Hamilton of our day.

Beauty is in her blood. Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall, famous beauty of Elizabethan days, was one of her ancestors. And her mother, the Duchess of Rutland, was a creature of rare loveliness when, as a younger woman, she was lady-in-waiting to the Queen.

Lady Diana's beauty is fabulous. It sets the pulses racing, the imagination afire.

The delicate modeling of her face, the proud lift of her head, the graceful dignity of her figure, declare her "the daughter of a thousand earls." But the glint of gold in her hair, the starry blueness of her eyes, these touch the heart-strings, being heaven-sent.

And the lily's own petals are not more snowy-white, more satin-soft, than Lady Diana's skin. Sculptors and painters have begged her to sit for them, for, as a great English painter said, "she has the most beautiful complexion in the world."

No wonder she's the darling of the most exclusive Society of two continents. And, thanks to her gracious ways, beloved of plain folk, too. It has been well said, "She's England's best ambassador in making friends of Americans for England."

Lady Diana—whose creed is, "Beauty is the touchstone of life"—knows the need of keeping all her own beauty untouched by wind and cold, the harsh lights and make-up of the theater, and the late hours of her exacting social life.

So this exquisite creature literally bathes her face and neck in cold cream and protects them with a delicate finish provided by a second cream.

For, like so many of the beautiful women of England, of America, Lady Diana Manners has found the Two Creams that keep the skin its exquisite best no matter how it's taxed.

EVERY SKIN NEEDS THESE TWO CREAMS

How Lady Diana Keeps Her Beauty

Before retiring or after any unusual exposure apply Pond's Cold Cream generously on the face and neck. Wipe it off with a soft cloth, taking away the day's accumulation of dust, dirt and powder. Finish with a dash of cold water or a rub with a bit of ice.

Before you powder, smooth over your newly cleansed face a delicate film of Pond's Vanishing Cream. It keeps your complexion fresh and protected for hours against any weather, gives it the softest finish imaginable and holds your powder with velvety smoothness and surprisingly long.

Like Lady Diana Manners you can "effectively accomplish this loveliness." Buy Pond's Cold and Vanishing Creams today. Begin their use. Soon you'll have a beautiful complexion, tax it though you may. The Pond's Extract Company.

THE PRINCESSE MARIE DE BOURBON
THE PRINCESSE MATCHABELLI
THE VICOMTESSE DE FRISE
THE DUCHESSE DE RICHELIEU
MRS. O. H. P. BELMONT
MRS. MARSHALL FIELD SR.
MRS. GLORIA GOULD BISHOP
MRS. JULIA HOYT
MRS. CORDELIA BIDDLE DUKE

are among the women of distinguished taste and high position who have expressed approval of the Pond's Method of caring for the skin and of Pond's Two Creams

Free Offer Mail this coupon today for free tubes of these two famous creams and a little booklet telling what many famous beauties think of them.

THE POND'S EXTRACT COMPANY, Dept. B
149 Hudson Street, New York

Please send me free tubes of Pond's Cold and Vanishing Creams.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

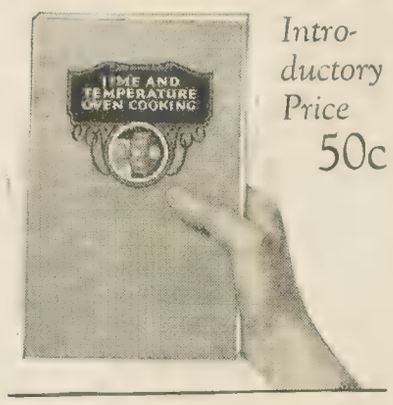
One easy turn of the Lorain Red Wheel gives you a choice of 44 measured and controlled oven heats for any kind of oven cooking or baking

Who cooked this delicious hot dinner?

From one-thirty until five-forty nobody was home—yet, promptly at six mother served this wonderful meal:

Vegetable Soup
Roast Beef Baked Potatoes, Creamed Buttered Onions
Lettuce Salad with Thousand Island Dressing
Fruit Melange (*)



Thousands of women who own gas ranges with Lorain Self-Regulating Ovens cook their meals in the following easy way whenever they take an afternoon off:

After a brief preparation at twelve or one o'clock they put into the oven everything to be cooked. Then they turn the Lorain Red Wheel to a given temperature. Returning later in the afternoon (they don't have to be there on the dot), they find everything deliciously done and ready to serve.

And that's not all Lorain can do! Because the Lorain Oven Heat Regulator enables you to measure the oven heat and automatically maintains it at the set degree, you can take any modern recipe which gives Time and Temperature and get perfect results the very first time you try—and every time thereafter.

We know these cookery wonders are hard to believe, so why not call on a "Lorain" agent and ask him to demonstrate these marvels for you? He'll gladly do it. You'll be convinced. No matter how small your income or how fine your kitchen, you'll find a Lorain-equipped Gas Range to suit.

◈

Introductory Price 50c

Lorain Time and Temperature Cook Book contains 128 pages of recipes for oven-cooked foods, including Whole Meals and Oven Canning, also Time and Temperature Chart. Bound in cloth, attractively illustrated. Issued by Research Kitchens of American Stove Company. Price fifty cents, post-paid, stamps accepted. Mark, sign and mail the coupon.

* Send for a free folder explaining how to cook the above dinner in a Lorain Self-Regulating Oven while you're miles away. Or, for fifty cents we'll mail you a handsomely bound copy of our Lorain Time and Temperature Cook Book. Mark, sign and mail the coupon now.

LORAIN OVEN HEAT REGULATOR

AMERICAN STOVE CO., 829 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Largest Makers of Gas Ranges in the World

We manufacture coal stoves and the celebrated Lorain High Speed Oil Burner Cook Stoves for use where gas is not available, but the Lorain Regulator cannot be used on these.

Look for the RED WHEEL

WHEN Gas is not available, oil is the most satisfactory cooking-fuel provided you use an oil stove equipped with Lorain High Speed Burners, which apply a clean, odorless, intense heat directly against the cooking-utensil.

LORAIN
HIGH SPEED OIL BURNER

AMERICAN STOVE CO., 829 Chouteau Ave., St. Louis, Mo.
☐ Please send free copy Lorain Roast Beef Dinner Menu with Recipes.
☐ Enclosed find 50c in_____ for copy of Lorain Time and Temperature Cook Book. (Check which you wish.)

*Name*_____ *Street*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

These famous Gas Stoves are equipped with the Lorain Oven Heat Regulator:

CLARK JEWEL—George M. Clark & Co. Div. . . . . Chicago, Ill.
DANGLER—Dangler Stove Company Div. . . . . Cleveland, O.
DIRECT ACTION—National Stove Co. Div. . . . . Lorain, O.
NEW PROCESS—New Process Stove Co. Div. . . . Cleveland, O.
QUICK MEAL—Quick Meal Stove Co. Div. . . . . St. Louis, Mo.
RELIABLE—Reliable Stove Company Div. . . . . Cleveland, O.

Del. 2-25

SUPERSTITIONS ABOUT FOOD

By Flora Rose

Director, School of Home Economics, Cornell University

"WHO'S afraid anyway?" said two youthful experimentalists perched on a log and alternately drinking long drafts of milk and eating large handfuls of sour cherries. They were engaged upon the exciting and possibly dangerous task of putting to the proof mother's statement that these two foods were very bad roommates in the stomach, that they might even cause death. Having eaten their fill of the forbidden fruit, they sat and waited with impatience for results. Nothing happened. Not a pain nor an ache. It was all very ordinary, unromantic and comfortable. The future for them had no terrors as far as milk and sour fruit were concerned. They could present evidence.

This incident does not imply that every one would have come off as easily as these budding scientists, though the vast majority of people brave enough to dare such a test would have experienced the same harmonious conclusion. Rather, its purpose is to point to the fact that there are still many persistent superstitions about what we may or may not eat. Many of these are based on the unhappy experience of a few individuals with digestive peculiarities rather than on the normal performance of the rank and file.

IT IS time to handle some of these superstitions from the positive side and say what may be done by the normal individual. When doing this, we make an exception of the occasional person who may be sensitive to certain foods and who can not do what we shall say can be done. We must remember, however, that there is not a single food from soups to nuts which may not find itself tabu in the dietary of some person who possesses a personal idiosyncrasy for it. Let us be sure, however, that the idiosyncrasy is real and not fancied, and that it is limited to that individual.

For the great majority of us it is safe to eat acid foods in the same meal with milk. Although we are entirely unconscious of the fact, we accomplish just this result every time we drink a glass of milk. When milk reaches the stomach, it is normally curdled by an acid secreted in the digestive juices. Mixing the acid with the milk before eating it may make it possible for persons to digest milk when ordinarily they would experience difficulty in digesting it. It is becoming a common practise to beat orange or lemon or tomato juice into milk or to sour milk artificially for persons with weak digestion. Eating milk or cream on fruit is, therefore, good rather than bad practise.

Acid fruits do not interfere with the digestion of starchy foods. We may go on contentedly eating our simple American breakfast of fruit and cereal and toast with clear consciences and untroubled tummies. Of course if we have digestive tracts which are flabby and ineffectual because we have failed to provide them with materials to build them well and develop their normal functions, this does not hold true.

Milk or cream may be used in coffee or tea without producing products harmful to digestion. In fact, the "melancholy mildness" of milk, which makes it so distasteful to some sturdy but unwise souls that they forget to include enough of it in their daily meals, can be completely forgotten if it is made into the breakfast café au lait—which is half, or less, coffee and the rest hot milk. This is the way in which a large part of continental Europe drinks its milk.

Water may be drunk in generous amounts with the meal. In fact, this is the best time to take the six glasses of water a day which interest in good health necessitates. Instead of interfering with digestion by diluting the digestive juices, water at meal time improves digestion. Of course the lazy habit of using water as a stream to carry food from the mouth to stomach is poor practise and may well be discouraged. But to drink two or three glasses at a meal between sufficiently chewed mouthfuls of food gives encouragement and satisfaction to the stomach.

Pancakes and waffles, muffins and hot biscuit and other hot breads are not in themselves unwholesome foods, but they are in bad odor with the "don't eat" disturbers of peace for several reasons: First, they are soft and lend themselves to being swallowed whole without preliminary chewing. That of course is undesirable. Second, there exists the custom of serving them with much butter and sweet such as sirup, honey or jam, and the tendency is to eat largely of such combinations to the exclusion of other more needed foods. Third, they are by nature very appetizing and tempt people to overeat. Eaten in no larger amounts than plain cold bread and with no greater amounts of fat or sweet, and chewed thoroughly, they should be as easy to digest as cold bread.

Veal is not more indigestible than fish or chicken or beef. In fact, in France it is a delicacy given to invalids as we give chicken in this country. Pork, on the contrary, does require more effort on the part of the stomach, and care must be exercised where the digestion is weak.

Red meat is no more harmful than white meat. In cases where it is advisable to reduce or eliminate meat in the diet, there seems to be no justification for cutting out beef and permitting chicken or fish. One seems to be as bad or as good as the other, and we need not be influenced by its color.

FRUITS do not cause rheumatism. This trouble is now believed to be the result of a specific infection. Certain fruits—in particular, oranges, lemons, grapefruit, apples, pears and peaches—are beneficial rather than harmful in rheumatism. Instead of making the blood acid, they accomplish just the opposite result, which is most helpful to the rheumatic person. Instead of omitting fruit from the diet, seek and eliminate the source of infection.

Mothers who are nursing their babies should have an abundance of fruit. The crank who propagated the theory that acid fruit in the diet of the nursing mother gave the baby colic was guilty of an act of cruelty. One of the several virtues that fruit possesses is that it is a natural laxative. To refuse it to the nursing mother may be a cause rather than a cure for colic in the baby.

It isn't possible in limited space to lay the ghosts of all the most common superstitions about food. There are many more, such as the tabu on eating milk or ice-cream at the same meal as fish, the superstition that fish is a brain food, that raw eggs digest better than cooked eggs, and that fruit is poisonous at night. Often, lacking knowledge of the facts, we are held by the superstition, and when we infringe on its dictates we do it with crossed fingers and a feeling of guilt. The best remedy for this evil is, of course, to find out what constitutes a good selection of food based on tested experience and to follow it.

DO YOU NOURISH YOUR FAMILY or

MERELY "FILL ITS TUMMY?"

There's a great difference between food that merely fills and food that really nourishes. The one satisfies a temporary hunger pain; the other builds sturdy health for the future. If you want to know food values—if you want to serve body-building, vigor-producing meals, write for our Food Value Chart and Score Card. They are yours for the asking—if you'll just send your address and a stamped return envelope to the Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

For all-day energy—this hot breakfast

QUICK QUAKER—cooks in 3 to 5 minutes

That's as quick as toast!

"TO feel better all day long, start with hot oats and milk"—scores of doctors, food editors of magazines and dieticians now are urging for children and grown-ups.

Note, then, how easy now to have this most delicious of hot breakfasts.

Quick Quaker, the new Quaker Oats, cooks in less time than coffee—you can prepare it while the fruit is being served. From the time you start till the time you serve—3 minutes; 5 minutes at the most! All that rich flavor that won the world to Quaker you'll find here, all that smooth deliciousness. The grains are cut before flaking and rolled very thin. They cook faster. That's the only difference.

Try Quick Quaker—you will like it.

Your grocer now has two kinds of Quaker Oats—the kind you have always known and Quick Quaker.

A GIFT to wives and mothers

Ask for it

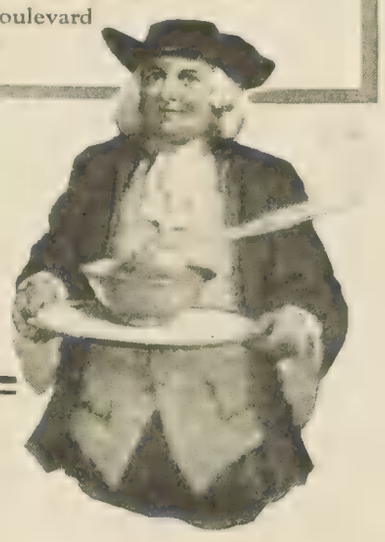
The New Quaker Cook Book is ready.

75 new and delightfully unusual cereal recipes, covering everything from correct soup thickening to altogether the most attractive of cookies and desserts . . . . oats, wheat, rice, corn, barley. Beautifully illustrated in color. Send your name for a copy postpaid.

QUAKER OATS COMPANY
80 East Jackson Boulevard
Chicago

Two kinds now at grocers

Standard full size and weight packages—
Medium: 1¼ pounds;
Large: 3 pounds, 7 oz.



Quaker Oats

The kind you have always known

Quick Quaker

Cooks in 3 to 5 minutes

81%

of representative New England Doctors say

"Cream of Tartar Baking Powder is the most healthful"

2,800 New England doctors were recently asked:

"What kind of baking powder do you consider the best from a health point of view?"

81% of those who answered said: "Cream of Tartar!"

This overwhelming verdict from physicians in favor of this precious ingredient of Royal Baking Powder is of great importance to housekeepers.

Contains no alum—
Leaves no bitter taste

In Royal are perfectly blended soda and pure cream of tartar derived from grapes grown in the famous vineyards of southern Europe. It contains no alum.

For more than three generations Royal Baking Powder has kept to an absolute standard of uniformity. With it you can use the same recipe year after year, and your baking powder will give you identically the same results.

Cakes and biscuits baked with Royal are uniformly light, fluffy, delicious—fine-textured and full flavored!

Royal Baking Powder is the highest quality baking powder in the world—used all over the world—yet enough Royal for a large layer cake costs less than two cents.

ROYAL CINNAMON BUNS—Many people prefer buns that are more crusty than the kind usually served. For crusty buns, bake in individual muffin tins.

PRINCESS CAKE—All fine-grained cakes require careful mixing rather than beating. Beating causes the air bubbles which make this kind of cake coarse-textured.

Send for the famous Royal Cook Book—it's FREE.

Over 350 tested recipes for all kinds of delicious foods including those illustrated here. Fill out the coupon and mail today.

THE ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO.,
109 East 42nd St., New York

Send me free copy of the famous Royal Cook Book containing over 350 delicious recipes.

Name .....

Address .....

For the children's party, a birthday-cake with a row of animal crackers marching around on top is always enthusiastically greeted by the youngsters

SAVE DOLLARS AND HOURS

Hints from successful housewives

If you have discovered some clever little way to save time or labor or fuel or food or anything else connected with housekeeping, tell us about it—and if we can use it in these columns we will pay you five dollars for it. Write on only one side of the paper and address your letter to The "Savers" Editor, THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y. (If you wish to have your suggestion returned in case we can not use it, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope)

FOR THE CHILDREN'S PARTY

For a children's party buy one pound of animal crackers and one pound of Graham crackers. Use two cups of powdered sugar, add two tablespoons of butter, and vanilla to taste, then add enough water or milk to make a very thick stiff paste.

Put a good tablespoon on each Graham cracker, then stand the animal cracker upright in the middle of it. When these dry, they are quite firm. They please the children and make an effective table decoration. A little coloring added to this frosting makes them prettier. A row of the animal crackers marching in solemn procession around the birthday cake is always enthusiastically greeted by the youngsters.—V. S., Beaumont, Calif.

SAVE TIME ON WASH-DAY

A long piece of tape is very useful on wash-day. On it may be strung all the collars, cuffs and small vests which have buttonholes. If all the small articles are gathered together by running the tape through the buttonholes, the housewife is not compelled to search for each one separately and is not so apt to overlook one of them. The tape may be attached to the clothes-line in such a way that each small article does not need a separate clothes-pin.—S. A. C., Mount Lawley, Western Australia.

SAVE TIME PRESSING SEAMS

A medicine-dropper is a very practical device in pressing open seams if the material is of wool or cotton. Fill the medicine-dropper with water and moisten the seam from it before pressing the cloth with a hot iron.—M. Q., Bozeman, Mont.

VEGETABLE CAKES FOR CHILDREN

The importance of vegetables in the diet of children is constantly being brought to the attention of mothers. Some of us, however, have great difficulty in getting our children to eat vegetables. My little girl did not like them, and I was unable to persuade her to eat them until it occurred to me to try serving them like meat-balls. Prepare three or four cooked vegetables, cutting them into small pieces or putting them through the food-chopper. Add bread-crums and a beaten egg. Then shape these into little cakes, dust them with flour and brown them in the oven or fry them in a little fat. The child enjoys vegetables prepared in this way. —Mrs. E. C. B., Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

ADD YEARS TO LINOLEUM

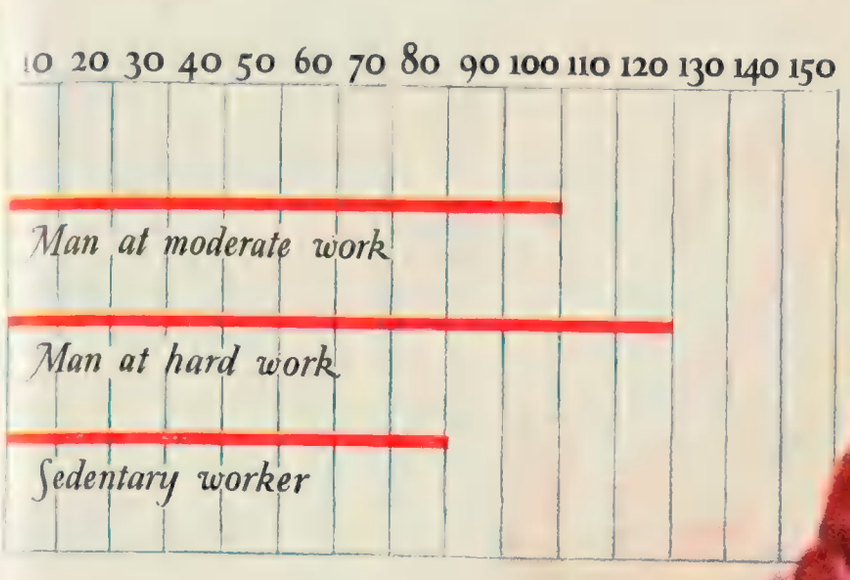
The life of linoleum is greatly lengthened if it is varnished just as soon as it is placed on the floor. This is particularly true of printed linoleum. It is well to varnish it once each year or as soon as the varnish appears to be wearing off. Before applying the varnish, the linoleum should be washed well with soap and water and thoroughly dried. A second coat should not be applied until the first is dry. Inlaid linoleum may be treated the same way.—Mrs. M. B., Long Beach, Calif.

AVOID THE ODOR FROM ONIONS OR FISH

Often the container in which strongly flavored food has been cooked has the odor of the food after the dish is washed. This may be removed by heating a small quantity of vinegar in the covered kettle, letting the vinegar boil for a few minutes. All traces of fish or onion flavor will be removed very quickly.—L. C., Deepwater, W. Va.

SAVE EGG-WHITES

When I have an egg-white left over, I leave it on a plate until it is thoroughly dried, then store away the dried egg in a glass jar. A tablespoon of the powder dissolved in two tablespoons of water will equal one egg-white. This will beat up very well.—Mrs. E. C. H., Los Angeles, Calif.



A NEW USE FOR THE CREAM-DIPPER

The little cream-dipper for removing cream from the top of milk-bottles has a new use in our house. When we make soup and wish to remove the fat immediately, we pour it into milk-bottles where it cools quickly. The fat rises to the top of the bottle and is completely removed from the broth with the help of the cream-dipper. In case of illness, when broth free from fat is needed, this method is especially valuable.—E. F. L., Erie, Pa.

SAVE THE DOUGH FOR ROLLS

When bread is ready to go into the tins in the morning and hot rolls are desired for the evening meal, a part of the dough may be divided into small rolls, each roll dipped in melted butter and placed in a shallow pan and set aside in the refrigerator until evening. The rolls will not rise in the refrigerator, but will come up quickly after taking them from the refrigerator into a warm kitchen. The rolls can be baked in ten or twelve minutes and are ready when the rest of the meal is served.—H. I. F., New London, Conn.

Try this — three mornings for a better day's work

This chart shows the difference in relative food requirements of persons of different occupations as calculated for the Department of Agriculture. In this comparison, a man in full vigor at moderate work has been selected as the unit for comparison and assigned the value 100. Notice how much less the sedentary worker requires—yet too often his diet is the same as that of the moderate or even hard worker!

"MORNING hours are best for work"—you have doubtless heard this all your life.

Why is it then, you sometimes feel dull and sluggish in the morning—just when you ought to be at your best mentally and physically?

Nutrition authorities tell us that 9 times out of 10 the reason we can't get shifted into high gear early in the day is—breakfast!

What kind of a breakfast do you eat? Upon this meal depends much of your morning efficiency.

Why you do not need a heavy breakfast

Your body has rested during the night; it is not in vital need of food. You eat a hearty, heavy breakfast—then sit at a desk all day. What happens?

You have put an unfair burden upon digestion. All the energy you should have for mental work is being wasted in digesting food which your body really does not need. No wonder you feel tired and dull!

What you need is simple, easily digested food in moderate amount—food which will supply you with abundant energy.

Try this 3-morning test

Here is a 3-morning test which will prove to you how a simple energy-breakfast will prime you for the day's run.

Cream of Wheat!—An old-favorite food, rich in energy-nourishment and so easily and quickly digested! Just try it for three mornings and see how much more "fit" you are for the day's work.

Rich in energy—easy to digest

Cream of Wheat, you know, is one of the very richest energy foods. Made of the best hard wheat, it is extremely high in carbohydrates which mean energy units.

It is a very easy food to digest. In fact, digestion of Cream of Wheat begins in the mouth and is quickly finished without taxing the stomach.

Note the three model breakfast menus suggested by noted nutrition authorities. Follow them for just three mornings and you will never again go back to the old heavy breakfast habit.

Delicious to eat, easy to digest—yet so nourishing and satisfying, with ample energy to last the morning through! This is the great combined advantage which Cream of Wheat offers—an advantage not so often found in other foods. Give the Cream of Wheat breakfast a trial; start tomorrow morning. You will have more energy for work.

First morning

Oranges

CREAM OF WHEAT

Sugar—Milk

Milk Toast

Coffee or Cocoa

Second morning

CREAM OF WHEAT with Prunes

Milk

Omelet or Bacon

Toast—Butter

Coffee or Cocoa

Third morning

CREAM OF WHEAT with Baked Apple

Milk

Buttered Toast

Bacon

Coffee or Cocoa

Send for booklet—

50 Ways of Serving Cream of Wheat

There are endless ways to serve Cream of Wheat. Enjoy its rich, creamy flavor blended with fruit—chopped dates, prunes, raisins, figs; or Southern style, with butter and salt. Our recipe booklet gives 50 delicious ways to serve it. Send for it and special booklet on feeding children; both are free.

The Cream of Wheat Company
Dept. 122, Minneapolis, Minnesota

☐ Please send me, free, your recipe booklet, "50 Ways of Serving Cream of Wheat."

☐ Please send me, free, your booklet, "The Important Business of Feeding Children."

☐ Please send me sample box of Cream of Wheat for which I enclose 5c to cover postage.

Name .....

Address .....

Cream of Wheat

The Cream of Wheat Company, Minneapolis, Minnesota
In Canada, made by the Cream of Wheat Company, Winnipeg

© 1925, C of W

Quick salads and desserts are made with oranges. No need to hurry home to prepare these dishes—10 minutes is all the time required.

Orange and Banana Salad

Peel oranges, removing all white skin. Cut into one-fourth inch slices. Place two slices on each lettuce-covered salad plate, cover with two lengthwise quarters of banana which have been covered with lemon juice and rolled in finely ground nuts. Top with slice of orange. Garnish with mayonnaise and maraschino cherry.

Salad in 10 Minutes

By The Clock —Delicious, Tempting Dishes

DON'T let the salad for dinner hurry you home from your teas, luncheons or matinees. Allow ten minutes for any one of these four delicious dishes that we have created for you.

The recipes are by a domestic science expert who is known to hundreds of thousands of women as one of the most practical of housekeepers. She knows the busy woman's problems. She has prepared these recipes to meet a time saving need.

They are simply made with ingredients that you probably have in your kitchen now. And they always work, so you may depend upon them.

They will save you hours of time and trouble. And they are the daintiest of attractive foods.

The base of these salads is luscious oranges. That means they are delicious—with a zestful appetizing tang—and they are healthful too.

For oranges furnish valuable fruit-salts and acids, and the fresh vitamines for which this fruit is famous.

The salts and acids are natural appetizers and digestive aids. They help to promote complete assimilation of the nourishment from other foods.

So oranges—a fine food in themselves—increase the efficiency of entire meals.

That is why dietitians and all other food authorities urge their frequent use.

Remember these facts when you are choosing foods, thinking of the family's health. And then think of your own convenience. These salads that save you so much time render a real dietetic service to your grown-ups and little folk.

* * * *

Here are four recipes. Cut them out and use them. See how good they are and how they save your time.

Also send for our Handy Recipe Card File offered in the coupon below. It contains a variety of other recipes that will save time and add attractiveness to your daily meals.

Orange and Cheese Salad

Peel orange, and divide into segments, rejecting all white inner skin. Arrange on salad plate covered with lettuce. Garnish with balls of cream cheese which have been rolled in grated orange rind.

Orange and Apple Salad

Peel oranges and slice, rejecting all white skin. Cut wedge-shaped slices from red apples, without paring. Arrange on lettuce covered salad plates, using alternate slices of orange and apple.

Orange and Cabbage Salad

Peel oranges, removing all white skin. Cut into one-fourth inch slices and then into segments. Cover salad plates with finely shredded cabbage. Sprinkle with orange segments. Serve with French dressing.

California Sunkist Oranges

Uniformly Good

To be sure of oranges that are uniformly good always ask for SUNKIST. They are the carefully graded oranges from California. The skin comes away readily, the segments separate easily. And the inner orange is practically seedless and so firm and tender that it is ideal to slice or cut.

California produces the only fresh orange that you can get the year 'round, so form the habit of ordering California Sunkist for all your orange uses.

California Oranges are Easy to Peel, Slice and Separate

Mail This Send 10c with this coupon and we will send you a set of 24 beautifully illustrated Sunkist recipe cards. Each dish pictured in colors. Shows how to serve oranges and lemons in the most attractive ways. Just right size for recipe-card box.

For 75c we will send the set of Sunkist recipe cards, neat oak box without any advertising on it, 100 blank cards and 23 index cards, all prepaid.

This set would cost $1.25 in retail stores.

Check the offer you wish to accept and forward with proper amount (stamps or money order). Offer is good at these prices in both United States and Canada.

☐ 24 Sunkist Recipe Cards–10c ☐ Complete Box and File–75c (Including above 24 cards)

Address: California Fruit Growers Exchange
DEPT. 1002, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

FRITTERS OF ODDS AND ENDS

By Freda Winn

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

We know a fritter recipe with a reputation—one we want you and every other DELINEATOR reader to enjoy. It was originated by our own Home-Making director, and has apples in it and spices and—but she wants to tell you about it herself. Write to her care of the Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope

WITH simpler meals in vogue, the fritter has lost some of its prestige as a separate course or entrée in the dinner menu. But it finds a friendly welcome—if of fruit—as a dessert, or if of meat or vegetables—as a main dish in the luncheon or supper menu. It further recommends itself as one of the most attractive, as well as one of the easiest, methods of utilizing small quantities of left-over food. Not only is it possible to combine left-overs that are too small in quantity to be served separately into a perfectly good dish, but the fritter batter acts as an "extender," and in addition serves to make the dish more attractive both in appearance and in flavor.

An objection may be offered because fritters are fried, and therefore difficult to digest; but fried food, if properly cooked and not eaten in too large amounts, is perfectly wholesome and legitimate for any one with a properly functioning digestive tract. Children, and adults who are employed in sedentary occupations or who find difficulty in digesting fat, may be excepted.

The crust of a well-made fritter should be crisp, tender, and light brown. The inside should be thoroughly cooked

There are several ways of making fritter batter. The method used depends on whether the batter is to stand for three hours or is to be used at once, whether a cheap or rich batter is desired, and the type of food to be mixed with the batter. The general proportions, however, are usually the same: one-fourth to one-half as much liquid as flour, one-half a teaspoon of salt, two eggs and two tablespoons of liquid fat, preferably salad-oil, to each cup of flour. If the batter is to be used at once, add a teaspoon of baking-powder for each cup of flour. If the batter is to stand, omit the baking-powder. If fruit is to be added to the batter, add two tablespoons of sugar for each cup of flour used. Approximately one cup of solid material is allowed for each cup of the fritter batter.

Whole milk is the liquid most frequently used in mixing a fritter batter. Other liquids, such as water, stock, clam or oyster liquor, tomato-juice or fruit sirups, may be substituted if desired. Salad-oil is the best fat to use, but if none is at hand substitute melted butter or some other fat, even a little mayonnaise. A fritter batter may be made with no fat at all. It is more tender, however, if the fat is present. If too much fat is used, the fritters are greasy and unpalatable.

The material used to mix with the batter may consist of meat or fish, vegetables or fruit, or combinations of meat and vegetables or of fish and vegetables. They may be seasoned with chopped pimienta or parsley, minced onion or green pepper, a little cheese or peanut butter. In fact, all the leftovers in the refrigerator that are compatible in flavor and texture, when combined with an equal amount of fritter batter, make delicious fritters that can be served either as a main dish for supper or luncheon, or as an entrée for dinner.

In cooking fritters the most important factor is the temperature of the deep fat. The correct temperature is between 350 and 395 degrees Fahrenheit. The time for cooking the average-size fritter is from six to seven minutes. A thermometer is desirable; but if one is not available, a bit of bread can be used for testing the hot fat. When the bread browns in fifty counts, the fat is ready for frying. If the fat is too hot, a hard crust forms on the outside, and while the outside of the fritter becomes harder and darker the inside refuses to cook. On the other hand, if the fat is not hot enough, the fritter refuses to come to the top, absorbs too much grease and remains pale and pasty.

In order to test fritter batter drop a teaspoon of the mixture into the fat. If it holds its shape, it is thick enough to fry. If it spreads, a little more flour should be added.

A good standard fritter batter that may be used when the mixture is to be allowed to stand for two or three hours is the following:

FRITTER BATTER—NUMBER 1

2 egg-yolks
½ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons salad-oil
1 cup flour
½ cup cold water or milk
2 egg-whites beaten to a stiff froth

Add the salt to the eggs and slowly add the oil, stirring constantly. When thoroughly mixed, add the flour and then the water a little at a time. If the batter is not quite stiff enough, add a little more flour at this point. Let the batter stand two or three hours. Then fold in the stiffly beaten egg-whites. The batter is now ready to be mixed with the solid material.

ITALIAN FRITTERS

Trim small pieces of left-over ham, chicken or other cold meat into shape. Season well and dip into the fritter batter (the meat should be completely covered with the batter) and fry in deep fat at 375 degrees Fahrenheit until golden brown in color. Serve with tomato sauce.

CLAM FRITTERS

Use one-half cup of clam liquor instead of milk when making the fritter batter. Add one pint of drained, chopped, seasoned clams and drop by tablespoons into hot fat. Cook as directed.

Concluded on page 54

The oldest beauty secret in the world

The oldest beauty secret in the world is not a magic formula for renewing the skin overnight, or miraculously remoulding the figure in the slender proportions of girlhood. Yet it may be termed a secret, for although it has been used by women in every age, it is still unknown to millions of women who have lost—and are losing—the beauty which should rightfully be theirs.

BEAUTY—real beauty—comes from within. The enemies of beauty—sallowness, a "muddy" and flabby skin, premature wrinkles, dull eyes—these are but surface evidence of conditions which lie deep, beyond the reach of surface treatment.

Beauty is chiefly associated with youth because the vital organs of youth the nerves, the digestive system—are usually unimpaired. Children live normally, in most homes. They are required to eat with discrimination—to observe normal hours of rest. They get regular exercise. They are not allowed artificial stimulants. With careful observance of these tried, common-sense rules they emerge into maturity, beautiful.

Then these restrictions are removed. And youth or most young people—hasten to avail themselves of their new freedom. "Freedom," all too frequently, means disregarding the wise rules of health which have been learned in school, and enforced at home. It means loss of sleep. It means indulgence in any food which tempts the eye—in mealtime beverages formerly denied—beverages which contain caffein. And the fleeting stimulation of caffein is followed, more and more, by headache, sleeplessness, nervousness, digestive disturbances.

A few brief years of beautiful womanhood. Then, for so many, fine lines appear—the tentacles of weariness. Sallowness tarnishes the skin. Flabbiness of flesh and spirit—an indisposition to healthful exercise—have replaced the old resilience and buoyancy. With half of their lives yet before them, these women have lost their most compelling charm—a source of their greatest happiness.

And it could so easily be otherwise! For thousands of women, in this age and every other, by following the safe, simple rules of health they learned in childhood, have retained their freshness and charm straight through the cares and problems of middle life, up to the very threshold of old age.

One of these rules—and a most important one—is to avoid the use of caffein. In 2,000,000 American homes people do this without sacrificing the enjoyment and benefit of a hot mealtime drink, by using Postum.

Postum is made of whole wheat and bran, sweetened a trifle, and skillfully roasted. It contains no trace of caffein or any other artificial stimulant. It has a delightful flavor, the flavor of roasted wheat—and wheat is the best-liked food in the world! The oldest beauty secret is natural living—and that includes living without drug stimulation. Accept the offer of Carrie Blanchard, famous food demonstrator!

Carrie Blanchard's Offer!

"I want you to try Postum for thirty days. I want to start you out on your test by giving you your first week's supply, free, and my own directions for preparing it in the most delicious way.

"You will be glad to know, too, that Postum costs much less per cup.

"Will you send me your name and address? Tell me which kind you prefer—Instant Postum or Postum Cereal (the kind you boil). I'll see that you get the first week's supply right away."

© 1925, P. C. Co.

Postum is made by the Postum Cereal Company, Inc., Battle Creek, Mich., also makers of Post Toasties (Double-thick Corn Flakes), Post's Bran Flakes and Grape Nuts. Your grocer sells Postum in two forms. Instant Postum, made in the cup by adding boiling water, is one of the easiest drinks in the world to prepare. Postum Cereal is also easy to make, but should be boiled 20 minutes.

FREE—MAIL THIS COUPON NOW!

POSTUM CEREAL CO., Inc., Battle Creek, Mich. D. & D. 2-25

I want to make a thirty-day test of Postum. Please send me, without cost or obligation, the first week's supply of

INSTANT POSTUM . . . . . ☐ Check which you prefer
POSTUM CEREAL . . . . . ☐

Name.....

Street.....

City..... State.....

In Canada, address CANADIAN POSTUM CEREAL CO., Ltd., 45 Front St., East, Toronto, Ontario

Does your toothbrush "show pink"?
Read the reasons why.

Party Food or Peasant Fare

—which is better for your gums?

CONSIDERING how little care he devotes to them, the peasant's teeth are in marvelous condition. He eats rough, coarse food which gives his gums plenty of exercise, and his gums are, therefore, firm and healthy.

But this soft, modern food which we eat, these creamy, delicious things which form so great a part of our diet, rob our gums of that blood-rousing stimulation they need to remain in health.

"Pink toothbrush" —look out for it!

As a result of long years of eating soft food, our gums grow soft, flabby, congested. The toothbrush begins to "show pink"—a warning of trouble to come.

The dentists of America are awake to this situation. Specialists in troubles of the gums tell us that, desirable as it is to keep the surface of our teeth clean and white, that alone is not enough. We must make the care of our gums a part of our daily routine.

Why dentists prefer Ipana

Because of its benefits to the gums, Ipana Tooth Paste now enjoys the professional recommendation of thousands of dentists. For Ipana not only cleanses teeth safely and efficiently; it tones and strengthens weak, undernourished gum tissue.

Indeed, many practitioners, in stubborn cases of bleeding gums, direct a gum massage with Ipana after the regular brushing. For it is the presence of ziratol, a valuable antiseptic and hemostatic widely used by dentists, that gives Ipana its remarkable power to help the health of the gums.

Perhaps your own toothbrush seldom "shows pink"—if so, you are fortunate. But you can build no better foundation for the future health of your teeth and your gums than to brush them twice daily with this splendid dentifrice.

Try a tube of Ipana today

If you are troubled by gums that are soft or tender to the brush, go to the drug store today and buy your first tube of Ipana. Before you have finished using it you will note the improvement. And you will be delighted with its smooth, rich consistency, its delicious flavor, and its clean, refreshing taste.

IPANA
TOOTH PASTE

—made by the makers of Sal Hepatica

A trial tube, enough to last you for ten days, will be sent gladly if you will forward coupon below.

Bristol-Myers Co., Dept. B-2
42 Rector Street, New York, N. Y.

Kindly send me a trial tube of IPANA TOOTH PASTE without charge or obligation on my part.

Name ----------

Address ----------

City ---------- State ----------

FRITTERS OF ODDS AND ENDS

Concluded from page 53

SALMON FRITTERS

Add one cup of well-drained minced salmon and one tablespoon of minced pimienta to the fritter batter. Drop by tablespoons or teaspoons, according to size of the fritter desired, into deep fat, and cook at 350 to 395 degrees Fahrenheit for five, six or seven minutes.

Any fish, meat or meat-and-vegetable combination may be utilized in this way. This batter may be used also as a coating for whole pieces of meat, fish, vegetables or fruit.

PRUNE FRITTERS

Remove the seeds from large cooked prunes. Drain well. Fill the center with half a walnut-meat or a piece of candied orange-peel. Dip the prunes in fritter batter Number 1, and fry in deep fat as directed. These fritters are excellent to serve with roast pork.

BANANA FRITTERS

Peel the bananas and cut them in four pieces. Cover them with sugar and orange-juice and let them stand half an hour. Drain. Dip in the fritter batter and fry in deep fat as directed.

CAULIFLOWER FRITTERS

Dip small pieces of left-over cooked cauliflower in fritter batter Number 1 and cook in deep fat as directed.

PEACH FRITTERS

Peel and cut up three peaches. There should be at least enough to make a cupful. Sprinkle the peaches with powdered sugar and mix them with the fritter batter. Drop from a tablespoon into deep fat as directed.

A cheaper fritter batter which uses baking-powder and only one egg may be substituted for Number 1.

FRITTER BATTER—NUMBER 2

1 egg
½ cup milk or other liquid
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking-powder

Beat the egg, add the milk and mix well. Sift the dry ingredients together and mix with the liquid. This batter does not need to stand, but may be used at once.

VARIATIONS

CHEESE FRITTERS

Add one-half to two cups of grated American or Parmesan cheese to the batter and drop by spoonfuls into the hot fat. These are delicious with salads.

PINEAPPLE FRITTERS

Add one and one-half cup of well-chopped pineapple to the fritter batter. The pineapple must be well drained or it will dilute the batter and make it difficult to fry.

FRITTERS OF MASHED VEGETABLES

There are other ways of making fritters, especially if mashed vegetables such as parsnips and turnips are used. In this case it is only necessary to add an egg and one tablespoon of flour to each pint of the mashed vegetable. Season well and drop by spoonfuls into the hot fat and cook until a delicate brown.

ASK US

Ask us anything you want to know about housekeeping and we will answer it personally. From our recent correspondence we publish the following questions and answers as being of general interest to all home-makers

QUESTION: Can the strong flavor of mutton fat be removed so that the fat may be used in cooking?

Answer: Drippings from roast mutton or the fat trimmed from mutton may be made palatable by combining two parts of mutton fat with one part of any soft cooking-fat. Melt these in a double boiler with one-fourth as much skim milk as fat. If a savory fat is desired, add a pinch of sweet herbs tied in a small piece of cheese-cloth. Heat until the fat is melted and then strain through double cheese-cloth placed over a strainer.

The softer fat offsets the hardness of the mutton fat, and the use of milk improves the flavor and texture of the fat. Such a savory fat may be used for frying potatoes, hash or other foods of this type, or it may be used as shortening in corn-meal or Graham mixtures containing molasses.

Before mutton is used, the thin skinlike membrane over the fat should be removed. This will take away much of the objectionable flavor of the fat.

Question: There is a plentiful supply of endive in our markets here, but I do not know how to use it. Is it eaten raw or cooked?

Answer: Endive is one of the finest of salad vegetables. It should be washed and chilled, and is usually served with a French dressing. Grated or crumbled cheese, a little Worcestershire sauce or a relish may be added to the dressing for variety. Although most often eaten raw because of its delicacy, it may be steamed or cooked as celery and served with melted butter or with a cream sauce.

Question: I am an inexperienced cook. My mother seemed always to know when her cakes and bread were done. Is there any way I can gain this knowledge?

Answer: If you can provide yourself with an oven-thermometer or an oven temperature-control, THE DELINEATOR'S temperature chart will show you how long cakes and breads of different types should be baked and at what temperatures.

Other tests for telling when cakes and bread are done are:

1. The color should be a rich golden brown.
2. The dough should shrink away from the sides of the pan.
3. A clean toothpick inserted into the dough should come out free from any particles of the mixture or any stickiness.
4. A cake that is done, when pressed gently on the top, should spring back without leaving any impression.
5. A loaf of well-baked bread gives a hollow sound when tapped on the upper crust.

Question: We have recently begun using whole-wheat bread and have become very fond of it, but I do not know what to do with the crums. I have even more accumulating than when I used white bread and I can't seem to use them in the same way. Can you suggest uses for them?

Answer: If you toast the whole-wheat crums in the oven until they are crisp and lightly browned, you will find that they have a delicious nutty flavor. Used in mousses and ice-creams and in some confections, they simulate the effect of nuts. A macaroon may be made by substituting the browned crums for coconut. Heated with one tablespoon of butter to each cup of crums, they are excellent if sprinkled over creamed meat or fish, scalloped tomatoes or vegetables or any dish containing cheese sauces. In date, fig or other fruit or suet puddings, the whole-wheat crums are even better than white-bread crums.

Question: A friend of mine often talks about a spatula. Will you please say what this device is and for what it is used?

Answer: A spatula is a long, flexible, double-edged knife, dull and round pointed. It is very useful because of its length, thinness and flexibility. With it cakes and cookies may be lifted from tins, mixtures cleaned from bowls, icings spread and foods lifted and turned while cooking.

First honors for this Eagle Brand boy

LEROY GORDON ROSS, JR., Son of Mr. and Mrs. L. G. Ross
1375 Josephine Street, Denver, Colo.

THIS smiling little chap—an Eagle Brand boy—is the proud winner of the silver cup in the 1923 Denver Health Show.

The Bureau of Health wrote to his mother, "It will be gratifying to you to learn that Leroy Gordon Ross, Jr., received the highest rating of any of the several hundred children recently examined in the Better Babies Contest held in connection with the Denver Health Show. He received the excellent score of 99.2%."

Leroy was raised on Borden's Eagle Brand, which Mrs. Ross feels deserves a generous share of the credit for his present fine health. "We advise the use of Eagle Brand every time," she writes, "when mothers are unable to nurse their babies."

If you cannot nurse your baby, or if he isn't thriving on his present food, start him today on Eagle Brand.

For Eagle Brand is pure whole milk—a child's natural food—combined with refined sugar in a way that makes it exceptionally digestible. Even the most delicate baby stomach can assimilate it easily. Eagle Brand contains the necessary food properties for healthy growth, and all three vitamins, too. And—most important of all—it is absolutely safe and clean. Every can is the same, no matter where you buy it.

Some interesting testimonials from other mothers like Mrs. Ross are published in a new booklet called What Other Mothers Say.

You'll want to get acquainted with these other mothers—to hear of their experiences. Feeding charts for infants up to 1 year, and for children from 1 to 2 years, are included in the book.

General information on the care of your baby is supplied in another book, Baby's Welfare, written for you by a physician. Send in the coupon below and you can get both books free. The Borden Company, 503 Borden Building, 350 Madison Ave., New York N. Y.

Borden's
EAGLE BRAND
CONDENSED MILK

THE BABY WELFARE
DEPT.

The Borden Co.
503 Borden Bldg.
350 Madison Ave.
New York, N. Y.

Please send me my free copies of What Other Mothers Say and Baby's Welfare.

Name.....

Address.....

Why I do not flavor my Gelatine! —Mrs. Knox

MANY, many women have written me asking why I do not add flavoring and sweetening to Knox Sparkling Gelatine. The simple answer is that if I did, some of the most valuable things about Knox Gelatine would be destroyed.

It has always been my aim to make a gelatine so pure, so clean, so wholesome that it would be not only a standard product but a real necessity in every kitchen where the best of foods are used. Knox Sparkling Gelatine is as pure as modern science knows how to make it—no hands touch it,—even the air that blows over it is first washed free of impurities.

I have never been willing to add artificial or so-called fruit flavors to this pure natural gelatine—I have always believed that women wanted the best for their families and when they made delicious gelatine desserts and salads that they would agree with me these should be made of real fruit and good vegetables, so their families would get the full food value.

And then came the scientific discoveries that made me very happy indeed that I had never flavored my gelatine.

It was proved that pure, unflavored gelatine added to milk will increase the nourishment obtainable from that milk by about 23%. Just think what that means to babies and undernourished children, and how proud I was that those gelatine discoveries were made with Knox Sparkling Gelatine. If Knox Gelatine were ready-flavored it would not be suitable for infant feeding because the acid flavoring might curdle the milk instead of making it more digestible.

Moreover, the scientists found that pure unflavored gelatine makes all the foods it is combined with easier to digest. That means that every man, woman, and child needs pure gelatine in the daily diet, and because Knox Sparkling Gelatine is unflavored it can be used in an endless variety of ways so that no one ever grows tired of it.

My assistants and myself are continually creating new recipes which women will enjoy making, and now that doctors are using Knox Gelatine in babies' formulas and recommending it for special diets, it won't be long before women everywhere will understand how much it means to them for me to keep Knox Sparkling Gelatine pure and unflavored.

KNOX
SPARKLING
GELATINE
"The Highest Quality for Health"

How to add gelatine to cow's milk:
Soak for ten minutes one level tablespoonful of Knox Sparkling Gelatine in ½ cup of cold milk taken from a quart of milk; cover while soaking; then place the cup in boiling water, stirring until gelatine is fully dissolved; add this dissolved gelatine to the quart of cold milk from which it was taken. For smaller quantities of milk reduce gelatine in proportion. In infant feeding, add the dissolved gelatine to the regular formula prescribed by the physician.

Plain Sparkling Granulated Gelatine for general use

Write for these Valuable Books—Free recipe books, with a book on the "Health Value of Gelatine" will be sent upon request, if you will send 4c for postage and mention your grocer's name.

Same Sparkling Gelatine with Lemon Flavoring in separate envelope, but not mixed with the gelatine

CHARLES B. KNOX GELATINE CO., 166 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N. Y.

A chowder must be savory. To develop this quality, slice the vegetables finely and sauté in fat until a delicate brown before cooking

SAVORY CHOWDERS FOR NIPPING DAYS

By Winifred Moses

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

"Um! what smells so good?" your family ask as they sit down to a supper of steaming hot chowder and "crispy" hardtack. And one by one up come the bowls for "More, please!" Chowders are just the thing these chilly days and we know a number of attractive variations which we'll gladly send you without charge. Write to the Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped reply envelope

ONE of our present-day epicures when asked to name the most popular dish of modern times replied without a moment's hesitation, "Fish chowder."

While this statement may be greeted with a smile of incredulity from the uninitiated, it will receive the hearty applause of every man, woman or child who has had the good fortune to experience the gastronomic thrill of the tasty dish with its clams freshly dug from the sand or fish just dragged from the sea, or been greeted by the appetizing odors of a mulligan or venison chowder cooking on a camp fire after a long day in the open.

It has been said that not every one can make a chowder. But at least every one can learn to make one, and with little difficulty, for it is an easy dish to prepare. There is really no rigid recipe for a chowder. Each person usually has his favorite, which he will insist is superior to all others. He also has his idiosyncracies as to whether the vegetables shall be chopped very small, cut into dice, or prepared in large slices; as to whether the chowder shall be thin or thick; and whether it shall be served with or without ship's biscuit, hardtack or Boston crackers.

In the following recipes the vegetables are sliced and the meat or fish cut in fairly large pieces, but the ingredients may be diced or chopped, if that is the method preferred.

FRESH-FISH CHOWDER

3 pounds fish
¼ pound salt pork or bacon
2 onions
1 quart diced potatoes
Salt
Pepper
1 tablespoon chopped parsley
¼ cup butter
¼ cup flour (may be omitted)
3 cups milk (scalded)
Half a bay-leaf

Fish fresh from the sea and clams newly dug make the best chowders. In preparing a fish chowder, first remove the fish from the bones and cut it in small chunks. Then cover the bones and skin with cold water, let them come to a boil and simmer for one-half hour.

Dice the pork and try it out. Add the onions cut in slices and cook them for a few minutes. Add the potatoes, salt, pepper and chopped parsley. Strain the water in which the fish has simmered and pour the liquid over the mixture. Cook for ten minutes, then add the fish and cook it until it is tender. Add the milk, thickened with the butter and flour if desired, and serve with or without Boston crackers.

Any kind of meat may be substituted for fish in making chowder.

CHICKEN À LA CHAUDIÈRE

1 fowl
2 slices bacon
2 onions sliced
1 pint tomatoes
2 quarts water
4 ears corn
½ cup butter
3 teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon pepper
Half a bay-leaf

Clean the fowl and cut it up as for a fricassee. Put it in a pot, add the bacon, onion, tomatoes (either a can of tomatoe soup or six small tomatoes peeled and sliced) and the hot water. Add the salt, pepper and bay-leaf. Simmer until the fowl is tender. Take it from the pot and remove the bones and gristle. Cut the fowl in small pieces and return it to the pot. Cut the kernels of the corn from the cob, scrape it, add the corn and the scrapings and cook twenty minutes longer. Remove the slices of bacon, cream the butter with two tablespoons of flour, moisten it with a little of the gravy and add it to the chowder, mixing it well with the rest of the gravy. Let it boil up once and serve.

This recipe may be varied by substituting one-half a cup of bread-crums for the flour if desired.

All chowders provide an excellent means of adding vegetables to the diet.

VEGETABLE CHOWDER

⅓ pound bacon
3 onions
1 turnip
3 carrots
3 green peppers
3 tablespoons parsley
2 tablespoons salt
Pepper
Bay-leaf
4 potatoes
1 tablespoon flour
2 tablespoons butter
1 pint hot milk or cream

Try out the bacon. Remove it from the fat and save it to serve with the chowder later. Dice the onions and add to the fat. Cook for about five minutes, with occasional stirring to prevent them from burning. First add the turnips cut into dice, then the carrots prepared in the same way. Then add the finely minced parsley, and green peppers, the salt, pepper and bay-leaf, and, last of all, the potatoes cut into dice. Cover the mixture and let it simmer until the turnips and carrots are done; this will take about one hour. Cream the butter and flour, moisten them with the hot milk and add to the vegetable mixture. Cook for a moment, then add the hot milk. Serve with toasted pilot bread or Boston crackers and the crisp hot bacon.

This chowder may be varied by adding a pint of fresh string-beans, Lima beans or corn. If canned vegetables are used in this variation dish, add them just before serving. It may also be prepared with tomatoes, omitting the milk.

Slices of salt pork may be substituted for the bacon.

—and then we label it HEINZ

one of the

57

Throughout fifty-five years of achievement in the making of wholesome, nourishing foods, the name Heinz has come to be more than a designation.

It has come to mean a standard of quality, and as such is our greatest asset, to be safeguarded at all times, at all costs.

Every individual package is the gauge of the other millions of packages of Heinz 57 Varieties of Pure Food Products made for world consumption. There must never be the least deviation in quality. To slight one would be to belittle all.

Therefore the label goes on last. It is our own stamp of approval and your assurance that your money could buy nothing better.

Of all the things we make there is no Variety that is better known than HEINZ TOMATO KETCHUP. It is different—it is better—it is the best that can be made.

Our Name Is Our Greatest Asset

When you come to Pittsburgh visit the Heinz kitchens

H. J. HEINZ COMPANY

One spoonful of VINEGAR or LEMON JUICE

SALT and PEPPER to taste

Three spoonfuls of
WESSON OIL

MIX WELL—THAT'S all there is to FRENCH DRESSING—unless you choose to add a little chopped onion or crumbled cheese or the yolk of a hard boiled egg or chives or mustard or Worcestershire Sauce or some other seasoning. On lettuce, fruit or cold vegetables, it is the simplest and at the same time the most sophisticated of all salad dressings.

[Did you ever cook or fry with a fat as good as Wesson Oil? It's worth trying.]

A SUN-PORCH FOR WINTER

By Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders
Head of the Department of House Decoration

If you would like to have a cozy sun-room and don't know quite how to go about making it, write Mrs. Sanders for advice. She will tell you how to enclose it and how to decorate it. Her personal attention, without charge, is always yours for the asking. Address her at THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped reply envelope

IN THE Winter-time, when vitality is low, every one needs the healthful radiance of sunshine. People who possess a sun-room where they can bask in warmth and cheery comfort on cold, nipping days are fortunate indeed. Many a less lucky home-maker has cleverly made up the lack of this welcome convenience by snugly enclosing her Summer porch or furnishing a particularly sunny room with bright decorations.

Modern American home-building proves that sun-porches have come to be regarded as indispensable, but to simplify types this innovation must be divided into two classes: first, the ordinary outdoor porch which is glassed in during the Winter and provided with heating arrangements; and second, the sun-room, which in reality is an ordinary room supplied with ample window-space to admit both sunshine and air. Whichever type one may possess, it is most certainly a comfort and source of pleasure to its owner; and the home-maker's natural desire is that it always appear at its best.

This delightful rustic porch is bounded by a stone railing surmounted by outward-swinging window-sash

Glazed chintz window-shades over sliding sash give an indoor aspect to this erstwhile sleeping-porch

Persons who live in houses with open porches have a little more difficult and expensive undertaking to make a snug sun-room than have those people who merely develop an already built-in sun-room. First, all outside porches must be made weather-proof and also be heated before they can be considered livable. This means that they must be equipped with a portable sash and with an adjustable radiator or other heating arrangement before decorative furnishings can be considered.

Types of adjustable sash vary, depending upon the architecture and the size of the porch to be enclosed. In the case of temporary enclosures, it is important to have the sash of a size that can be easily handled, since a large and cumbersome sash is not only inconvenient to assemble or remove, but also is likely to sag and warp. Small panes of glass in any size sash are preferable to large ones, not only for economy in replacement but for scale in design. According to the size of the sash, so will the height of these small panes vary, ranging from eight to fourteen inches. A small sash will need the smaller size and a larger sash in proportion.

All suitable sashes fulfil the function of admitting sunshine and air; but there are several types of sash arrangements possible, one of which is certain to appeal to every home-owner.

Both the ordinary double-hung sash and the outward-swinging and casement sash are deservedly popular. Then there is the inward-swinging sash, which is often chosen because it facilitates both screening and curtaining.

The square drop-sash, which never rattles and has no hinges, and which, when in place on the sill, is held by two spring catches, never disturbs any outside screening. It slides up and down in two grooves between the outside porch-rail and an inside solid rail of matched boards. This type of sash is best adjusted over and against a solid porch-rail of matched siding or stucco, and not over an open balustrade. When an open balustrade exists, it is most desirable to remove it and adjust a full-length sash to the floor; otherwise it will be necessary to back the balustrade with sections of solid boarding and the top rail with sills—an arrangement which does not add beauty to the house. If, however, the porch is large enough to permit a full-length sash to be installed behind and entirely separate from the balustrade, this may be done—though it is seldom artistic.

The triple-hung sash, which works on the

Concluded on page 60

You'll admire this beautiful piano

the minute you see it. Everyone does! The greatest improvement of our time in pianos, this wonderful new instrument has many distinctive musical features. There is nothing else like it.

STORY & CLARK REPRO-PHRASO

(reproducing) (phrasing)

For years Story & Clark have been at work on this remarkable invention—an invention that makes it possible for you, even if you do not know a single note of music, to sit down at the piano and play artistically to your heart's content. Think of it! Perhaps the dream of a lifetime come true. And the price and terms are well within your purse, for the Repro-Phraso costs no more than the ordinary old-model player piano of high quality. Story & Clark are exclusive manufacturers of the beautiful Repro-Phraso.

The Repro-Phraso requires no special music rolls—you can play any 88-note music roll on this instrument.

But remember—you do the playing, you create the melody—and without tedious lessons and long hours of finger exercises. The Repro-Phraso remains inanimate until you sit before it and use the responsive mechanism, and enjoy the thrill of playing according to your whim and moods. And you play as well as if you had been playing the piano for years. Does it seem incredible? Go to your nearest Story & Clark dealer and see and hear for yourself.

Try the Repro-Phraso—learn for the first time perhaps the joy of creating your own music. You'll find the Repro-Phraso the piano you have always longed to own.

You can purchase one on terms within your income and your present piano will be taken in part payment.

Price $650 and upward. Freight added.

Instruments of finest quality since 1857

The Story & Clark Piano Company

General Offices 315-317 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

33 West 57th Street, New York City
1246 Washington Boulevard, Detroit 1105 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

If you are a prospective purchaser of a piano or a player piano, we will gladly send you a beautiful brochure—FREE. Story & Clark Piano Company, Dept. D D F, 315-317 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois. Please send me the brochure showing the various styles of your instruments, and the name of your nearest dealer, because I am interested in buying a grand ☐ an upright ☐ a player piano ☐ the Repro-Phraso ☐. (Please print name and address.)

*Name*_____ *Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

Three ways to be sure of getting genuine Kirsch Curtain Rods

1 3-Color Box — 2 Beautiful StippleTone Finish — 3 Name "Kirsch" on Rod

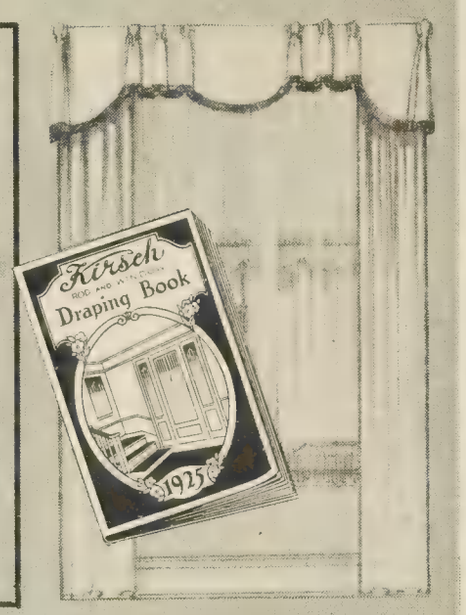
WHEN you ask for "Kirsch" Rods you are now sure to get the genuine. Unless the name "Kirsch" is on the box and on the rod, it's an imitation.

You also recognize instantly the beautiful StippleTone finish. It is distinctly different—rich and silk-like—more artistic and durable.

Kirsch Curtain Rods offer you the utmost in value and aid in artistic window draping. Easy to put up, easy to take down; a fit for every window; a fixture for every effect. The rods tilt on and off the patented Snug-fit brackets, and never come down accidentally.

"There is no substitute for Kirsch Quality and Service"



Look for the 3-color box—StippleTone finish—Name "Kirsch" on Rod

KIRSCH MFG. CO., 14 Prospect Ave., STURGIS, MICH., U.S.A.
Kirsch Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., 200 Buller St., Woodstock, Ontario

FREE
Wonderful Book of Window Draping Helps

A 32-page book packed with practical aid for window draping. Ideas for every room and every kind of window—single, double, triple, bay, casement, odd shaped windows and doors, French doors, etc. 24 color schemes for living rooms, dining rooms, bedrooms, sun rooms, etc. Instructions for measuring windows, making valances and headings. How to sew on Kirsch hooks and rings; how to put up draw curtains on Kirsch rods. It's our 9th annual book—a book of real service.

If the book doesn't give all needed help, write the Kirsch Interior Decoration Service Bureau.

A SUN-PORCH FOR WINTER

Concluded from page 59

same principle as the double-hung sash but permits a greater variety of openings, can be successfully installed about a porch which has no railing or balustrade. A wood framing which can be made in sections is necessary to hold the windows.

To assist in making a temporary sash air-tight and water-proof, moldings at the top and bottom, both inside and out, are effective. Weather-stripping will serve the same purpose if tacked around the sash.

If the floor is of wood and is not in a satisfactory air-tight condition, linoleum in large black-and-white or gray-and-black squares or in plain colors may be laid over it with very happy results. Floors of cement, tile or brick need only rugs. Floor-coverings of grass or linen fiber in natural, string or heather colors make excellent backgrounds for brilliantly painted reed, willow or wicker furniture.

The walls of an enclosed porch must necessarily be left the same color as the exterior of the house, for when the window-sash is removed they again become part of the out-of-doors. Whether the walls are of rough stucco or of clapboard, a delicate lattice in square, fan-shaped or arched designs will increase the garden atmosphere. Painted an apple green or soft blue, and with English ivy or some other vine trained against it, this lattice will relieve the harsh, unbroken wall-space of the house itself.

The shape of the room controls the placing of the trellis or latticework. Sometimes when there are pillars or broad posts, lattice may be arranged against them with a flower-box placed beneath. Ferns, geraniums and ivy make a good combination to plant in such a box. If a quantity of lattice is desired, it may be painted in a two-tone color scheme to correspond with two-color woven reed furniture.

To "antique" the lattice or to make it correspond with yellow and green painted wicker furniture, one would need first to apply two coats of yellow paint. Let these dry, then add a third coat of green paint and wipe this off while still wet with a soft cloth. This leaves a decided greenishness in all the joints and a faint etched effect over the whole. Any bright new paint on the walls, woodwork or furniture may be rubbed down in this manner to give it an antique finish.

Reed, wicker and willow furniture, with possibly a few painted pieces, are the types most practical and attractive for furnishing sun-rooms. Strong sunlight and dampness have no bad effects upon them.

Besides the sets of wicker, there are individual pieces, such as the hour-glass or Canton type of wicker chair, the painted wood table, the chaise longue and the lamp-stand which are pleasing and at the same time a little more individual. For flowers, fern-boxes and large oil-jars of stone, terra-cotta or composition material are as interesting as wicker stands or as tin or wooden containers.

Curtaining the sun-room is always a problem. The window arrangements and rain, wind and sun are usually not helpful to the decorator. Materials should be either of the sunfast variety, of heavy unbleached muslin,

Here accordion blinds temper the sun's glare and ivy climbs comfortably over the decorative lattice

From a decidedly open porch was evolved this inviting sun-room, which serves also as a living-room of casement or crinkled Austrian cloth, or of sateen, with enough body to make them opaque so they will act also as shades when pulled across on a draw-cord arrangement. Cretonne, glazed chintz and cambric or Holland roller-shades may also be used. These shut out the world entirely; and when they are used draperies may be stationary.

The full-length or three-quarter sash is most successfully curtained with two pairs of curtains to a section, an upper and a lower pair, each provided with a draw-cord equipment so that the upper pair when pulled across may serve to temper the glare, while the lower pair may be pulled aside when one wishes to enjoy the view beyond.

In cases of extremely sunny exposure, accordion folding blinds are worthy of consideration. These eliminate the use of awnings in Summer and permit the use of bright-colored cretonne or mohair draperies in Winter.

And here is a splendid place for the aquarium, which, with its water plants and bright fish, is a constant source of pleasure to old and young.

Hospitable accessories, such as well-filled sofa-cushions, books and magazines, a joyful songster in a wicker or colorful wire cage, a tea-wagon or a muffin-stand to serve a tempting beverage to the unexpected caller, these bits of comfort and pleasure should also find their way among other sun-porch furnishings in order to make an altogether livable room.

Why have an extra bedroom?

The newest homes are arranged a more convenient way

ONE OF THE INTERIORS SHOWN IN THE "KROEHLER BOOK OF LIVING ROOM ARRANGEMENTS"

An interesting color scheme has been developed for this living room. The walls are finished in ivory, with the woodwork and mantel finished several shades darker and the floor covered with a heavy gray-green carpet to offset the height of the ceiling.

The chairs, a part of the Kroehler Suite, are upholstered in plain gray-green damask. The same tone may be chosen for the curtains of figured damask.

The Kroehler Davenport Bed is covered with a tête-de-negre fabric, with cushions of orange and henna for contrast. The same notes of henna and orange used in small spots—lamp shades and tassels, for example—afford relief from the general note of green.

This interior is taken from the "Kroehler Book of Living Room Arrangements," a new booklet, prepared under the direction of an experienced interior decorator. A copy will be sent you on request.

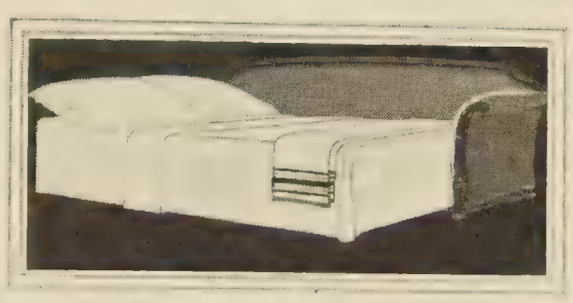
YOU can't help noticing it—the change that has come about in people's ideas of home building. A few years ago all your friends seemed to think that the chief mark of affluence was the size of one's house. Now, apparently, the smaller one is, the smaller one's home.

Today, for example, at Virginia's luncheon. So many of the women were talking about their new homes. But, strange to say, there was no mention of ten- and twelve-room houses. Every house, it seemed, was planned on the most compact scale imaginable.

Reason enough for it, of course. With the cost of building so great, and the servant problem so increasingly hopeless, it is no wonder that even the smartest homes are being built to provide the utmost possible comfort with the least possible care.

VERY cleverly they manage—these wise young home owners—to eliminate all the extra space that eats so voraciously into building costs and furnishing budgets, and that adds a daily burden in the way of caretaking. Where do they make their biggest saving? In the bedroom space.

It's wonderfully interesting the way they arrange for one less bedroom than you would expect. They don't really do without that bedroom. They merely smuggle it into the house, in the guise of a Kroehler Davenport Bed.



Everyone, it seems, has a Kroehler these days. Of course, you don't realize it, for the lovely Kroehler Davenport Beds that you see everywhere look just like any other fine davenport. They have the same low, easy lines, the same luxuriously soft cushions, the same wide, loungy seat. And they are upholstered just as are all the finest davenports, in the rich fabrics, the lovely soft colorings, that mark the most correct living-room pieces.

YOU see one in Doris' tiny apartment, in Mary's remodeled house, in Louise's redecorated living room. There are handsome, deep-cushioned chairs to match. You think Doris and Mary and Louise lucky girls to have such charming, new pieces. And you never dream that hidden under the soft-cushioned seat of the davenport is the wide, roomy, wonderfully comfortable bed that solves their extra bedroom problem.

How sensible it is—this universal vogue of the Kroehler! Think how much it is saving every month for thousands of people in crowded homes or small apartments—how much extra work every week in the care of an additional room. Think how neatly it would solve your own extra bedroom difficulty.

Perhaps you need this additional sleeping space only for emergency use. Perhaps you need it every night. But whenever you require it, this convenient bed is ready for your use.

It can be made in the morning and folded away beneath the davenport seat. When bedtime comes, a single, easy motion, reveals this comfortable sleeping space with covers all in place.

The Invisible Bedroom

A REAL full-size bed it is. The mattress is thick and soft. The springs are strong but yielding.

For style, you can choose an interesting period design or a soft-cushioned, overstuffed pattern. For upholstery, there are all the good-looking, long-wearing fabrics that fashion approves—silk damask, tapestry, mohair, Chase Velmo, or Baker Cut Pattern Velour, leather or Chase Leatherwove.

Upon the sound construction and hidden quality built into your davenport depend its long life and satisfying service. In the Kroehler Davenport Bed you will find a frame of kiln-dried hardwood; seat springs of heavy, high-carbon wire, flexibly interlocked; spring edges doubly stuffed and stitched. The back is of the soft pillow-spring type; the filling is of germ-cured flax fiber, best moss and cotton; the upholstery is moth-proofed. The seat cushions are filled with closely assembled, fine wire coil springs, made from specially drawn, high-carbon wire, and padded with clean, white, felted cotton. The folding bed frame is all-steel, fitted with sagless cable fabric and helical springs.

DEALERS everywhere sell Kroehler Davenport Beds and Suites for cash or on easy payments. The prices are very moderate. Only the fact that they are made by the largest manufacturer of upholstered furniture in the country, with purchasing power that permits them to secure raw materials at the lowest possible figure, and manufacturing facilities that allow them to keep production costs at the lowest possible point, enables you to have this beautiful furniture at a price so low.

Be sure the Kroehler name plate is on the back of the davenport bed suite you buy. If you do not know where to find Kroehler Davenport Beds and matching chairs, write us. We will send you the name of the nearest dealer and the "Kroehler Book of Living Room Arrangements," a really fascinating book of interiors, showing the clever, new ideas in living-room arrangement. You will find in it endless useable suggestions for the arrangement, furnishing and color scheme of your own living room.

Address Kroehler Mfg. Co., Chicago, or Stratford, Ontario. Factories at Kankakee, Ill., Bradley, Ill., Naperville, Ill., Binghamton, N. Y., Dallas, Texas, Los Angeles, Calif., San Francisco, Calif. Canadian Factory, Stratford, Ont.

KROEHLER
Davenport Bed

You Can't Hold the Burtons Back These Days

"And my touchdown won the game!"

IT all started with Ralph. You know for some reason he would never go to a doctor. But I could always remember how healthy and ambitious he had been when we were first married. It worried me more and more, as years went by, to see the gradual change in his health and spirits. He was not getting ahead in business. He was often cross around the house, too. And it might have been the wŏrry, but I found myself meeting his bad humor at least half way. The whole Burton family, children and all, seemed to be in a slump.

Finally Ralph came home one day with a worse headache than usual. It was so bad that I quietly got the doctor in. It was the luckiest thing I ever did. I want to tell you that the three dollars I paid the doctor that day bought this house and our automobile. More than that, it bought happiness on top of success, for every one of us.

Dr. Harvey asked a good many questions. Finally he said, "Mr. Burton, you've got, and have had for some time, a more or less constant auto-intoxication. In plain English, self-poisoning. This condition is one of the commonest and yet most serious we have to treat. It comes, of course, from chronic sluggishness of the intestines. The blood picks up poisons from the food waste and carries them to every cell in the body.

"Any part of the body may be affected, from the heart itself to the outside skin. Naturally the strongest attack of these poisons is on the weakest part in your system. It may be the kidneys, the heart, the stomach, or even the brain that will show the effects first. But sooner or later, if the condition is not corrected, you get some vital disease.

"Over seventy-five per cent of human illness originates in the intestinal tract. The way to correct it is to remove the cause, which is merely chronic delay in the passage of the food waste out of the body. You must get clean and stay clean, inside." He warned us against castor oil, pills, salts and mineral waters—said they did more harm than good in the long run—and so on. I took in every word.

"Lubrication is the best way to get internal cleanliness," he said. "Take Nujol. Nujol isn't a medicine; it's simply a lubricant. It lubricates and softens the food waste and insures regular and thorough elimination."

So Ralph started to take Nujol. I could see such an improvement that pretty soon I decided to take it myself and give it regularly to the children. I could see that both Junior and Alice, and I even more so, were in danger of this same auto-intoxication. But that was six years ago, and we've hardly had a sick day since.

Nujol made a big difference in the Burton family. Ralph has m .e good in business, and is in line for even bigger things. Junior picked up in his studies and Alice has had two mid-year promotions since she started in. As for myself, my looks have improved and I certainly am far healthier and happier than I used to be. Housework isn't drudgery to me now and I have lots more time and strength for social affairs.

As Mother said the other day, "You simply can't hold the Burtons back these days."

Mothers

Have your children take Nujol. Nujol is not a laxative—it is merely a lubricant. Like pure water, Nujol is harmless. Hospitals use it. Physicians all over the world recommend it for infants and children and people of all ages.

Nujol should be taken as regularly as you wash your face or brush your teeth. Nujol makes internal cleanliness a habit—the healthiest habit in the world. For sale by all druggists. Made by Nujol Laboratories, Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey).

Tested and Approved by the Good Housekeeping Bureau of Foods, Sanitation and Health

"Regular as Clockwork"

Nujol

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

For Internal Cleanliness

4-DAY TRIAL FREE!

Nujol, Room 802-S, 7 Hanover Sq., N. Y.

For this coupon and 10c (stamps or coin) to cover packing and postage, send trial bottle and 16 page booklet, "Internal Cleanliness." (For booklet only, check here ☐ and send without money.)

Name.....

Address.....

If you would have fine macaroni, cook it well—but don't overcook it—drain and rinse it thoroughly by running cold water through it

WHEN AMERICA EATS MACARONI

By Freda Winn

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

Macaroni with a sauce of just the right flavoring makes a most delicious dish—and one that is easy to prepare. THE DELINEATOR has discovered some particularly appetizing sauce piquant with onion and tomato, curry or mushrooms. We will gladly mail you these recipes if you will send a stamped envelope to the Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

MACARONI and the other members of that old Italian family—spaghetti and vermicelli, are foods that have not been duly appreciated in this country. They are generally considered, both by the average housewife and the general public, as dishes peculiarly suited and adapted to Italy.

Macaroni, however, has many things to recommend it. It is easy to prepare. It is rich in both protein and starch. It is mild in flavor, and thus may be used successfully with highly flavored foods. It combines well with a great variety of sauces, meats and fish, and may be concocted into many appetizing and attractive dishes.

The success of macaroni dishes depends largely upon the selection of a good brand of macaroni, the right method of cooking, and proper seasoning.

If macaroni, when properly cooked, becomes sticky, split and broken, it has been manufactured from poor flour or has not been cured properly. It is really a simple matter to cook macaroni, but it is often done carelessly.

Macaroni should be broken into convenient lengths, usually in pieces about one inch long, and dropped into a saucepan containing at least two quarts of rapidly boiling salted water. (One teaspoon of salt for each quart of water.) The rapid boiling of the water prevents the macaroni from sticking together or to the bottom of the pan. It should not be stirred during the cooking process, since this has a tendency to make it sticky. The macaroni should be cooked until tender, but not too soft, about twenty minutes, or longer if necessary. This is where the Italian cook excels. He never allows the macaroni to be overcooked. When the macaroni is done, it is drained and then rinsed in cold water. It is now ready to be reheated and combined with cheese, sauce, meat or fish.

Probably the simplest method of serving macaroni as well as one of the most popular is with cheese. In making this dish, it is well to remember to use plenty of both butter or some other savory fat and grated cheese.

MACARONI WITH CHEESE

Cook one cup of macaroni as directed above (one cup of macaroni broken in pieces gives about two and one-half cups of cooked macaroni). Reheat the macaroni over hot water, add from two to four tablespoons of butter or some other savory fat and one-half to one cup of grated, crumbled or shaved cheese. Stir together with a spoon and fork until the cheese and butter are melted and well mixed with the macaroni.

BAKED MACARONI WITH CHEESE

1 cup macaroni
1 cup grated or shaved cheese or 1 cup cottage-cheese
1 pimienta or green pepper chopped fine
2 hard-cooked eggs (may be omitted)
2 tablespoons butter
Salt and pepper to taste
1½ to 2 cups milk

Cook the macaroni as described above. Place the macaroni, cheese and pimienta or green pepper, and slices of hard-cooked eggs in alternate layers in a buttered baking-dish, finishing with a layer of cheese. Add the salt and pepper. Cut the butter in small pieces and sprinkle over the top, then add the milk. Cook in a moderate oven or at 350 degrees Fahrenheit for about twenty minutes.

MACARONI EN GOULASH

3 slices bacon, diced
½ pound beef, diced
2 onions, sliced
1 pint water
1 cup macaroni
1 pint-can tomatoes
1 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon brown sugar
¼ teaspoon chilli powder

Try out the bacon. Add the meat and let it brown well. Add all the other ingredients except the macaroni. Cover and simmer several hours, or until the meat is tender. Cook the macaroni separately as directed, then pour the meat sauce over the hot macaroni and serve at once. If desired, one-half cup of dried mushrooms which have been soaked for an hour in water to cover may be cooked with this recipe or one-half cup of canned or fresh mushrooms added at the last.

MACARONI WITH OYSTERS

¼ pound macaroni cooked
Flour
1 pint oysters canned
Salt and pepper
¼ cup butter or other savory fat
½ cup buttered crumbs

Cook the macaroni. Sprinkle oysters with salt and dredge with flour. In a buttered baking-dish place a layer of the hot macaroni. Add a layer of oysters. Continue with alternate layers of oysters and macaroni until all are used. Cut the butter or other fat in small pieces and sprinkle over the top. Add the buttered crumbs. Bake in a moderate oven at 350 degrees Fahrenheit for twenty minutes longer. If not brown enough, raise the temperature to 450 degrees Fahrenheit for five or ten minutes.

You may always be certain of
QUALITY CANNED FRUITS
~ if you are careful how you buy

But the decision rests with you! There are too many varying qualities—too many hundreds of brands—to buy canned fruits by any "hit-or-miss" method.

The sure way is to find the brand that offers the quality you want—then see that you get that brand. That's why it is so important—so really worth your while—to keep in mind what DEL MONTE stands for—and to make certain that you get canned fruits under this dependable label.

You always know in advance exactly what DEL MONTE quality is—the same uniform goodness in every variety—the same assurance of satisfaction, no matter where or when you buy.

This is the season when fruit becomes doubly essential in every diet. Serve it often—both for its goodness and the good health it offers. Keep your pantry well-stocked. Order by the dozen cans—and remember to say DEL MONTE. It's worth your while to be quality-sure.

Have You Tried Sliced Peaches Lately?

Everyone knows the delicious flavor of DEL MONTE Peach Halves. But do you know that you can also buy DEL MONTE Peaches, sliced, ready to serve without preparation, just as they come from the can?

They are specially prepared this way and packed in a rich syrup that brings out all their natural delicate flavor. You will find them unusually tempting when served with cream for breakfast; and a prime favorite, too, as a simple dessert for lunch or dinner.

But sliced peaches are much more than just a dessert by themselves. They add a new variety, a different appeal to endless other dishes. For instance, try them between layers of left-over sponge cake, in bread pudding, as a fruit topping for custards, as a filling for your jelly roll, in a juicy sliced peach pie, or with oranges on lettuce as a fresh winter salad.

DEL MONTE Sliced Peaches illustrate just a measure of the menu variety always at your command with all DEL MONTE Fruits. For pleasing variation, try DEL MONTE Royal Anne Cherries, De Luxe Plums, Peaches Halved, Bartlett Pears or Pineapple.

Every Woman Will Want This New Book

We don't believe there is a good cook in the country that would be without a copy of "The DEL MONTE Fruit Book" if she knew what it really represented. It is a picked collection of the fruit dishes personally preferred by the leading cooking experts of the country—and covers in simple, but authoritative fashion, the service of canned fruits for every occasion. Wouldn't you like a copy? It's free! Write us today—addressing Department 28D, California Packing Corporation, San Francisco, Cal.

Just be sure you say
DEL MONTE

Armstrong's Linoleum for every floor in the house

Look for the CIRCLE "A" trademark on the burlap back

Ⓐ

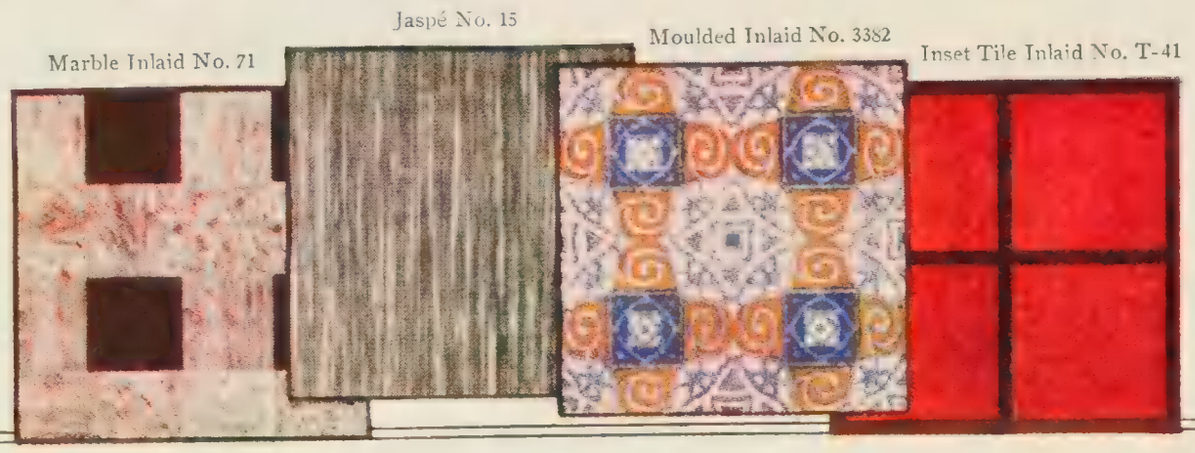
Her Friends Were Delighted When They Saw This New Floor

THE woman who lives here loves this floor. It was all her own idea. When she first moved into this house, the wood floor in the living-room was worn, scarred, shabby. It made the whole room look old.

Then one day a thought struck her, "I wonder what I can do with a brown linoleum floor." So she went to the head of the linoleum department in a store in her town.

This merchant was full of helpful suggestions. "Instead of plain linoleum, I am going to suggest Armstrong's Brown Jaspé Linoleum. First, let me show you a sample, and then let me show how really lovely it will look when combined with bright draperies, and especially with a fine fabric rug."

Prettier than she hoped



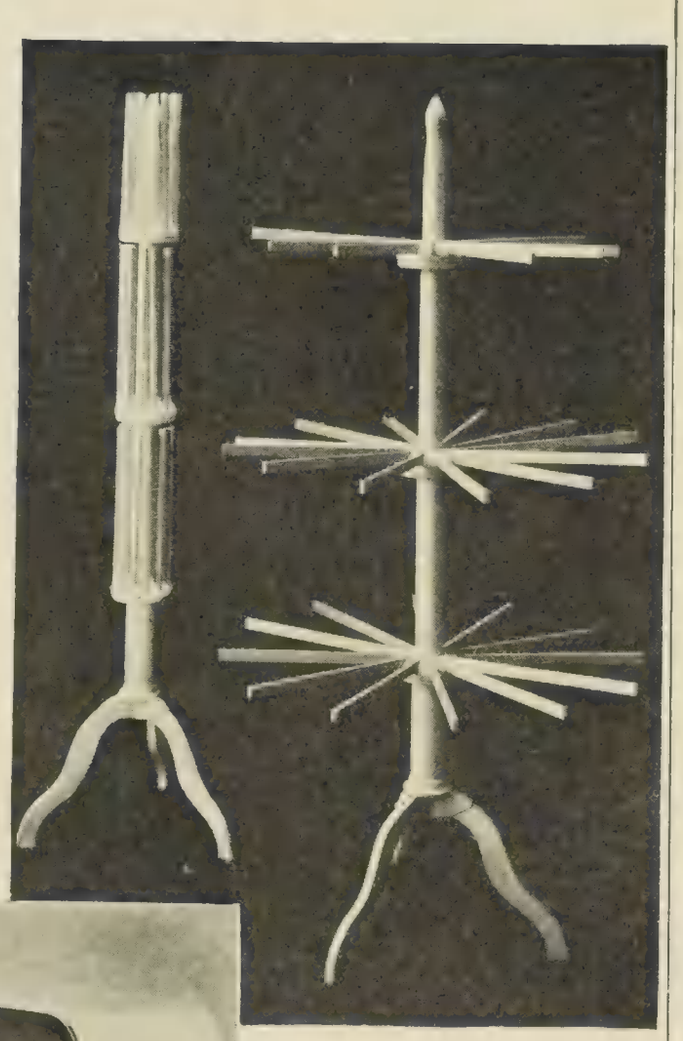
The two of them tried various draperies beside the sample, until they settled upon the curtains you see here. Then the merchant threw a few small rugs over a section of Jaspé linoleum. That decided her choice. The effect made her think how different her own pretty rugs would look on such a floor.

Before she snapped out the lights the next night, her new floor was a reality. It had taken but a day to cement the linoleum permanently in place over builders' deadening felt.

When her friends saw her new floor they were delighted. Even her usually unobserving husband remarked, "Well, that's sensibly beautiful!" Was this woman happy? Was she the least bit vain in her triumph?

Passing months brought other reasons for her feeling toward this floor. It made so little trouble. A daily dusting with a dry mop removed all surface dirt. Occasionally she renewed the soft polish to the walked-on places with a cloth moistened with liquid wax. That was all. She forgot that a floor ever had to be scrubbed. And always her new floor is so silent, so restful under foot, so mellow in its kindly glow under the evening lamp!

Do you know the new designs in Armstrong's Linoleum? Do you know the place it is making for itself in interior decoration? Will you send 25 cents for a book on this subject?

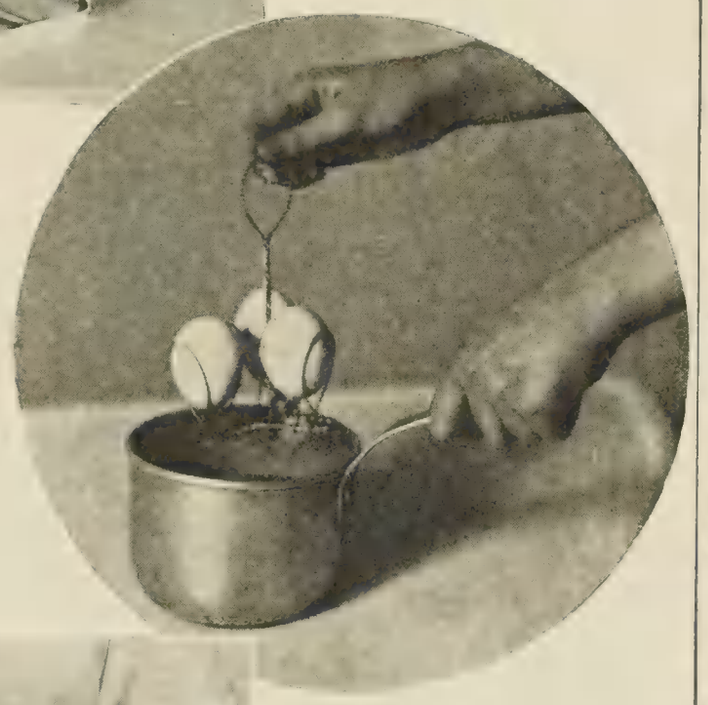


Agnes Foster Wright's new book on home furnishing and decoration

Mrs. Wright was formerly President of the Interior Decorators' League of New York, and is a contributor to House and Garden and other magazines. Her new book includes color ideas for decorating different rooms, and presents some simple and interesting principles regarding the use of color in home interiors. Send 25 cents for "Floors, Furniture, and Color." (In Canada, 60 cents.)

ARMSTRONG CORK COMPANY
Linoleum Division
846 West Walnut Street, Lancaster, Pa.

TO MAKE HOUSEWORK EASIER



Here are five practical household devices that will save home-makers both time and labor. Information about other aids may be obtained by writing the Home-Makers' Department, THE DELINEATOR, New York City. Enclose a stamped envelope for our reply . . . These and all other devices recommended have been tested and approved by Martha Van Rensselaer, Head of the School of Home Economics, Cornell University

AT LAST a clothes-rack for the small house or apartment. This one moves easily on casters, folds up compactly and occupies little space when not in use. It has a good capacity for hanging garments and is both well constructed and well painted with white enamel. For long garments the middle spokes may be left closed.

BREAD-BOXES with side openings are most convenient. Here is one which includes a cutting-board, bread-knife and removable tray to catch the crums.

THIS little wire egg-holder at the right meets a long-felt want of something which would make it possible to get eggs into and out of hot water without dropping and cracking them. It also keeps the eggs off the bottom of the pan and prevents their rolling around and breaking while cooking. Of course it takes slightly more water to cover the eggs, but it does assure one of an uncracked egg safely in the cup without water and without burning the fingers in getting it there.

THERE are legitimate uses in the day's meals for the top cream from the milk-bottle provided the remaining milk is used in cooking and not given to children. With a simple glass pipette the cream may be removed without overflowing the bottle. The milk is kept in the tube by pressing the thumb over the top and is released when the thumb is removed.

SOMETIMES the sink or drain space available makes a round dish-drainer desirable. To those who prefer this type of dish-drainer it will be good news to know that some one has at last made one with a removable rack. In all the kingdom of dishwashing it was hard to find a more difficult thing to clean than the numerous joinings of the rack with the bottom of the drainer. Now every section may be reached with both brush and cloth. Both rack and drainer are strong and well tinned.

A Modern Miracle

By MARION BRYANT—Illustrated by WILL GREFÉ

THE house across the street kept tugging at my attention . . . as if all its sunning windows were chuckling with secret.

"We call them the lovable McLaughlins," their neighbor-friend explained.

"Not Joe McLaughlin?"

She nodded. Knowing the man and his salary, I couldn't suppress a degree of wonder. Just then the watched door opened, and a lithe, lovely girl of about fifteen appeared in a brown-tan plaided wool—so straight, slim, perfect of line that I strained for detail.

"She is an only child?" I asked, wonderment increased.

"Dear, no! She has a miracle mother."

The five words were enough. As my eyes followed the slim bit of fashion around the corner, clamorous laughter flung from the house across the street. Out the same watched door burst four beautifully dressed children. Two were boys in short, straight little trousers; the younger's Dutchily buttoned to his crisp white blouse with the largest of pearl buttons; the older's topped with a straight waistcoat that needed neither buttons nor tie. A fluffy brown-haired girl wore a gray dress edged in red and blue. And the elfinest of all scrambled after playmates in a blue alpaca frock that was like a tiny thimbleful of sky!

"You mean they're all McLaughlins and dressed like that?" I cried.

"Dressed delightfully like that every day in the year! Their mother has the theory that beautiful manners go with beautiful clothes, and you never saw such adorably polite children. But—come! Let me show you what she's made for me."

"Made!"

"She makes all her clothes. The children's too. Not only dresses, but coats, hats. And she has plenty of time to play with the children."

I examined the blue cloth street-dress she held up for me; and a soft pale-green velvet evening gown. Beautiful things! "The best part of it is," she continued delightedly, "you can tell her just what you want, and she goes right ahead and makes it!"

"Take me to Mrs. McLaughlin!" I cried.

The children drew aside in little discreet clusters as we passed. And soon I was looking into the deep smiling eyes of a woman—slim, gracious. "Lovable" was the perfect word.

Her slim chestnut dress was without adornment of any sort—the style tendency of the season intensified to a litheness almost sculpturesque.

"How do you have such original ideas?" I cried.

There was a slow, charming shake of her head. "Not original at all." She took a magazine from the table. "This comes to me from the Woman's Institute each season. It keeps me in advance of the styles. Then, since I can copy anything I see, I need add just this, just that, to make it individual."

"But how do you know enough to add just this, just that?"

Her eyes deepened warmly. "The Woman's Institute tells me. Their delightful lessons make it possible to make negligees, dainty underthings, after only a few hours' study. Then come sheer little layettes, children's frocks, soft summery dresses—even severe woolens and coats."

"And you make anything you want?"

"Anything. And as quickly as any dressmaker. Institute methods are unusually rapid. Let me show you some of my oldest daughter's clothes. I used the Institute's famous 'One Hour' method for them."

She came back with evening things, slight of fabric, graceful of line. "And these for the children." Little dresses you dream of!

"And you don't claim any honors for yourself?" I exclaimed.

"Not one. I hadn't the least talent for sewing just a few months ago. Now—" her eyes swept the room, rested on the fairy things scattered whitely on table, desk, chair. "I can almost believe in miracles," she added softly—"Couldn't you?"

* * * *

You can almost believe in miracles, too, if you let the Woman's Institute help you.

An attractive booklet tells the Institute story, what it can do for you, how you can make beautiful clothes in free minutes at home, give them striking touches that make them most becoming, know what is correct for any occasion, and earn money!

The slim modes of the season call for such slight material that for $6 or $8 you can make a lovely dress priced $35 or $40 in the shops.

Won't you send a postal, letter or this convenient coupon, so we can start the booklet to you by return mail?

WOMAN'S INSTITUTE
Dept. 41-P, Scranton, Penna.

Without cost or obligation, please send me a copy of your 48-page booklet. I am most interested in learning:

☐ Home Dressmaking ☐ Professional Dressmaking
☐ Millinery ☐ Cooking

Name.....
(Please specify whether Mrs. or Miss)

Address.....

Every mother should tell her daughter this

A new way in woman's hygiene, today adopted by 5 million women

The scientifically correct way approved by Doctors and Nurses

By ELLEN J. BUCKLAND, Graduate Nurse

If five million women adopt, practically overnight, a new way in personal hygiene, surely it is worth knowing about—at least worth giving a trial.

Today mothers everywhere are telling their daughters of this new way which has revolutionized woman's personal life. They give thanks their daughters need never know the old-fashioned makeshifts—unhygienic, dangerous to health—that this new way supplanted.

This new way is Kotex, widely urged by doctors and nurses. And it is as a nurse that I urge you to try it. Kotex is used in practically all hospitals today. And by eight women in ten in the better walks of life.

The advantages of Kotex

Many discomforts common to women, doctors say, are directly traceable to makeshift sanitary methods. Much of the loss of charm, of the feminine immaculacy expected at all times, is chiefly due to the same reason. Every woman knows this to be true.

Kotex is a sanitary pad made of Cellucotton, the world's super-absorbent. It absorbs 16 times its own weight in moisture. It is 5 times as absorbent as cotton.

Besides that, each Kotex pad is impregnated with a new secret de*odor*ant which our scientists recently discovered. It is the result of years of laboratory experiment and research.

Another important advantage is that it can be discarded simply, without the least bother or embarrassment—just like a piece of tissue.

Kotex is germ-proof, packed in sanitary sealed packages of twelve. In two sizes, the Regular and Kotex-Super.

All drug and department stores have Kotex—ready-wrapped in plain paper. There are no questions to ask or answer, no needless conversation. Simply pay the clerk and walk out, that is all.

Easy to get—anywhere

Today, get Kotex, deodorized. Learn what it has come to mean to the millions of women who have adopted it. Or if you will write to me, I will send you free, a sample of the new deodorized Kotex, and an interesting booklet, written by an eminent doctor on this important subject. Your letter will be treated confidentially, of course, and the sample will come in plain, unmarked wrapper. Just address me

ELLEN J. BUCKLAND, G. N.
Care of Cellucotton Laboratories
166 West Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Ill.

Kotex Regular, now 60c Kotex-Super, now 90c

KOTEX

DEODORIZED

ASK THE DELINEATOR

We are glad to offer our readers the following services; and we hope they will have no hesitation in consulting our department experts on any personal or household problem. Be sure (1) to address your inquiry to THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.; (2) to give us your return address; (3) to enclose the cost of the pamphlet or other literature (in each case a minimum amount fixed to cover cost of printing and postage)

Babies and Children—In its Happy Child Department, THE DELINEATOR offers mothers the medical advice of nationally known baby and child specialists.

The following pamphlets, which are reprints of articles that have appeared in THE DELINEATOR, may be had for ten cents each: "The Expectant Mother and the New Baby," by Dr. Ralph Lobenstine; "The General Care of the Baby," "Maternal Nursing," "Artificial Feeding" and "Diet Problems of Childhood" (four separate booklets), by Dr. L. Emmett Holt; "Early Childhood," by Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw; "The Mental Health of the Child," by Dr. Thomas W. Salmon; "The School Child," by Dr. William Palmer Lucas; "The Child's Teeth," by Dr. Harvey J. Burkhart; "Three Dread Diseases of Childhood: Diphtheria (by Dr. William H. Park), Tuberculosis (by Dr. L. Emmett Holt) and Diabetes (by Dr. Henry Rawle Geyelin)," and "Play, Eyes and Movies," by Dr. Ward A. Holden and Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw. There is also a treatise on "Correct Posture," by Dr. Alan De Forest Smith, to be had for ten cents; and a cloth-bound "Baby's Record Book," by Dr. Bird T. Baldwin, which costs one dollar.

Housekeeping—The Home-Economics Department has more helpful leaflets than can be listed here. Write for a list of subjects. Ask any question that troubles you in your household management. Always send a self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

Building and Decoration—If you want to build, write for pictures of all Donn Barber's model houses, costing you only two cents for return postage. Then for one dollar you may order a print of floor-plans and elevations of the house you decide upon.

Ask Mrs. Sanders, the editor of this department, about furnishing and decorating (not more than five questions at one time, please). Be sure to give dimensions, exposure and full description of rooms—and a two-cent stamp for reply.

Special bulletins, "Good Floors," "Curtains and Draperies," "Walls, Woodwork and Ceilings," "Furnishing the Home" and "How to Choose, Frame and Hang Your Pictures," may be had for twenty-five cents each.

Beauty and Health—You can improve your appearance with a little time and careful study. The Beauty Editor will answer personal questions and send folders prepared by experts on the care of the skin, hands and hair, on lotions and cosmetics. These folders are free. Tell us which you want. Be sure to enclose postage.

Etiquette—Don't make social blunders. Mrs. John Cabot Kimberley will answer any personal quandary or send you instructive leaflets on the various phases of etiquette. Some of the most popular are: "Courtesies of To-day between Men and Women," "Introductions, Invitations and Replies," "Entertaining," "Travel," "House Weddings," "Etiquette at the Table," "Letter-Writing," "Calls and the Use of Cards." These leaflets cost you nothing but the postage, which should be estimated at two cents for three folders.

Entertainment—Ask us about any dinner, dance, shower or entertainment that you may be planning. This department has some very interesting suggestions to offer you, including a Valentine Radio Party, a Lincoln-Day Party, and Our Forefathers, an attractive simple pageant for a school or community. Two cents will cover return postage.

A HOME BUILT AROUND A MOTHER

Continued from page 2

Then the living-room—and it is a living-room in the true sense of the word—a delightful place for the whole family to work in and play in, live in and enjoy. It runs the entire depth of the little house, lighted on three sides by windows, and with a big fireplace in the center of the fourth side. At the farther end of the room a row of casement windows, framed at either end by cupboards running to the ceiling and fitted with a comfortable cushioned window-seat seven feet long, with a two-leaf table in front of it, forms an attractive dining-nook. The screen that stands by the fireplace offers a means of shutting it off from the rest of the room at mealtime. Under the table is a small rug which can be readily run over with a broom after a meal, removing all traces of crums. The cupboards, which give the decorative effect of a bay to the casement windows, not only hold china and table-linen, but a tall lower one offers a means of disposing of vacuum cleaner, broom and dust-mop. More storing-space is afforded by the lower part of the window-seat, which is divided and cushioned in two parts, so that only half the lid need be lifted at a time. A three-story passway for dishes and food into the kitchen and a telephone that can be reached from either room offer further testimony to the entire convenience and efficiency of the house.

"Who'd want a dining-room with a living-room like this?" more than one visitor at the demonstration was heard to say.

THEN into the kitchen. That kitchen! More than any one other thing in the Kalamazoo better home it called forth joyful noises from the feminine guests.

"See the double drain-board and the counter running clear around the room!" scores of wistful housewives cried.

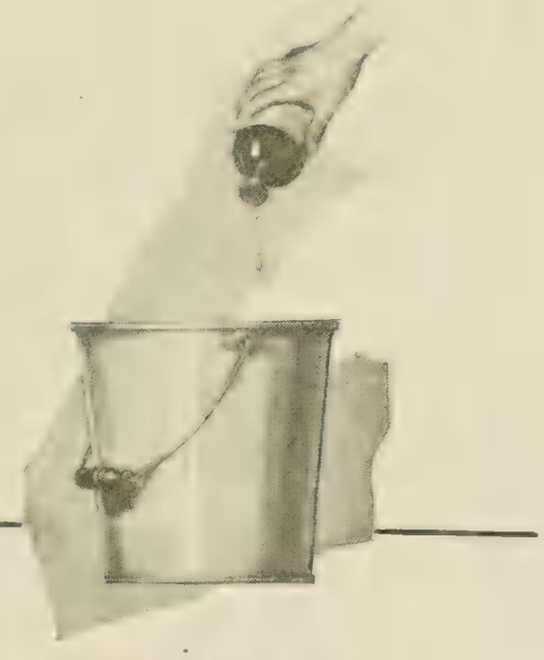
"And all those cupboards running from floor to ceiling!" envied others.

"A sink exactly the right height so that one needn't stoop!—thirty-three inches, you say?" other bevies exclaimed.

"Think of the saving of steps in having all the work done in a space of—what is it?—five to seven feet!" wailed women who had no such thoughtful arrangement at home.

"It's got enough electric lights!" discovered others. "It's got windows enough! And even a beautiful view!"

"I hope that all the women who work themselves to death unnecessarily will have a kitchen like this when they get to Heaven!" one housewife summed up the case grimly.



After all, how is the average woman going to feel quite at home in Heaven unless there is some sort of kitchen there? And it would be hard to find a better finite model for this celestial kitchen than the one in the better home at Kalamazoo. Stove, sink and work-table are grouped closely together and so placed that the door to the living-room when open screens the first two from sight. Enough working-space, that thing that almost every woman sighs for, is afforded by the drain counters, waterproofed with hot paraffin to prevent the absorption of moisture and grease. A warming-closet below the passway counter, containing a coil of the pipe carrying hot water to the sink, with racks for the dishes that need to be warmed, a ten-inch shelf above the gas-stove for utensils most frequently used, a home-made fireless cooker in the space under the sink and a work-stool with shortened fore legs—for why stand

Continued on page 68

free

a set of the Library of Health
See below

THE MAGIC DROPS

JUST a few drops of "Lysol" in the water whenever you clean, transform mere surface cleaning to health-cleaning. No extra work or trouble.

Do they return to a health-clean home?

YOUR children's rosy cheeks, their radiant health, their freedom from illness, depend largely on the health system in your household. Do they return to a home that is the essence of health?

There is as much difference between health-cleanliness and mere soap-and-water cleanliness as there is between sunshine and electric light. Yet health-cleanliness—the modern method of cleaning—is surprisingly easy to obtain.

This new cleanliness protects your family's health

A FEW magic drops put in your cleaning water go beyond the soap-and-water surface removal of dirt. They destroy the countless germs that lurk on door-jambs, door-knobs, chair-arms, tables, bannisters—a hundred danger-places where hands, big and little, may rest.

Health authorities will tell you that if you are to reduce the danger of illness, your home must be kept free from these germs. Soap-and-water is not sufficient to destroy them. But the few drops of "Lysol" Disinfectant put in your cleaning water will purify each surface and invade each tiny crevice where germs may lurk. Your home is left sweet, clean and safe.

"Lysol" does these three important things

"LYSOL" is now used everywhere for modern cleaning because it has these three wonderful properties. It deodorizes, it purifies, its soapy nature helps to clean as it disinfects.

Never be without it for your daily cleaning. Put a few drops in the water every time you clean. Dip your cloth, your broom, your mop in this solution. It will not hurt the most sensitive hands.

Continue to disinfect with a stronger "Lysol" solution the familiar germ-breeding spots—garbage pail, toilet bowl, drain pipes. Every part of your home is then made health-clean to safeguard your family.

Be sure you get the genuine "Lysol." It is the standard disinfectant used by hospitals and recommended by physicians. Your druggist has it.

Send for a free set of this "Lysol"
Health Library

YOU will want to read these three valuable books on the important subject of health protection. One is filled with suggestions for guarding your family's health in many practical, simple ways. Another contains scientific information about the personal health of women that every woman should know. A third gives facts of value to the mother "When Baby Comes."

We will be glad to send you this free library. Just send in the coupon below.

Manufactured only by LYSOL, INC.,
635 Greenwich Street, New York City

Sole Distributors: LEHN & FINK, INC.,
New York

Canadian Agents: Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd.,
10 McCaul Street, Toronto

Lysol
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.
Disinfectant

LEHN & FINK, INC., Sole Distributors
Dept. J-23, 635 Greenwich Street
New York City

I would like to know all the scientific facts about health protection contained in your Library of Health. Please mail me a free set.

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

4 out of 5

Dental statistics prove that four out of every five over 40—as well as thousands younger—pay Pyorrhea's toll. Do you want to elude this dread disease?

Your teeth are only as healthy as your gums

The gums are the keys to health. You must keep them firm, strong and healthy or your teeth will begin to loosen and eventually come out. This is one of the penalties of Pyorrhea.

But there are others even worse. Pus pockets form and generate poisons that drain through the whole system, causing much of the rheumatism, neuritis, anaemia, indigestion and other diseases so prevalent in middle life.

Prevent Pyorrhea with Forhan's

Don't wait for tender, bleeding gums to warn you of Pyorrhea's coming. Ward it off by going to your dentist regularly and using Forhan's For the Gums twice a day.

This safe, efficient, pleasant-tasting dentifrice counteracts the effects of harmful bacteria, hardens soft, tender gums, keeps them sound, firm and pink. Furthermore, it cleans and whitens the teeth and keeps the mouth fresh, clean and wholesome.

Ordinary tooth pastes are powerless to prevent or check Pyorrhea.

Even if you don't care to discontinue your favorite dentifrice, at least start brushing your gums and teeth once a day with Forhan's.

It is a preparation of proved efficacy in the treatment of Pyorrhea. It is the one that many thousands have found beneficial for years. For your own sake, make sure that you get it. Ask for, and insist upon, Forhan's For the Gums. At all druggists, 35c and 60c in tubes.

Formula of R. J. Forhan, D. D. S.
Forhan Company, New York

Forhan's
FOR THE GUMS

More than a tooth paste—
it checks Pyorrhea

A HOME BUILT AROUND A MOTHER

Continued from page 66

when ironing or peeling potatoes?—are some of its claims to consideration. The floor is of cork linoleum cemented above felt, the woodwork is of white enamel, and the walls and ceiling are oil-painted a sunshiny yellow above the four-foot dado of tile-finished white cement. There is a metal clothes-chute to the basement and a wall-opening for an electric-iron connection.

The kitchen entry not only holds the refrigerator and offers shelf-space for storage, but it has a wall-rack for children's wraps and a space for rubbers. There is a passway through the lower panel of the outer door for milk and groceries and for regulating the temperature when ice is not essential for keeping food.

Now that we are about it, let's run down into the cellar. It is reached either by stairs from the kitchen or by a grade entrance from the yard. Hanging-space for brooms, dust-pans and mops is afforded on the wall at the top of the basement stairs, where there is also a place for an ironing-board, on a convenient ledge. The basement itself is as efficient as every other part of the house, with excellent cross ventilation, good lighting both natural and artificial, a furnace of an approved type, a well-lighted furnace-room large enough for a carpenter's bench and tools, a fuel-room, and a cold room with bins for apples and vegetables. The laundry-room has two set tubs, connections for an electric washer, a device for softening wash-water, an instantaneous heater and a hamper below the metal clothes-chute which carries soiled garments from the two upper floors. In one corner of the basement there is even an inexpensive shower for the sons of the family when they come in hot from a ball game or for father after his golf.

BACK on the first floor again and into the famous mother's room at last! Here's one place where every one will want to linger a while. Just what is there about this room that made the Kalamazoo better homes committee concentrate upon it as the keynote of the whole house and the committee of judges regard it as a leading factor in their decision to award the first prize in the national campaign to Kalamazoo? Just what is there about it to make any one of us desire a similar room in a home of her own?

At first glance there seems nothing extraordinary about this sunny, pleasant room that suddenly found itself the inspiration of a new type of architecture. Of course we notice immediately that lighting and ventilation are excellent, the furnishings cheery, the mirror so placed as to give the best possible reflection, the closet roomy and deep. Many rooms, however, have these desirable characteristics. We must look again to see just what it is that makes this room unique.

"What's next to mother's room on this side?" we inquire.

"The bath," a member of the entertainment committee tells us. "It was thought best to have it only a step away from the mother's room for her convenience in bathing the baby and superintending the bathing of the small children. Also, in case there is illness in the family this room, with its adjoining bathroom, makes an admirable sick-room, you see!"

"And what is next to mother's room on that side?" we persist.

"The kitchen. It was thought best to have it only a step away from the mother's room, too, so that she could keep an eye on the baby instead of worrying about him, or having him underfoot in the kitchen while she worked. You see, this isn't only a mother's room—it's a mother's suite!"

We begin to get an inkling of the excellence of the room at last. Its virtue consists in the fact that in its entire planning and arrangement it is first and last a mother's room, designed to reduce a mother's work to the absolute minimum.

Suppose that it is time to bathe baby. The mother is spared the necessity of carrying a heavy infant up-stairs and down again, or a long journey to the other end of a hall, with the fearful thought of drafts on the way. Some mothers avoid these evils by the counter evil of carrying a heavy tub filled with warm water to the room where the baby sleeps. In the Kalamazoo better home the mother need carry her child only a step or two into the bathroom, the door of which has perhaps been open all this while and the temperature of which is the same as that in her own room. If the worst happens—as it usually does!—and the telephone rings imperatively just as she gets the youngster all nicely soaped, it is, after all, only a few feet through her own room to the kitchen, where the disturber stands in the passway.

Or let us suppose (it is certainly no effort of the imagination!) that the mother has a heavy forenoon of work in her kitchen ahead of her. If she did not have the mother's room which makes the Kalamazoo better home such an invaluable place, one might do either one of two things. She might bring her child into the steamy kitchen with her, uneasily fearing all the while that the moment her back is turned he would get scalded in the hot water with which she is mopping the floor or burn inquisitive small fingers against the edge of her iron. Or she might have to run up-stairs or to a distant room half a dozen times in the course of the morning in answer to his cry or some sudden alarming noise. Almost all mothers know the terrors of that distant thump which takes them running, with their hearts in their mouths, to the room where their baby is. But all of these waste motions and emotions are made unnecessary by the mother's room in the Kalamazoo better home. Here it is possible for a mother to keep her baby constantly under her eye without having him also underfoot, to pursue her work with peace of mind and heart.

LET'S suppose that the baby has colic at night. Even in better homes such things have been known to happen! Half a dozen steps from her bed the mother can turn on the gas to heat hot water or hot milk for him.

Stairs are deadly things for any woman who must climb them too frequently. There are times when they are an absolute menace to a mother. In the Kalamazoo better home the mother need climb them only once a day when she goes to clean the up-stairs rooms. As soon as her children are old enough to care for their own rooms, she need go up-stairs not oftener than perhaps twice a week for a general cleaning.

Another argument in favor of the Kalamazoo better home is the bathtub. It has already been noted that the bathroom is placed in exactly the right place for the mother's convenience, down-stairs and adjoining her own room. The tub also is where it should be—set squarely upon the floor, doing away with the too-common necessity for the housewife to qualify as a contortionist at cleaning time.

From the bath let us go up-stairs to the two airy bedrooms, with their dormer windows, one for the daughters of the family, the other for the sons. Each room has two large closets, each is provided with drawers, shelves and abundant hanging-space. Under the eaves there are two linen and trunk rooms, for not an inch of space is anywhere wasted in the Kalamazoo better home.

A logical want—a home that divides labor and multiplies content! Let's echo it as we go out into the charming grounds where the front yard is shaded by two Norway maples planted outside the front walk and sweet with lilacs, barberry and spiræa. The back yard we find equally delightful, with its peach-tree, its vegetable garden planted by the boys and girls, its bird-houses and its terraced drops. And all this is accomplished in a lot forty-four by one hundred feet!

"Yes, but what did it cost?" comes the natural question.

No fortune. The committee first planned to build a demonstration home for five thousand dollars, then decided to build a home in an excellent neighborhood with the best possible equipment and the most desirable features, meanwhile keeping a careful budget of possible deductions that could be made by families who wanted a similar home, equally well built, but with simpler equipment and without some of the special features. The Kalamazoo better home cost $7,128.24; it might have been built on

Concluded on page 71

The largest selling high grade syrup in the United States

Why two syrups are blended in Log Cabin

Those who really enjoy pancakes are the world's most critical judges of syrup. For the golden-brown, tender cakes, they want only a special goodness—only a rare perfection in liquid sweet. It is to them that this syrup has come as a wholly new delight.

To produce perfect flavor in syrup, requires special knowledge of one of nature's most delicious gifts—maple sugar. Its full delicacy can be secured only by the most skillful blending.

In Log Cabin Syrup, choice maple sugar from Canada and Vermont is combined with granulated cane sugar by the Towle Process. It is by this method of blending that the flavor of the maple is so wonderfully mellowed and preserved. That is why Log Cabin has become America's Favorite Syrup, used in millions of homes from coast to coast—served by representative clubs, hotels and restaurants and on the diners of "crack" trains.

Until you have tried it, you cannot know the whole joy of maple. Surprise your family tomorrow with pancakes or waffles and Towle's Log Cabin Syrup. Watch their eyes grow brighter when they get their first taste. Use Log Cabin on Hot Breads, French Toast and Fried Mush too.

The recipes given on this page for Log Cabin Fudge and Cake Frosting are only two of many ways to use this delicious syrup to make foods more tempting. To get the set of twenty-four Log Cabin recipe cards, just fill out the coupon below and mail it to us today.

Towle's Log Cabin Syrup comes only in the Log-Cabin-Shaped cans —in three sizes. Ask your grocer for a can today.

Log Cabin Fudge: — 1 cup Log Cabin Syrup, 2 cups sugar, 2 tablespoons butter, ½ cup milk. Boil all ingredients together until a soft ball forms when dropped in cold water. Remove from the fire and cool; then beat until creamy. Add nuts if desired. Roll ½ inch thick and cut in squares

Log Cabin Cake Frosting: — ¼ cup Log Cabin Syrup, 1 teaspoon butter, confectioners' sugar. Cream the butter, add Log Cabin Syrup and sufficient confectioners' sugar to spread. Beat until creamy and spread on the cake. Decorate with nuts

Free —A set of 24 recipe cards giving delightful ways, both new and old, of using Log Cabin Syrup

LOG CABIN PRODUCTS COMPANY
Dept. G-2, St. Paul, Minnesota

Please send me the 24 recipe cards as described above.

Name _____

Street _____

City _____ State _____

My grocer's name and address is:

_____

_____

THE LOG CABIN PRODUCTS COMPANY

St. Paul, Minnesota—The Center of North America

© 1925, The L. C. P. Co.

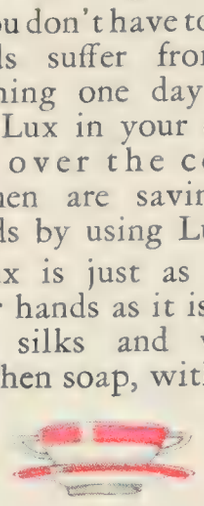
Won't redden your hands~ won't coarsen or roughen them . . . Lux suds free you from that tell-tale-in-the-dishpan-look HOW ruefully you have looked at your hands after dishwashing. Red and stinging and rough!



No wonder you hated the job.

You were careful to use fine toilet soap—but what good could that do when three times a day your hands went into strong suds of kitchen soap. Of course your hands looked it!

You don't have to let your hands suffer from dishwashing one day longer. Use Lux in your dishpan. All over the country women are saving their hands by using Lux.

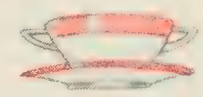
Lux is just as kind to your hands as it is to your fine silks and woolens. Kitchen soap, with its free alkali, burns out the natural oils that keep your skin smooth and velvety. Lux will never do this—as you know, it won't injure anything pure water alone won't harm. There is nothing in it to dry out those essential oils in your skin. It is as gentle as fine toilet soap.

Your hands will be grateful for Lux. Even your finger-nails will look different.

For Curtains and Draperies

Filmy curtains and silken or cretonne draperies—Lux is so safe for them. Dip them gently into the suds, pressing it through them, then rinse and hang where they will dry quickly. Lux won't hurt anything pure water alone won't harm.

Paint, Porcelain and Tile



It's a joy the way Lux restores the soft gleaming surface of fine paint or porcelain or tile. Do a small surface at a time, rinsing off the ample Lux suds with clear water the same temperature. Then dry with a soft cloth. You can do all the cleaning you want with Lux and your hands won't feel it.

Just one teaspoonful for dishes

You will find one single teaspoonful of Lux is plenty for breakfast or lunch dishes. Maybe you will want a little more for the dinner dishes. But one teaspoonful in the dishpan and you have all the fine rich suds you want to leave your dishes with shining faces. You can safely trust your finest gold decorated dishes to the mild Lux suds.

Put a package of Lux on the shelf near the sink. Use it for a little while and watch the difference in the way your hands look and feel. You can get the big new package now as well as the regular size. Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Keep Woolens unshrunken

Whisk two tablespoonfuls of Lux into thick lather in half a basin of hot water. Cool to lukewarm. Dip garment up and down, pressing suds through soiled spots. Never rub. Rinse in three lukewarm waters. Squeeze water out and dry in even temperature.

For fine Silks

Wash in ample lukewarm Lux suds as you would woolens. Rinse in three lukewarm waters. Squeeze water out—never wring. When nearly dry press with a warm iron—never a hot one. For colored silk wash quickly and in almost cool water.

"Now my hands are beautiful—before I was often ashamed of them," writes one woman

ALWAYS wash the glass before the silver or dishes. With the abundant Lux suds one rinsing will leave things clear. There is no semi-dissolved soap to streak and stick. Wipe with a soft, lintless cloth and see the sparkle and polish. Dishwashing seems only half the work with Lux.

Just one teaspoonful is enough

A HOME BUILT AROUND A MOTHER

Concluded from page 68

simplified scale for $5,403.14, as the committee's statement shows.

Their helpful double budget follows in full:

REPORT OF CHAIRMAN OF FINANCE AT KALAMAZOO

Carpenter Work	$745.94
Chimney, Fireplace and Stoop	336.52
Electric Wiring	118.00
Electric Fixtures and Bulbs	100.00
Foundation, Sidewalk, Grading and Basement Floor	867.84
Finished Hardwood	134.51
Rough Hardware and Metal Work	82.71
Furnace	265.00
Lumber	2,187.34
Miscellaneous: Water and Building Permit, Insurance, Cartage, Linoleum, Shades, etc.	455.45
Plastering	405.53
Painting	484.30
Plumbing	930.10
Roof-Drains	15.00
TOTAL	$7,128.24

Deductions which should be made to correspond with the equally well-built but simpler and less elaborately equipped house of the same size:

Carpenter Work (chiefly on cupboards)	$100.00
Electric Fixtures and Bulbs	25.00
Extra Deep Basement and Cement-Block Partition Walls	50.00
Painting and Finishing	130.00
Lumber (this includes the cost of oak instead of pine floors throughout and the extra cost of laying and finishing them; the cost of clear white pine siding over a cheaper material, a difference of forty-five dollars a thousand; the extra cost of thicker window and door frames required by the bungalow type of walls; the lumber and finish for the many cupboards and drawers)	518.60
Plumbing (this includes the water-softener, instantaneous water-heater, built-in instead of ordinary bathtub, best type of all plumbing fixtures, roughing in for future plumbing, shower-bath and extra drain in basement)	485.00
Miscellaneous (this includes cork linoleum laid in kitchen and bathroom, window-shades throughout house, landscaping lot—$190.55—the outside blinds and the painting of them, insurance, metal window-frames in the fuel-room, metal coal-chute and other small items)	416.50
TOTAL DEDUCTIONS	$1,725.10
TOTAL REDUCED COST	5,403.14

H. L. NORTH,
Chairman Finance Committee

WHAT PARENTS SHOULD KNOW ABOUT WHOOPING-COUGH

Concluded from page 16

Whooping-cough should be recognized as a very serious disease in young children. It causes more deaths under two years of age than any of the other so-called infectious diseases of children. Nearly twenty-five thousand deaths each year in the United States are attributed to whooping-cough, but probably this figure falls far short of the actual fatalities, for many cases of the disease are never diagnosed, and there are physicians who are careless about reporting cases to the health authorities. It is thus impossible to say how much sickness in cases not terminating fatally is caused by whooping-cough.

Unnecessary exposure is never justifiable. It is a mistaken idea that a child might as well contract whooping-cough at one time as another. The younger the child the more serious is the disease. The longer it is avoided the greater is the ease of recovery. If a child has been exposed and develops symptoms of a cold, he ought to be kept away from other children. Should there be other children in the house who have not had whooping-cough, the suspected child should be quarantined so that he can not come in contact with them.

If parents would observe the Golden Rule, when their children contract whooping-cough, its spread would be greatly curtailed. This means that a child with whooping-cough should be kept away from school, Sunday-school, moving-picture shows or any place of public assemblage. He should not be allowed on the street unless accompanied by a responsible person who is able to keep the child from contact with children who have not had the disease.

Every physician is required by law to report promptly to the local health officer all cases of whooping-cough which he is called upon to treat. Later on when the doctor believes that his patient has fully recovered he should so inform the health officer. Some officials quarantine cases of whooping-cough for two weeks and then allow them on the street if accompanied by an adult, and some even require such children to wear a distinguishing band around the arm. Most local health ordinances require isolation for a period of not less than eight weeks, or until one week after the characteristic whooping-cough has ceased.

AND THERE'S NO "SURE CURE"

Probably in no other disease have there been so many "sure cures" and superstitions as in whooping-cough. There must be more than nine hundred and ninety-nine positive "remedies," which means that we have no sure cure. While most of these have only a slight or doubtful influence on the course of the disease, yet their administration is a great comfort to the parents, and have therefore some value. With the possible exception of the vaccines prepared from the Bordet-Gengou bacillus, there exists to-day no drug, inhalation or mechanical measure that materially alters its course. Whooping-cough is a self-limited disease in which intelligent general care and management are the most satisfactory modes of treatment.

The use of vaccines is becoming more general, and the results so far reported seem to warrant their use, especially as a preventative. The term "vaccines" must not be confused with vaccination, which is the skin inoculation of the cowpox virus to prevent smallpox. Vaccines consist of dead whooping-cough bacteria. When injected into the muscle, they appear to produce an immunity in much the same way as the vaccines used so successfully and universally to prevent typhoid fever.

Erratum: In the article "These Girls Of Ours," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, in the December DELINEATOR, a small circular picture was mistakenly captioned "Mrs. Rinehart as a Girl Scout Leader." The picture was not Mrs. Rinehart.

After 200 years, the perfect powder

Now, after centuries, a totally new and different principle brings beautifying qualities never before known in complexion powder

In fancy every woman has visualized the perfect complexion powder, fine as evening mist on meadows, soft as summer clouds, petal-like in smoothness, and scented as delicately as springtime in some orchard lane.

Every woman has sought such a powder, keenly, persistently—for powder is the final beauty touch, and makes or mars loveliness after all else is done to care for the skin. Now the ceaseless quest is ended.

"The stuff that dreams are made of" now come true in this different powder

Our search to create the perfect powder was as persistent and tireless as your search to find it.

For hundreds of years powders had been much the same. The principal base used was rice. But we felt there could be a more perfect base—and set out to find it.

Laboratory experiments were made with various substances—practical beauty tests were essayed on all types of skin. Many highly superior powders were developed, but not enough finer, softer, smoother than some of those already in the shops.

Innumerable tests—then inspiration

And then like a flash came inspiration—a woman's inspiration, from a totally different tangent:

"What," she asked, "is the one ingredient of all that is the greatest aid to complexion beauty? Isn't there some one thing that is better for the skin than anything else? I am not speaking of powder—I am speaking of beauty. What is that one ingredient? Can we not start with such an ingredient and thus make a perfect powder?"

There could be but one answer to this question: "Why, almond, of course—known and recognized by all beauty specialists and found in practically every authentic beauty formula for lotions and creams."

"Create a powder with an almond base," urged our inspiration, "give it all the beautifying properties that women desire—the alluring fineness, softness and smoothness that give a true velvet texture to the complexion. And give it in addition, the one element that surpasses all others in its definite benefit to the skin—the soothing, softening, whitening effects of almond."

Who ever dreamed of face powder with an almond base?

Thus Princess Pat the only powder with an almond base was created—bringing to your skin a wonderful natural beauty such as no other powder has ever given it; bringing a remarkable, even waterproof adhering quality, impervious to perspiration or even a plunge in the surf; plus the definite benefits of almond in soothing and refining the pores, preventing "drying out" of the skin, and softening its texture.

Free—this demonstration packet

Containing a liberal supply of Princess Pat Powder, the only Powder with an almond base.

* * *

"OLDE IVORY"—the new shade in powder—another "Princess Pat" triumph. In seeking to create a new shade in powder, to blend so perfectly with the skin as to seem in truth a part of it, Olde Ivory, a soft pastel shade between "flesh" and "rachel," was finally devised. We asked 5000 women to try it. The result was beyond our fondest hopes—for the overwhelming majority acclaimed Olde Ivory as the long-sought-for universal shade by day or night. Among 5000 women are all types of skin—your type.

Princess Pat

PRINCESS PAT, Ltd., Chicago, U. S. A.

Princess Pat, Ltd., Dept. 152, 2701-9 S. Wells St., Chicago

Entirely FREE! Send sample of Princess Pat Powder. (Check shade you desire.)

FLESH ☐ Light, blended rose
WHITE ☐ Pure, snowy white
OLDE IVORY ☐ Rich, creamy flesh
BRUNETTE ☐ Warm, gypsy olive

Name..... Street.....

City and State.....

(Print Name and Address Plainly)

The Beauty of Children's Hair Depends upon Shampooing

Try this quick and simple method which thousands of mothers now use.

See the difference it will make in the appearance of YOUR CHILD'S hair.

Note how it gives life and lustre, how it brings out all the natural wave and color.

See how soft and silky, bright and fresh-looking the hair will look.

ANY child can have hair that is beautiful, healthy and luxuriant.

It is NO LONGER a matter of luck.

The beauty of a child's hair depends ALMOST ENTIRELY upon the way you shampoo it.

Proper shampooing is what makes it soft and silky. It brings out all the real life and lustre, all the natural wave and color, and leaves it fresh-looking, glossy and bright.

When a child's hair is dry, dull and heavy, lifeless, stiff and gummy, and the strands cling together, and it feels harsh and disagreeable to the touch, it is because the hair has not been shampooed properly.

While children's hair must have frequent and regular washing to keep it beautiful, fine, young hair and tender scalps cannot stand the harsh effect of ordinary soaps. The free alkali in ordinary soaps soon dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

That is why discriminating mothers, everywhere, now use Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo. This clear, pure and entirely greaseless product brings out all the real beauty of the hair and cannot possibly injure. It does not dry the scalp or make the hair brittle, no matter how often you use it.

If you want to see how really beautiful you can make your child's hair look, just follow this simple method.

A Simple, Easy Method

FIRST, wet the hair and scalp in clear, warm water. Then apply a little Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo, rubbing it in thoroughly all over the scalp, and all through the hair.

Two or three teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather.

This should be rubbed in thoroughly and briskly with the finger tips, so as to loosen the small particles of dust and dirt that stick to the scalp.

After rubbing in the rich, creamy Mulsified lather, give the hair a good rinsing. Then use another application of Mulsified, again working up a lather and rubbing it in briskly as before. After the final washing, rinse the hair and scalp in at least two changes of clear, fresh, warm water. This is very important.

Just Notice the Difference

YOU will notice the difference in the hair even before it is dry, for it will be delightfully soft and silky.

After a Mulsified shampoo you will find the hair will dry quickly and evenly, and have the appearance of being much thicker and heavier than it really is.

If you want your child to always be remembered for its beautiful, well-kept hair, make it a rule to set a certain day each week for a Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo. This regular weekly shampooing will keep the scalp soft and the hair fine and silky, bright, fresh-looking and fluffy, wavy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at any drug store or toilet goods counter, anywhere in the world. A 4-ounce bottle should last for months.

Mulsified
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
Cocoanut Oil Shampoo

THE LOST SPEECH

Continued from page 7

or he loses his leadership of this convention, and I know of no man who could take his place."

"You could take it, Mr. Lincoln," exclaimed Rose.

"No! I haven't your father's education. And this is a convocation of the kind of men who are moved by the educated intellect."

Rose stared at the man, moved as she always was by his gentle persistence.

"But, Mr. Lincoln! To give up Owen! What of him, with his splendid brain and great promise of future leadership? Don't you know that what you are asking me to do will blast his life for years to come?"

"If his private griefs impair his sense of public duty, then he'd——"

Rose interrupted. "Then he's no better than my father, you would say! And I—I too am of the same kind!"

"Tarred with the same stick!" Mr. Lincoln smiled a little, but his searching gaze did not lift from Rose's face.

"But life must not do this to me!" breathlessly. "I am twenty-eight. I shall not love again. And as far as I know, I have but the one life to live. Living with father without my mother has been one long punishment. I wanted Owen. Oh, I wanted him!"

The lawyer turned from his deep contemplation of the tragic face before him to gaze again upon the prairies. His own lips were quivering, but he did not speak.

"And Owen, himself!" panted Rose. "The kind of man who would love me can not do so lightly. And I am to crucify him then——"

Mr. Lincoln cleared his throat. "Do you know of any other appeal that would move Ichabod?"

Rose stood in silence looking back through the years, facing once for all what she had learned about bad temper in human beings. And she realized that no appeal to her father regarding his temper would move him. To Ichabod, his loss of self-control was always righteous indignation. She stood silent so long that Mr. Lincoln began to pace the floor again. Rose spoke in a startled voice, as if she could not believe her own conclusion.

"I'll see what I can do with father."

Mr. Lincoln came slowly toward her, his face flushed in sympathy with her pallor. "And having reached so great a decision, I know that you will carry it out with as much adroitness as you showed in handling Bodie. It's not for me to thank you, Miss Rose—that's in the hands of the God of nations. Only," he placed a great hand on either of Rose's shoulders, "will you not let me say that I have found that the only real satisfaction in one's life comes not from personal joys, but from— Ah, Miss Rose! Miss Rose! I know all that you are suffering. All!" He turned hastily away, picked up his high hat and left the room.

HER father was seated at the table, dictating to his secretary. Rose crossed the room swiftly. She felt as if she had been running a long race. "Father, will you ask Arthur to leave us alone for a little while?"

Ichabod looked up impatiently: "This is important, Rose!"

"But this is more important. Don't defer hearing what I have to say, father, please."

Ichabod, with a little scowl, nodded at his secretary, who left the room hastily. Rose sat down in his place opposite her father.

"Mr. Lincoln," she said, "has been talking to me about your position as leader of this convention, father. He feels that you are the only man fitted to weld together the various factions. Of course many of us have known that for a long time, but it is a notable thing to have a man like Mr. Lincoln volunteer such a comment."

Ichabod stared at his daughter. "Is that what he was so insistent on seeing you about? He's an adroit politician. I wonder if Mark Antony is growing ambitious, and by some method of indirection——"

"No! no! You misjudge him, indeed, father! I asked him point-blank if he would pull the convention together. He seemed so worried about it. But he said no, that he lacked the educational qualifications you possess."

"Did he, indeed?" Ichabod looked thoughtful. "Well, he's right. I'm glad he recognizes his own limitations. Lincoln's first rate on the Sangamon River and an extremely keen politician. But he's too coarse-fibered for large uses. What did he want of you, daughter?"

"Before I answer that, father, let me ask you a question. Are you still worried lest internal quarrels break up the convention?"

"Still worried? Why, Rose, where's your usual acumen? I am distracted with fear lest the new party be still-born. Didn't you understand this morning how they are going to use that cursed Sumner-Brooks episode?"

Rose bit her lips, then sat slowly erect. "I've been thinking, father, that with so much at stake, I shall withdraw my friendship for Owen Bashford. I do not know that it will force Owen to change his attitude, but at least it may make you feel—" She paused, astounded by the vivid light that leaped to her father's eyes.

Ichabod leaned across the table. "You will do that? You have that faith in the righteousness of my position?"

Rose nodded.

Her father sprang to his feet. "Rose! Rose! I feel as I've not felt since your mother was with me—that I have the vital backing of my own! Pshaw! I care little now whether Owen retracts his statements or not. With this knowledge of you behind me, I can move mountains. Ah, Rose! Blood is thicker than water."

Rose was very pale, and she did not move until she lifted her head to say, "But, father, Owen has many backers. How will you satisfy them?"

"Oh, I shall withdraw my exactions. I shall be magnanimous."

Rose nodded. "The blow at the breakfast table—did Owen return that after I left?"

"No!" Ichabod's face darkened.

"I think perhaps your magnanimity must extend to an apology for that, father. It would be an example to Brooks and his kind. You see," as Ichabod threw back his head with a jerk, "I look on this as one of the greatest works of your life. As Mr. Lincoln says, it may mean the saving of the nation. The credit will always belong to you, and I want history to hold against you nothing that can be misinterpreted to mar your record."

Ichabod's expression gradually lightened. He interrupted Rose to say: "Our private prejudices must give way. Owen Bashford's faction is needed. I shall send him a letter of apology. And, Rose," as she got slowly to her feet, "Rose, my daughter, I have not been altogether blind for your feeling for Owen. I shall make it my duty to make you feel that there has been no real sacrifice."

"Thank you, father," said Rose dully. "I must go for Bodie." And she left the room on leaden feet.

BUT she was not to reach her small brother at once, for Owen stood at the door of the little up-stairs parlor. He held the door open for her and closed it behind her. His nostrils were pinched, his eyes full of pain.

"Rose! Mr. Lincoln told me. Have you been to your father?"

"Yes!"

"Without first seeing me? Was that fair? Had I not the right to question my own death-warrant?"

"We think so much alike," replied Rose slowly, "that I felt you'd understand and submit to the decision."

"You thought that any new party in the world would be worth the sacrifice of you?" Owen moved toward Rose. He was taller than she, a virile, upstanding man with a fine mouth. There was heart-break in his voice as he said, "For it is my own death-warrant!" He put his arms around Rose.

She buried her face against his cheek, but he turned her lips to his and kissed her. "There! There is my soul, laid on your lips, Rose. It never can return to me. Now, can you give me up?"

Rose did not reply for a moment while she gathered together every force within her. Then she said: "A little while ago in this room Mr. Lincoln and I buried Rose Franklin, the person. There's left only Rose Franklin, the Abolitionist. Owen, don't you understand why I did it?"

"Yes, Rose, I understand." The man touched her tortured face with his trembling fingers. "Look at me, Rose! I want to see if the decision is irrevocable."

Continued on page 74

Send coupon for 10-day test

FILM the worst enemy to teeth

You can feel it with your tongue

Maybe your teeth are gloriously clear

—simply clouded with a film coat

Find out by making this unique test. Thousands who go through life wishing for beautiful teeth already have them . . . yet never reveal them—or know they have them!

THOUSANDS of people unconsciously handicap themselves in domestic and social life with cloudy teeth—absolutely without reason.

Scientists now prove that most people have pretty, clear teeth. And that dingy, dull teeth simply indicate a condition that can easily be corrected.

You may be one of those people. Have really charming teeth and yet not know it.

Now a test is being offered which will enable you to find out. The coupon brings it without charge. So it is folly not to make it.

It's simply a film—a stubborn film that you can easily remove Run your tongue across your teeth. You will feel a film. A film that absorbs discolorations and hides the natural color and luster of your teeth.

Old-time dentifrices failed in successfully combating that film. That is why, regardless of all the care you take now, your teeth remain "off color," dingy looking, unattractive.

Remove it, and you, like millions before you, will be surprised to find that your own teeth are as pretty as anyone's.

What it is—how it invites tooth troubles and decay

Modern dental practice urges the constant fighting of that film. Urges it on grounds of beauty and, more importantly, on health. For it is charged with most tooth troubles of today.

It clings to teeth, gets into crevices and stays. It holds food substance which ferments and causes acid. In contact with teeth, this acid fosters decay.

Germs by the millions breed in it and multiply. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

So that same film that hides your pretty teeth is too the great enemy of healthy, sound teeth—an ever-present danger in your mouth.

You must remove it three times daily. It is ever forming, ever present. Soap and chalk preparations are inadequate. Harsh, gritty substances are dangerous to enamel.

New methods that supplant old

Now modern science has discovered new and radically different methods. A dentifrice called Pepsodent—different in formula, action and effect from any you have ever known.

Its action is to curdle that film. Then harmlessly to remove it. No harsh grit, no soap, no chalk—a new way that is changing the tooth cleansing habits of the world.

Make this test

To millions this new way has proved the folly of having ugly teeth. The folly of inviting tooth troubles and the poor health that results.

It will give you the lustrous teeth you want—quickly.

Results will surprise you. Mail the coupon now. Why follow old methods when world's leading dental authority urges a better way?

FREE Mail Coupon for 10-Day Tube to Pepsodent PAT. OFF. REG. U.S. 1744

THE PEPSODENT COMPANY, Dept. 438, 1104 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

Send to:

Name .....

Address .....

Only one tube to a family

A frankly written book which every mother will want to show her daughter

WHAT is more difficult for a mother than the instruction of her daughter in the facts about feminine hygiene? No matter how scientific and up-to-date her own information may be, it is hard to know just where to begin, and how. This little book solves the problem for mother, daughter or wife. It carries a clear and sensible message for every woman who values her health and peace of mind.

In this age of wholesome frankness there are still far too many women who stumble along unguided. Some have absolutely nobody to tell them what they should know. Some have received wrong or incomplete advice. Others are simply too shy or timid to ask.

The result is that thousands of women today are running untold risks through the use of poisonous, caustic antiseptics. A shameful condition, but physicians and nurses will vouch for the truth of this statement.

A whole medicine chest in itself

Zonite kills germs.

That is why Zonite is valuable for so many different purposes.

For prevention against colds, coughs, grippe and influenza.

For a daily mouth-wash to guard against pyorrhea and other gum infections.

For cuts, wounds, burns and scratches.

For use as a deodorant.

Remember that Zonite, though a very powerful antiseptic, is non-poisonous and absolutely safe to use.

In bottles 50c and $1 at drug stores

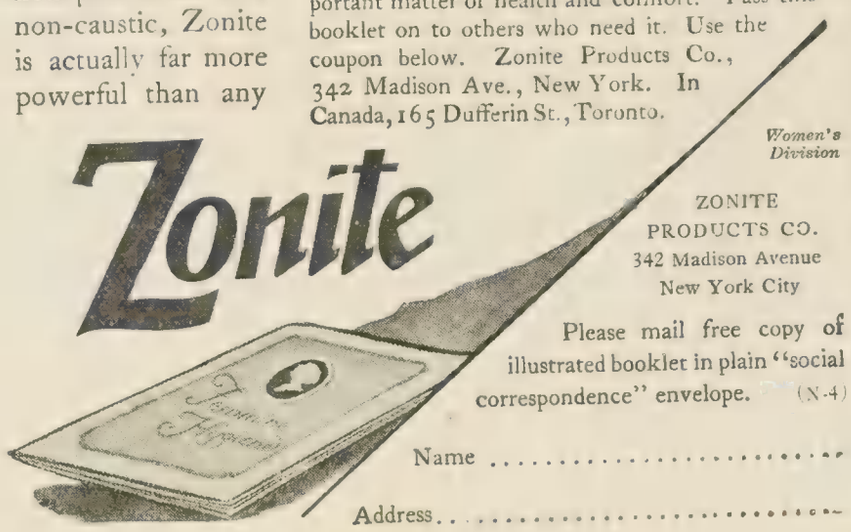
Slightly higher in Canada

If your druggist cannot supply you, send 50c direct to the Zonite Products Co.

It is unnecessary to run these risks

Happily, science has now come to the aid of woman in her natural desire to achieve a complete surgical cleanliness and to do it safely. She can now throw out all such deadly poisons from the home and install in their place the great new antiseptic called Zonite. Though absolutely non-poisonous and non-caustic, Zonite is actually far more powerful than any dilution of carbolic acid that can be safely applied to the human body, and fifty times as strong as peroxide of hydrogen. These comparisons give some idea of the standing of Zonite as a genuine germicide.

How different in its nature is Zonite from the compounds containing phenol, cresol and bichloride of mercury! These fluids, even when greatly diluted, remain so caustic in their action that they can not, for instance, be held in the mouth without sharply corroding and withering the delicate tissue-lining. Zonite, on the contrary, is non-poisonous and so absolutely safe that dental authorities are actually recommending it widely for use in the practice of oral hygiene.



The clean wholesomeness of Zonite

Enlightened women of refinement everywhere have been the first to see the change that Zonite has brought into their lives. While knowing the importance of personal hygiene to their lasting health and happiness, they have in the past shrunk from the use of poisonous antiseptics. Now they have Zonite. And Zonite, clean and wholesome as an ocean breeze, is an assurance of a continued period of daintiness, charm and freedom from worry.

The Women's Division offers this booklet free

The Women's Division has prepared this dainty booklet especially for the use and convenience of women. The information it contains is concise and to the point. A delicate subject is treated with scientific frankness, as it should be. Send for it. Read it. Then you can properly consider yourself abreast of the times in a very important matter of health and comfort. Pass this booklet on to others who need it. Use the coupon below. Zonite Products Co., 342 Madison Ave., New York. In Canada, 165 Dufferin St., Toronto.

Zonite

Women's Division

ZONITE PRODUCTS CO.
342 Madison Avenue
New York City

Please mail free copy of illustrated booklet in plain "social correspondence" envelope. (N-4)

Name .....

Address .....

THE LOST SPEECH

Continued from page 72

His eyes grew more haggard as he gazed. "And do you think that I shall tamely submit to this sort of thing from your father?"

"I've given him my word and he's writing you an apology. Owen, if you do not accept that apology, the wrecking of the new party will be on your head."

"In other words," exclaimed Owen, with sudden bitterness, "if I submit, I lose you. If I do not submit, I wreck the convention, become an object of contempt to you and lose you, anyhow! Rose, this is not justice. It is not——"

He turned from her as the door flung open and Bodie entered dangling a fish of about three inches in length on the end of a string. He was dripping wet and muddy.

"The first one I ever caught, Rose! I brought it to you."

Before Rose could speak, her father's secretary appeared in the door. "I have a message for you, sir, from Mr. Lincoln. Would you step this way? He is in Mr. Browning's room with Messrs. Lovejoy and Davis."

Owen drew a long breath. "I'll see you, shortly, Rose, and finish this," he said, and followed Arthur down the hall.

Rose led the excited Bodie to his room, murmuring enthusiastic but mechanical admiration of the fish. She helped him change from the dripping velvets.

"You come fishing with me, Rose!" he cried. "It beats any old convention!"

"I wish I could, Bodie dear, but I must spend the rest of the day at the hall."

"Well, but Rose," Podie spoke anxiously, "I can eat dinner with you, can't I, and supper?"

"Yes, and if you want me you may come to Major's Hall down the street and some one will find me for you."

Bodie, in a clean linen suit, eyed his sister suspiciously. "Have you been crying, Rose?"

"No, dear."

"Because if father ever makes you cry, I'm going to do to him what I did to the grocer's boy. Just because I wear velvet pants ain't saying I can't fight or catch fish!" His ferocity of manner combined with his almost girlish beauty amused and charmed Rose, heart-sore as she was. She kissed the little boy gratefully. He went on with great vehemence. "And I met Mr. Lincoln outside and he said he felt just like me when he caught his first fish, but that he didn't have on velvet pants. And I told him if he talked about them any more I'd fight him. And he said he'd never blame me. He's a nice man. Lots nicer than father, even if father is smarter. I'm going to catch him a fish."

Rose put on her shepherdess hat and held out her hand to Bodie. "You can walk with me as far as Major's Hall. Then you'll know the way," she said.

ALL that day Rose sat in the hall watching the birth-pangs by which a great political party was making its advent into Illinois. What Mr. Lincoln or her father may have said to Owen she did not know, for all that day he did not come near her. And after the first few hours Rose succeeded in concentrating her mind to some degree on the events in the hall.

As the day wore on, she found something more than personal excitement enthralling her. Ichabod had convinced Rose months before, as he had convinced the five or six hundred delegates to the convention, that the Abolition movement was not mere party cant but a deep-seated issue involving the very fate of the nation. Rose watched with breathless eagerness for signs of the partisan hostility which had flared so menacingly in the early morning. What means her father used she did not know, but soothed and secured from jealousy by her promise, he was able to bring remarkable outward harmony into the session of political enemies. There could be no doubt of the earnestness and high purpose of the gathering. Moved by the national emergency, Whig and Democrat, Free Soiler, Knownothing and Abolitionist—the lions and the lambs lay together in apparent amity.

There were many good speeches made: the finest of all undoubtedly by Ichabod Franklin, who, in asking that the new party be known as the Republicans, gave a history of the anti-slavery movement in America that the brilliant Charles Sumner could not have bettered.

And yet——

And yet Rose knew, as did her father and every man and woman in Major's Hall that night, that when the Republican party of Illinois had been born it had been born dead!

Ichabod had been able to make men see with their minds what to do. He had not been able to make them feel it with their hearts. It was a party without vital impulse, without cohesion, without driving force. As the evening wore on, a curious uncertainty and apprehensiveness settled on the great gathering. This creature born of the day's travail never would live to fight the passionate South, and Rose's sacrifice was to prove vain. After all, her father had not been the man to birth this thing. Rose realized this toward the end of the evening with a sense of impending disaster that was epic in its proportions. But, she whispered to herself, the delegation must not fail. It must not.

A delegate from one of the border counties was telling of the sacking of Lawrence, Kansas, by guerrilla posses. Rose turned impatiently from his spread-eagle eloquence and stooped over Bodie, who lay asleep with his golden head in her lap.

"Bodie," she whispered, "Mr. Lincoln is in the back of the hall by the door. Will you ask him to come here to me?"

Bodie rubbed his sleepy eyes with a clenched fist, from which protruded a fish's silvery tail. "I'll give him the minnie I caught for him," he murmured.

In an astonishingly short time he was back, clinging to Mr. Lincoln's great hand. The lawyer dropped into Bodie's seat and held the child between his knees. The fish lay in one huge outspread palm.

"Mr. Lincoln," said Rose, softly, "if they call you, speak!"

"Nothing can rouse this corpse," returned Mr. Lincoln. "It's as dead as this little fish."

"You can rouse it. If the people call you, reply to them. Won't you? Have you, by any chance, outlined something?"

Lincoln nodded. "I've thought for weeks of what ought to be said. I've nothing written, though."

"If they call for you, will you speak?" insisted Rose.

"Only if the call is general. Don't you see that otherwise it would be wasted effort?"

"Yes, I do," agreed Rose. "Will you return to the back of the hall, now, Mr. Lincoln?" She put her hand on his arm in apology for the request.

Mr. Lincoln nodded as simply as did Bodie at his sister's requests. He looked down at the very defunct fish in his palm, then at Bodie, leaning against his great knee.

"Isn't it a Jim Dandy?" whispered the little boy, slipping an arm around the lawyer's neck.

"It's more than that," replied Mr. Lincoln soberly. He shook his head over the fish, then solemnly slipped it into his pocket. Bodie gave a wriggle of satisfaction and Mr. Lincoln kissed the child's round cheek and, with a nod to Rose, returned to the back of the hall.

A MOMENT later the delegate from the border county finished his speech and, in the burst of applause that followed, Rose stood erect. Her commanding presence, her splendid look, received instant attention. She raised her hand.

"I want to hear Abraham Lincoln speak!" she cried.

There was a moment's silence while the delegates swung to her suggestion. Then a man shouted, "Lincoln! Abe Lincoln!"

A hundred voices took up the cry. Five hundred voices joined in. Rose sank into her place with a sigh as the tall figure strode down the aisle.

He paused as if to speak from the floor.

"Get up on the platform, Lincoln," roared some one, "and tell us——"

A still greater voice drowned the other. "Speak to us! Tell us, Watchman, what of the night!"

"Watchman, what of the night?"

The phrase caught the imagination of the crowd, and it was repeated in breathless anxiety as Lincoln mounted the platform and stood for a moment waiting for silence.

Concluded on page 76

AFTER THIRTY - can a woman still gain the charm of "A skin you Love to Touch?"

OFTEN the best of life doesn't begin for a woman until she is thirty. Often it is only then that she begins to realize herself and her own possibilities. Don't think of your age, whatever it is, as a limitation—think of it as an opportunity! Use the knowledge you have gained from life to overcome past faults and disadvantages. Make up your mind to be lovelier every year—and you will be!

SOME women have a better complexion at thirty or thirty-five than they ever had in their twenties.

The reason is simply that they have learned to take better care of their skin.

At twenty, contrary to popular tradition, a girl's complexion is often at its worst.

Too many sweets—late hours—and above all, neglect of a few simple rules of skin hygiene, result in a dull, sallow color, disfiguring blemishes, and ugly little blackheads.

By giving your skin the right care you can often gain a lovelier skin at thirty than you ever had before.

Remember that each day your skin is changing; old skin dies and new takes its place. Whatever your complexion has been in the past—by beginning, now, to give this new skin the treatment it needs, you can gradually build up a fresh, clear, radiant complexion.

How you can free your skin from blemishes

Just before you go to bed, wash in your usual way with warm water and Woodbury's Facial Soap, finishing with a dash of cold water. Then dip the tips of your fingers in warm water and rub them on the cake of Woodbury's until they are covered with a heavy, cream-like lather. Cover each blemish with a thick coat of this and leave it on for ten minutes; then rinse very carefully, first with clear hot water, then with cold.

Use this treatment to overcome blackheads

Every night before retiring apply hot cloths to your face until the skin is reddened. Then with a rough washcloth work up a heavy lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub it into the pores thoroughly, always with an upward and outward motion. Rinse with clear hot water, then with cold. If possible, rub your face for thirty seconds with a piece of ice.

A special treatment for an oily skin

First, cleanse your skin by washing in your usual way with Woodbury's Facial Soap and luke-warm water. Wipe off the surplus moisture, but leave the skin slightly damp. Now, with warm water work up a heavy lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap in your hands. Apply it to your face and rub it into the pores thoroughly—always with an upward and outward motion. Rinse with warm water, then with cold—the colder the better. If possible, rub your face for thirty seconds with a piece of ice.

How to give a sallow skin color and life

Once or twice a week, just before retiring, fill your basin full of hot water—almost boiling hot. Bend over the top of the basin and cover your head and the bowl with a heavy bath towel, so that no steam can escape. Steam your face for thirty seconds. Now lather a hot cloth with Woodbury's Facial Soap. With this wash your face thoroughly, rubbing the lather well into the skin with an upward and outward motion. Then rinse the skin well, first with warm water, then with cold, and finish by rubbing it for thirty seconds with a piece of ice.

What particular skin problem are you facing?

No matter what your type of skin happens to be—you will find the treatment that exactly meets its needs in the booklet of famous skin treatments, "A Skin you Love to Touch," which is wrapped around every cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap.

Get a cake of Woodbury's today and begin your treatment tonight. See what a marked improvement the daily use of Woodbury's will make in your complexion. Faults that have troubled you for years will disappear. The whole tone of your skin will become younger, fresher, cleaner.

* * *

You can get Woodbury's Facial Soap at any drug store or toilet goods counter. A 25-cent cake lasts a month or six weeks for regular use, including any of the special Woodbury treatments. For convenience—get Woodbury's in 3-cake boxes.

Three Woodbury skin preparations—guest size—for 10 cents

THE ANDREW JERGENS CO.
1902 Spring Grove Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio

For the enclosed 10 cents—Please send me a miniature set of the Woodbury skin preparations, containing:

A trial size cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap
A sample tube of Woodbury's Facial Cream
A sample box of Woodbury's Facial Powder
Together with the treatment booklet, "A Skin You Love to Touch."

If you live in Canada, address The Andrew Jergens Co., Limited, 1902 Sherbrooke St., Perth, Ontario. English Agents: H. C. Quelch & Co., 4 Ludgate Square, London, E. C. 4.

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

Cut out this coupon and send it to us today

Copyright, 1924, by The Andrew Jergens Co.

BUTTERFIELD FABRICS

of Quality and Fashion

SINCE 1837

"Everybody thinks it's silk" if it's made of

Lingette

Your lingerie and negligees, your nightdresses or pajamas —all will have silk's soft texture, silk's shimmering beauty, if they are made of Lingette. Lingette is caressingly soft to your body; it is light in weight, and does not "bunch" under your slender frocks. Yet Lingette—every thread—is long-wearing cotton. Fine, sturdy cotton that defies warm soapy water and hard wear! Insist upon Lingette —it is easily identified by the name on the selvage. Every Lingette garment has in it a special Lingette label.

Gay in color — novel in pattern — the new

Normandy Voiles

For indoor wear now, for outdoor wear as soon as the weather is warm enough—you can find no fabric more charming for your own and your children's frocks. The colorings are indeed lovely and—as always—the little raised dots that form the patterns are guaranteed absolutely fast. If you see "Normandy Fabric" marked on the selvage, or a "Normandy" label sewn in the dress, you know that you are obtaining the genuine fabric.

Reasons why you find such superiority in

Butterfield Fabrics

In 1837, nearly a century ago, Fred Butterfield of Bradford, England, set forth in a sailing ship with two thousand pieces of fine British worsteds, and established himself in business in this country. Even in those days Bradford was noted for its fine textiles — and Fred Butterfield was the youngest of four brothers whose business had long been established there.

For 87 years now Fred Butterfield & Co. have concentrated on the evolution of fine American fabrics — of unusual quality—combining such remarkable beauty and service that you are amply rewarded for selecting them.

FRED BUTTERFIELD & CO., Inc., 361 Broadway, N.Y.C.

Notice the little fat man woven in this Butterfield label! It is the trade mark of a superior fabric.

There are special labels for Lingette and Normandy Voile, also with the little fat man for your guidance.

THE LOST SPEECH

Concluded from page 74

Ah, well! How shall one describe what Lincoln said? It was sixty-seven years ago that he made this the greatest speech of his life. Men still live who, as adolescent boys, heard him that May evening in Bloomington. They say that that night, standing on that platform, the beauty of his utterance was only equaled by the inspired beauty of his face—that he spoke like a god.

His face was pale. His great eyes burned black fire. His voice, which sometimes had been called too harsh, deepened and enveloped the great room in thundering organ notes. His audience, always glad to be amused and touched by one of Honest Abe's homely speeches, sat for the first few moments stunned by the transfiguration of the plain country lawyer into something greater than they readily could conceive.

He moved toward the front of the platform, his hands on his hips, and there was not a man who saw him who did not realize that there was a human being actuated by an overwhelming responsibility to the nation. He spoke for an hour and a half. At the end of the first five minutes reporters dropped their pencils, absorbed by the passion of the orator. At the end of the first three-quarters of an hour the reporters, with the rest of the audience, had risen from their seats and when Lincoln, his great arms lifted above his head, made a last appeal to the greatness of men's souls to stand against the break-up of the nation, his audience, pale of face, with tear-drenched eyes, had pressed forward from their places so that they made a solid human mass about the platform. And, as he ceased to speak, they burst forth in applause that was half worship, seized upon him and carried him to their hearts.

The new party had been born anew, its factions welded by tears.

Rose, clasping her little brother with one arm, pressed forward with the rest, her very soul lifted from her body. As Lincoln finished his peroration, she found her father beside her, his face drawn, tears streaming unchecked from his dark eyes.

"Yes! yes!" she heard him sob. "Yes! yes! This speech will stay the hand of civil war."

Rose slipped her hand through her father's. "I must thank him," muttered Ichabod. "He has done the impossible. The Republican party lives and breathes and——"

"Let's go back to the hotel," said Rose, "and talk to him there. It will be impossible to get near him here for a long time."

ICHABOD was too profoundly moved to come back to normal at once. He stood running his hands through his hair and repeating phrases from Lincoln's speech. Rose had not seen him so moved since her mother died. Suddenly he turned to her.

"I misjudged him!" he exclaimed. "Lincoln is a great man. He can do anything. I shall do for him whatever he asks. A man who can speak like that! By the eternal fathers, he has kindled a torch to-night that shall flare higher and higher, till it lights the world."

Men who could not reach Mr. Lincoln began to come up to congratulate Ichabod. He was strangely humble and told one after another that it had not been at his suggestion that Rose had called for Lincoln. The credit was hers.

"Then your daughter has put the country very deeply in her debt," said one man. "This party owes to her an inspiration that should carry it through a century of politics. I was glad to see Owen Bashford subdued and in line to-day."

Ichabod, still in the exalted mood begot by the speech, turned to Rose. "That, too, was my daughter's work!" Rose gave her father a strange look. In spite of the feeling roused in her by Mr. Lincoln's oratory, she was acutely conscious of the death-like pain in her heart. Ichabod caught the look. "You are glad, now, of the sacrifice, are you not, Rose?"

Rose, the weary Bodie leaning heavily against her, replied brokenly: "Was it a necessary sacrifice, father? Now, still with the sound of Mr. Lincoln's great plea in your ears for devotion to human happiness—was it a necessary sacrifice?"

Ichabod stood staring at his daughter from the fine heights to which Lincoln had lifted him. Rose, for once, saw him as she thought her mother must have idealized him, with a nobility of soul equal to the brilliancy of his mind.

"Do you think that it was not necessary, Rose?"

"I know it was not," she replied brokenly.

"And do you think," cried Ichabod, "that I can do less for the party than you, or—or my deadliest rival?"

He whirled suddenly and crossed the aisle to where Owen Bashford stood with a group of friends. Ichabod held out his hand to the younger editor. "Sir," he said, "do you realize that it was my daughter who put Mr. Lincoln on that platform this evening?"

Very reluctantly Owen took the proffered hand. "We all realize that, sir."

"Then we owe to her," continued Ichabod, "the fact that we've seen the first great blow struck at slavery. That speech, Mr. Bashford, has made me feel very small, very petty. I wish to bury all my private strifes. Will you accept my friendship, sir, public and private?"

Owen's group gasped. Nothing could have so assured them of the quality of Mr. Lincoln's speech as the effect it was showing on the bitter and brilliant Ichabod Franklin. Owen, whose tear-stained cheeks did not detract from his dignity, bowed over the hand which still clung to his. Ichabod, with heaven knows what sudden cognizance of the grief his selfishness had caused, cleared his throat.

"Come, Owen," he said huskily, "come over to Rose."

And Rose, watching the conversation she could not hear, clung trembling to Bodie as she saw the two approach her. Her father was smiling. "Rose, here's our friend Owen. I'm asking him to take you and Bodie back to the hotel."

Bodie showed sudden interest in life. "Say, he made that speech with the fish I gave him in his pocket. I'll get you one tomorrow, father."

"If it will do for me—" Ichabod suddenly interrupted himself to catch at the sleeve of one of his own reporters. "Cooper! Are your notes complete? We must print that speech without a single omission."

Cooper blinked at his chief with bloodshot eyes. "But—but Mr. Franklin, I couldn't take notes listening to that!"

"What do you mean, sir?" roared Ichabod.

"What I say," replied Cooper with a gulp. "There isn't a reporter here who took down that speech!"

"Where's Hartopp, my correspondent?" exclaimed Owen.

"Over yonder," said Cooper.

"Get all the newspaper men together at the hotel at once," snapped Ichabod. "Rose, your memory is excellent. Come along."

He dashed out into the night. Rose and Owen followed, leading the comatose Bodie between them. They had not exchanged a word. It was not necessary. The very prairie stars above them sang the ecstasy in their hearts.

WHEN they reached the hotel, the effort to recapture the speech began. But it was a vain hunt. Mr. Lincoln could not recall what he had said. Entirely exhausted, he took a solitary walk under the stars and went to his bed. No one in the audience had set down the speech. It was lost to the world forever.

It had reconciled the irreconcilable. It had in very truth, as history has proved, lighted the torch that was to flare round the world. Its passion, its tragic beauty, its noble inspirations had breathed life into the dead souls of men. Then it had disseminated itself into the common air, and men were to hand it on to posterity only in a phrase, The Lost Speech.

In despair, Ichabod and Owen finally sent their reporters to set down such phrases as they could recall or rescue from other minds. Ichabod began to transcribe his own recollections and Owen departed to do likewise. He followed Rose down the hall and drew her for a moment into the little parlor.

Dawn was lifting across the eastern plains. The two stood for a long moment, arms entwined, eyes on the unspeakable beauty of the prairie distances. Then without a word Owen drew Rose into his arms and kissed her with passionate devotion. And then, still without a word, they parted for what remained of the night.

Unnoticed, unfelt – Dry Mouth is the real cause of modern tooth decay

The only way to keep your teeth both white and safe is to restore the normal action of the Mouth Glands

Pebeco not only makes your smile lovelier, it keeps your teeth strong and safe

Steichen

YOU cannot see Dry Mouth. And, except in extreme cases, you cannot even feel it.

Yet this curious condition, dentists say, is the underlying cause of most tooth decay.

Nature intended the mouth glands to flow continuously. But the glands today cannot get sufficient exercise from the soft, cooked foods we eat.

Gradually they dry up.

And when their alkaline fluids no longer bathe your mouth the acids that cause decay inevitably collect on your teeth.

How ordinary cleaning fails

You may remove the acids temporarily —by scouring with gritty pastes which endanger the unreplaceable enamel, by washing with strong substances that damage the gums and delicate mouth lining.

These methods whiten your teeth—but five minutes after you stop brushing the acids begin to form again. The baffling decay goes on.

It is only recently that dentists and physicians have recognized that there is a way to fight tooth decay by preventing its underlying cause—Dry Mouth. They know now that the mouth glands can be successfully stimulated. Today you can keep your teeth naturally safe with a tooth paste that restores the normal protective flow of the mouth glands.

What Pebeco does

The basic ingredient used in Pebeco was first employed by physicians years ago in the treatment of serious mouth conditions, where the teeth were already badly affected. It proved so remarkable in its effects on the teeth and the entire mouth, yet so gentle in its action, that it was made available in tooth paste form — now offered to you in Pebeco.

* * *

Pebeco is the simple, natural way to prevent tooth decay. It acts directly on the salivary glands. As soon as it enters your mouth it starts a full, normal flow of alkaline saliva.

With constant daily use Pebeco completely restores the natural, protective action of your glands. Their alkaline fluids again bathe your teeth day and night. The acids of decay are neutralized as fast as they form. And the deadly mucin and tartar deposits are gently softened and removed.

Pebeco leaves your gums clean and soothed—your whole mouth, normal and healthy. And in this healthy mouth, your teeth are kept not only white and shining, but safe.

Start today to overcome Dry Mouth. Send for a trial tube of Pebeco. Made only by Pebeco, Inc., N. Y. Sole Distributors: Lehn & Fink, Inc. Canadian Agents: H. F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., 10 McCaul St., Toronto. At all druggists.

FREE OFFER

SEND COUPON FOR FREE GENEROUS TUBE

Lehn & Fink, Inc., Sole Distributors. Dept. B-21
635 Greenwich Street, New York, N. Y.

Send me free your new large sized sample tube of Pebeco.

Name.....

Street.....

City.....State.....

Look for this shield on all Sheets and Pillow Cases

PEQUOT SHEETS AND PILLOW CASES

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

The Compliment of Imitation

IT is the well-dressed woman whom other women copy. It is the business methods of the successful man which the younger generation follow.

Just so is it the well-known standardized fabric which unknown fabrics attempt to imitate.

There is only one quality of Pequot Sheet—only one of Pequot Pillow Case, but there are a host of imitators. We realize the implied compliment, but we wish to urge our customers to protect themselves from buying "just as good" by looking for the Pequot label on every sheet and pillow case they buy.

Pequot Sheets and Pillow Cases are firmly woven with a fine, even weave. The different sizes are plainly marked on each article so that you can be sure of buying the correct size for your beds and pillows.

They are sold by most good dealers. They are attractively priced.

Pequot Sheeting and Pillow Tubing may be purchased by the yard and can always be identified by the ticket reproduced below.

Made by Naumkeag Steam Cotton Company
Salem, Massachusetts

Parker, Wilder & Company
Selling Agents
Boston and New York

PEQUOT WIDE COTTONS

This label on all piece goods

TOO FEW COOKS

Continued from page 10

"Not exactly. But you would have been sent to some orphanage where you would have been half-starved probably. You have come to a good home where you will be well cared for and properly educated. You will do exactly as I say about this matter. I will be obeyed. I am mistress here."

Emily folded her slender hands on the table and looked straight at Aunt Elizabeth with the steady, unblinking gaze that Aunt Elizabeth called "unchildlike."

"Anyway, Aunt Elizabeth," she said gravely, "you can't boss God."

For weeks Emily was a most unhappy little creature. To tingle with the delight of some swift conception and be forbidden to write it out—to be suddenly seized with an idea for a poem and realize immediately that you could not clothe it in words—all this was a torture which nobody who has not been born with the fatal "itch for writing" can comprehend. The Aunt Elizabeths of the world can never understand it. To them it is foolishness. There were times when Emily felt that she must fly into little pieces if she couldn't write out some of the things that came to her.

"But I must obey Aunt Elizabeth," she thought. "It is a Murray tradition that the head of the house must be obeyed."

There were other traditions of New Moon. One was that there must always be cake in the pantry—fresh, flawless cake—lest unexpected company come to tea. No company had ever found New Moon cakeless. Elizabeth and Laura Murray would both have died of horror on the spot if such a thing had happened. Kingdoms of Europe might rise and fall—famines might ravage India and China—Liberals and Conservatives, Republicans and Democarts might crash down to defeat—but so long as cake-box and cooky-jar were filled there was balm in Gilead.

Yet one day this unthinkable thing occurred. On Wednesday three buggy-loads of company came from Shrewsbury and found cake in the pantry—but left none. Early Thursday morning Aunt Elizabeth betook herself to the vine-hung cook-house at the northeast corner of New Moon to make another cake. But she had only got as far as getting out her mixing-bowl when Cousin Robert Murray of Derry Pond arrived, "bloody with spurring, fiery red with haste," or the modern equivalent for it. Great-uncle William Murray was dying—or thought he was—at Derry Pond. He wanted to see Laura and Elizabeth. They must lose no time if they were to get there before he died.

Go they did; but it was a tragedy. "I have never," said Aunt Elizabeth in a tone of anguish, as she tied on her bonnet, "gone away from home and left no cake in the house."

"Surely no one will come to-day," moaned Laura, equally wretched.

EMILY liked being alone very well at first. She felt quite important over being in charge of New Moon. She skimmed six lovely big pans of milk; she made up the spare-room bed, which had been disorganized by Cousin Margaret's sleepy twins; she got the dinner for herself and Cousin Jimmy; she washed the dishes. Then the end of the world came. Two buggies stopped at the gate; seven people descended therefrom and marched past Cousin Jimmy's platoons of hollyhocks with the air of people coming to stay. Emily, staring aghast through the window, recognized them. She had met them all at a clan funeral two weeks ago. Second Cousin Marcus Carter, his wife, son and daughter; Second Cousin Olivia Peake—and Third Cousin Doctor Palmer of Knox College, Toronto, with his wife.

And there was no cake at New Moon!

Something rose up in Emily and took possession of her, some inheritance from the good old stock behind her. She accepted the situation—she knew what she would do.

As graciously as any dear dead lady of New Moon could have done, Emily welcomed the guests at the door.

"Elizabeth and Laura away? Then I don't suppose we'll stay," exclaimed Cousin Marcella Carter, who had a long thin face, a long thin nose and a long thin mouth.

"You must stay for supper, of course," said Emily resolutely.

"Have you got anything good for us to eat?" asked Cousin Marcus with a chuckle. He had a square face, with a spiky white mustache, and neither of his eyebrows looked like the other. Emily thought she did not like him.

"I know the New Moon pantry is always well supplied," said Mrs. Doctor Palmer, smiling. She was a massive, handsome, dignified lady. In her smooth gray silk dress she looked, Emily decided, just like a nice, sleek gray cat.

"Well, give us something that will stick to our ribs," said Cousin Marcus. "We've had dinner at a place—I won't say where—but there was heaps of style and precious little comfort."

"Marcus!" said Cousin Marcella rebukingly.

"Fact. And now, Emily, I'll give you a quarter for a kiss."

Cousin Marcus was quite genial. A joke was his idea of being kind and sympathetic. But Emily did not know this and she resented it. Lifting her head as haughtily as any Murray of them all, she said haughtily:

"I don't sell my kisses."

The visitors laughed. Andy Carter said: "She's saving her kisses for me, dad."

There was another laugh. Emily shot a furious glance at Andy. He was about twelve, with a fat, round face, uneven, straight, whitish hair, staring china-blue eyes and spectacles. Under ordinary circumstances Emily could and would have annihilated him with ease and pleasure; but a New Moon hostess must not show discourtesy to any guest.

"She's got a nice mouth for kissing, anyhow," said Cousin Marcus.

Emily left her guests in the parlor and flew to the cook-house. She was breathless with excitement, but she knew exactly what was to be done. There was plenty of cold boiled chicken and ham left over from the previous day; there was plenty of cookies, and the New Moon jam-pots were full. But hot biscuit—there must be hot biscuit—and cake!

If Emily had been asked if she could cook, she might have answered like the canny Scot when asked if he could play the violin: he couldna say; he'd never tried. Emily had never tried. But she was going to try now. She had the New Moon recipe-book and she had watched Aunt Laura and Aunt Elizabeth scores of times.

Emily clasped floury hands over the cake-bowl.

"Oh, God, I think I can manage the biscuits, but You must help me with the cake."

Then she proceeded to mix, measure and beat. To make matters worse, Andy appeared. Andy was not happy unless he was teasing something. He proceeded to tease Emily, not having the least idea what a dangerous pastime it was, even when protected by the traditions of New Moon.

"I'm a terrible fellow," he declared. "I throw dead cats into wells. S'pose I throw yours?"

"I'll call my new pig after you," said Emily scornfully, and cracked an egg with violence.

Andy stared. What kind of a girl was this?

"I'm just over the measles," he said "Black measles. Ever had measles?"

"No."

"Mumps?"

"No."

"I've had mumps—and whooping-cough and scarlet fever and chicken-pox and pneumonia. I'm a terrible fellow to have things. You ever had any of them?"

"No."

"Did you ever have anything?" Andy was plainly contemptuous.

"Yes," said Emily, suddenly remembering something her father had said. "I've had cacoethes scribendi."

Andy stared again—but more respectfully.

"Golly! Is it bad?"

"Incurable," said Emily solemnly. "You never get over it."

Andy edged away. "Is it catching?"

"You couldn't catch it." There was that in Emily's tone Andy didn't like.

"Look here," he said furiously, "you give yourself airs that don't belong to you. You're only half Murray. And you've got cats' ears."

Continued on page 81

Do you look as young as your husband

WHY is it that so many men look younger than women of the same age? Some specialists believe that the enforced cleansing of the daily shave keeps a man's skin healthier and more youthful than the average woman's.

Most women lead busy lives in the home, socially or in business but no woman is too busy to spend ten minutes a day in the proper cleansing of her skin. Ten minutes is all that the daily use of Resinol Soap requires to thoroughly cleanse the skin and preserve a youthful complexion.

Used each night before retiring, the absolute purity of Resinol Soap offers to the sensitive skin a non-irritant cleanser, which refines its texture and rids the pores of impurities, imparting a velvety softness and pleasing clearness. It has no heavy perfume—which is only too often a cloak for mediocre quality—but possesses a mild healthy fragrance suggestive of summer woods.

For blotches, roughness, etc., try a touch of Resinol. This soothing, healing ointment is not only successful in clearing up facial blemishes, but it has been prescribed by doctors for years in the treatment of more serious itching, burning skin disorders. Keep a jar on hand. All druggists sell it.

Don't let your skin grow old! With a little care you can keep it as young as you are or even a little younger!

RESINOL SOAP

Dept. E, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

Please send me, without charge, a sample of Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment.

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

"My dear, this is that new Permanent Finish Indian Head. Have you heard of it? I think it will make up beautifully."

New Secret Process Gives Permanent Finish to Indian Head

Fresh and lasting beauty makes this popular material more fashionable than ever

YOU who have known Indian Head since you were a little girl will be surprised to find that your favorite fabric has been made even more attractive. But it is true.

Through a new secret process an added smartness has been given to Indian Head. At the same time it retains the same great durability that has made it famous for more than ninety years.

The new finish gives it a crispness hitherto seen only in the finest imported dress linens, yet it does not crush easily and is slow to soil. The characteristic weave of Indian Head appears more distinctive than ever before.

What is more — and of the greatest importance — this new finish is a permanent finish. Neither wear nor washing affects it. It will not "fuzz up." It is easy to iron and a delight to your needle. These are important virtues not only when Indian Head is used for clothing, but also when slip covers, hangings, or embroideries are made of this versatile material.

The colors are permanent, too — Each of the eighteen fashionable colors of Indian Head is fast — absolutely fast — money back if colors fade. Simply mail us the article with your merchant's name and we will send check.

Thus, with permanent colors and permanent finish, Indian Head retains its beautiful appearance until the cloth is worn out. And, as you know, Indian Head wears and wears.

Fast Color Indian Head — 18 colors, 36 inches wide, permanent finish — sells for fifty cents a yard. Every yard is stamped "Indian Head Permanent Finish." Look for the name on the selvage. White Indian Head — 7 widths (18 inches–63 inches), — sells from 25 to 90 cents a yard.

Ready-to-wear garments have the Indian Head label.

Test your Favorite Color

Send for our free booklet, "Your Color and Why," and a generous sample of your favorite color. "Treat it rough" and prove to yourself that its color and finish are permanent.

Amory, Browne & Co.
Dept. 612 Box 1206
Boston, Massachusetts

Nashua Blankets, Gilbrae Fine Cottons
Parkhill Fine Ginghams, Lancaster
Kalburnie Gingham, Buster Brown Hosiery,
Conestogo Woven Tickings

Peach Indian Head has a beauty of hue all its own. No shade of Indian Head will ever fade, and the Permanent Finish always looks just the same as on day you bought it.

Use Indian Head for your house dresses. You will find it ideal — and the new finish is easy and most satisfactory to iron.

Immensely popular is Indian Head for Southern and sports wear.

LOOK FOR THIS MARKING ON EVERY YARD

INDIAN HEAD

REG. U. S. PAT. OFFICE

CLOTH

Permanent Finish

© 1925, Amory, Browne & Co.
Boston and New York

PARIS forecasts for Spring

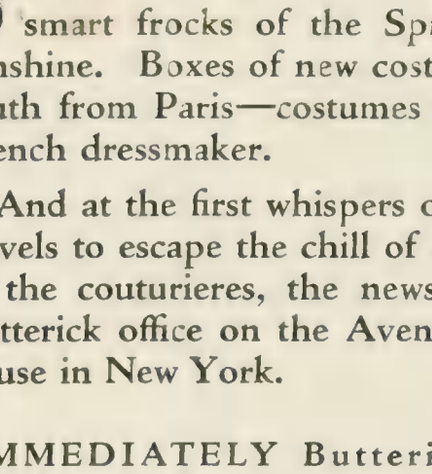
The ensemble is the important costume of the season: A simple frock to match the coat or coat lining. A tunic blouse over a slip, its lower part matching the coat. A composé frock matching both coat and lining .... The new sleeves are long and snug for general wear .... Skirts are extremely short .... When they wear belts at all Parisiennes wear them about the hips— lower than ever .... The straight silhouette varies by means of circular effects, godets and side draperies.

SOMEWHERE beside the blue of the Mediterranean the first smart frocks of the Spring are walking about in southern sunshine. Boxes of new costumes hasten on the expresses bound south from Paris—costumes with the unmistakable stamp of the French dressmaker.



And at the first whispers of the Spring fashions, whether Paris travels to escape the chill of February or returns for the openings of the couturieres, the news is being cabled straight from the Butterick office on the Avenue de l'Opéra to their great fashion house in New York.

IMMEDIATELY Butterick fashions reflect these new and vastly important modifications.

Fortunately you, yourself, can give your things the look of effortless perfection simply by following the Deltor, even if you've never sewed before.

It isn't hard, with the aid of the Deltor. Take, for instance, the delightfully slim frock with the cape back—Pattern No. 5788. You can cut this frock out of an unbelievably small amount of material because the Deltor gives you an individual layout for your size, planned for the precise width you want—something which other patterns fail to give you.

Then the Deltor makes it easy to put the frock together so it will have that all-important smartness of line. The long sleeve—a nice bit of tailoring—will offer no difficulties with the Deltor. Seams, finishing, other details are so carefully described that they can be done with the exquisite perfection of a Paris frock. The Deltor is furnished free with every Butterick Pattern. Butterick of New York, of Paris and of London.

The flower on the shoulder is the latest fad of Paris. These are two of twelve sketches you get in the Deltor showing how to make this smart detail

Pattern No. 5781 Pattern No. 5749

BUTTERICK PATTERNS WITH THE DELTOR

TOO FEW COOKS

Continued from page 78

Emily crimsoned to the tips of her pointed ears. But tradition held. She spared Andy's life.

"But if I ever meet you away from New Moon, I'll tell you what I think of you," she thought, as she measured her baking-powder.

"What you thinking of?" queried Andy, resenting her silence.

"I'm imagining how you'll look in your coffin," answered Emily deliberately.

This gave Andy to think. Was it safe to be alone with a girl who could imagine such things? But to leave her was to confess defeat.

"In five minutes by that clock I'm going to kiss you," he said with a fiendish grin.

Emily shuddered and shut her eyes. Then she had a diabolical inspiration.

"If you do, I'll pray for you every single night," she said.

"Don't you dast!" shouted Andy in a fury. "Don't you go telling God on me! I won't be prayed for!"

"How are you going to prevent me?"

HOW indeed! This was a poser. Andy wished he was well out of the cook-house and the presence of this exasperating creature. He shifted to a new point of attack.

"Why does Cousin Elizabeth burn nothing at New Moon but candles? S'pose it's because she's so mean?"

Emily was suddenly very angry. She herself often criticized Aunt Elizabeth in secret, but it was intolerable that an outsider should do it. She had one of her visitations of beauty. Anger brought a rose-hue into her cheeks and darkened her eyes. She looked so pretty it was almost a pity she couldn't have been angry all the time.

"Aunt Elizabeth can see farther by candlelight than you can by sunlight," she said.

But Andy was staring at her in amazement.

"Say, you're handsome after all. Look here, can I be your beau when we grow up?"

"No!" said Emily—and had her moment of triumph.

"What—what you got against me, Cats' Ears?" said Andy, his face falling.

Emily cast tradition to the winds. "You don't keep your nails clean," she said, beating her cake batter terrifically.

"What are you two young devils up to?" demanded Cousin Marcus, peering in at the door. "Come along, Andy; Jimmy is going to show us his colts."

Andy, as relieved to be rid of Emily as she was to be rid of him, vanished. Emily breathed a sigh of thanksgiving. Oh, would her cake be all right? That wretched boy had bothered her so. Had she remembered everything?

The cake was a gorgeous success. Remember that Emily was half a Murray. Then, too, there was Providence—or luck. It was a delicious feathery concoction with creamy filling and creamy frosting with golden orange crescents on it—the special company cake of New Moon. Emily had just as good luck with her biscuits. Then she set the table with the hemstitched cloth and Great-grandmother Murray's blue willowware set. Every domestic rite of New Moon was properly performed. The ham was sliced thin, the chicken-platter was parsley-fringed, the water in the tumblers was ice cold. She made the tea and carved the chicken. At the last moment she flew to her room and put on her Venetian beads.

"I want to show them I've got something," she thought.

Emily sat on the ladder-backed chair, facing the ordeal before her gallantly. She could feel her pulses beating to her fingertips. If only her hands would not tremble! She steadied her legs by twisting them around the rungs of the chair. Cousin Marcus did what in him lay to rattle her by conjuring her not to fill the cups so full of tea that there wasn't room for cream, as mean old Fourth Cousin Mary Pendleton always did; and Cousin Jimmy helped the chicken so lavishly that she broke out in cold perspiration lest there shouldn't be enough to go around. Mrs. Doctor Palmer took cream and no sugar, and Doctor Palmer took sugar and no cream, and Cousin Marcella took neither, and Cousin Olivia took cambric tea. It was very difficult to remember everything; but eventually everybody got something to drink and the chicken did go around.

"I would know Elizabeth Murray's cake if I met it in Central Africa," said Cousin Marcella, helping herself to a second piece.

Emily glowed with pride. But not a word did she say, and she hoped devoutly that Andy would not either. For the honor of New Moon, no one of those guests must ever dream that the cake had been made after they arrived.

Andy said nothing, being occupied in gorging, and presently it dawned on Emily that supper was almost over and all had gone well. But at this moment Cousin Olivia took it into her head to bait Emily a little. Cousin Olivia was a thin, middle-aged person with a colorless face, prominent teeth, most of which she showed when she laughed, and cold, watchful gray eyes.

"Can you sew, Emily?" asked Cousin Olivia.

"No."

"Can you knit?"

"No."

"Can you sing?"

"No-o-o."

"Can you play the organ?"

"No."

Little Cousin Muriel Carter giggled.

"Then what can you do?" said Cousin Olivia.

"I can write poetry," said Emily in exasperation.

"You bet she can," spoke up Andy. "I've got one of her note-books here. It's full of poetry. Want to hear some of it?"

Andy produced the note-book from his pocket. He must have stolen it from her school-bag. Emily felt as if she were in a dreadful dream. She must not make a scene, she could not leave the table—Cousin Marcella hadn't finished her preserves. Yet that awful boy was going to read some of her poems aloud.

Nothing was more terrible than the thought of having her beloved verses read aloud to stranger ears—cold, unsympathetic stranger ears. Yet it was happening. Andy was reading a poem—reading it with absurd intonations and gestures that made it seem a very ridiculous thing. The lines Emily thought the finest seemed to be most ridiculous. The little fancies that had seemed so beautiful to her were bruised and shattered now, like torn and mangled butterflies.

"Oh," thought Emily, clenching her hands under the table, "I wish the bears that ate the naughty children in the Bible would come and eat you."

But there were no nice, retributive bears about New Moon.

"Lilies lifted up white cu-u-ps
For the bees to dr-r-ink," chanted Andy, shutting his eyes and wagging his head from side to side. Little Cousin Muriel Carter giggled again. Emily hated her.

"That doesn't sound much like poetry," said Cousin Olivia.

"It's blank verse," said tortured Emily.

"Very blank," said Cousin Olivia, and smiled.

Suddenly Doctor Palmer leaned forward and took the little black book from Andy.

"That will do," he said quietly. He was a tall gray-haired man with a scholarly face and an indisputable way of speaking. He carried the note-book off with him, and Emily did not see it again until she was washing the willowware cups in the kitchen. Then she glanced up to see him smiling down at her.

"Here is your note-book, Emily. I confess I've read all the poems in it—and the little story at the back."

Emily blushed scorchingly, dried her hands, and put the note-book away. But when she returned, Doctor Palmer was still leaning against the dresser.

"Keep on—keep on, Emily," he said. "I think you'll be able to do something by and by. Something—I don't know how much. But keep on."

Emily was suddenly so happy she wanted to cry. It was the first word of commendation she had ever received except from her father—and a father might have too high an opinion of one. This was different.

"There are some good lines in your verses," went on Doctor Palmer. "And your story shows promise. You've got a sense of humor and a feeling for words."

Concluded on page 82

May Breath Free At Your Store Present Coupon

A Pure Breath

Is simply good manners

Millions have turned to this NEW way—scientific protection that you carry with you, always

THERE is no question any more about bad breath. Years ago, it may have been unavoidable. Today, it's judged unpardonable.

Any person who has ever drawn away from another because of it knows just how repellent it is.

Now you need not risk giving this offense. Millions are avoiding it in an amazing simple, new way.

What it is

May Breath is an antiseptic mouth wash in tablet form; dainty little tablets that you carry with you.

Dissolve one in your mouth, that is all. Instantly your breath is purified, given the freshness of Maytime.

Not a mere perfume; for that simply cries out your effort at concealment. Not a liquid purifier that can only be used at home. May Breath supplies constant protection in the most convenient way.

* * * *

Bad breath comes from so many causes that scarcely one person in fifty escapes it at one time or another.

Stomach disorders may cause it, or food fermenting between the teeth. Certain foods and drinks are peculiarly apt to cause it. Smoking is a chief offender.

Careful people today, the world over, practice breath purity as simple good manners.

* * * *

Carry May Breath with you. It's in flat metal boxes that fit into your purse, or a pocket.

Never risk close contact with others, never go to a dance or theatre without taking the precaution of a May Breath tablet.

Send the coupon and we will gladly send you a box free. Then you will know the good it brings. Tear out the coupon before you forget.

Cigar odors
Quell them before you dance.

In your home
Be as careful as you are with friends. Insure sweet breath.

Spring odors
One May Breath tablet brings that added charm.

15c and 25c

May Breath is now on sale in Canada

GOOD FOR A 15c Box

Present this coupon to any druggist for a 15c box of May Breath free. He will charge to us.

All leading druggists and most others now have May Breath. If your druggist fails you, send coupon to us. Only one box to a family.

TO DRUGGISTS: These coupons will continue to appear. Redeem as per our offer, send to us as they accumulate, and we will pay you 15 cents each in cash.

MAY BREATH COMPANY
Dept. M-128, 1104 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Canadian Branch: 191 George St., Toronto

Give the Children a good start

Train them from infancy to be regular in Nature's most important daily function

MOTHERS must watch three things very carefully if they expect their children to be healthy and normal in size and weight: that the food agrees with them; that they digest it thoroughly; that they expel the waste regularly once or twice every day.

When your child is constipated quickly give, according to age, a half or a whole spoonful of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is a delightfully pleasant vegetable compound of Egyptian senna and pepsin with aromatics the formula being, printed in full on the package. It is wholly free from opiates and narcotics; mild and gentle in action. A bottle that can be procured at any drug store for sixty cents will be found sufficient to last a family for months. All can use it.

Don't hesitate, don't postpone. A dose of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin relieves children of constipation and biliousness, reduces feverishness and wards off colds, dispels nervousness and produces sleep, clears up a blotchy skin and restores appetite.

Sample Bottle Free

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the largest selling liquid laxative in the world, over 10 million bottles being sold annually, but if you have never used it in your family send your name and address today to Pepsin Syrup Co., 26 Washington St., Monticello, Illinois, and a sample bottle will be sent you free and postpaid.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin

The Family Laxative

Dr. Caldwell's Book, "Care of the Baby," Free on Request

TOO FEW COOKS

Concluded from page 81

"But Aunt Elizabeth won't let me write," said Emily wistfully. "She says it's nonsense to write poetry and wicked to write stories."

"Hm-m-m," said Doctor Palmer reflectively.

"IF YOU change your mind about having me for a beau, let me know," whispered Andy, when they went away. "It'll be all right, if I haven't changed mine."

Emily laughed at him. Her little, gay, bewitching face was very bright. She was too happy to mind Andy. She had kept the Murray flag flying and Doctor Palmer had told her to "keep on."

When Aunt Laura and Aunt Elizabeth came home—slightly annoyed, though they did not know it, that Great-uncle William Murray had not died after all the bother—they had already heard the news. They had met the cousins on the road.

"Emily," said Aunt Elizabeth, looking very imposing in her black lace bonnet and beaded silk mantle, "did you make the cake? Cousin Marcella said she wanted the recipe of our cake."

"Yes," said Emily.

Aunt Elizabeth sat down on a chair.

"Thank goodness! When I heard there was cake, I thought you must have borrowed it. Bring me a bit of it."

Aunt Elizabeth tasted the "bit" grimly. Emily waited tremulously. The big, black-raftered kitchen looked spookish and weird, as it always did by candlelight. Outside, elfish "rabbits' candles" were flickering among the orchard boughs.

Aunt Elizabeth looked at Emily with a new respect in her gulf-blue eyes.

"Well," she said, "you have got some Murray in you anyhow."

"That is the first compliment you've ever paid me," thought Emily.

"But I suppose the spare room wasn't made up," sighed Aunt Elizabeth.

"Yes. I made it this morning."

"And you didn't forget to put pickles on?" demanded Aunt Elizabeth anxiously.

"No. I put pickles and chow both."

"And you didn't—you're sure you didn't—slop any tea over in the saucers?"

"I'm sure."

"Tell Emily what Doctor Palmer said," suggested Aunt Laura.

"You can tell her," said Aunt Elizabeth, getting up and stalking out.

"Doctor Palmer advised Aunt Elizabeth to let you write what you wanted to," said Aunt Laura. "He said you had a gift that should be encouraged."

"And will she?" Emily was white with suspense.

"Yes. She thinks what a reverend professor of theology approves of can't be wrong. You can write stories if you want to, Emily."

"But mind you don't put much silly love-making in them," said Aunt Elizabeth, suddenly sticking her head out of the sitting-room door.

EMILY went up to her room and looked out of her window with eyes that were satisfied and loving. How beautiful was New Moon, embowered in its twilight of old trees. The tips of the lofty spruces came out in purple silhouette against the northwestern sky of rose and amber. Down behind them Blair Water lay in the sunset, like a great, golden lily. Below her was the quiet and dusk and dreams of New Moon garden, full of a faint blue twilight with the ghostly blossoms of the white phlox here and there in it. The wind of the September night was blowing trumpets of fairyland on the hills.

There seemed to be a bubble of joy in her heart—a shimmering, prismatic bubble. Life tasted good—"tasted like more," as Cousin Jimmy would say.

"I feel," said Emily to herself, "like a little bird that has just got out of a cage."

BETTER DAYS FOR GIRLS

Concluded from page 8

not even have noticed the disturbance. All I am arguing is that, if they are so splendid, a way in should be found for the boys outside, and that, in the meantime, slabs of the Something should be procured for the comparatively humble secondary schools that I believe are in time to play a greater part than the stern old ones. Until the secondary schools acquire the Something, they must get along with the Something Else that they already have.

What they have is to be proud of. Such schools and such joys were denied to most of our forebears. To the better scholars in the girls' schools the glories of Oxford and Cambridge lie ahead—an enchanted land to the many, practical advantages. Girls can go from them, as numbers now do yearly, equipped, or nearly so, to live intelligently by their own work, to make a fair wage in interesting callings and to be chosen for their job in preference to men because they have proved that they can do it better. There must be a mighty satisfaction in that. There must be hundreds of girls to-day doing important secretarial work, for instance, in the cities, for the one of a few years ago. And there are many other openings. It ought soon to make a change in the appearance of young women, to give them a more serene look.

I remember being in Paris on the night of the Armistice, where I had also been for some nights previously, and I think the most wonderful sight I have ever seen in this world was the changed appearance of the women as they realized that the black years had come to an end. No Cinderella ever looked more different after she was dressed by her godmother. "It's over!" was the universal cry—nothing boastful, just a shining thankfulness.

Such schools are a bursting light through the gloom of the past. Never again will it be quite impossible for a girl, poor or rich, to adorn herself in the fair garments of learning. "It's over—the dark days are over," she can cry at last. Well, that is going too far; but she can at least say, "They have begun to be over." It largely depends on the young women of to-morrow when those days are to be completely over. I should like to give these girls a motto—something to strive for—I should like to see it blazoned over the entrance to their schools: "That every child born into the world should get an equal chance." That will need some doing.

THE TOOTHSOME THREE

1—Tasty Dishes to Serve as Appetizers
2—Ten Sauces to Serve on Ice-Cream
3—Ten Dishes from One Biscuit Recipe

Don't you often want to "dress up" a simple meal with some sort of toothsome accessory? A delicious sauce to go with "store" ice-cream! A feathery biscuit or a tasty appetizing side-dish to go with a meal of "left-overs"! Our Home-Making Department presents a special offer this month. We will send you three bulletins, "The Toothsome Three," in return for a stamped envelope. If you want them, just drop a line to the Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

"Don't let your face touch its pillow until your skin has been thoroughly cleansed"

. . . . . The moment my face touched its pillow I knew I had forgotten!

My face felt the caress of the cool, white pillow—and then I remembered.

If my skin were to be clear and fresh looking tomorrow, I must wipe away the day's dirt tonight. I must use the cold cream that cleanses, and revives the skin; the one so pure doctors prescribe it—Daggett & Ramsdell's Perfect Cold Cream.

After this cleansing in "three golden minutes" my skin can rest naturally all night and by morning be radiant.

If you, too, never let your face touch its pillow at night until your skin has been thoroughly cleansed with this perfect cold cream—you'll soon see new clearness and beauty.

For sale at department and drug stores—the white package with the red bands. Tubes, 10c, 25c, 50c. Jars, 35c, 50c, 85c, and $1.50.

There's a "Try-It-Yourself" trial tube for you—Free. Just send the coupon below.

* * *

How to use those "Three Golden Minutes"

I—Smooth a coat of this perfect cold cream over your face and neck.

II—Leave it on a minute to sink in.

III—Wipe off the cleansing cold cream with a smooth cloth and finish with a dash of cold water.

Daggett & Ramsdell's

PERFECT COLD CREAM

Daggett & Ramsdell, Dept. 3016
214 West 14th St., New York

Please send me the free trial tube of the Perfect Cold Cream you offer above.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

In Canada: Daggett & Ramsdell, 165 Dufferin St., Toronto.

It made her uneasy

SHE knew she was being talked about. Sly, knowing smiles when she entered a room and a curious reluctance on the part of her dancing partners made her ever conscious that something was being whispered behind her back.

But what it was all about the poor girl never knew. And it worried her terribly.

* * *

You, yourself, rarely know when you have halitosis (unpleasant breath). That's the insidious thing about it. And even your closest friends won't tell you.

Sometimes, of course, halitosis comes from some deep-seated organic disorder that requires professional advice. But usually—and fortunately—halitosis is only a local condition that yields to the regular use of Listerine as a mouth wash and gargle. It is an interesting thing that this well-known antiseptic that has been in use for years for surgical dressings, possesses these unusual properties as a breath deodorant.

Test the remarkable deodorizing effects of Listerine this way: Rub a little onion on your fingers. Then apply Listerine and note how quickly the onion odor disappears.

This safe and long-trusted antiseptic has dozens of different uses; note the little circular that comes with every bottle. Your druggist sells Listerine in the original brown package only—never in bulk. There are three sizes: three ounce, seven ounce and fourteen ounce. Buy the large size for economy.—Lambert Pharmacal Company, Saint Louis, U. S. A.

For HALITOSIS use LISTERINE

LISTERINE Throat Tablets, containing the antiseptic oils of Listerine, are now available . . While we frankly admit that no tablet or candy lozenge can correct halitosis, the Listerine antiseptic oils in these tablets are very valuable as a relief for throat irritations — 25 cents.

Bouillon-
more tempting than ever and no trouble at all to fix

Even those who can't cook can now make it

By Mrs. Jane Starr Grant

IF everything could be prepared as quickly as bouillon, how easy cooking would be! Yet there was a time when it took hours to prepare. Contrast that with what you do today. You go to the kitchen cabinet and get a STEERO bouillon cube. You unwrap it, drop it into a cup. You pour on boiling water and your bouillon is ready for you. Do you know anything else equally delicious that can be made with equal speed?

There is usually a slight element of risk in preparing food. How often have you followed the recipe ever so carefully and been disappointed by the result! But bouillon—delicious, tempting—can be made without the slightest risk. Just drop a STEERO bouillon cube into a cup and pour boiling water on it. Not a chance for anything to go wrong.

Does bouillon made with STEERO bouillon cubes taste good? The piquancy of its flavor, I believe, is what makes it so popular. This flavor is a wonderful blend of just the right kind of beef, fresh vegetables, and spices, prepared according to the formula of expert chefs.

Many different dishes are made more delicious by means of STEERO bouillon cubes. This new way of flavoring, chosen by famous chefs, is now being adopted everywhere. Use these cubes in the preparation of gravies and sauces, vegetables, soups, macaroni and spaghetti, eggs and omelets, fish and other seafood, salad and salad dressings, poultry and fish dressings, meats and left-overs, souffles, jellies and game.

free*—STEERO bouillon cubes. I want you to try STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes. I want you to taste the delicious bouillon they make. I want you to see for yourself what a wonderful flavoring agent they are in dozens of different dishes. I want to send you a sample package. Mail me the coupon and I will personally see that you get the free sample. If you wish the 64-page STEERO Cook Book, send ten cents with the coupon.

Mrs. Jane Starr Grant
American Kitchen Products Co.
Dept. D-23, 281 Water St., New York City

☐ Send me the free sample package of STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes.

☐ Sixty-four-page Cook Book (enclosed 10c).

Name .....

Address .....

.....

DOORS

Continued from page 11

the ride through the silent village with Tom Griffith: the brown head in her lap; the feel of the people inside the prim white houses, waiting for the breaking of the day and the breaking of the news about Thankful Ames.

Well, the news was out! She walked away from the gray gown and put on one she had made from a deep-blue Persian shawl an ancient Ames had brought from Bagdad. She stood before her mirror. Her eyes took fire and glowed; the brown seemed to deepen in her hair; a soft elusive vivacity came out in her face that most people and clothes and events failed to rouse. She had lived a long time in the midst of stillness, but inside of her was something that wasn't still yet—something fighting for its life.

There were questions it would have been wiser to ask Rose before she went to the hospital, but this was her affair now, and she deliberately ran some risk to keep it so. There was nothing for Rose to do but stay at home and wait; and she liked that——

He was better, the nurse said. Probably the doctor would keep him in bed for a week. They had telephoned for his things from the hotel in Bridgeford——

She took Thankful to his room.

He was sitting up in bed, propped on pillows. He wore an orange smock over the jacket of his pajamas. There was a white bandage on his head like a turban. He was very different from the men Thankful knew.

His gray eyes met hers indifferently as she came in; and then the indifference disappeared and under the gray a live blue washed in.

"Did you come to see me?" he said in a pleasant light bass, stressing the final pronoun hopefully a little.

His face was full of zest for life. His coarse hair grew out of his head like an expression of it. It licked itself into the blue of his eyes and deepened the lines at the corners of his mouth. He was a tonic person just to see and hear.

"Yes. I've something rather important to talk to you about." She sat down in some embarrassment, but conscious that, in her beautiful exotic dress, she had never looked so well in her life.

"But the nurse said you were the girl who was with me!"

HER eyes held the wide candor which was her strongest quality. "I asked her to say that. The girl who was with you is my brother's wife. My brother is a deacon. He disapproves of dancing. If he hears what she did, he'll never let her into his house again."

"Wow!" he said, sitting up with keen interest. "That's a real mess, isn't it! And you are planning to take her place, is that it?"

"Yes—if you'll help me." And she told him about the cloak and Old Tom Griffith. "Will you—please?"

"Yes, if you want me to; but won't the village and your brother make it nearly as hot for you as they would for your sister-in-law?"

"Probably. But I can stand it and she can't. She was a factory girl before he married her. The village has never really taken her in. This would be the end of her."

"Is it impertinence to ask if she's worth it?"

She reddened, but kept her honest eyes on his. "I'm not doing it just for her and my brother. I—I'm doing it for myself, too." The banked-up dreads and suppressions and timidities of her life made her hesitate. She said it quickly, in a spurt of words: "I'm twenty-five years old, and I've lived all my life in the Old Ames House here in Granite Village, most of it alone, and nothing ever happened to me until you smashed your car under my window! And now—well, now I find I rather like shocking the village! And I want to see what's going to happen next! Do you—do you see?"

"Rather! I should say I do! Good Lord, yes!" Interest crackled in his eyes like a fire.

She found herself telling him the rest of it. "I've always wanted to wear red. But the Ameses don't! I've had the shawl this dress is made of since I was a baby, but I never dared wear it before. That cloak brought something to life in me. It's something I like. This gorgeous foreign-looking dress keeps it alive. I—" She stopped, afraid he'd misunderstand.

But there was the kind of responsiveness in his face she had never had from a man before. "Naturally. We need that sort of thing as much as we need sugar."

"That's what I'm just finding out. I—I'd almost like them to think I was in the car last night. Maybe then I'd get the courage to do a lot of other harmless things I've always wanted to do that are under the ban. Does that sound awfully fine-spun and silly?"

"Not to me. I get you almost as well as if I had lived in the house instead of you. You see, nothing happened to me either, until ten years ago. Then I inherited three hundred dollars, threw up my job as a bookkeeper, became a painter, and took to wearing things like this." He twitched at his orange smock. "Seems to me the scarlet cloak's immensely important. Don't give it back to your sister-in-law. And wear it with me again some day, will you, when I've got my sense and can see it?"

THAT startled her; showed her where she was headed.

"Oh, no! I—I—it wouldn't do. I'm not really a red-cloak person, you know."

"You can't tell till you've tried it. I should think you were. But you will come to see me, won't you? I'm here for a week, they tell me. I—I'm as lonely as you are," he said deliberately. "As your sister-in-law is, poor little devil! As most people are in this infernally lonely world. I'd like it enormously. Will you?"

She had the quick consciousness that in that moment something was born between them. It was a weak thing—easy to kill. A wistfulness for its welfare came into the eyes of both of them. "We will be careful," their eyes said to each other, startled. "This is real—immensely important."

She went every morning for the week. Business prolonged Orrenus's absence. Winter flagged and fell back. Six perfect days passed in a row. Rose moved in and out of them, a pitiful little figure one must be gentle to, but Thankful scarcely noticed her. The village buzzed and craned its neck to see her pass; she let it. When it came to the point, nobody actually asked her questions, and she asked none of herself. Every morning she sat with Gaskell beside an open window that gave on to miles of leopard-spotted trees. The thing between them spread its new wings like a sun-warmed moth just out of its cocoon, and now she knew what it was.

On the day Orrenus returned she walked slowly home through the sunshine. They hadn't said they loved each other. Because that was as unnecessary as to say in the face of the brilliant colors of the trees: This is Autumn.

He was well now, and would be dismissed from the hospital that afternoon. The next day he went to New York, to close—if his plans held—a contract for a series of outdoor posters. When he returned— But nothing new could happen then. Everything had happened already. The darkness of her life had paled and broken into sunrise. It was bursting and flashing and glowing all about her. She'd have sung if she had been a bird. Being a New England Ames, there was nothing she could do about it. But she was enough of a bird for this: She didn't think. All that golden week she hadn't thought.

She began to think when she saw Orrenus.

He was waiting for her on his porch—a fixed high glare in his eyes, a devoted expression on his face, his big stomach thrust well out by the excessive erectness of his posture; stalwart, impressive, zealous for the right, and—ridiculous! Always a little ridiculous, if you had the wit to see it. His sister had seen it with bitter clarity since childhood.

He took her by the arm and led her in. He lectured her solemnly and stiffly, with the momentum of a vigorous-minded petty man who is always sure he is right. And through the sentimental and rhetorical fog she caught a dismaying glimpse of the real hurt she had dealt him.

Foursquare and solid, he stood monumentally against dancing and all who danced.

Continued on page 85

Prepare baby's food according to the

Mellin's Food Method of Milk Modification

Barbara C. Marsha, Peru, New York.

Christy Jones, Dennison, Illinois.

A Mellin's Food baby is a happy, good-natured, contented baby,—unmistakable signs of a satisfying, well-balanced diet.

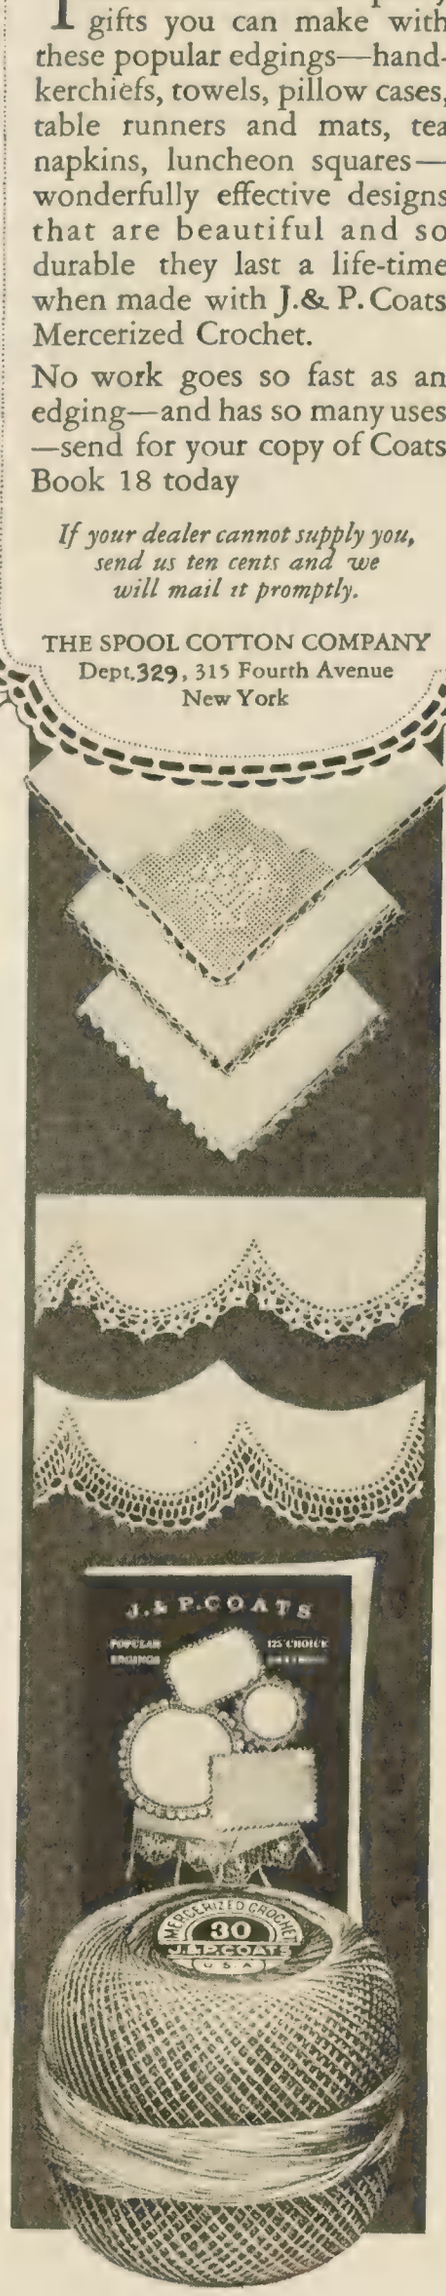
Write for a Free Trial Bottle of Mellin's Food and a copy of our book, "The Care and Feeding of Infants."

Mellin's Food Company
177 State Street, Boston, Mass.

$1000.00 IN CASH PRIZES
For the Best Reasons Why SKINNER'S is The Superior MACARONI-SPAGHETTI AND PURE EGG NOODLES
PARTICULARS IN FREE BOOKLET.
DUPLICATE PRIZES IF TIES.
SKINNER MFG. CO. OMAHA, U.S.A.

LADD EGG BEATER
4 SIZES
8 BEATING BLADES · SMOOTHER & QUICKER
ENTIRELY SUPERIOR · TAKE NO OTHER
ALL DEALERS or UNITED ROYALTIES CORP. 1133 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

PISO'S for COUGHS
Quick Relief! A pleasant effective syrup
35c and 60c sizes.
And externally, use PISO'S Throat and Chest Salve, 35c



125 Crochet Patterns for 10¢

THINK of all the pretty gifts you can make with these popular edgings—handkerchiefs, towels, pillow cases, table runners and mats, tea napkins, luncheon squares—wonderfully effective designs that are beautiful and so durable they last a life-time when made with J.& P. Coats Mercerized Crochet.

No work goes so fast as an edging—and has so many uses—send for your copy of Coats Book 18 today

If your dealer cannot supply you, send us ten cents and we will mail it promptly.

THE SPOOL COTTON COMPANY
Dept. 329, 315 Fourth Avenue
New York

BOILFAST – LIGHTFAST COLORS
for Embroidery and Crochet

J. & P. COATS
COTTONS ARE THE BEST
Sewing · Crochet · Embroidery · Darning · Knitting

SPOOL COTTON CO.
Dept. 329
315 Fourth Ave., New York
enclose 10c for Coats Book 18

DOORS

Continued from page 84

He had as easily thought of the Old Ames House arising from its foundations and going off to a vulgar public subscription dance as of his sister doing such a thing. And to have sneaked into a town where she was unknown, and picked up a strange man, like a kitchen wench— Even Rose would have known better.

She felt sorry for Orrenus. This hurt him nearly as much as the truth would have done. But she saw clearly that the truth would have ended things between him and Rose. How easy it would all be if she didn't love him!

She answered him at first, but it was absurd to try to fly in a vacuum. He sucked the air from around her wings. She found herself slipped down into her accustomed chair in his big cold parlor, the Spring gone out of her soul.

But Orrenus talked on. Words were his only vice. He debauched himself with them soggily.

THROUGH it all she was aware of Rose, moving about like an agitated subconsciousness; now up-stairs and now down.

"Can't you be quiet?" he snapped at last. "Can't you see I'm trying to talk? What are you doing?"

"I'm going out," Rose said, and came into the room. She wore the clothes she had had as a factory girl, and carried a straw suitcase marked with the initials of her maiden name.

"And I'm never coming back, see?" Her voice was vibrant with a slow sarcastic assertion of freedom from the respect with which she had addressed him since their marriage. "Not if you were to come and ask me every day for forty years!"

Orrenus got slowly to his feet. The veins in his temples swelled. His eyes bulged with incredulity.

"Are you c-crazy?" he stammered. "What are you t-talking about? What do you mean?"

Rose held to the suitcase with both hands, leaning back against its weight. The red flamed high in her cheeks. Her small, delicate features were pinched with determination.

"I hate you. I've hated you for more than a year. I've kidded myself into pretending I didn't, but when you began jawing Thankful I knew all of a sudden it wasn't any use. I knew we'd got to the end. I've got to go, that's all!"

His weak mouth worked in the fastnesses of his strong-looking beard. His impressive face, inheritance from a sturdy line that was beginning to dribble, looked contemptuous and confused. From the opening and closing of his fattish hands Thankful knew that rage thrashed within him like an eel in a lobster pot. It touched her that he didn't show it.

"What have I done," he stammered valiantly, "to—to make you hate me?"

"I don't know what you've done. Maybe nothing from your point of view. You can't see anything but yourself anyway, so what's the use talking about it? Anyhow, what difference does it make? I hate you! I hate the way you look! I hate the creases in your neck, and the way your hair curls up at the bottom in the back, and that mole at the side of your nose! I hate the way you talk and the way you laugh and the snivelly way you pray in church, and the way your shoes creak, and the jokes you tell! And—and and most everything about you! Isn't that enough?"

ORRENUS sank into a chair. His eyes sought his sister's with a look of mute, anguished bewilderment.

And suddenly she saw three boys kicking a plump larger boy and calling him a cheat. The plump boy was Orrenus—with the same bewildered look on his face. And, as young as she was, she had seen that he had gathered the marbles that didn't belong to him because he was too dull to understand the rules. And the sick realization had settled itself like a film over her keen mind that her brother was as definitely set apart by stupidity as if he had had a humped back. And she had begun to love him then as their mother had loved him, and had seen for the first time why their mother had made her promise never to leave him if he needed her. But it had been that look in his eyes, smitten, baffled, confused, that had held her more strongly than the promise.

"Yes," she said gently, "that's enough, Rose. You'd better go now, for all our sakes."

And Rose went, with one last word: "It was me in the car the other night, not Thankful. When we saw Mr. Griffith coming, Thankful took my place, on your account. And she'll live to find out, like I've done, that you're not worth it!"

The door slammed and the gate clicked and the Autumn wind sighed round the corners of the house——

Everything was done now except mailing the red cloak to Rose. Thankful stood with it in her hand. She felt that when she had sent it away she'd have frozen into the old Thankful Ames, to whom things never happened. Flaming ironical symbol of might-have-been, she dropped it on a chair and sank into another.

She watched the people pass, whom she had seen through that same pane of glass for more than twenty years. The sparse inhabitants of a barren countryside; grubbing out of their soil every decade the rocks that worked their way to the top; ungrubbed themselves and rocky, but strong to suffer and to stay.

She'd see them now from Orrenus's window go from west to east into the town, and then from east to west to their homes again; the children turn to youths, the young grow old, the old ones die, and that would be her life. A watcher. A looker on. She felt the strong thrust of the clean blood in her body, and her eyes brightened with tears.

But there weren't enough to fall, and, in the calm, unaccented light of early Winter, sitting there in her underheated, stale-aired sitting-room in the back of the Old Ames House, she told herself that she'd done well. She had promised not to leave Orrenus as long as he needed her. She wasn't the kind that could break promises and prosper. Next day she moved over to keep house for him as long as the two of them lived.

She had written Gaskell in New York, cutting things off with surgical cleanness. She had bared her feelings as never before. She had treated their love as a thing established. She'd have married him, she had said, if Rose had remained with Orrenus; but since Rose hadn't, she gave him her decision as inevitable and beyond her power to change.

She clasped her strong hands. She'd live, she thought, a long time. She had a sense of the beat of the feet of the empty years marching down upon her. She shuddered and sat on, as still as her old worn furniture. There was nothing now but the dropping of ashes in the stove, the enfeebled ticking of Great-grandmother Hatch's clock, and the wind round the corners of the house—unless her letter hadn't stopped him, and he was coming for that last useless draft of pain. If he came, it would be to-day. It was the day he had meant to come——

WHEN the bell brought her heart to her throat, she knew it was he.

She went into the dark hall and set her hand to the knob. Her heart plunged like a hooked fish; but she knew she could do this and anything else that was needed. She opened the door.

His overcoat hung open. He filled most of the doorway. His coarse brown hair had been roughened into obstinate whorls by the cap he had dragged off and was crushing in his hands. His face, between the points of his turned-up collar, was sharp with hope, his eyes as blue as the sea.

"Did you really think you could make a man fall so hard in love with you that he could barely keep from telling people about it on the street and then get rid of him with a letter?"

He thrust his cap into his pocket and held out his hands. His eyes leaped with life. "Tell me it's all nonsense and marry me to-night! Thankful, I've just heard that I am going to have to go to—" he paused. She wouldn't take his hands. She folded her arms to keep hers from stealing out to him of their own accord "—to Australia," he drove on doggedly, "and I've got to get the ten-o'clock train out of here to-night to catch

Concluded on page 86

Every day
a different use for
PREMIER

MORE than a million women use Premier because it is so appetizing, so healthful, so deliciously flavored. When the unexpected guest comes, when they want something for Sunday night supper, when they are having company, they get out the helpful Premier booklet and make any one of a dozen delicious dishes, appropriate to the occasion. Salads, sandwiches, cream sauces, egg dishes—all are improved and made daintier by the addition of Premier Salad Dressing. Send for free recipe book today.

FRANCIS H. LEGGETT & COMPANY
NEW YORK

Stuffed Eggs à la Premier are a great improvement over the ordinary kind.

Premier
Salad DRESSING
TRY PREMIER COFFEE TOO

New Way to Make Money at Home

Openings for new members now in national organization, Fireside Industries. Wonderful opportunity to earn money in spare or full time. Most fascinating work. No previous experience needed. Earnings guaranteed. Wonderful outfit furnished without a penny of extra cost.

Gabriel Andre Petit
Art Director

WOULD you like to turn spare hours into dollars? Would you like to have an independent business of your own? Here is a new way to earn money, unlike anything ever offered before. There is no canvassing to do, no tedious, laborious drudgery. This is the most delightful kind of work you could imagine; you will enjoy every minute you devote to it. And it pays amazingly well. Some of our members earn $20 to $50 a week.

NO SPECIAL ABILITY OR EXPERIENCE NEEDED

THE national organization known as Fireside Industries has openings for new members to decorate Art Novelties at home. You have only to follow the simple directions supplied to each member, and you quickly learn how to decorate all kinds of fascinating articles: hand-painted candlesticks, plaques, picture frames, greeting cards, wooden toys, parchment lamp-shades, hand-painted furniture, batik and other beautiful art novelties.

The work is so simple under the Fireside Industries system that even a child could do it. A complete Outfit, worth at least $10.00, is furnished every member without extra cost.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

THINK of decorating a pair of candlesticks, for example, requiring only one hour's work and realizing a profit of $2.00! What other work could be so interesting, or pay so well!! Best of all, we GUARANTEE that you can learn to do the work successfully, just as hundreds of others are doing. Your money will be refunded in full if, after completing your instruction, you are not entirely pleased with it. That is our guarantee to every member.

BEAUTIFUL BOOK FREE

NO matter where you live you can be one of the happy, successful members of Fireside Industries. Mail the coupon or write to-day for the beautiful, illustrated Book that explains everything. We will send it to you FREE. But you must be prompt as new members are wanted at once, and this golden opportunity may not come to you again. Enclose 2c stamp to help pay postage.

FIRESIDE INDUSTRIES
DEPT. 292, ADRIAN, MICH.

FIRESIDE INDUSTRIES, DEPT. 292
ADRIAN, MICHIGAN

Gentlemen: Without obligation on my part, please send me, FREE, the book of Fireside Industries which tells how I may earn money at home by Decorating Art Novelties; also particulars of your Money-Back Guarantee and the special co-operative privileges and services. I enclose two-cent stamp.

Name.....
Kindly print name and address.

Address.....

City..... State.....

DOORS

Concluded from page 85

the steamer. And you're going with me. I knew there was a chance of something like this, so I got the license before I left." He stopped and filled his big chest with air. "If I went without you, I shouldn't see you again for a year, and so——"

"I can't go," she said in a thin, dry voice. She hadn't dreamed what it would be like to have him there. He was so real. He made her house and her life shrivel and grow dingier. "I meant what I said in my letter. You shouldn't have come."

A new look came into Gaskell's eyes. "Look here," he said incisively, "your letter's rubbish, and your love for me is real. You can give your brother all sorts of things, but you can't give him your life. You'll wreck it if you try to, and end by making both of you miserable. You love me enough to marry me, don't you, if it wasn't for him?"

"I love you enough for anything," she said steadily. "I never wanted anything as much in my life as I want to go out of that door with you forever." Her feelings flamed like twin shoots of fire, one red with longing for life, one white with repression and devotion to duty. And the white flame burned all the color out of the red flame and took it over into itself in a passion of renunciation, until she shrank back from the abyss it lit up at her feet. "But that has nothing to do with it. There isn't the faintest chance that I'm going to." She opened the door to the gray afternoon. "If you love me—please go away!"

He took her hand off the knob and closed the door and stood against it.

"I've never cared for a woman before. And now you've shut all other women out of my life. Can't you see what you're doing to me?"

"Yes. That's the worst of it. But I can't do what I want to. I've got to do what's right."

"It isn't right! It's plain, straight fanaticism! If your mother was alive, she'd be the first to tell you so and release you from your promise. The thing was wrong in itself—unnatural—impossible!"

"No. Just—hard."

"Do you dare to say that your brother needs you as I do? That your duty to him is as important as your duty to me? And the children that you and I might have?"

"I do not dare to say that it isn't. I do not dare to turn my back on this responsibility here and go away expecting happiness. You see," wistfully, "I don't believe that, with all our love, we'd find it."

"Poor little pigeon!" he said gently. "It's a marvel that you'll dare anything—here. Let me dare for you, won't you? I'll pledge you my soul we'll find happiness! Can't you trust me, Thankful?"

HIS voice stirred things in her that would have conquered a weaker woman and started the tears; but she shook them off and held him away when he would have taken her into his arms.

"I can't trust myself. If I were really the red-cloak person you thought me, perhaps—I don't know, but—perhaps I'd go with you! But that's just a small starved part, not a bit like the real me. We could trust the real me, but we couldn't trust that."

"I don't believe that what I love in you is weak. What chance has it had? But even if it were—I'm not! I'm strong enough for anything where you are concerned. This thing's on my head now! I'm coming back at seven o'clock, and then—I'm going to take you with me. God knows, I'm not much on cave-man stuff, but there are times——"

"No," she said, as he opened the door and stepped into the mist-hung purpling twilight, "I can't go with you. If you come back, I sha'n't let you in."

When the bell rang, she took up the lamp and went quietly, though her heart beat hard with terror and pain. But the aching core of it was the realization of her own strength.

"You must go away," she said patiently, as if she had never said it before. "I sha'n't open the door. You'll only hurt us both by staying. I—I love you! Good-by."

"Listen, Thankful." His voice was as quiet as hers. "I'm coming in. If you don't open the door—" suppressed triumph ran through his tones like lightning through a quiet-colored cloud—"I'll break it down. It would be simpler to open it."

She drew in her breath sharply. She felt degraded that this could really be happening to her, and at the same time a strange shivery share of his triumph.

"You'll only make me ridiculous. And—and pitiful!"

"You are pitiful now. But you'll never be pitiful with me! Stand back from the door, I'm going to smash it."

"No, no, no!" she begged in an agony of humiliation. "Don't drag our love in the mud! Don't end it all like a road-house brawl!"

"It isn't the end," he said, and put his shoulder to the door.

THE outraged blood rushed to her cheeks and humiliation gnawed at her heart. She turned to leave the house—to get away from the man who had changed the most beautiful thing in her life into ugliness. But something held her there, holding up the lamp and staring at the door as it creaked and bent—something she was ashamed of—that fanned the feeling of triumph until it leaped like a savage flame in her breast.

It was a strong door. She didn't think he could break it. But, oh, if he only did! Suddenly her New England heart was full of a fierce unworded prayer that he would, a passionate unconscious calling on old and very alien gods that her man might have the strength to smash his way in to her! Through the door of her house and another door, not made with hands, against which he had flung his spirit. The other door was inside of her. It was a door of ice and although the spirit behind it ached for release, she thought that no one could reach it.

But now both doors bowed and creaked together! She stared, half-tranced, tingling with hope, an earth devil dancing through her blood. He bent—she could almost see him do it—and braced his feet against the post across the narrow porch, lowered his shoulders and slowly released the full strength of his powerful body. There was a sharp report, the dry tearing of seasoned wood, and the old door split from top to bottom and the two sides banged inward.

As quick as a rabbit, she set down the lamp and turned and ran. But before he had come in she was back again—in time for one side of the door to fall at her feet. The other hung from a single rusty hinge. Gaskell took it in his big steady hands and wrenched it loose and flung it clattering to the floor.

He stepped across it gravely. He was panting, but unembarrassed. If there was anything disgraceful in what he had done, he seemed unaware of it.

"It's down," he said. "Smashed. Broken. You are free. You can walk out over it if you want to. But if you won't—neither will I. I sha'n't be much good in a place like this, but I'll stay—and get you another door."

"No," said Thankful soberly. "I'll go with you now. If we're wrong, it can't be helped. You broke something inside of me along with the door." There was a scarlet swirl as her hands came from behind her. The folds of the cloak settled about her shoulders. "Take me to find Orrenus, and then—wherever you like."

WOULD YOU BELIEVE IT?

Often our readers send us stamped, self-addressed envelopes and never write a word to say which service they want. And sometimes they send stamps and no address! We're always sorry when things like that happen, for at best it causes delay. So please, please, when you ask our service—and remember, it's yours to command—tell us who you are and what you want. Address us clearly at THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., and don't forget the required postage or the self-addressed, stamped envelope for our reply. Thank you.

there's nothing like it

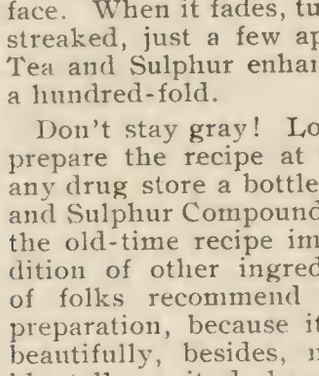
NO HOUSEHOLD should be without Sani-Flush. There is nothing else that does the same good work.

Sani-Flush cleans the toilet bowl—makes it sparkling white. It cleans the hidden, unhealthful trap which cannot be reached by any other means. It destroys all foul odors. It makes the toilet sanitary.

Simply sprinkle Sani-Flush into the bowl—follow directions on the can—and flush. It is harmless to plumbing connections. Keep a can handy in the bathroom.

Buy Sani-Flush at your grocery, drug or hardware store, or send 25c for a full-size can.

Sani-Flush
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.
Cleans Closet Bowls Without Scouring
THE HYGIENIC PRODUCTS CO.
Canton, Ohio



Have Dark Hair And Look Young

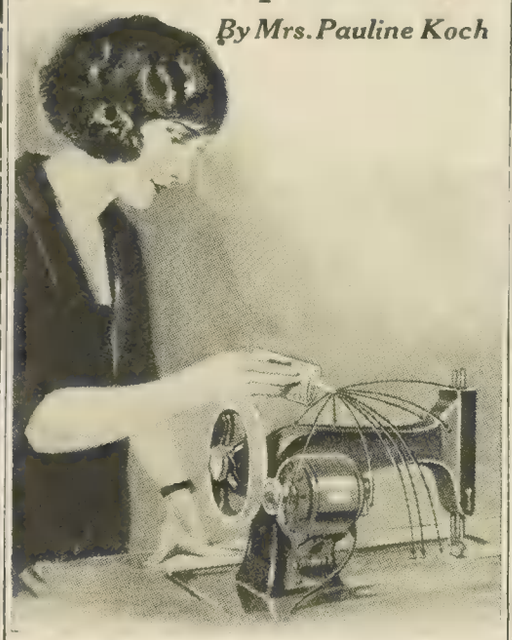
Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age. We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance. Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When it fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks recommend this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully, besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly. You moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two, its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

Wyeth Chemical Co., New York, N. Y.

9 COLORS SIX STRAND FLOSS GIVEN

To acquaint every needle worker with our artificial silk 6 strand Embroidery Floss absolutely boil-proof we will send 9 colors free and postpaid to any lady sending only 25c for this 3 piece buffet set.



COLLINGBOURNE'S
Boil-Proof 6-strand
Artificial Silk Embroidery Floss
has the beautiful finish and lasting sheen of silk. Buffet set is stamped on white linen finish hedskin, size 12" x 36". Send for your special bargain outfit today.

Collingbourne Mills
Dept. 921 Elgin, Ill.

EARN $25 WEEKLY
spare time, writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Copyright book free.
PRESS SYNDICATE, 1162, St. Louis, Mo.

How I Save Repair Bills

By Mrs. Pauline Koch

"When I tell you that I oil every moving part of my sewing machine regularly with 3-in-One Oil, I have told you the whole story.

"3-in-One saves the machine and I save the money that would go for repairs."

3-in-One

The High Quality Sewing Machine Oil

has been saving sewing machine repair bills for thirty years. It's all pure, highly refined oil, light enough to penetrate tightest bearings; heavy enough to stay put and lubricate perfectly. 3-in-One won't dry out or gum.

At all good stores in 1-oz., 3-oz. and 8-oz. bottles; also in 3-oz. Handy Oil Cans. The 8-oz. bottle is the economical Household Size. Contains most for the money.

FREE— Generous sample and Dictionary of Uses. Write for both on a postal.

THREE-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY
130 SM. William St., New York, N. Y.
Factories: Rahway, N. J. and Montreal
HR177

Chase Pain Away with Musterole

When the winds blow raw and chill and rheumatism starts to tingle in your joints and muscles, get out your good friend Musterole.

Rub this soothing white ointment gently over the sore spot. As Musterole penetrates the skin and goes down to the seat of trouble, you feel a gentle, healing warmth; then comes cooling, welcome relief from Old Man Pain.

Better by far than the old-fashioned mustard plaster, Musterole does the work without the burn and blister Grandma knew so well.

For croupy colds, sore throat, rheumatism and congestion of all kinds, just rub on Musterole.

Don't wait for trouble; keep a jar or tube on the bathroom shelf.

To Mothers: Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

35c and 65c jars and tubes; hospital size, $3.
The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio

MUSTEROLE
WILL NOT BLISTER
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Continued from page 14

"Yes, I must talk," she answered. "When I was eight and Lily two years old, our father died. My mother was left miserably poor, and I heard enough talk then among her and her few friends to fear—as only a child can fear—actual starvation.

"It was then that an uncle of whom we had scarcely heard came to see us. That was Tom Fleming, Roger's father. He had quarreled with my father years before, and, as everything father touched turned to loss, so everything that Tom Fleming went into prospered.

"He came to my mother's poor little flat, and—ah, my God, my God!" whispered Flora, forgetting her audience, as she pressed a dark hand to her eyes, and speaking to herself. "What a day that was for me! He asked my mother to bring her little girls to his country house, to Wastewater, until she should get her bearings! He left money on the little red table-cloth in the dining-room—my poor mother burst out crying and tried to kiss his hand——

"A WEEK later, on a Summer afternoon, we got there. I had never seen the inside of a big house or the open expanse of the sea before. It was all a fairy-tale to me, the silver, the meals, the big rooms—what a wonderland it was!

"Uncle Tom was a widower, with two sons, boys of thirteen and eleven—Roger and Will. They were out in the stable-yards with some puppies when we got there, and Roger was not too big a boy to take a little girl cousin under his wing—he showed me the puppies, he let me name one of them 'Silver'——

"I have never seen any other puppies that were to me as—as strangely important as those were," Flora went on, her eyes closed, her voice the mere essence of its usual self. "Nor such a lingering early Summer afternoon as that was! It seemed to me my heart would burst with joy. To have supper in the pantry that was full of maids and sunshine, and such supplies of cake and butter and milk, and to sleep in a big smooth bed, in such a great room——

"All those early days were filled with anxiety for me. I was afraid any instant that we might be sent away. My mother told me long afterward that I cried myself almost sick with excitement when she told me that Uncle Tom had asked her to stay and take care of his house for him. I don't remember that, but I remember in my gratitude telling Roger that I hoped some day he would be out at sea in a wreck, and that I would save his life—and how he laughed at me——

"He was, I suppose, as handsome a boy as ever lived. It was not that. Surely I was too small a girl to know or care what real beauty was! But I loved him from the first instant I saw him.

"Not—I think now—as other children love, as other young girls love. There was no vanity in it—I can say that. There was no happiness, no prettiness. It was agony to me, almost from that first June afternoon.

"His least word was important, his kindness made me tremble all over, and if ever Roger were cross with me, I used to be actually sick with grief, and my mother would ask him to come up to my room and let me sob wildly in his arms and beg him to forgive me.

"I never got any pleasure out of it, God knows. If he smiled at any one else, I was wretched. No matter what he did, his laugh, his voice, his use of his hands—and he had beautiful hands—was full of magic for me. I used to pray—to pray that he would not always seem so wonderful to me, that I would see him in ordinary human daylight. I never did. He was my whole world.

"So the years went by, and Uncle Tom died, and Roger was the heir. Roger was twenty-five then, tall and straight, and so clever that he could do anything! Women were already beginning—ah, how women loved him!

"Will, his brother, had been wild from his very boyhood—from his fifteenth year. He drank heavily, gambled—he and his father had been enemies for a long time. Uncle Tom had advanced money to Will, great sums of it, and Will had gambled them away. He left Will a comfortable fortune, he left Roger Wastewater and the rest of his money. And Roger was—everything. He had a manner, a sweetness—I don't know, a way of seeming interested—seeming absorbed in what you were telling him——

"And he was witty, too. What parties I can remember here, when they would all be laughing at him—crying with laughter——

"I was twenty when Uncle Tom died. My mother went on keeping house for Roger and Will, and perhaps she thought sometimes of what I prayed and prayed might come to pass—that Roger Fleming and I might be man and wife, and Wastewater her home forever!

"For years I had to see him depart for those long visits of his in Boston, when he was—ah, yes, it wasn't only my imagination—when he was the idol of them all. I had to say good-by to him, when he started off to Europe with beautiful girls in the party—money, youth, lovely clothes, romantic settings—all against me!

"Presently he was thirty and I was twenty-five—twenty-six—twenty-seven— And then suddenly he seemed for the first time to see me. I didn't dare to believe it at first.

"I didn't dare believe it. He would follow me down to the shore and sit there with Lily and me—he would come back unexpectedly from Boston or New York—I would hear his voice, as I hear it now: 'Flo! Where's Flo?'

"Ah, what days those were! I've come to hate the memory of them now—but they were heaven then!

"One day he said to me—one night rather—when there was gray moonlight over the garden and he and I were walking up and down: 'Flo, why is it that I have grown to prefer puttering about this old place with you and Lil to any other thing in the world?'

" 'Perhaps because you like me, Roger,' I said. I've been ready to bite my tongue out for it a thousand times in these thirty years! But it bought me a few more hours of insanity then. He caught me in his arms and laughed as he kissed me.

" 'Why, that's the way of it, is it?' he said. 'How long has this been going on, eh?'

" 'Always,' I told him. 'Poor little Flo,' he said, 'with all you know of me, is it like that?'

" 'Like that,' I said, and he kissed me again. 'Well,' he said, 'we will have to see about this!'

"That was all. Presently I ran into the house with my heart simply singing, and all that Summer night I lay awake laughing and crying for joy. And the next morning I hardly dared raise my eyes to him.

"It was that next day that your mother came to Wastewater, David. It was the very next day——"

FLORA had been talking with her eyes shut. Now she opened them, almost as if she were surprised to see the circle of attentive and serious young faces. Her hand beat the coverlet restlessly.

"Your mother was about thirty, and a widow," she said. "She had been widowed a few months before your birth, and you were only three or four weeks old. She was a beautiful woman, with reddish thick hair, all swathed in crêpe, and with the trailing dresses of the tiny baby in her arms. Her father was an Argentine planter, and she was taking you—David—back to Rosarios, where she had sisters and cousins. But for some reason the boat was a month delayed, and she had written my mother asking if she might come for a few days to Wastewater. Her husband had been a Fleming, and I remember that he had once spent a vacation with us here, when he was a little boy—Austin Fleming.

"So she came here, and from the instant she got here Roger Fleming was a changed being. I never saw a man so instantly—possessed. That very first night he was asking me: 'Isn't she beautiful, Flo? Isn't she wonderful?' I don't think he ever thought of me again, or of anything but Janet. Seven weeks later they were married.

"She was beautiful," Flora went on, after a dead silence in which her hand beat steadily on the bed and her eyes were shut. "She went with him to Boston, Washington, everywhere! And ten months later she gave him a son—Tom."

She looked at Tom strangely, closed her eyes again.

Continued on page 88

The New OLSON RUGS

FREE

Book on Rugs and Home Decoration

Endorsed by One of America's Leading Decorators!

NEW LOW PRICES!

ALL the fashionable new shades and patterns are illustrated in actual colors in rooms arranged by experts. Endorsed by Edmund Philo Kellogg. Full of useful suggestions. Save ½ on your new rugs. Write for this book. Describes the new OLSON Patented Process of reclaiming—

Your Old Rugs, Carpets and Old Clothing

Your materials are washed, pickered, carded, combed, bleached and spun into the finest kind of rug yarn and DYED any color you wish. This yarn is then firmly woven, within one week, into brand-new OLSON RUGS with the same smooth, velvety surface you find in the high-grade new domestic rugs. Woven any size, or shape, seamless and reversible to give twice the wear.

Free Trial Satisfaction guaranteed. We pay you for your material if not satisfied. We pay Express, Freight, or Parcel Post from all states.

OLSON RUG CO.
Dept. B-26, Laflin Street, Chicago, Ill.

Tear out and Mail this Coupon NOW!

OLSON RUG CO., Dept. B-26, Laflin St., Chicago

Gentlemen: Please mail to me, FREE, your new book in colors, "Beauty and Harmony in the Home" and your Free Trial offer.

Name .....

Street (R. F. D.) .....

Town ..... State .....

P. O. .....

NOTE: To those writing promptly we will include, Free, the wonderful new OLSON Color Guides for home decorating.

My Rosy Bloom

Comes largely from a super-cream

By Edna Wallace Hopper

My marvelous complexion is the chief item in my beauty and in my perennial youth.

It is largely due to a cream which combines a dozen important factors. To an exquisite cream they have added products of both lemon and strawberry. Then all the best modern science knows to feed and foster, to soften and protect the skin.

I used to apply these helps separately, but now they combine them in one. I call it my Youth Cream. It comes in two types—cold cream and vanishing. Both contain all the essential constituents. I use the cold cream as a night cream, the vanishing as a day cream. Never is my skin without them.

Now all toilet counters supply that cream exactly as I use it. The name is Edna Wallace Hopper's Youth Cream, the price 60c per jar. Also in 35c tubes.

Mail the coupon for a sample tube and my Beauty Book. You will be surprised.

Youth Cream Free

EDNA WALLACE HOPPER
536 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago 850 A B
I want to try Youth Cream.

.....

.....

Sunny Hair

I don't know how it comes

By Edna Wallace Hopper

My hair glistens like a halo. All who see me on the stage or elsewhere know that. Thousands of girls and women envy that amazing glint.

It comes to me through a shampoo which wonderful men created, but they won't tell me how it comes. They say that is their secret. They use some rare ingredient which nobody else has yet found.

But they have long made this shampoo for me, and now they are making it for you. They will not tell me why it makes hair sunny, so I cannot tell you. But it does.

They prepare it for me under the name of Edna Wallace Hopper's Fruity Shampoo. Druggists and toilet counters now supply it at 60 cents per bottle, and under my guarantee. If you are not amazed and delighted by it, your money will be returned.

I urge you to try it. No shampoo in all the world brings like results, I think. It will bring you what it brought to me—that lustrous hair, a woman's crowning glory. Please try it for your own sake, and learn how much a shampoo can do.

I want you to see what it does. It will be a revelation.

A Free Shampoo

Just mail this coupon with your name and address inserted to
EDNA WALLACE HOPPER 850 A B
536 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago.

.....

.....

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Continued from page 87

"My mother, all this while," Flora resumed, "had been like a sort of housekeeper. Two years after Roger and Janet were married my mother died, and then Lily and I felt keenly what our exact position here was—poor relations in a rich man's house.

"Roger was always generous to us; he was the soul of generosity. And Janet was kind, too. I remember more than once Roger telling me that it was only my influence that kept his brother Will straight at all.

"Will was like many a young man in those times. He would have a position for a while, give it up for different reasons, drink and gamble and idle for a while, and be persuaded into another position again. It wasn't considered disgraceful, then. He was a sweet, good-natured sort of fellow——"

SYLVIA drew a quick, sharp breath.

"You mustn't judge your father too harshly," Flora whispered, moving her troubled eyes to her daughter's face. "Nowadays it sounds far worse than it did then. Almost every family had such a son, and frequently, you could hear even mothers laughing as they said that it was time for Dick or Jack to marry and settle down.

"Afterward, Will would be two or three days sick in bed," the weary voice presently resumed. "And then Roger would find him a new position, and Will would come down to dinner, rested and shaved, and in high spirits, telling us all how rich he was going to be!

"So I tried to make myself indispensable. I looked out for you boys' wardrobes, mothered Will, managed their parties—managed servants——

"Your mother, Janet, went to the opera with your father one night," she added, opening her eyes to look at David and Tom, "and a day or two later he telegraphed me from New York that as she was not well, he would keep her there until it was safe to bring her home.

"She died the next day, and the day after her funeral Roger went away—where I never knew. He was gone for weeks, came home, would burst out into bitter crying at the table, walk up and down the garden like a madman, and be off again.

"One day, about six or seven weeks after Janet's death, he said to me, in a dark, moody sort of tone: 'Flo, how long am I to wear mourning—outside? Inside,' he said passionately, 'I shall mourn her all my life!'

"'A year,' I told him.

"It was a dark, misty day, I remember, with the garden full of thick cold fog, and lights burning at the lunch-table. He and I had come out and were walking along the cliff road in the mist.

"'Flo,' he said, 'when that time is up, will you forgive me, and marry me? You and I understand each other. I want to be anchored. I want to be done with the world and make this my world!' And he looked back toward the garden and the house.

"'Gladly, Roger!' I said. And for a long while we did not speak again. Then he said to me, 'Will you tell Lily and the boys and Will that it is to be that way?' and I said yes. You remember, David?

"Sometimes—but not often—we would talk of it quietly," Flora resumed. "Not that I was ever happy about it. But I told myself I would be! I told myself that it should—it must—mean happiness to us both.

"Janet died in January. This was—perhaps—March.

"A FEW days later, in April, a Mrs. Kent came here with her daughter for a visit. I don't think the mother was more than thirty-seven; she had been a great belle, and had married at eighteen. She was plump and pretty, covered with jewels, full of life, and had left her husband and little boy in Canada, to bring this child to a school in Baltimore. She had—just this hair," Flora said, laying her dark hand upon Gabrielle's tawny head. "The girl Cecily was seventeen, dark, and pale-faced. She looked like a child—she had her hair in a braid.

"There were other old friends in the party; a group of them had come down from Boston to see Roger Fleming, and we were very gay. Lily saw more of little Cecily Kent than I did, and she told me one day—not that it interested me particularly then—that the girl had been attending a convent in Montreal, and longed to be a nun, and that her mother had said that she would rather see her dead.

"They were only here a short week; it was Spring, and there were walks and picnics, and music and billiards; the time flew by. And it was on the afternoon that the Kents were going, their baggage in the hall, and when the other guests had gone, that Cecily Kent burst out crying, and Roger put his arm about her.

"The moment I saw that my heart turned to water. That moment," Flora said, with sudden bitter violence, raising herself upon her elbow, "all my hopes died, all my trust in him! It was my curse that I could not stop loving him as well——"

The cold Winter sunset, streaming through the bare woods beyond the stable-yard, shone red upon the cheap cheerful paper of the walls, and struck Flora's grizzled hair with a tinge of blood, and shadowed clearly behind her the hand she raised.

"They had already been man and wife forty-eight hours," she said. "I think Roger Fleming felt remorse for the first time in his life, when he saw the mother's face. Perhaps life had always been too easy for him, perhaps it had really never occurred to him that, a few months a widower, he might not be thought an ideal match for a dreamy girl of seventeen. He had always been so courted—so wanted——

"At first Mrs. Kent talked of annulling the marriage—she was more like a woman suddenly smitten with insanity than any one I ever saw before or since. She grasped the girl by the arm, and her eyes blazed, and her face was ashen. 'No,' she said, 'you shall not have her! She's hardly more than a baby—she knows nothing of life!'

"'Mama,' Cecily said, crying and clinging to her, 'we were married two days ago. I am his wife——'

"I remember the mother looking at her, and the terrible silence there was in the hall.

"'You—Sissy?' Mrs. Kent said, in a whisper. Cecily went down on her knees, sobbing—almost screaming—like a child, and caught her mother about her knees.

"'Cecily,' Roger said, trying to raise her, 'you are mine now. Your mother can not hurt you. You are my wife!'

"'Oh, let me go with my mother!' she sobbed. 'I hate you!'

"'She is—in fact—your wife?' Mrs. Kent said, looking over Cecily's head at him.

"Roger nodded. 'Then you must stay with your husband, my child,' Mrs. Kent said very gravely. 'And may God punish you through your children, Roger Fleming,' she said, 'for what you have done to mine. Go tear the buds from those rose-trees,' she said, pointing to the garden, 'go strip the new green fruit from your trees—and you will harvest what you must harvest now! Your little boys there, playing in the drive, are better fitted for life than she is!' And she turned to Moses, the colored butler we had then. 'Moses, put my bags in the carriage,' she said.

"NOBODY spoke as she went away. Cecily lay on the floor, moaning, Roger on one knee beside her, talking naturally and kindly. She never saw her mother or her father or her brother again. I heard long afterward that the pretty, cheerful mother had died, and the father married again.

"Cecily had been three days a wife, but she had lost her husband then! She never knew it—but I did, and I—God forgive me—I was glad. When she clung to her mother and screamed that she hated him, a look came into Roger Fleming's face that only I could understand. It was as if she had said, 'I am seventeen and he is forty! I knew nothing—he knew everything. My only loves were a daughter's love—a sister's love. He demanded more of me, and—if I had it—I would loathe myself for giving it! He has robbed me of my mother and my father and my body and my soul!'

"She cried all that night—would not come down-stairs or eat or look at him or talk to him. She cried for many days, and Roger used all his patience and all his kindness trying to console her. But he never gave her love again—he never had it to give, after

Continued on page 89

TINT GRAY HAIR Quickly, Safely

Some preparations masquerade under the name "restorer" and color the hair slowly, thus deceiving many into the belief that the actual color pigments are being restored. This cannot be done. Hair, once gray, must remain gray unless it is artificially colored.

The one hair tint which will quickly and absolutely harmlessly give to your gray, streaked or faded hair all its original beauty and splendor is

GUARANTEED HARMLESS

BROWNATONE

TINTS GRAY HAIR ANY SHADE

This clean, easy to apply preparation does not just put a coating of color around the hair. It thoroughly permeates each gray strand, coloring it lastingly to any desired shade from lightest blond to the deepest brown or black.

Brownatone will not rub off or wash out. After once your hair is colored with this safe tint you need apply it only to the new growth.

Bring back the original color and lustre of your hair with Brownatone—the sure, quick, safe hair tint. For sale at all drug and department stores, 50c and $1.50—two colors: lightest blond to medium brown; dark brown to black. Trial bottle sent direct for 10c to cover postage and packing.

We recommend Na Tone Lemonated Shampoo for washing the hair. At dealers or direct, 50c.

THE KENTON PHARMACAL CO.
1051 Coppin Bldg., Covington, Ky.
Canada Address: Windsor, Ont.

BOURJOIS JAVA

The Wonderful French Face Powder
A TINT FOR EVERY TYPE

DEMAND it at your druggist's. Send 10 cents for samples of JAVA* with either Ashes of Roses* Rouge, dark and rich, or Rouge Mandarine*, light and bright.

A. BOURJOIS & CO., INC. *Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.
PARIS 37½ West 34th Street, NEW YORK

YOU CAN DO FAR MORE BEAUTIFUL NEEDLEWORK ON "ADJUSTO" HOOPS

LOCK rigidly tight; can't possibly slip; can't stretch thin tissues; cork lining needs no winding; patented shield prevents pinching. Approved by MODERN PRISCILLA Proving Plant, NEEDLECRAFT MAGAZINE and FARM & HOME Testing Station Made in 4, 5, 6, 7" rounds, 25c each, $1 set. If your dealer can't furnish, send his name, price, state sizes wanted, and we will send postpaid (add 5c each west of Rockies) Also made in "EMBRO" model (spring fastener), in 3, 4, 5, 6, 7" rounds, at 20c each, $1 set. Either set fine for gifts, prizes, etc.

EMBRO FASTENER

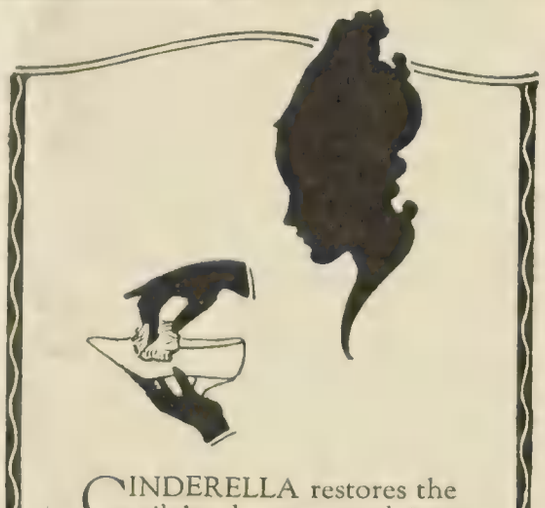
THE EMBRO MANUFACTURING CO., Canton, Ohio

Beauty Culture Course at Home

EARN $40 TO $75 A WEEK
AUTHORIZED DIPLOMA
MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

Earn while you learn. Study in spare time. In 8 weeks easy lessons can make you expert in all branches, massage, marcel, manicure, packs, dyeing, bleach, waves, skin work, etc. No experience necessary. Enormous demand for operators.
Practical Shop Instruction Privileges. Get FREE book NOW.
ORIENTAL SYSTEM OF BEAUTY CULTURE
Dept. 252 1000 Diversey Boulevard Chicago

Beauty



A Gleamy Mass of Hair

35c "Danderine" does Wonders for Any Girl's Hair

Girls! Try this! When combing and dressing your hair, just moisten your hair-brush with a little "Danderine" and brush it through your hair. The effect is startling! You can do your hair up immediately and it will appear twice as thick and heavy—a mass of gleamy hair, sparkling with life and possessing that incomparable softness, freshness and luxuriance.

While beautifying the hair "Danderine" is also toning and stimulating each single hair to grow thick, long and strong. Hair stops falling out and dandruff disappears. Get a bottle of "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter and just see how healthy and youthful your hair appears after this delightful, refreshing dressing.

CINDERELLA restores the silv'ry beauty to dainty evening footwear. Use it to preserve the charm and luster of your silver slippers.

On Sale at the Better Stores Everywhere

EVERETT & BARRON CO.
Providence, R. I.

Cinderella SILVER SLIPPER CLEANER

PISO'S for coughs

Quick Relief! A pleasant effective syrup 35c and 60c sizes. And externally, use PISO'S Throat and Chest Salve, 35c that day! She had cut him to the very heart, and the Flemings are all proud, and none of them ever prouder than he!

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Continued from page 88

"After a while she began to slip about the house like a shadow; she had never been pretty—except for her eyes that were like Gabrielle's, here—and she grew so thin and so white that she seemed all eyes. She would have no company, no entertaining, she seemed even to dread talking to Roger, and was fondest of you children and poor Lily. It was never any definite illness at first, just the doctor for one pain or another, and Roger taking her in for consultations and advice. They all gave the same advice, she needed amusement and relief from mental strain. But that was one thing he couldn't buy her——"

Flora's voice stopped abruptly, with the effect of an interruption.

"I hated her," she said simply, after a moment, and was still.

"Ah, yes, I did, David!" she added, suddenly, her eyes always closed, and as if David had protested. "I hated her. I managed her house, I answered the inquiries of anybody who came to call, I talked about her with Roger when he was anxious—and I hated her.

"She made him—miserable. She was a mixture of a child and a nun. She hated life, hated marriage. She loathed her wifehood, her position, her husband—and her husband was Roger Fleming! He couldn't kiss her but that she would shut those dark, sad eyes of hers, and offer her cheek like a child——

"ONE day, when they had been married a few months he was talking to me about his brother Will. 'Why don't you marry Will, Flo?' he said to me, with a sort of laugh. 'Good enough for the poor relation?' I said, trying to laugh back. But I was bitter, then—life was utterly hateful to me. 'Why, how you can remember!' he said, with a look that told me he knew that he himself and that old unhappy love of mine for him were keeping me dark and angry and fuming about Wastewater for the best years of my life——

"'I may marry Will,' I said, trembling all over. And a few months later I did, although the idea had never come into my mind until that day. Not that I didn't love your father, Sylvia; I did. Every one loved poor Will, and he had loved me a long, long time. Will and I were married, and Roger gave his brother a handsome check—which Will put into a patent for a bed-couch——

"Not that it mattered! Not that it mattered!" Flora's tired voice said drearily, and was silent.

"Part of the time we lived at Wastewater," she resumed, "and sometimes, when Will was trying one of his new jobs, we had an apartment in Boston. Lily was sometimes with us, and sometimes she and Cecily and Roger went on short trips——

"Then Roger would come to me, distressed; Cecily was having those hateful pains again. She would come in to a Boston hospital for an operation, and I would go to see her every day, and bring her and her nurses back to Wastewater, and stay a while, until she felt stronger.

"Sylvia was born in Boston, but a few weeks later we came to Wastewater, and both Roger and his wife grew so fond of her that I had an excuse for almost never leaving, although I kept my little Boston flat. Will was in the West for almost two years, and sometimes we would talk as if the baby and I might join him there. But as Cecily grew no stronger, and poor little Lily began to show signs of a sort of—they called it 'passive melancholia,' and as the baby grew to be everybody's plaything——"

She opened her sunken eyes, and fixed them with the shadow of a dark smile upon Sylvia's stricken and acutely attentive face.

"Mama—" Sylvia breathed, bowing her dark head over her mother's hand.

"Poor little Silver, as Roger used to call you!" Flora said tenderly. "I did it for you, dear, or at least I meant it for you. But it was never deliberate—it was all an accident——"

SHE sank into quiet, and almost immediately breathed as if she were deeply asleep. Sylvia, not changing her position by a hair's breadth, signaled to the others a question as to the propriety of their slipping away. But no one had stirred when Flora quite simply opened her eyes and said in a relieved tone:

"I want you to know everything. You don't blame me too much, Sylvia? Have I told you—" she added, anxious and alarmed. "Did I tell you about Gabrielle?"

"Mama, darling—to-morrow——"

"No, no," Flora said feverishly, "to-day! I had told you of my marrying—yes, and that poor little Lily seemed so upset——

"She had always been a forlorn, sentimental little thing, Lily. But after my mother's death, and your mother's death, David, and when you boys went off to school, she became gently melancholy—yet not always sad, either, but wandering a little, and strange.

"There was a handsome, good-for-nothing sort of fellow hanging about at Tinsalls in Keyport then—Charpentier his name was. He and Lily used to walk along the cliff road, and sometimes she would cry, and tell Cecily that he was as fine a gentleman as any man she knew, only unfortunate—that sort of thing.

"I didn't like it, but I dreaded telling Roger, for he was so quickly roused to anger——

"Well, one day, when Sylvia was almost three, and Will had been in the West for six months or so, and when Cecily was all upset, and lying on the couch like a little waxen ghost, Margaret Nolan came to me—this same Margaret we have now—and shaking all over, and crying—poor Margaret—she told me that she was 'worried' about Miss Lily.

"I was sick with the shame and the fright of it. I knew Roger would go after any man that touched one of his household with a revolver. It was all terrifying to me, but I told Margaret—whom poor Lily had taken into her confidence—to go after the man Charpentier, find out if he could marry Lily, and keep the whole thing absolutely secret. It meant banishment for Lily from Cecily's presence, I knew that, for Cecily had a horror of such things—had a horror even of little babies, and their needs—such a thing as this would have revolted her!

"Margaret found out that Charpentier had disappeared. and all our efforts to get hold of him then or since, were useless. He had no tie, no responsibilities, nobody cared whether he lived or died! He simply went away.

"So a few weeks went by, and I was sick with anxiety and shame. Lily—I used to marvel at it—was perfectly serene and quiet. She was so simple, poor soul—that she would go in to the village and buy pink baby-ribbons——

"Finally, I planned to take her to my apartment in Boston, live quietly there with the baby—that is, my Sylvia, and perhaps one servant, and tell Roger and Cecily that Lily wanted to study art—or music—Afterward, we could place her poor baby in some good institution, and then, maybe, I could tell Roger.

"That was August—late July and August. And that was the August that Tom ran away from school."

SHE opened her eyes, looked about the circle.

"Roger, poor fellow, was proud, at first. His son, twelve years old, had run away to sea—the young monkey! 'He ought to be thrashed for this,' he would say, chuckling. He notified the police and went down to New York that week, getting the whole machinery in motion. 'You'll not thrash him,' I used to say. 'You'll give him a new bicycle—that'll be your thrashing!' "

"Proud, hey?" Tom interrupted the narrative, with a grin.

"Oh, yes—just at first. But after a few weeks—perhaps not so long, he began to speak more seriously. 'He couldn't have given us all the slip—he isn't more than a child,' he would say, as he came and went."

"I told them I was fifteen," Tom contributed. "All I did was sign up with the whaling fleet—I'd thought it all out. The Saturday before I shipped a bundle to New York harbor. There were some clothes in it that I didn't want—it was all a blind.

Continued on page 90

Every Trace of Superfluous Hair Gone!

Not only removes hair—but checks its future growth.

"Preparation officially decided to be effective," says New York World.

No longer need you worry about superfluous hair or be undecided as to which preparation to use to destroy it.

In a recent investigation made by the Federal Trade Commission of Washington, D.C., a very favorable decision was given ZIP. The New York World says:

"Uncle Sam Pronounces Hair Remover O.K.

"Your versatile Uncle Samuel has dipped delicately into one of the most vital problems of modern feminine fashion.

"Judge Edward M. Averill held a series of hearings to determine whether there really was such a boon to the fashionable girls of today as a hair remover that really removed for good and all.

"The feature of the hearings was the appearance of several attractive women. These women declared to the judge that their troubles with excessive hair had been abolished by the use of the preparation (ZIP).

"The climax came when one woman described as a 'prominent Long Island society matron' took the stand and testified she had been afflicted with such a heavy beard that she had to shave four times a week. Then she tried the preparation (ZIP), and threw her razor away. These fair witnesses offered their complexions to the judge in proof of their assertions. They said they testified simply out of gratitude."

Don't delay. If you have never used ZIP, you will marvel at its magic. Fragrant, painless, harmless and easy to use at home, it destroys the growth by gently lifting out the roots and is pronounced by experts as the ideal method.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

Guaranteed on Money-back Basis

Treatment or Free Demonstration at My Salon

Madame Berthé Specialist

562 Fifth Avenue

(Entrance on 46th St.) New York

Makers of AB-SCENT

Please print your name

MADAME BERTHE, Specialist,
Dept. 120, 562 Fifth Ave., New York

Please send me FREE BOOK, "Beauty's Greatest Secret," telling how to be beautiful and explaining the three types of superfluous hair; also a free sample of your Massage and Cleansing Cream, guaranteed not to grow hair.

Name .....

Address .....

City or State .....

CREATIONS JOYDERM NEW YORK

This X-Ray shows tooth socket destruction by pyorrhea

Those white shining teeth

Are they safe?

LOVELY, white teeth are safe from loss only if the gums are kept firm and healthy. If pyorrhea attacks your gums, an X-Ray would reveal how quickly the infection spreads to the root sockets which support the teeth. Your teeth fall out or must be pulled—unless pyorrhea is checked.

Tender, bleeding gums warn you of pyorrhea's attack

DENTAL clinics since 1908 have proved that Pyorrhocide Powder is a most effective dentifrice for checking, as well as preventing pyorrhea. Its tonic and stimulating qualities correct bleeding gums, strengthen tender gums, harden soft gums.

It keeps the teeth white and clean. It is medicated with Dentinol, a gum-tissue healing agent used by dentists in the treatment of pyorrhea.

Use Pyorrhocide Powder daily—see your dentist regularly—and you can avoid pyorrhea. The economical dollar package contains six months' supply. At all druggists. Send for free sample and booklet on causes and prevention of pyorrhea.

FREE Sample

THE DENTINOL & PYORRHOCIDE CO., Inc.
(Sole Distributors)
Dept. F-1, 1480 Broadway, New York City
Send me free sample of Pyorrhocide Powder and booklet.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

This Home-Mixed Cough Syrup Is Wonderful

For quick relief of any ordinary cough, try Pinex.

Mixed at home with plain sugar syrup, a bottle of Pinex makes a whole pint—a family supply—of pure, wholesome cough syrup, the best that money could buy, for adults or children. No trouble to mix—package tells how. Makes a big difference in your drug bills.

Tastes good—children take it willingly. Nothing better for coughs, colds, hoarseness, etc. Used by millions of people for over 20 years.

Insist on genuine Pinex, 65c, at all druggsts. Money promptly refunded if you are not glad you tried it.

The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

For Coughs

PINEX

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Continued from page 89

And in my note to Dad I said that I had seen the Panama fruit boats going out, and they made me sick to get to sea."

"We found the bundle, and we searched the fruit boats, but we never got trace of you," Flora said.

"I was an ass, and I got it pretty well bumped out of me," Tom said musingly. "A fellow named Kelly's brother went overboard, that first run, and I went into Montreal three months later with Kit Kelly's papers. Kelly and I stuck together until he got married; every one always called me Kit. I never took any special trouble then to hide myself—I always thought I'd come home, my next shore leave."

"Roger spent the rest of his life hunting you," Flora said. "He was never at home for more than a few weeks or a few days at a time, after that, and we all knew Cecily was happier when he was away. This Autumn she was wretched, and she had begun to say again, even to him, what she had often said to Lily and me: 'My marriage was a sin. All marriage is not wrong. But God intended me for a life of prayer and holiness, and what have I accomplished by disobeying the guidance of my own conscience?'

"This sort of thing made Roger furious, and I could see it, if she could not. 'It would have been a calamity for her to have a child!' he said to me one day. 'We would surely have had two children on our hands then!' Once he had told me, bitterly and resentfully, that her hasty and ill-considered marriage was killing her. 'She was seventeen in years, when we were married,' he said. 'But I can understand her mother's fury now. She was about nine years old where life was concerned—a mystic, a child saint—torturing herself with scruples, and with half-assimilated scraps of theology and mysticism!'

"THAT was the situation here at Wastewater that September, when Roger had word from the police at Guam that a boy who might have been Tom was there. Roger went off to San Francisco, possibly to sail—as indeed he did finally sail—for the Orient. Will, my husband, had been away almost a year. David here was in boarding-school.

"Left alone with Cecily and Lily, I did not dare risk Lily's baby being born in Wastewater. She went in to my Boston apartment, and I got her a good practical nurse, and her baby was born months too soon—and died within a few minutes!"

"Died!" said more than one of the young voices.

"Died. Indeed it never breathed at all. Lily was very ill. She went into a sort of low fever, like the old brain fever, and was near death for a long, long time.

"I lived with her, and the nurse and a good servant named Carrie, in the Boston apartment, for Cecily had grown worse by that time, and the Crowchester doctor had quite frankly diagnosed her trouble as a tumor. Cecily believed it, and she was furious at the Crowchester man because he would not operate in her husband's absence. So we dismissed the Crowchester doctor, and Cecily told him frankly that she wanted to come in to Boston, and stay at a hospital for observation.

"She was at St. John's, only a few blocks from my apartment, and I went to see her every morning before luncheon, and every late afternoon. She seemed more cheerful in the hospital, and the doctors were hopeful that a few weeks of it would make a new woman of her.

"One day, about a week after Lily's poor little baby had come and gone, the old doctor in whom Cecily specially trusted, walked down the hospital steps and into the park with me, and we had a long talk, sitting on a park bench. He told me then—and you may imagine what I felt when I heard it—that there was every probability that young Mrs. Fleming was about to become a mother.

"For a while I was stupefied. I asked him to have a consultation. He said no, that was not necessary now, and might distress her. She had, he gathered from hints to the nurse, a certain curious dislike to the idea of motherhood.

"'Dislike, doctor!' I said. 'I believe it would kill her, if she did not kill herself!'

"And I tried to give him some idea of her character, what a strange half-child, half-mystic she was. He listened to me very gravely. It was important, he said, not to shock her.

"That was the first time I ever heard of shock as an actual danger to a sick person. He explained it carefully. Cecily did not have the vitality of a humming-bird, he said. If we could get hold of the husband——

"I had to go on. I explained that her husband was much older and that—in the true sense—she did not love him. And I said I was sure that if she were to have a baby, her love for it would come with the child——

"I said all the usual things, and he agreed with me. He told me the circumstance of the false diagnosis was unusual, but it had happened before—happened in his practise before. There was of course a possibility now that he was mistaken, that it was what the other doctors had always supposed. And there was every probability that the baby would not live, under the curious circumstances. But it seemed cruel not to give young Mrs. Fleming this hope——

"'It would be no hope to her!' I said. 'Whatever the child, if it lived, might come to mean to her, this prospect would make her absolutely ill.'

"We agreed that for awhile, therefore, nothing must be said about it. But it was only ten days later that they took Cecily up to the surgery, and her baby, two months too soon, was born. She was dying, they thought that night, and there seemed every probability that the baby would die, too. A nice little nurse there told me that she wanted to give the child lay baptism, and I made no objection. She asked me what name, and I said 'Mary.' It was the first name I thought of. 'I'll name her that and my name,' she said. 'I'll call her Mary Gabrielle!'"

"Me!" said Gabrielle Fleming, in a sharp whisper. Her dilated eyes moved to David's face.

"I told you last night, Gay," David said gently.

"You told me—yes, but I thought my mother—I thought Lily—I only thought that she had loved Uncle Roger, instead of the man Charpentier!" the girl stammered. "I—I am their child—" she whispered.

She got to her feet, her eyes upon the distance, her mouth working, and walked bewilderedly to the door.

"Bring her back, David!" Flora said, struggling to raise herself and following Gabrielle with her eyes. "She must hear."

"Gay—" David said at the girl's elbow. She gave him a dazed look devoid of any violence of expression. "Aunt Flora wants us all to listen," the man said. Without protest she came back to her place at the bedside.

"CECILY was so ill," said Flora, after a moment, "that for two or three days they feared for her life. I got a good nurse, and stayed at the hospital myself, and sent the tiny new baby to my home, when she was about nine days old, trying all the time to get in touch with Roger in San Francisco. He had sailed then for Guam, but we did not know that until weeks later, when the telegrams all came back. But there was no attempt at secrecy.

"The old doctor told me that he had tried kindly and gently to inform young Mrs. Fleming of the birth of a child—that indeed she had some hazy recollections of the crisis of her illness before the anæsthetic, but that she had given no sign of understanding him.

"I rented the furnished apartment next to mine, and brought her there; she looked dying then, as she was. One day I came home, and she had put on a wrapper and come into Lily's room. Sylvia was on the floor with a doll, and the nurse had brought in the new baby in her basket, to get the sunshine in the window there.

"Cecily was crying—crying hysterically, but even that emotion seemed to me a good sign. Lily was lying on the bed, and Cecily kneeling beside her, with her face buried against her knees.

"'Cecily!' I said. 'You must not—excitement like this will be dangerous to you!'

"Lily looked at me with that bright, childish smile she had had since her illness.

Continued on page 91

Your Feet—Are They Wall-flowers?

DO they take the pleasure out of walking, shopping and social occasions? No need, because you can get shoes of shapely good style that give freedom to every muscle, and sustaining, comforting support.

The soft, pliant leathers and easy, flexible soles of Martha Washington Shoes give ease and youthful buoyancy to every step, while finest workmanship and material insures long-lasting shapeliness. Styles for dress, for street and to ease household footsteps.

Insist on seeing the name Martha Washington on the sole or inside the shoe.

Write for free booklet, "For the Sake of Happy Feet."

F. MAYER BOOT & SHOE CO., Milwaukee, Wis.

Martha Washington

Dress and Comfort Shoes

Have you seen the new Kunderd Catalog?

WRITE for a free copy now. Read about the wonderful new Kunderd gladioli originations. Get your orders in early to be sure of the varieties you want. Catalog lists hundreds of gladioli. Many illustrated in color. My full cultural instructions included. Write today.

A. E. KUNDERD
Box 49 Goshen, Ind., U. S. A.
The Originator of the Ruffled and the Laciniated Gladioli

Kunderd TRADE-MARK Gladioli

THEY STAND SUPREME

Favorite Field-grown ROSES

SIXTY wonderful acres of field-grown roses to choose from—the world's finest and most popular varieties. Storrs & Harrison rose plants are shipped trimmed ready for planting and are guaranteed to bloom in three months. Write today for 1925 free catalog.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO.
Nurserymen and Seedsmen for 71 years
Box 702 Painesville, Ohio

CONDON'S GIANT EVERBEARING TOMATO

"QUEEN OF THE MARKET." Big Money-Maker. Large, solid fruit; excellent canner. To introduce to you our Northern Grown Live Seeds and Plants, we will mail you 125 seeds of Condon's Giant Everbearing Tomato and our Big 1925 Garden and Farm Guide. FREE 192-Page Book, tells how, and what to plant. Prices lower than ever.

SEND POSTAL TODAY
CONDON BROS., Seedsmen
Rock River Valley Seed Farm
Box 22 ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS

The Catalog for Seeds

THE S. & H. free catalog for 1925 lists all the flower and vegetable seeds that you can possibly need. Our 1200 acres have supplied amateur and professional gardeners with the choicest varieties for over 71 years. Post-card brings catalog.

THE STORRS & HARRISON CO.
Nurserymen and Seedsmen for 71 years
Box 647 Painesville, Ohio

1865-1925

"I have used Lemco since I was a girl."

For 60 years the intrinsic goodness and economy of Lemco have been handed down from mother to daughter.

For giving richness, and delicacy of flavor to soups, sauces and meat dishes, a little Lemco is like the touch of an experienced chef, it makes everything "just right."

Lemco Cook Book Free

Send a 4 oz. Lemco wrapper for "Dainty Dishes with Lemco," to LAMONT, CORLISS & CO.

131 HUDSON STREET NEW YORK
U. S. Distributors for
OXO LIMITED, LONDON, ENG.

LEMCO
LIEBIG COMPANY'S EXTRACT OF BEEF

Vaughan's NEW EVERLASTING

OUR annual STATICE is not only a beautiful flower in the border, but dries retaining its true colors, which are rare among everlastings and have come to be indispensable to florists in making expensive winter bouquets. Our special offer includes seed of True Blue, Bright Yellow, Rose and White, sufficient to grow for you and your friends dozens of bouquets. Send 10c for a generous packet, and a copy of our 1925

Vaughan's Gardening Illustrated

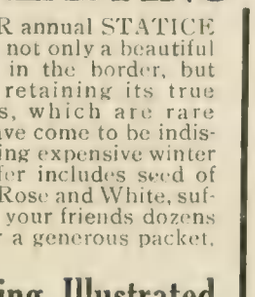
This is a seed catalog unlike others, a magazine of home gardening information, as well as a complete list, with pictures, prices and descriptions, of everything a home gardener desires or needs. It contains

Ninety Colored Plates

The most complete collection of correct illustrations of annual flowers in true colors ever published in an American seed catalog. It lists the finest standard home garden vegetables, and the best of new introductions. It gives all the news of the gardening world, and practical advice for the cultivation of everything listed. Send 10 cents to the nearest address below for a large packet of Vaughan's Annual Statice Mixture, or Vaughan's Marigold Josephine, our introduction of 1924, or Vaughan's Colossal Zinnias, our specialty of 1923, (one packet of each for 30 cents) and Vaughan's 1925 Gardening Illustrated, will be sent with the seed or mailed alone, free.

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE

43 Barclay St. New York City
10 W. Randolph St. Chicago



SEEDS Grown by a Woman

You will be delighted with your garden if you try my new collection of Straw-flowers. Easily grown from seed; bloom till frost—then cut and dry for winter bouquets. Everyone going wild about this flower.

For 10c I will send 5 liberal packages: Red, yellow, white, brown and pink. No better value for the money.

Guaranteed to Please

Order today, send 10c to help pay postage and packing and receive the 5 new varieties of Straw-flower and my bargain Seed Book.

Charlotte M. Haines
Dept. 334, Rockford, Illinois

ACTING PLAYS for Amateurs; Monologs, Recitations, Drills, Minstrel and Vaudeville Jokes and Sketches; ideas for entertainments. Send for free catalog.
DRAMATIC PUBLISHING CO., 542 So. Dearborn St., CHICAGO

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Continued from page 90

'Cecily has been looking at my baby, Flo,' she said happily. "Isn't it a sweet baby, Flo? It couldn't be wrong to have a sweet baby like that, could it?'

"The servant Carrie looked at me significantly. And I saw that salvation for Cecily might lie here. Cecily had been looking into my eyes. Now she buried her face again and burst out, in a sort of whisper:

" 'Oh my God, I thank Thee! Oh, my God, how good Thou art! Oh, I am so grateful—I am so humbly grateful!'

"We got her back to bed, and when we were alone she said to me: 'Flora, I must tell you something. I can tell you now, for I am going to die, and God has forgiven me! I could not give life to any other soul, Flora, and I could not die knowing that my sins would be visited on a poor little baby! No, no—I could not bear that.

" 'They told me, the doctor told me at the hospital—or I dreamed it, on that terrible night of the operation—Flora, did you know that I thought I had a child that night? No, or they told me I did——'

"Don't bother your head about it now, Cecily,' I said. 'Just get well, so that when Roger comes back——'

SHE shuddered at Roger's name and began to get excited.

" 'I will be dead before that, and God will have forgiven me, Flora,' she said. 'Ah, you don't think I was a sinner, but I was! Before I ever took my marriage vow—I had taken another, when I was only fourteen years old! Another girl and I at the convent had taken a solemn oath to God never to marry!' "

"Poor child!" breathed Gabrielle's pale lips.

"Poor child," Flora echoed, without opening her eyes. Her voice was so weak that David held water to her mouth, and she drank with difficulty. "Poor little Cecily! She said that when she had first come to Wastewater she had no thought of lovers or love in her mind. That she had been bewildered and astonished at the emotion Roger had almost at once roused in her, but that she never thought of it as love. That all her thoughts and senses had been in a wild confusion, culminating on the day that he and she drove in to Minford, beyond Tinsall's, quite simply, and that Roger, who knew the justice there, got a special license, and they were married.

"That night she went quite simply away from her mother's room, expecting to be questioned in the morning. But her mother did not miss her; Cecily was quietly dressing when her mother awakened the next day. She said she remembered her vow that day. And when she came to this part, I thought she was going to die. She said quite seriously that she had had not one single happy moment since, and I suppose when Roger laughed at her scruples he broke her heart.

"I told her that no minor child could take a valid vow of that sort, and that indeed her very marriage might be questioned, since her age had been given as nineteen. No use! She believed me only enough to say that no irregularity in her license could possibly make her child more accursed than she would feel a child of hers to be.

" 'But I understand now—I never had a child—it's Lily's child!' she said, over and over again, with such deep thankfulness that I could only be thankful, too. 'Lily told me all about it,' she said, so humbly and tenderly, 'and she no worse a sinner than I—less perhaps, for she loved and I did not!'

'I dismissed the nurse that afternoon, as it chanced, and sent for a nurse we had had from Crowchester, Hannah Rosecrans, a fine girl. She came the next day, and I told her, naturally, the whole truth, but that both my poor Lily and Mrs. Fleming must be treated with the utmost consideration until Mr. Fleming came home.

"Cecily was now all anxiety to get back to Wastewater. And presently we all came home, leaving Carrie behind us.

"Hannah Rosecrans was engaged to be married; she was with us only a few weeks, and then went to Australia, where her husband has become well-to-do. She idolized the baby, and loved Lily, too, but I suppose, servant fashion, she gave the other servants to believe that there was something amiss. Anyway, it was always 'Miss Lily's baby,' from the very first. Lily had told Margaret about her troubles months before, and I was never in any doubt what Margaret thought.

"As for Cecily, she seemed to think it settled. Our Crowchester doctor was recalled, but there was nothing he could do, except keep her quiet. She was sinking very fast; she died when Gabrielle was only seven or eight weeks old.

"Roger got home two days before the end—I thought then that any accident might show him the truth. I told myself that in all this confusion it would only sadden him more. I—I don't know now what I thought, or why I did what I did! I told myself that some time I would of course tell him the whole story, or somebody would. He would meet the old doctor who had attended Cecily, or the doctor who had attended Lily in Boston. Or he might run across Carrie, or Hannah Rosecrans——

"Cecily died and was buried here where we buried Lily only last Spring. Roger went off on his searches, came home—gray-headed and so changed—went off again. And I never told him.

"I had begun it to protect Cecily, to comfort Lily—I never had planned it; it all seemed to come about of itself, and for the first six years of her life Gabrielle called Lily 'Mama.' Then Lily became very bad, and we put her in a sanitarium, and she never knew. And then Will Fleming, my husband, died, and I thought——

"Fool that I was," Flora added after a pause, with infinite fatigue in her voice, "I cared for Roger even then—I cared for him even then. I was widowed, and he twice a widower. He loved my child, but he loved Gabrielle as well. I could not—I could not put Cecily Fleming's child ahead of mine. Roger needed me, he turned to me for everything. I could not see his little girl—placed ahead of me—pushing me out of his life——

"I couldn't—" she said more loudly, choking. "I had given my life to him—my whole life! He had trampled me under his feet. Gabrielle was fair—like Cecily's mother—she was a beautiful baby. I knew he would give his whole heart to her——

"ONE day he said that he was going to change his will, make a generous provision for Lily's poor little girl, and I was glad. It wasn't money that mattered—to me. I would have starved for him. He said that, in case his boy never came back, the little girls should share and share alike, like sisters, and I was glad. There was never any plan in what I did—I used to think that any hour might change it, any chance word! I knew that Roger had written a will in Janet's day, when he might have had half a dozen other children; but after this talk he had a good many interviews with his lawyer, and I supposed that he had done what he said.

"He was not here very much—I came to believe that he hated the old place. I used to think that even if he had found Tom, he would have gone on wandering. But at last when he came home it was to die. He died—you remember, David, quite quietly and without pain, one Summer day—he had been warned of his heart.

"A few days later we read the will. Old Judge Baron had come down from the city.

"We read the will, and I knew then what I had done. Gabrielle was not mentioned. Gabrielle was not mentioned! The will stood as it had stood when he wrote it, when Tom was a baby. Everything, everything to his child or children. And there was a codicil, dated about the time of his last return home, giving everything, everything, to Sylvia, in case Tom did not come back!

"My God, my God—" Flora whispered.

"I had wanted it all my life, and now I had it," she said, after a while, in a voice that was weakening, weakening from moment to moment, and yet full of passion and fire still. "I had it all. Judge Baron went away, David went away, I was alone with Sylvia and little Gabrielle, and Wastewater was mine. I remember, in the first long warm afternoon, that I walked slowly through it, from room to toom, and thought that I had survived them all—all the Black Flemings gone except me! I had only to keep silent, child would be rich.

"I think that's all," she added, opening her

Concluded on page 92

Amazing Loss of Weight

Reduces 36 Lbs in Six Weeks Without Harm or Hardship

"I actually did it—got rid of every bit of the fat that had been the bane of my existence. And in less than two months, after the things I had done in vain for years! Women who remain stout either don't care—or don't know.

"I took the advice of specialists and they took my money, and in the end I wasn't a pound better off. Then I nearly ruined my health starving. I took the Muechener baths—and gained! I came home, used Wallace reducing records and have weighed what I should weigh ever since."

Stays Thin With No Effort

Miss Margaret Hallowell of Kansas City gives Wallace records full credit for her gratifying reduction. She spent less than twenty minutes daily on the method. She now uses the records only occasionally—and reports that they successfully combat the tendency to regain fleshiness at any point.

Why don't you make the same test? It is an interesting experiment, some unique, exhilarating movements set to music, and the trial is absolutely free! Write Wallace—this moment—and the full first lesson comes free and prepaid. You're bound to enjoy it—you don't have to keep on with it—but you will want to when the scales show how much you've lost! Coupon brings record and full instructions:

WALLACE (496)
630 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago.
Please send me FREE and POSTPAID for a week's free trial the Original Wallace Reducing Record.

Name.....

Address.....

DREER'S Garden Book

EVERY woman loves Flowers and many like to supply the table with Vegetables from their own gardens. You can count on success with both if you will follow the directions in Dreer's 1925 Garden Book. It offers the best Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Lawn Grass, Roses, Hardy Perennials, Dahlias, etc.

A copy mailed free if you mention this publication

HENRY A. DREER
1306 Spring Garden Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Prices of Butterick Patterns with the Deltor

Buy patterns at the nearest Butterick agency. But if this is not convenient, they will be sent, post free, from the Main Office of The Butterick Publishing Company, Butterick Building, New York, or the branch offices listed below, at the following prices:

No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.
424	25	5649	30	5710	45	5771	50	5832	45
425	25	5650	40	5711	30	5772	30	5833	35
5590	35	5651	45	5712	45	5773	45	5834	45
5591	45	5652	45	5713	35	5774	35	5835	35
5592	35	5653	45	5714	45	5775	45	5836	40
5593	40	5654	45	5715	35	5776	35	5837	30
5594	35	5655	45	5716	45	5777	45	5838	40
5595	45	5656	45	5717	45	5778	40	5839	35
5596	25	5657	30	5718	45	5779	45	5840	40
5597	30	5658	45	5719	45	5780	30	5841	35
5598	30	5659	35	5720	45	5781	45	5842	50
5599	35	5660	45	5721	45	5782	45	5843	45
5600	45	5661	35	5722	35	5783	45	5844	45
5601	25	5662	45	5723	45	5784	45	5845	35
5602	35	5663	35	5724	35	5785	40	5846	45
5603	30	5664	45	5725	40	5786	45	5847	30
5604	45	5665	35	5726	35	5787	35	5848	40
5605	25	5666	45	5727	40	5788	45	5849	45
5606	45	5667	35	5728	35	5789	30	5850	45
5607	35	5668	45	5729	45	5790	45	5851	40
5608	45	5669	35	5730	30	5791	25	5852	45
5609	35	5670	45	5731	45	5792	45
5610	45	5671	35	5732	40	5793	30
5611	30	5672	45	5733	45	5794	45
5612	45	5673	35	5734	35	5795	35
5613	45	5674	45	5735	45	5796	45
5614	45	5675	30	5736	35	5797	35
5615	35	5676	45	5737	45	5798	50
5616	50	5677	35	5738	35	5799	35
5617	30	5678	45	5739	45	5800	45
5618	45	5679	35	5740	35	5801	35
5619	30	5680	50	5741	50	5802	45
5620	45	5681	35	5742	35	5803	35
5621	45	5682	45	5743	45	5804	45
5622	45	5683	25	5744	25	5805	35
5623	30	5684	45	5745	45	5806	45
5624	45	5685	35	5746	30	5807	35
5625	45	5686	45	5747	45	5808	45
5626	45	5687	30	5748	30	5809	30
5627	30	5688	45	5749	45	5810	45
5628	45	5689	35	5750	35	5811	35
5629	35	5690	45	5751	35	5812	45
5630	45	5691	30	5752	35	5813	35
5631	35	5692	45	5753	35	5814	45
5632	45	5693	35	5754	35	5815	25
5633	30	5694	35	5755	50	5816	40
5634	45	5695	30	5756	30	5817	35
5635	40	5696	45	5757	50	5818	45
5636	50	5697	30	5758	35	5819	35
5637	35	5698	45	5759	45	5820	45
5638	35	5699	35	5760	30	5821	45
5639	35	5700	45	5761	45	5822	45
5640	45	5701	30	5762	35	5823	35
5641	45	5702	45	5763	45	5824	45
5642	45	5703	30	5764	35	5825	35
5643	35	5704	45	5765	45	5826	45
5644	45	5705	30	5766	35	5827	35
5645	50	5706	50	5767	45	5828	45
5646	45	5707	35	5768	35	5829	45
5647	45	5708	50	5769	45	5830	45
5648	50	5709	35	5770	30	5831	35

TRANSFER DESIGNS

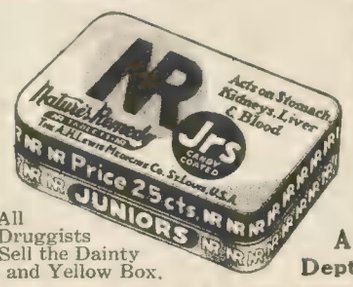
No.	Cts.
10289	30
10290	40
10291	40
10292	30
10293	30
10294	40
10295	30
10296	40
10297	30
10298	30
10299	30
10300	30
10301	40
10302	40
10303	30
10304	30
10305	40
10306	50
10307	30
10308	30
10309	30
10310	30
10311	40
10312	30
10313	30
10314	40
10315	30
10316	50
10317	40
10318	40
10319	50
10320	30

We guarantee every Butterick Pattern to be correct in every detail

Every new Butterick Pattern contains a Deltor and the price of the Pattern includes the Deltor

CHICAGO, ILL., 2231-2249 South Park Avenue
ST. LOUIS, MO., 1201-3-5 Washington Avenue
BOSTON, MASS., 105 Chauncy Street
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., 350 Mission Street
ATLANTA, GA., 79-89 Marietta Street
TORONTO, CAN., 468 Wellington Street, West
WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, 319 Elgin Avenue

Mother Nature—Builder of Health



VIM, Pep and Vigor come from proper body functioning. Mothers should always know that the personal habits of the children are regular and normal.

Biliousness and constipation are the direct cause of listlessness, bad breath, sallow skin and loss of appetite, and lessen the resistance to disease.

MOTHER NATURE'S help is to be found in Nature's Remedy [NR Tablets] the all vegetable corrective with a mild, thorough action. A laxative without bad after effects and one that produces no habit.

NR JUNIORS, Little NRs—Chips off the old block are made specially for children; small, candy-coated tablets one-third the size and strength of the regular NRs. Your druggist has them at 25c. a box. A liberal sample, with copy of "Well and Happy" will be sent on receipt of a stamp for postage.

All Druggists Sell the Dainty Blue and Yellow Box.

A. H. LEWIS MED. CO., Dept. 3-B, St. Louis, Mo.

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Concluded from page 91

sunken dark eyes, and fixing them steadily upon David's face. "That explains it all, doesn't it? I have lived in fear. I knew the old doctor was dead, but I used to lie in the nights imagining that he had happened to tell some one—some one who was drawing nearer and nearer to my life every moment: Hannah Rosecrans, the Carrie we had in Boston, the doctor Lily had—whose very name I can't remember—they all knew! Any day might have brought them back to me with their questions——

"I used to imagine that I might go to jail. But I never was anything else but in jail, all my life long!"

SHE stopped. Sylvia's dark face and white skin were drained of color, her eyes looked tortured, and she was breathing fast. As she knelt beside the bed, she half supported her mother upon her arm, her anxious and stricken face close to the leaden, ghastly face upon the pillow.

Gabrielle had been kneeling too, as she listened. But at the end she rose and walked to the little window.

Outside, in the winter dusk, lay the soaked, blackened ruins of the old stables, those clean, big airy stables that Gabrielle had so loved as a little girl. Beyond were the bare winter woods, looking desolate and forlorn in the cool, gray light, and on the right brimmed and lowered the cold and unfriendly sea.

As Gabrielle stood there in a very storm of pity and pain, the Island lights suddenly pricked through the dove-gray of the gloom, and flashed their pinkish radiance against the gaining and prevailing shadows. The girl's thoughts traveled to them idly— She thought of little ships cutting their way through the trackless waters, of men twisting the wheels and peering out across the waves to find that steadily pulsing flash.

Somebody had lighted a light in the room behind her. David touched her arm.

A sudden bitter need of tears possessed her, and her breast swelled. But she only raised heavy eyes to his questioningly, and bit her lips to steady it.

"Aunt Flora wants to speak to you, Gay." The girl could tell by David's tone that he had said it before. He gently turned her back to the bed.

Like a person in a dream she went slowly toward Flora and knelt down beside her.

Flora reached out hard and anxious fingers and gripped the girl's hand.

"I told David this yesterday—he was to tell you—when the fire came—" Flora whispered.

"He did tell us. But I thought—I thought that—my mother—Lily was still my mother, and that Uncle Roger was my father—that I had no right to call him father. It seems—" her lips shook again. "It seems that I might have had—a father—" She raised her eyes appealingly, almost apologetically to David, who was watching closely. "I never—had—any one," she said, with suddenly brimming eyes.

FLORA spoke. Immediately afterward Gabrielle heard Sylvia give a sort of cry, and then David leaned over her, and said tenderly: "Gay—she is very ill, dear. If you can——"

"If I can—what—David?" she repeated, confused, her beautiful eyes wide and anxious.

"She wants you to forgive her, Gabrielle——"

"Yes, I will, of course I will," she said quickly and simply.

"Then tell her so, Gabrielle."

Gabrielle bent her gaze upon her aunt's sunken face, a blot against the white pillows, and Flora fixed upon her the tragic look of her darkening eyes.

"You will forgive me, Gabrielle?" Flora whispered feverishly. "In all the years to come you will not hate me? You have grown to be a lovely woman—I did not harm you. I might have harmed you—but it was Sylvia, in the end, who had to pay for what I did!"

"I will never hate you," Gabrielle said slowly, like a child repeating a lesson.

"It was because I loved him so," said Flora's drawn, dark mouth in a whisper. She sank back, seemed to be sinking away from earth and the things of earth altogether. "God bless you, Gabrielle, you have made it easy for me to die," she added, in the mere breath of a voice.

"I'm—so—sorry!" Gay said, with a great sob. And she buried her face against the coverlet, and burst into crying. "I'm so sorry that he was unkind to you—and that you could not forgive him, and forgive me!" she sobbed. "We might have been—we might all have been so happy!"

"We might have been so happy," Flora's lips repeated. No other muscle of her bloodless face and shut eyes moved. "God bless you, Gabrielle," she whispered again as Gabrielle, drawn away by David's hand, stopped to kiss her in farewell.

The girl, half-way to the door, and hardly conscious of what she was doing, suddenly wrenched herself free, and went back to the bed. She fell on her knees and, catching the languid dark hand, put it to her lips.

"Aunt Flora, indeed I forgive you," she said, weeping, "from my heart! I am so sorry you were unhappy—that they all hurt you and failed you so, dear Aunt Flora——"

Sylvia was on her knees on the other side and crying as bitterly as Gabrielle, when David led the younger girl away. He and Margaret placed her upon a sofa down-stairs, with cushions and covers before the fire. She saw Flora only once again, and that was at the end, at seven o'clock.

AT TEN Tom drove them to Crowchester, and they boarded the Boston train, Sylvia veiled and clinging tightly to Tom's arm, Gabrielle and old Margaret guiding them through the interested, warm train to the privacy of their drawing-room.

Gabrielle's last look at Wastewater had shown her only bare trees, blackened masses of ruins darker than the prevailing dark, open levels where the stately walls had been. Toward the distant west wall, beyond the woods, the changed perspective had left a long vista free, and Gabrielle could see the white gravestones in the moonlight.

Graves and ruins, ashes and bare branches, and beside them the unchanged, restless sea. The child of Wastewater looked back with a great gravity, a great solemnity in her heart. There had been laughter here, music and voices; Wastewater had had a housewarming, more than a hundred years ago, when beautiful women, in the capes and high-waisted gowns of the Empire days, had been driven in jingling great coaches all the way from Boston city to dance and rejoice with the young master of the mansion.

There had been a first Roger, in the buff and blue of the Revolution, Colonel Fleming, as black and as handsome as any of them; and there had been his son Tom, the good-hearted Tom who had come all the way to Brookline to find a cousin's disconsolate little widow, with her sewing machine, and her girl babies, and offer them a home.

And there had been Tom's son Roger, handsomest and most dashing of them all; David's young mother, who was to win his heart, and that shadowy little Cecily, who must now be "mother" for Gabrielle.

Aunt Flora, always watching jealously, Aunt Lily, tearful and singing her romantic little songs, gallant little Tom reading his sea-stories on the old nursery window-sill, dark little proud Sylvia with her glossy curls, baby Gay herself, wistful and alone; they had all seemed to pass before the girl's eyes in a long and haunting procession, crying as they went that they had failed, in all this wealth and beauty, to find happiness and peace!

"I will be happy," Gabrielle had sworn to herself solemnly, frightened at the history of the place. "I will try never to be proud or jealous or cruel. We are Flemings, we four—and I as much a Fleming as any one of them now, and we must not make their mistakes! God helping us," she thought, remembering the little nun who had years ago read the Sermon on the Mount to a class of inattentive little girls, so many, many times, "we will all be good, and meek, and merciful, and some day—years and years from now—we will return to Wastewater and rebuild it."

"Good-by, Wastewater!" she had whispered, leaning back to look through the glass window of the motor-car, and from beyond the ruins, the ashes, the bare garden and the moonlight sea, the Island lights had flashed her an answer.

Concluded in the March DELINEATOR

YOUR GOLD-MEDAL GARDEN

Concluded from page 20

from these borders. These would have struck a discordant note with the soft tones of the blues and lavender, rose color and pale yellow, which make this garden border so charming.

This garden is a permanent planting also. The only annuals are annual larkspur, salpiglossis, calendula, zinnia, cosmos and scabiosa. These may be sown every year, or the border varied by using other annuals another year, to introduce new notes.

Little care is needed for such a border as this, aside from the weeding necessary in early Summer. After blooming, the stalks must be cut down and the dead annuals pulled up. In the Spring the plants should be dug about carefully and a little bone-meal worked in.

And what encloses the entire garden—forming a suitable frame for the lovely color of its blooms? Except at the foot of the yard, where pergola and grape trellis and trees form the boundary, and except the edge of the vegetable garden where dwarf but thriftily bearing fruit-trees are grown on trellises, a thick hedge of arbor-vitæ forms the picture frame. At what might be called strategic points at each corner of the house terrace, and on each side of the entrance path and flanking the driveway taller evergreens are set.

Whoever wishes a garden like the gold-medal one should first make the pergola or arbor and the trellis for grapes and roses. The pergola may be as simple or as elaborate as one chooses. Eight feet apart for the posts, eight feet wide and eight feet high are good dimensions.

Then the garden-beds should be staked out and the manure or fertilizer dug in. As to planting, first come the roses, which should go in as early as possible, also the grape-vines, dwarf fruit-trees, wisteria and the shrubs. Hardy perennials may be planted very early, and in March or February seeds of annuals sown in the cold-frame. In late April (latitude of New York) plant the evergreens, the hedge of arbor-vitæ and the specimen evergreens.

AS PLANNED by Mrs. Hansen this garden requires the following items:

125 Arbor-vitæ	$137.50
6 Specimen Evergreens, Juniper or Tall Arbor-vitæ	42.00
9 Climbing Roses	6.00
1 Wisteria	.65
3 Syringa	2.25
2 Forsythia	1.00
2 Lilac	1.50
2 Lonicera	1.50
4 Dwarf Fruit-Trees	1.30
3 Trees (Laburnum, Dogwood, Evergreen Thorn)	4.50
Perennials and Annuals for Flower-Beds	35.00
Total	$233.20

The expense of flagging or of lumber is not given, as it varies greatly in different parts of the country. Old flagstones may be available or one may prefer brick or gravel or grass.

Now suppose, for example, you desire the effect of the prize garden but can not at the moment afford the expensive planting of arbor-vitæ and specimen evergreens. What should you do?

Why, do as one does in the matter of clothes: use the idea and translate it into a less expensive medium. For instance, the division between flower border and kitchen garden may be left for the first year to the hollyhocks and monk's-hood, and perhaps the hedge of evergreen could be planted in September. Instead of the surrounding hedge of arbor-vitæ, privet might be used; it keeps green for most of the Winter and is much less expensive. Instead of a tall specimen evergreen at the north corner of the living-room, put a young Lombardy poplar and you will keep the lines of the prize garden and greatly decrease your expense.

Some of the most delightful gardens are developed gradually. One has the plan in mind and adds a bit to the garden every year. Thus if the buying of the hardy perennials for the flower border proves something of an expense, start some early in boxes and grow the rest from Summer-sown seed and set them out in the Autumn.

And if you make new and lovely combinations, let us know about them, for there will be more gardens and another gold medal, besides this well-merited award won by Mrs. Hansen.

AS MARTHA WASHINGTON DINED

Continued from page 19

brandied peaches added zest to dinner-parties, and many a Southern woman of to-day employs the pickle recipes that some ancestress used in Revolutionary times.

What could be more suitable than to sit down to a modern Washington's Birthday feast made up of the favorite dishes of Washington's day? By the process of elimination, we can easily adapt one of those old Colonial menus to suit present-day purses and dietary standards and at the same time have the feeling that we are eating the very sort of dinner that Martha Washington planned when she went to housekeeping as First Lady of the Land.

We have included some of the most interesting recipes which she may have served. If you do not know how to prepare any of the other dishes mentioned on her "company" menu, write to The Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR for them.

VIRGINIA HAM

Here is a famous old recipe for baked Virginia ham. Prepare a stiff dough of flour and water. Roll this out into an oblong sheet one-half an inch thick. Wrap this around the ham, lapping the edges and pinching them together so that the ham is completely covered and sealed.

The ham should not be cut and should not be trimmed at all.

Bake in a moderate to slow oven (250 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit) eight to ten hours. Crack off the case, then remove the skin and the ham is ready to serve.

SOUTHERN SPOON BREAD

Try this real Southern spoon bread. It is a novelty—and a most delicious one—to many people.

¼ cup fat and cracklings from pork, beef or chicken fat
3 cups boiling water
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup corn-meal
2 eggs

Add the fat and cracklings to the water, and when boiling sprinkle in the salt and corn-meal, stirring constantly. Cook in a double boiler one hour; cool, and add the well-beaten eggs. Turn into a greased baking-dish and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for three-fourths of an hour.

BEATEN BISCUIT

Beaten biscuit one always associates with "way down South in Dixie."

1 quart flour
1 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons lard
1 pint milk or water

Sift the flour and salt, then cut in the lard very thoroughly. Add the liquid very gradually until the dough is smooth. It should not be soft but rather stiff. Lay the dough on the board, which should rest upon a substantial support. Beat with a rolling-pin

Concluded on page 94

A Rainless Summer Vacation!

—yes, it can be practically guaranteed

THERE is a consistent summerland not far away where rain coats, umbrellas and storm clouds are stored for the season and everybody basks in a delicious, regular, dependable sunshine.

Golf date, picnic or sight-seeing trip scheduled for a week from Saturday or any day in the week?—sure, you'll be there, and so will the sun!

But isn't it HOT?—well, the forty-seven-year average mean temperatures in a central city in this section (U. S. Weather Bureau figures, just so we don't mislead you) are 66° for June; 70° for July; 71° for August; and 69° for September—a forty-seven-year average, remember.

Southern California, a summer resort—yes, natives are often asked, "But how do you sleep at night?" and the strange, calm, unexcited answer comes back,—"Under blankets."

Absolutely true—you need one, nine nights out of ten throughout all four invigorating, balmy, luscious months.

"Why, what a land!" You're right. What opportunity for pure, unadulterated FUN—everywhere you turn and every day of your entire stay whether it is for two weeks or twenty.

Golf, tennis, horse-back riding, hiking, camping, fishing, ocean bathing, old missions and their history, deserts, mountains, orange, fig and olive groves, palms, eucalyptus, pepper trees and other vegetation and flowers such as you have never seen—and five thousand miles of beautifully paved motor roads threading through it all! A hundred thousand guide signs posted everywhere by the world's greatest motor club to tell you where to go and just how far it is.

Another thing: The healthiest looking, rosy-cheeked, bright-eyed children that you have ever gazed upon in any country.

The Limited, with its hotel-like service, takes you through the historic lands of the old pioneers. You appreciate your country—know it as you never did before. A trip of trips—different, new, enchanting.

Special low round trip railroad rates from May to October make it more than ever easy to go this summer.

Southern California is the new gateway to Hawaii—see it and enjoy it on your way.

Railroad ticket agents in any city have detailed information about California, of great interest to you. Ask them to tell you all about it, or mail coupon below to us.

All-Year Club of Southern California

ALL-YEAR CLUB OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA,
DEPT. 102, 2601 S. FIGUEROA STREET,
LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

I am planning to visit Southern California this summer. Please send me your free booklet "Southern California All the Year." Also booklets telling especially of the attractions and opportunities in the counties which I have checked.

Los Angeles City and County
Orange County
Riverside County
San Bernardino County
Santa Barbara County
Ventura County

NAME .....
STREET .....
CITY ..... STATE .....

MAKE MONEY AT HOME

YOU can earn money at home in your spare time making show cards. No canvassing or soliciting. We show you how, supply you work at home no matter where you live and pay you cash for all work done. Full particulars and booklet free. Write today.
AMERICAN SHOW CARD SYSTEM, Ltd.
222 Adams Building, Toronto, Canada.

CHECK SNEEZING COLDS
Rub nasal passage with Mentholatum
COOLING, ANTISEPTIC, CLEARS HEAD
Write for free sample
Mentholatum Co., Buffalo, N.Y., Wichita, Kans.

Started Out to Get Pin Money
EARNED $40.00 FIRST WEEK

Have you one hour, two hours, three hours to give? Will you take $15 to $50 a week for this spare time? Then write me immediately. I will tell you how Mrs. J. M. Kelly of Iowa, who only wanted pin money, earned $40.00 the first week. I must have at once a limited number of refined, cultured women. You can start earning money at once if you write me now. A post card will do. But send it today.
MARIE FRANZAN, 2707 Cottage Grove Ave. Dept. 432 Chicago, Illinois

Maybelline
DARKENS and BEAUTIFIES EYELASHES and BROWS INSTANTLY, makes them appear naturally dark, long and luxuriant. Adds wonderful charm, beauty and expression to any face. Perfectly harmless. Used by millions of lovely women. BLACK or BROWN, obtainable in solid cake form or waterproof liquid. 75c at your dealer's or direct postpaid.
MAYBELLINE CO. CHICAGO

Any Woman Can Make Money This Way

Money saved on a necessary expenditure is money easily earned.

Rooms redecorated now in the off season can be done more quickly, better and at a considerably lower cost. Ask your decorator to show you the saving. Also send for our free booklet "Saving Money in Decorating."

* * *

If you are interested in a comprehensive resume of the great historical periods of decoration, send ten cents in currency or stamps for "Walls and their Decorations" by Major Arthur de Bles, international authority on decorations.

WALLPAPER MANUFACTURERS' ASSSOCIATION of the United States
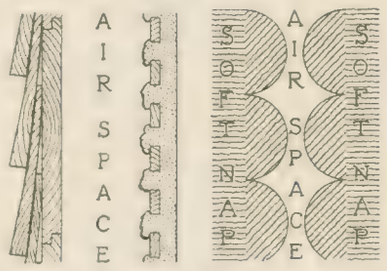
461 Eighth Avenue New York City

At any store that displays the sign below you will find good wallpapers, competent workmanship and fair prices.

ASSOCIATE WALLPAPER GUILD

ESMOND



BLANKETS

The patterns and color combinations of Esmond Blankets make a bedroom attractive, inviting and in good taste. The name Esmond means quality and wear in bed blankets, blanket comfortables, baby blankets and Indian and sport blankets. All Esmond Blankets are mothproof and fade-proof. Remember the name, it is important—Esmond. Made in America.

THE ESMOND MILLS, ESMOND, R. I.
CLARENCE WHITMAN & SON, INC.
SELLING AGENTS, NEW YORK CITY

Through the centuries it has been proven that the double walled house is the only warm house—that an air space is necessary between the outer wall and the inner wall to retain the warmth in the house and keep the cold out. All good houses are insulated with an air space between the outer and inner walls. This is also the Esmond process of Blanket manufacture.

Esmond Blankets are woven two-in-one—two walls with an air space between.
Esmond Blankets are single blankets with the warmth of a pair. In the Esmond process, only one side of the yarn is fuzzed which makes the Esmond stronger, besides warmer, than a blanket made in the ordinary way with only one strand fuzzed on both sides. All Esmond Blankets have the air space between—it is the Esmond process.

WHY BOYS AND GIRLS PLAY DIFFERENTLY

Concluded from page 15

The belonging or the citizenship instinct finds expression in the great team games, the Scout and Camp-Fire activities and the innumerable "gangs" that exist wherever there are boys. Here again we find boys are most strongly influenced. In recent years, however, in keeping with women's increased interest in group activity, girls have made great progress in team games.

These fundamental differences in the natures of the two sexes must be taken into account in planning the play of boys and girls. The boy must have games in which victory and defeat are important. The desire to win and the will to win are things that he will need all through life. With the girl, on the other hand, games in which the result is less important than the play itself have great attraction.

The exact time at which the separation of the play of boys and girls takes place varies widely in different cases. Much depends upon the personality of the instructor or leader: some women teachers are able to maintain the interest of boys in folk-dances and play of that type until the high-school age; some men instructors manage to get girls playing competitive games, such as track and field sports and various kinds of ball, at an age when the feminine mind is usually much occupied with dolls and things of like character. I do not believe it a wise plan to try to force either sex. When the boy begins to tire of the sports in which he has been engaging with girls, let him follow his own instincts. So long as the girl is content to play with dolls, there is nothing to be gained by substituting competitive sports, provided she is getting proper exercise.

There is a time when girls excel boys in height and weight and sometimes in strength and skill. This comes about the eleventh or twelfth year, and it is then that the play separation usually begins. At all other times, girls, generally speaking, are a little less skilful and a little less strong than boys of the same age, and after the fifth or sixth grade competition between the two sexes is generally unsatisfactory. During the early high-school period it has been found better to separate boys and girls in practically all of their play activities, for they are growing apart, and the awakening of sex consciousness at this time probably makes the gap wider than it is at any other period of their lives. Girls retain an intense interest in dancing and in chasing-games, while boys want something faster and rougher and something in which the result is more definite. There must be a winner and a loser in every game to satisfy the masculine competitive instinct at this time.

The "gang" instinct is very strong in boys at this age, and it finds an outlet in team games. The boy very rapidly substitutes a spirit of intense loyalty for the highly individualistic spirit that has governed his earlier years. It is a very impressionable age, and proper direction of the "gang" spirit is of the utmost importance: hundreds of boys who have become criminals because they indulged their "gang" inclinations with evil associates could have been made useful and respectable citizens if they had been given a chance to play the right kinds of games. The typical gangster often has admirable qualities, such as courage and loyalty, but these have been misdirected. His ideas of right and wrong have become so distorted that he devotes to unworthy causes characteristics that would be productive of real results if properly applied.

Because the girl remains much more strongly individualistic than the boy, and never develops the gang instinct to anything like the same extent, I do not believe that team games have quite the same hold. Girls seem to be more inclined to travel in small groups or in pairs than in real "gangs." It is true that they sometimes play team games with great success, but on the whole they are not so good as boys in submerging the individual in the group. Undoubtedly the spirit of group loyalty is going to be greatly developed by woman's participation in politics. Team games teach the elements of citizenship, and for that reason girls ought to be encouraged to play them. The whole theory of our system of government is based on the group as opposed to the individual, and it is well for each one of us to learn in childhood that there is something in the world more important than our own personal desires, that we have a responsibility to society as well as to our own family and friends.

BY ALL means let us encourage girls to play vigorous games, but not so vigorous as those of boys of the same age. Especially let me urge that girls should not be permitted after the age of twelve to try to keep pace with boys in boys' games. It is not fair to expect them then to hold their own with the boys, and in trying to do so they may do themselves a serious harm. Pride and courage will often cause a girl to exert herself beyond her capacity, and her play must be so directed that she will not be permitted nor expected to carry anything to excess. Her natural instinct to look upon the game itself as more important than the result should be encouraged.

AS MARTHA WASHINGTON DINED

Concluded from page 93

for a half-hour. Knead lightly, and beat again for ten minutes, when every portion of the surface of the dough should show blisters or air bubbles. Roll out to one-half inch in thickness. Cut into circles or squares. Prick with a fork and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for ten or fifteen minutes.

CURRANT CAKE

This recipe for birthday currant cake may sound appalling at first, but the ingredients may be reduced proportionately, and it is really worth trying.

The old recipe runs: "One pound and a half of fine sugar, one pound and a half of butter, three pounds and a half of currants, two pounds of flour, one-half pound of candied peel, one-half pound of almonds, two ounces of mixed spices, the grated rind of three lemons, eighteen eggs, one gill of cider. Paper the hoops and bake three hours. Ice when cold."

The quaint direction to "paper the hoops" need not mystify the modern housewife. It merely means: "Line the pans with well-greased paper."

Though Washington's own birthday-cake may have been decorated with citron, almonds and cherries, we doubt if the fruit was cut in the shape of hatchets. However, modern popular opinion—if not history—considers this an appropriate shape. Burn three candles on the cake, which commemorates the birthday of our first President—one for the past, one for the present and one for the future.

ROYAL SYLLABUB

Ice-cream was an unknown quantity in those days, but who would want it when one could eat a dessert with the impressive name royal syllabub?

1 pint double cream	½ cup sugar
1½ cup fruit-juice	Whites of two eggs

Beat the whites of the eggs until foamy, add the fruit-juice mixed with the sugar, and lastly the cream. Beat with a whip churn. Take off the froth as it rises and drain over a strainer. Pour the unwhipped mixture into glasses, pile the whip on top and serve ice cold.

Handiest thing in the house

For More Than two Generations

FIFTY years ago "Vaseline" Petroleum Jelly was new to medical men and mothers. Today it is used in every hospital and found in first aid kits and family medicine cabinets the world over.

There is nothing safer or more soothing and healing than "Vaseline" Petroleum Jelly for cuts, scalds, or burns. It keeps out air and dirt and lets nature heal. Contains no harmful or irritating ingredients and is always good until all used.

Look for the trade-mark "Vaseline." It is your protection.

CHESEBROUGH MFG. COMPANY
State Street (Consolidated) New York

Vaseline

REG. U. S. PAT. OFF
PETROLEUM JELLY

For cold sores and chapped lips or hands, there's nothing better than "Vaseline" Camphor Ice. Try it. Send for booklet "Inquire Within."

The Chef knows!

KITCHEN BOUQUET

Puts the snap in his soups, stews, gravies!

Fresh vegetables made into liquid magic that enables you to make home cooking taste like the creations of famous chefs.

Never be without Kitchen Bouquet in the pantry!

If your grocer can't supply you, send 10 cents for generous sample bottle. Recipe folder sent free.

KITCHEN BOUQUET, Inc.
522 Fifth Ave., New York

Safe Milk

For Infants, Children, Invalids, Nursing Mothers

Avoid Imitations

Big Profits in Home Cooking!

Alice Bradley, famous expert, shows just how to make home cooking, cake-making, candy-making give big profits. How to cater, run profitable TEA ROOMS, motor inns, cafeterias, etc. Write for free booklet, "Cooking for Profit."

American School of Home Economics, 846 E. 58th St., Chicago

WHY I DESIGN DELINEATOR HOUSES

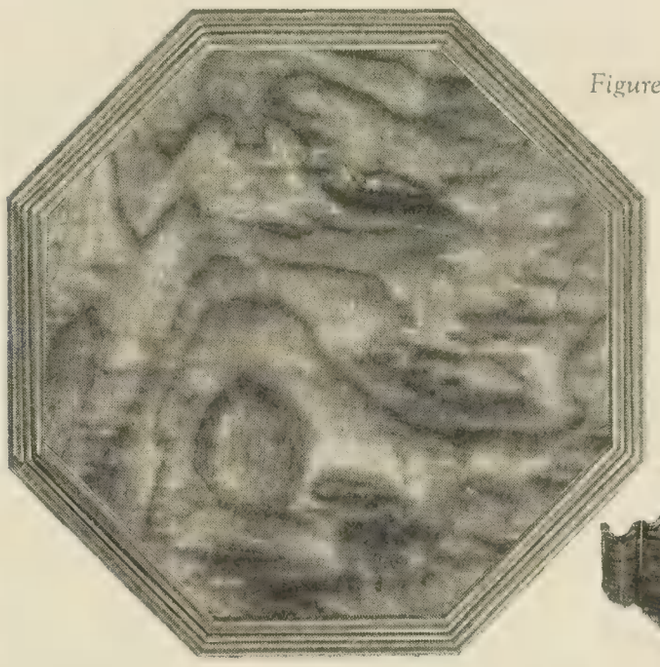
Concluded from page 21

His estate is bordered on one side by a road or street leading directly into a neighboring town. It was suggested that he build these houses on that part of his property which faced this street, allotting to each house a plot seventy-five by one hundred and fifty feet where the ground sloped up a little steeply from the road.

In one sense the design of these houses was impersonal—that is, they were made to suit the average needs of any small family. I suggested, therefore, that he base the plans and designs of these four houses on some of THE DELINEATOR house-plans which I had designed. He acquiesced in this, and these houses therefore are modifications of THE DELINEATOR house-plans numbers three and four. We took these plans and adapted them to the special requirements of the site, using the most suitable materials obtainable in the neighborhood. I started with the blue-prints furnished by THE DELINEATOR for these houses and assumed that I was a local architect commissioned to use these plans as a basis and modified them to solve the problem in hand.

Four of the houses illustrated have just been finished. The grading has been arranged, but no accessory planting has been done. Photographs of them will be shown later when the planting which is now being done blends them to the site and surroundings.

The houses built from DELINEATOR plans number three and number four have been designed freely along the picturesque English-cottage type with long roof lines and low eaves. The moundlike effect gives a sense of strength and restfulness as though the house grew out of the ground and was inseparable from it. At the same time, the effect of solidity has been lightened by spots of wooden construction, curves in the roof, touches of color in the blinds and brickwork.



IN THE choice of materials, the architect has been guided by the thought of practicability and permanency, rejecting those which might lower the first cost but which might add later to the expense of upkeep. Some so-called expensive material has been used in places where experience has proved that such an outlay pays. The purpose throughout has been not to see how cheaply a house of such and such a size could be constructed, but rather to build honestly and simply, without sham or fancy, to produce a building that will have the maximum of convenience, be pleasing to the eye and have a permanent investment value.

The exterior walls of the houses are of terra-cotta tile blocks on concrete foundations surfaced with cement stucco. This form of construction, while slightly more expensive than the common frame and stucco type, is vastly superior, as it eliminates the danger of cracks and peeling and makes a much more substantial and a warmer house. The finish coat of stucco is made of white cement and a yellow sand, which produces a warm cream color that does not fade. The stucco is left with its natural finish and need not be painted unless one so desires. The sills of the windows and porches and the entrance steps are of common red brick, which relieves the monotony of the creamy white walls. The windows are of the balanced rise-and-fall type, equipped with zinc weather-strips and fly-screens.

The roofing material for these houses is asbestos shingles, which produce not only a warm, pleasing effect but a roof with excellent wearing qualities.

The houses are heated by a low-pressure steam system with a magazine feed boiler which uses low-cost buckwheat coal.

The plumbing fixtures of white porcelain include built-in tubs, enameled inside and outside, and other sanitary built-in bathroom equipment. All hot-water pipes, which are very subject to corrosion, are of brass.

Figured Walnut

American Walnut

unhurt by rough child-play

WALNUT'S beautiful, tawny brown color is grown in the wood by the slow hand of Nature. It is not a surface stain. Hence the romping play of healthy youngsters leaves no damaging blemish on your walnut furniture.

The housewife likes it for its ease and economy of upkeep. A touch of the dusting cloth keeps it fresh.

Its strength and durability are unchallenged. Walnut is supreme in its resistance to heat and moisture changes. Walnut furniture resists shrinking, swelling, warping and cracking.

Walnut furniture costs little if any more than furniture of other woods of equal design, workmanship and finish. Over a period of years its economy is notable.

AMERICAN WALNUT

We will gladly mail you on request our beautiful book, "The Story of American Walnut." Learn how to tell real walnut from its imitations. Write for it.

AMERICAN WALNUT MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION
ROOM 1100, 616 SOUTH MICHIGAN AVENUE CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Everyday throughout the year — the truth of this statement is confirmed,

Light enough for easy washing
Heavy enough to stand the wear

The dependable worth of PEPPERELL Sheeting has caused it to become the standard sheeting of its class. Thousands of shrewd housekeepers have, for more than 60 years, used Pepperell Sheets, because they knew they were unequalled for even texture, smooth finish and positive wearing worth.

Every yard of PEPPERELL Sheeting is made with extreme care and sold on its merits.

Try PEPPERELL once and you will always desire it. If not found at your Retailers, write us for free samples.

Sheeting and Pillow Tubing Pepperell Sheets and Pillow Cases

PEPPERELL MANUFACTURING CO.
BOSTON, MASS. Mills at Biddeford, Maine

To the tips of her lovely fingers!

Many a poem has been written about Milady's fingers. Many a picture has been painted. But never a poem, or never a picture that equals the grace and loveliness of beautiful nails themselves!

Now that Glazo has made beautiful nails a matter of seconds, there's no longer any reason why the hands of even the busiest woman should not always look their loveliest.

Just a deft touch with the handy Glazo brush once a week! That's all you need to keep your nails in the pink of condition and glowing with that soft lustre that good taste and good breeding demand. Soap and water will not dull your Glazo manicure, nor will your nails crack or peel when protected by this splendid polish.

Use the Remover that Comes with Every Package

GLAZO is the original Liquid Polish. It comes complete with separate remover which not only insures better results but prevents the waste that occurs when the Polish itself is used as a remover.

Stop at your favorite toilet goods counter today and get the GLAZO package. It will mean lovely nails always, with the minimum of exertion and expense. 50c at all counters.

GLAZO

Nails Stay Polished Longer—No Buffing Necessary

For trial size GLAZO Manicuring Outfit, write name and address in margin, tear off and mail with 10c to

The Glazo Co., 43 Blair Ave., Cincinnati, O.

A Sure Way to End Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely, and that is to dissolve it. Then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just apply a little Liquid Arvon at night before retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and two or three more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get Liquid Arvon at any drug store and a four ounce bottle is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

LIQUID ARVON

MIFFLIN ALKOHOL

A real aid to the glowing beauty that comes from a healthy body.

the external tonic

BE A TRAINED NURSE

Enjoy freedom. Steady income. Graduates earn $35.00 to $45.00 weekly. Home study course. Diploma issued. Established 22 years. We furnish hospital experience. No drudgery. Learn quick. Easy terms. Write for FREE Catalog TODAY.

AMERICAN TRAINING SCHOOL, 1559 N. LaSalle St., Chicago

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 26

5816—10317—This becoming one-piece dress has a new sleeve and a straight lower edge. It slips on over the head and the collar and cuffs may be detachable. The embroidery is effective. Use light-weight wool jersey or heavy crêpe de Chine with contrasting color, knitted silk-and-wool with crêpe de Chine of contrasting color and bound with self for collar; or use heavy crêpe de Chine, soft satin or silk Canton crêpe with lace, etc.

36 bust requires 2⅛ yards 54-inch wool jersey tubing. Lower edge 54 inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5842—A two-piece slip-over dress of this type with a draped tunic and a one-piece slip is smart for evening functions. For day wear sleeves can be used. Use lace with slip and flowers of metallic fabric or slip of satin to match and metallic ribbon flowers. With sleeves, use crêpe satin, silk Canton crêpe, heavy crêpe de Chine, flat crêpe or crêpe faille. Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

36 bust requires 3¼ yards 40-inch lace (including band for slip).

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5807—5827—The ensemble costume is often composed of a tunic blouse and a costume slip with a lower part to match the coat. This slip-over tunic blouse has a convertible collar and may be longer. Use faille silk, bengaline, wool rep or soft twills for blouse and silk crêpe, soft satin, crêpe meteor or crêpe de Chine for the slip which may have a deep hem. Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

36 bust requires 2⅜ yards 39-inch corded silk; for slip 2⅜ yards 39-inch material including collar and cuffs.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5834—An applied front plait, a tie, light-weight novelty buttons and puffed sleeves are attractive features of this one-piece dress with a close-fitting hipline. It slips on over the head and the collar may be detachable. Use soft twills, cashmere dress materials, wool crêpe, kasha or ribbed silks with silk crêpe in contrasting color or plaid silk.

19 years or 36 bust requires 2⅛ yards 54-inch kasha and ¾ yard 39-inch figured silk. Lower edge 44 inches.

The dress is becoming to ladies 38 and 40 bust, also misses 15 to 20 years.

5765—A lower front in triple-apron effect gives variation to the dress with a close-fitting hipline. It slips on over the head and has a one-piece back. Use wool rep, wool crêpe, soft twills, cashmere dress materials or broadcloth, with center of scarf of crêpe de Chine to match or in contrasting color, and braid bindings. Or use faille silk, satin crêpe or heavy silk crêpe with bindings of self material, etc. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch wool rep.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5788—Overlapping points give interest to the side line of this one-piece slip-over dress with a detachable cape and a close-fitting hipline. Use wool rep, kasha, cashmere dress materials or soft twills with inserted section, corded facing at neck and sleeves, bound buttonholes and cuffs in contrasting color, the cape lined with crêpe de Chine, etc; or use plaid for cape-lining, inserted section, etc.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 54-inch soft twill and ¼ yard 39-inch contrasting material for inserted section and facings. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5816 5834 5842 5765 5807 5827 5788

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 27

5804—A straight gathered tunic joined at a close-fitting hipline marks the one-piece slip-over dress as belonging to the flared silhouette. The neck may be cut for day or evening wear and the armholes cut down or normal. Use all-over lace or satin with tunic of lace flouncing, bands of tinsel ribbon, or printed Georgette with short sleeves and ribbon bands, etc. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 2⅞ yards 35-inch lace and 2 yards 18-inch flouncing.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5779—10258—A detachable cape which is drawn in under the back is a smart feature of this one-piece slip-over dress of crêpe faille, crêpe satin or silk crêpe. Without embroidery use cashmere dress materials, soft twills, light-weight flannel or wool jersey. Work embroidery on the sleeves in colors.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch cashmere. Lower edge 43½ inches.

The dress is good style for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5767—10961—Women who like easier lines may wear this one-piece slip-over dress with a straight lower edge. The collar may be detachable. Use crêpe faille or satin with lace or crêpe de Chine collar, self bindings and glass buttons, Canton crêpe or crêpe de Chine with bone buttons, etc. Work the embroidery in harmonious colors.

36 bust requires 3 yards 39-inch Canton crêpe. Lower edge 54 inches.

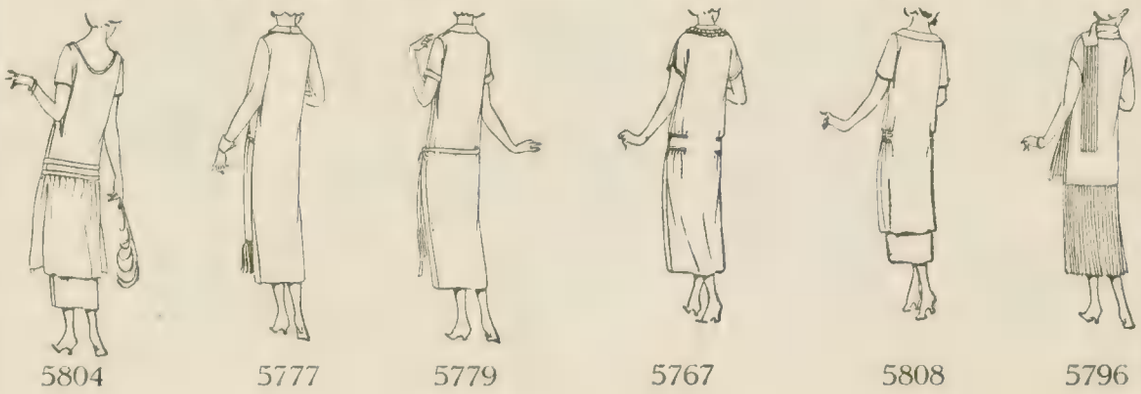
The dress is for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5777—A vestee and cuffs of white corded silk give the tailored touch to a one-piece draped wrap-around dress of cashmere dress materials, soft twills or broadcloth. The sash-end is of crêpe de Chine to match dress and bone buttons in contrasting color. Or use faille silk or heavy satin crêpe with crêpe de Chine vestee, and contrasting bone or crystal buttons.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch broadcloth. Lower edge 42 inches.

The dress is for ladies 34 to 46 bust.

5808—Printed heavy crêpe de Chine or silk crêpe with plain to match for the slip, etc., is an attractive combination for this slip-over tunic blouse and separate one-piece slip. One may use crêpe satin with Georgette to match or in a lighter shade for sleeve-puffs, etc. Lower edge 44½ inches.



36 bust requires 3 yards 35-inch printed silk, 1¼ yard 39-inch plain satin for yoke and lower part of slip, etc.

The blouse and slip are for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5796—Use silk Canton crêpe with satin or contrasting color Canton crêpe to match for this slip-over dress. It has a long upper part and a side-plaited straight flounce. Crêpe satin trimmed with the reverse side makes an attractive combination. Lower edge, plaits out, 2¾ yards.

36 bust requires 3¾ yards 39-inch silk Canton crêpe and ⅝ yard 39-inch contrasting material.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5804 5777 5779 5767 5808 5796

Makes hair easy to manage . . .

Adds Glossy Lustre—Instantly! Keeps Wave and Curl In

Wash your hair as often as you like, and have no more trouble afterwards.

A little Glostora brushed through your hair when you dress it, makes it so soft, pliable, and easy to manage, that it stays any style you arrange it—whether long or bobbed—on any and all occasions.

It acts like magic! It keeps the wave and curl in; brightens, softens, and gives dull, dry, or dead looking hair new life—immediately!

A few drops impart that bright, brilliant, silky sheen, so much admired, and makes your hair fairly sparkle and glow with natural gloss and lustre—instantly!

Glostora is inexpensive and you can get a bottle at any drug store or toilet goods counter.

There is nothing better for children whose hair lacks natural life and lustre, or is hard to train, or keep in place.

Not sticky, pasty or greasy.

Glostora

PUT A FEW DROPS ON YOUR HAIR BRUSH

How to care for

Dull Hair

You cannot expect hair which is naturally devoid of lustre to look brilliant or exceptionally bright after an ordinary shampoo. You must use a shampoo that is different—a shampoo that will add real beauty to your hair—GOLDEN GLINT Shampoo. This shampoo will make your hair look so much prettier, so much more attractive, that you will just love to fuss with it. In addition to the clean freshness any good shampoo gives, it offers something unusual, something new, something more than a promise. This "something" is a secret you'll discover with your first Golden Glint Shampoo. 25c a package at toilet counters or direct. * * *

J.W. Kobi Co., 670 Rainier Ave., Seattle, Wash.

Golden Glint SHAMPOO

"DRESSMAKING MADE EASY" WITH THE ADJUSTABLE Acme DRESS FORM

$3 Will Bring It to You

Duplicates Your Exact Figure

Perfect fitting dresses easily and quickly reproduced. MAKES DRESSMAKING A PLEASURE AND SATISFACTION. As necessary for fitting as the sewing machine for sewing.

Adjustable and Collapsible

The Neck, Shoulders, Bust, Waist, Hips and Skirt are each independently adjustable so that it will exactly reproduce any style, size or figure.

EASY PAYMENT TERMS

Remit $3 and we will send you our guaranteed $15 Acme Collapsible Adjustable Form. Pay the balance of $12 at the rate of $3 a month. Ten Days' Trial. If unsatisfactory return form and we will gladly refund your $3.

Order an "Acme" Form today or write for Illustrated Catalog with detailed information.

ACME SALES CO., Dept. 2-R
380 Throop Avenue Brooklyn, N. Y.

WRITE TODAY FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOG

Mrs. Smith:—"Really, Maggie, I didn't think my dresses would look so lovely after washing. The one I have on has been laundered five times, and this is the ninth washing for the one you are showing me. It is wonderful how they HOLD their colors, neither has faded the least bit. I will ALWAYS buy PETER PAN and recommend it to my friends."

You will talk that way about me, too, once you have learned what a splendid wash fabric I am. You will find my name on

"Peter Pan Fast Color Prints"
and
"Peter Pan Fast Color Gingham"

When you buy either of us you get this

GUARANTEE

We are ready to replace any garment made of "Genuine Peter Pan Fast Color" if it fades

HENRY GLASS & CO.

For your own safety and satisfaction, refuse all substitutes and insist on the fabric that bears this mark on the selvage of every yard.

"Genuine Peter Pan Fast Color"

If your dealer cannot supply GENUINE PETER PAN FAST COLOR GINGHAM, in plain shades, yard wide; in woven checks, 32 inches wide; in PRINTS, 32 inches wide; with my name on the selvage, write to Henry Glass & Co. for the book of

42 LARGE AND BEAUTIFUL SAMPLES FREE

They will have your order filled promptly by a reliable retail house. When you write for these FREE SAMPLES be sure to give the name of your dealer and say if he sells

"Genuine Peter Pan Fast Color"

HENRY GLASS & CO.
46 WHITE ST. NEW YORK

CLAY CLOTHES DRIER

Dries washing spotlessly clean. Folds like an umbrella to store away, 135 ft. line. Revolves in 15 ft. space. No dragging of basket. A proven success. Durable, rust proof, light weight. Guaranteed. Circular D1-21 Free.

IOWA GATE COMPANY, Cedar Falls, Iowa

SMALL HOME Plan Book

10¢ The plan of your "Dream Home" is sure to be in it.

It helps you to choose your new home. 50 photographs and floor plans of artistic, practical and comfortable homes. See this booklet for ideas. Send 10 cents in stamps.

T. H. MAENNER CO.
524 Omaha Loan Bldg., OMAHA, NEBR.

PISO'S for COUGHS

Quick Relief! A pleasant effective syrup 35c and 60c sizes.
And externally, use PISO'S Throat and Chest Salve, 35c

Cuticura Toilet Trio

Send for Samples
To Cuticura Laboratories, Dept. K, Malden, Mass.

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 28

5805—Flat tiers are fashionable for the junior's one-piece slip-over dress of Canton crêpe, taffeta, satin, crêpe de Chine of good weight, with collar, cuffs, etc., of same material in contrasting; or use wool crêpe or soft twills with silk braid bindings, etc.

13 years requires 2¾ yards 39-inch wool crêpe, ½ yard 39-inch contrasting material.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5809—10243—Slip-over sleeveless dresses are adorable for little girls. This frock has a straight lower edge and separate bloomers. Use crêpe de Chine, pongee, fine cotton crêpe, cotton pongee, unbleached muslin, chambray or pin-check gingham. Work the embroidery in colors.

4 years requires 1⅝ yard 39-inch crêpe de Chine.

The dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5797—This picturesque slip-over frock with a straight lower edge may have a detachable collar and cuffs. Use crêpe de Chine, Georgette or taffeta with net collar and cuffs with Val lace edging, French knots, tiny buttons and ribbon for trimming, etc.

8 years requires 1⅞ yard 35-inch Georgette.

The dress is for little girls 4 to 12 years.

5752—A number of combinations are smart for this slip-over dress with an upper and a lower part joined in a decorative outline—crêpe de Chine or Canton crêpe with an upper part of same material in contrast or printed, wool crêpe or flannel with contrast, etc.

12 years requires 1 yard 39-inch printed and 1⅜ yard 39-inch plain crêpe de Chine.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5819—Make this one-piece slip-over dress of soft twills, wool crêpe, serge or light-weight flannel with plaid to match for the collar and cuffs which may be detachable. The plaited sections are inserted at each side of the dress.

12 years requires 3¼ yards 27-inch flannel.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5799—5557—10155—Embroidery trims the lower front of this one-piece slip-over dress with a straight lower edge and detachable or attached collar and cuffs. Use light-weight flannel or wool jersey with contrasting color collar or white linen collar, etc. Her taffeta hat has a four-gored crown.

12 years requires 1½ yard 54-inch wool jersey for dress.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15 years; hat for girls 2 to 12 years.

5791—5793—10939—She wears this middy blouse with slightly shaped underarm seams over a separate plaited straight skirt and bloomers instead of a petticoat. The bloomers are joined to an underbody and the skirt buttons onto the underbody. The emblem on the sleeve is the regulation type.

8 years requires 1 yard 54-inch wool plaid and 1 yard 54-inch plain wool.

Blouse and skirt are for girls 6 to 14.

5811—The vestee suit is good style for boys this age. It is composed of a jacket, straight trousers and a vestee and collar which may be detachable. Use serge, tweeds, gabardine, chambray, linen, linen-finished cottons or crash with vestee and collar of piqué or rep.

6 years requires 1¼ yard 54-inch serge, ⅝ yard 32-inch contrasting material.

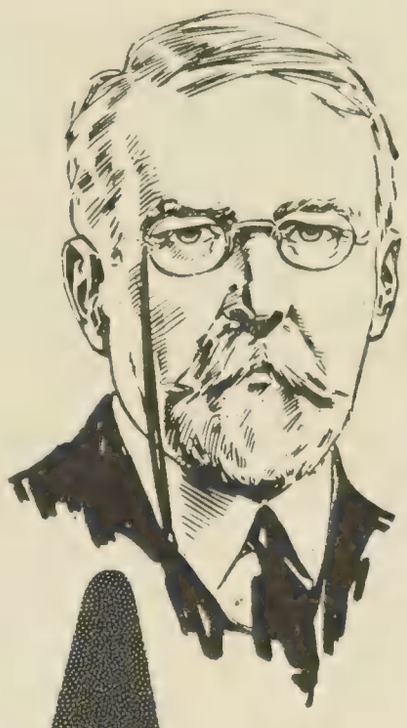
The vestee suit is for boys 4 to 10 years.

5748—10931—Kimono sleeves and a collar are attractive on this slip-over dress with separate bloomers. Use pin-check gingham, chambray, cotton crêpe, cotton or silk broadcloth, cotton prints, dimity or flannel. The embroidery is effective. Work it in colors.

4 years requires 1⅝ yard 32-inch check gingham.

The dress is for little girls 1 to 6 years.

5754—5458—A slightly shaped tunic fastened at the hipline gives the new silhouette to the junior's one-piece slip-over dress. Use soft twills, wool crêpe, serge or flannel with contrasting-color flannel, or heavy silk crêpe with contrasting-color silk crêpe. Her gored velvet tam-o'-shanter is smart.



12 years requires 3¼ yards 27-inch flannel.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15; tam-o'-shanter for girls, children, misses, ladies.

5805 5809 5797 5752 5819

5799 5791 5793 5811 5748 5754

Demand

BAYER

ASPIRIN

SAY "BAYER ASPIRIN"—Genuine

Unless you see the "Bayer Cross" on tablets you are not getting the genuine Bayer Aspirin proved safe by millions and prescribed by physicians 24 years for

Colds	Headache
Pain	Neuralgia
Toothache	Lumbago
Neuritis	Rheumatism

Safe — Accept only "Bayer" package which contains proven directions.

Handy "Bayer" boxes of 12 tablets.
Also bottles of 24 and 100—Druggists.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

SULPHUR IS BEST TO CLEAR SKIN

Any breaking out or skin irritation on face, neck or body is overcome quickest by applying Mentho-Sulphur, says a noted skin specialist. Because of its germ destroying properties, nothing has ever been found to take the place of this sulphur preparation that instantly brings ease from the itching, burning and irritation.

Mentho-Sulphur soothes eczema and leaves the skin clear and smooth. It seldom fails to relieve the torment or disfigurement. A little jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur may be obtained at any drug store. It is used like cold cream.

You can obtain a free sample of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur just by writing to the Whitehall Pharmacal Co., Dept. K, 598 Madison Avenue, New York.

Whooping Cough

Asthma, Spasmodic Croup, Bronchitis Coughs, Influenza

A household remedy avoiding drugs. Cresolene is vaporized at the bedside during the night. It has become in the past forty-five years the most widely used remedy for whooping cough and spasmodic croup.

When children complain of sore throat or cough, use at once.

Vapo-Cresolene Est. 1879

Send for descriptive booklet 70A

For Sale by Druggists

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO.
62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Bldg., Montreal, Canada

NOTHING ACTS LIKE ANALAX

ANALAX

THE FRUITY LAXATIVE

BIEN JOLIE
TRADE MARK

PRONOUNCED BE-ANN JO-LEE

CORSETTE
REG. TRADE MARK

SO lovely in itself that one hesitates to conceal it beneath a gown, the BIEN JOLIE Corsette has the added merit of conferring style and loveliness to whatever may be worn over it. Sold at all good stores in the United States.

Benjamin & Johnes
358 Fifth Avenue - - New York

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 29

5802—Use kasha, flannel, soft twills, wool crêpe, silk-and-wool crêpe or light-weight cashmere with stripes to match for this slip-over dress, and faille silk or piqué for the collar and cuffs which may be detachable. The dress has a one-piece back and the lower part of the front is joined at the close-fitting hipline. Lower edge, plaits out, 55 inches.

16 years requires 3¼ yards 27-inch flannel and ¾ yard 35-inch striped material.

Dress is for misses 15 to 20, ladies 38 bust.

5739—This slip-over dress may be used as a part of an ensemble costume with the two-piece lower part to match the coat fabric and the long upper part of crêpe satin or silk crêpe. Use wool cashmere, wool rep, kasha, soft twills or velours for the lower part, joined under a cluster of tucks in tunic effect.

16 years requires 2½ yards 39-inch silk crêpe and ⅝ yard 54-inch wool rep. Lower edge 44 inches.

It is for misses 15 to 20, also small women.

5784—Plaid silk and bone buttons are a smart trimming for this one-piece slip-over dress with a close-fitting hipline. The sleeves have the new puff. Use soft twills, cashmere dress materials, wool rep, wool crêpe, kasha ribbed silks. Lower edge 42 ins.

17 years or 34 bust requires 1⅞ yard 54-inch cashmere and ½ yard 35-inch plaid silk.

The dress is for misses 16 to 18 years or 33 to 35 bust, also ladies.

5810—Taffeta or soft satin make a quaint slip-over frock with a detachable or attached bertha, and puff of Georgette trimmed with frills or narrow ribbons in contrasting color. It closes under the left arm and has a gathered straight skirt joined to a basque at a slightly low waistline. Lower edge 2 yards.

17 years requires 3 yards 36-inch taffeta and ½ yard 35-inch Georgette.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women and ladies 38 bust.

5795—5667—A slip-over tunic blouse of silk Canton crêpe, satin crêpe or faille silk worn over a costume slip of soft satin or crêpe de Chine makes a smart costume. The blouse may be longer and the collar and cuffs may be detachable. The slip has an inverted plait below the low waistline at each side.

34 bust requires 2⅜ yards 35-inch silk Canton crêpe and 2⅜ yards 35-inch satin. Lower edge 51 inches.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 40 bust; slip for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5785—This one-piece slip-over dress is smart in soft twills, hairline-striped twills, cashmere dress materials, striped flannel, etc. It is close-fitting at the hipline and has a detachable collar and cuffs of piqué, etc.

17 years requires 2 yards 54-inch striped wool. Lower edge 44 inches.

The dress is for misses 15 to 19 years and ladies 38, 40 bust.

5792—Soft twills, wool rep, kasha, cashmere dress materials, silk-and-wool faille or silk faille are suitable for this wrap-around, one-piece dress with a separate scarf. Collar and cuffs may be detachable. Lower edge 43 ins.

16 years requires 2¾ yards 54-inch kasha.

It is for misses 16 to 20, also small women.

5829—5769—10138—A fashionable costume combines a box-coat with a slip-over dress. Use cashmere suitings, kasha, soft twills or heavy satin for coat and the straight wrap-around lower part of dress, and silk crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine for the long upper part of dress. The embroidery is easily worked.

17 years or 34 bust requires 2½ yards 54-inch kasha and 1⅜ yard 39-inch crêpe de Chine. Lower edge 41 inches.

Coat is for misses 16 to 18 or 33 to 35 bust, also ladies; dress for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5802 5739 5792 5784 5810

5795 5667 5785 5829 5769

Gems Among My Beauty Secrets

By Mme. Maree

I like to think of the things I consider the best in the world, diamonds, American beauty roses, rare perfume and a face cream made of eptol.

The latter is a gem and can be had at any drug store. Mix two ounces with a little glycerine and a pint of water. It will cost only 65 cents and fills a big jar with the daintiest, creamiest, most heavenly skin food your imagination has ever dreamed of. The cost is so little you dap it on plentifully all over the face, rubbing it in until absorbed. Your face feels as smooth as that of an infant, the skin pores are tightened, the outer dead skin has flaked off, the lines, crowsfeet and wrinkles have melted into a refined, smooth surface, cheeks look plump and girlish, the saggy pouches around the chin fill in with the roundness of the face and you are now good to look at. Yes, I think of eptol as one of the best things in the world.

To Bleach Skin

You cannot remove tan entirely if you are outdoors very much. But you can easily and quickly get rid of the leathery appearance by rubbing the skin lightly with zintone. Get an ounce, costing 65 cents, at the drug store, mix it with two tablespoons of glycerine and apply it freely all over the face, neck, arms, chest and hands. Soon the skin lightens and if you persist it will bleach out the skin to natural color and remove the freckles and other blemishes. It is a wonder for this purpose.

Remove Blackheads

The only way I know of to successfully remove blackheads is to dip a cloth in hot water, sprinkle it with neroxin and rub this back and forth over the face a few times. It dissolves every blackhead. Get an ounce at the drug store. It costs but 65 cents, and used occasionally you will never see a blackhead and the pores will close gradually and thus stop them completely.

Make Hair Beautiful

Drop a teaspoonful of eggol crystals in half a cup of warm water. It foams up the instant you rub it into the hair and covers each lock of hair with a thin albuminous film. Now wash it off, the hair dries almost at once as the water does not soak the hair nor disturb its curl or wave. 25 cents worth of eggol will make a dozen shampoos.

If Hair Is Coarse

If your hair is inclined to unruly coarseness, it would be advisable to treat the scalp with beta-quinol. Ask the druggist for one ounce, at a cost of 65 cents, mix it with half a pint of water, and half a pint of rubbing alcohol. It is colorless and stainless and yet you can take blonde, brunette or titian hair that lays flat, coarse, straight and dead-like, apply a little beta-quinol to the scalp, when lo! each hair freshens. It takes on a glint or shimmer, it stands out alone, and whether cut short or hangs in great masses it becomes, as hair should, light, feathery and fluffy. If hair is very thick beta-quinol livens each hair to fluff up and thus takes away the feeling or sense of weight, and what a wonderful curl it takes!

A Treasure Chest

These gems of beauty secrets are so perfectly stunning that I have had prepared one of each ready for use, enough of each to last several days. Send me 25 cents and I will send you this treasure chest by mail prepaid.

MADAME MAREE
748 Thompson Bldg., Chicago

Rinsing Ruins
Your Hair—Stop It!

This quick new shampoo ends the rinsing evil

Used privately for 20 years by fashionable hairdressers, this non-rinsing shampoo is now offered the American woman on a free-test offer.

In 10 minutes Cleero washes your hair. 15 minutes more dries it. Your hair is clean, sweet and fresh. It gleams with new life and sparkle.

Cleero makes shampooing safe. It actually benefits your hair and scalp. The big reason is that you don't rinse with Cleero.

You will never catch cold from shampooing with Cleero. For this reason many hospitals have adopted it as the standard shampoo for their patients.

Cleero brings your hair new life; leaves it soft and silky. But don't take our word. Make this free test now. Then note the difference.

FREE Offer

Van Ess Laboratories, Inc.
115 E. Kinzie St., Chicago, Ill.
Print Name and Address Plainly
Mail trial bottle of Cleero, free, to

Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State

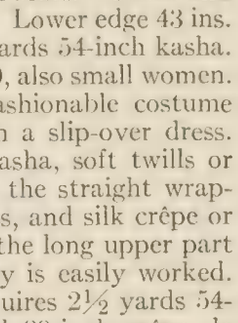
Club Feet
Straightened 5 Years Ago

Claire Reynolds, born with Club Feet, had them straightened in a few months at McLain Sanitarium when he was 14. Read of permanent result in brother's letter written 5 years later:

We will gladly call on prospective patients near here, to show them what marvelous and permanent work you do. I know what a wonderful thing it has been to have my brother's feet made straight and useful. Will answer any inquiries.

GUY L. REYNOLDS,
Olean, New York.



For Crippled Children

McLain Sanitarium is a thoroughly equipped private institution devoted exclusively to the treatment of Club Feet, Infantile Paralysis, Spinal Diseases and Deformities, Diseases of the Hip, Knee, and other Joints, Wry Neck, etc., especially in children and young adults. Write for these FREE books: "Deformities and Paralysis" and "Book of References."

McLAIN ORTHOPEDIC SANITARIUM
932 Aubert Ave. St. Louis, Mo.

No Hair Offends Where Neet is Used

Science has finally solved the problem of removing hair pleasantly without discomfort to the skin or complexion. This with NEET, a mild and dainty cream. You merely spread it on and then rinse off with clear water. That's all; the hair will be gone and the skin left refreshingly cool, smooth and white! Old methods, the unwomanly razor and severe chemical preparations, have given way to this remarkable hair-removing cream which is the accepted method of well-groomed women everywhere. 50c at Drug and Department stores or by mail. Money back if it fails to please you. Buy now.

TRY IT

HANNIBAL PHAR. CO., 601 OLIVE ST., ST. LOUIS, MO.

EARN MONEY AT HOME

YOU can make a substantial amount weekly in your spare time writing show cards. No canvassing or soliciting. We instruct you by our new simple Directograph System, supply you with work and pay you cash each week. Write today for full particulars and free booklet.

WEST-ANGUS SHOW CARD SERVICE LIMITED
Authorized Capital $1,250,000.00
100 Colborne Building, Toronto, Can.

It's 15¢

CENTURY SHEET MUSIC

You can't buy better—why pay more?

CENTURY gives you the world's best music, beautifully printed on the best paper! What more can sheet music be! There are over 2300 compositions in the Century catalogue all 15c—(20c in Canada), masterpieces like "Barcarolle," "Hungarian Rhapsody," "Lustpiel Overture," "William Tell," "Salut A Pesth," etc.—all certified to be exactly as the masters wrote them. Ask for Century—Patronize the Century dealer. Century's low price is only possible because of his small profit. Complete catalogue of over 2300 compositions free on request.

Thousands of successful teachers use and recommend CENTURY CERTIFIED MUSIC exclusively—because they know it is all that good music can be at half the price or less; and they know parents appreciate the saving.

Century Music Publishing Co., 229 W. 40th St., N.Y. C.

CENTURY Certified EDITION SHEET MUSIC

STOP COUGHING
FLORIDA
MENTOPINE
COUGH DROPS

The MENTOPINE CORPORATION — Philadelphia, Pa.

WANT WORK AT HOME?

Earn $18 to $60 a week RETOUCHING photos. Men or women. No selling or canvassing. We teach you, guarantee employment and furnish WORKING OUTFIT FREE. Limited offer. Write today. ARTCRAFT STUDIOS, Dept. K, 3300 Sheridan Road, Chicago.

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 30

5765—The scarf with a center of crêpe de Chine in a contrasting or matching color and braid bindings are attractive on this slip-over dress of wool rep, wool crêpe, soft twills, cashmere dress materials or broadcloth. It has a one-piece back and the lower front in triple-apron effect is joined at a close-fitting hipline.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch wool rep. Lower edge 44 inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5747—Wool rep, soft twills, kasha, silk bengaline, silk faille, crêpe satin or heavy silk crêpe makes a smart coat dress which you may wear on the street in early Spring. It has a side closing and a choice of body lining. This is a very simple style to make and one which is suitable for general wear or for travel.

36 bust requires 2¼ yards 54-inch wool rep. Lower edge 44 inches.

The coat dress is attractive for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5761—Soft twills, wool rep or kasha in brown, navy or black trimmed with tan braid and white bone or nickel buttons, the scarf lining and sleeve facing of tan crêpe de Chine, makes a smart one-piece dress. It closes at the left side of the vestee front. One may use faille silk, bengaline or satin.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 54-inch soft twills. Lower edge 44½ inches.

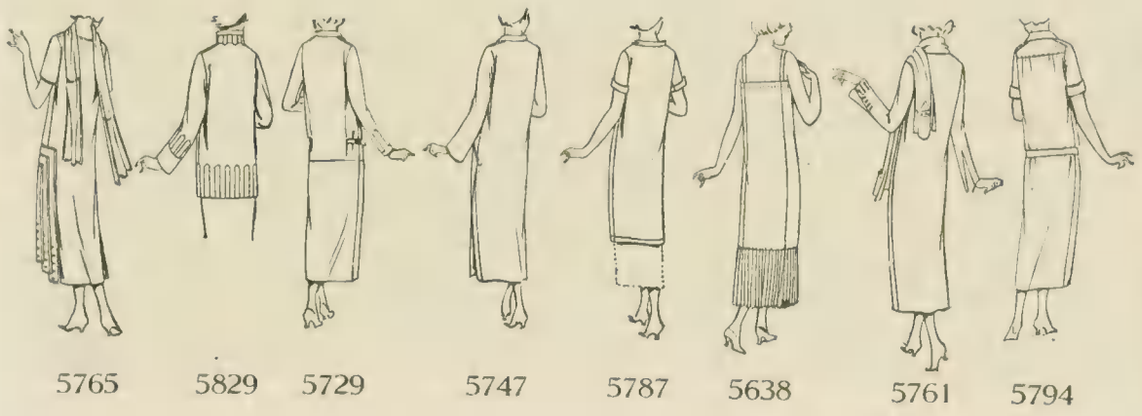
The dress is becoming to ladies 33 to 48 bust, also misses.

5829—5729—Use cashmere suitings, kasha, soft twills or satin for the box-coat and the straight lower part of the slip-over dress which has a close-fitting hipline. For the long upper part use plain silk crêpe or crêpe de Chine in self or contrasting color.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 54-inch kasha (including lower part of dress, etc.) and 1⅝ yard 39-inch silk. Lower edge 44 inches.

The coat is for ladies 33 to 44 bust; the dress for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5787—5638—10318—The plain lower part of this costume slip could be made of the coat material, forming an ensemble costume with a slip-over tunic blouse of satin crêpe, crêpe faille, silk Canton crêpe or crêpe de Chine. The embroidery is effective. The blouse may be shorter.



36 bust requires 2½ yards 39-inch satin crêpe and 2⅝ yards 39-inch contrasting silk crêpe (including tie). Lower edge 44 inches.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 46 bust, also misses.

5794—Any woman who goes daily to an office or who likes tailored styles will want this one-piece slip-over dress with a plait at the left side. The collar and cuffs may be detachable. Use soft, light-weight flannel or wool jersey, plain tub silks, silk Canton crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine.

36 bust requires 2⅜ yards 54-inch wool jersey. Lower edge 46 inches.

The dress is attractive for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5765 5829 5729 5747 5787 5638 5761 5794

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 31

5800—This narrow slip-over dress is fitted closely at the hipline and has a two-piece lower part which makes it ideal to wear as part of an ensemble costume. You may use the coat material for the lower part and the coat-lining fabric for the long upper part; or corded silks with crêpe de Chine or soft satin in contrasting or self color, or printed heavy silk crêpe, etc. Lower edge 44½ inches.

36 bust requires 2 yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine and 1⅛ yard 39-inch corded silk.

The dress is suitable for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5759—Crystal buttons and worked buttonholes trim this slip-over dress of crêpe satin or silk faille. It has a yoke and an attached two-piece lower part. One may use flat crêpe or crêpe de Chine with bone buttons, cashmere suitings, soft twills, wool rep, kasha, silk faille, etc., with flat crêpe.

36 bust requires 4¼ yards 39-inch crêpe satin. Lower edge 44 inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5818—The tailored sheath dress has the new shoulder-line and is very smart. This one-piece slip-over dress is smart in soft twills, cashmere dress materials, wool rep or wool crêpe with faille silk in contrasting color; or use flannel, kasha, ribbed silks or heavy silk crêpe with same material in contrasting color. Lower edge 44½ inches.

36 bust requires 2 yards 54-inch wool rep.

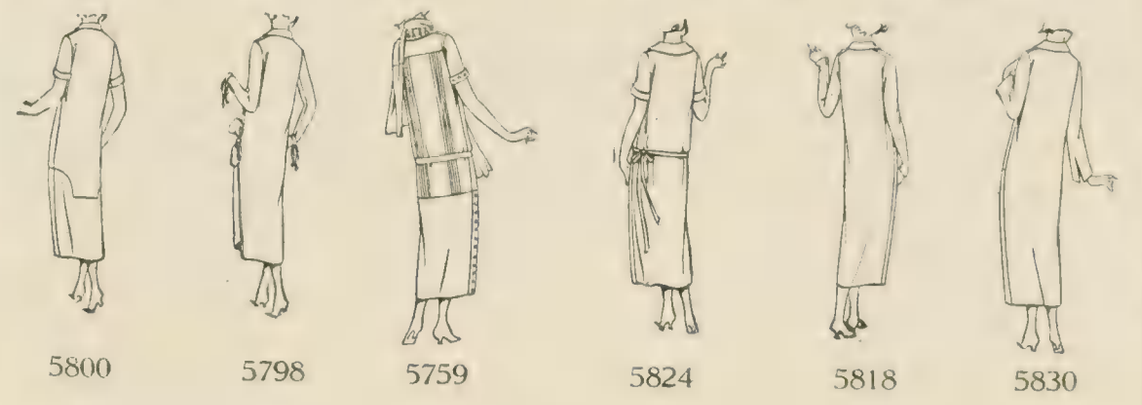
The dress is good style for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5824—Women who do not wear dresses that define their figures will like this one-piece slip-over dress of soft satin with vestee, collar and cuffs of crêpe de Chine; or use heavy crêpe de Chine, silk Canton crêpe, crêpe faille or flat crêpe with same material in contrast. The collar and cuffs may be detachable. This is an excellent style for maternity wear.

36 bust requires 3⅜ yards 39-inch soft satin. Lower edge 1½ yard.

The dress is good style for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5798—The caught-up effect of the drapery of this one-piece dress on wrap-around lines is very lovely. Use heavy silk crêpe, silk moire, faille silk or crêpe satin all one material; or use light-weight twills or cashmere with moire or corded silks.



36 bust requires 3⅞ yards 39-inch faille silk. Lower edge 43½ inches.

The dress is very attractive for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5830—10215—This straight-line coat dress will make stout figures look slimmer. Use soft twills, cashmere dress materials, kasha, wool crêpe or heavy silk crêpe with silk crêpe in contrasting color; or use crêpe satin with the reverse side, ribbed wools or silk with vestee of embroidered batiste, etc. The embroidery is easily done.

36 bust requires 3⅞ yards 39-inch cashmere dress goods. Lower edge 46 inches.

The coat-dress is for ladies 36 to 52 bust.

5800 5798 5759 5824 5818 5830

TRIAL BOTTLE ABSOLUTELY FREE

Write Me

when you find those first

Gray Hairs

—I'll tell you how to stop them

The time to stop gray hair is before those first gray streaks are noticed by your friends.

So if you are watching the silver creep into your hair, fill out and mail the coupon. By return mail I will send you a free trial bottle of my famous restorer, with full instructions for testing on a single lock. This test will show you how to stop gray hair, easily, safely and surely.

Safety first

The most important fact this single lock test proves is how perfectly my restorer gets back the original color. No streaking, discoloration or artificial "dyed" look. Just the even natural becoming shade of early youth. Ease of application comes next, and here my restorer leads. It is applied by combing through the hair. No skill or outside aid required.

Advantage number three is the safety of the whole treatment. The test assures you beforehand that you can get back the original, perfect, natural color of your hair and keep it the rest of your life.

Mary T Goldman's
Hair Color Restorer
Over 10,000,000 Bottles Sold

Clean, dainty, attractive

My restorer is a clear, colorless liquid, clean as water. It leaves your hair soft, silky and fluffy, beautiful when waved and dressed.

No interference with shampooing, nothing to wash or rub off. Just lovely, natural, youthful hair which lets you forget it ever was gray.

Hurry and mail the coupon

Fill it out carefully, stating exactly the natural color of your hair. If possible, enclose a lock in your letter.

By return mail, postage prepaid, I send the patented free trial outfit containing the trial bottle and full directions. (All absolutely free.)

Then, when you know how easy it is to bring back the original color to your hair, get a full sized bottle from druggist or direct from me.

Please print your name and address

Mary T. Goldman, 499-B Goldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.

Please send me FREE trial bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer. The natural color of my hair is:

Black ..... dark brown ..... medium brown .....
auburn (dark red) ..... light brown ..... light auburn (light red) ..... blonde ...

Name .....

Address .....

An ELIZABETH ARDEN Treatment

Says Elizabeth Arden

WRINKLES, flabbiness, a settled contour, a double chin, all come with relaxed muscles. Pat and mould the face and neck with my Special Astringent. It lifts and braces the tissues, restores the elasticity and tone of facial muscles, strengthens the contour in the smooth, firm curves of youth. This is an important step in every Treatment given in my Salons, and should be part of your daily care of the skin at home.

ARDEN VENETIAN SPECIAL ASTRINGENT. To be used after cleansing and nourishing the skin, morning and night. $2.25, $4.

ELIZABETH ARDEN

LONDON: 25 Old Bond Street NEW YORK: 673 Fifth Avenue PARIS: 2 rue de la Paix

Arden Venetian Toilet Preparations are sold at smart shops everywhere

THE LAST WORD

A Page of Shop-Talk, Gossip, and Comment

The Author of "Peter Pan"

Sir James Barrie, besides being one of the most infrequent of magazine contributors, is also one of the shyest and most elusive of literary celebrities. He is so unalterably opposed to granting interviews that a few years ago, when he visited the United States, even New York newspaper men were unable to get a word out of him. One of them, in fact, after vainly trying every expedient known to the successful journalist, wrote a wholly imaginative interview and did it so successfully that it is considered something of a classic of its kind. It happens that an American, Mr. Herbert Brenon, director of the screen production of "Peter Pan," has recently been very close to the author, and to Mr. Brenon we are indebted for the following glimpse of a delightful personality. "Barrie," he says, "is a little man, short, shy and shabby, with a twinkle in his eye, a great love for humanity in his heart—and usually a pipe in his mouth. He is wise, whimsical and witty. His sympathies are of the widest, his kindliness is without end. He is in years perhaps sixty-five; but his age is all on the outside. His hair and mustache are gray, but his heart is that of a child, and he has the most sympathetic face I have ever seen. He is as unusual, as quaint and curious as Peter Pan himself. I have never known a more delightful companion. He has a mind so rich in folk-lore, so fertile in strange fancies—partly made up of fiction, partly of fact, which he relates with distinct fascination—that he seems a kind of modern Æsop."

Mr. Yost on the Bent Twig

"The next time you see a college game," writes Mr. Yost in the March DELINEATOR, "bear in mind that the beginning of victory came long before the coaches ever saw the players and before the players had any idea they would be heroes." After thirty years of directing athletes, Mr. Yost has come to the conclusion that the real start toward success in later life—whether in athletic or other work—is the cradle, and that the habit of success is strengthened every day that a boy remains within the sphere of influence of the right kind of mother. Naturally, Mr. Yost turns for examples to the field he knows best, and supports his contention with anecdotes of the kind of self-imposed discipline, impossible without great strength of character, that he has observed in some of the outstanding young men in his charge. Modern methods of coaching and training will do much to improve mediocre human material, but, other things being equal, the boy with the superior home influence will show his quality when put to the test. The importance of good habits, of diet, exercise and play, all come in for a share of Mr. Yost's comment on the kind of boy who gets the right sort of start toward successful manhood.

The Village Comes into Its Own

Villages and rural communities are faced by no ordinary problem when they undertake to stage local demonstrations in the annual national Better Homes campaigns. As a rule, the citizens of such communities have little experience with organized civic activities, funds are limited and suitable houses are scarce. Despite such handicaps, communities of this character made such a splendid showing in the 1924 campaign that we are going to publish a few of the most interesting stories in next month's DELINEATOR. They are inspiring examples of what a handful of resourceful women can do under adverse conditions. The women who serve on these committees had to find time for their Better Homes interests in days filled with preparing meals, doing washing and ironing, raising chickens, making butter and the thousand-and-one tasks that make up the daily round of the farm and village housewife. They took over impossible vacant houses, rolled up their sleeves and cleaned, painted, papered and decorated them with their own hands, borrowed furniture and then ran their show to packed doors. As a result, many a country housewife has a new conception of the possibilities in home building, furnishing and decoration. Great credit is due the members of these committees for raising the standards of living in communities difficult to reach in any other way. We have selected a few examples of their enterprise and ingenuity, both because they are interesting stories and because they point the way to similar achievements in places where such work is sadly needed.

IF — ? ? ASK — ! !

IF YOU HAVE A QUESTION ABOUT HOME-MAKING—about new equipment for your kitchen, or properly balanced diet for your family, or making a budget for more economical living—

Ask Miss Martha Van Rensselaer, Head of THE DELINEATOR'S Home-Making Department.

IF THE QUESTION CONCERNS HOUSE DECORATION—the color of your window drapes, the arrangement of furniture in your living-room, the finishing of your walls—

Ask Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders, Head of THE DELINEATOR'S House Decoration Department.

IF YOU WANT ADVICE ABOUT YOUR CHILD—a correct health program for Winter weather, a report on epidemics to be guarded against—

Ask Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw, Director of THE DELINEATOR'S Happy Child Department.

IF IT'S "GOOD LOOKS" THAT INTERESTS YOU—personal problems of complexion and appearance, new creams and perfumes—

Ask Celia Caroline Cole, THE DELINEATOR'S Beauty Consultant.

OR IF IT'S A QUERY ABOUT DINING YOUR GUESTS—about customs at weddings or manners in company—

There's Mrs. John Cabot Kimberley to ask, THE DELINEATOR'S Adviser in matters of Entertainment and Etiquette.

When you think of THE DELINEATOR, think of these people. They are your friends—experts whose advice is yours to command. Turn back through the pages of this book and see what special services they offer you this month.

CONTENTS for FEBRUARY, 1925

FICTION

		PAGE
The Lost Speech	Honoré Willsie Morrow	5
Too Few Cooks	L. M. Montgomery	10
Doors	Alma and Paul Ellerbe	11
The Black Flemings (serial) Part Five	Kathleen Norris	12

HOME ECONOMICS

A Home Built Around a Mother	Blanche Brace	2
As Martha Washington Dined	Jessie A. Boys	19
Your Gold-Medal Garden	Frances Duncan	20
Menus for February	Jessie A. Boys	46
Superstitions About Food	Flora Rose	48
Save Dollars and Hours		50
Fritters of Odds and Ends	Winifred Moses	53
Ask Us		54
Savory Chowders for Nipping Days		56
A Sun-Porch for Winter	Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders	59
When America Eats Macaroni	Freda Winn	62
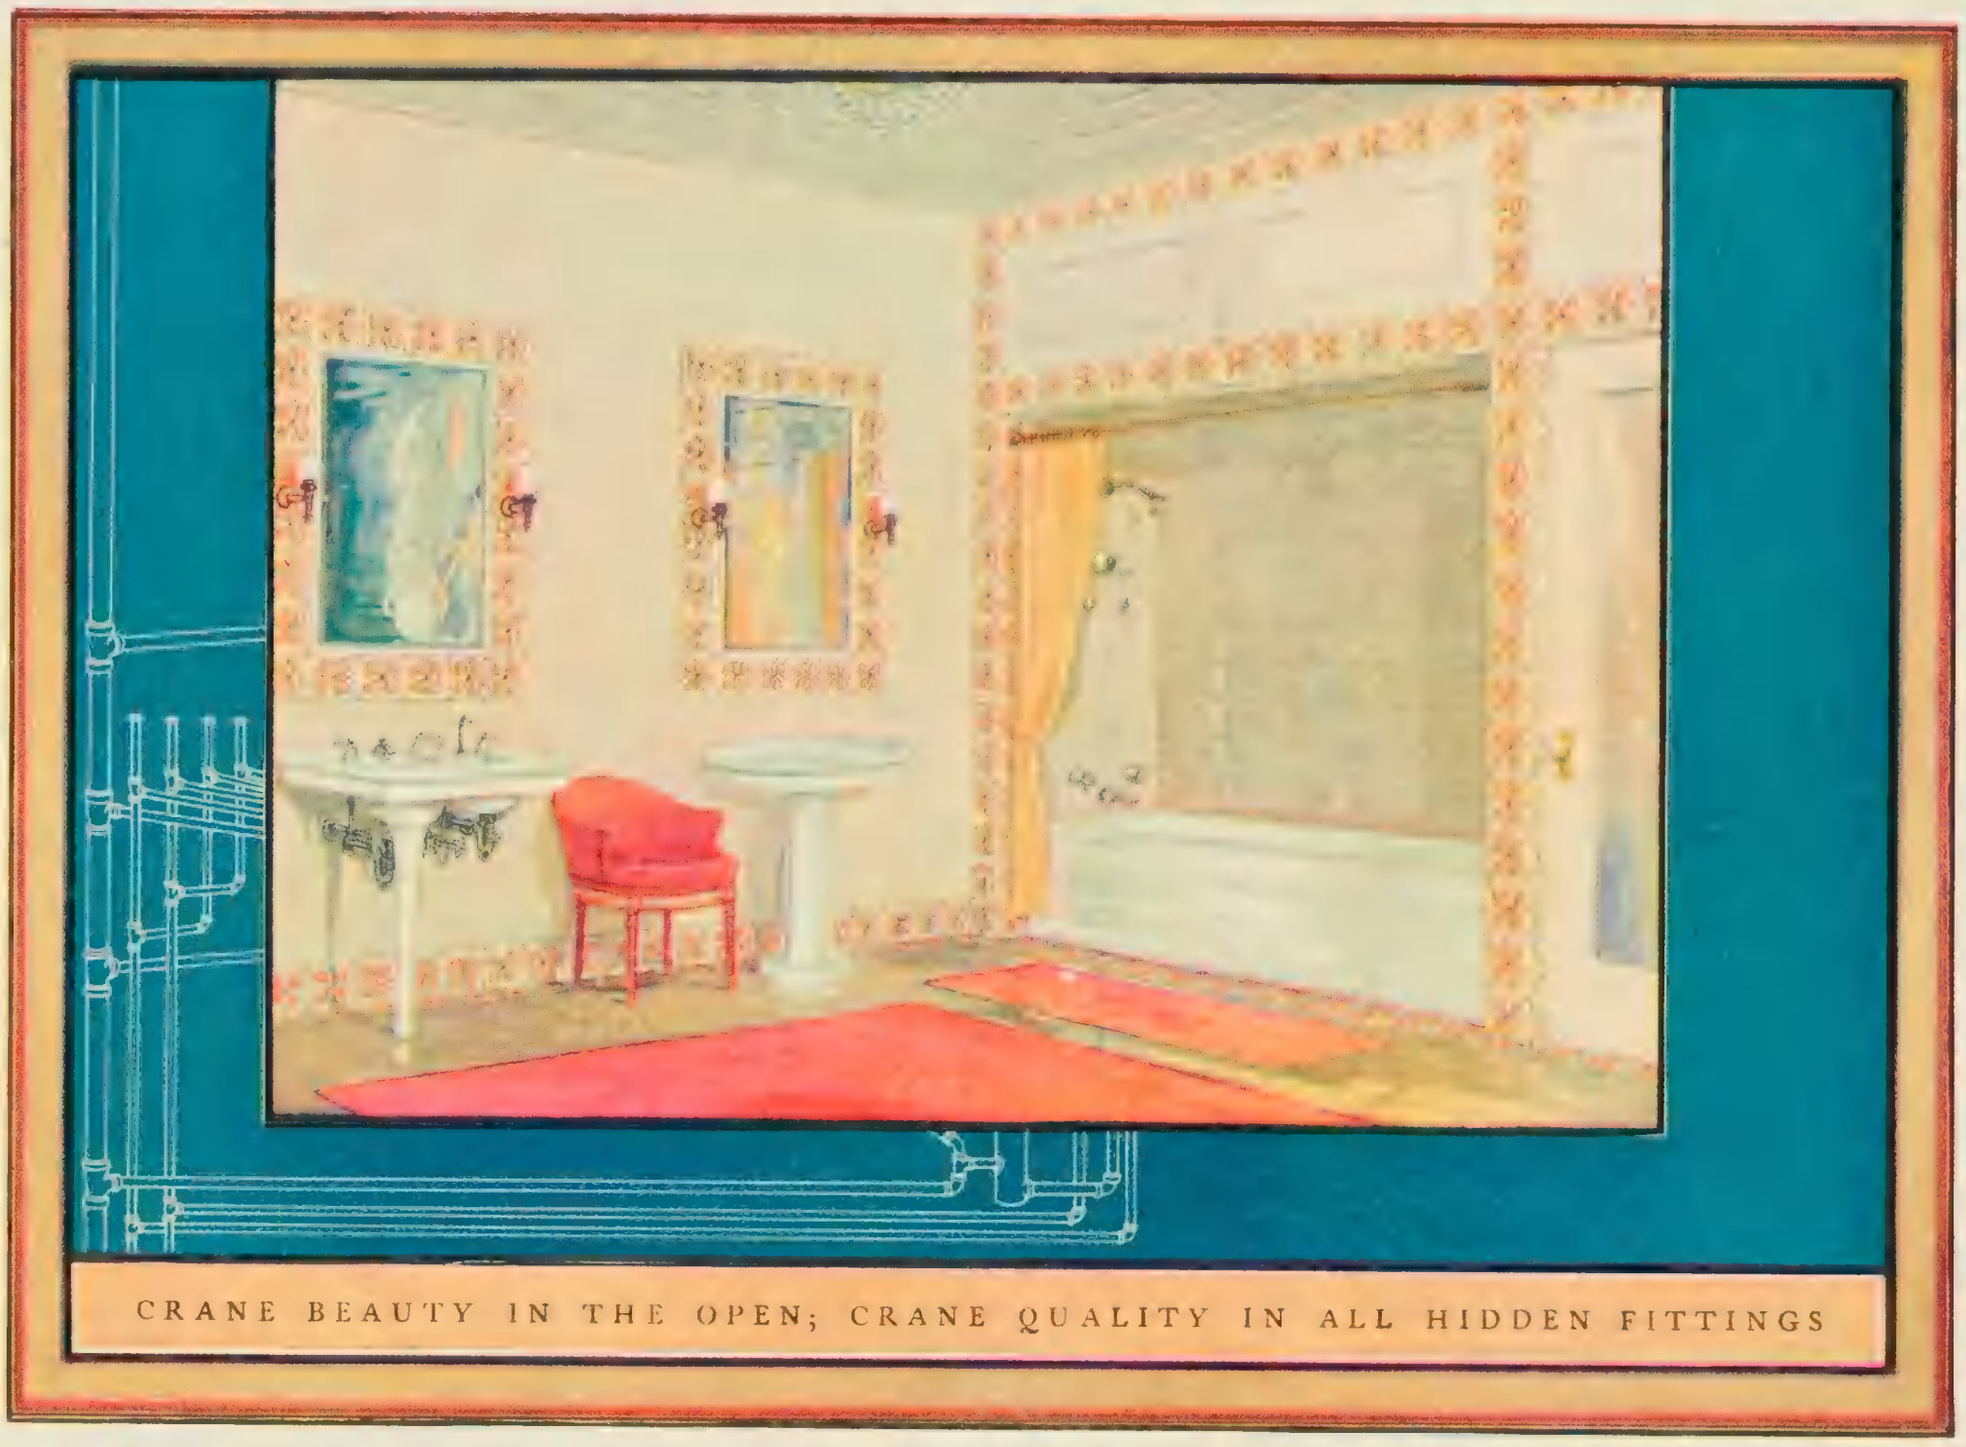
To Make Housework Easier		65



ARTICLES AND FEATURES

Better Days for Girls	Sir James M. Barrie	8
Why Boys and Girls Play Differently	Fielding H. Yost	15
What Parents Should Know About Whooping-Cough	Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw	16
THE LITTLE DELINEATOR	Harriet Ide Eager	17
Why I Design DELINEATOR Houses	Donn Barber	21
Free	Celia Caroline Cole	22
Ask THE DELINEATOR		66
The Last Word		100
FASHIONS AND EMBROIDERIES		26-38, 43, 44, 96, 97, 98, 99

MIX and SERVE

Edited with Willing Hands and a Mean Pencil by a Mere Man

NOW that our diligent correspondents cover the entire globe in the search for items of interest to the 100's of 1,000's of readers who look to this column regularly for information and inspiration, it occurs to us that a Far East number would be a novelty. And no sooner said than done ◈◈◈ Many of our fair pew-holders might consider the advantages of moving to the Pamirs, a remote country in Central Asia, where women are highly prized because there are not enough to go around. A would-be husband must be prepared to part with a minimum of one hundred sheep for a wife ◈◈◈ In Arabia, Syria and Madagascar, grasshoppers are a staple article of food. The flesh is white and delicate, and when roasted or fried in butter with a little parsley, is said to be delicious. The insects are prepared for export by being dried in the sun or preserved in brine ◈◈◈ The army that serves the King of Dahomey is made up almost entirely of women. They wear gorgeous uniforms consisting of baggy trousers and box-coats, each regiment having its own bizarre color scheme ◈◈◈ In India, girl children of the Brahman caste are brought up according to a code known as the Law of Manu. "The name of a woman," says the Law of Manu, "should be easy to pronounce, sweet, clear and agreeable; it should end in long vowels and resemble words of benediction." Another excerpt that we recommend for earnest consideration is: "A woman must always be good-tempered and must skilfully conduct the affairs of her home. She must take great care of the household utensils and of the preparation of food, and know how to watch over the well-being of her husband, while spending as little as possible" ◈◈◈ The habit of chewing betel nuts, practised in Ceylon and other Oriental countries, first blackens and then destroys the teeth, so that toothless belles of twenty-four or so are not uncommon, although black store teeth are worn by the wealthy ◈◈◈ An apron is the royal standard of Persia. A Persian who was a blacksmith by trade once raised a successful revolt, and his leather apron, covered with jewels, is still borne in the van of Persian armies ◈◈◈ Small weddings are unknown in Borneo, and so are wedding invitations. A wedding is a neighborhood event, in which every one is supposed to have a hand. The maids dress the bride and deck her out with flowers. The matrons attend to the preparing of the feast, and the men see there's liquor enough assembled to last as long as the celebration continues, which may be anywhere from a day to a week ◈◈◈ In British Borneo women do all the work, even to the loading of cargoes of teak and camphor wood. The male Malay never labors except to hunt animals and members of rival tribes ◈◈◈ The boat-woman of China, whether she be a single woman or a wife or a widow, is the head of the house, that is to say, of the boat. If she is married, the husband takes the useful but subordinate place of deck-hand. She does the steering, makes bargains with the passengers, collects the money, buys supplies and, in general, lords it over everything ◈◈◈ In Korea a man is restrained by law from keeping more than one wife in his home at one time, though he may have as many as he likes in separate establishments ◈◈◈ Japanese motion-picture censors cut out all kissing scenes in American films, not because of moral qualms, but because the natives don't understand the practise ◈◈◈ A Japanese invitation to dinner reads: "I beg your pardon for thus insulting you in begging your company at my house to dinner. The house is very small and very dirty. Our habits are rude, and you may not get anything to eat, and yet I hope that you will condescend to be present with us at 6 o'clock." You go, and you find everything exactly the opposite ◈◈◈ The Asiatic town of Maiwatchi, on the Russian border, is peopled by men only ◈◈◈ In an Egyptian family the parents choose a name for their baby by lighting three candles. To each of these they give a name, one of the three always belonging to some dignified person. The candle that burns the longest determines the name to be bestowed upon the infant ◈◈◈ Threads of gold used in India for making laces are so fine that 1,100 yards weigh only one ounce ◈◈◈ A Shanghai subscriber writes that her native tailor uses the Deltor to make her garments, and a lovely Australian lady qualifies for a place among the immortals by appending to her letter a postscript reading: "I mention THE DELINEATOR when writing to advertisers."

CRANE BEAUTY IN THE OPEN; CRANE QUALITY IN ALL HIDDEN FITTINGS

From a mere utility, the modern bathroom has developed into a spacious shrine of cleanliness and health. The skill of architects and designers has been taxed to keep pace with the desire of owners for individual charm and luxury.

In this Crane bathroom, the tiled floor and warm tan plaster walls have borders of Spanish majolica in primrose, brown and green. The new Corwith tub of cream white enamel is set in a recess, tiled in soft green. The Ovatus dressing table and Premo combination dental lavatory of vitreous china, twice-fired, match the Corwith in color.

Your plumbing contractor can supply Crane fixtures in a broad variety of styles at prices within reach of all. Let us send you a booklet of color schemes, "The New Art of Fine Bathrooms."

CRANE

GENERAL OFFICES: CRANE BUILDING, 836 S. MICHIGAN AVENUE, CHICAGO
CRANE LIMITED: CRANE BUILDING, 386 BEAVER HALL SQUARE, MONTREAL

Branches and Sales Offices in One Hundred and Forty-eight Cities
National Exhibit Rooms: Chicago, New York, Atlantic City, San Francisco and Montreal
Works: Chicago, Bridgeport, Birmingham, Chattanooga, Trenton and Montreal

CRANE EXPORT CORPORATION: NEW YORK, SAN FRANCISCO, SHANGHAI, CHINA
CRANE-BENNETT, Ltd., LONDON
Cie CRANE: PARIS, NANTES, BRUSSELS

Crane drainage fitting

This might have been prevented!

Don't wait to counteract tooth trouble

Prevent It!

Colgate's removes causes of tooth decay

SMILING TEETH FOR LIFE

By MAUD TOUSEY FANGEL

BAD TEETH and malnutrition are closely associated. In the United States 68% of the school children have defective teeth: 22.7% suffer from malnutrition. (Authoritative figures.)

Dr. Robert Hugh Rose, in his book "Eat Your Way to Health" says, "If these defects were confined to the poor it would not be such a reflection upon our conception of how to nourish the nation, but the rich suffer about the same as the poor."

When teeth decay, either from faulty diet or from lack of care, both mental and physical development of the child are retarded. Poison from decaying teeth permeates the body. Then serious trouble starts. Dread diseases may develop. Even life itself may be cut short.

Many cities have undertaken preventive dentistry in the schools. Philanthropic organizations have taken hold. Big business institutions are making tooth care compulsory. It means better work from employes, and fewer absences.

As education advances—as the serious effects of unhealthy teeth are becoming known—more and more forces are combating this national defect. Conditions can greatly be improved.

Give the child a chance!

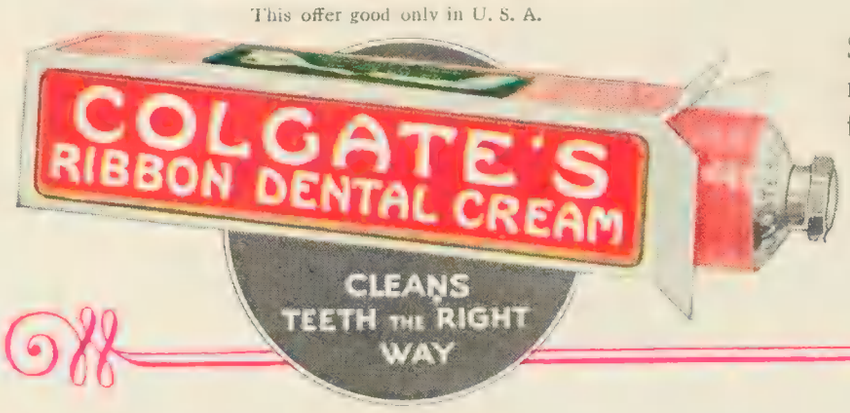
These New York City school children are being given a chance to escape the consequences of unhealthy teeth.

Healthy mouths lessen the danger of "catching" disease.

THE time to fight unhealthy teeth is before disease sets in—not after. Give yourself and your family a chance to escape disease by the most effective and inexpensive method in the world—prevention.

Preventive science is the new development in dentistry Its aim is to keep teeth healthy—and teeth can be kept healthy only when they are kept clean. Healthy teeth are as necessary to beauty as pretty eyes and a lovely complexion.

Free—2 week trial tube



COLGATE & CO., Dept. 907
199 Fulton St., New York City

Please send me, free, a trial tube of Ribbon Dental Cream.

Name_____

Address_____

This offer good only in U. S. A.

Causes of tooth decay must be removed—safely. Soap and chalk, scientists say, are the best agents yet discovered for cleaning teeth safely—and these are ingredients of Colgate's Ribbon Dental Cream.

"Washes", Polishes and Protects

Colgate's does not scrape teeth clean. It washes them gently and thoroughly. Washing action results from the mild vegetable oil soap. The chalk removes clinging particles of food and the soap washes them away. The mouth is left in its normal condition—refreshed and clean.

There is no grit in Colgate's, for grit scratches tooth enamel and thus invites decay instead of fighting it.

Colgate's contains no dangerous ingredients. Its function is to cleanse and protect.

The Safe Course

See your dentist at least twice a year and use Colgate's regularly. It is priced as sensibly as it is made—25c for the large tube.

COLGATE & CO.
Established 1806

THE DELINEATOR

MARCH 1925

FROM A PAINTING BY ALBERT HENCKE

Beginning JOSEPH C. LINCOLN'S new novel

KATHLEEN NORRIS L. M. MONTGOMERY FIELDING H. YOST

SPRING FASHION NUMBER

TWENTY CENTS THE COPY

THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, NEW YORK, N. Y., U. S. A.

$2.00 A YEAR $2.50 IN CANADA

for mirrors

for electric utensils

for windows

Bon Ami

for bathtubs and tiling

for white woodwork

All 'round the house

Why is Bon Ami so popular? Because it's easy, quick and simple to use. Then, too, it cleans and polishes so many things. Here you see a few of the more important which respond to its magic touch.

Bon Ami absorbs dirt, doesn't scratch or scour it off like coarse, gritty cleansers. In a twinkling every spot, every speck of grime yields to Bon Ami's gentle action. Every surface sparkles with cleanliness!

And Bon Ami is easy on the hands—never makes the nails brittle, the skin rough.

You can use either Bon Ami Cake or Powder. The handy-size cake is preferred for the small things, the easy-to-sprinkle can for the big things. And perhaps you'll discover some unsuspected use for this "Good Friend" to the housewife!

THE BON AMI COMPANY, NEW YORK

for glass kitchenware

for aluminum

for enameled refrigerators

for linoleum and Congoleum for glass and nickel

"Hasn't Scratched Yet"

Cake or Powder
whichever you prefer

for white shoes

THE DELINEATOR

MRS. WILLIAM BROWN MELONEY Editor

W. MARTIN JOHNSON Art Director

VOLUME CVI MARCH, 1925 NUMBER THREE

Published monthly by THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., U. S. A.

UNITED STATES BRANCHES:
2231-2249 South Park Avenue.....Chicago, Ill.
350 Mission Street.....San Francisco, Cal.
79-89 Marietta Street.....Atlanta, Ga.
105 Chauncy Street.....Boston, Mass.
1201-3-5 Washington Avenue.....St. Louis, Mo.

FOREIGN OFFICES:
27 Avenue de l'Opéra.....Paris, France
83 and 84, Long Acre.....London, W. C., England
468 Wellington Street, W...Toronto, Ontario, Can.
319 Elgin Avenue.....Winnipeg, Manitoba, Can.

George W. Wilder, President Truman S. Mersereau, Secretary Chas. D. Wilder, Treasurer

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: The price of THE DELINEATOR is $2.00 per year, or 20 cents per copy in the United States and its possessions, also Mexico and Cuba; to Canada, $2.50 per year; to all other countries in the Postal Union, $3.00 per year. Copyright, 1925, by The Butterick Publishing Company, in the United States and Great Britain. All rights reserved. Entered at Stationers' Hall, London, England. Entered as second-class mail matter July 12, 1879, at the Post-Office at New York, under the act of March 3, 1879. Additional entry at Los Angeles, California, San Francisco, California, and Portland, Oregon

OUR GUARANTEE: We absolutely guarantee the reliability of every advertiser in THE DELINEATOR. If any reader incurs a loss through misrepresentation of goods in any advertisement in THE DELINEATOR, we guarantee that this loss will be refunded. If the advertiser does not make it good, we will. G. W. WILDER, President of The Butterick Publishing Company.

FROM the EDITOR'S POINT of VIEW

FREE CHILDREN

ON THE editorial page last month we appealed to you to support the ratification of that amendment to the Constitution which will provide a just regulation of child labor in the United States.

A week after that editorial was written the editor of THE DELINEATOR was in London on a business trip. At half-past eleven o'clock on the night of her arrival there was a knock at her hotel-room door and a "Buttons" came in with a cable from America. He was so very small that one could not help asking his age.

Standing very straight, he answered with pride: "If the twenty-second of the month comes, I'll be nine."

There was a laugh at his doubt of the possible arrival of the twenty-second of the month, followed by an indignant protest against the employment—at night—of a boy under the age of nine.

"Don't you go to school?" he was asked.

"Yes, madam," came the polite answer, "I go to school here; I am learning the hotel business."

"But what time do you go home at night? Isn't it outrageous for a boy of your age to be going home this hour of the night alone?" exclaimed another American who was present.

"I work under my father here, madam, and I return home with him at one o'clock in the morning," replied the youngster to that.

When he had gone there was violent and bitter criticism of a system which permitted a boy under the age of nine to work all the night and until one o'clock in the morning.

But——

It behooves us to clean up our own garden before we find fault with the weeds in our neighbor's yard.

As compared to a boy eight years of age working under his father's eye in his father's business, we commit a grosser crime right here in this free land, rich and full of opportunities, knowing better and without the excuse of traditional child labor.

Down in the rice-fields some of our children work knee-deep in water, deprived of schooling and protected surroundings. In some of the sugar-beet fields little ones only seven years old work eight hours a day.

Dr. Owen Lovejoy, Director of the National Child Labor Committee, last year exposed a system which provided for the taking of carloads of children from Texas to the Northwest during the beet-picking season. It is a form of peonage, nothing less.

The proposed amendment to the Constitution in no way affects the legitimate labor of children in their homes. It contemplates no experiment—it is merely the expansion to other and less progressive States of a just protection for children which is already provided by statute in States possessed of an alive social vision.

Before you eat your next meal in comfort and security and feed your children in a protected home write a letter to your legislators and demand ratification of the Child Labor Amendment. If you do not know how to reach your Congressman or your Assemblyman, write a postcard to THE DELINEATOR, and we will tell you who they are and how to reach them both.

Let us make this a land of free children as well as a land of free men!

BETTER HOMES IN 1925

WHAT is your community doing to support this year's Better Homes in America campaign?

This great educational institution, founded in 1921 by THE DELINEATOR, was in 1923 surrendered by us to an Advisory Council, and incorporated as a public-service institution. THE DELINEATOR no longer participates in the direction and the policies of the Better Homes movement, but we do heartily support it and urge the readers of THE DELINEATOR to do so.

President Coolidge launched the 1924 campaign with this message by radio to the nation:

"The American home is the source of our national well-being. In it our high traditions of service and integrity are fostered. From the true home there emerge respect for the rights of others and the habit of cooperating for worthy ends. Through sharing its common enterprises and common sacrifices, the child develops that sturdiness of character which distinguishes the manhood and womanhood of our land.

"In recent years the remarkable development of our material resources, of human invention and of human opportunity has turned the attention of many from the home to other fields of engrossing interest. It has been necessary to recall public attention to the home lest its influence and its finer values be impaired. I have, therefore, been well pleased to note the founding of the movement for Better Homes in America under the inspiring leadership of Mrs. William Brown Meloney, and have been happy to serve as chairman of its Advisory Council. The reorganization and program of the movement I have followed with deep interest, realizing the significance to the nation of a widespread movement to strengthen and improve the home.

"Thus at the opening of Better Homes Week I am glad to call attention to the demonstrations planned with such loyalty and disinterested zeal by the Better Homes committees of hundreds of American cities and villages and to commend as a national service the cooperation of the women's clubs, civic and commercial associations and of the pulpit and the press in this significant undertaking. Such initiative, enterprise and devotion should profoundly influence the home life of America, and should make firm the high ideals which characterize our nation."

Three years ago five hundred communities observed Better Homes Week. In 1923 the number was doubled. Dr. James Ford, the executive director, recently stated that more than twenty-five hundred communities participated in Better Homes Week in 1924. What will this year's record be? You can help to double it. We are going to try.

THE DELINEATOR is dedicated to the American home and to American home-makers. It believes that every home in this country is a fortress. It believes that one single home bettered betters the race. It believes that the Better Homes movement, with all that it means, is the most important public work to which the women of this country can give their time.

Knowing how whole-hearted has been the interest of DELINEATOR readers in Better Homes in America, we have asked Mrs. John D. Sherman, one of the directors of the organization and also president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, to tell us about some of the new phases of the work. The Honorable Herbert Hoover will also discuss for us how and where, from the economic and social points of view, our men folks most often fail in the home. Both these articles will appear in coming issues of THE DELINEATOR.

THE DUNMOW FLITCH OF BACON

ARCADY had been found. It is a little village called Dunmow, in the heart of beautiful Essex, England. There you will find titled folk, great wealth, clever men. There is the famous Warwick Castle, and there also, in an old manse made beautiful with ancient relics of England and comfortable with an American furnace, lives H. G. Wells. There he wrote his great work, "An Outline of History," and some of his famous novels, too.

But it is not the great, the mighty, the clever who have made Dunmow an Arcady; not the famous landed estates, nor the gentry, nor even the beautiful Epping Forest, through which one drives to reach this historic English village.

It is the simple, hard-working peasant folk with their quiet dignity and fine philosophy.

They have hit upon a great truth. They have set a standard of life that could shame kings and courts and most of us ordinary mortals.

I reached Dunmow in an automobile on a chill and rainy November morning. It was a spotless town, a fairy-tale village, and through the gray drizzle I could see flowers blooming in the windows of every house.

We were looking for the home of H. G. Wells. At a cross-roads we stopped undecided which way to turn. There was a typical small thatch-roofed cottage at the corner, and from this a boy came running to offer guidance. It is not easy to find Wells's place, hidden as it is way off the main road. But all the people of Dunmow know the way to his door.

"If you don't mind my going with you, I'll gladly take you there," offered the boy. His courtesy was born of kindness—true manners.

When we came in sight of the house, the boy insisted on returning to his home by foot and refused a gift for his service. "I could not have done less," he explained, and turned on his heels to go back.

I asked the London chauffeur if he knew who the boy might be, and I commented on his manner.

"Oh, it's the flitch of bacon," exclaimed the chauffeur; "it gets into all of them."

And then I learned this story.

Every year at harvest time a flitch of bacon is given to every man and wife who have lived together for twelve months without a cross word. This premium is put on good manners in the home. It is an old custom in Dunmow, and it has made a proud and courteous group of people. They are beautifully gracious and gentle.

The inspiration lies not in the value of the side of bacon, but in the thought for which the flitch of Dunmow stands. Year after year of striving always to be polite in the home has made a kind people with princely manners and happy ways.

ART IN AMERICA

AT THE close of the Spanish-American war Levi Z. Leiter, Chicago's richest merchant, returning from Europe, was met by reporters who asked him to comment on the business prospect. Among other questions with which they plied him was one demanding whether a survey of financial conditions in Europe had been the reason for his journey abroad.

"I have been to Europe with my children to see some works of art," was his reply.

This incident was "news," but it was even more important because it reflected a state of affairs. When people made money in this country, they took their children abroad to see works of art.

A quarter of a century has changed that notably. America has become one of the storehouses of the beauty of the world. The Harvard University Press states that since 1910 two hundred and fifty million dollars' worth of art, paintings, sculpture, tapestries, silver work and rugs have come into the United States through the Customs House!

Most of this art is in public museums and art galleries, and much of it represents the best that is to be had in the world. In New York there is the Metropolitan Museum—a storehouse of priceless treasures. Rembrandt's most famous work hangs there, as do the storied Gobelin tapestries. This museum houses the finest collection of watches in the world, some of which are only half the size of a dime. These were chiefly the gift of the elder J. P. Morgan, who also collected and presented a marvelous array of Oriental potteries and porcelains.

New York City has other art stores, too. The late Henry C. Frick left over a million dollars' worth of paintings and sculptures done by great masters.

There is one marble palace, the Huntington Museum, which is dedicated to the art of Spain alone. Here are to be seen examples of the best that Spain has produced in more than a thousand years.

It would be impossible to give a list of the art treasures which this country owns. But in Cleveland, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Chicago and other cities Americans may find excellent examples of the work of every artist listed in history.

It is no longer necessary to go to Europe to see art. And that is something for Americans to keep in mind.

A COMPLETE TABLE OF CONTENTS WILL BE FOUND ON PAGE 110

Drawing by Charles R. Chickering

The Odd Child

By ANGELO PATRI

ONE morning, when I was a little lad, mother and I went to the chicken yard to see about a new flock of chicks that were tumbling out of their shells. The mother hen was clucking nervously and fidgeting about on the nest as though she wanted to scratch it up. Peering over the edge of the box we saw a wee naked chick lying on the edge of the nest. He was feebly trying to creep under his mother's wings and she was anxiously pushing him from under them.

Even to my childish eyes he was an odd chick. His brothers and sisters were dressed in the softest and downiest fluff, while he lay there bare, blue-cold and very, very ugly. Trotting along behind my mother, I felt a wave of compassion for the little thing she had picked up and cuddled in her apron. He was going to be another of those pets of which we always had a few about the farm. He would sleep snugly wrapped in flannel in a pan by the fireside, and I would feed him crums and meal and give him fresh water to drink. But I knew the other chickens would never have anything to do with him.

THE memory of those odd little farm creatures has stayed with me, so that now whenever I meet an odd child the same wave of compassion sweeps over my heart and I long to stretch out a protecting hand to shield and lift him to some safe shelter where he may live and play and work in happiness.

Benjie was one of the first such children I met. There was no balance between his body and his mind. Books were his passion. They were meat and drink, work and play, the whole of life to him. And yet when he was ten years of age his distracted mother could not even get him to rise and dress for school on time.

"He knows his lessons," sighed his teachers, "but what is the good? He can't keep up with his work. He has no power over a pencil, he can not tie a knot or catch a ball. He's almost infantile and he is ten years old. This is no place for him."

So we gave Benjie to a special teacher whose mission it was to help him to a knowledge of his body, beginning with an appreciation of his five senses. He had to be taught what most children know instinctively—to take hold, to hold on, and to let go at the right time. He had to be taught to walk and to run and to dance—for he had no sense of rhythm worthy the name.

At first the course stunned Benjie, but before the end of the first year he seemed to grasp the idea that we were trying to help him grow a body that would allow him to do what the other lads did, and he set to work earnestly to help us. When he went to high school, he showed no oddity, and although he would never be invited to become one of the team, he could cheer with the best and toss the ball if it chanced his way.

IT HAPPENS sometimes that a child is odd because he dwells too long in one single stage of growth. Child growth is always irregular, but in the odd child this peculiarity, like all others, is often exaggerated. Then we must remember the child himself has little to do with the matter. He is pecking at the shell that surrounds him, and it is for us to stretch out a friendly hand and chip off just a little of it in order to shorten his sojourn in the dark.

Betty was like that. She stayed too long in the realm of childhood, that happy place of fairies and palaces and sugarplum trees. A pleasant place it is where there is no reality, no Ten Commandments, nothing but visions seen through rainbowed vistas, a place where wishes come true as soon as you utter them.

"She's a bad influence on the other children," said the teachers. "She takes their things and tells such stories that they laugh in her face. Then she falls upon them tooth and claw, and tears the very clothes from their backs. She is impossible here. She must be taken out of school."

But taking Betty out would not have solved the problem. She had to be taken gently by the hand and led out of her childhood to the growing-up place. That meant a long course of patient instruction which could be given only by a highly trained teacher under the right conditions. Group instruction would not help in a case like Betty's. It required individual, specialized care. But the result proved it was worth while, for Betty did grow up and finally came to the place where her struggle was no greater than the common struggle about her.

Still other children are odd because of some sense defect. Perhaps they can not see well, or their ears are bad, or their sense of touch is deficient. Any such fault is enough to make a child odd and set him apart from his fellows. A good child doctor can do much in such cases, but a fine teacher can do more. The doctor may be able to open the closed sense avenue, but only the teacher can help the child to its full use.

Many children are put in asylums because of some such difficulty, when care and instruction would restore them to usefulness and, what is even more precious, happiness. We had a little boy who stuttered with his whole body when he tried to talk, and flew into uncontrollable rage in consequence. He was saved from an institution life by a teacher who knew how to help his speech.

But I must come to the sad little group for whom even the skill of the specialist avails nothing. There is a degree of oddity in which the child can not be educated to the point of making him self-sustaining and self-directing. He must be cared for and sheltered all his life. What shall be done with him?

Give him the best instruction possible, so that whatever treasure is hidden in his mind may be discovered for his happiness. Comfort yourself with this thought when things look most hopeless—there never was a child yet, not even the dullest, whose possibilities were entirely explored and developed. Keep on searching.

Shall he stay home or go to a home school? If there is plenty of money, of course, he should be cared for at home. But if there is not much money in the family and his presence in the home means a terrific drain on the strength of the mother, a strain on the other children, and a heavy financial burden, try to gather the courage to send him to a home school. Rid yourself of the idea that he suffers the same emotions that pierce your own heart. He does not. Unflattering as it may seem, he will scarcely miss you. I know this is true, for I have seen these children far, far happier in a home school than they had ever been in their own homes. Think of the day when you are no longer on earth to shield him. He will still be a child, no matter the years that have passed over him. He will still need the care you have always given him. Happily placed in a home school he will be safe, and you, if not happy, at least will be content.

How shall we know the odd child? Society says it is he who differs from the others. There remains, then, but the degree of difference that sets the child apart. If he manages to get along with his mates, even though on sufferance, if his teachers pass him, even grudgingly, do not worry about him. Give him all the care that is wise, but do not set a special mark upon him.

But if his teachers steadily complain about him and his mates peck him, he is odd. Call in the child specialist and the expert teacher, and set to work, quietly, patiently and with deadly persistence, to help him all you can.

He ought to have a couple of hours of individual instruction each day, and he needs, too, to work and play with a group of children—needs it vitally.

The program should be simple: The same thing at the same time every day—a sort of monotonous variety—is best. Do not fear of tiring him with repetition. To the odd child the old is ever new.

He needs sense training. All such training should be pleasantly exaggerated and given under the happiest conditions. The associations formed about these lessons are of the utmost importance, and unless they are pleasant it were better not to have formed them.

Let the book work rest a bit. Try to keep from forcing upon him the same lessons that his book-brilliant brother loves. The odd child is different and his difference must be respected and considered in all that one attempts to do for him or with him.

Teach him to use his hands—wonderful hands that have raised mankind from deeper depths than are his to plumb. He may not become an artisan, for rarely has he enough skill; but using the hands by which it is ordained he shall grope his way about this world may in some way help and enlighten his dimmed intelligence.

Praise him mightily. Applaud his least effort as with a brass band. He can not get enough encouragement, and any discouragement is too much.

Hold fast to your own faith in him, and try to remember that there is within him something, somewhere, that if discovered will make for his happiness. Then search for it and according to your faith be it unto you.

"HE'S ALWAYS QUEER"
CRY HIS PLAYMATES—

"HE WON'T LEARN"
SIGH HIS TEACHERS—

"HE'S NOT LIKE HIS BROTHERS AND SISTERS"
GRIEVE HIS PARENTS—

WHAT CAN BE DONE FOR SUCH A CHILD?

ANGELO PATRI TELLS YOU IN THIS ARTICLE

Is soft food guilty?

—glance at the evidence

NO LONGER can we doubt that our soft modern food is to blame for the troubles we have with our gums.

The professional papers and the published statements of the foremost practitioners agree that our diet of soft food is at the root of the trouble.

How soft food breaks down gums

Gums, to remain hard and firm, must have a good, rousing circulation of the blood within their walls. As one authority writes:

"In the process of masticating coarse foods, a natural massage takes place, creating a pressure and release of the blood vessels in the gum tissue which stimulate the circulation."

Under the healthy stimulus of coarse, fibrous foods, troubles from the gums were unknown. But the soft foods that we eat today rob our gums of the work and massage they need to keep them sound and healthy.

Hasty eating to blame, too

And to make matters worse, our peculiarly American habit of eating too hastily still further reduces the amount of mechanical stimulation that eating should give to the gums. As another writer puts it:

"All are agreed that our habits of rapid eating, combined with soft, or predigested foods, deprive the gums of the natural stimulation they are intended to receive."

Modern food, soft and creamy, is too "easy" on our gums

Does your toothbrush "show pink"?

THE READING of this page will teach you the care of your gums and may prevent your toothbrush from ever "showing pink." How the regular stimulation of your gums is necessary for the preservation of a sound, healthy set of teeth, is shown by these opinions of famous authorities on oral hygiene.

The most palatable foods are the richest, the creamiest, the most highly refined. They are the ones that pamper our gums and ruin our teeth. An authority on pyorrhea declares:

"The epicurean taste, which craves highly concentrated food, therefore may rightly be called a pernicious habit. Foods subjected to elaborate chemical and mechanical manipulation are directly to blame for the alarming spread of pyorrhea."

How Ipana strengthens weakened gum tissue

In the face of such evidence, it is not strange that people are coming to realize the importance of daily care of their gums, as well as daily cleaning of their teeth. And, as another investigator tells us, the remedy is:

"Not that we should revert to primordial life, but that we should apply the correction as soon as, or before, gum recession shows."

Because Ipana Tooth Paste is a dentifrice that stimulates the gums as well as cleans the teeth, Ipana will help you to keep your gums hard and firm and free from the troubles that follow in the train of the "pink" toothbrush.

In fact, it is to the professional recommendations of dentists whose patients suffered from weakened, soft and bleeding gums, that Ipana owes its start.

Hasty eating, like soft food, robs the gums of stimulation

Many dentists recommend a gum massage with Ipana, after the regular cleaning with Ipana and the brush, as a splendid home aid to the general restorative treatment. For Ipana contains ziratol, a valuable antiseptic and hemostatic known and trusted by dentists throughout the country. Ziratol is used after extraction, to allay the bleeding of the wound and to restore to the gums their normal tonicity. Its presence gives Ipana the power to aid in the healing and toning of soft, undernourished gums.

Try a tube of Ipana today

If your gums have a tendency to be soft or tender, go to the drug store today and buy your first tube of Ipana. Before you have finished using it, you cannot fail to note the improvement. And you will be delighted with its smooth, rich consistency, its delicious flavor and its clean taste.

IPANA TOOTH PASTE

—made by the makers of Sal Hepatica

A trial tube, enough to last you for ten days, will be sent gladly if you will forward coupon.

BRISTOL-MYERS CO.
Dept. B-35, 42 Rector St., New York, N. Y.

Kindly send me a trial tube of IPANA TOOTH PASTE without charge or obligation on my part.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

"The water from our Green Mountains is quite hard, yet P and G Naphtha Soap makes a wonderful suds and washes clothes cleaner and quicker than any other laundry soap I have ever tried. For the past six years I have used the P and G White Naphtha continually—prior to that time I tried and tired of various other laundry soaps. It remained for P and G to solve my soap problem."

—Mrs. C. M. M.
Woodstock, Vt.

VERMONT and IOWA

—from green mountains to vast prairies, most women prefer this one remarkable soap

IF one were curious to know just what qualities and properties American women most desired in a laundry and household soap, it might at first sound a bit surprising to say, "Ask the women of Vermont and Iowa—they will give you the same intelligent answer."

Yet that is the case, in spite of the radically different conditions that prevail in these widely separated states. And here is about what you would hear:

"We want a white soap—we think a white soap is likely to be a better soap. We want a soap that washes clothes clean with as little labor as possible, and that makes a fine suds in our particular kind of water at any temperature—hot, lukewarm, or cold. We want a soap that acts on the dirt and not on the fabrics or colors—a soap that is safe. Finally, we want a soap which loosens dirt so easily and rinses out so thoroughly that frequent boiling is unnecessary to prevent grayness and soap-odor in the clothes."

We know this would be the gist of their answer, not only because we have asked them ourselves, but because, in each state, P and G The White Naphtha Soap is the largest-selling laundry soap, and it has exactly the properties described above.

It is a remarkable fact, we think, that, in spite of the hundreds of soaps offered for laundry and household cleaning, P and G should nevertheless be by far the largest-selling soap in the whole country. It is a fact which should strongly recommend P and G to you, whatever soap you have been using and whether you do your own work or have help. And P and G is not only a fine soap for laundry work, but for all other household cleaning as well.

There is no mystery about the national supremacy of P and G—it is simply a better soap.

PROCTER & GAMBLE

"In the little town where I was born, with a population of only 2,000 and in all the Iowa towns I have visited, P and G The White Naphtha Soap is the most popular laundry soap. The good people I have visited, and their friends too, all seem to use P and G and make the same good remarks about its even quality and the wonderful satisfaction it gives in any kind of water—under any condition. We use P and G at home and every place I go I find it. It gives one a homey feeling."

—Mrs. R. P., Des Moines, Ia.

© 1925, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati

Drawings by Charles R. Chickering.

"SSHH!" THE CAPTAIN CALMED HIM. "SSHH, I TELL YOU! I'M GOIN' TO MARRY SUSANNA. I'VE BEEN IN HER LATITUDES FOR A MONTH AND I'VE GOT HER!"

THE PEEL TRAIT

By

JOSEPH C. LINCOLN

Love and heredity at war in a Cape Cod fishing village

IF THIS story were to begin, like a sermon, with a text, that text should be chosen from a conversation between Noah Didlow, who is and has been for many years the town clerk of Wapatomac, and Captain Ziba Bangs, retired commander of the Boston and Savannah steamer Enterprise. Noah and the captain were at the post-office, awaiting the sorting of the evening mail, and they were discussing the culmination of a problem, or series of problems, which had been interesting all Wapatomac for months.

Said Mr. Didlow, didactically: "There ain't no use talkin', say what you will, but sartin streaks of character and habits stick around and hang on to sartin families right down through the generations. A mackerel and a dogfish don't look much alike and they don't get along very well together, but when it comes to swimmin' they're both right there. Same way with Amarias or Susanna—and Lettice. The average fellow that didn't know would say that Lettice was as different from that half-brother and half-sister of hers as one of them clematises is from a poison-ivy creeper—and she is different, that's a fact—but, down underneath, the clematis and the ivy are both vines. Eh? ain't that so? Um-hum— Yes. Well, Amarias and Susanna are both Peels; but Lettice is a Peel, too, and when one Peel undertakes to get ahead of another Peel in a trade or a dicker he or she has got to get out of bed a consider'ble spell afore breakfast-time. That's the truth, ain't it, Cap'n Zibe?"

The captain nodded. "Ye-es," he admitted. "When it comes to that, a Peel is a Peel. But old Cap'n Eliphalet, you remember, always stuck it out that he wasn't any shrewder than anybody else. 'I use my common sense, that's all,' he used to say."

Noah chuckled. "That's exactly what Lettice says," he observed. "Sarah, my sister, had a letter from her yesterday—answer to one Sarah'd wrote her, you understand. In the letter—Lettice's, I mean—she said——"

Just here the postmaster's little window was pushed up, a signal that the mail was sorted and ready for delivery. The conversation was in consequence interrupted. It was resumed later on, at Mrs. Salt's boarding-house; but as, after all, neither Mr. Didlow nor the captain are very important figures in this chronicle—however important they may be in Wapatomac—and as their subsequent remarks were more in the nature of a summing up than a text, the recording of those remarks must be deferred until the time for summing up arises.

THE Peels are the important characters—they and one other. Up to a year ago last July there were four of them in Wapatomac. Before that there had been many, for the Peel name is an old one in our village. Captain Eliphalet Peel was the son of Adoniram Peel, also a captain—one of the "square-rigger" breed. Captain Adoniram died of Java fever on a voyage home from the East Indies in 1868. His only son, Eliphalet, retired from the sea in 1890, and came home to Wapatomac to live in the old house on the south side of what (since we began to be citified and entertain Summer visitors) is now Water Street. It used to be the Back Road, just as Cross Street (which approaches it at right angles and ends just in front of the Peel property) was formerly Duck Lane.

Captain Adoniram's big, rambling, old-fashioned dwelling, with its grassy, silver-leaf-shaded front yard on the Back Road and its hen-housed and barned back yard on Duck Lane, separated the two. A stranger walking up the lane with the idea of reaching the road would have found the Peel back fence barring his way. If he had—being a stranger—ventured to open the back gate with the idea of proceeding on through the yard, he would have found Captain Adoniram blocking that way, and effectually blocking it, too. Or, if the captain were absent on a voyage, Mrs. Adoniram would have attended to the job; her husband had left orders that she prevent trespassing, and his orders were obeyed by his subordinates, either on sea or land. Mrs. Adoniram's Christian name was Mehitable—or Sophronia—but that does not matter. She never mattered much, poor woman, and except for the fact that she was the mother of Eliphalet Peel, who matters a great deal, she might well be forgotten altogether. She died in 1862, when Eliphalet was fourteen years old, and is buried in the Peel lot in the Methodist cemetery. Hers is the little tombstone. Captain Adoniram's is the big one, with the foul anchor and the elaborate inscription; he left a sum of money in his will for that stone and wrote the inscription himself.

Captain Adoniram is not in the cemetery. He was buried in midocean. When the ship bearing the news of his death and burial arrived in Boston harbor, his twenty-year old son, Eliphalet, was off Cape Hatteras, first mate of the three-masted schooner Gloria, outward bound from New Bedford to New Orleans, with a cargo of lumber and barrel staves. When the Gloria arrived in New Orleans, Eliphalet learned of his father's death. The messenger with the telegram found him on the wharf superintending the unloading of the cargo. Eliphalet tore open the yellow envelope and read the enclosure. He said nothing at first, but pulled thoughtfully at his beard—in those days every male old enough to shave was careful not to do so—and read the message again. Then he drew a long breath.

"Humph!" he observed. "So the old man's gone adrift, eh? Sho!— Here!" violently addressing one of the hands on the schooner's deck. "What do you think that bundle of staves is—a rockin' chair? Tumble up there and get to work or I'll start my boot after you. Lively, you lubber. If you set down again, I'll fix you so you'll pray standin' up!"

"Is there any answer, sir?" queried the messenger timidly. He knew what was in the telegram. Eliphalet looked at him.

"Answer?" he repeated. "Answer to what?"

"Why, to the message. Don't you want to send one back?"

"Humph! He's been dead two months already. What sense is there in wastin' money telegraphin'? I guess whatever answer there is can go by mail. Don't hang around here, son. Clear out from under my feet. I'm busy."

THAT was all. The Peels, father and son, had been fond of each other, but they were Peels. "Use sense and don't waste money"—it was the family gospel. Captain Adoniram would have highly approved of its application in this case.

So when Eliphalet did write, to Lawyer Barnes, who was the Peel attorney at Wapatomac, his letter was brief and entailed the expenditure of no pennies for extra postage. Attend to whatever the old man had wanted done and let the rest wait until he, the heir, should make the home port again—those were his instructions. Lawyer Barnes followed them, ordered Captain Adoniram's elaborate tombstone, and waited.

When, six weeks later, Eliphalet arrived in Wapatomac, he and Barnes held several important and lengthy sessions. There would have been more sessions had Peel permitted. The attorney was an elderly man and fussy and he loved to discuss each point in detail. His client closed the spigot on the flow of language.

"It's done, ain't it?" he observed crisply. "All there is to be done, I mean. The will's plain enough. Whatever there is is mine, and I guess likely I can take care of it. The schooner's about ready for sea again and my time's worth money. So's yours, I shouldn't wonder. Anyhow, I never heard that 'talk is cheap' meant talk from a lawyer. Hand me your bill, and if it's what I think it ought to be I'll pay it. Much obliged to you, Mr. Barnes. Better have a drink afore you haul anchor, hadn't you? I guess likely there's some old Medford aboard here somewheres. The old man generally figgered to keep a shot of it in the parlor locker. Lay to your moorin's while I have a look."

Lawyer Barnes lay at his moornings—that is, he remained seated in the Boston rocker with the painted rosebuds on the back—while his host and client visited the "parson's closet" in the shut-up front parlor and came back with the decanter of New England rum. The pair mixed and sipped their toddies. Eliphalet finished his first. He rose to his feet.

"Well," he observed, "I cal'late we're through, ain't we? Good night."

Barnes, acting upon the pointed hint, also rose. But his pigeonholed and docketed mind was troubled.

"Are you—are you sure there is nothing else to be done, Mr. Peel?" he faltered. "Er—the—the housekeeper—Mrs. Badger? She will remain in charge of the—of the property here, I presume?"

Eliphalet sniffed. "What for?" he demanded. "Long's the old man lived and he or I were liable to be comin' home every so often, there was an excuse for her bein' around and drawin' wages, I suppose—anyhow father seemed to think there was. But now, with him gone and me just goin', there isn't any, as I see it. What's the use of a housekeeper with nobody to keep house for? I'll give her her clearance papers to-morrow."

"But—but you will be coming back occasionally, and——"

"When I do come back, I can hire her over again, I presume likely. If I can't, I can hire somebody else."

"But your future? Have you decided what you are going to do? Have you made any plans—any——"

Eliphalet interrupted. "Plans?" he repeated. "Sartin I've made plans, plenty of 'em. And I'm liable to make more. But they're my business, not the gang's at the post-office. All that anybody needs to know is that I'm sailin' for Havana in command of the Gloria and I'm leavin' port next Saturday, bar accidents."

The lawyer was surprised. "In command!" he exclaimed. "Why, that means that you—that you——"

"It means that I'm Cap'n Eliphalet Peel, by godfreys, of the schooner Gloria! That's what it means now. It may come to mean consider'ble more than that if some of those plans you've been guessin' at come true, but that's what it means now. Good night, Mr. Barnes."

"Well, well! This is news. I congratulate you, Cap'n Peel. I do indeed! I——"

"All right. Much obliged. Here's your hat."

The following morning he left, via the Old Colony Railroad, for Boston, where the Gloria was docked. Three months later he returned as not only the captain but one-third owner of the vessel. Five years more and he was her sole owner. Then he gave Wapatomac something else to talk about, for he began paying ardent court to Susanna Coleman, who, every one supposed, was engaged to Christopher Dadgett.

MR. DADGETT was the local sailmaker, ship-chandler and marine outfitter. His shop was located at the wharf at the upper end of the cove, where the fishing-schooners landed their catch after trips to the Banks. He had been keeping company with Susanna for nearly three years. The gossips at the post-office, the general store or the sewing-circle considered the match as good as made and were speculating when the wedding was to take place. Christopher, when questioned, would neither affirm nor deny the rumors. He was, like all the Dadgetts, "mighty deliberate," and never did anything in a hurry. He had, however, bought a piece of land in the village, on the Main Road opposite the Baptist meeting-house, and it was said that he had consulted Erastus Bassett, the carpenter, concerning the cost of a six-room house which, "some of these days," he might possibly build thereon. The Dadgett business was supposed to be prosperous—certainly it was so when old Ben Dadgett, Christopher's father, conducted it. Christopher, therefore, must be "doing first rate." Susanna, too, had a little money of her own. They were to marry, so Wapatomac agreed, and the sole question was when.

But Captain Eliphalet Peel settled that question and settled Mr. Dadgett at the same time. He left the Gloria to be overhauled and refitted at the yards in East Boston, came back to his native town and began calling at the Coleman homestead. He called regularly and frequently. Christopher called also, but his calls appeared to disturb the captain not at all. If Dadgett was first on the scene and he and Susanna were occupying the sitting-room, Eliphalet, after chatting a few moments with the Widow Coleman in the dining-room, would walk in on the young pair, greet them both cheerfully and casually, and proceed to take charge of the conversation. He had much to talk about, and Christopher, whose lingual powers were limited and whose experience had been confined largely to selling cordage and anchors, was left aground on the flats while his rival sailed off in the seas of adventurous romance with the lady.

Dadgett did his feeble best to interfere with these cutting-out expeditions. When the captain finished a yarn, or waited for Miss Coleman to declare that she had never heard of such a thing in her life, or exclaim, "My soul and body, Cap'n Peel!" he would seize the opportunity to break in with, "I all but made a fine trade this forenoon, Susanna. Philander Berry was in the store, and he and I got talkin' about the Swift Wind—that's his vessel, you know—and says he to me, 'Chris,' he says, 'I've got to buy a new foresail this Fall when I get a chance for a cruise up to Boston, after the season's over.' When I heard that I was wide awake and right on deck, you bet you, and I says to him, 'Phil,' says I, 'what do you take her to Boston for? Why don't you let me figure on that sail and save money for you?' 'You?' he says. 'You couldn't handle as big a sail as that down here.' 'Why couldn't I?' says I. 'I cal'late I've handled bigger ones.' And we got to goin' it over and the upshot of it was that——"

Just here Eliphalet would chuckle reminiscently and interrupt. "A poor fores'l is a mighty risky thing to put dependence on," he would declare. "I remember one voyage in the old Lorenzo Taylor when a piece of rotten canvas pretty nigh sent us to Kingdom Come. I guess we'd have gone there if I hadn't been on deck when the hurricane struck. We was a day out at San Juan, Porto Rique, and Cap'n Jim Hall—he was in command of the Lorenzo Taylor then—was down below, laid up with the rheumatism. The weather had been fine all night, but the glass was fallin', and that mornin'——"

And so on, while Susanna listened, awe-stricken, and Mr. Dadgett frowned and fidgeted, his picayune tale of the "fine trade" quite forgotten by every one but himself. He was small and retiring. Captain Peel was big and masterful. Susanna was meek and yielding. She was a little afraid of Eliphalet and she was fond of Christopher; but while the latter hesitated his rival carried overwhelmingly on, dominating the situation always, and sweeping her off her feet by the strength of his will and personality. She surrendered without realizing it. One evening, after the captain had gone—it was Saturday and the Dadgett shop kept open on Saturday nights—Mrs. Coleman found her daughter white-faced and wet-eyed.

"WHY, mercy on us, what is the matter, Susy?" inquired the widow. Susanna burst out crying.

"Oh—oh, mother," she sobbed, "I'm going to marry him and—and I don't know as I want to!"

Her mother stared in astonishment.

"Marry!" she repeated. "Marry who?"

"Eliphalet. He says I am. He says we are going to be married in a fortnight. What shall I do?"

The widow sank down upon the haircloth sofa. "You're goin' to marry Cap'n Eliphalet—in a fortnight!" she gasped. "You are!"

"He—says I am."

Mrs. Coleman gasped again.

"He says so?" she said. "I want to know! And what did you say?"

"I said—I said—oh, I didn't really say much of anything. He wouldn't let me."

"And you don't want to marry him?"

"I don't know. When he was here—I—I—well, he just made me feel as if I wanted to do what he wanted. Now—now I'm not sure. It doesn't hardly seem as if I could— But I know I've got to."

Her mother bounced from the sofa. "Of all things!" she snorted indignantly. "You've got to—because he says you have! And you're too poor-spirited to say no! Well, then, I'll say it for you. If you wanted to marry Eliphalet Peel, I wouldn't stand in your way. Everybody calls him a mighty smart man and vows he's bound to be a rich one. But if you don't want him, that's another pair of shoes altogether. If you won't tell him to clear out and go about his business, just leave it to me. I've got the spunk to call my soul my own, if you haven't. I'll tell him."

Susanna shook her head.

"No, you won't," she prophesied. "He'll tell you—and then you'll say yes, just as I did. Mother, if that man wanted anything on earth he would get it. If he wanted to marry you, instead of me, he'd do that, too. I—I almost wish he did."

This was too much. Mrs. Coleman marched to the door, but at the door she turned.

"You better go to bed," she declared. "Your head needs a rest bad— But here's another thing for you to think of," she added tartly. "What do you suppose Chris Dadgett will say when he hears all this? And what do you suppose he'll do?"

The young lady raised her hands and dropped them limply.

"Whatever he says won't make any difference," she prophesied. "It never does. And as for doing anything—well, Captain Peel says all Chris will do is come to our wedding."

"Come to your weddin'! To yours and Eliphalet Peel's weddin'! Christopher Dadgett will? And Cap'n Peel said that? The man's crazy!"

Susanna sighed in utter helplessness. "No, he isn't crazy," she said. "He just makes up his mind what he wants and then goes and gets it, that's all. He told me he did. Plan ahead, make up your mind, and then use common sense—that's the chart he steers by, he told me. He says our getting married is common sense. Mother, how can we ever get ready in two weeks? I haven't a thing to wear."

Mrs. Coleman's disposition was by no means as pacifistic as her daughter's. When Eliphalet called the next day, Sunday, she was waiting for him and expressed her mind with conviction. He listened serenely, waited until she had said her say, and then said his. The interview was a long one, so long that the captain, who had an appointment down town, observed that he calculated he would not stop to see Susanna that afternoon but would drop in again after supper.

Miss Coleman, tremblingly waiting in the sitting-room, heard the outer door close. Then she emerged to find her mother sitting by the dining-room table gazing blankly at nothing in particular.

"Mother," she demanded, "what did he say? What did you do?"

The widow came out of her trance and turned to look at the questioner.

"Say?" she repeated. "Why—why, he said—he said—My soul! what didn't he say?"

"But am I going to marry him—in two weeks?"

Mrs. Coleman straightened in the chair.

"No, indeed you ain't," she declared. "There's limits to everything. I told him right down flat-footed that two weeks was ridiculous—and he's willin' to wait three."

CHRISTOPHER DADGETT did not call at the Coleman house to learn of his supplanting by the captain. The latter saved him the trouble. The afternoon of the day following his interview with the widow, Eliphalet strolled into the Dadgett shop at the wharf where, behind his desk, enveloped in a strong smell of rope and tar, sat Christopher, gloomily footing the bills he owed.

"Hello, Chris," hailed Peel. "Alone, are you? That's good. I wanted to have a talk with you about a new set of sails for the Gloria. She's up to East Boston now, and the McKay folks are figuring on the job. But that needn't make any difference, as I know of. It's a free country and you can figure, too, if you want to. Think you can handle as big a job as that?"

Mr. Dadgett, the heavy total of his indebtedness fresh in his mind, pricked up his ears.

"I don't know why I couldn't, Cap'n," he announced. He hated Eliphalet Peel, but business was business—more than ever just then.

"All right. I don't know why you couldn't, either. I've got the measurements with me. Let's talk it over."

They did, and the talk lasted a long while. There was much haggling, but at length Eliphalet issued his ultimatum.

"If you want the job at that price, you can have it," he said. "If you don't want it, say so."

Dadgett sighed. "It's awful close, Cap'n Peel," he declared. "There won't be much in it for me."

"There'll be somethin'—and in ready money as soon as it's done. From what I hear you can use a little cash just now, can't you, Chris?"

The sailmaker started. "Who told you—" he began. His visitor held up his hand.

"It's no odds who told me," he interrupted. "Will you take the job? If you don't, McKay will."

"Not at that figure, he won't."

"Yes, he will. He and I have talked it over already. He'll take it, I'll bet, and he doesn't need money as much as you do. You can afford to figure close better than he can. You're a single man and you're goin' to stay single—for a while, anyhow."

The tone of this last remark was significant. Dadgett raised his hand.

"What do you mean by that?" he demanded. Cap'n Eliphalet crossed his legs.

"What I say," he observed calmly. "Susanna and I are goin' to get married in three weeks."

Christopher jumped to his feet, upsetting his chair as he did so. His thin little face was purple.

"Damn you!" he screamed, brandishing his fists. "What—what——"

"Sshh!" the captain calmed him. "What do you cal'late the other deacons up at the Methodist meetin'-house would say if they heard you cussin'? Sshh, I tell you! I'm goin' to marry Susanna. I've been in her latitudes for a month and I've got her! That's one of the differences between you and me, Dadgett. Maybe there's another, I don't know. When I can't get what I want—and that's pretty seldom—I give it up and forget it and take the next best thing. You can't have Susanna. Do you want to make the Gloria's sails?"

"I—I—by time, I——"

"Sshh! Save your breath. You're mad, but you'll get over it. I know how you feel and maybe that's why I'm offerin' you the job instead of McKay."

Dadgett glowered. "That's a lie," he snarled. "You're offerin' it to me because you know I'm hard up just now and you think I'll do it cheaper."

Eliphalet grinned. "Maybe there's a grain of truth in that, too," he admitted. "But," rising to his feet, "if I was you I'd take the offer, even so. Put Susanna Coleman out of your head. She's mine and that's settled. You need money and I'm puttin' some in your way. When you can't get frosted cake, it's a good idea to remember that gingerbread don't taste so bad. That's common sense, Chris, and common sense is a mighty important item in the manifest."

He walked out whistling. When he called the next day, Mr. Dadgett agreed to make the Gloria's new sails.

HE SHOULDERED THE YOUNG MAN OUT OF THE WAY AND DEVOTED THE HOURS BEFORE SUNSET TO IMPRESSING HIS PERSONALITY UPON MARGARET HOLWAY

At the end of the three weeks Captain Eliphalet Peel and Susanna Coleman were married. Christopher was one of the guests at the wedding.

SUSANNA and her husband set up housekeeping in the old house on the Back Road. Mrs. Coleman had confidently told her intimate friends that she was going to live there also, but she was mistaken. She continued to live alone in the cottage which she had occupied since her marriage. She died, two years later, of typhoid fever. Captain Eliphalet remained at home with his bride for a month. Then he went to sea again in the refitted Gloria.

In the old house on the Back Road two of Captain Eliphalet's children were born. The first was a boy. Susanna had picked a name for him before he arrived. She wished to christen him Nicholas, because Nicholas Nickleby was one of her favorite characters in fiction. But her husband had other ideas. "Nicholas is all right enough in a book, maybe," he observed, "but there's nothin' that you might call personal to it. There's a million Nicks in this country, besides Old Nick somewheres else. I always said if I had a son I'd name him after Cap'n Amarias Cahoon. He was the first skipper I ever sailed under, and he was a man, take him by and large, and learned me how a crew ought to be handled. Amarias is a good name. There's precious few Amariases on the Cape. He'll be Amarias Peel, that's what he'll be."

So, of course he was. The second child was a girl and, as Eliphalet happened to be at sea when she was born, her mother had her way for once and presented the baby with her own name, Susanna. The captain, when he received the letter bearing the news, made no objection. It made little difference what a girl was called. Eliphalet was not greatly interested in girls.

Amarias and Susanna Junior were healthy youngsters and, as they grew, developed more and more of their father's traits. "They're all Peel," so the townpeople said, "Cap'n Eliphalet and Cap'n Adoniram all over again." This was to be expected, for that household was all Peel. The Coleman side of it was a nonentity. Mrs. Peel kept house and cooked and washed and mended and took care of the children, but it was Eliphalet who ruled. His wife seldom made a decision of her own. The few she did make were but tentative, and were submitted for final acceptance or rejection to her husband when he came home from his voyages.

THESE voyages were prosperous ones. The Gloria was a lucky vessel and her commander and owner made money. For seven years no ill fortune came his way, and, when it did come, it met him, not on salt water, but on dry land. The old Peel homestead took fire one Winter night and burned to the ground. Susanna Peel, the wife, caught cold from exposure that same night, developed pneumonia and died. When Captain Eliphalet returned to Wapatomac, summoned from Savannah by telegraph, he was homeless and wifeless.

Within another three years he had made up both losses. People expected him to rebuild immediately, but he did not do so. Instead he went, with his children and a housekeeper whom he hired, to the Coleman cottage, the former home of his wife. This cottage had been occupied by Eben Jenkins and family. Eben had been a Peel tenant since Mrs. Coleman's death. He liked the place, although he considered the rent high, and intended to remain in it indefinitely. But Captain Eliphalet upset his calculations, just as he had upset Christopher Dadgett's. He dropped in on Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins the morning of the day following that of his wife's funeral. It was seven-thirty and the Jenkinses were at breakfast.

"Why, good mornin', Cap'n Peel!" exclaimed Eben, rising from the table in surprise. "Set down. Have a chair. You're kind of early, ain't you?"

Eliphalet accepted and occupied the proffered chair. "Yes, I'm early or you're late, one or the other, Eben," he observed. "No, thank you, I had breakfast down at the Ocean House an hour ago. I've come to talk a little business with you. How soon do you cal'late you could get ready to move out of here? I'll give you a month's notice, if it's necessary, but I've got to get settled and I can't spare a great deal of time."

The Jenkins family—the adult portion of it—stared at him and each other. Mrs. Jenkins found her tongue first. She usually found it easily, a fact to which her husband could have testified.

"Move out!" she cried shrilly. "We move out? Out of this house, do you mean? You mean you're goin' to put us out, Eliphalet Peel?

The captain shook his head. "Not if I can help it, Marietta," he said. "I don't want to put you out. I'd rather you went without puttin'. And I'm sorry to have to ask you to go. But I've got to sleep and eat somewhere and my own house has gone up in smoke. This is the only other place I own, and so it looks like

Continued on page 86

Drawings by Gerald Locke

"G-GENTLEMEN! IN DECIDING THIS CASE, YOU HAVE A DOO-OOTY TO YOURSELVES—YOUR C-C-COUNTRY AND YOUR GOD"

Jury Dodgers — Love Dodgers

Take notice! Here is a story that hits you squarely

GLYCERINE TEARS

By EMILIE LORING

CONSTANCE WELD watched twelve men file into the jurors' seats. The girl's smooth ivory skin, the sheen of her bronze hair, her brown eyes, her lips which needed no artificial aid to mark their ardent curves, the smart simplicity of her crêpe frock, the poise of her head, all suggested finely preserved tradition. Owner of Stony Brook Farm, which since the recent trouble with her farm manager her brothers had called Stony Broke Farm, she was defendant in the case of Brown vs. Weld which was awaiting verdict.

The sheriff announced "Court!" in a voice which seemed to be catapulted from his boots. The girl rose, but her eyes were not on the black-robed representative of justice who entered. They were on the second man from the end in the upper row of jurors. Her counsel had whispered to her a few moments before that he suspected Burg, the teamster, of being a plaintiff's man.

Even as she looked she saw Burg's eyes flash to Brown, her late farm manager, across the aisle. There was an infinitesimal twitch to the juror's left eyebrow before he fixed his attention respectfully upon the judge. The message, if it had been a message, would have been imperceptible to one not watching for it, the girl decided.

Indignation flamed in her eyes, a rose-leaf color tinted her face. She had heard that jurors were sometimes corrupt, but she had refused to believe it. Even if one entered the court-room with a dishonest purpose, how could he persist in it, she asked herself as she looked at the American flag on the wall above the bench. Afternoon sunshine flooded it. The white-haired judge in his black robes seemed the incarnation of justice. At either side of the room blue-coated, brass-buttoned sheriffs stood like sentinels. The clerk of the court and counsel at their tables took on a certain awesome dignity as they waited for his honor to be seated.

Constance thrilled responsively. Until her former manager Brown had sued her for breach of contract never had she been in the court-house on Beacon Hill, the high spot of Boston. Her eyes darkened reflectively as she regarded the jurors. Her attorney, Mark Carewe, had warned her not to expect justice where a farmer was suing a wealthy girl. He had shown her a list of the names and occupations of the twelve good men and true who were to pronounce judgment from the evidence. A ship-fitter was foreman. There were two bricklayers, a teamster, a chauffeur, a polisher, a provision-dealer, a laborer, a clerk, a bus-boy, a bookkeeper and a motorman. Seven of the panel had chewed gum through the trial. The little fat man in the front row had dozed while Carewe had argued for the defense. He had tried to sleep through the argument for the plaintiff, but Brown's counsel had had a disturbing habit of pounding the table at intervals and then shouting:

"G-gentlemen! In deciding this case, you have a doo-ooty to yourselves—your c-c-country and your God."

THE solemn voice of the clerk collided with Constance's train of thought:

"Gentlemen, have you agreed upon a verdict?"

The foreman pompously nodded. He handed a paper to the sheriff, which that dignitary in turn handed to the clerk. The girl burned with impatience. Why, oh, why, were they so slow? The clerk unfolded the paper and handed it to the judge. He returned it to the clerk, who thereupon intoned impressively:

"Gentlemen of the jury, hearken unto your verdict. The jury finds for the plaintiff in the sum of three thousand dollars. So say you, Mr. Foreman? So say you all?"

The twelve men nodded. Importance swelled them visibly. Constance sprang to her feet. She sank back at the sheriff's staccato rap of reminder. Her blood surged in her ears. The injustice of it! Hadn't witnesses proved that Brown had neglected the cattle? Hadn't one sworn that he had poured pail after pail of milk into the brook to the accompaniment of uproarious drunken laughter?

She was conscious that the judge was speaking, but she could not concentrate her thoughts on him. Three thousand dollars! It would be "Stony Broke Farm" all right this year. Red spots glowed in the girl's cheeks. She rose with all others in the room as the sheriff dismissed court.

"Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye! All persons having anything further to do before the Honorable the Justices of the Superior Court now sitting at Boston within and for the county of Suffolk, at present depart and give your attendance at this place to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, to which time and place the sitting of this court is now adjourned. God save the Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

"WE'LL try again, Miss Weld. I have taken a volume of exceptions. The judge is with us. He is sure to set aside that verdict."

The girl looked up at Mark Carewe as he tried to encourage her. His steel-blue eyes glowed with high-voltage effect behind their compound lenses. Color flushed his usual pallor. The change accentuated the white patches in the hair at his temples. How interested he had been, Constance thought gratefully. He had done more than was professionally necessary, she was sure. Her brothers had protested against her carrying on the dairy farm. She had been determined to show them a thing or two and had asserted her independence by refusing to engage the family lawyer on her case. She had employed instead the man who had recently become her neighbor. She had succeeded in "showing them" with this verdict. Three thousand dollars!

"I shall not have the case reopened, Mr. Carewe."

"But, Miss Weld——"

"Don't argue. I'm through. If twelve men who look intelligent, even if the majority are gum addicts, could hear that testimony, look at me and that worm Brown and decide in his favor, I'm through with courts forever. I don't think much of your old jury system."

"The system is all right. What it needs is better material. There was not a man on that jury who could weigh the evidence from your point of view."

Constance Weld's delicately arched brows arched a trifle more.

"Why weren't some of that type there?"

"They get excused. Say they can't afford the time, can't leave business. Don't blame the courts for what is to some degree the fault of most of the men you know. There are precious few of them who won't dodge jury duty if they can. If only they could be made to realize that they can't afford not to serve. There's your friend Stanley Blake. He has been drawn for this session, but he told me that he would get excused. However, I may be unjust. Possibly he is using business as an excuse when really he is sensitive about his face, poor chap."

"His face?"

The girl's echo of the words was a puzzled inquiry. Then the color swept to her hair. She set her teeth hard against her lips to steady them before she smiled bewilderingly on the lank attorney.

"Send me your bill at once, please, and thank you for the interest you have taken in the case. I am satisfied with my counsel if not with my verdict. Now that this is off my mind, I'll settle down to tennis. I'll have to win in the tournament to even up this beating."

"Won't you reconsider your refusal to play with me, Miss Weld? Together we could walk off with the cup."

"No, but I'm happy to think that you want me, for every one says you're the best player in the State. I have played with Stanley Blake since he taught me to hold a racket, and I wouldn't turn him down for all the cups in the country. Good-by, and thank you again."

CONSTANCE released her hand from a grasp which was not entirely professional and left the court-room. In a crowded elevator she proceeded to the ground floor. Everywhere were hurrying attorneys with bulging briefcases, barely avoiding collision with businesslike stenographers or hatless, startled-eyed foreign women with children dragging at their skirts. About her she felt invisible currents of misery, hope, mystery, ambition and tragic unfulfilment. Everywhere were No Smoking signs; equally everywhere were men smoking like chimneys.

It was September, and a hot September. The gilded dome of the State House glowed like a molten nugget. Between the heat and a raging sense of injustice Constance's temperature had risen alarmingly by the time she reached her roadster parked on Charles Street.

When she came to the highway outside the city, she settled back and with unseeing gaze on the road mentally reviewed the last year. Her parents had bequeathed Stony Brook Farm to her until she married. Prize cattle had been her father's passion and he had trained her in the management of the dairy. Her brothers, who made their home with her, had urged her to sell the stock, but she had kept it, first from a sense of loyalty to her father, and secondly because it interested her to carry out his plans. Brown's advent had loosed a Pandora assortment of perplexities, which only increased Billy's and Peter's convictions that she was flinging her strength and money into a sieve. But she had started to finish her father's job and she intended to do it.

Fortunately Stanley Blake had sided with her. He was the same as a brother, his home adjoined her farm. Since the death of his mother the big house had been closed, and in Summer he lived with a Jap servant in a cottage on the estate. He had been devoted to her since her second birthday when she had toddled into his mother's garden clinging tight to his firm hand. Through all phases of her growing-up he had kept a stern eye on her masculine friendships. She had been but fifteen when he and Billy and Peter had gone to war. Even now her throat contracted as she thought of the day when news had come that Stanley had been wounded.

Wounded! Indignant color rouged her smooth skin. Carewe had been tactless to refer to the wicked blotch on Stan's left cheek, from which jagged seams spread like tentacles. Fortunately it just escaped his clear gray eyes, but one corner of his mouth was slightly drawn. For a moment she had been honestly puzzled by her attorney's reference to Stan's sensitiveness. Always to her Stanley Blake was the finest-looking man she knew, always he stood for integrity, decency, courage, reliability. Curious that he of all persons should be a jury-dodger. Did the consciousness of the scar really trouble him? He couldn't be so foolish. As though a little thing like that mattered!

She sensed antagonism between him and Carewe. The attorney was making hosts of friends in the community. He had been introduced and explained at the club as a lawyer who was earning an enviable reputation, as one who for the first time in years was free of family responsibilities. Tennis had been his one relaxation through the lean years. He was a better player than Stanley Blake, who was conceded to be the best the country clubs for miles around could produce. Constance checked a little gust of laughter as she thought of the nickname her brothers had bestowed upon Carewe. They had dubbed him the "Youth's Companion," because he so persistently sought the society of the younger set. Poor man, probably he had never had really young fun.

HE CAUGHT THE GIRL CLOSE AND KISSED HER BEFORE HE LAUGHED: "GOOD LORD, I WONDER—I WONDER—"

RETROSPECTION departed when she met an ocean breeze. Constance straightened in her seat, tucked a strand of copper-glinting hair under her soft hat and let out her engine. In spite of courts and gum-chewing jurors this was a glorious old world, she told herself. The boys would be waiting for her to make a fourth at tennis. Stan hadn't asked her to play with him in the tournament. Doubtless he had taken her consent for granted. It had thrilled her to know that Carewe wanted her as a partner. She would like to play with him just to show the boys——

Show them?—never again! Wasn't that what she had boasted she would do with her lawsuit? She would pretend amusement when she told them of the verdict. The dimples awakened by a rehearsal of her announcement deepened as she hailed an approaching roadster. The girl at the wheel was dark and vivacious and in plumage resembled nothing so much as a scarlet tanager. She was breathless with triumph as she called:

"I'm to play doubles with Stan Blake in the tournament!"

Constance felt the world crack and yawn beneath her.

"Did you ask him to play with you, Nathalie?"

"Ask him! Of course I didn't. Stan said he believed he and I could give you and Mark Carewe a run for the championship. Tell you more later. Must meet this train."

Constance watched her car out of sight. Something hurt her intolerably. She didn't care, she assured herself passionately, but Stan might have told her that he intended to ask Nathalie. Darn! Disagreeable things always were born twins.

Indignation blazed again over the morning's verdict. By the time she reached the terrace at Stony Brook Farm she was indifferent to the beauty of the sparkling sea, to the sheen of the beach, to the glory of color in the garden between house and shore.

She felt hot and dusty. The immaculateness of her brothers and Stanley Blake as they lazily awaited her arrival in deep wicker chairs, rackets at their feet and tall frosted glasses at their elbows, added fuel to the flame of her resentment. Never had Blake seemed so cool, so built on fighting lines as when he rose to his six-feet-two to greet her. She swallowed hard as for the first time in months she noticed the scar. In acknowledgment of her arrival the Weld brothers abandoned their chairs for the balustrade. They were lean-faced men, strikingly alike, save that the elder was a trifle taller, leaner, more alert than the younger. Blake pulled forward a chair.

"Sit here, Con. I'll ring for something cool for you."

"Case finished?" Billy inquired.

"Yes. No, I won't sit down. I'm too hot and dusty. That miserable Brown won. A three-thousand-dollar verdict. Isn't it maddening?" She had forgotten to be nonchalant.

"Whe—ew!" whistled Billy Weld.

"Boy!" groaned Peter.

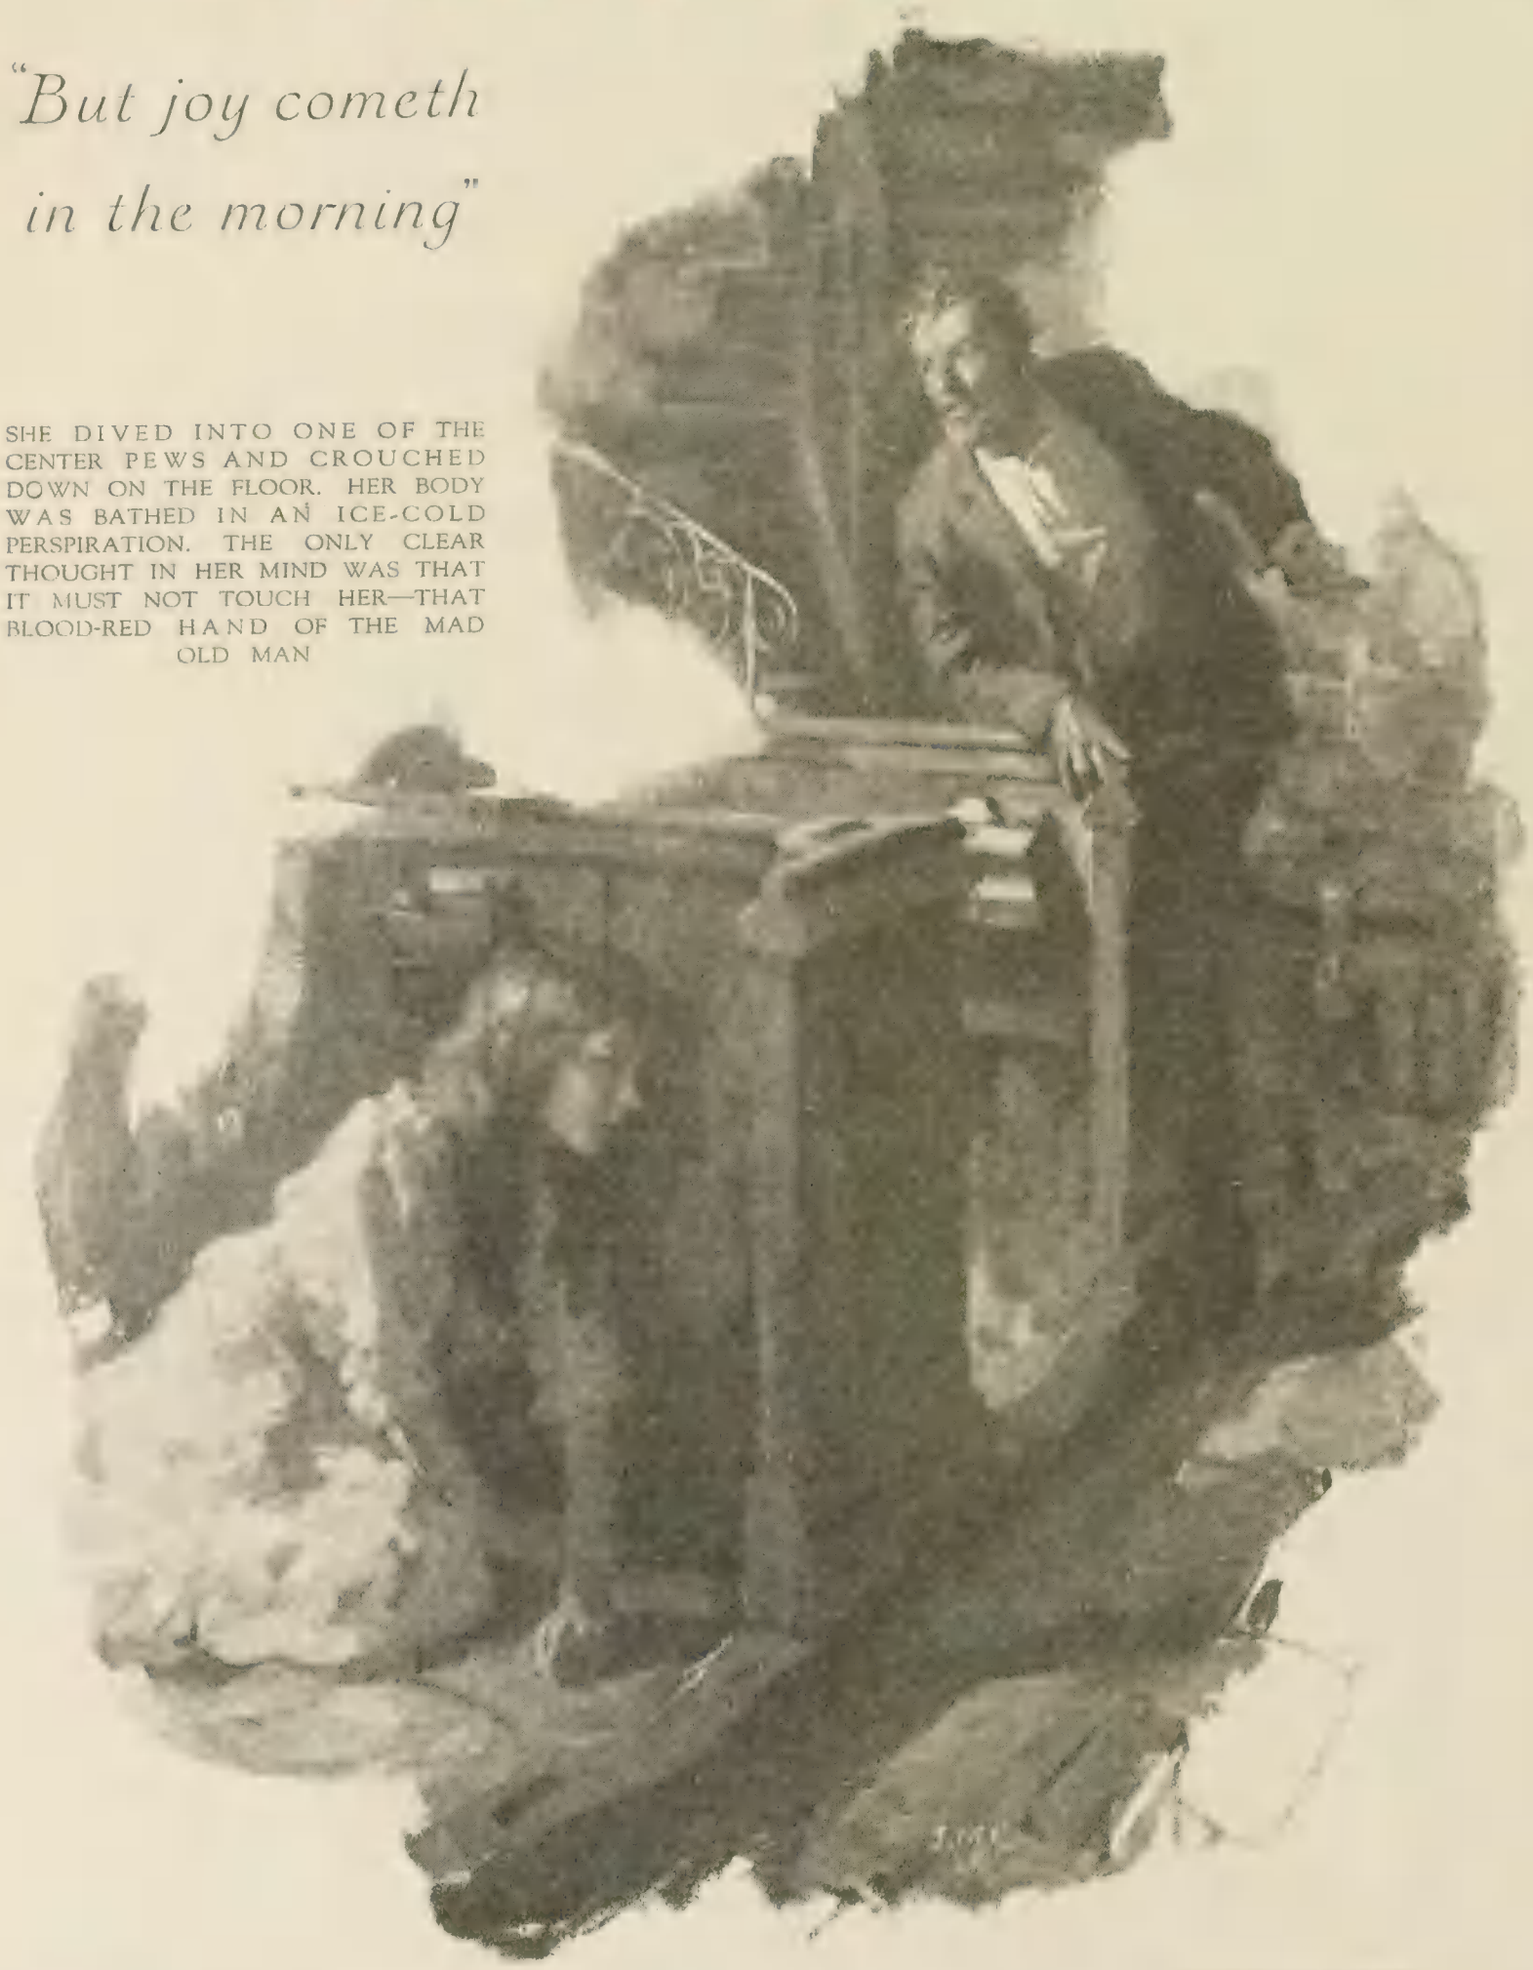
"I'm sorry, Connie."

The girl shook off Blake's sympathetic hand upon her shoulder. Her eyes blazed.

"Hmp! Sorry! As sorry as a film star registering emotion. Glycerine tears! A lot you care for justice. If you did, you wouldn't get excused from jury duty. I happen to know that you've been drawn for this session. Heaven knows we're in for it, till men like you realize their responsibility!"

Billy Weld flung his cigaret into a flower-bed and put his arm about her shoulders.

"Cool off, Con. We'll admit you've had a rotten deal, but don't take it out on Stan. Peter and I have dodged jury duty, too."



"Then you ought to be ashamed of yourselves. How can one expect justice if jurors are all of one type? Wouldn't a wage-earner kick good and plenty if only capitalists sat

Continued on page 92

NIGHT WATCH

Another Emily story: By L. M. MONTGOMERY

"But joy cometh in the morning"

SHE DIVED INTO ONE OF THE CENTER PEWS AND CROUCHED DOWN ON THE FLOOR. HER BODY WAS BATHED IN AN ICE-COLD PERSPIRATION. THE ONLY CLEAR THOUGHT IN HER MIND WAS THAT IT MUST NOT TOUCH HER—THAT BLOOD-RED HAND OF THE MAD OLD MAN

Drawing by Joseph M. Clement

SOME of us can recall the exact time in which we reached certain milestones on life's road: the wonderful hour when we passed from childhood to girlhood — the enchanted, beautiful (or perhaps the shattering and horrible) hour when girlhood was suddenly womanhood—the chilling hour when we faced the fact that youth was definitely behind us—the peaceful, sorrowful hour of the realization of old age. Emily Starr of New Moon Farm never forgot the night when she passed the first milestone and left childhood behind her forever.

Every experience enriches life, and the deeper such an experience the greater the richness it brings. That night of horror and mystery and strange delight ripened her mind and heart like the passage of years.

It was a night of July, after a day of intense heat. Aunt Elizabeth did not go to prayer-meeting; Aunt Laura and Cousin Jimmy and Emily went. Before leaving home Emily asked and obtained Aunt Elizabeth's permission to spend the night with her particular crony, Ilse Burnley. This was a rare treat. Aunt Elizabeth did not approve of all-night absences as a general thing. But Doctor Burnley had to be away and his housekeeper was temporarily laid up with a broken ankle. So Emily was to be permitted to go home with Ilse after the meeting. Ilse did not know this—hardly hoped for it, in fact—but was to be informed at prayer-meeting. If Ilse had not been late, Emily would have told her before the meeting; but Ilse, as usual, was late, and everything else followed in due course.

Emily carried her new Jimmy-book under her arm to prayer-meeting—one of the little blank books with which Cousin Jimmy kept her supplied for her literary scribblings. She intended to write in it a "description" of the church and audience before the service began. She sat by the window in the old Murray pew, near the top of the church. This meeting was not the ordinary weekly sprinkling of a faithful few, but a "special meeting" held in view of the approaching Communion Sunday, and the church was full. When Ilse finally arrived, she grinned at Emily from across the church. Teddy Kent was sitting in the gallery. Emily had her own reasons for speculating about Teddy Kent. Wasn't it just possible he might walk home from meeting to Ilse's with her? It had never happened yet, but there had to be a first time for everything.

"Elder Forsyth would have been a persecutor in old times," thought Emily. "He has the face of one. I think Mrs. Bowes flies on a broomstick o' nights. She looks it. Four hundred years ago she would have been a witch and Elder Forsyth would have burned her at the stake. She hates everybody. It must be terrible to hate everybody—to have your soul full of hatred. I wonder if hate has driven all the love out of her soul, or if there is a little bit left in it for anybody or anything. If there is, it may save her. I must jot that idea down in my Jimmy-book. What is Mr. Johnson reading? Oh, something about the wise virgins. I hate the wise virgins—I think they were horribly selfish. They might have given the poor foolish ones a little oil. I don't believe Jesus meant to praise them—I think he was just trying to warn foolish people that they mustn't be foolish and careless, because, if they were, prudent, selfish folks would never help them out. I wonder if it's very wicked to feel that I'd rather be outside with the foolish ones, trying to help and comfort them, than inside, feasting with the wise ones. I think it would be more interesting, too.

"I wonder what all these people would say if they were asked what they most wanted and had to answer truthfully. Katherine Morris wants her youth back—she hates us young girls because we are young. Old Malcolm Strang just wants to live one more year—always just one more year—just to live—just not to die. It must be horrible to have nothing to live for except to escape dying. Yet he believes in heaven—he thinks he will go there. If he could see my flash just once, he wouldn't hate the thought of dying so, poor old man. And Mary Strang wants to die—before something she is afraid of tortures her to death. They say it's cancer. Tom Sibley wants the moon, I think—and knows he can never get it—that's why people say he's not all there. I must write all these things in my Jimmy-book to-night. But now Mr. Johnson's beginning and a Murray must listen."

OUTSIDE, moonlight was still sifting silver through the firs and maples, though an ominous bank of cloud was piling up in the west and repeated rumblings of thunder came on the silent air of the hot Summer night—rumblings that had grown louder and more frequent by the time the meeting was over. The audience in the oppressive atmosphere of the crowded lamp-lit church gave an audible sigh of relief and hurried out to purer air. Emily, caught in the current and parted from Aunt Laura, was swept out by way of the choir door to the left of the pulpit. It was some time before she could disentangle herself from the throng and run around to the front where she expected to meet Ilse. Here was another dense crowd, though rapidly thinning. Suddenly Emily noticed that she did not have her Jimmy-book. Hastily she dashed back to the choir door. She must have left her Jimmy-book in the pew—and it would never do to leave it there. There was in it a biting description of scrawny Miss Potter in the choir—a couple of satiric sentences about Mrs. Alec Sawyer—and a few random fancies which she decided most of all to hide because there was in them something of dream and vision which would have made the reading of them by alien eyes a sacrilege.

Old Jacob Banks, the sexton, a little blind and more than a little deaf, was turning out the lamps as she went in. He had reached the two on the wall behind the pulpit. Emily's Jimmy-book was not in the Murray pew-rack. By the faint gleam of light as Jacob turned out the last lamp she saw it on the floor, under the seat of the pew in front. She knelt down and reached for it. As she did so Jacob went out and locked the choir door.

Emily scrambled up with her Jimmy-book and ran to the door, which would not open. Then she realized that Jacob Banks was gone and that she was alone in the church. She wasted time in trying to open the door—then in calling the deaf sexton. Finally she ran down the aisle into the front porch. As she did so she heard the last buggy turn on the gravel at the gate and drive away; at the same time the moon was suddenly swallowed up by the advancing thunderheads and the church was engulfed in utter darkness—close, hot, smothering, almost tangible. Emily screamed in sudden panic—beat on the door—frantically twisted the handle—screamed again.

"Night Watch," copyright, 1925, by L. M. Macdonald.

Oh, everybody could not have gone! Surely somebody would hear her!

A blue-white stream of lightning swept the porch, followed by a crash of thunder. One of the worst Summer storms in Blair Water annals had begun—and Emily Starr was locked alone in the dark church—she who had always been afraid of thunderstorms with a reasonless, instinctive fear, which she could never banish and only partially control.

She sank, quivering, on a step of the gallery stairs and huddled there in a heap. Surely some one would come back when it was discovered she was missing. But would it be discovered? Who would miss her? Aunt Laura and Cousin Jimmy would suppose she had gone with Ilse. Ilse would suppose she had gone home to New Moon. Nobody knew where she was—nobody would come back for her. She must stay here in this horrible, lonely, black, echoing place—for now the church she knew so well had become an alien spot full of haunting terrors. There was no escape. The windows could not be opened. The church was ventilated by narrow, transom-like panes near the top of them.

EMILY cowered down on the step, shuddering from head to foot. By now the thunder and lightning were almost incessant; rain blew against the windows, not in drops but sheets, and intermittent volleys of hail bombarded them. The wind had risen suddenly with the storm and shrieked around the church. But this wind was not her old dear friend of childhood, the bat-winged, misty Wind Woman. Here was a legion of yelling witches.

"The Prince of the Power of the Air rules the wind," she had heard Mad Mr. Morrison say once. Why should she think of Mad Mr. Morrison now—the old, demented man who roamed continually over the countryside seeking for the lost bride who had died a few weeks after their marriage. Generally he was mild and harmless, but he was subject to violent attacks. Emily had always been afraid of Mad Mr. Morrison—especially of his blood-red birthmarked hand. She had a horror of that hand.

How the windows rattled as if demon riders of the storm were shaking them! She had heard a wild tale of some one hearing the organ play in the empty church one night several years ago. Suppose it began playing now! No fancy seemed too grotesque or horrible to come true. Didn't the stairs creak? The blackness between the lightning flashes was so intense that it looked thick. Emily was frightened of it touching her and buried her face in her lap.

Presently, however, she got a grip on herself and began to reflect that she was not living up to Murray traditions.

Murrays were not supposed to go to pieces like this. Those old Murrays, sleeping in the private graveyard across the pond, would have scorned her as a weak descendant. Aunt Elizabeth would have said it was the Starr coming out in her. She must be brave. Nothing dreadful was going to happen to her—nothing worse than staying all night in the church. She had been here over an hour now and nothing had happened to her—unless, indeed, her hair had turned white, as she understood hair sometimes did. There had been such a funny, crinkly, crawly feeling at the roots of it at times. Emily held out her long braid, ready for the next flash. When it came, she saw that her hair was still black. She sighed with relief and began to chirk up. The storm was passing. The thunder peals were growing fainter and fewer, though the rain still fell and the wind whined through the big keyhole eerily. Emily straightened her shoulders and cautiously let down her feet to a lower step.

She thought she had better try to get back into the church. If another cloud came up, the steeple might be struck—steeples were always being struck, she remembered. It might come crashing down on the porch right over her.

ALL around her now was a soft, heavy darkness, still with that same gruesome sensation of something you could touch; born, perhaps, of the heat and humidity of the July night. The porch was so small and narrow—she would go and sit in the church—she would not feel so oppressed and smothered there.

She put out her hand to grasp a stair rail and pull herself to her cramped feet. Her hand touched—not the stair rail—merciful heaven, what was it?

Something—hairy—Emily's shriek of horror broke in a sob—padding footsteps passed down the steps beside her. A flash of lightning came, and at the bottom of the stairs was a huge black dog that had turned and was looking up at her before he was blotted out in the returning darkness. Even then for a moment she saw his eyes blazing redly at her like a fiend's.

Emily's hair-roots began to crawl and crinkle again—a very large, very cold caterpillar seemed to creep slowly up her spine. She could not move a muscle—she could not even cry out. The only thing she could think of at first was the horrible demon hound of the Manx castle in "Peveril of the Peak." For a few minutes her terror was so great that she thought she must faint. Then, with an effort that was unchildlike in its determination—I think it was at that moment Emily wholly ceased to be a child—she recovered her self-control. She would not yield to fear—she set her teeth and clenched her trembling hands. She would be brave—sensible. That was only a commonplace Blair Water dog which had followed its owner—some rapscallion boy—into the gallery and got itself left behind. Such a thing had happened before.

Emily decided she would stay where she was. She had recovered from her panic, but she did not want to feel the sudden touch of a cold nose or a hairy flank in the darkness. She would never be able to forget the awfulness of the moment when she had touched the creature.

It must be all of twelve o'clock now. The storm was dying away. The drive and shriek of the wind came occasionally, but between its gusts there was a silence, broken only by the diminishing raindrops. Thunder still muttered faintly and lightning came at frequent intervals, but of a paler, gentler flame. Gradually her heart began to beat normally and the power of rational thought returned. She did not like her predicament, but she began to find dramatic possibilities in it. What a chapter for her Jimmy-book—and, beyond it, for the novel she meant to write some day! It was a situation expressly shaped for the heroine—who must, of course, be rescued by the hero. Emily began constructing the scene—adding to it—intensifying it—hunting for words to express it. This was rather—interesting—after all. Only she wished she knew just where the dog was. How weirdly the pale lightning gleamed on the gravestones outside! How strange the familiar valley beyond looked in the recurrent illuminations! How the wind moaned and grieved—but it was her own Wind Woman again. The Wind Woman was one of her childish fancies that had persisted and it comforted her now with a sense of ancient companionship. The wild riders of the storm were gone—her fairy friend had come back to her. Emily gave a sigh that was almost of contentment — the worst was over—and, really, hadn't she behaved pretty well? She began to feel quite self-respecting again.

ALL at once Emily knew she was not alone!

How she knew it she could not have told. She had heard nothing—seen nothing—felt nothing; and yet she knew, beyond all doubt or dispute, that there was a presence in the darkness above her on the stairs.

She turned and looked up. It was horrible to look up, but it was less horrible to feel that—something—was in front of you than it was behind you. She stared with wildly dilated eyes into the darkness, but she could see nothing. Then she heard a low laugh above her—a laugh that almost made her heart stop beating—the very dreadful, inhuman laughter of those unsound in mind. She did not need the lightning flash to tell her that Mad Mr. Morrison was on the stairs above her. But it came—she saw him—she felt as if she were sinking in some icy gulf of coldness—she could not even scream.

The picture of him, etched on her brain by the lightning, never left. He was crouched five steps above her, with his gray head and incredibly wrinkled face thrust forward. She saw the frenzied gleam of his eyes—the fang-like, yellow teeth exposed in a horrible smile—the long, thin, blood-red hand outstretched toward her, almost touching her shoulder.

Sheer panic shattered Emily's trance. She bounded to her feet with a piercing scream of terror. She would die if that awful hand touched her. It must not touch her!

She sprang down the steps and rushed into the church. She must hide before the next flash came. She dived into one of the center pews and crouched down in its corner on the floor. Her body was bathed in an ice-cold perspiration. The only clear thought in her mind was that it must not touch her—that blood-red hand of the mad old man.

Moments passed that seemed years. Presently she heard footsteps—footsteps that came and went, yet

Continued on page 96

TEDDY WAS THINKING THAT EMILY STARR LOOKED VERY SWEET IN THE PALE MOONSHINE. HE TIGHTENED HIS ARM A LITTLE MORE—AND STILL MURRAY PRIDE MADE NOT A PARTICLE OF PROTEST

Annals of a haunted family

The BLACK FLEMINGS

By KATHLEEN NORRIS

Most powerful novel yet written by the author of "Mother," "Certain People of Importance," "Rose of the World," etc.

Drawings by Ernest Fuhr

"OH, DAVID—WASTEWATER AGAIN!" SHE SAID. "IF YOU KNEW—IF YOU KNEW HOW HUNGRY I'VE BEEN FOR THE OLD PLACE!"

PART SIX—CONCLUSION

IT WAS more than a long year later that David Fleming—driving the car that Sylvia had ordered with such happy confidence before that long-awaited twenty-first birthday—left Crowchester and followed the familiar road along the cliffs.

The Spring was early, and the sweetness of it was already in the air. The familiar dips and turns of the road were all like so many welcoming faces to David, and when he reached the boundaries of Wastewater he might almost have fancied for a moment that the old order of things had remained unchanged; that back of that barrier of great trees he might indeed find the grim, dark building, the shuttered windows, the dank, unhealthy shrubs and paths that had been the first home of his recollection.

The brick walls and the iron gate, more deeply bedded than ever in fallen leaves and mold, were unchanged, but the road between them, so many years unused, had been somewhat cut by wheels and had been churned into mud. The gate stood open, but David left his car outside, got out and turned his back to the land for a moment, standing staring out to sea, as he had done upon that Autumn day more than two years ago—that dreary, dark October day when Gabrielle had first come home.

He remembered, as his eyes idly followed the scrambling path down between the rocks and the bare mallow bushes to the shore, the muggy smells that had always assaulted his nostrils when the big side door of Wastewater had been opened. He remembered his aunt, rigid and stern, before the fire, her apprehensive, nervous eyes always moving behind him when he entered the room, and searching there for some menace always feared and never realized.

And then Gabrielle, in her velvet gown, with her big starry eyes. Gabrielle so young and so alone, met by such staggering blows and such bitter truths. Gabrielle, watching Sylvia's youth and happy fortune so wistfully, bearing her own sorrows and burdens with her own inimitable childish courage and dignity.

What a time—what a time! the man mused, his breast rising on a great sigh, as he shook his head slowly. Sylvia's majority, and then Tom's return, Aunt Flora's stupefying revelation as to Gay's parentage. And then the last scene—or almost the last—when he had gone upstairs to tell them (Gabrielle and Tom) that they were brother and sister, and the great wind and the fire had trapped them there.

So that had been the end of Wastewater, with these four young persons, all Flemings, flying for their lives through the night, and Aunt Flora, who had spent all her life there, killed by the falling of all her moral and material walls in one terrible crash. She had lain for almost twenty-four hours in John's dismantled house without pain of body and in a lulled state even of mind, but she had been dying none the less.

The last of her generation, that stormy and ill-governed generation whose passions and weaknesses had filled the whole house with tragedies for so many years, she had died very quietly—quite as if going to sleep—before the ashes of the old place had been cold. Sylvia, beautiful, twenty-one, her own life as truly in ruins and ashes about her, had been kneeling beside her mother at the end, the doctor standing gravely near, and David himself watching them all with that strange quality of responsibility that seemed to be his destiny where each and every one of them was concerned.

AFTERWARD Tom had taken the girls in to Boston, where Sylvia, ill from shock and sorrow, had been left in the care of Gabrielle and a nurse, while Tom and David came back to Wastewater for the funeral.

David, reaching this point, turned back and looked across the old garden, to find the glint of headstones far up the northwest corner of the estate, beyond the woods, and under a fountain of delicate blue-green willow-whips.

Much of the garden was left, he mused, and could be recovered. There were healthy-looking roses, and the splendid hedge of lilacs was already bursting from hard brown buds into white and lavender plumes. The conifers looked clean and fresh in their new tips; even the maples and elms were magnificent as ever.

Some day, David thought, there would be a home here again. But when, the young persons most concerned had not yet definitely stated. He sighed as he thought of them and their dreams, and smiled above the sigh.

A start had been made, at least. There was a handsome building already standing—a long, low barn of friendly warm clinkered brick, with the wide new doors of a garage at one end, and at the other, across an arch, a homely, comfortable cottage, of the type that faces a thousand English lanes.

An Airedale, whirling about the corner of the building with a wild flourish, leaped upon David in welcome and immediately curled himself rapturously in the short film of the grass, with all four feet in the air, writhing in puppy ecstasies.

"Here, here, Ben!" David said, laughing. "Grow up! It's ridiculous to see a dog of your age acting that way!"

But he was rubbing and tousling the rough head affectionately none the less, as he called: "Etta! John!"

In answer Etta, John's wife, appeared with an undisturbed smile. For the months of building last Fall and again this Spring, Mr. David had been living in his little Keyport farmhouse and might be expected here at almost any minute to inspect and approve. Etta herself had watched so much of the rebuilding with secret contempt. It seemed odd, when one could afford a nice square plastered house and a corrugated-iron barn, to waste twice as much money on what John considered "monkey shines." But Miss Gabrielle and Miss Sylvia and Mr. Tom had all been away for more than a year now, in California and Mexico and Panama, and now it was Central America, and dear knows what it'd be next, and consequently Mr. David and his friend Mr. Rucker had had it all their own way.

TO-DAY David gave Etta an opportunity for criticism when he said cheerfully, as she somewhat reluctantly accompanied him about the place:

"How's the house, Etta? Comfortable?"

"Oh, we're quite comfortable, thank you," Etta answered primly, in a faintly complaining tone, "and John's

"The Black Flemings," copyright, 1925, by Kathleen Norris

got the Eyetalians engaged to start the side garden anyway before the folks get back. But here's the thing that I'll never get through my head," Etta added, with the readiness of an already well-aired grievance, as she looked up at the wide archway and its casement windows above; "it don't seem sensible to have that arch, or gate, or whatever you call it, making the barn and the house into one. And while the men are right here, and before Miss Gabrielle gets home to look at the plans for a house—and dear knows when that will be now!—why, they could tear out that arch real easy, and smooth the brick up so that it'd never show——"

"Ah, they got the stable foundations started," David said in satisfaction, giving no attention to Etta's remarks. "That's fine, room for four cows, and about that many horses, and some day we'll put a chicken run on that end——"

"Do they say when they'll be coming back, sir?" Etta asked.

"Any time this Summer, I suppose," David said. "Mr. Tom is quite himself again—I've not had letters yet, but in a telegram a few days ago—I told you that?—there was some talk of Central America."

"Dear me!" said Etta, who always made this remark in any pause, "haven't there been changes?"

David did not answer. He looked at the mud-spattered and torn blue-print that was anchored from the coquettish spring breezes upon a plank with two brickbats, murmured to the contractor, suggested, approved.

It was easy for his thoughts to find Gabrielle at Wastewater, for they were almost all of her in these days, and it was here that she had spent her life except her schooling years. David had no recollection of her in any other setting. To-day, as always, she seemed to be beside him, walking through the strangely altered Spring garden, talking with him of the changes to be.

She had borne herself, he had thought—with his affectionate, quiet pride in her carrying as ever an undercurrent of pain—she had borne herself in the trying time of readjustment and changes better than them all. There was a native dignity, a fineness about her that made it possible for her apparently to forget herself entirely.

AS HE remembered her, in the few weeks that had intervened between her departure with Tom and Sylvia for the West, it was difficult to recall any special demonstration of her own feelings at all. Sylvia had been actually, if not seriously, ill, Tom had suffered a dangerous relapse after the strain and exposure of the night, but Gay had been just her usual self. David had had a thousand cares; first to establish them temporarily in a comfortable hotel, then to commence the endless business of placing Gabrielle in her rightful position, with all it involved in the matter of taxes, transfers, legal delays of every sort.

He had written to the far-away Hannah Rosecrans in Australia, and had had a prompt and satisfactory reply. She gladly and unsuspiciously supplied a hundred details; the Fleming baby's first nurse's name, at the big hospital, the name of a young doctor who had more than once come to see little Gabrielle in her first delicate weeks of life. Through these and Flora's other clues David established the matter legally beyond all doubt, and Tom simplified the question of property by being eager to reserve about only one-fifth of his father's estate for himself, giving his half-sister everything else. Wastewater, the jewels, this piece of property, that other, this stock, and those bonds, everything, in short, about which division might have presented the slightest difficulty Tom would have impatiently discarded in her favor. He was going to die anyway, he would remind them.

Beyond all this, David had Sylvia's legacy inheritance to handle. Flora had left a will, but it was superseded by an urgent note to her daughter, written at the time when Sylvia was supposed heiress to the whole Fleming fortune, begging her to make over her own money to Gabrielle.

Sylvia, hysterical and sensitive and unreasonable, had still persisted that this must be done; Gay—she protested in floods of shamed tears—had been wronged long enough!

It had been Gay, patient and serious in her new black, who had talked her into a healthier frame of mind. Gay had managed both invalids and the whole comfortable suite, and had joined David, to affix a signature or witness a deed, as quietly as if this earthquake had touched her personally not at all.

Most admirable, he thought, had been her attitude with Tom. From the strange, disorganized Winter day of Aunt Flora's death, Gay had been quite simply, affectionately and appreciatively Tom's little sister. Immediately and with a youthful and almost childish grace she had adopted big, clumsy, unpolished Tom. In three days, quite without awkwardness if with a sometimes slightly heightened color, he had heard her speak of "my brother" to doctors, nurses, waiters in the hotel.

She had carried Tom—he realized now—by storm, by the sheer force of her own extraordinary personality. If Tom had ever been in any doubt as to the fashion of recommencing their friendship along these wholly altered lines, Gabrielle had instantly dispelled it.

More, she had given Tom as a brother ten times the visible affection and confidence that she had been willing to give him in any other relationship. And Tom had proved quite unconsciously, by his pathetically eager and proud acceptance of this new state of affairs, that it was her companionship, her sympathy he had wanted. He had wanted to be a little needed, a little admired, to be of some consequence to David, to the admirable Sylvia, and lastly, to inconsiderable and neglected little Gabrielle.

Indeed, so consummately wise had been this child's—for David thought of her as scarcely more than a child—this child's handling of the situation that within a week of the change Tom's tone had actually taken on the half-proud, half-chiding note of an adoring elder brother. And David had seen in his eyes the pleased recognition of the fact that at least no one else was, or could be, Gabrielle's "family" but himself. How wise and dear she was.

Tom's condition appearing to be supremely unsatisfactory, there had immediately been talk of southern California, or Florida for the Winter. For Sylvia, who was strangely shaken, quiet and unlike herself even when physically well again, it seemed a wise solution, too. Gabrielle was of course to accompany her brother, and David must follow as soon as all their complicated affairs permitted.

SAYING good-by to the little black-clad group when he had escorted them as far as Chicago, David had returned somewhat sadly to his duties as doubly, trebly an executor, his canvases, and the lonely painting of the first snows. And after that the months had somehow slipped by in a very chain of delays and complications.

Had the three Flemings been in La Crescenta, high and dry above the ocean and the valleys of southern California, where they had at first quite established themselves, David might have joined them during the second Summer. But by this time Tom was entirely well again, perfectly able to live in the East, Winter and Summer, if

Continued on page 98

ANOTHER SILENCE SO EXQUISITELY PAINFUL, SO POIGNANTLY SWEET, THAT DAVID FELT HE MIGHT STAND SO FOREVER, WATCHING HER

Drawing by J. Scott Williams

"Nine Rahs" for the Mothers"

By
FIELDING H. YOST
Director of Intercollegiate Athletics, University of Michigan

WHEN a college football team wins a big game, the players, the coaches and the institution come in for a large share of the credit. And they deserve a share, for all three are necessary to success. But there is another element involved in athletic triumphs and one that, I imagine, the average spectator seldom remembers. To my mind, the mothers of the players ought to be accorded a very considerable portion of the glory.

In my thirty years of athletic work I have always maintained that every boy's most valuable "coach" is his mother. Her influence and her training have more to do with his success or failure as an athlete than any other element. She has a larger part in shaping his character and his attainments than any one else can possibly have. The supervision that a mother has over her boy's food, exercise and habits either lays the foundation for his success in sport, as well as in the more serious things of life, or else paves his way to certain failure.

The next time you see a college game, bear in mind that the beginning of victory came long before the coaches ever saw the players and before the players had any idea that they would some day be gridiron heroes. The real start toward success came in the cradle itself and the assurance of success was built up every day that the boy remained within the sphere of his mother's influence. I would some day like to hear the cheer leaders call for "nine rahs" for the mothers.

SO FAR as athletic ability is concerned, heredity and environment both play a part. The athlete must first of all have a fine, sound body, which is originally a product of heredity. But he must develop that body along proper lines; and development is a product of environment. It is not sufficient for a mother to bring a healthy child into the world; she must exercise the utmost care so that sane living and proper training may bring out all his inherent strength. Even a child born without a strong constitution can be made a healthy man or woman by the right kind of care.

The career of Theodore Roosevelt should be an encouragement to those who are not naturally endowed with strength and fine health. Colonel Roosevelt was inclined to be frail as a child, but his indomitable spirit refused to accept the fate that nature seemed to have in store for him. Instead, he set out to make a strong man of himself by careful diet and conscientious exercise. And he succeeded. He became a fine athlete and a man of such rugged health that he could do an almost unbelievable amount of the hardest kind of mental work.

Colonel Roosevelt, they say, was preparing himself to be President of the United States as early as his first year at Harvard. He was the kind of man who believed in leaving as little as possible to chance, in fitting himself for any job. His parents encouraged him in his work and spurred him on when it became irksome. His life was a splendid example of what an intelligently directed childhood and youth will do in shaping a man's career.

There are three things for which the mother must assume responsibility in the rearing of her children: food, exercise and the cultivation of good habits. They are of equal importance in rounding out a man or woman qualified to become a useful member of society. Health without character is of small value, and character without health gives one very little chance to assert one's virtues.

In spite of the fact that America is the most prosperous, the best-fed, the best housed and the best-educated country in the world, we learned at the time of the Great War that one of every three men eligible for the draft was not qualified physically for military service. True, the standard set was a high one, but the fact remains that a large percentage of those called were unfit to pass any physical test. The statistics gave a shock to our pride; but America took up the challenge. Training schools for physical education have multiplied and playgrounds are being constructed at a gratifying rate.

But long before the schools and the playgrounds come in contact with the child the mother must do her part. It is for her to determine whether, when another great national emergency arises, we shall have such a deplorable percentage of physically unfit young men.

While no figures are available, it is probable that the percentage of physically deficient young women is just as large, or perhaps even larger. Whether the former custom of ignoring physical training among girls did more harm than the tendency to dissipation among boys would be a hard question to answer.

Ninety per cent. of the physical disqualifications that were brought to light by our entrance into the war could have been remedied before the boys were five years of age. This is a harsh indictment against parents, but it is a necessary one, for it shows that the physical well-being of the race is squarely up to the mothers and fathers.

Educators now believe that the morals and the mental ability of the child are largely built upon what he is physically, and that if we increase his physical efficiency we take a step in the direction of bettering the other two qualities. It is beyond cavil that a large percentage of juvenile delinquency can be traced directly to such facts as malnutrition, imperfections of the organs, lack of well-directed play and the failure to cultivate good habits and shun bad ones in early childhood. Physical training would vindicate itself if it developed only the body, but we know that it has a very large part in developing the soul as well.

The food, exercise and habits of a child under six years of age are largely controlled by the mother. She will find it easy to lay out an intelligent program for the child to follow, but she will find it hard, or impossible, to correct the wrongs that may arise later from her failure to do this. The diet is most important: for food keeps the bodily engine running. If it is insufficient in any of the necessary elements, the sure result is poor health; and poor health means, all too often, poor character.

I am indebted to the book "How to Live," written by Irving Fisher and Dr. Eugene Lyman Fisk in collaboration with the Hygiene Reference Board of the Life Extension Institute, for what I believe is the best analysis of food that I have ever seen. The following tables are taken from this excellent book.

The body needs three kinds of food: fuel to keep it running; building and repair food to keep worn-out parts constantly replaced; and regulating food.

Fuel foods generating energy are principally:

1—STARCHY FOOD

Corn-meal	Rice	Macaroni
Oatmeal	Flour	Bananas
Corn-starch	Potatoes	Dried lima beans
Split peas	Hominy	Dried navy beans
Bread

2—SUGAR

Straight sugar	Dates	Molasses
Corn-syrup	Candy	Most fruits

3—FATS

Butter substitutes	Lard	Butter
Peanut butter	Milk	Drippings
Salt pork	Cream	Bacon

The building and repair foods are represented by:

1—PROTEINS

Beans (dried)	Eggs	Halibut
Dried peas	Milk	Cheese
Corn-meal	Bread	Oatmeal
Macaroni	Peanuts	Almonds
Beef (lean)	Lamb	Mutton

2—MINERAL SALTS

Cereals from whole grains	Milk	Egg-yolks
	Fruits	Green vegetables

Regulating foods keep the body machinery running properly and consist of:

Mineral salts	Vegetable fiber	Crackers
Water		Toast
Ballast or bulk	Skins of plants, etc.	Zwieback
Hard foods		Vitamins

This is in no sense intended to be a complete list of foods, but a general grouping of the various kinds of foods. Not all the things given are suitable for all children. The mother should not assume the responsibility of prescribing the diet for her children, but should get professional advice on this subject. I am trying to point out the fact that proper feeding in general is of supreme importance, and not to recommend any specific diet for any one.

Continued on page 97

WHO WINS THE GAME?
The Team?
The Coach?
The College?
"No,"
says Fielding H. Yost,
"THE MOTHERS!"

Tourists Accommodated

By VERA L. CONNOLLY

You've seen the signs—"Tourists Accommodated" and "Lodging for Motorists" along country highways. Have you ever wondered what these roadside hostelries had to offer? Have you ever thought of trying one out? Vera Connolly tells you a few things you ought to know about them—if you would "pick a good one" and not be "stung"

THERE is a new Spring fever in our land! A very friendly malady, profitable for all! It buys new homes. It lifts old mortgages. It sends sons to college. It repaints shabby country houses. At its touch, tangled flower gardens bud and blossom as the rose. It has even been known to buy a new suit for father, a trousseau for sister, to straighten mother's bent shoulders, and to start a little song a-singing in her heart.

With the earliest blades of Spring grass it makes its appearance. And though, for a few days, only rare evidences of it are to be found here and there, soon all its myriad banners are aloft, swinging gaily in the breeze. "Lodging for Tourists" these little boards announce; or "Tourists Accommodated"; or "Motorists Welcome." While before the larger country houses, where business is on a bigger scale, picturesque signs on iron chains lure the motorist to "Hiawatha Lodge," "Priscilla Tavern," or "Merrie Englande Inn."

Once again the motoring season has opened! Once again half the world is on four wheels! And the other half is enthusiastically pursuing the new industry thus created for it—the business of accommodating motorists.

Every year more country houses, little and big, awaken from their long sleep. Windows are thrown open. Dust and must fly out, fresh air streams in. Faded, patched old carpets are ripped up. Varnish is spread on the floors and fresh rag rugs are laid down. If the furniture is old and quaint, it is retained. If ugly, it is painted. New bedding is bought, fresh curtains are hung up, an attractive sign is swung before the door. And the house is ready to do business!

With preparations thus simple, this work can be begun by the home woman with no great facilities at her command. Whereas the woman with a larger house, some money to invest, and the gift of enterprise may enter the business in a bigger way. The industry presents endless possibilities. Success rests with the woman herself.

Roughly speaking, there are to-day four kinds of roadside hospitality being offered along our highways: First, dinners costing from one dollar to two dollars and fifty cents a plate; second, a night's lodging for two persons in a cottage bedroom costing from one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars a night; third, a night's lodging in a handsomely furnished bedroom in a large country home, with dinner and breakfast, for two persons, costing from eleven dollars to twelve dollars a night for both; and, fourth, a night's lodging for two persons in a de luxe bedroom furnished in antiques, in a smart, picturesque "inn," with breakfast and a box lunch, costing from thirteen dollars to twenty dollars a night.

ALL OVER THE COUNTRYSIDE BETTER AND MORE ATTRACTIVE INNS ARE SPRINGING UP

In each of these branches of the industry are to be found successful women. But the first kind of work, that of providing roadside dinners, is becoming less and less popular. For on one thing all roadside hostesses are agreed—that "sleeping" the public is vastly simpler and more profitable than "eating" it.

THERE is only one way to serve roadside dinners profitably to "drop-ins," and that is by raising the food on one's own farm, letting most of it run around on its legs or grow on its stalks until needed.

On a back-country motor road in one of our Eastern States a small business of this sort is being carried on successfully. In Summer the tables are placed on the glassed-in veranda running across the front of the house; in Winter they are indoors. The business is run by a man, his wife and his daughter. He raises all the chickens—the chicken dinner is still preferred in that rather old-fashioned section—and raises most of the vegetables, with the help of an old neighbor. His wife does the cooking and makes all the bread, pie, jellies and pickles. The daughter receives the guests, takes their orders and serves them. Her father keeps the books, does the cleaning and painting and attends to the advertising. Recently he has had a large sign-board placed at a cross-roads a mile away; and this has proved a splendid business-getter.

They serve a one-course dinner, consisting of half a broiler for each guest, a large helping of hashed browned potatoes, ample helpings of two other vegetables, a lettuce or slaw salad, home-made jelly and pickle, and plenty of home-made bread and country butter. One cup of tea or coffee is included. For this dinner a dollar is charged. If the guest wants dessert, he can have a wedge of luscious home-made pie for twenty-five cents. These pies sell for a dollar each and frequently they are bought and taken along. Cheese sandwiches at twenty cents each and large chicken sandwiches at thirty-five cents are made to order. A motorist may have only coffee, sandwiches and pie if he prefers.

THESE people are making money. And they attribute this to their policy of offering a good dollar dinner without dessert, as many persons while traveling avoid rich desserts, only eating a little fruit. The meal is served from noon till nine at night.

Frequently, when a tea-room business alone seems perilous, a craft shop or circulating library or a "roadside rest-room" can be added to it. One such popular plan to-day is to convert the hall and front parlors of an old home into a big lounge with conveniences where motorists can rest, wash up, write a note, have a cup of tea and a sandwich, telephone, brush their hair, powder their noses, take a brief nap, read a late magazine, or have a family discussion about a change of route—and do it all in home-like, comfortable surroundings. Twenty-five cents a person should be charged for the privileges of the lounge and fifty cents for tea and a sandwich. Besides home-made candy and cake, package lunches, needlework, magazines and newspapers may be sold.

There must always be some one in the tea-room and an attendant in the lounge. But if these helpers are members of the family, the business can be run very profitably. The service is an innovation and is much appreciated, especially on a long stretch of road without hotels.

The second type of roadside hospitality on our list—that of converting one's spare bedrooms into lodgings for the night—offers most women the simplest, safest start. And many a timid home-maker who began with only the two spare bedrooms in her small house has gradually built up from this a large business culminating in a famous inn.

So much depends on the spirit with which the woman sets out!

It is a pity that all women entering this work do not keep continually in mind the inflexible rule that honesty is the only policy which builds for permanent success. Any one can flag the tired and hungry tourist and trap him once. But if he goes away dissatisfied with his accommodations, feeling that no interest was taken in his comfort, but that he was cold-bloodedly regarded as a "fee," he will never come again. In close proximity to all of our famous historical resorts a few dozen unprincipled lodging-house keepers are to be found.

These people offer small, dirty, dark, unsanitary bedrooms at the same rates charged by clean, up-to-date hotels. Sometimes the village loafers who represent these houses will go a mile or two up the road to tea-rooms and filling-stations and solicit trade, telling the tourists alarming stories about the rates at the hotels. The worldly traveler will pay no attention, but the vacationing man and family will listen. Thus, every year, thousands of tourists are being imposed upon. The trick is always discovered the next day. And so angry are these tourists and so widespread is the vicious practise that the traveling public is certain to clamor

Concluded on page 104

RAG CARPETS AND GRANDFATHER CLOCKS HAVE NEVER LOST THEIR CHARM AS TYPICAL AMERICAN FURNISHINGS FOR HALLS AND STAIRWAYS

GUESTS OF THIS COMFORTABLE INN ARE INVITED TO BROWSE AMONG THE BOOKS AND MAKE THEMSELVES AT HOME BESIDE THE FIRE

COUNTRY AIR, SPOTLESS NAPERY AND PLEASANT SURROUNDINGS MAKE KEEN APPETITES TO WHICH A PROFESSIONAL HOSTESS LIKES TO CATER

Watch Out for Measles

"The world is mine!"

A slight illness that may easily become serious

By
Dr. MATTHIAS NICOLL, Jr.
New York State Commissioner of Health

THE HAPPY CHILD DEPARTMENT

Directed by

DR. HENRY L. K. SHAW

Recently President of the American Child Hygiene Association; Consultant of the Division of Maternity, Infancy and Child Hygiene in the New York State Department of Health

MEASLES has always been confused with other diseases. Once it was thought to be a mild form of smallpox. Occasionally it has been confused with scarlet fever, which it sometimes resembles. Even today, it is not unusual for persons to think that true measles and German measles are in some way related, as the two diseases not infrequently resemble one another, especially as regards the skin eruption.

Measles is found throughout the world, the number of cases varying greatly from year to year and even from season to season. It is frequently stated that the disease runs in two- and three-year waves. Such waves, however, show great variation in the frequency of their appearance and in the number of cases. From the parts of the United States where accurate death statistics are obtainable, there were recorded over 6,000 deaths from measles. Since this area includes by no means all of the United States, it may be conservatively estimated that not less than 10,000 deaths occur annually from this cause. The disease prevails most extensively in the late Winter and early Spring. The late Summer and early Fall months are as a rule comparatively free from it.

Measles and smallpox hold the distinction of being the two most infectious diseases known to man. Except in the first few months of life, when there is a decided immunity inherited from the parents, no age is immune to it. It is commonly regarded as a children's disease, for the simple reason that most adults have contracted it in childhood and therefore have acquired an immunity which lasts during later life. While second and even third attacks of measles have been reported, most of such cases are probably based on errors in diagnosis, and though it can not be denied that second attacks do occur, one attack of true measles affords protection for the remainder of the person's life in the vast majority of cases.

WHY IS IT DANGEROUS?

MEASLES is frequently regarded as a necessary and unavoidable evil and one not to be taken too seriously. The reason for this unfortunate and wrong opinion is not difficult to understand. An attack of measles in a previously healthy individual, other than a very young child, living in sanitary home conditions and receiving good medical and nursing care, is rarely more serious than a sharp attack of fever. It is accompanied by an annoying and persistent cough, the eyes become watery and are sensitive to light, but the illness only lasts a few days.

How different the picture when measles attacks the young and delicate, when it attacks institutions for young children, military camps and isolated countries in which the disease has not occurred for many years! Under such conditions it is indeed to be dreaded and may become a real scourge. It rarely, if ever, kills solely through its own poison, but it readily lowers the resistance of the human body to other disease organisms, and an acute inflammation of the air passages invites the occurrence of that commonest and most dreaded complication, broncho-pneumonia, the usual cause of death in fatal cases. Thus the death rate may vary from practically nothing in a selected group of cases to thirty-five per cent. or more under the conditions above described. Measles has at different times attacked almost all the people on the Faroe, the Sandwich and the Fiji Islands. In such cases from one-fifth to one-half the population have died from the disease.

In the World War measles was the scourge of some of our army camps, especially those recruited from country districts where the men had not been previously exposed and had therefore escaped a previous attack. Many of our soldiers died from this cause, having contracted broncho-pneumonia and a very severe type of throat infection not commonly observed in civil life under peace-time conditions.

When measles invades an institution of young children the death rate runs from twelve to thirty-five per cent. or even higher. If diphtheria and scarlet fever are also present the combination is a most serious one.

WHAT SPREADS IT?

ALTHOUGH a great deal of work has been done to discover the cause of measles, the germ is not yet definitely known. We do know, however, that the infection is passed from one person to another by means of the infectious discharges from the nose and mouth and possibly from the eyelids. Such discharges are brought into contact with the mucous membranes of the nose, throat and eyes of persons capable of taking the disease, usually in the form of spray expelled by the act of sneezing or coughing. It is said that the "striking distance" of measles does not extend beyond a few feet, and that the spray does not reach outside of this or else is no longer capable of causing the disease. Thus by very careful supervision it is possible for persons with this highly infectious disease to be kept in wards with susceptible patients, provided a great degree of nursing skill is exercised.

It is doubtful if the disease is ever carried from the sick to the well by a third person, except possibly by means of the hands, towels, handkerchiefs, which, having been infected by discharges from the patients, are immediately brought into contact with the nose and eyes of a susceptible person. That this method of transfer must be very unusual is self-evident.

As a result of laboratory experiments on animals and observations by physicians, it has been definitely determined that the infectious period of measles is a good deal shorter than has previously been supposed. The disease is most infectious during the whole period of catarrhal or cold symptoms preceding the skin eruption or "breaking out" and, usually, for two or three days and during the height of the skin eruption. When the temperature begins to fall, although the eruption on the skin may be very evident for a number of days, the patient can no longer give the disease to others. In general a shortened quarantine period has been adopted by state and municipal health departments. It may be added that the scales which are seen on the skin following the eruption can not give the disease to others.

The incubation period of measles, that is the time required after exposure to a case of the disease for another person to develop it, is in the vast majority of cases ten days, very rarely shorter and still more rarely two weeks or longer. A person not immune to measles who has been exposed to it may safely go among other persons for the following week without being a source of danger. Beyond this period he or she should not mingle with others, especially children, for another week at least or until it has been established that the disease will not occur. This is especially important among school children, who can continue their schooling for a number of days after a known exposure to measles.

HOW CAN IT BE RECOGNIZED?

IT IS very unfortunate that measles, like whooping-cough, can not be recognized during its early stages even by the most skilful physician. Certain minute spots about the gums and inner surface of the lips, known as Koplik's spots, will frequently enable a physician or an experienced nurse to recognize the beginning of the disease. If, therefore, a child or adult who has not had measles is definitely known to have been exposed to it, as already stated, he should be kept by himself after the seventh or eighth day for a period of two weeks, in order to protect those in the household and outside of it with whom he might come in contact. Furthermore, during the presence of a measles epidemic the sudden development of a feverish cold in the head should suggest the possibility of measles and the patient should be kept by himself. In other words, from the very nature of the disease, little can be done to prevent the spread of measles in a family or community simply by quarantining a fully developed case of the disease. By the time the patient has developed it, every person with whom he has come in contact will have been exposed during a period of two or three days. Such persons should be kept by themselves for the length of time indicated above, during which the disease may develop.

There is no "good" time to have measles. It is a serious disease; yet as most of us are likely to come down with it at some time or other, it is well to understand that certain seasons and ages are more favorable than others. Most of the deaths from measles occur in those under three years of age, though death through complications is by no means rare in later life. It is not usually appreciated that the loss of life from this cause among persons over twenty years of age equals that for children of three years.

The least dangerous season in which to have measles is late Summer and early Fall before the seasonal appearance of coughs and colds, which so readily become forerunners of pneumonia, especially when coming after a disease like measles.

HOW SHOULD IT BE TREATED?

A METHOD has been discovered recently by which a person may be prevented from catching measles through the use of a serum prepared from the blood of a patient who is getting well from the disease. It has been successfully employed in certain large cities, especially in cutting short outbreaks of measles in children's institutions, and to a lesser extent in private practise in protecting the members of an exposed household.

This method of prevention of measles is simple, safe and without disagreeable after-effects. It should be made use of in children under three years of age, especially when exposed to the disease during unfavorable seasons of the year, in undernourished children at any age, in adults and children known or suspected to have tuberculosis infection even in an inactive state, and in all institutions for young children immediately upon

Concluded on page 84

THE QUARANTINE SIGN

Every mother is seized with panic when she sees a quarantine sign on the house next door. Suppose her children should catch the disease—what should she do—what are the real dangers?

Warnings of epidemics, the symptoms and treatment of various common illnesses of boys and girls, from tiny babies to children of school age, are part of the service offered to mothers by THE DELINEATOR'S Happy Child Clubs.

There are four of them. One club for expectant mothers. A second for mothers of tiny babies. A third for mothers of two-to-six-year-old "runabouts." And the fourth for mothers of school children.

Membership in each club is only fifty cents a year—or a dollar for all four—and in return the mother receives monthly letters of health information from Doctor Henry L. K. Shaw, the eminent child specialist. Four clubs—four different letters.

Let us know which you wish to join. And mail your membership dues to "The Happy Child Clubs," THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

on the front!

Now she sets her spinnerets to work again to build a home.

"Spinnerets" are little movable fingers on Miss Spider's stomach, with holes in the ends, like sprinkling holes in a watering-can. From small sacs inside her back she squeezes out a watery stuff. When it touches the air, the stuff hardens into silken thread, and quick as lightning, Miss Spider pulls it through the fine comb on the end of her hind leg. When she needs a different kind of thread, she squeezes a different inside sac, but how she knows which is which nobody understands.

So, through her spinnerets, Miss Spider sent smoky threads floating. They caught on twigs of the rose-bush and made a silken scaffold.

Over these invisible bridges our tightrope-walker tripped, back down and stomach up. For safety, she spun a stronger cord behind as she went. She wove spokes, like a wheel, fastening left-over threads into a soft white cushion in the center. Around the cushion she wove her private resting floor.

Now, to the spokes, she fastened silken circles. Then she spun a new thread, twisted double and stretched it over the first wheels, and—pouf! out popped tiny sticky drops. This was her spider glue, guaranteed to catch all visitors. Everybody sticks on it but Miss Spider herself.

Now, our housekeeper took her place proudly in the center of her web.

She was a grown-up spider-lady with a home of her own. Watch for her outdoors this Spring.

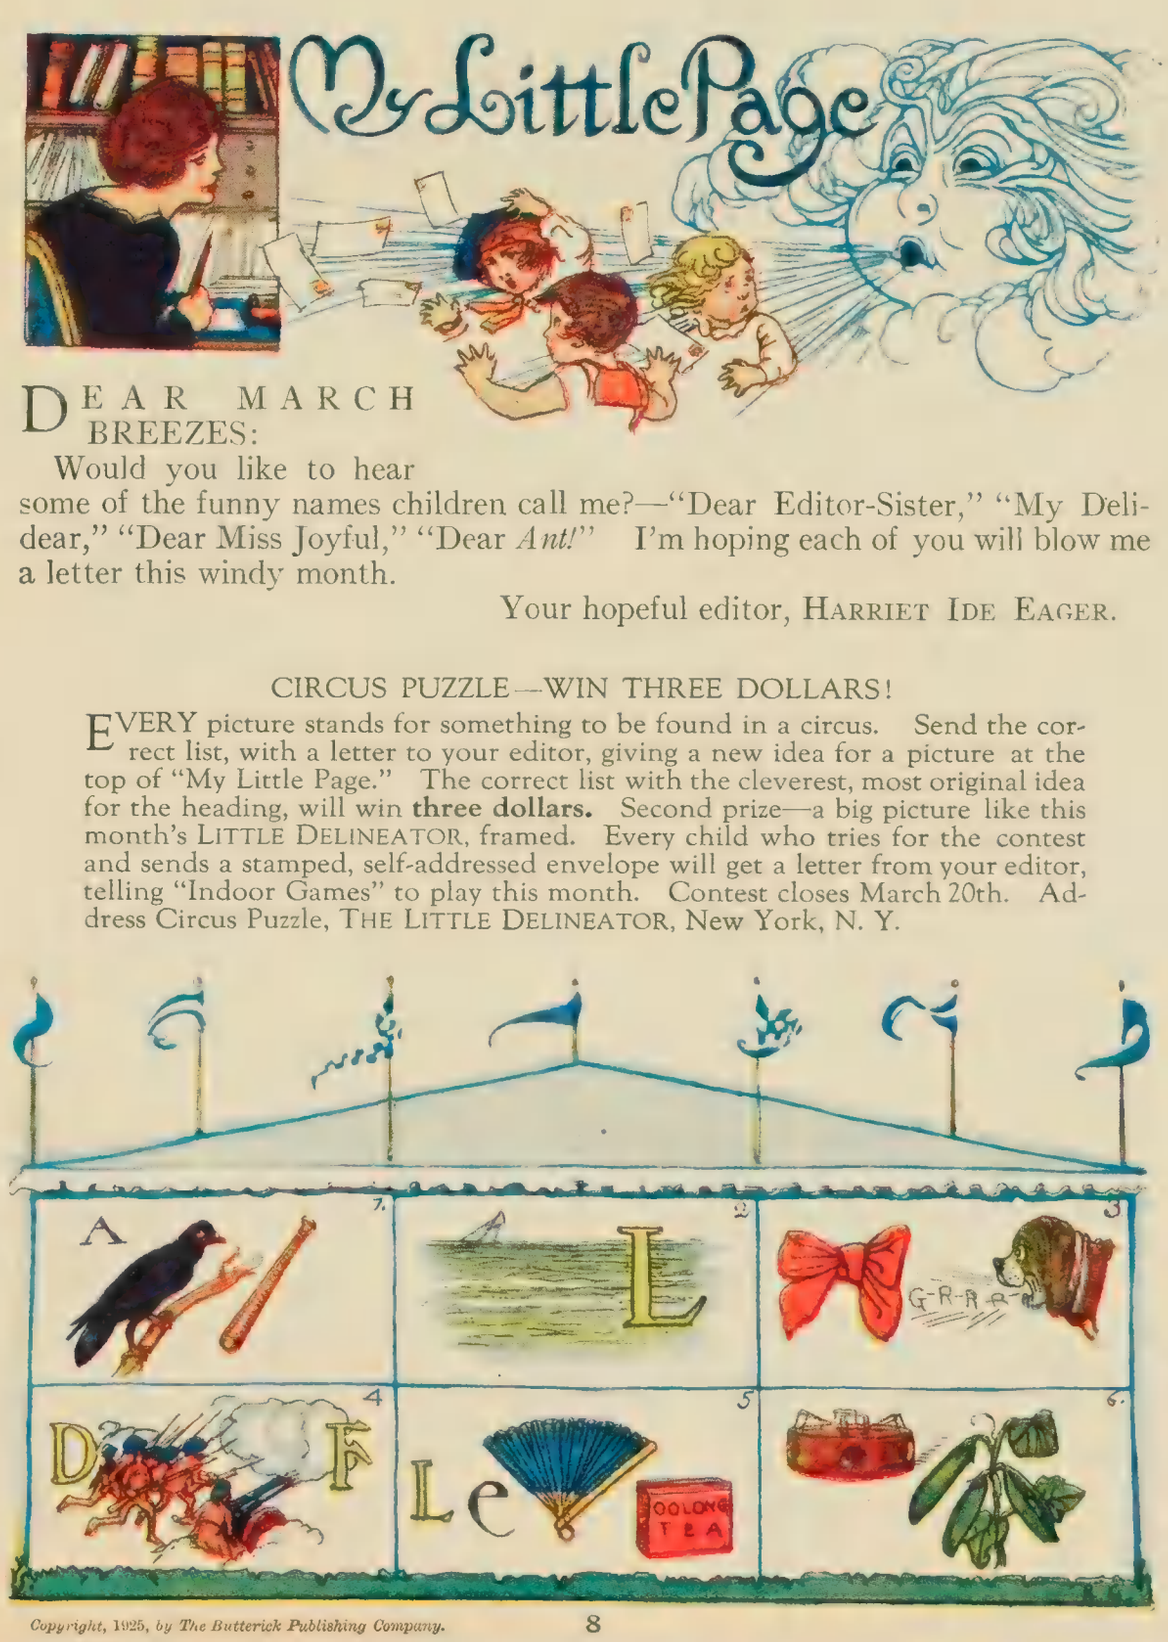
If your school wants to give a little Tommy Tiptoe insect opera, "Ladybug, Ladybug," written by your editor, write to THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, New York, N. Y.

THE HOUSE LIKE A WHEEL

AND she was simply bursting out of her old yellow dress.

But Miss Spider's eight eyes didn't pore over spider fashion magazines. She simply waited until her tight dress split, then, she wriggled out and presto! there she stood in an up-to-date spider skin with stripes on the front!

Now she sets



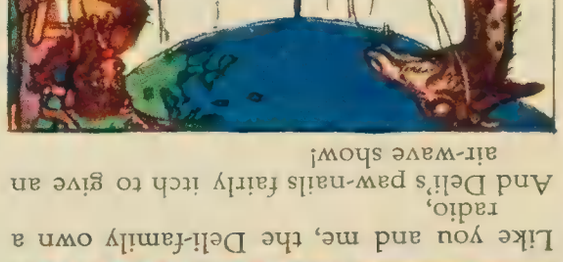
DEAR MARCH BREEZES:

Would you like to hear some of the funny names children call me?—"Dear Editor-Sister," "My Deli-dear," "Dear Miss Joyful," "Dear Ant!" I'm hoping each of you will blow me a letter this windy month.

Your hopeful editor, HARRIET IDE EAGER.

CIRCUS PUZZLE—WIN THREE DOLLARS!

EVERY picture stands for something to be found in a circus. Send the correct list, with a letter to your editor, giving a new idea for a picture at the top of "My Little Page." The correct list with the cleverest, most original idea for the heading, will win three dollars. Second prize—a big picture like this month's LITTLE DELINEATOR, framed. Every child who tries for the contest and sends a stamped, self-addressed envelope will get a letter from your editor, telling "Indoor Games" to play this month. Contest closes March 20th. Address Circus Puzzle, THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, New York, N. Y.

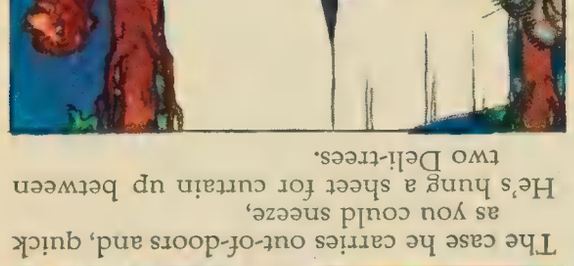


Copyright, 1925, by The Butterick Publishing Company.

DELI-BEAR'S FOREST RADIO

Like you and me, the Deli-family own a radio,
And Deli's paw-nails fairly itch to give an air-wave show!

The case he carries out-of-doors and, quick as you could sneeze,
He's hung a sheet for curtain up between two Deli-trees.



See where he ties his aerial! And hear that rascal laugh!
"I know what you are good for now, old rubber-necked Giraffe!"

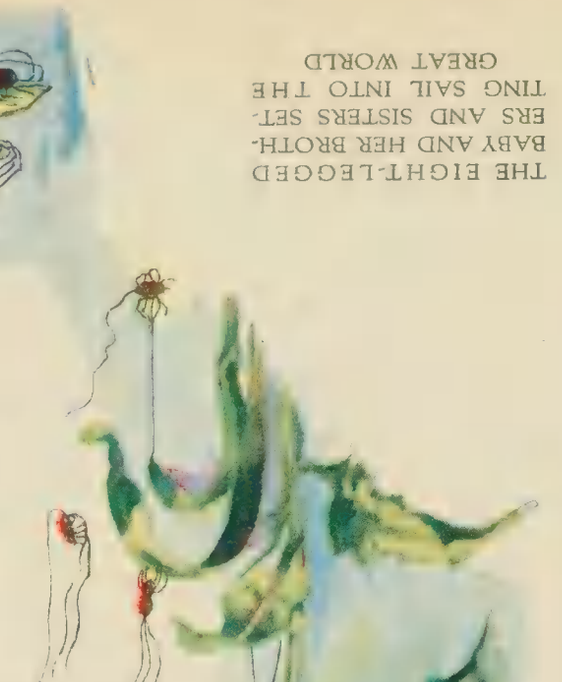
"Begin! Begin!" the Leopard ferce and all the beasties shout.
Poor Deli-bear! Something is wrong, for not a sound comes out!

While froggies croak, the showman stands behind the sheet alone,
With trembling paws, he turns the horn into a megaphone.

"Just like real frogs! Just like real birds!
How wonderful!" all shout,
And never guess what forest friends have helped our Deli out!

THE LITTLE DELINEATOR

MARCH 1925



EDITOR—HARRIET IDE EAGER

PICTURE EDITOR—ROBERT GRAEF

A BIG PICTURE LIKE THIS PRETTY COVER, FRAMED, IS SECOND PRIZE IN THE CIRCUS PUZZLE ON "MY LITTLE PAGE"

THE EIGHT-LEGGED BABY

ONCE upon a time, in a garden all sweet and sleepy with sunshine, a baby was born.

She was a queer baby, tinier than a bread-crum, and she had eight eyes and eight legs and a little baby body covered tightly all over, even her mouth, with pale yellow skin.

She hung in a white cradle between high green weeds, and with her slept four hundred and ninety-nine little yellow brothers and sisters. It was close quarters, with all those eight-times-five-hundred-makes-four-thousand baby legs, but no princess ever lay on a softer satin bed. Their mother made it herself, by hand—or perhaps we should say, by foot. For she came of a famous old family of eight-legged weavers, born with magic spinners inside their bodies.

So, while October was nipping leaves into reds and golds, this small, smart mother had found a clump of weeds and set her inside spinner to work. From her stomach she pulled long silken threads and tied them from weed to weed. Then, holding the silk carefully in one of her eight legs, she moved in and out and criss and cross and up and down on the threads until she had woven a hanging-bag of white satin.

Now she stopped long enough to lay five hundred tiny orange-colored eggs, like fairy beads. Over the bag she wove a padded white lid and sealed it tight. Then, from her inside spinner she pulled a thicker reddish-brown silk. Round and about she wrapped this warm eider-down, beating it into fluff with her legs. Presto! the silk changed to white again, and she wove an outside white wrapper, with zig-zags of darker silk and a scalloped top. The cradle was done!

There it hung like a fairy balloon upside down between tall weeds.

Winter came to the garden and wind and snow and bitter nights: the old mother died, but safe inside satin and eider-down slept her five hundred babies.

Spring came to the garden. The babies began to stir. One by one they hatched from their orange eggs and dived into the eider-down. As they waited, they grew larger and harder: their skins felt tight, and cracked, and there was each baby with a brand-new skin!

Summer came to the garden. Down poured the sun hotter and hotter until puff! the white cradle burst and out spilled brown eider-down and sprawling yellow babies.

THE FLOATING BABY-CARRIAGE

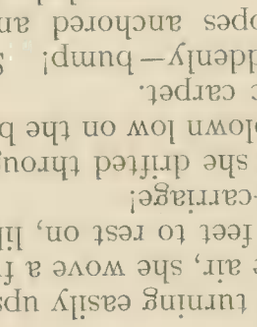
YOU might think a brand-new baby would be frightened in the bright, strange world, alone. But not our yellow youngster. Shoving her little brothers and sisters rudely aside, she climbed a weed as fast as she could go. Then, stiffening her legs, she set her magic inside spinner to work. Whiff, from her body floated a long silky thread, and another and another. She lifted her eight feet, gave a spring and floated off in the breeze, dangling like a balloonist hanging to a parachute.

She was not afraid. The time had come to set sail into the great world, and had not her mother and her father and her grandfather and her grandmother and her aunts and uncles and cousins and all her family for hundreds of years always set sail like this?

So, turning easily upside down on her yellow back in the air, she wove a funny little flat basket for her eight feet to rest on, like a "cat's cradle"—her own baby-carriage!

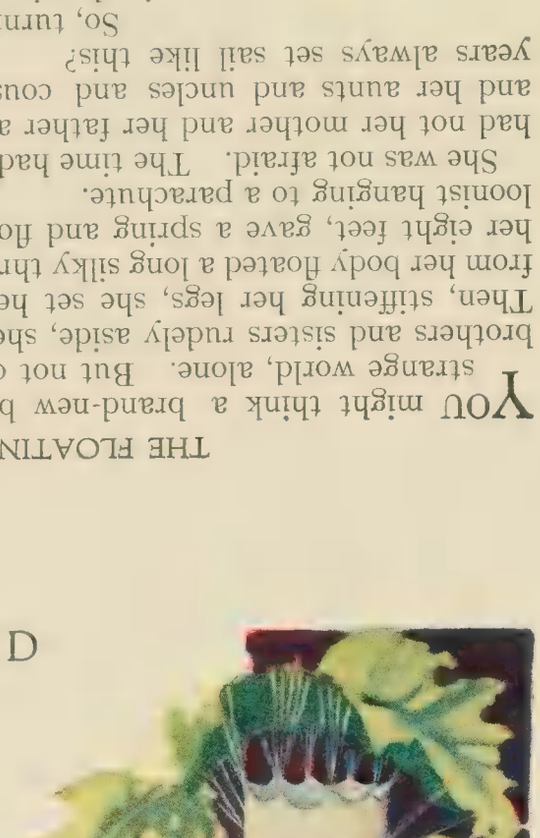
On she drifted through the sunny air, blown high and blown low on the breeze, like some princess on a magic carpet.

Suddenly—bump! She hit something. Her silken ropes anchored and held fast, and our baby crawled, hand over hand (or rather foot over foot), to her new home.



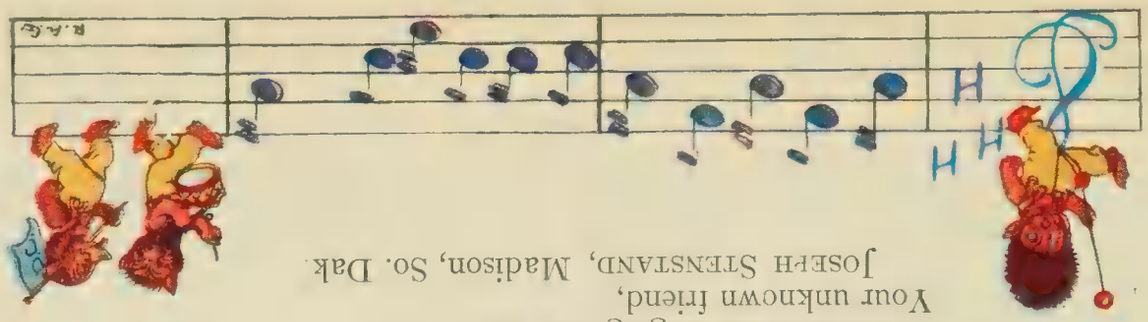
Where had she landed? On a wild rose-bush. And where were her four hundred and ninety-nine little yellow brothers and sisters? Some, alas! were dead, and one had blown to the tip of a church steeple and another was already anchored to a plunging ship at sea.

But this our yellow girl neither knew nor cared. For she had skins to shed and a house to build and keep tidy.



Then there would be marketing to do and meals to get and calls to make. Dearie me, so many important affairs to attend to.

For, of course, she was not a fairy nor even an enchanted princess. She was a spider!



A spider, an ordinary little yellow garden spider!

3

THE EIGHT-LEGGED BABY AND HER BROTHERS AND SISTERS SETTING SAIL INTO THE GREAT WORLD

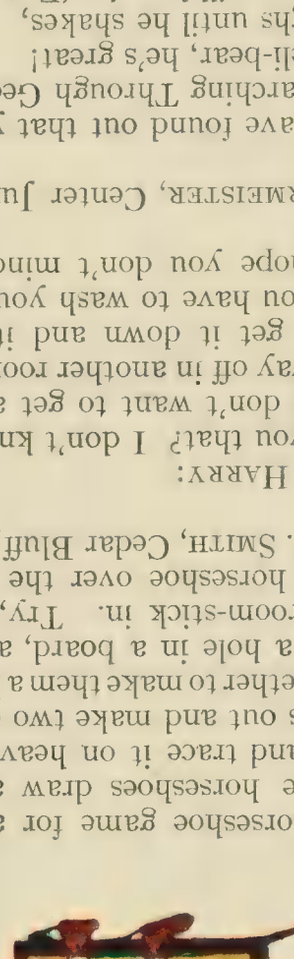
DEAR AUNT HARRY:

Do you mind my calling you that? I don't know just how to spell your real name and don't want to get a dictionary. The dictionary is probably way off in another room on the top of a high bookcase. You get it down and it will be all covered with dust. Then you have to wash your hands and dust the dictionary. So I hope you don't mind me calling you Aunt Harry!

PAULINE BURMEISTER, Center Junction, Ia.

I am a boy of eight. I have found out that you can sing Deli-bear to the tune of "Marching Through Georgia"—

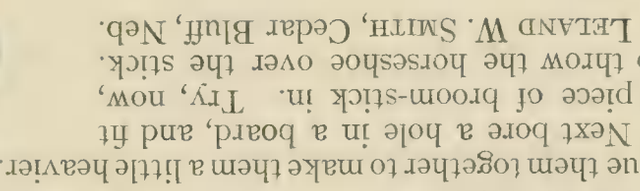
"Hurrah, hurrah for Deli-bear, he's great!
Hurrah, hurrah, he laughs until he shakes,
And so we send the chorus till he cries 'For pity sakes!'
While we are singing for Deli!"



Your unknown friend,
JOSEPH STENSTAND, Madison, So. Dak.

Here's a horseshoe game for a rainy day. To make the horseshoes draw a pattern of a horseshoe and trace it on heavy cardboard. Then cut this out and make two of these and glue them together to make them a little heavier.

Next bore a hole in a board, and fit a piece of broom-stick in. Try, now, to throw the horseshoe over the stick.



LELAND W. SMITH, Cedar Bluff, Neb.

OUR POST OFFICE

AREN'T THESE NICE LETTERS ENOUGH TO CHEER UP ANY EDITOR? PLEASE DO YOUR SHARE OF CHEERING UP THIS MONTH!

The Deli-Club

HURRAY! What a wonderful pile of letters poured in last birthday month for our new Deli-Club! All day long and every day we mailed badges, badges, badges, and letters, letters, letters. What fun now to think that all over the United States and Canada, and even in far-off parts of the world, thousands of boys and girls are wearing blue D. C. badges and holding D. C. meetings and reading our LITTLE DELINEATOR.

Everybody who joined last month, be sure to send a stamped envelope addressed to yourself for the March Club-Secret Letter. This tells new fun for your D. C. meetings, and interesting club news besides.

You new children who haven't joined yet, send the stamped self-addressed envelope, but besides that, send also a two-cent stamp to pay for your blue D. C. badge. The badge will be mailed with your March Club-Secret Letter.

Address March D. C., THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, New York, N. Y.

The nice little boy on the left is Jerome Munson, with his sister Eunice, of Howard Lake, Minn., and their cousins, all LITTLE DELINEATOR readers

Transform Your Back Yard into a Garden

This prize-winning plan will show you how

By FRANCES DUNCAN

ANOTHER prize garden—and this time one which may be enjoyed in almost any back yard of average space!

Our readers will remember that in connection with Garden Week last Summer, THE DELINEATOR offered a special prize of two hundred dollars for the "best plan for an ordinary back-yard garden of flowers, vegetables or both, which could be developed by a woman and children." The points of judgment were to be beauty, economy and simplicity of cultivation.

One wouldn't have believed that so many lovely gardens could possibly have been planned for just an ordinary back yard. To choose the best was a real task, but finally the committee—consisting of Miss Gabrielle R. Allard, Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders and Miss Patricia Brown, all members of THE DELINEATOR staff, and enthusiastic gardeners—selected the plan submitted by Mrs. F. E. Winegar of Burlington, Colorado. Honorable mention was awarded to Miss Rose Dickinson, of Saint Joseph, Mich.; Mrs. Frances Lewis Trussell, of San Marcos, Calif., and Mrs. N. O. Jelleme, of Passaic, N. J.

Because these women and the more than five hundred others who entered the contest were so eager and so joyous about their flowers, fruits and vegetables, we want to show other women—gardenless women—how simple it really is to turn a back yard into a joy-spot. And so we are going to tell the story of Mrs. Winegar's garden and to offer you a plan of it.

Mrs. Winegar did the whole thing with only the aid of her eleven-year-old son; and at no time did she find that it took time away from her household, club or community duties. Her garden is delightful for its lovely vista, for its sweep of lawn backed by gaily colored blooms, its completeness in having both fruits and vegetables, and for its economy in planting expense.

A GARDEN THAT IS USEFUL

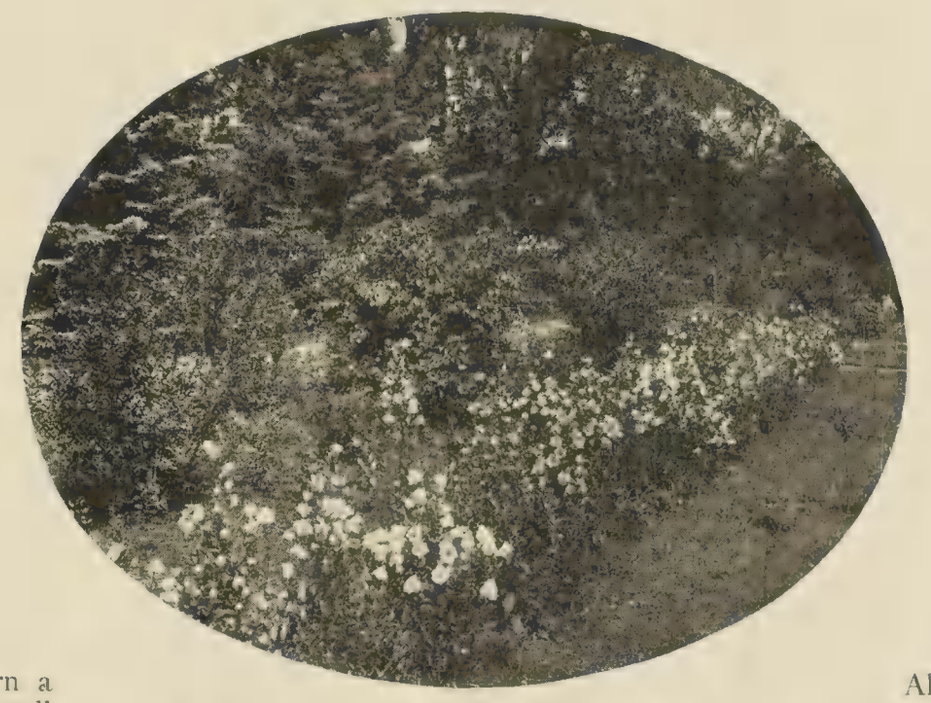
IF IN imagination we walk out of the back door of the house, we will find that the space at the end of the yard, some seventy-five feet, is evenly divided between a kitchen-garden and a flower-garden, the former being separated from the flower-garden by a border-planting of tall perennials, and screened from the house by the garage, a grape-arbor and a grouping of shrubs.

It is well for garden-making folk to remember that a kitchen-garden may be a most delightful place when given a definite position of its own and separated, slightly but definitely, from what the old gardeners used to call the "dressed" part of the grounds—just as a kitchen in a house may be most attractive, but nevertheless should be definitely separated from the living-room.

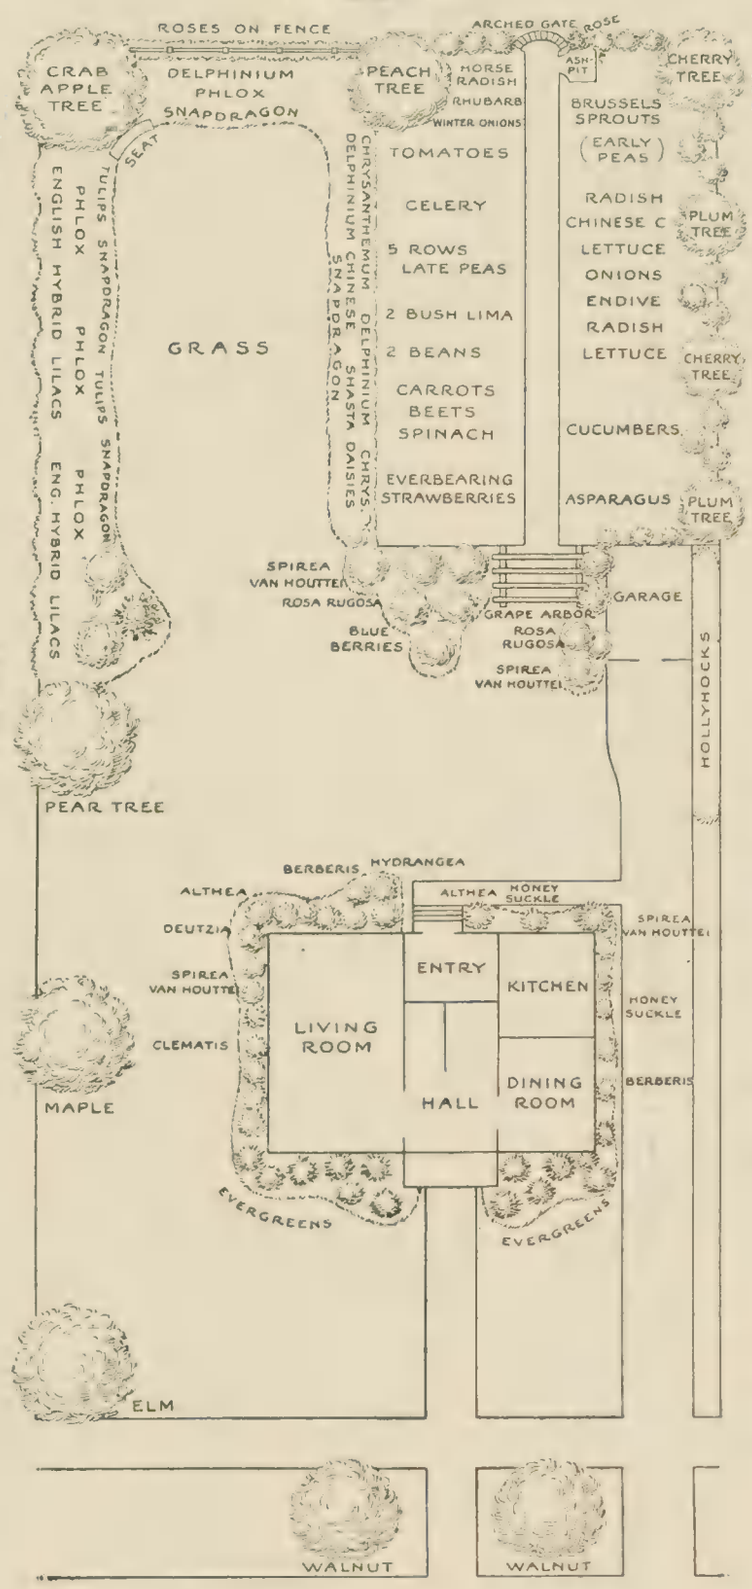
The separation in this plan is admirable. The glimpse through the grape-arbor down the garden-path to a rose-arched gate is charming, and far more beautiful than if the kitchen-garden were completely screened as something which should blush unseen. A really excellent kitchen-garden has no need to blush at all—it is worthy of a place of its own. The grape-arbor which makes luxurious shade and holds the promise of purple fruit is flanked on both sides by rugosa roses and white spirea Van Houttei, which both bloom at the same time, giving the effect of pale-pink blossoms floating on a sea of misty white.

The kitchen-garden is divided by a straight path, which leads from the grape-arbor to the rose-arched gate. Along the north side, serving as a windbreak, are plum and cherry trees with groups of everbearing raspberries between them, providing protection and Spring beauty for the garden, besides attending to their proper business of bearing fruit. Against the back fence, at the end of the kitchen-garden, grow blackberry vines with a well-spaced and well-placed group of gooseberries in front.

The garden rows on the side of the path, from path to border, are about fifteen feet long and run north and south. Here are everbearing strawberries, a fine asparagus bed, a patch of cucumbers, rows of carrots, beets, spinach, bush lima beans, rows of late peas and celery, tomatoes, Brussels sprouts thriftily following the early peas, radishes, lettuce, onions and endive for late-in-the-season salads. Down at the far end of the garden where they need not be disturbed by the Spring spading are horseradish, Winter onions and rhubarb. A few roots of mint, useful for lemonade or for delicious meat sauces, complete a very well-stocked little kitchen-garden.



In Mrs. Winegar's plan the service-yard has been eliminated. The necessity for drying clothes is met by placing hooks in the corner of the house, the garage, and in the grape-arbor posts, from which points the clothes-line may be stretched. Thus the space between the house and garage and grape-arbor becomes a drying-yard on Monday morning, while at other times it is lawn and part of the garden.



DO YOU WANT A GARDEN?

Then secure a DELINEATOR garden pattern! It works like a dress-pattern—has its space all mapped out, with directions what to plant, where and how. It's easy to follow—and it gives you a garden, sweet-scented with fragrant blossoms, rich with luscious fresh vegetables.

So far there are two patterns: the Prize-Winning Garden shown here, and the Gold-Medal Garden told about in last month's DELINEATOR. For information about these, write The Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped envelope for reply.

THE DELINEATOR CAN HELP YOU

A JOY TO BEHOLD

YET for all its utility, the main effect of this garden is decorative. The long stretch of greensward from the house nearly to the end of the yard gives a sense of space and an illusion of distance. And the grouping of plants in the slightly irregular perennial borders is especially happy. Along the south border of the yard are hybrid lilacs, blest with sunshine and with plenty of space between them to insure abundant bloom. These are most marvelous shrubs, blooming the first season and every Spring thereafter in a fragrant mass of white and many shades of lavender. In front of these and worked in among them, are clumps of hardy phlox, spicy to smell and most effective as background. In front of these, again, and next the greensward, is a bordering plantation of Darwin tulips and snapdragons, the latter in soft shades of tan, amber and creamy pink. Toward the house, this planting ends in a group of shrubs, spirea Van Houttei and deutzia balancing the group of spirea and rugosa roses by the grape-arbor.

Entirely of herbaceous plants is the long straight border separating the flower-beds from the kitchen-garden. A row of tall larkspur (delphinium), English hybrids, alternating with hardy chrysanthemums for late Autumn beauty, serves as a screen, while groupings of dainty delphinium Chinense and Shasta daisies fill the middle space. The border is finished with snapdragons, which continue to bloom after the larkspur has passed.

At the foot of the yard, light-blue delphinium, pink and yellow snapdragons, with a few spikes of madonna lilies make a color picture that is soul-satisfying. At the back on the fence are climbing roses.

If we start with the house, we shall see that on each side of the porch on the street side, tall slender evergreens have been grouped, shorter ones being used to break the planting line in front. On the north side, against the kitchen and dining-room wall are honeysuckles, barberry (berberis) and lonicera halleana, which grows successfully without much sun. The south side of the house has vines of clematis and shrubs of deutzia lemoinii and Japanese barberry. The southwest corner is spirea Van Houttei—a mass of feathery whiteness in June. On the west side of the house, which is the garden-side, and on each side of the steps is an althea. The corners boast spirea Van Houttei, and between the steps and the corner are deutzia and barberrry on the left, and a honeysuckle vine at the right.

AND EASY TO CARE FOR TOO

SUCH a garden, once planted, will almost take care of itself. The shrubs next the house need but little attention, the lilacs will flourish unaided, and phlox and larkspur and iris once established grow vigorously. The kitchen-garden must be planted every year; but the housewife working in her garden, planting her carrots and beets, is cheered by the joyous vision of blossoming fruit-trees, companionship of the robins that assuredly

Concluded on page 84

Hope Ahead for Rural and Village Homes

What "Better Homes in America" has done for the folk in little towns

By BLANCHE BRACE

Readers who have a special fondness for Better Homes in America because it was founded by THE DELINEATOR will want to hear this tale of one of its most recent good deeds.

IT WASN'T just rain, it was a torrent, a cloudburst, a deluge! It was the very kind of flood that Noah knew, only, of course, of shorter duration! All Albemarle County, Virginia, shook its head at those swirling sheets of water, and counted back that not for seventy years had there been such a rain.

All day Sunday, all Sunday night, that downpour lasted. The next morning the farming folk of Albemarle County looked about them, and took stock of the ruin that had been wrought. Seven steel bridges had been swept away like the toy structures that children build. Cattle and sheep had been as helpless before the flood as woolly toys dropped by accident in the brook. Crops had been damaged. Thousands of dollars' worth of property won by hard work, the slow and patient toil of the men and women of the farms, had been destroyed. It was a scene of devastation.

In the midst of the ruin that the heavens had poured down, rose a strong chorus of women's voices:

"This is the first day of our Better Homes in America demonstration! It will soon be time to open the doors! We've got to get to Charlottesville somehow, and open the Better Home!"

"Nonsense! It can't be done!" said the men, always the more submissive sex when it comes to giving in to the weather. "The roads are washed out! To get to Charlottesville you'd have to make a detour of forty miles."

"We'll get there if we have to make a detour of four hundred miles!" the women cried. "We've all but worked our fingers off over that Better Home! The people want to see it—and how they need to see a home like that! We're going to open it on time!"

And they did! What they did and how they did it, those quiet, hard-working, determined women of Albemarle County, Virginia, makes one of the most magnificent stories of heroic effort toward home betterment in the annals of the nation. And the fine thing about it is that it is just one story of many. All through the country in the rural districts, the villages and the little towns during Better Homes Week, busy men, women, boys and girls were on hand, willing and eager, even grimly determined to upset the old belief that farm homes must of necessity be less comfortable, less convenient, less beautiful than the homes of the cities and the towns, that they must inevitably demand useless drudgery of the women who work in them, and that they can not be expected to offer real satisfaction to the people who live in them. The 1924 demonstrations of Better Homes in America have shown that the contrary is most certainly true.

But all the while the Better Homes demonstration in Albemarle County, Virginia, awaits us. Albemarle County is largely made up of farm folk. They are always busy, they have little extra cash to spend, and the overwhelming majority of them do all their own work in homes that offer a minimum of convenience.

"How in the world can we give a Better Homes in America demonstration?" they demanded, when the chairman, Mrs. Bessie Dunn Miller, first brought the matter to their attention.

How they wanted to do it, though! And so an advisory council composed of representative women from each magisterial district in the County was formed to discuss the matter. The idea grew until suddenly, almost overnight, it seemed, it became a county-wide movement of farm women.

"But where are we going to get a house for our demonstration?" the Committee asked one another.

At last they heard of one they could borrow, a dilapidated abandoned house in Charlottesville, desolate, forlorn, long vacant. The women looked it over, and then they looked at each other. In their eyes was that half-despairing, half-determined look that naturally appears on women's faces when they are unexpectedly called upon to perform a miracle.

"This a Better Home?" some of them exclaimed.

"The worse it is to begin with, the better!" said the stouter souls. "Everybody in the neighborhood knows what this house is like. If we can make it over into a comfortable and convenient and beautiful farm home, every one in Albemarle County will see what he can do with his own!"

And then, did they telephone for the plasterer and the painter and the paperer to come? They did not! They rolled up their sleeves and got to work. They had been busy women even before Better Homes in America movement came along. They cooked three meals a day of the variety known as square, they did their own washing and ironing, raised chickens, made butter, did their duty by their husbands and their children. But nothing could ever be more important to themselves and their families and other people than this demonstration of a Better Home. So with their own busy hands they mixed plaster and stirred paint, stained floors, yes, and even repaired the old fireplaces of the house! They seeded the ground to grass and planted Scotch broom. Everybody aided them. The state agent, the district agent, the farm agent, all the extension workers, members of home demonstration clubs, the boys and girls of the agricultural clubs, all of them showed in substantial ways their interest in this county adventure in better home-making. The whole demonstration cost them just seventy-five dollars and sixty cents, the price of paper, paint, grass seed and draperies. And then along came the flood and Better Homes Week together.

"We're going to open that house on time!" said the women of the county. "Wash out or not, we want, just once, to see how a proper home should look!"

And they came from their distant farms, in spite of the recent disaster in the county, over the long, hard miles on the washed-out roads, a hundred of them every day, to view the wonders of the Better Home. And they saw! And it conquered!

"If you'd brought me here blindfolded, I wouldn't have believed it was the same place it used to be!" one woman cried. "Do you mean that a little work can do this to a home?"

"A room for a farm woman to rest in!" exclaimed one weary soul. "That's something I never thought to see! And a woman would have time to use it in a house like this!"

"A farmer's office!" admired the men. "A place for a man in his own house! Say, what do you think of that?"

Forty-six women of the county enrolled in a better-kitchen contest, and forty-two of them made their kitchens over into the labor-saving, step-saving workshops that are advocated by the home-betterment plan. At present, a five-year program of home betterment is under way in Albemarle County. They received the second of the prizes offered to communities of ten thousand or under in the 1924 campaign—but the biggest prize will be the results that will grow out of that demonstration in the years to come!

"God bless the Better Homes in America movement!" wrote their chairman to the national headquarters.

A PLACE unique in the history of home betterment must be reserved for St. Helena Island, South Carolina, winner of the first prize for the best rural or village demonstration of this campaign. Nothing more noteworthy in raising the standard of the American home has ever been accomplished than that which was put in effect by the colored boys and girls of Penn School and the county schools of St. Helena Island. It's enough to bring a lump to any normal throat to consider the patriotic and far-reaching achievement of these negro youngsters of the little Southern island.

"Day-clean has come!" say the old negroes of St. Helena. Day-clean is the Island word for daybreak. And the daybreak that has come to them is the dawn of better homes for them all.

Working under the leadership of their principal, Grace Bigelow House, chairman of the Better Homes demonstration, these colored school children not only did most of the work of building their six-room Better Home, furnishing it throughout, but they accomplished the far greater undertaking of raising the home-making standards of the whole island.

"What have you done to make your home better since last year?" sternly asked the negro students who took a census of the home-improvements, made as an outgrowth of the 1923 demonstration.

"You jus' wait! You come agin!" pleaded a few dilatory negro farmers. "I's gwine make improvements yet fo' Betteh Homes week!"

But most of them had made them already, for home betterment has got into the air down there on St. Helena Island.

Continued on page 103

Build A Bungalow

One Solution of the Small Family's Housing Problem

Designed by
DONN BARBER
Fellow of the American Institute of Architects, and Architect of the New York Cotton Exchange

HERE is the first of THE DELINEATOR houses for the year 1925—a small bungalow, appealingly simple yet far from commonplace. Down to the smallest detail it has been planned for convenience and economy, designed especially to meet the requirements of a small family without a domestic servant.

The appeal of the single-story dwelling was felt in domestic architecture long before the so-called present-day bungalow became popular. Many of our early settlers built little dwellings of this type, which admirably housed small families. Then, as now, a low one-story structure cost less to build. It was more quickly erected and was more comfortable and convenient for the family whose members were not too numerous.

A definite comparison between the bungalow and the ordinary two-story dwelling is difficult to make. But the home-owner should remember that sometimes there is more economy and convenience in a two-story house than in a carelessly planned bungalow that covers a large area of ground. On the other hand it is a fact that rooms arranged on one floor entail less housework and give the homemaker greater personal comfort while working. Almost nothing has helped to popularize the bungalow more than the modern American apartment.

GOOD PROPORTIONS, EXCELLENT DETAIL AND COZY CHARM MAKE IRRESISTIBLE THE LURE OF THIS QUAINT LITTLE FOUR-ROOM HOUSE, WHICH CAN BE BUILT FOR ABOUT $4,000

A GOOD many prospective home-owners can not afford the high cost of fire-proof building materials. Consequently the first bungalow which we present is an inexpensive frame dwelling of four rooms. The material for constructing and finishing this little house should be carefully chosen. Heavy or oversized rather than undersized timbers should be selected in order to ensure a sturdy durable frame. A cheaply constructed building creaks and sways whenever the wind blows, and the floors and woodwork in such a house are liable to sag.

First of all then, comes the stout underframing. Over this is placed a covering of lath, either metal or wood, and then a layer of plaster. Wall-board instead of plaster can be used very successfully in sections of the country where the climate is not too severe.

Woods for the interior finishings of the house can not be chosen too carefully. Hardwoods such as walnut or mahogany are the most satisfactory. It is not true that these woods are prohibitive in price; they may be obtained at but a few cents more per running foot than the ordinary woods, to which must be added the expense of a special finish in the way of paint or stain. The durability gained by the use of hardwoods is indeed worth the difference, and it is well to remember that hardwoods give an increased market value to the little house if the owner should ever desire to sell it.

Personal and particular attention should be given to the selection of floor materials and finishes. The home-owner should never leave this important decision to a disinterested contractor. It is the owner himself, or herself, who will use the floors day after day. It is he or she who must care for them. It is well to know, therefore, the characteristics of the various woods used for flooring so that an intelligent selection can be made.

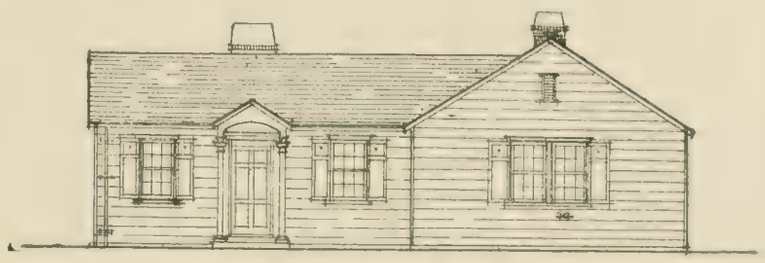
Oak, maple, beech and birch are perhaps the best-known hardwoods for this purpose. Oak is very desirable because of its extreme hardness, its openness and beauty of grain. Maple is close of grain, tough-fibered and of a smooth texture. When quiet, color and resilience are desired, a heavy grade of soft-toned linoleum cemented to and expertly laid over the under-flooring is very durable and satisfactory.

Wall decorations depend on whether a smooth or a rough plaster finish is desired. In this instance, since the architect was inspired by the best of our early American houses, a smooth plaster, hung with a conservative patterned Colonial wall-paper, could be most effectively used. The living-room, with its generously sized fireplace, might be decorated in a soft taupe-gray paper; while the hall and bedrooms, which are a unit in themselves, might very well be hung with flowered or striped papers. Such an arrangement would be decidedly individual if it were not overdone with chintz or other figured fabrics.

AND HOW FURNISH IT?

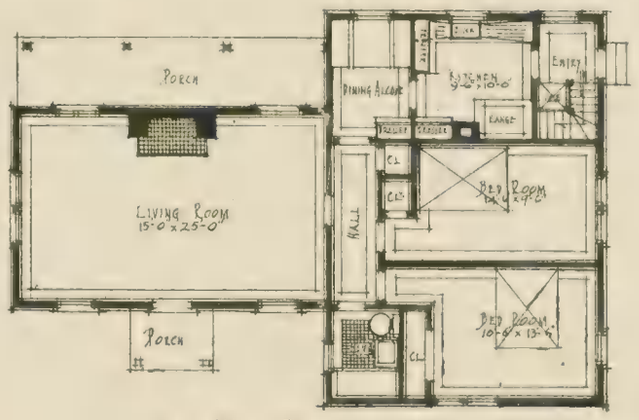
TO BE truly successful, the furnishings of a bungalow should blend in spirit with its exterior. A few Colonial pieces of moderate size, mingled with some brightly painted and some wicker furniture, would be especially suitable. The charm and informality of such a dwelling can be retained only by the elimination of conventional pieces, which are often dull in both character and color.

A study of the floor plan of this bungalow, will show that a very small quantity of furniture is required to make it really cozy and comfortable. Take the living-room, for instance: A davenport placed in front of or at right angles to the fireplace need be the only large and costly piece. A low divan about six feet long, with detachable cushions and wooden feet, would be more appropriate than one more ornately designed. Opposite this, an overstuffed chair covered in denim and a small end-table might be simply grouped. A gate-leg or drop-leaf table, with one leaf folded down against the wall, would admirably fill the space at the right as one enters the door, while a mirror or square of fabric, such as a piece of antique brocade, embroidered linen or a sampler might be hung over it. A small flat-top or spinet desk, a standing lamp and a wicker chair of the hour-glass type grouped in the corner near the window at the left of the entrance, with the addition of one or two Barnstable or Windsor chairs, would be sufficient for preliminary furnishings.



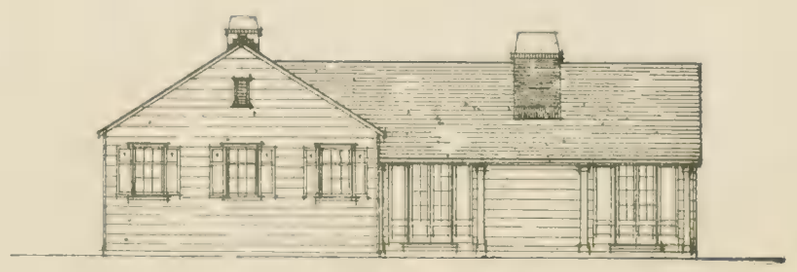
Lamps, pictures and other small decorative accessories, which complete the comfort and add to the attractiveness of such a room, may be acquired from time to time. Caution should always be observed in choosing these articles. They should be related in style or period, else the finished room will present an incongruous whole.

Attractive curtains add that note of color and decoration needed to make each individual room homey. Printed materials, which include cretonnes, chintzes and printed linens, are suitable both Winter and Summer. For this little home the new cretonnes which are practically fadeless would frame the windows very effectively. To insure the best wearing qualities these curtains should be lined with sateen or some light-colored muslin.



THE FIRST BUNGALOW

Inexpensive and practical is this delightful bungalow which Donn Barber has designed for you. It's a cozy affair, compact yet surprisingly roomy—a triumphal solution of the small family's housing problem. This is the first bungalow THE DELINEATOR has offered, but it's not to be the last by any means. Our 1925 series of house plans is going to present a number of others, of wood, of stucco, and of brick, all attractive and up-to-the-minute in planning and design.



Our Home-Building Department will send you, for a dollar, a workable detailed blue-print of this bungalow with suggestive hints for building it. Or, if you prefer, we'll mail you, without charge, a sheet of ten other larger houses which we have already presented. Just drop a line and a self-addressed stamped envelope, please, to the Home-Building Department, THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

FRONT ELEVATION

FIRST FLOOR PLAN

REAR ELEVATION

What Jane Cowl Does For Beauty

By CELIA CAROLINE COLE

WHENEVER it's March, we never know whether to hang ourself on the nearest tree, muttering with our last breath, "Hideous month— Showing up the yellow in everybody's skin and disposition, blowing dust into starry eyes and snowing down on new Spring clothes! How ever do the other nice months stand being shut up in the same calendar with you! Ugly! Insufferable! We die!" or whether to shut ourself tight in our room and write a poem about Spring, ineffable Spring, coming through lacy green trees with singing on her lips and anemones in her heart.

This year we went to see Jane Cowl.

Radiant, gallant, red-mouthed, wistful, triumphant Jane Cowl, America's most beautiful actress. It was much better than writing a poem.

"We had to come see you because it's March," we explained as we sank down into one of her huge, squashy living-room chairs.

"Sort of a counter-irritant," she said softly.

And then we explained further just how we felt about March.

"But I'm exactly like March!" she cried. "Undecided, pulled this way and that, stormy, with terrible moods of melancholy. And I don't know how March feels, but I'm always scared inside, afraid people won't like me. In fact, quite sure they won't. I nearly decompose with fright on opening nights!"

"Well, how on earth then do you get radiance 'across' as you do? You know you're always described as 'radiant.' "

"But you wouldn't have me send out all those other dreadful things, would you? I just make them stay inside and be quiet—sort of 'Down, Towser! Lie still!' "

"You upset my theories," we said disapprovingly. "Repression makes people look old and lined and tense, don't you know that? And you look young as dawn, and quite as lovely."

"Well, that's sweet, but ridiculous. I look almost as old as I am. And I couldn't possibly be lovely, because my face is all out of drawing."

"Where?"

"Why, here!" she showed us her nose. "And there!" she showed us the line of her jaw. "All over!"

"Pooh! Drawing," we said, and felt our eyes smiling with joy as we looked at her—the splendid sweep of her beauty, her dark satiny head (cared for, that lovely top-knot was, brushed till it shone), her clear, vivid coloring (no laziness in or back of that skin), the grace of her body (no thickening allowed), the poise and freedom of her bearing (no corroding self-consciousness had registered there). "Pooh! Drawing! Didn't a famous critic say that you were the most beautiful woman on the American stage?"

"Yes, he did!" she flashed. "And he has caused me more bother," she complained "than any other person or thing on this earth. Trying to live up to that, when I'm not a beauty at all!"

We contradicted her.

And suddenly she leaned forward and brought her hands together in a little, pleased smack. "I can prove it to you! That people who know, know I'm not a beauty. I went to a party one night, and I was very happy at that party—it was at Miss Elsie De Wolfe's. The lights were awfully flattering, and I had on a pretty frock. And Paul Helleu was there. He was charming to me, and asked me if I would sit for him. Of course I would! I was as cocky as could be that the great Helleu wanted to 'do' me.

"The very next day I went to his studio. And he began to draw. He drew and drew, all the time getting angrier. He glared at me instead of 'studying' me. I was almost in tears I felt so terribly for us both. Finally he flung out at me, 'Whoever told you that you were a beauty!' 'I told you that I wasn't,' I flung back, 'and I didn't ask to come here; you invited me!' He went on drawing savagely and then suddenly he dashed the paper to the floor and ground his heel into it. 'You have a devil face!' he cried. 'Go to Boldini, he paints devil faces!' 'Devil,' I scrambled into my coat, 'what do you mean by 'devil?' 'One whose face is unsymmetrical,' he snapped."

SHE looked at us triumphantly. We looked back. She was lovelier than ever—flushed and laughing and vindicated. "You see? On the highest authority I am not a beauty."

We sat and thought. We were trying to get her formula for beauty. Lines didn't matter—you could still be beautiful and be all out of drawing, because there she was. And you could be sensitive as a violin to impressions and be awfully afraid people wouldn't like you, and still look like a dawn.

"I wish you could have seen my mother," she said softly, "she was beautiful, always vivid and glorious no matter how she felt. It was the most wonderful thing in the world to me as a child and it has gone all through my life—her beauty."

Ah! An ingredient for the formula—early association with and adoration of beauty; a beautiful mother—one of the most beautiful things that can happen to a child.

"If you had seen her," she added after a moment, "and me beside her, you would never be coming here asking me to talk about my beauty!"

"Yes, I would," we said firmly, and added mentally "plenty of modesty" for the formula. "What were you like, inside, when you were little?"

"Oh, all dreams and tomboyishness. Awful tomboy."

Two more components. Dreams—that splendid, dreaming mouth of hers, and dreams in her eyes. And the vigor of a tomboy in her lithe, rhythmical body. "What was the first time you discovered that you were pretty?"

"That," she said gravely, "is ahead of me."

"But when you went on the stage, a desperate little girl of fourteen, didn't you realize your beauty then?"

"No. I don't seem to have thought about that. I had a feeling of destiny in me, that I was going to do something some day that nobody but me could do——"

Ah, yes, another powerful ingredient. A feeling of destiny, looking at far horizons, a deep hope so strong it is a faith—the hidden light in her that gives her face its luminous, stirringly beautiful look.

Drawing by Otto J. Gutter

OUR thoughts were interrupted by a gamin chuckle. "I thought that I was the 'little guy' born to do it. And maybe I will." Then gravity again.

"Mix thoroughly with humor," we wrote in the invisible formula. "If you have no beauty," we asked aloud rather sternly. "what was it when you played 'Juliet' that was so transcendently lovely that the instant you appeared, before you had said one word, a thunder of applause burst out and couldn't stop. And it wasn't just hands clapping—it was like hearts running up to you, wanting to help you, wanting to tell you how glad we were that there could be anything in this disillusioning world so exquisite and young and shimmering as Juliet.

"Was I really like that?" she asked.

And there was something in her voice that brought a lump in our throat.. "You were all we thought life would be, and isn't; all we thought people would be, and aren't."

"It was extraordinary," she said softly, "what they gave to me every night."

"Beauty," we said, softly, too. "You were beautiful then," we added after a moment when we were both remembering Juliet.

"No. Jane Cowl wasn't there at all. What you saw was the beautiful clarity of Juliet's loyalty, the beauty of her adolescence and of first love coming. Every performance, I went out on her balcony and loosed two doves and watched them fly away, high, high into that Italian sky. They were invisible to everybody but Juliet and Jane Cowl. We saw them and they brought us together. Juliet became flesh and blood, and Jane Cowl vanished."

AGAIN that baffling loveliness of Miss Cowl lighted her, that luminous quality always back of her face. She has the quality of a black opal, flashing scarlet and gold and shimmering white, but never pale pink or blue.

"Oh, the beauty of Italy. I felt it so, and the sheer, unearthly beauty of the play. I don't think I care much about plays, really, except for their beauty. I don't like realism when it's brutal, and I don't care for philosophic plays. I play everything because I want to be facile, but I don't love any of them except for the beauty of them."

We didn't care a fig for that blustering weather outside. Spring, shimmering and thrilling and young as Juliet, had crept right into our hearts—and we are not quite sure that we didn't smell violets, sweet-scented purple ones. There was something whirling and singing with a surging triumph inside us. We were glad Jane Cowl had a "dent" face of unsymmetry. We were glad that it was March and that we had gone to see her.

For we had found—though she didn't know it—a shining magical formula for beauty. Not dull, dreadful rules that say, "Do this," "Do that," but ten precious commandments, which if joyfully, zestfully followed will make a person vivid and confident and starry-eyed. We'll tell them to you if you'll write us for them.

Then we got up to go. And when we were almost outside the door, we remembered and clapped our hand over our mouth with an "Oh!"

"What is it?" she cried.

"I forgot to ask what you use."

"What I use?"

"To keep beautiful."

"Oh!" A long silence. Then, "Yes."

And she told us what preparations she uses most, and how nice she thinks them, and added, "But I think all this patting is rather like marriage—beautiful in results when it is intelligently done, but dangerous and destructive if handled carelessly or overdone. Don't you?"

"Yes. But what exercises?"

And she told us those. And we'll tell you if you'll write us privately.

"But to me," she added, "the 'best thing for the inside of a person is the outside of a horse.' I get back my faith in everything on the outside of a horse. Health, too."

"And with health, more beauty," we added.

She looked as if she might suddenly shake us. We slid out the door.

But she called after us: "You'll probably make yourself ridiculous writing that article about me as a beauty!"

We haven't, though, have we?

DON'T LOOK LIKE MARCH!

—all blustery and weather-tossed and winter-tired! Look like the clear young Spring that's just coming over the hilltops! Celia Caroline Cole will tell you how. Write her what your troubles are and she'll smooth them away. Ask her advice about lotions and creams and beauty preparations. She is an expert in these matters, and will advise you for the asking. Just don't forget to enclose a stamped envelope for her reply. Her address is care of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

The complete ensemble wardrobe is composed of several dresses, divided in type and purpose, united in the colors and materials of a single coat, and worn with the accessories planned to go with it

THE ensemble idea was born several years ago when Chanel designed full-length wool coats lined with printed silk and worn over simple little frocks made of the lining silk. It did not create any excitement at the time. Even the post-prophets who dote on broadcasting "I-told-you-so-two-years-ago" in regard to every successful style were silent on this subject in its infancy. No one realized that Chanel had started something—a yeast that was to raise and change the entire dough of fashion.

FOR to-day the ensemble is more than a style. It is recognized as the fundamental principle of chic. Ensemble (pronounced in the French fashion on-som-ble) means "together," and an ensemble costume is one in which every detail has been studied and selected to be worn together. The present excessive simplicity in dress is responsible for the necessity of the complete and carefully planned costume, for against such almost stark simplicity a wrong or a carelessly executed note stands out in pitiless relief.

An "ensemble" may be a sports costume or an evening wrap and frock of the same colors or materials. As the term is generally employed, however, it means a day costume consisting of a coat and frock and suitable accessories that have been chosen to be worn together.

To be correct and in the new fashionable note every coat and frock from the simplest morning suit to the most elegant afternoon costume should be an ensemble. The old scheme of the separate coat worn over any dress is rapidly passing away among fashionable women. The single coat and dresses of different type and purposes remain, but each frock is definitely related to the coat by color or material so that every frock worn with the coat and its accessories makes a separate ensemble costume, and all of them, with the same coat and accessories, make a complete ensemble wardrobe.

The advantages of such a wardrobe are obvious. In the first place it is very new, exceedingly smart, and possesses the right accent of expensive-looking simplicity. In the second place it is extremely economical, for, instead of needing one coat to wear with your morning costume and another for afternoon dresses, a single coat can be worn with both. Furthermore, the same hat, bag, flower, gloves and stockings can be used with each of the costumes. Any woman who has tried to complete two or three separate and unrelated ensemble costumes knows how ruinously expensive different sets of accessories can be.

THE ENSEMBLE COAT

THE ensemble coat may be of almost any length from a rather short coat to one that entirely covers the dress. The full-length coat is of course the most practical, for you can—though you shouldn't—wear it with any frock. A shorter coat must be worn with a frock made entirely of the coat material or with the coat material used for as much of the dress as shows below the coat, or with a frock of matching striped, check or plaid material. Of the three lengths, the shortest is undoubtedly the most comfortable for walking, the longest is the most practical, and the seven-eighths length is the smartest. All three types are straight and narrow and are worn wrapped closely around the figure or buttoned on the hip.

Many of the new coats are lined with heavy silk crêpe, and if the lining material is carried right out to the edge of the coat you have a reversible coat that may be worn inside out (see page 29), giving the effect of two coats. It also gives you a wool coat and a silk coat. The lining may be in a contrasting color, or you can use a plaid to line a plain material, or vice versa.

Billy Burke in "Annie Dear" wears a disturbingly lovely ensemble costume with a coat of gray-blue cloth lined with pale salmon-pink Georgette over a pink Georgette frock

THE COMPLETE ENSEMBLE WARDROBE

THE ENSEMBLE FROCK

ANY wool or silk frock, usually of the simpler varieties, may be used as part of an ensemble costume.

For a complete ensemble wardrobe there should be a simple all-wool frock for morning and general wear. This dress may be made of the coat material, or of a plaid or striped wool to match a plain wool coat.

The second frock for an ensemble costume should be of the type that can be used for restaurant lunches, tea, etc. A frock with a lower part matching the coat and a long upper part matching the lining is extremely smart. (See page 27.)

For some women these two frocks will answer all their daytime requirements. Others will want a third gown of even more pronounced elegance for weddings, receptions, bridge-parties, etc. A tunic blouse of satin crêpe, silk crêpe, etc., matching the coat in color but embroidered or beaded in the color of the lining (see page 27) and with the lower part of its slip made of the coat material, is a type used a great deal by the French dressmakers. The blouse could match the lining and be embroidered in the coat color.

IF YOU choose the full-length coat, you have a little more latitude for, in addition to the three types mentioned you can use the frock made entirely of the printed silk or silk crêpe that lines the coat. (See page 27.) With the short coat you are limited to a frock with a hip-length body matching the coat lining, a frock made entirely of the suit material, or of a matching plaid, check etc., and a separate skirt with an over-the-skirt blouse matching the coat lining.

All the dresses should keep to the colors and materials of the coat and lining for the trimming as well as for the frocks themselves.

MATERIALS AND COLORS

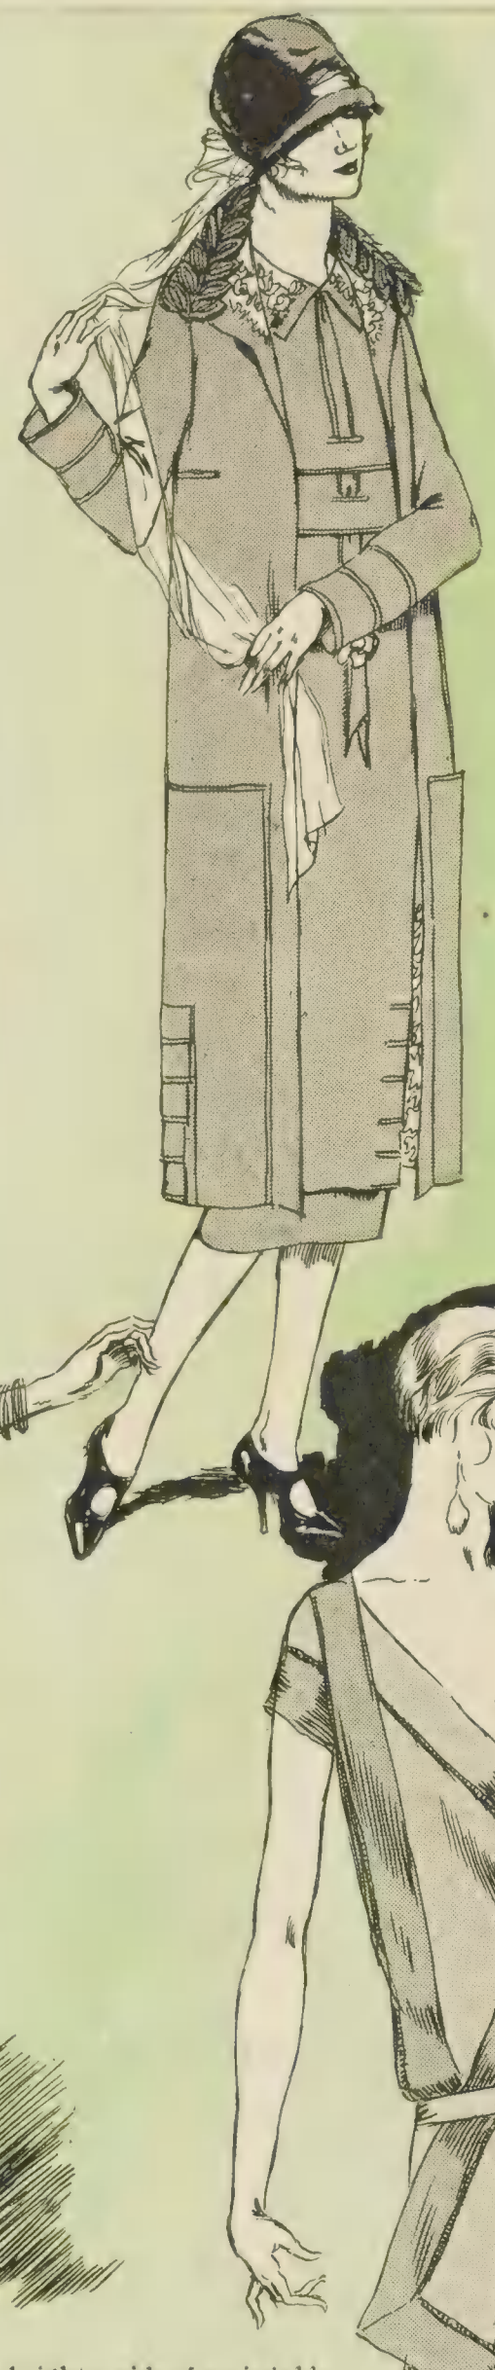
THE smartest wool materials for the ensemble costume are kasha, corded wools, wool cashmere, broadcloth, wool rep, soft twills, bordered materials, and the new silks of the ribbed varieties, satin, heavy silk crêpe and crêpe satin, novelty satin crêpe and novelty faille.

The smartest colors are the various shades of beige from the pale shade of natural kasha to the creamy tans, the lighter browns, black, dark blue, gray-blue, almond-green and gray. The darker shutter green, shades of brick, henna and cranberry are also used. In combining colors it is smart to use two shades of the same color—dark blue and a lighter blue, beige and brown, etc., or to use the two sides of crêpe satin. Almond-green is combined with gray or cream or beige, while blue and black can be used with almost any of the new shades, such as henna, royal blue, sea blue, etc. Brown is smart with honey color, russet, apricot and terra-cotta.

THE ACCESSORIES

IF YOU keep entirely to one color in an ensemble costume, you can use a contrasting but harmonizing color in your hat or bag. If you use two colors or two shades of the same color, the hat and bag should match one or the other color. You can wear a black hat with almost any costume, though it is smartest with black or dark blue. The new hats are small, almost untrimmed and are made of satin, moire, silk, felt or straw. The new hand-bags are usually the flat envelope shape.

The new shoes are pumps or strap pumps of patent leather, honey-colored kid, beige, cinnamon, black or gray suède. The pumps may be untrimmed or have steel or silver buckles. With simple wool frocks strap pumps of alligator skin or calf are worn. The stocking is almost invariably "nude" colored, in chiffon lisle with simple wool dresses and in chiffon silk with all other types of dress. Gray stockings are worn with gray suède and one occasionally sees "noisette" or very sheer black.



Gloves with the simpler dresses may be of black kid with white stitching and buttons or large, loose gloves of chamois or doeskin. With more formal dress they are of fine suède to match the stocking.

The correct jewelry includes the pearl necklace in choker style or longer strands, many bracelets, of the precious, semi-precious or ordinary glass bangle type, and a large brooch in the shape of a ring of crystal, jet or jade set with brilliants and used on the hat or on the hip of a frock. The correct umbrella is the short stubby type matching the costume. The newest flowers are the dark-red dahlias and large carnations; orchids and gardenias are also worn.

SOULIÉ'S SKETCHES SENT FROM LISHMENT SHOW THE CLOSE
ABSENCE OF BELTS, AND THE TUME, WHILE THE CONTINUED QUESTION: "AFTER

Premet adds several interesting touches to an ensemble costume of bottle-green rep trimmed with bands and bindings of self-colored crêpe de Chine. What appears to be a printed lining is in reality an appliqué of cretone flowers which are repeated on collar and tie of the sack tunic

Jenny cuts the cloth of her ensemble costume in the new shoulder-line and trims the coat with many buttons. The coat, which is in seven-eighths length, and skirt are of gray gabardine, and the blouse and lining of red and citron printed crêpe

Premet uses one of the most successful silhouettes of the year for a frock of silver brocade striped in ochre. It is cut on unbelted sheath lines narrow at the hips and with inverted plaits at the uneven hem. An embroidery of sky-blue glass beads is used at the armhole and lower edge

The brighter side of periwinkle crêpe satin, which in this case has an almost mirror-like brilliancy, is used by Renée for the braces and bands of a frock made of the dull side. The surplice front gives a double bias apron to a frock delightful enough to deserve the name of Reve Blue

Beige and blonde are colors that are new and very chic for evening. Patou used beige crêpe romain with shaded beige and brown lace on the long body and side tunics, and copper fringe on the narrow skirt and scarf

THE DELINEATOR'S PARIS ESTAB-

FITTING AT THE HIPS, THE VOGUE OF THE ENSEMBLE COS-

SHRINKING OF SKIRTS ASKS THE

THE KNEE—WHAT?"

Renée again chooses a bluish shade of mauve taffeta trimmed with navy-blue rep—a combination to which she is very partial—for the tailleur. Loose panels form a narrow skirt and the ensemble coat is shortened to jacket length. The new jabot frills trim the bodice

The box-plaited front is a Parisian favorite for the simpler type of suit made by Jean Patou of sand-colored poplaga with corded trimming. The jacket is quite straight and fits the hip snugly, and the blouse beneath and its jabot are of gauze

Jenny takes a bit of a flutter in high waistlines with the panels of an evening gown of white Georgette embroidered with a scroll design in diamonds and laurel leaves of silver and crystals. Pink roses are placed at knee and hem. Like all evening gowns it is short and sleeveless

A frock of Spanish cut and colors is made by Worth of red and gold lace over red chiffon. Red flowers follow the V of the bodice and the uneven line of the extremely short full skirt. Earings are long and many bracelets on the left arm are the mode

Beige kasha embroidered in shaded tones of brown wool is used by Worth for une robe sac—a smart frock that has all the effect of a jacket suit. As in so many of the new styles the back is plain and the front is ornamental

Coat 5915
Dress 5878

Dress 5918

Coat 5916
Dress 5880

Coat 5865
Blouse 5498
Skirt 5873

THE ensemble costume has its tailored as well as its more formal side. If you use a double-breasted homespun coat, in full length if you prefer, and a skirt of homespun with a blouse matching the coat lining, you will have a costume you may wear for travel, morning shopping, or general wear—or if you are a business woman—to your office. You may, however, keep to the strictly tailored suit for these occasions; but you should wear the newest version of this suit, the short, hip-fitting coat with a blouse and a two-piece skirt with inverted plaits at the center front and back. The three-quarter length coat worn over a frock with a long upper part makes a smart ensemble costume for general wear, for the restaurant luncheon in town, the matinée, etc. Among the full-length coats which may be worn as part of an ensemble costume or separately, are those with the new puffed sleeves, or a novelty tucked trimming.

Coat 5917
Dress 5800
Embroidery design 10138

Coat 5913—Blouse 5508
Skirt 5581

Other views and descriptions of these costumes are given on page 106

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

Tunic blouse 5863
Slip 5724
Embroidery design 10318

Other views and descriptions are on page 106

Dress 5818

Coat 5871

Coat 5871
Dress 5862

Dress 5862

Coat 5843
Dress 5880

Coat 5846

Coat 5846
Dress 5882

THE COMPLETE ENSEMBLE WARDROBE IS COMPOSED OF SEVERAL DRESSES DIVIDED IN TYPE AND PURPOSE, UNITED IN THE COLORS AND MATERIALS OF A SINGLE COAT, AND WORN WITH THE ACCESSORIES PLANNED TO GO WITH IT

THE ensemble idea is more than a fashion. It has become a fixed principle of dress.

The ensemble costume is a coat and dress planned to be worn together with carefully chosen accessories.

The ensemble wardrobe is a wardrobe of ensemble costumes arrived at by means of a single coat definitely related to several dresses.

Each detail must be chosen in connection with the whole ensemble

A wardrobe made up of individual and unrelated costumes is costly, cumbersome and unfashionable.

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

JUNIORS WEAR SMART ENSEMBLE EFFECTS AND TWO-PIECE FROCKS, AND YOUNGER TOTS ARE ADORABLE IN SMOCKED AND BLOOMER DRESSES

Two-piece Dress 5859

Dress 5817 Hat 5557

Coat 5861 Dress 5817 Hat 5557

Dress 5853 Embroidery design 10312

Two-piece dress 5857

Dress and bloomers 5837

Other views and descriptions are on page 107

Suit 5867

Dress 5855

Dress and bloomers 5869 Embroidery design 10870

Dress 5831

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

THE REVERSIBLE COAT OF THE ENSEMBLE WARDROBE TURNS ITSELF INSIDE OUT TO SUIT ITS COMPANION-FROCKS

(See page 23)

SMARTNESS to-day is altogether a matter of choice—choosing the right styles, carrying them out in related colors and materials, and keeping to the same colors in accessories.

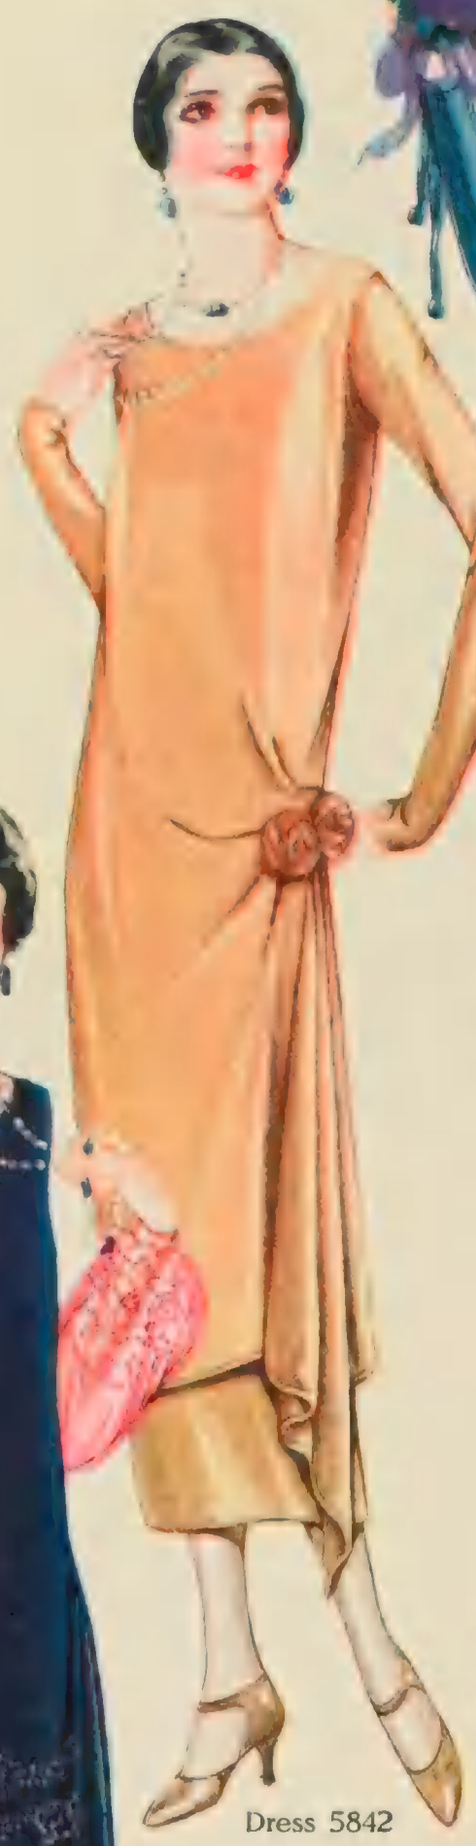
Every frock must be worn with a coat of one kind or another. The right kind is the ensemble coat that has been planned so that it makes an ensemble costume with each dress individually, and a complete ensemble wardrobe with all of them collectively.

The two-colored reversible coat can be worn with frocks of either or both colors and gives great variety to the ensemble wardrobe.

The ensemble wardrobe must be planned as a whole even to its hats and accessories.

Don't buy at random.

Draw up a clothes campaign and stick to your colors.



Other views and descriptions are on page 108

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

THE VARIED SILHOUETTES OF SPRING ARE AGREED ON THE SUBJECT OF SHORT SKIRTS

Dress 5888

Dress 5842

Wrap-around Dress 5798

Dress 5856
Embroidery design 10258

Dress 5890

Dress 5864
Embroidery design 10253

THE silhouettes for Spring are the sheath, the flare of godets, circular skirts, etc., the draped line and the straight but somewhat easier silhouette employed by Chanel. The tunic and the tunic blouse are very important and are to be found in all the accepted silhouettes. For all four types skirts are worn short, from ten to fourteen inches from the floor. The low waistline is smart, but no waistline at all is even smarter if you can wear the beltless frock. For dresses to wear at Mah Jong or bridge, or for the restaurant luncheon or tea, crêpe satin, silk crêpe, crêpe de Chine, Canton crêpe, flat crêpe, crêpe faille and soft satin are used a great deal in black and beige and also in amande green, rust, French gray, blue and shades of brown. The new puffed sleeve, the short sleeve often cut in one with a yoke, the long close-fitting sleeve and the bell sleeve are smart, while necklines are either the V, square, round or bateau type.

Other views and descriptions are on page 109

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

Other views and descriptions are on page 109

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

FASHION PUTS HANDKERCHIEF DRAPERIES, A GATHERED TUNIC, TIERS OR TRIMMING BANDS ON NEW FROCKS

5898 Dress 5898

5898—When you use crêpe satin for this one-piece slip-over dress, which fits closely at the hipline, it is smart to have the trimming bands of the reverse side. On silk crêpe they may be of kasha, soft twills or cashmere suitings, or on crêpe satin of broadcloth or kasha in the same color or a darker shade of the same color, or a contrasting color, etc. Lower edge 44½ inches.

36 bust requires 3⅛ yards 39-inch crêpe satin (using dull and shiny sides).

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5896—Tiers, buttons covered with the dress material, self-bindings and a collar and cuffs which may be detachable are a very fashionable trimming for this one-piece dress. It slips on over the head and fits closely at the hipline. Use crêpe satin, flat crêpe, crêpe faille, Canton crêpe. With contrasting crêpe de Chine and silk braid bindings and bone buttons which match the dress use soft twills, cashmere dress goods or kasha.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 54-inch kasha. Lower edge 44 inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

Dress 5896 5896

Dress 5906

5906—This one-piece slip-over dress with handkerchief draperies and a close-fitting hipline is an extremely smart dinner dress in lace over a separate one-piece slip of satin or silk crêpe in flesh color or to match the lace. The dress may have sleeves in Georgette, chiffon or chiffon voile over a slip of satin, etc. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 4⅜ yards 39-inch lace.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5804 — Printed Georgette, chiffon or chiffon voile trimmed with ribbon bands in a harmonizing color make a smart one-piece slip-over dress to wear for afternoon engagements. It has a straight gathered tunic joined at a close-fitting hipline, cut-down or normal armholes and a neckline which may be lower for evening. For a sleeveless evening frock use all-over lace. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 3 yards 35-inch satin and 2 yards 39-inch printed Georgette.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

Dress 5804

5804

5906 5910

Dress 5910 Embroidery design 10225

Tunic blouse and slip 5808 Embroidery design 10319

5910—10225—This is the type of one-piece draped dress for which the French dressmakers use such materials as flat crêpe, crêpe faille, Canton crêpe, crêpe satin or heavy crêpe de Chine. It slips on over the head and may have a body lining with a camisole top. Embroidered flower motifs decorate the shoulder and hip. They are very easily worked.

36 bust requires 3½ yards 39-inch crêpe satin. Lower edge 42¾ inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5808—10319—This tunic blouse has the new puffed sleeves and a soft fulness at the hipline. It slips on over a separate one-piece slip. Use crêpe satin with Georgette to match or in a lighter shade, silk Canton crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine with same material in a lighter shade; or use these materials with lace. The embroidered bandings are effective. Work them in large and small beads.

36 bust requires 3⅜ yards 39-inch crêpe satin (including lower part of slip) and ⅝ yard 39-inch Georgette. Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

Blouse and slip are for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

PARIS OFFERS SIMPLE LINES FOR THE DRESS OF NEW HALF-AND-HALF MATERIAL, THE ENSEMBLE FROCK, ETC.

Dress 5878
Embroidery
design 10181

Dress 5882
Embroidery
design 10155

Dress 5912

5878

5882

5905

5912

Dress 5905

Dress 5880

5880

5870

Dress 5870

5878—10181—Any one whose Spring is so full of sewing, house-cleaning and preparations for the family's Summer emigrations will be delighted with this one-piece dress which can be made with very little work. It slips on over the head and the collar and cuffs may be detachable. Use flat crêpe, Canton crêpe, crêpe de Chine or crêpe satin with same material in contrast or with lace collar and sleeves; or use printed crêpe de Chine or silk crêpe with plain to match. The embroidery is effective in outline or braiding. Lower edge 54 inches.

36 bust requires 3 yards 35 to 39 inch flat crêpe.

The dress is good style for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5882—10155—Many of the Spring styles have a new puff to their sleeves or V-cut to the collar to mark them as this season's. Flat crêpe, Canton crêpe, heavy crêpe de Chine, satin crêpe, soft satin or crêpe faille with the same material in contrast, are suitable for this one-piece dress on the slip-over order. The embroidery is effective in harmonizing colors. One may use soft twills or cashmere dress goods with silk crêpe in contrast and bone or novelty buttons to match the contrast. Lower edge 46 inches.

36 bust requires $3\frac{3}{8}$ yards 39-inch silk crêpe.

The dress is becoming to ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5905—Straight plaited sections inserted at each side give somewhat easier lines to this one-piece dress of the slip-over type. Use flat crêpe, Canton crêpe, crêpe de Chine, crêpe satin or satin with the same material in contrast, silk alpaca with contrasting crêpe de Chine; or use printed silk crêpe, crêpe de Chine, radium or foulard with plain to match. Lower edge plaits out, $2\frac{1}{8}$ yards.

36 bust requires $3\frac{3}{4}$ yards 39-inch satin crêpe.

The dress is suitable for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5912—A box-plaited section which is inserted across the front of a one-piece dress gives easy width to the skirt and yet retains the narrow line. Use soft twills, cashmere dress goods or kasha with ribbed silk crêpe or the same material in a darker shade of the same color or in a harmonizing color, or all one material. Wool crêpe with silk crêpe, heavy silk crêpe with satin, crêpe satin with silk crêpe are possible combinations. Lower edge plaits out $1\frac{7}{8}$ yards.

36 bust requires $2\frac{3}{4}$ yards 54-inch soft twill.

The dress is smart for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5880—If you want to use wools that are half checked or striped and half plain or satins that are half novelty and half plain, this slip-over dress is an excellent style. It has a long upper part and straight wrap-around lower part and the hipline is close-fitting. You may use checked, plaid or striped wools with plain wool to match; or ribbed wools, cashmere suitings, soft twills, kasha, heavy satin or ribbed silk with an upper part of plain silk crêpe in self or contrasting color or a lighter shade of the same color. Lower edge 43 inches.

36 bust requires $1\frac{3}{4}$ yard 39-inch plain material for upper part, 1 yard 54-inch novelty wool for lower part, etc.

The dress is attractive for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5870—If you use printed heavy crêpe de Chine, printed silk crêpe or novelty crêpe satin for the long upper part of a narrow dress and plain to match for the wrap-around lower part, you will have a delightful separate frock and one which can be worn also with a coat as an ensemble costume. It slips on over the head and has a close-fitting hipline. Silk crêpe with contrasting color, crêpe satin with the reverse side, etc., are fashionable combinations. Lower edge $43\frac{1}{2}$ inches.

36 bust requires $2\frac{1}{4}$ yards 39-inch printed silk for upper part, $\frac{7}{8}$ yard 39-inch plain silk for lower part, etc.

The dress is suitable for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

THE DRESS IN ENSEMBLE EFFECT, INVERTED PLAITS, V NECKS, CLOSE-FITTING AND PUFFED SLEEVES ARE IMPORTANT STYLES

5860—Light-weight wool jersey or jersey tubing or light-weight flannel with a detachable or attached collar and cuffs of same material in contrast or of white linen makes an attractive one-piece slip-over dress. It has a straight lower edge. Use flat crêpe, plain Canton crêpe, etc.

36 bust requires 2 yards 54-inch wool jersey tubing. Lower edge 54 inches.

Dress is for ladies 32 to 46 bust.

5803—5903—With a sleeveless one-piece dress of flannel wear a blouse of cotton voile or crêpe de Chine in peasant style. The slip-over dress has a close-fitting hipline and may omit the inserted plait at each side in front. The blouse may be longer and omit smocking. Lower edge 55 inches.

36 bust requires 1½ yard 54-inch flannel, 2¾ yards 39-inch cotton voile.

Dress is for ladies 33 to 48 bust, also misses; blouse for figures 32 to 40 bust.

5892—This one-piece slip-over dress with a straight lower edge is especially designed for light-weight half-and-half or bordered wools. It has a close-fitting hipline.

36 bust requires 2⅛ yards 56-inch half-and-half material. Lower edge 45 inches.

It is for ladies 33 to 46 bust, also misses.

5891—5549—Plaid, striped or checked wool with plain to match will make a smart slip-over ensemble frock. The straight lower part, which has an inverted plait at the center front and back, is joined at a close-fitting hipline. Her hat has a four-gored crown.

36 bust requires 1⅜ yard 54-inch plain and 1⅝ yard 39 to 46-inch novelty cloth for dress. Lower edge plaits out, 1⅝ yd.

Dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust; hat for ladies and misses.

5884—The V neck with its detachable vestee, the neat cuffs and close-fitting hipline make this a smart one-piece slip-over dress. Use plaid, striped or checked wool materials with plain flannel and bone buttons to match predominating color in the dress, or use cashmere dress goods, etc.

36 bust requires 2⅜ yards 54-inch plaid wool. Lower edge 44 inches.

It is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5903—You may use many attractive color combinations in the smocking of this blouse in peasant style and overblouse length. In shorter length wear it as a guimpe.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 40 bust.

5902—A one-piece dress you may wear on the street has an underfront of plaid or printed silk extending to the underarm seams in ensemble effect, the seams left open a short distance for ease in walking. It has a close-fitting hipline and slips on over the head. Use soft twills, cashmere dress goods, wool rep, wool crêpe, ribbed silks, etc.

36 bust requires 2⅛ yards 54-inch cloth and 1½ yard 35-inch silk. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

Butterick Patterns with the Delton Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

Dress and bloomers 5875

Dress 5897

Dress 5822

Dress 5794

Dress 5870
Embroidery design 10223

Dress and bloomers 5911
Embroidery design 10243

Coat 5899
Hat 5904

5899

5911

5870

5897

5875

5907

Reefer coat 5907
Tam-o'-shanter 5416
Embroidery design 10939

5822

5794

PUFFED SLEEVES, BOSOM FRONTS AND CIRCULAR SKIRTS ARE NEW

5875—Cotton prints with white lawn, or pin-check gingham with an attached or detachable collar and cuffs of white or natural colored linen make an adorable slip-over dress in raglan style. It has separate bloomers and a straight lower edge. One may use light-weight checked flannel with pongee, light-weight wool jersey or flannel with white rep or linen, etc.

5 years requires 2⅛ yards 35-inch cotton print.

The dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5897—For this slip-over dress use plain Georgette, chiffon or chiffon voile with a camisole and narrow drop skirt of satin to match, and a ribbon girdle and flowers in a harmonizing color. It closes under the left arm and has a two-piece circular skirt joined at a low waistline. The neck may be cut higher for afternoon and the armholes normal instead of cut down.

17 years requires 3 yards 39-inch Georgette. Lower edge of drop skirt 46 inches.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20, also small women.

5899—5904—Soft-pile fabrics or cashmere coatings with floss stitching, or kasha or twills with the same material in contrast are suitable for this coat. One may use kasha, broadcloth, twills, ribbed wools or ribbed silks with novelty braid. Her hat of taffeta, velveteen, etc., has a four-gored crown.

4 years requires 1⅛ yard 54-inch cloth for coat.

The coat is for little girls 2 to 6 years; the hat for girls 2 to 12 years.

5822—One might relate this one-piece slip-over dress to a coat by lining the coat with the same plaid silk as the bosom, collar and puffs. Use soft twills, cashmere dress goods, wool rep, wool crêpe, kasha or ribbed silks, or with silk crêpe in contrast use heavy satin or silk crêpe. It has a close-fitting hipline.

16 years requires 1⅞ yard 54-inch kasha and ⅞ yard 35-inch plaid silk. Lower edge 41½ inches.

The dress is for misses 16 to 20 years, also ladies 38, 40 bust.

5870—10223—The wrap-around lower part of this narrow slip-over dress may be made of the coat material—ribbed wools, cashmere suitings, fine twills, kasha, ribbed silk or satin, and the long upper part of Canton crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine in self-color, etc. The dress fits closely at the hipline. Work embroidery in colors. Lower edge 41 inches.

17 years or 34 bust requires 1⅞ yard 39-inch silk crêpe and ½ yard 54-inch cloth.

Dress is for misses 16 to 18 years or 33 to 35 bust, also ladies.

5794—Use soft light-weight flannel, light-weight wool jersey, plain tub silks, silk Canton crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine with bone buttons and a silk tie for this one-piece slip-over dress with a plait at the left side. The collar and cuffs may be detachable.

16 years or 33 bust requires 2⅛ yards 54-inch wool jersey. Lower edge 42 inches.

The dress is for misses 16 to 18 years or 33 to 35 bust, also ladies.

5911—10243—Tiny flower motifs trim this slip-over dress with separate bloomers and a collar and cuffs which may be detachable. Use light-weight flannel with collar and cuffs of white rep or poplin or same material in contrast, pin-check gingham or cotton prints with white lawn, chambray with white poplin, etc. Work motifs in colors.

5 years requires 2⅛ yards 32-inch chambray.

The dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5907—5416—10939—Smaller girls look adorable in a reefer in boyish style and a tam-o'-shanter. This reefer may have a detachable collar and be shorter. Use serge or cheviot with brass buttons and the regulation emblem on the sleeve; or use tweed, homespun, mixtures or checks with bone buttons. Use heavy flannel, cotton velours, etc., for tam.

5 years requires 1⅜ yard 44-inch serge for reefer.

The reefer coat is for girls 2 to 10 years; tam-o'-shanter for children, girls, misses and ladies.

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

SHIRRED SKIRTS, PLAITS, TIERS AND STRIPES ARE SMART

5900—Striped wash silks make up very prettily into a slip-over dress of this type. The one-piece upper part has a straight lower edge and a straight band. One may use plain wash silks, silk Canton crêpe, flat crêpe, etc., with same material in contrast and a tie of striped crêpe de Chine in harmonizing colors. A white dress with the band, etc., of pastel colors is smart. Lower edge 48 inches.

16 years requires 2⅞ yards 35-inch striped wash silk.

The dress is good style for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5805—Almond green with beige or white, French blue with white, etc., are delightful color combinations for this one-piece slip-over dress with flat tiers. Use Canton crêpe, taffeta, satin or crêpe de Chine of good weight, with black bone buttons and the collar, cuffs, etc., of same material in contrast. One may use wool crêpe or soft twills with silk braid bindings to match and plaid silk collar and cuffs.

13 years requires 2¾ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine.

The dress is becoming to juniors and girls 8 to 15 years.

5894—Hand drawn-work or machine-hemstitching is a simple and smart trimming for this one-piece slip-over dress with a cluster of plaits at each side in front and back. Use crêpe satin, silk crêpe, crêpe de Chine, Georgette, chiffon voile; or without drawn-work use printed crêpe de Chine, Georgette, chiffon voile, etc., with plain to match.

17 years requires 3 yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine. Lower edge, plaits drawn out, 1¾ yard.

The dress is smart for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5886—10317—A shirred or gathered straight skirt joined to a long body makes a simple graceful style for young girls. The dress slips on over the head. Use crêpe satin, Canton crêpe, heavy crêpe de Chine, crêpe faille or flat crêpe with same material in a color to harmonize with the embroidery. These rose motifs are easily worked in one-stitch, etc.

17 years requires 3 yards 39-inch crêpe satin. Lower edge 1¾ yard.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5887—The junior finds this one-piece slip-over dress very smart for school or general wear. The collar may be detachable. Use striped wash silks, flannel or challis with plain to match and bone buttons, flannel with same material in contrast or white linen, rep or piqué, soft twills with white linen, rep or piqué, etc. Plain wash silks, Canton crêpe, heavy crêpe de Chine, pongee or heavy cotton crêpe with contrasting color are smart.

12 years requires 2¼ yards 32-inch striped challis.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15 years.

5868—5561—This one-piece dress and its scarf are easily made of printed crêpe de Chine, silk crêpe, Georgette, chiffon, chiffon voile, etc., with plain to match. The dress has a straight lower edge and slips on over the head. The wrap-around hat is smart in satin, corded silks, flannel, duvetyn, etc. Lower edge 50½ inches.

16 years requires 2¾ yards 39-inch printed silk for dress.

The dress is attractive for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women; the hat for misses and ladies.

5883—This slip-over dress has a lower part joined to an upper part in fancy outline, making it possible to use hair-line striped challis, silks or light-weight flannel with plain to match, or soft twills or wool crêpe with silk crêpe in a harmonizing color. There are inverted plaits at each side in both front and back of lower part. You may use light-weight flannel, Canton crêpe, pongee, etc.

12 years requires 1⅝ yard 27-inch plain and 2⅜ yards 27-inch hair-line striped flannel.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15 years.

5879—10954—Embroidery gives a touch of color to this slip-over dress with a straight lower edge. The bloomers are separate. Use crêpe de Chine, pongee, chambray, cotton pongee, light-weight cotton crêpe, of one material or with same material in contrast. Or use small cotton or silk prints or pin-check gingham with plain to match. Work the embroidery in colors.

4 years requires 2⅛ yards 32-inch chambray and ⅜ yard 32-inch contrasting material.

The dress is quaint for little girls 2 to 6 years.

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.

YOUNG GIRLS SELECT A SLEEVELESS BASQUE FROCK, A SEPARATE SCARF, SLASHED TUNICS, ETC.

5792—5218—10246—A collar and cuffs which may come off for frequent freshening, and a separate scarf make this wrap-around one-piece dress appropriate for general wear. Embroidery trims the hat and the dress. Use soft twills, wool rep, kasha, cashmere dress goods, silk-and-wool faille or silk faille with contrasting crêpe de Chine, etc.

17 years requires 2½ yards 54-inch soft twill for dress. Lower edge 44 inches.

Dress is for misses 16 to 20, also small women; hat for misses and ladies.

5885—When he outgrows or outwears his rompers put your small boy in a suit with a blouse and straight trousers. The collar and cuffs may be detachable. Use linen, linen-finished cottons, chambray, rep, poplin, pongee, silk-and-cotton jersey, wool jersey or serge; or use a blouse of linen or crash with serge or one of poplin with tweed or wool jersey trousers. Wool jersey in two colors is attractive.

3 years requires 1¼ yard 35-inch linen.

The suit is for little boys 2 to 7 years.

5732—5877—When a youthful prince visited the States, he set the fashion for golf knickers in this new length. In tweeds, homespun, mixtures, wool khaki, cheviot, serge, corduroy, etc., they should be worn with an outing or negligée shirt of cotton or silk broadcloth, madras, etc. The shirt has an attached low one-piece collar or neckband and cuffs in either regulation or French style, or wristbands.

15½ inches neck and 36 inches waist require 3⅜ yards 31-inch madras and 1⅞ yard 54-inch tweed.

Shirt is for men or boys 11 to 18½ neck; knickers for men 32 to 46 waist.

5806—Front and back tunics joined at the hipline give a smart silhouette to this one-piece slip-over dress. The inverted tucks are a new trimming and the collar and cuffs may be detachable. Use light-weight cashmere, soft twills, wool crêpe or silk-and-wool crêpe with collar and cuffs of silk faille and bone buttons; or use crêpe satin with lace collar and cuffs and glass buttons.

17 years requires 2½ yards 54-inch soft twill. Lower edge 42 inches.

The dress is for misses 16 to 20 years, also ladies 38 bust.

5874—This one-piece slip-over frock is an excellent choice for a day full of classroom appointments, campus strolls, or for general wear. It has a straight lower edge and the collar and cuffs may be detachable. Use light-weight wool jersey tubing, wool jersey or flannel with collar and cuffs in same material in contrast or white linen; or use plain wash silks, Canton crêpe or flat crêpe with contrasting color, striped wash silks with plain to match, etc.

16 years requires 1⅞ yard 54-inch wool jersey tubing. Lower edge 54 inches.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5889—Tiers are very smart for a younger girl. For this one-piece slip-over dress use silk crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine with contrasting crêpe de Chine, pongee with same material in contrast; or use soft twills or light-weight flannel with pongee for collar and cuffs which may be detachable. Soft wool crêpe with same material in contrast makes an attractive frock.

7 years requires 2¼ yards 35 or 39 inch silk crêpe.

The dress is adorable for girls 4 to 10 years.

5903—5881—A sleeveless slip-over frock of crêpe de Chine, silk crêpe, soft satin or taffeta and a blouse in peasant style of cotton voile or crêpe de Chine are picturesque. The basque joins to a straight skirt at a low waist line. The blouse, which is shorter when worn as a guimpe, may omit smocking or shirring.

16 years requires 2½ yards 35-inch taffeta and 32 bust requires 2¼ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine for blouse. Lower edge 1⅞ yard.

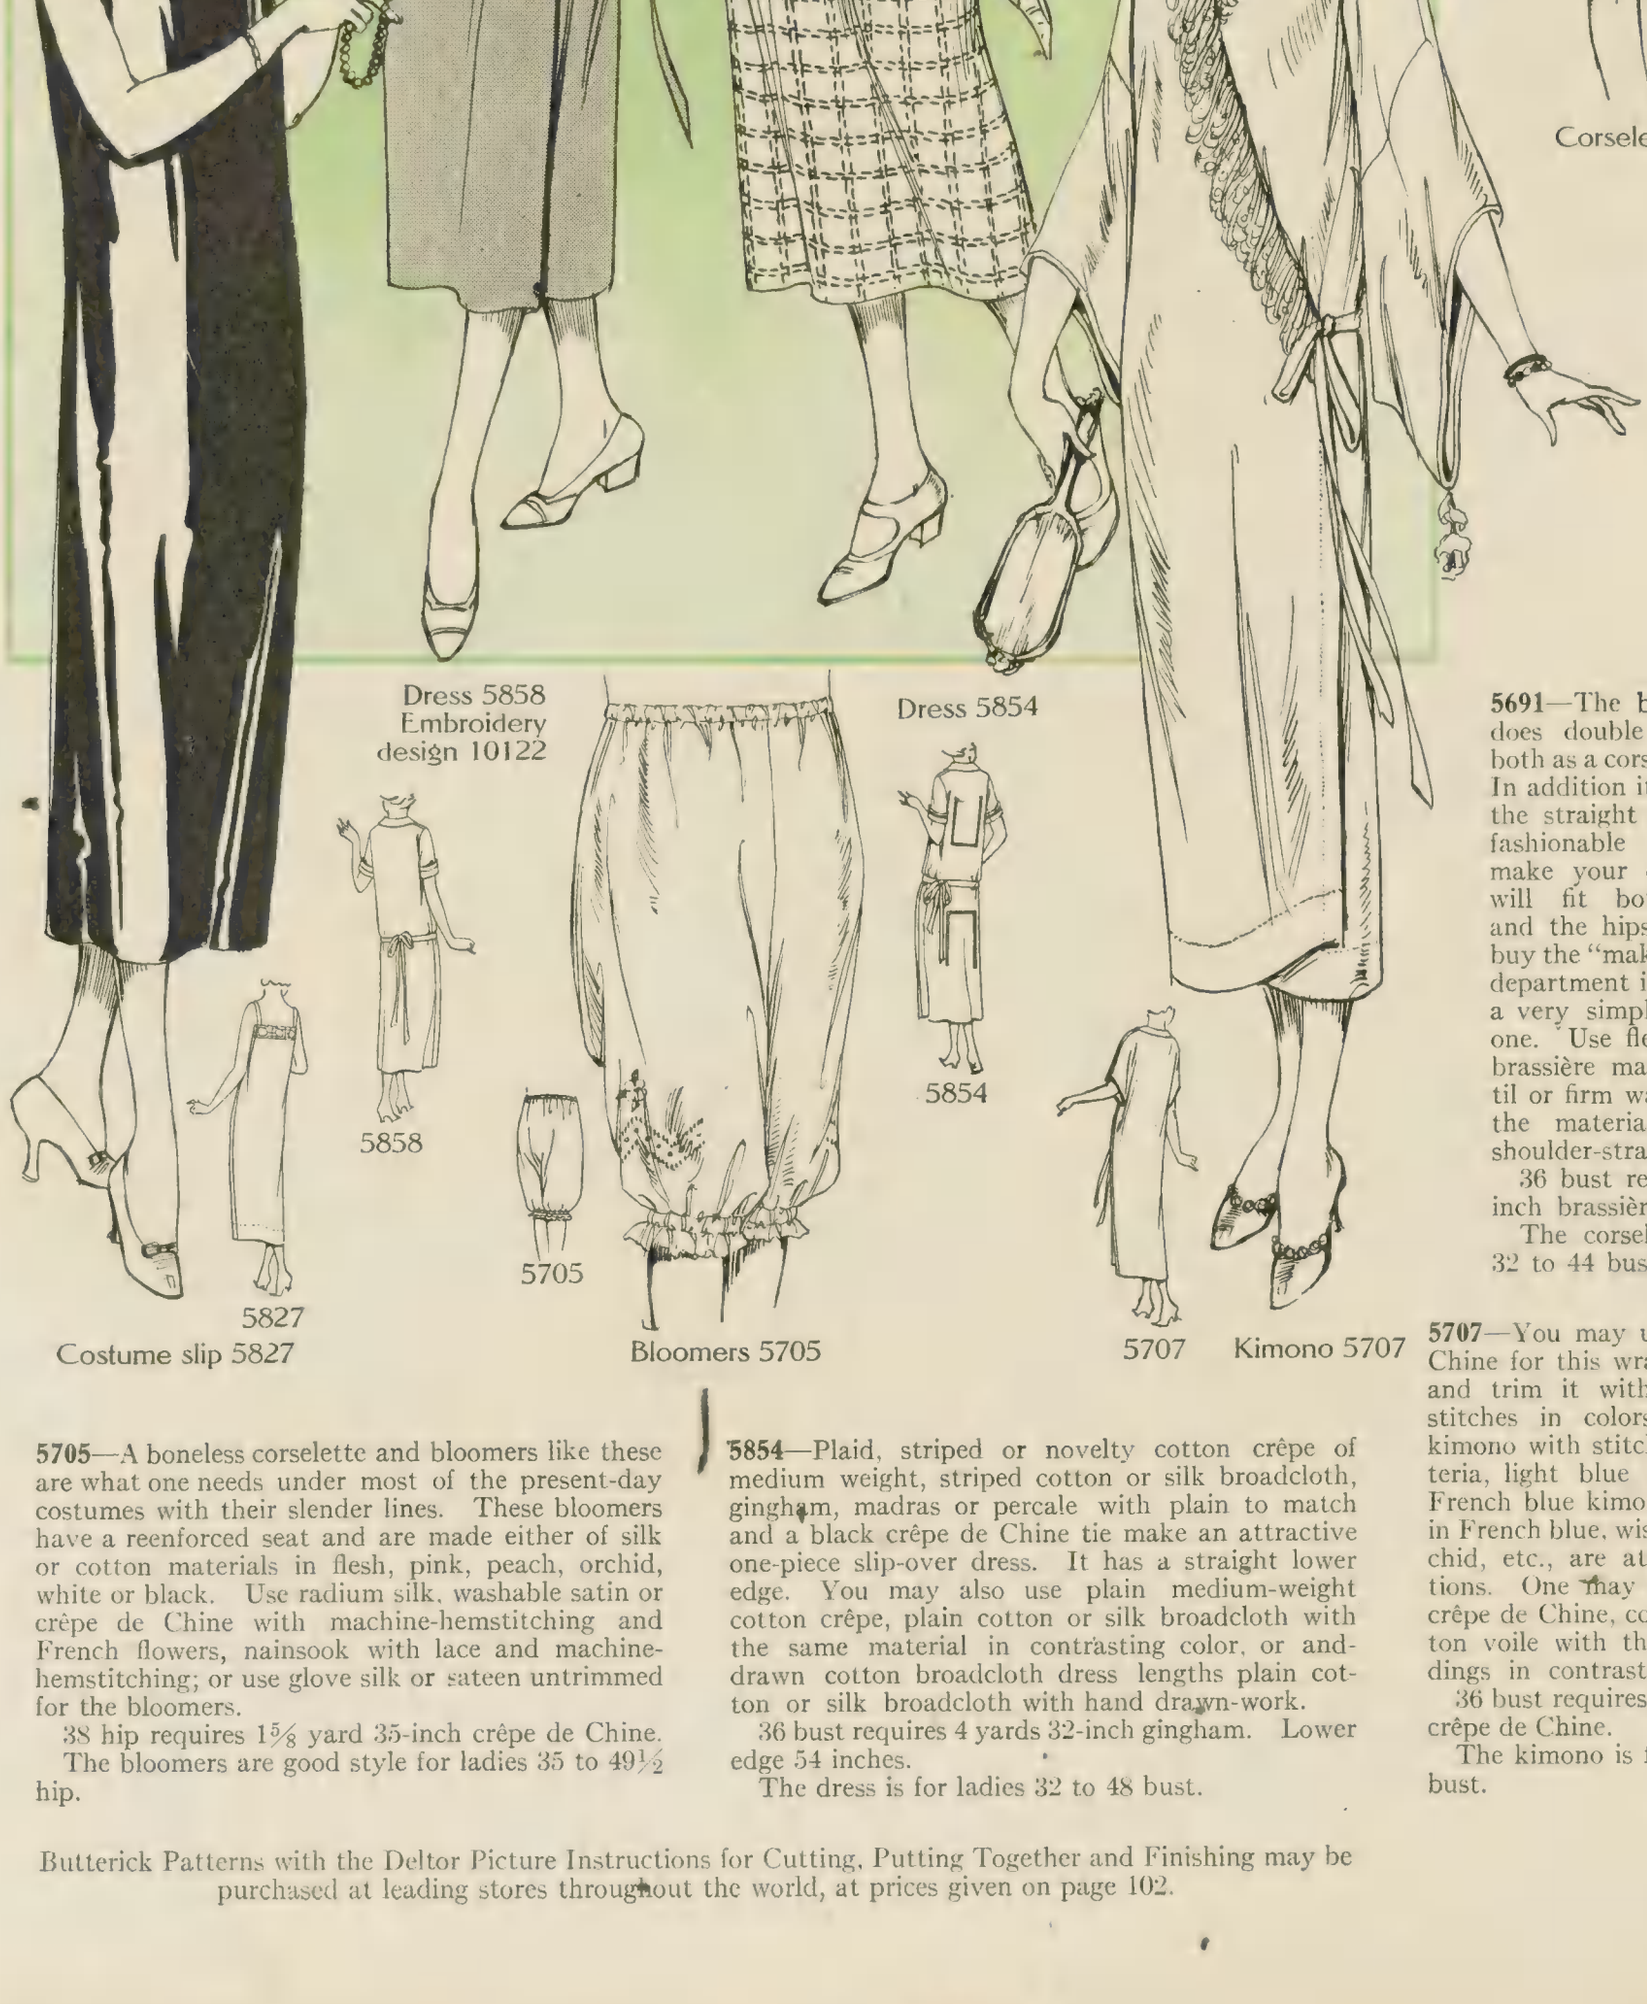
Dress is for misses 15 to 20 years; blouse for figures 32 to 40 bust.

5901—This two-piece dress in Peter Pan style has a plaited straight skirt joined to an underbody and a collar and cuffs which may be detachable. Use silk crêpe, pongee, heavy crêpe de Chine, light-weight flannel with the same material in contrast or faille silk with contrasting crêpe de Chine, etc.

13 years requires 2 yards 54-inch flannel.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 16 years.

THE NEW LINGERIE, A KIMONO AND DRESSES FOR SPRING SEWING



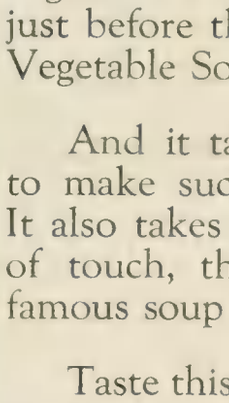
5284

Nightgown 5284
Embroidery design 10210

5284—10210—The newest nightgowns have deep armholes trimmed with lace or bands of contrasting material or color. You may make this slip-over nightgown of crêpe de Chine or use cotton fabrics. Cotton voile, cotton crêpe, nainsook, longcloth, batiste, handkerchief linen and dimity are all suitable. A butterfly makes an effective trimming. Work it in outline, satin-stitch or French stemming and eyelets. Lower edge 1¾ yard.

36 bust requires 2⅞ yards 35 or 39 inch crêpe de Chine.

The nightgown is the correct type for ladies 32 to 44 bust.



~and Campbell's chefs make them taste even better than they look!

The pride of the finest gardens! The glory of nature's most perfect and tempting vegetable foods! Here they are, pictured just before they are made into Campbell's Vegetable Soup!

And it takes vegetables just this good to make such wonderful vegetable soup. It also takes more—the skill, the delicacy of touch, the enthusiasm of Campbell's famous soup chefs.

Taste this soup today. Let the children eat it freely—it's splendid for them. Fifteen vegetables. Invigorating beef broth. Hearty cereals. Herbs and seasoning. Thirty-two ingredients. And what delicious flavor!

21 kinds
12 cents a can

If all the people Campbell's serve
With vigor, health and mirth,
Should stand in line, the mighty curve
Would reach around the earth!

LUNCHEON — DINNER — SUPPER

RAISIN COOKERY LESSONS BY FAMOUS COOKS

NUMBER FOUR  OF THE SERIES

Inexpensive, simple—yet so good!

Try these puddings by Mrs. Rorer

By SARAH TYSON RORER, author and editor for 33 years. On staff of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, 1897-1911. Principal Philadelphia School of Domestic Science. Lecturer. Author: "Mrs. Rorer's New Cook Book" and sixteen other well known works

No doubt the first pudding was a simple porridge made more tasty by the addition of sun-cured grapes, or raisins. And still we turn to these tempting nuggets of stored-up sunshine when we want to give our modern puddings a special goodness.

Rice boiled with raisins is early recorded as a "wholesome and palatable pudding, and when served with whole milk forms a perfect food for the old and young."

Our common rice pudding, doubtless, evolved from this idea. We have changed only the method of cooking. Baking evaporates a portion of the water from the milk, and long cooking intensifies the flavor of the other ingredients.

Rice Pudding

Wash four tablespoonfuls of rice in cold water, put in with one quart of milk in a baking dish, add three tablespoonfuls of sugar and a quarter of a package of Sun-Maid Seedless Raisins. Cook in the oven until the rice seems to come to the top, stirring down the "crust" three or four times. Serve cold. If carefully made, this pudding is creamy, not thick. If too thick, you have cooked it too long. Too rapid cooking will sometimes cause pudding to boil over or curdle.

Tapioca, sago and Cream of Wheat, with milk, eggs and raisins also make excellent, quick, simple puddings. One recipe may be used for all.

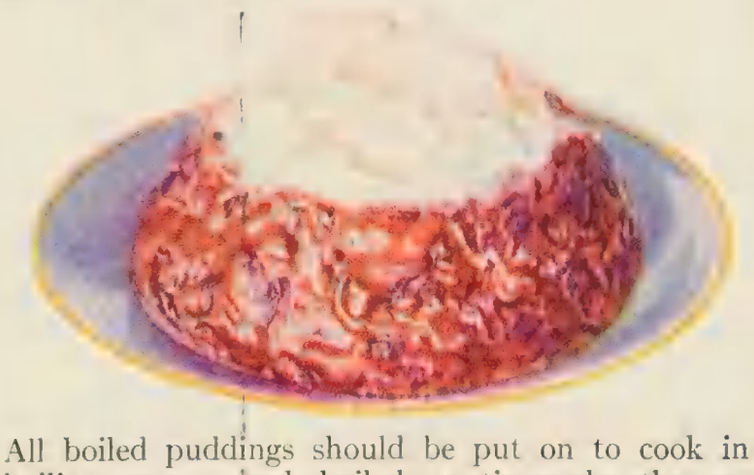
Tapioca Custard

Put three tablespoonfuls of granulated tapioca in one quart of milk. Soak ten minutes. Chop or cut into halves a quarter of a package of Sun-Maid Seeded Raisins. Cook milk and tapioca in a double boiler fifteen minutes; add one egg beaten with three tablespoonfuls of sugar, cook a moment, take from the fire, add a teaspoonful of vanilla and the raisins. Serve cold with sweetened whipped cream; garnish with maraschino cherry.

Among the bread puddings we have the Bachelor's Pudding, made from materials easily obtainable.

Bachelor's Pudding

(Not illustrated)



Pare, core and chop sufficient apples to make one pint, add to them half a package of Sun-Maid Seedless Raisins, two cupfuls of stale, not dry, bread crumbs and two tablespoonfuls of sugar. Mix well and work in three well beaten eggs and a quarter of a nutmeg, grated. Boil in a buttered mold one and a half hours. Serve with orange sauce.

An English plum pudding seems to most housewives a rich pudding, costly both in time and money. In days gone by, when one had to seed the raisins, wash the currants, and chop the suet by hand, it did take hours of time. But now we use Sun-Maid Seedless Raisins in place of currants, purchase, at the same cost, Sun-Maid Seeded Raisins already seeded, and omit the suet.

In place of the old-fashioned heavy pudding we have an inexpensive and delicious pudding that can be made easily and quickly from materials found upon the pantry shelves of every household.

The new plum pudding

Put half a cupful of brown sugar in a bowl, add half a cupful of sour milk, a quarter of a cupful of black molasses; mix well and add one tablespoonful of olive oil or two of melted butter. Beat five minutes. Add half a teaspoonful of baking soda dissolved in one tablespoonful of water, beat a moment and stir in gradually one and a half cupfuls of pastry flour that has been sifted with a tablespoonful of cinnamon, a saltspoonful of cloves, and a teaspoonful of baking powder. Have ready separated a half package of Sun-Maid Seeded Raisins mixed with half a package of Sun-Maid Seedless Raisins lightly floured with a half cup of pastry flour. Mix these into the batter and put into a well greased mold. Cover and boil two hours. Serve hot with a liquid pudding sauce.

All boiled puddings should be put on to cook in boiling water, and boiled continuously the required time. Do not cover the mold with water. If the water evaporates during the boiling, replenish with boiling water.

Ordinary tin kettles with lids, coffee tins or even baking powder tins, may be substituted in place of molds. Covers of molds should be greased carefully to prevent top of pudding from sticking.

The proper method of dishing a boiled pudding is to dip the mold in cold water, let it stand a minute, loosen the edges with a knife and turn it out carefully, holding the serving dish near the mold.

—Sarah Tyson Rorer.

THIS is the Sun-Maid Girl—an insigne of quality the world over. Look for her on products of the Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California

SUN-MAID

2276

THE STANDARD OF RAISIN EXCELLENCE THE WORLD OVER

SUN-MAID Raisins are dried in the sun in beautiful clusters, just as they come from the vine. For your convenience they are then stripped from the stems and packed, seeded or seedless, in cartons—clean as the sunshine that made them, ready for use

There IS a difference in Raisins

To make sure of the very finest results in your cooking, select them in this way:

Select raisins as you do any other fruit—for flavor, sweetness, size, color and cleanliness.

You will not find it necessary to open the package and inspect the contents. Just ask for Sun-Maid Raisins. Then you will be sure of getting perfect raisins always.

When you use them in your cooking, you will notice a wonderful difference in flavor.

This flavor, so rich and delicate, is characteristic of the raisins grown in the beautiful San Joaquin and Sacramento valleys of California. Here soil and climate combine to produce the sweetest and tenderest grapes in the world. And only the choicest of these are used in making Sun-Maid Raisins.

In heavy, beautiful clusters the grapes are allowed to ripen upon the vines until the moment when they are richest in natural sweetness and flavor. Then, filled to bursting with their goodness, they are laid on trays in the mellow California sunshine.

Nature does the rest. There is no artificial curing. In the warm, clean sunshine the grapes become Sun-Maid Raisins—large, plump, juicy, with an inimitable delicacy of flavor.

They come to you in sanitary packages, packed by machinery and thoroughly sterilized, as clean as the sunshine that made them. They do not, of course, require washing before use.

You can use these perfect raisins freely, for they are inexpensive now—cheaper than they have been for years. Buy a package today and try them in the interesting recipes which Mrs. Rorer has given you on the opposite page.

[FREE The new Sun-Maid cook book, 130 unusual and practical recipes, suggestions for afternoon teas, luncheons, children's dishes. Compiled and tested by Mrs. Belle De Graf. Just mail the coupon]

SUN-MAID RAISIN GROWERS OF CALIFORNIA, FRESNO, CALIF.

RAISINS

Seeded, in the blue package, large, juicy, rich in flavor

Seedless, in the red package, grown without seeds, plump, meaty nuggets of sweetness

Clusters, for between meal eating, a healthful confection

Paste this chart in your cook book

JUST ADD SUN-MAID RAISINS to YOUR

Biscuit Dough

Raisin biscuits
Raisin roll (roll out, spread with raisins, sugar and cinnamon, roll and bake)
Cinnamon twists
Steamed Raisin Dumpling

Breakfast Breads

Raisin muffins
Raisin doughnuts
Raisin cornbread
Sally Lunn
Cinnamon buns

Breakfast Cereals

Oatmeal
Cream of Wheat
Cornmeal mush

Pies

Apple, rhubarb, pumpkin, lemon, butterscotch, peach, cranberry, cocoanut

Simple Puddings

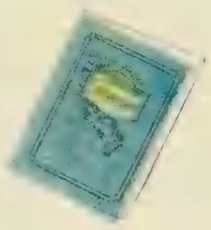
Rice, custard, bread, tapioca, cornstarch, brown betty

Cakes

Layer, tea, drop, spice, loaf. (Flour raisins slightly before adding to batter)

Candies

Raisins and nut balls (ground raisins and nuts made into balls and rolled in sugar)



Raisin fudge, penoche, caramels

Raisins dipped in sweet chocolate

NOTE: Practical recipes for these and many other delightful foods can be had by mailing the coupon below

COUPON

Sun-Maid Raisin Growers of California
Dept. A-203, Fresno, Calif.
Please send me "Recipes with Raisins."

NAME

ADDRESS

CITY

STATE

Some improvements in frying

WHEN we get home late or company comes in unexpectedly our thoughts naturally turn to the frying pan as the quickest way to cook a tasty meal.

Whenever I think of the frying pan I think of Crisco, as Crisco is just as much of a help as the frying pan is. With Crisco we can fry everything without any smoke. When we are through we can save every drop of Crisco for the next fry, no matter what it is, because Crisco doesn't take the taste of foods cooked in it. You would never know it was used before.

I have found that the foods I fry in Crisco are the best I have ever eaten and the most attractive I have ever seen. They are never greasy either, as Crisco, the wholesome vegetable shortening, doesn't stick to the food. It simply cooks them in a delicious way as any of the recipes given below will show you. For the same reasons, I always use Crisco for deep frying.

As a matter of fact, I use Crisco for all my cooking. I'll confess I was never sure of my pies until I got to using Crisco. I like Crisco for cakes, too, because they come out even and whole and they never fall. Everyone who tastes them thinks they are made with butter. W. S. C.

CRISCO also makes delicious cakes, pies and hotbreads

How to fry without smoke

Free! 200 tested recipes

Gathered from the whole wide world by Miss Olive S. Allen. To secure this cook book free, simply send your name and address to Section F-3. Dept. of Home Economics, The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Crisco is the trade-mark for a superior shortening manufactured and guaranteed purely vegetable, by The Procter & Gamble Company, Cincinnati, Ohio, U. S. A.

© 1925 by The Procter & Gamble Company, Cincinnati, Ohio

Breaded Veal Cutlet

This needs plenty of Crisco — but the Crisco is never wasted. Whatever is left in the frying pan strain back into the can and use it over and over again. You will be surprised to see how little has been used.

1 slice of veal, cut about ¾" thick
1 egg, beaten. ½ doz. soda crackers
Crisco

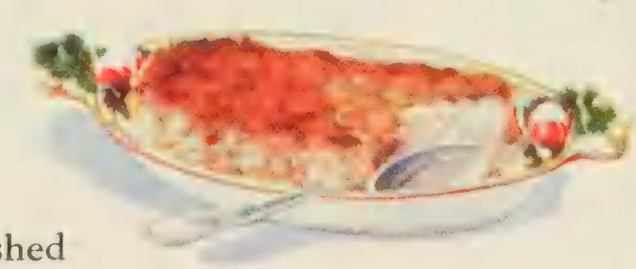
Cut the veal into cutlets wherever it is veined. Roll the crackers fine. Dip the cutlets first in the crackers, then in the egg and then again in the crackers. Dust with salt and pepper on both sides.

Heat the Crisco in a frying pan, having it deep enough to cover the cutlet half way up. Then cook slowly on one side until nearly done; then turn and cook on the other side until brown.

French Toast

A different way to make it. You are sure to like it if you fry it in Crisco. Use plenty of Crisco to fry an even brown without sticking to the pan. The Crisco will not be wasted. Strain what is left and use it again for the next thing you want to fry.

1 cup sour milk
¼ teaspoon soda
1 egg
1 tablespoon sugar
¾ cup flour
¼ teaspoon salt
Bread cut into slices



Beat milk and soda together with egg beater. Add sugar, salt and unbeaten egg. Continue beating with the egg beater until smooth; then beat in the flour. Put about 4 or 5 tablespoons of Crisco in cold frying pan, heat slowly and when hot dip the bread one slice at a time in the batter, covering both sides. Put into the hot Crisco; fry until brown on one side, turn and fry on the other side. Serve hot with syrup or honey. This will make about 8 slices.

Fried Apples

An attractive way to serve them and easy to fry perfectly without smoke when you use Crisco.

Peel and core 3 large apples. Cut them in slices half an inch thick. Dip each slice in cold milk, then roll in flour. Put enough Crisco in frying pan to entirely cover the bottom, and when hot put in the apples. Fry on both sides to an even golden brown — about two minutes for each side. Remove with a skimmer, drain on soft paper, dust with powdered sugar, serve alone, or on special occasions, as a garnish for crown roast of lamb as pictured above.

Hashed Brown Potatoes

(with or without green peppers)

Delicious either way and you can fry them to a lovely golden brown in Crisco without smoke or scorching.

6 medium-size cold boiled potatoes
Salt and pepper
3 raw green peppers
Crisco

Chop potatoes fine, season with salt and pepper. Remove seeds and stems from peppers. Wash, drain and chop fine. Mix with potatoes. Put in enough Crisco to completely cover the bottom of the frying pan. Heat slowly. When hot add potatoes and cook slowly, stirring occasionally with a fork. When partly brown fold into omelet shape in one side of the frying pan. Fry until a rich brown. Turn out on platter, keeping the omelet shape.

Fish

(3 New Hints)

1 Use enough Crisco to partly cover the fish
2 Fry slowly and do not turn until almost done
3 Turn only once

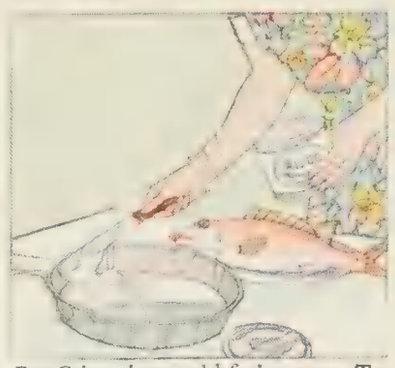
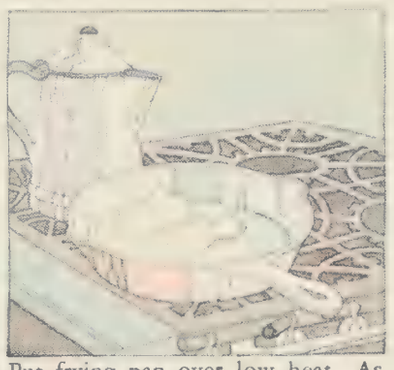
Fried without smoke; fried without wasting left over Crisco; fried without breaking. Don't be afraid to use plenty of Crisco. It won't be wasted even when fish is fried in it. Simply strain it back into the can and use it again.



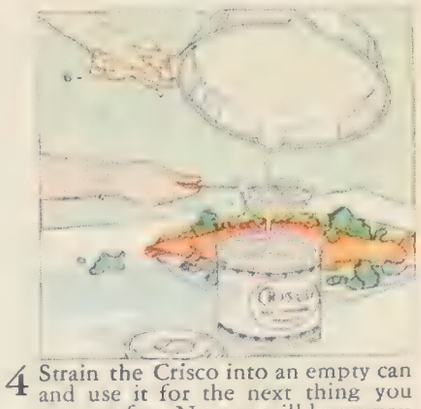
Clean the fish, leaving it whole or cut in steaks. Wash in cold water and dry in a towel. Dust with salt and pepper, roll in flour or cornmeal, and put into the frying pan when the Crisco is hot. Use a pancake turner to turn. Garnish with parsley and lemon.



French Fried Parsnips

If you like parsnips, you will like them fried this way. Fried in deep Crisco they will be browned evenly on all sides, not a bit greasy. The full natural flavor of the parsnips with no added taste of fat.

Take cold boiled parsnips, peeled either before or after boiling. Cut off the small end and then cut the large end in quarters lengthwise. Dip in milk, roll in flour, then fry in deep hot Crisco just as you would french fried potatoes. Have the Crisco heated to 385° or when a cube of bread browns in 20 seconds. When the parsnips are brown, take out and drain on soft paper. Sprinkle with salt and serve hot.



1 Put Crisco into cold frying pan. To thoroughly cook the food (for example, a fish) without smoke or scorching, fry slowly, using enough Crisco to partly cover it. It will not require the constant attention frying does when only a little fat is used.

2 Put frying pan over low heat. As soon as Crisco is melted put in a small piece of bread.

3 As soon as bread starts to brown put in the fish.
Cook slowly until fish is nearly done, then turn to brown the other side. With plenty of Crisco in the pan the fish is easily turned without breaking, if you wait until it is almost done.

4 Strain the Crisco into an empty can and use it for the next thing you want to fry. No one will know you have fried fish in it.

COLONIAL LADIES WILL BRIGHTEN YOUR BEDROOM LINENS AND THESE DESIGNS DECORATE YOUR CLOTHES

Embroidery design 10321

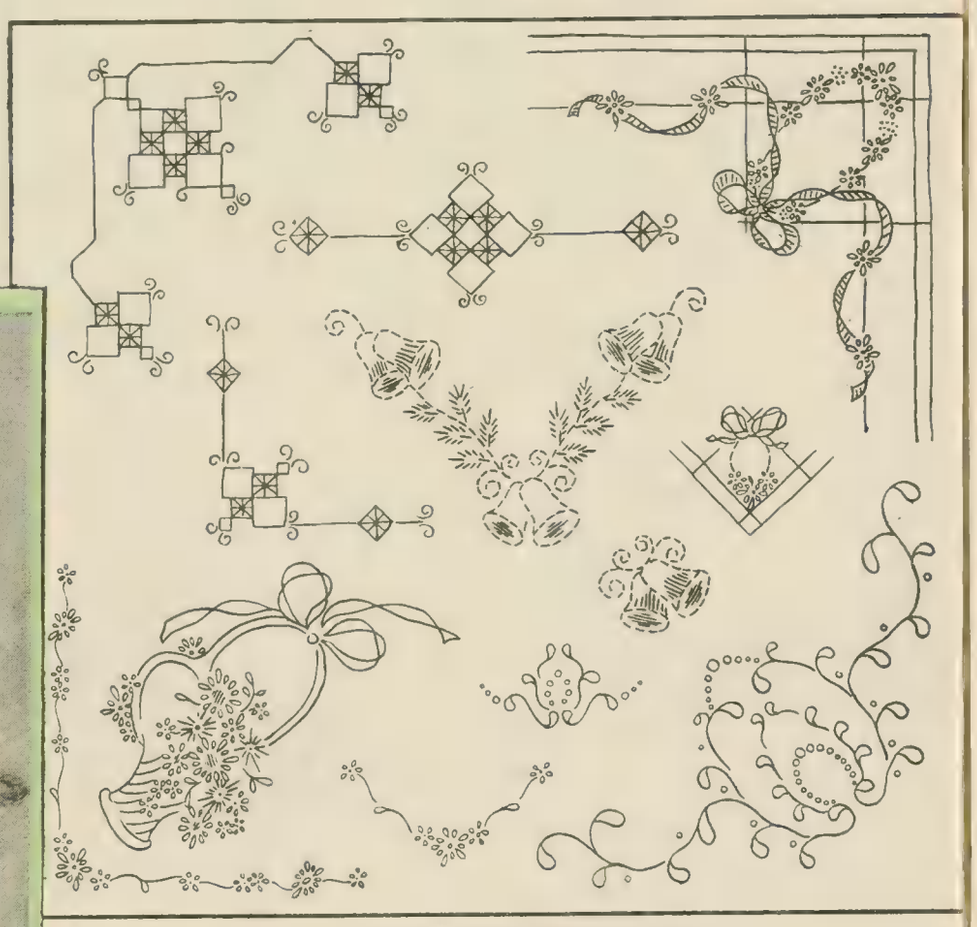
10327—Against a flowering trellis this Colonial lady views the world about her. Both she and her background may be worked in the most delightful pastel colors. There is a large center motif for the lady and four smaller spray motifs, all to be worked in lazy-daisy, one-stitch, outline and French-knot embroidery. The design contains a motif 21¼ by 27 inches for the center of a single, a double or a three-quarter bed, and 4 corner motifs.

10328—To match the bedspread, you may use curtains for two windows and two scarfs embroidered with motifs of the same design. For a wider scarf you may use the two wider motifs and for the smaller size, the two narrower motifs. The long spray motifs may be used on the sides of the scarfs or along the hem of the curtains. Work the design in outline, lazy daisy, one-stitch and French-knot embroidery. This design can be adapted to 2 motifs 18 inches wide and 2 motifs 16 inches wide for scarf ends, 2 motifs with reverses to use on your curtains, and 12 long motifs.

10321—If you haven't much time to do elaborate embroidery and yet like a touch of handwork on your clothes, one-stitch in a design of this type is your salvation. It goes quickly, does not require a great deal of work and gives color to your costumes. The motifs and bandings of this new design are suitable to use on dresses, tunic blouses, over-the-skirt blouses, as well as on coats, hats, etc. The design can be adapted to 2⅝ yards of banding 8 inches wide, 2⅝ yards of banding 2¾ inches wide, 5¼ yards of edging ½ inch wide and 24 motifs in 4 assorted styles.

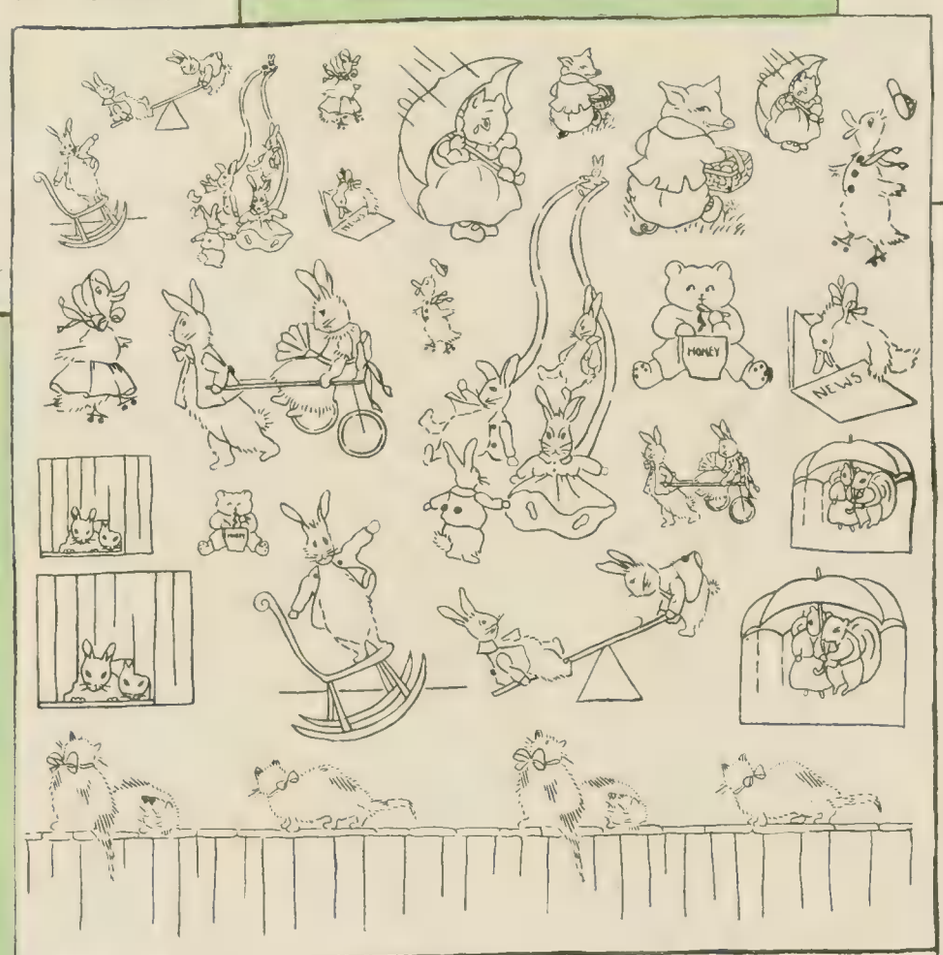
10324—An all-over beading should be effective and yet not require a great deal of tedious work. This new banding design measures up to these requirements. It gives adequate display and does not use an undue amount of beads. It is suitable to use on dresses, blouses, skirts or even on hats. If you do not care to work it in beads you may use French-knot embroidery. The design can be adapted to 1¾ yard of banding 29 inches wide and 1¾ yard of edging 1½-inch wide.

Butterick Patterns with the Deltor Picture Instructions for Cutting, Putting Together and Finishing may be purchased at leading stores throughout the world, at prices given on page 102.



POCKETS AND MOTIFS FOR YOUR CHILDREN'S CLOTHES AND SEASONABLE FRUIT-AND-FLOWER EMBROIDERIES

Embroidery design 10325



Embroidery design 10315

10315—There's a place for every motif in this embroidery. The corners and motifs are delightful for luncheon-sets, tea-cloths and napkins. Scarfs, towels and other household linens may also be decorated with this embroidery. Certain of the motifs are worked in hemstitching and drawn threads. Others should be done in cut-work, eyelets and satin-stitch; or you may use one-stitch, lazy-daisy and outline for the French basket, etc. This design can be adapted to 20 large corners in 5 assorted styles, 34 small corners in 5 assorted styles and 2 long motifs.

Embroidery design 10322

10322—Fashionable children's clothes are often trimmed with animal motifs like those in the design above. Very often you will see pockets like those illustrated, on rompers, aprons or wee frocks. In addition to the pockets, there are motifs you may use on bibs or dresses. Then if any of you want to decorate your nursery furnishings you will find a wide assortment in this embroidery. The design can be adapted to 1¾ yard of banding, 8 pockets and 78 motifs in 2 sizes and 10 assorted styles.

Embroidery design 10326

10325—Spring sewing can never begin too early especially if you make your own lingerie and embroider it daintily—as you should! The sprays, motifs and neck outline of this embroidery are the type used for nightgowns and underwear. They are worked in a combination of French knot and lazy-daisy embroidery. You may use them on children's clothes and even household linens. The design can be adapted to 1¾ yard each of banding 2½ inches wide and 1¼ inch wide, 1 neck motif and 55 assorted motifs in 12 assorted styles.

10326—Embroidery turns to gardens in the Spring and there finds inspiration for its delightful flower and fruit motifs and bandings. Those who like color on their hats and dresses may select any one of these motifs for a trimming. They are ideal for decorating household linens—scarfs, runners, towels, laundry-bags, etc. Both banding and motifs should be worked in outline, one-stitch and lazy-daisy or in applique. The design can be adapted to 1¾ yard of banding 3¾ inches wide and 42 motifs in assorted styles.

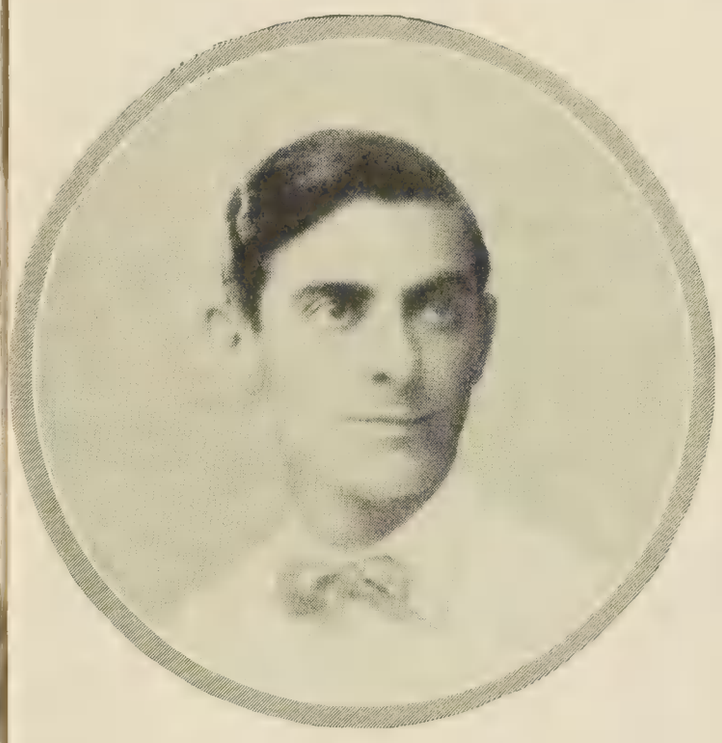
Do You Envy the Health of Others?

Read these remarkable statements of what one simple food can do

THESE remarkable reports are typical of thousands of similar tributes to Fleischmann's Yeast.

There is nothing mysterious about its action. It is not a "cure-all," not a medicine in any sense. But when the body is choked with the poisons of constipation—or when its vitality is low so that skin, stomach and general health are affected—this simple, natural food achieves literally amazing results.

Concentrated in every cake of Fleischmann's Yeast are millions of tiny yeast-plants, alive and active. At once they go to work—invigorating the whole system, clearing the skin, aiding digestion, strengthening the intestinal muscles and making them healthy and active.



Fleischmann's Yeast for Health comes only in the tinfoil package—it cannot be purchased in tablet form. All grocers have it. Start eating it today! You can order several cakes at a time, for Yeast will keep fresh in a cool, dry place for two or three days.

Dissolve one cake in a glass of water
(just hot enough to drink)

before breakfast and at bedtime. Fleischmann's Yeast, when taken this way, is especially effective in overcoming or preventing constipation. Or eat 2 or 3 cakes a day—spread on bread or crackers—dissolved in fruit juices or milk—or eat it plain.

Write for a free copy of our latest booklet on Yeast for Health: Health Research Dept. D-14, The Fleischmann Company, 701 Washington Street, New York.

"ONLY THOSE WHO HAVE SEEN me perform in 'Kid Boots' have any idea of the tax on my energy. After six months on Broadway, I felt my 'pep' waning, and I began to fear for my health. I was tired out; couldn't sleep well; every part of me just ached. A friend suggested Fleischmann's Yeast. My doctor said 'Try it.' I did. Three cakes daily . . . Soon, darned if I didn't begin to lose that draggy feeling. Improvement was steady. Best of all, sleep was restored. Fleischmann's Yeast is part of my daily diet now—like milk."

(Eddie Cantor, New York City.)

(MISS BRIAN, CENTER)

"AFTER A SEVERE ILLNESS last winter due to overwork and faulty elimination, I began taking Fleischmann's Yeast cakes twice daily.

"In two weeks' time marked improvement was noticed. The soreness of my body disappeared, daily evacuations were established, and life took on a rosier hue. Steady improvement continued, and this past summer has been wonderful in many pleasures. I feel that I owe much of my splendid physical condition now to Fleischmann's Yeast.

"I have outlined a course in Yeast for several of my students, and in every instance the desired result—overcoming constipation—has been obtained."

(Miss Celia E. Brian, R. N., Brattleboro, Vt.)

(RIGHT)

"AS OWNER AND MANAGER of a Beauty Salon, I come in daily contact with all manner of skin disorders. I unhesitatingly recommend Fleischmann's Yeast. About five years ago I was generally run down and unable to work. I was suffering from chronic constipation, indigestion, loss of vitality, and skin eruptions. I began taking Fleischmann's Yeast, three cakes a day. At the end of two months all skin eruptions had disappeared, and as if by magic I found all other troubles disappearing also. At the end of three months I was well and back at work."

(Miss Katherine Fitzgibbon, Denver, Colo.)

"I AM AN EX-BRITISH NAVAL MAN and have lived in Canada eighteen years. Soon after my arrival I commenced to suffer from indigestion and as I travelled for a fur company attributed my complaint to the inferior food at the small hotels on the branch lines in the West. For days I drank water only or soup and became so irritable was a source of annoyance to all whom I came in contact with. Having tried almost every drug advertised for indigestion commenced taking your now famous yeast cakes three daily. Result: No Indigestion—three square meals a day, splendid appetite, and feeling as fit as a fiddle strung to concert pitch."

(Reginald J. Seymour, Edmonton, Alberta)

(LEFT)

"COMING FROM THE SCHOOLROOM in June, a tired-out teacher, I was given an opportunity to do some very interesting work for several months. I felt unable physically, but I plunged in. I began taking a cake of Fleischmann's Yeast daily, then three cakes. In two weeks' time I felt less tired; and now at the end of four months' hard work my tired-out feeling has vanished, my complexion looks as it did when I was sixteen, and my constipation, that arch enemy of indoor people, is a thing of the past."

(Miss Caroline Barr, Chicago, Ill.)

There are many delicious ways of eating yeast—dissolved in water, fruit juices or milk, spread on bread, or eaten plain

FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST

THE KNACK OF MAKING GOOD OMELETS

You'd want to know how at any time—but especially now that it's Lent!

By Lucille Brewer

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

Almost everybody—and men folks particularly—likes egg. They're nourishing, ever so easy to prepare, and just at Lenten time an almost-essential article of diet. So give your family plenty of them, and if you want additional recipes for dishes and sauces, write us for them. We've more than a round half dozen that are satisfyingly "different." Just send your request and a stamped reply envelope to the Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

THE woman who can always turn out a perfect omelet has made her reputation as a cook, for it is a real achievement to be able to send to the table omelets that are consistently light, puffy and golden brown.

Omelets, it must be remembered, can be used for at least three meals—breakfast, luncheon and supper—and they may occasionally be pressed into service as a dinner dessert de luxe. Surely the art of making this versatile, satisfying and yet simple dish is well worth mastering, particularly at this season of the year when eggs are cheapest.

To begin with, one must decide whether the omelet is to be the kind known as plain, puffy or foamy, or whether it will be that distinctly different type generally spoken of as French. Omelets are of just these two kinds so far as general methods of cooking them are concerned.

The plain or "puffy" omelet is made by separating the eggs, beating the yolks until they are lemon colored, adding the liquid and then folding in the beaten whites.

Many women never succeed with omelets of this type because they have never been told that the simplest way is to cook them in the oven from the beginning. The omelet is less likely to fail if cooked in this way. If a temperature regulator or thermometer is used, it is possible to secure the same results each time because the oven can be regulated to just the right temperature. When the omelet does not cling to the knife or fingers if lightly touched, it is cooked.

The finished product should be puffy, of a light, tender, fluffy texture, and with a tender, crisp crust. If the eggs have not been beaten enough or if the omelet has cooked too rapidly, it will be tough.

Too high a temperature also will give a heavy texture. Omelets should be cooked at 300 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit, and should be served at once. Let the meal wait a few minutes rather than have the omelet toughen by standing.

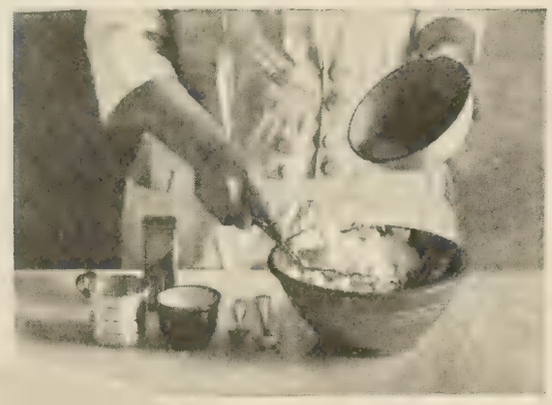
When used as the main dish, an omelet may be combined with meat, fish, fruit or vegetables. When used as a dessert, it may be combined with fresh or preserved fruit.

While a sauce is not essential, it adds to the flavor and appearance of an omelet.

THE PLAIN OR PUFFY OMELET

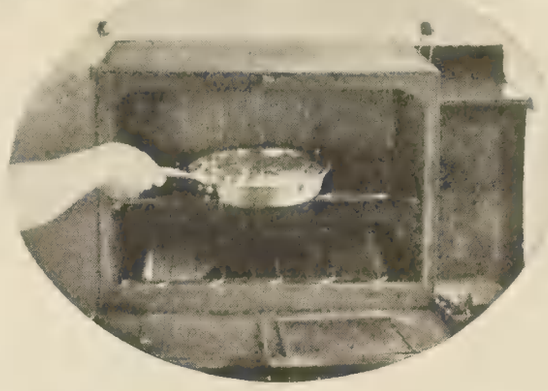
4 eggs	Salt
4 tablespoons hot water	Pepper
	1 tablespoon butter

Beat the whites until they are stiff; and beat the yolks with the seasonings until they are well mixed. Add the hot water; then fold this mixture into the egg-whites. Melt the butter in the pan, taking care to cover the entire surface with it. Turn the mixture into the pan, spread it over smoothly and let it cook, following procedure I, II or III.



Procedure I: Cook the omelet slowly on the top of the stove until it is browned underneath, until it is puffy on top and until it begins to shrink away from the sides of the pan. Finish the omelet in the oven until the top is dried and browned.

Procedure II: Set the pan in the oven and cook the omelet until it is well puffed and the top is dried and browned.

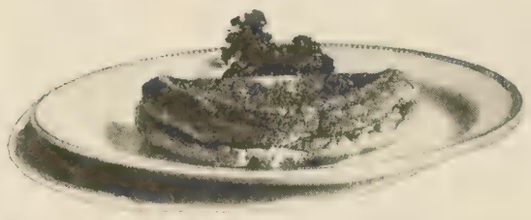


Procedure III: Cover the pan or chafing-dish closely and cook the omelet slowly, turning the pan frequently to insure even cooking on the bottom. When the omelet is well puffed and almost firm, remove the cover and finish the cooking.

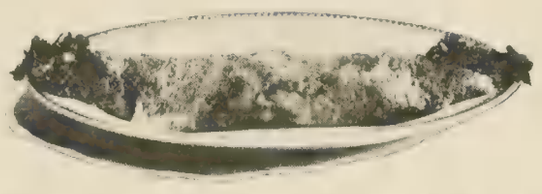
In a French omelet the yolks and whites of the eggs are beaten together

In a plain or puffy omelet the stiffly beaten whites are folded into the yolks

The simplest way of cooking an omelet is in the oven



Have the temperature 300 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit



Omelets are excellent for chafing-dish parties. Cover and cook until firm when touched with a knife

To turn an omelet successfully snip each side through to the bottom and clip the crust across with the scissors

The puffy omelet is served folded. If well made it should hold its shape and not fall

The French omelet is not turned. When cooked it is rolled with a spatula

When an omelet pan is used pour the mixture into one side and cover

When the omelet begins to rise turn the pan from side to side until brown

Always allow one egg for each serving and one tablespoon of liquid for each egg. Hot water makes the most tender omelet, but milk may be used if desired. Fruit-juices are sometimes employed for the liquid. A little Cayenne pepper and sugar may be used in addition to salt and pepper if more seasoning is desired.

Many a good omelet has come to an untimely end when an unskilled hand attempted to fold or turn it. If an omelet pan is used, all that is necessary is to turn the pan. If a skillet is used, hold the handle of the pan with the left hand and with a pair of scissors cut across the top and make two short incisions opposite each other at right angles to the handle of the pan. Place a spatula under the omelet near the handle of the pan, tip the pan, and with the spatula fold and turn the omelet into a hot platter.

THE FRENCH OMELET

French omelets are entirely different in manipulation and appearance. All the ingredients are added to the eggs—which are not separated, but instead are beaten together and turned into a pan. The French omelet is usually rolled up like a jelly roll.

4 eggs	½ teaspoon powdered sugar
4 tablespoons water	1 tablespoon butter
Salt
Cayenne

Beat the eggs and the seasoning thoroughly. Melt the butter in the hot pan and pour in the mixture. When the under side begins to cook, lift it with a fork so that the uncooked portion may flow underneath and be cooked in turn. Repeat this operation till the whole omelet is of a creamy consistency. Brown the bottom and fold the omelet.

HOW TO VARY OMELETS

Ham, chicken, veal or any left-over meat may be chopped, fried in fat, seasoned and moistened with cream. Then it may be either added to the omelet before it is cooked or inserted as a filling before the omelet is folded, or arranged around it when it is ready to be served.

Fish may be used, but should not be fried.

Cheese grated and sprinkled generously over the omelet before turning it or cheese added to a white sauce (½ cup of cheese to 1 cup white sauce) and poured around the omelet makes a tasty variation.

A vegetable omelet is delicious. Chop the vegetables and moisten them with gravy, tomato sauce or cream. Then heat them and add them to the omelet mixture, or spread them over the omelet just before serving it.

Toasted bread, spread sparingly with butter and anchovy paste, may be covered with slices of omelet and garnished with parsley.

OYSTER OMELET

4 eggs	Salt to taste
4 tablespoons oyster liquid	½ pint oysters

Prepare a French omelet, using the oyster liquid in place of water. Pour the omelet into the pan; when it is almost done, lay the panned oysters over one-half of it, fold the other half over the oysters and turn the whole onto a hot serving-dish.

OMELET PUFFS (DESSERT)

½ cup peach marmalade	2 tablespoons chopped blanched almonds
Candied cherries

Make a two-egg puffy omelet, bake it in standard-size muffin-tins, 300 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit. On a hot platter place a spoonful of marmalade, and place a serving of omelet on each. Cover with whipped cream, sprinkle it with nuts and garnish each serving with a candied cherry cut in small pieces.

CLUB OMELET

6 eggs	Salt
6 tablespoons water	Pepper

Make three French omelets, using two eggs for each. Place one omelet on a hot plate, spread it with boiled salad dressing and cover it with thinly sliced cold chicken, dill pickles, salt and pepper. Add another omelet, add salad dressing, sliced tomato and crisp bacon. Put the third omelet on top and garnish the whole with sliced stuffed olives. Place a lettuce cup holding enough mayonnaise dressing for each serving round the platter.

SALAD OMELET

2 eggs	¼ cup red pepper
2 tablespoons water	2 tablespoons Spanish onion
¼ cup green peppers	1 tablespoon minced parsley
2 tablespoons boiled salad dressing

Make a French omelet. Chop the peppers and the onion, mix them with salad dressing and spread the mixture over the omelet when it is set. Roll it up like a jelly roll. Cut it in one-inch slices, place each on a thick slice of tomato and a lettuce leaf. Serve with mayonnaise dressing.

The DUCHESSE de RICHELIEU tells how to have a Lovely Skin

"THE woman whose life is given not only to Society but to concert-singing is compelled to be concerned about her looks. She must always appear with a complexion fresh and radiant.

"Care of her skin, therefore, is an obligation with her, second only in importance to the care of her voice. This care, in my opinion, can best be obtained by the daily use of Pond's Two Creams. They keep the skin exquisitely soft and lovely."

Duchesse de Richelieu

THE DUCHESSE DE RICHELIEU

She is twice an aristocrat. Before her marriage to the head of one of the oldest houses in France she was a "Baltimore belle" of one of the first families. She is not only a social leader in France and the United States, but is gifted with a lovely lyric soprano voice often heard in concert in both countries. Regarding the care of her skin—a blend of lilies white and roses delicately pink—as second only in importance to the care of her voice, she declares that "Pond's Two Creams keep the skin exquisitely soft and lovely."

HAIR full of golden lights, shadowy blue eyes and a matchless cream-and-white complexion which makes everybody turn to look, women with envy, men with delight. A smile of rare sweetness and the charm of a nature gay, generous and sincere.

These are the qualities that make the Duchesse de Richelieu a woman everybody loves to see—and know. And to hear, too, for she has another gift—a lovely voice, lyric soprano of limpid tone.

In the exclusive social set of Baltimore—always famous for its "Baltimore belles"—she spent her gay girlhood. But since her marriage to the head of one of the oldest, most famous titular houses of France, the Duchesse is oftenest seen in the smart circles of Paris and Deauville. And in New York and at Southampton, where she sojourns every year, her friends are forever exclaiming, "How extraordinarily young you look—scarcely more than a girl."

So of course the Duchesse de Richelieu is sought by everybody who is anybody. Her home in New York, "The House on the River," is often the scene of delightful gatherings of the socially elect. Among its lovely old furniture, books and objets d'art from France—many of them handed straight down from the great Cardinal de Richelieu himself—she moves, a hostess full of grace and charm.

"The woman whose life is given not only to society but to concert-singing," says the Duchesse de Richelieu, "is compelled to be concerned about her looks." And it is this seriousness with which she regards her art that makes her determined to keep her cream-and-white skin always as fresh and radiant as it is today.

When she learned—as so many of the beautiful women of society have learned—of the Two Creams that cleanse and protect the skin, the Duchesse declared: "Care of the skin in my opinion can best be obtained by the daily use of Pond's Two Creams."

Try for yourself, today, this method which all the world's lovely women are pursuing. Buy Pond's Cold and Vanishing Creams, using them daily. You will find for yourself that what the Duchesse de Richelieu says of them is true—"they keep the skin exquisitely soft and lovely."

HOW TO USE THEM

First, Pond's Cold Cream for Cleansing. At least once a day, oftener if necessary, always after any exposure, smooth the cream liberally over your face and neck. Let it stay on a few moments, that its pure oils may plumb the depths of clogged pores, bringing to the surface the day's accumulation of dust, dirt, powder and excess oil. Now wipe off all the cream with a soft cloth. Its blackness shows how much you needed this deep-tissue cleansing. Put the cream on again and wipe it off once more. Just look at your skin now—as refreshed as rose-petals washed with dew!

Next, Pond's Vanishing Cream for a Delicate Finish and Protection. Pond's Vanishing Cream is greaseless, intended as a soft finish to your skin. Smooth in just a light fluff of it, only as much as your skin will instantly absorb. Now see how soft and even the surface looks—transparently lovely. How well this cream takes your powder, too—holding it in a velvet grip long and evenly. And neither wind, cold nor soot can possibly get at your delicate skin through the firm yet invisible barrier of this dainty cream. So always before you go out and before powdering, just smooth on a little Pond's Vanishing Cream. The Pond's Extract Company.

EVERY SKIN NEEDS THESE TWO CREAMS, USED BY SOCIETY WOMEN TO KEEP THEIR COMPLEXIONS EXQUISITE

THE PRINCESSE MARIE DE BOURBON
THE PRINCESSE MATCHABELLI
THE VICOMTESSE DE FRISE
MRS. MARSHALL FIELD, SR.
MRS. CONDÉ NAST
THE LADY DIANA MANNERS
MRS. O. H. P. BELMONT
MRS. JULIA HOYT
MRS. GLORIA GOULD BISHOP
MRS. CORDELIA BIDDLE DUKE

are among the women of distinguished taste and high position who have expressed approval of the Pond's Method of caring for the skin and of Pond's Two Creams.

FREE OFFER—Mail this coupon at once and we will send you free tubes of these two famous creams and an attractive little folder telling you how to use them.

THE POND'S EXTRACT COMPANY, Dept. C
149 Hudson Street, New York
Please send me your free tubes, one each of Pond's Cold and Vanishing Creams.

Name .....
Street .....
City ..... State .....

WHEN YOU BUY SILVER

By Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders

Head of the Department of House Decoration

A silver platter and a covered vegetable dish are table accessories of both beauty and usefulness

A well-arranged sideboard is neither cluttered nor too sparsely arrayed. Silver, well chosen and placed in balance, is the secret of success

For helping to serve after-dinner coffee, this silver set can hardly be rivaled in size or design

SILVER is useful—but more than that, it is artistic. And the man who makes it, the silversmith, must be an artist as well as a craftsman. His workmanship may be perfect, each article that he makes may be practical and durable, but if the design or pattern is not attractive, simple and satisfying, his work can well be counted a failure.

At the present day many manufacturers get their inspiration from choice bits of fine old silver. We owe a debt of gratitude to such men as Paul Revere and Samuel Burt not only because they were patriots, but because they were silversmiths who originated for us the lovely old designs and patterns of Colonial days.

Most of the early American craftsmen turned to England for ideas, and except for its greater simplicity the bulk of early American silver follows the best of the old English examples of the Georgian Period. In the design of silver, as well as in architecture, furniture and fabrics, the simple, almost severe, attitude of the Colonists was plainly reflected. This characteristic was so definitely stamped on the best and most beautiful early American silver that to this day it has influenced the design of our modern silver.

In addition to the patterns which were inherited from our Puritan ancestors, the present-day silversmiths have included in their manufacture a broad range of designs that reflect the spirit of Spain, France, Greece, Holland and Italy. This varied assortment of patterns gives the prospective purchaser the privilege of choosing silverware, flat or standing, that will harmonize with any style of furnishings.

The United States unquestionably leads the world in the manufacture of both plated and sterling silverware. Yet it is unfortunately true that until recently our homes, and especially the dining-rooms, have suffered both economically and decoratively from the substitution of other objects for articles of silver.

Good silver, in sterling or in plate, with the guarantee which is given by reputable manufacturers, gives not only lasting satisfaction but stands squarely on its own merits for usefulness and correctness.

There need be no doubt in the mind of the purchaser concerning the comparative advantages of sterling and plated ware. Sterling represents a practical investment which not only will serve a lifetime, but will be an heirloom for future generations. Silver plate represents a utility ware which modern methods have made not only durable but beautiful as well, and have placed within the reach of those who desire good things at reasonable cost.

By law, sterling silverware must be nine hundred and twenty-five parts pure silver out of every thousand, the remaining parts being mainly of copper. Before the majority of good plated flat-ware is actually submitted to the plating process, it is reinforced by insets of sterling silver in the places which receive the hardest wear, such as across the back, the heel, the end of the tine of a fork, and across the tip end of the handle of a spoon. This reinforcing, which is done before the utensil is shaped, greatly prolongs the wearing quality of each piece. When investing in plated ware be sure to buy a well-known make and one that is fully protected by guarantee in case anything should be wrong with the purchase.

Sometimes one sees salad forks, salt-cellar tops and the linings of certain kinds of ware done in gold plate instead of silver plate. This is to guard against any possible action of acid on the silver. However when ice-cream, coffee and soup spoons are gold-plated, it is generally for decorative purposes only.

For the hall table a silver vase and card tray are most appropriate

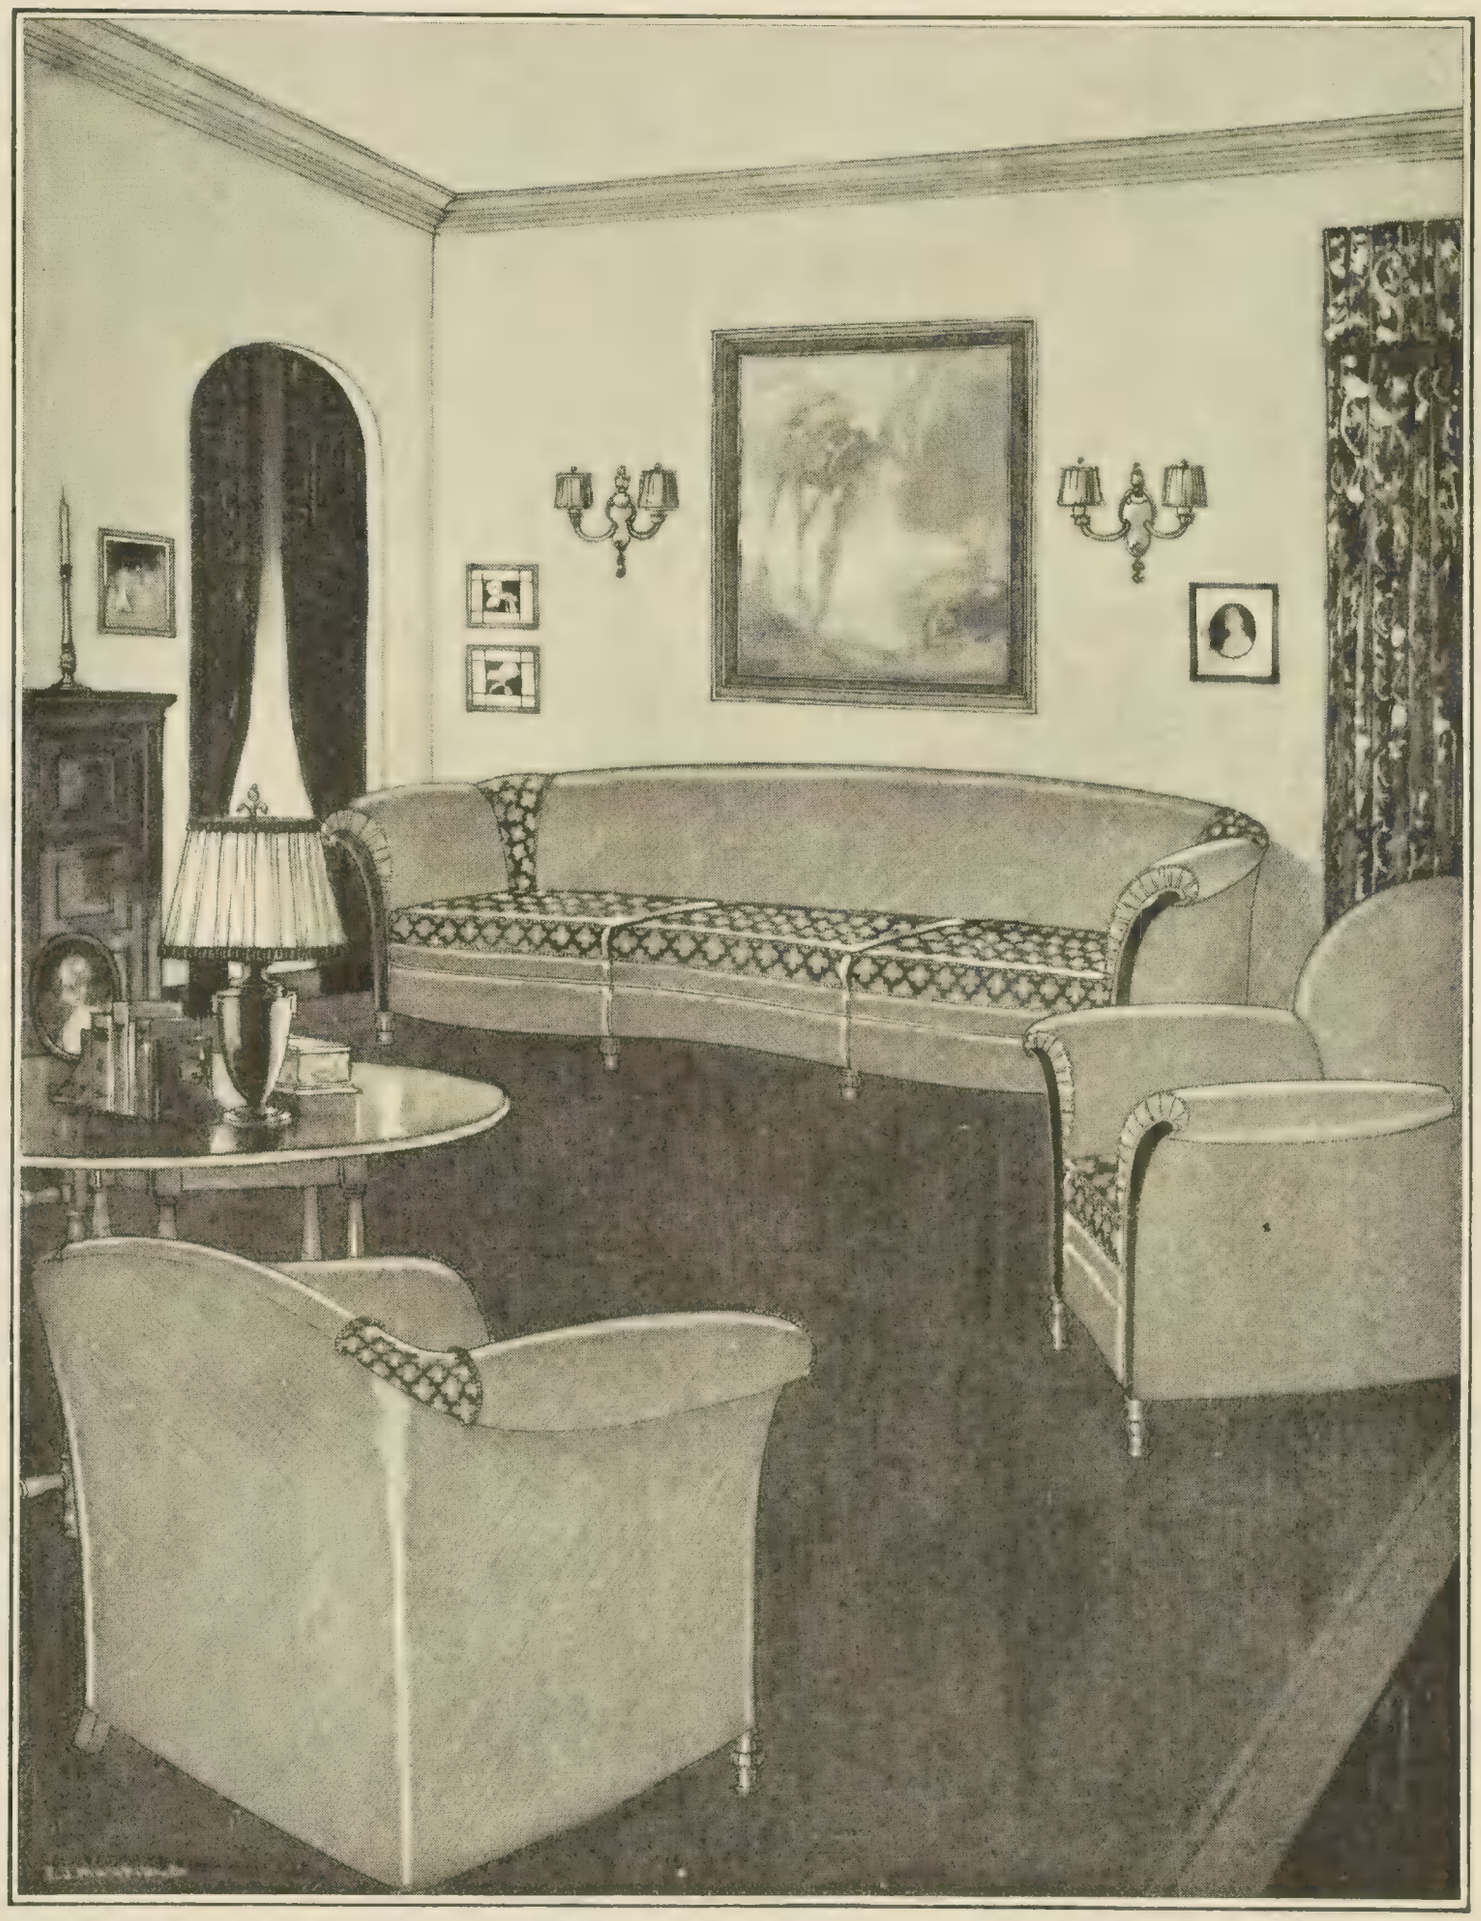
The problem of selecting a suitable pattern which will not become tiresome and which will stand up well under passing years and frequently changing styles, is an important one for the home-maker. New designs are introduced yearly, but the best and safest plan is to invest in a simple standard pattern which usually is distinguished by a particular name. These designs are often to be had in either a bright or a satin finish to meet the fancy of the individual.

When purchasing flat-ware, it is generally best to buy as many of the necessities as possible at once, for it sometimes costs more to obtain additional pieces at a future date than at the time of the original purchase. The reason for this is that the dies with which the silver is stamped are put in storage when the pattern is no longer especially in demand. To bring these out and set the wheels of the factory in motion just to turn out a few special pieces would naturally cost much more than the expense of manufacturing the first large quantity. This is particularly true of plated ware.

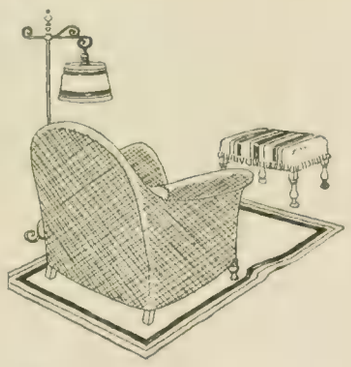
In selecting sterling pieces, the question of weight must be taken into consideration. In flat-ware one usually has the choice of a light, medium or heavy weight. To the inexperienced, the cheapest weight, which of course is the lightest, seems quite satisfactory. Light-weight silver, however, should not be purchased except perhaps for coffee or ice-cream spoons. Indeed, light-weight forks so often break in the shank that some silversmiths do not even manufacture them. A medium weight is best for forks, while a heavy weight should be chosen for teaspoons. Teaspoons get more wear than any other silver utensils, and if they are too thin, they become sharp at the ends and easily dented.

Besides the ordinary knives, forks and spoons needed for the family, a sufficient number of extra ones should be kept on hand for guests. It is disconcerting, to say the least, when unexpected friends arrive to be obliged to wash the silver between courses.

A sufficient number of extra vegetable spoons, serving-forks, and a carving-set should not be overlooked. These make the task of carving and serving a pleasure. Many other extra pieces, such as cold-meat forks, gravy ladles, berry, olive and sugar spoons are useful in the setting and serving of even ordinary meals. Such articles as tea-balls and butter picks, while needed to complete the silver service of a well-regulated household, often cost more than the purchaser can afford. But these desirables can be added to the family collection from time to time. They are always most appropriate, useful gifts.

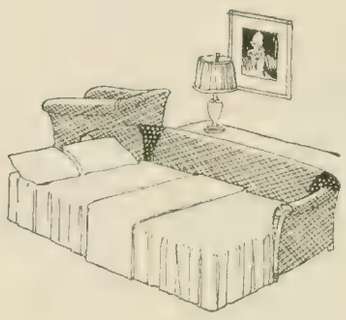


It is difficult to understand why the housekeeper does not invest more often in silver platters, vegetable dishes, bread and cake plates and vases. The initial cost is slight in comparison with the lasting qualities of such articles. The best grade of these is heavily plated and come with stout handles soldered with silver.



The use of silver is, of course, not confined to the dining-room. Its brightness has long been recognized as the crowning glory of milady's dressing-table, to say nothing of the gentleman's toilet chest. The new long-handled toilet mirror, the beautifully cut perfume bottle, and the slender vase for a single perfect flower are accessories which may easily

Concluded on page 50



This formal dinner-table, laid for six, boasts a silver centerpiece, twin candlesticks and small nut baskets. In addition, there is all the flat silver that is necessary for a course dinner

The small room often presents a difficult problem in furnishing. The room pictured here, one of the interiors shown in the "Kroehler Book of Living Room Arrangements," illustrates a very satisfactory handling of the room of small proportions.

For this room a few essential pieces have been chosen, and carefully placed to avoid an overcrowded effect. The handsome Kroehler Suite in a kidney shape is the keynote around which this livable room has been created. A copy of the "Kroehler Book of Living Room Arrangements" will be sent to anyone on request.

No One ever has Bedrooms Enough for all Emergencies

THE only sure, safe way to be prepared for the unexpected descents of out-of-town friends is to have an emergency sleeping space ready for instant use. Choose a Kroehler Davenport Bed for the living room. Nothing about its low, easy lines suggests that the davenport conceals a real, full-width bed, luxuriously comfortable and instantly available.

A single, easy motion opens the bed. Covers are all in place. The removable mattress is thick and soft; the springs are resilient.

Is it any wonder that everyone is adopting this delightfully convenient solution of the extra sleeping space problem? Particularly when, by so doing, they can add to their living room all the charm that a davenport can give without the furnishing cost, care and rent of an additional bedroom?

A wonderful value

You can scarcely realize how very much the Kroehler Davenport Bed offers in the way of quality and permanent service, unless you know the unusually high character of its structure and upholstery. Kroehler Davenport and Davenport Bed Suites are the products of the country's largest maker of upholstered furniture, with unlimited buying and production facilities. Hence, this exceptionally fine quality at an amazingly low cost.

WHICH EXPLAINS THE VOGUE OF

The Invisible Bedroom

You can choose a Kroehler Living Room Suite in an overstuffed or period design. For upholstery, you can have silk damask, tapestry, jacquard velours, mohair, Chase Velmo or Baker Cut Pattern Velour, leather or Chase Leatherwove.

Important hidden qualities

As to the hidden qualities, Kroehler living room pieces offer a frame of kiln-dried hardwood; seat springs of heavy wire, flexibly interlocked. The filling is of germ-cured flax fiber, best moss and cotton; the upholstery is moth-proofed. The seat cushions are filled with closely assembled, fine wire coil springs, padded with clean, white, felted cotton.

Dealers everywhere sell Kroehler Davenports, Davenport Beds and Suites for cash or on easy payments. You can always tell a genuine Kroehler by the name plate on the back. Write for the nearest dealer's name and the "Kroehler Book of Living Room Arrangements," a fascinating book of interiors, showing Kroehler Davenports—with or without concealed beds—and matching chairs, with endless usable suggestions for the furnishing of your own living room.

Kroehler Mfg. Co., Chicago, or Stratford, Ontario. Eight large factories throughout the United States and Canada.

KROEHLER
Living Room Furniture

Why you cannot cut the cuticle without actually injuring it

SKIN specialists everywhere tell us that we cannot cut the cuticle without actually injuring it.

A famous specialist in skin diseases says, "Some persons are so obtuse to the beauty of the delicate edge of the skin at the base of the nail that they actually trim it away, leaving an ugly, red rim like the edge of an inflamed eyelid."

It was to meet the need for a harmless cuticle remover that Cutex, the safe liquid cuticle remover, was prepared.

In all Cutex sets you will find an orange stick and absorbent cotton. When you have washed your hands dip the end of the stick into the Cutex bottle, then wrap a little cotton around the end and wet it again. Carefully work the stick around the base of the nail, gently pushing back the cuticle. Then rinse the fingers, and the dead surplus skin will simply wipe away.

You will be surprised to see how shapely, how exquisitely groomed your nails will look after their Cutex manicure. The Cuticle edge at their base will be smooth, firm and even. Work Cutex under the nail tips to bleach them white and instantly remove stains.

Manicure your nails regularly once or twice a week, according to the rapidity with which your cuticle grows, and you will never again have a rough, ugly cuticle or unsightly hangnails.

Carefully work the stick wet with Cutex around the base of the nail, gently pushing back the cuticle

Then for the last touch of brilliance to the nails which social necessity now requires, try one of the marvelous Cutex polishes. The new Cutex Liquid Polish is instantaneous and gives a dazzling lustre that lasts longer than any you have ever had before. The Powder Polish gives a soft finish like the rosy inside of a sea shell. There are also splendid Cake and Paste polishes.

Cutex Manicure sets come in six sizes, at 60c to $5.00. Or each of the Cutex items comes separately at 35c. At all drug and department stores in the United States and Canada and at chemist shops in England.

6 Complete Manicures for 10c

This Introductory Set for your dressing table contains enough Cutex for 6 complete manicures; Cuticle Remover, Liquid and Powder Polishes, Cuticle Cream, an orange stick, and emery board. Send this coupon with 10c for it and the booklet "How to have Lovely Nails," today. Address Northam Warren, 114 W. 17th St., New York City. Or if you live in Canada, 200 Mountain St., Montreal, Canada.

Mail this coupon with 10c today

NORTHAM WARREN, Dept. B-3
114 West 17th St., New York.

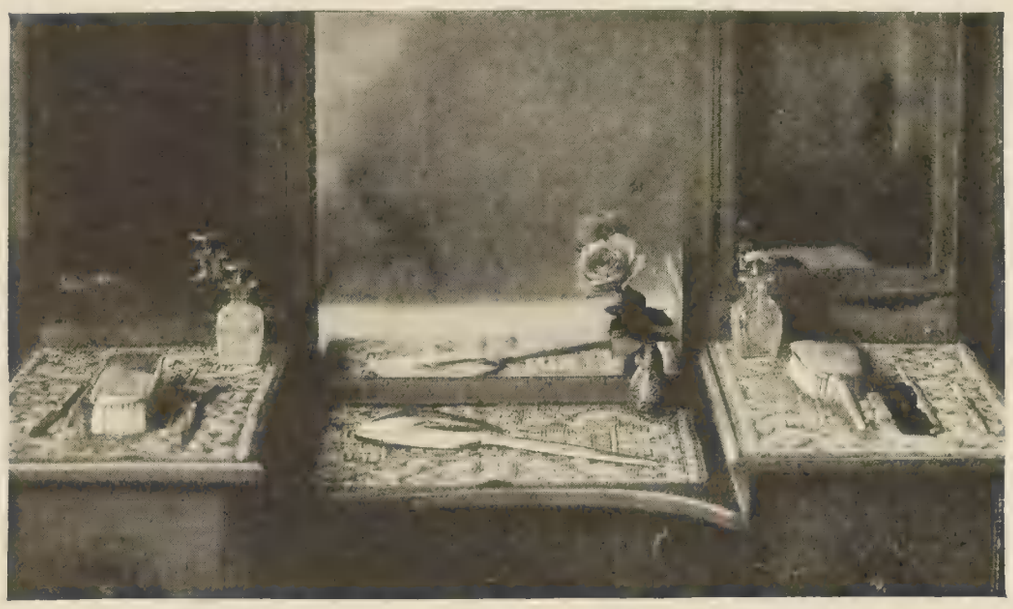
I enclose 10c in stamps or coin for new introductory set containing enough Cutex for six manicures.

Name.....

Street.....

City.....State.....

WHEN YOU BUY SILVER



Concluded from page 48

be added to the indispensable and usual brush and comb. Candlesticks, with soft-colored candles, besides being welcome from the standpoint of decoration, have a very practical value when there is no lighting fixture above the dressing-table. Added to these, the powder-box, nail-file, scissors, buffer, pin-tray, button-hook, shoe-horn and hair-receiver make a complete toilet-set. In these days of careful grooming, such articles are absolutely necessary to the woman. Again, the entire set seldom can be purchased at one time: in such a case it is wise to learn the name of the pattern and to make inquiries as to the possibility of acquiring other pieces from time to time. Birthdays and holidays are legitimate excuses for gifts, and for such, dressing-table pieces could hardly be better chosen. A silver clock and one or two silver picture-frames to hold the cherished family photographs make interesting additions to the bedside table. These, if chosen in good taste, always remain in style and add a note of light against the dark wood. One of the reasons for the increased use of silver is the perfection of the machinery used in its manufacture. In earlier days workmen controlled the actual manufacturing power by foot or hand and were capable of turning out only enough to meet the demands of the more prosperous folk. To-day, with electricity and improved stamping and buffing machines, sterling or plated ware can be manufactured so much more inexpensively that every one can have it.

Silver, the ever-fascinating metal, no matter in what shape it has been wrought, can always be regarded as an investment to-day and an heirloom to-morrow.

A silver bowl for cut flowers makes a delightful centerpiece for dining or tea table

A few beautiful appointments, among which is a silver toilet-set, glorify this dressing-table

This correctly set luncheon-table shows two forks, two knives and a soup spoon, all of silver, at each place

CAN YOU SET A TABLE?

Do you know where to put the teaspoons—and the glasses—and the tricky little butter-knives? Setting a table properly is not the child's play it seems, and a small mistake can cause you much embarrassment. If you want to be sure you're doing it correctly, send for our booklet "Table Hospitality." It is a little encyclopedia of table etiquette. Just send ten cents in stamps for it to the Etiquette Department. And if you want to know the approved ways of arranging large pieces of silver on your sideboard and dressing-table, send a stamped return envelope to Mrs. Sanders. Both addresses are care of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

A fair deception

Children think these fairy grains are confections—you know they're whole wheat

WHY coax children to eat foods that are "good for them"? Why distract a child's appetite by commanding they be eaten? Thousands of mothers have learned how unnecessary that is. How much better it is to give children the food they need in a form that they love.

* * *

Quaker Puffed Wheat is whole wheat with the lure of a confection. Crisp and toasty grains, steam exploded to eight times their natural size; gay as the morning, and with the rich flavor of nutmeats. Children revel in this most delightful of cereal foods.

Isn't it better then to give them this than less attractive foods, which contain but the same food elements? Bran, minerals; and when served with milk, the vitamines, all three; you'll find here in luscious combination.

Serve every day in every way you can. Try as a breakfast dish with cream or milk, or half and half. Serve as a joyous adventure with cooked or fresh fruit. Mix with melted butter to replace too much sweets. Give at bed-time as the ideal night-time dish.

Puffed Rice, too

Rice steam exploded like the wheat—"The Enchanted Breakfast" in a million homes; a delightful alternate with Puffed Wheat.

Quaker Puffed Wheat Quaker Puffed Rice

The Quaker Oats Company

"GOLDEN CIRCLETS of TROPICAL GOODNESS"

Treat yourself to this matchless fruit Sliced!

Open a can of Sliced Hawaiian Pineapple! Pour out the delicate, golden slices, dripping with sun-sugared juice!

Then taste one. Close your eyes. And, presto! Winter is forgotten in a vision of balmy ocean breezes, rustling palms and a lazy surf, washing coral shores.

There is romance—and sunshine—in every bite of this "King of Fruits" from far-off Hawaii. And there is health—and menu-variety—and a flavor that never fails to strike a hearty appetite response.

Serve Hawaiian Pineapple often—both forms—the Sliced, just as it comes from the can and in those quickly-prepared, "last-minute" dishes which are such a boon to every hostess; the Crushed, in pies, cakes, puddings, fruit-cocktails, sauces and hundreds of other menu treats.

The two forms are identical in quality and flavor—the same luscious, sun-ripened fruit, grown on the same model Hawaiian plantations.

Order from your grocer—today!

For instance—try these favorite recipes

SPANISH SALAD (illustrated below, at left): Cut rounds of pimiento and for each serving of salad arrange one on a slice of Sliced Hawaiian Pineapple. Garnish with crisp lettuce and put a spoonful of mayonnaise in the center of each round of pimiento.

PINEAPPLE ROUNDS: Cut out rather large rounds of bread; spread with butter or other fat, and brown on each side in a frying-pan; keep very hot and put on a hot serving plate. Just before serving lay a slice of Canned Hawaiian Pineapple and a little of the juice on each. A candied cherry or a bit of red jelly may be put in the middle of each, if desired.

DESSERT SUPREME: Beat thick cream until stiff and add sifted powdered sugar and almond flavoring to taste. Heap well-drained slices of Canned Hawaiian Pineapple with the cream and sprinkle with finely chopped blanched and roasted almonds.

PRIZE PINEAPPLE PIE (illustrated below, at right): Heat 1½ cups milk. Mix ½ cup sugar, ⅛ teaspoon salt and 2 tablespoons cornstarch and slowly add hot milk. Cook in double boiler until thick and cornstarch is thoroughly cooked, or about 40 minutes. Pour onto 2 egg yolks, return to double boiler and cook until the eggs thicken, or about 3 minutes. Cool and add 1 cup well drained Crushed Hawaiian Pineapple and ½ teaspoon vanilla. Pour into a baked crust and cover with a meringue made of 2 stiffly beaten egg whites and 2 tablespoons powdered sugar. Brown quickly in a hot oven.

PINEAPPLE ORANGE CUP: Cut 4 large oranges in halves and remove pulp. Cut edges into saw teeth. Peel and dice 1 large banana. Mix banana, orange pulp cut in pieces and 1 cup Crushed Hawaiian Pineapple. Heap in orange cups. Top with Maraschino Cherry.

PINEAPPLE MACAROON PUDDING: Drain juice from 1 large can Crushed Hawaiian Pineapple. Add equal amount water, juice of 1 lemon and sugar to taste. Bring to a boil; thicken with 2 rounded tablespoons cornstarch; stir in 2 beaten egg yolks—then put back on stove for a minute. Line a dish with macaroons; spread on a layer of drained pineapple; then another layer of macaroons—then pour on the liquid and set aside to cool. Serve in sauce dishes with whipped cream.

And Send for This Free Book!

"Ninety-nine Tempting Pineapple Treats," contains a selection of Pineapple recipes which every woman should have. Write for your copy. It is free!

Address Department 2
ASSOCIATION OF HAWAIIAN PINEAPPLE CANNERS
451 Montgomery Street, San Francisco, Calif.

HAWAIIAN PINEAPPLE

Sliced —For serving right from the can and for quick desserts and salads.

Crushed —For sundaes, ices, pies, cake filling, salads and hundreds of made-up dishes.

MEATLESS DISHES FOR LENT

Selected from "The New Butterick Cook Book"

By Alice Blinn

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

Omelet puffs are a delicious dessert dish. You will find the recipe in Miss Brewer's article on omelets—page 46

THERE'S NO REASON

for letting your diet lack variety during Lent. Write for our sheaf of special Lenten recipes—tasty, piquant and oh! so good to eat. Our Home-Making Department (THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.) will send them to you on receipt of your request accompanied by a stamped return envelope

THE Lenten season gives the menu maker an opportunity of showing her skill in the preparation of certain savory dishes that are apt to be neglected at other times of the year. There are many delicious egg and fish dishes, including those made with fish roes and fish livers, from which she may select. There are enough cheese dishes to fill a large chapter in any cook book. Cream cheese and the foreign cheeses, such as roquefort, are best in salads, while American or cheddar, Swiss or the grated parmesan are suited to cooking. Other recipes that are well worth investigating make good use of peanut butter, beans, peas, rice and macaroni with milk, cheese or eggs.

This season is also an excellent time to serve a vegetable luncheon. The vegetables should be especially well prepared, and here seasoning counts. In vegetable dinners each vegetable may be served separately in what is sometimes called a plate dinner. Poached eggs are often the center of such an arrangement. In other vegetable dinners several of the vegetables are combined in one dish.

The following recipes have been selected as examples of appetizing dishes suited to the Lenten season.

SAVORY EGGS

6 hot hard-cooked eggs
Salt
Pepper
1 cup hot thin white sauce
¼ cup hot cream
Chopped parsley
Anchovy paste
6 slices hot buttered toast

Cut the eggs in half lengthwise and remove the yolks. Mash the yolks, add the seasonings, cream, parsley, anchovy or any desired relish, and refill the whites. Place them on slices of toast and pour the white sauce over them.

SCALLOPED ROE

1 to 2 pounds shad roe
1 cup medium white sauce
Egg-yolk
Bread-crums
Chopped parsley
Salt
Pepper
Lemon-juice

Boil the roe. Then drain it and break it up lightly with a fork. Sprinkle a layer of the roe in a baking-dish; add one-half the yolk of an egg, well beaten, dropping it over the top of the roe, next sprinkle it lightly with finely chopped parsley, salt and pepper to taste and a few drops of lemon-juice; then add a layer of the white sauce. Repeat the layers of roe, egg, seasoning and sauce, cover with bread-crums and bits of butter and bake until brown. Any cold flaked fish left from a former meal may be used with the roe and any kind of roe may be prepared in this way.

KEDGEREE (A BREAKFAST DISH)

2 cups cooked fish, fresh or canned
4 tablespoons butter
1 cup cooked rice
Salt
Pepper
2 hard-cooked eggs

Remove the skin and bones from the fish. Melt the butter in a saucepan, add the fish and stir gently. Put in the rice, the whites of the hard-cooked eggs, and season the mixture to taste with salt and pepper. Stir it over the fire until thoroughly hot, and serve on a flat dish with the yolks of the eggs, which have been pressed through a ricer, over the top.

PEANUT SOUFFLÉ

1 tablespoon butter
6 tablespoons flour
¾ cup peanut butter
1½ teaspoon salt
Few drops lemon-juice
1½ cup scalded milk
4 eggs

Melt the butter and add the peanut butter, flour and seasoning. Cook for three minutes, stirring constantly. Add the scalded milk, and continue cooking until the mixture reaches the boiling-point. Remove from the fire, pour the hot mixture over the well-beaten egg-yolks, mixing them well. Cool, and then fold in the egg-whites that have been beaten until stiff and dry. When the ingredients are thoroughly combined, place the mixture in a baking-dish, set in a pan of water in a moderate oven (350-400 degrees Fahrenheit) and bake thirty minutes. Serve immediately.

Because of its texture, the dish should have something crisp or solid to serve with it.

VEGETABLE LUNCHEON

1 pound kidney beans
1 cup diced carrot
1 green pepper
1 large onion
½ cup rice
2 cups cooked tomatoes, fresh or canned
½ dozen large mushrooms

Soak the beans in cold water overnight. Drain and cook in boiling water slowly for about four hours. Drain, and add the chopped carrots, the pepper, the onion thinly sliced and the tomatoes. Simmer until the vegetables are tender. Boil the rice separately in salted water, drain and add to the vegetables. Garnish with fried green peppers and mushrooms.

Every mother ought to have this booklet. It contains helpful information from children's specialists on proper diet from 1 to 10 years

Send for "The Important Business of Feeding Children" —a helpful booklet for mothers

Growing is a child's job—a bigger job than grown-ups ever have to face.

Two things are necessary; plenty of food and plenty of sleep. Wisely supplying these is not so simple as it sounds.

Almost any kind of food will maintain life. But that does not mean that it insures health and proper growth.

A child can develop to his highest possibilities mentally and physically only if his diet provides in correct amount certain known essentials.

He must have food which gives him a constant fund of vital energy; builds muscle, bone and tissues; keeps him warm; regulates his body machine for smooth running.

Mothers realize today as never before the vital part correct diet plays in a child's development.

To help them understand and provide it more easily, we have published a booklet, "The Important Business of Feeding Children," which contains advice from foremost children's specialists on correct diet from 1 to 10 years. Model menus are suggested, and recipes for dishes which supply a fundamental need.

Energy! For this great essential physicians and diet specialists have used one famous food for many years—good old Cream of Wheat!

Unusually rich in carbohydrates or energy units, Cream of Wheat also has another quality equally exceptional—its easy digestibility.

This splendid food gives its rich energy fully and freely, without taxing digestion. A rare combination for children and grown-ups alike—in Cream of Wheat!

Send for free books and sample

We want every mother to have a copy of this helpful booklet on children's diet. It is free. All you need to do is sign your name and address in the coupon below and we will send you a copy together with a box of Cream of Wheat, which contains enough to make any one of the recipes or to give 4 full servings. Check coupon if you want our new recipe book.

Clip and mail coupon* NOW

Cream of Wheat Company
Dept. 123, Minneapolis, Minnesota

☐ Please send your booklet, "The Important Business of Feeding Children," with sample box of Cream of Wheat.

☐ I should also be glad to have your recipe book, "50 Ways of Serving Cream of Wheat."

Name .....

Address .....

Cream of Wheat

© 1925, C. of W.

Cream of Wheat Company, Minneapolis, Minnesota
In Canada made by the Cream of Wheat Company, Winnipeg

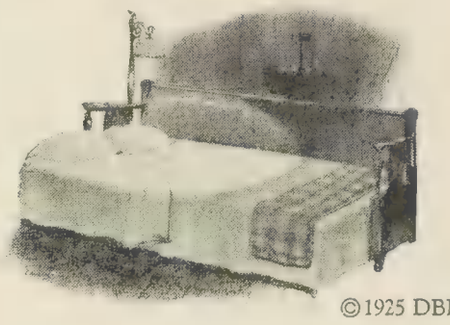
You'll be proud of it

You can get a Davenport Bed of such beauty of design that you'll be just as proud of it as of a new oriental rug or a fine piano.

Beautiful period designs, in rich woods, sometimes hand carved; upholstered in the finest fabrics; a piece of furniture that will grace any home.

The fact that you have, concealed under all this beauty, a very comfortable bed with easy springs and a good mattress, makes it all the more a matter of pride.

There's no reason, any more, for the ordinary davenport; the Davenport Bed is just as luxurious, with the added advantage of providing comfort as a bed. It is taking the place of the ordinary davenport in many fine homes, in many of the best hotels, and some exclusive clubs.



A Davenport Bed has easy springs to sit on; and a separate set of springs to sleep on, a comfortable bed with a mattress of its own, when an extra bed is wanted. It is the modern idea in living-room furnishing. It represents progress.

"The Home in Good Taste" is an interesting booklet showing nearly a hundred styles of Davenport Beds. Give the name of your furniture store when you write for it.

DAVENPORT BED MAKERS OF AMERICA
(more than 80 individual manufacturers)
1130 Standard Oil Building, Chicago

The Davenport Bed

SERVES BY DAY AND BY NIGHT

©1925 DBMofA

MAKING THINGS SHINE

Easy and correct ways to do your Spring cleaning

By Ruth M. Kellogg

Edited and approved by Martha Van Rensselaer, Head of the School of Home Economics, Cornell University

SPRING CLEANING

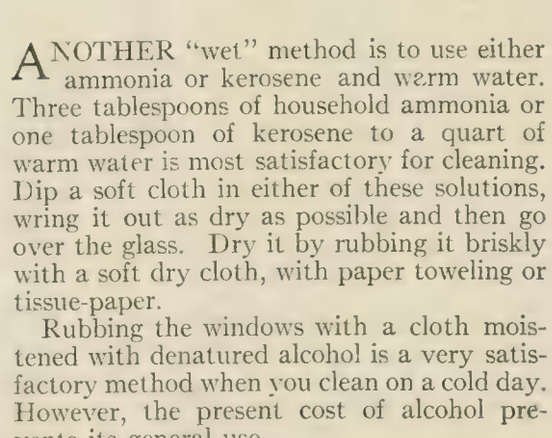
The same tiring tasks every year—windows to be cleaned, furniture to be rubbed up, and walls to be brushed down. Do you hate it? Perhaps a few new cleaning tools would change the whole thing for you. We've a list of good useful helps, sensibly divided into "essentials" and "desirables." A copy will go to you if you'll send postage for it. Address the Home-Making Department, THE DELINEATOR, New York, N. Y.

THE job of cleaning and shining the various wood finishes and metals about the house is a task that is dreaded by most women. New and so-called easier ways are always welcomed, but too often they are not as successful as had been hoped. The housewife has almost decided that there is no royal road to cleaning.

Proper supplies and suitable convenient places to keep them are necessary to make cleaning easier. A great many cleaning devices and materials are not essential, but a few, properly selected, make a good investment.

There are many effective and safe commercial polishes and cleaners on the market. For the most part, these contain a fine abrasive, such as whiting. Tripoli, so called because it was first secured in Tripoli, northern Africa, is also used in some of the milder scouring-powders. The home-maker will find these commercial polishes and cleaners both easy to use and effective. Discoloration and dust can be removed with harsher abrasives, but there is always danger of scratching the fine surfaces to which they may be applied.

THERE ARE WINDOWS, OF COURSE



WINDOWS, as the "eyes" of the house, should always be bright and shining. But how to clean them in an easy, simple way is a much-debated question.

Since it is usually more difficult to get at the outside of the window than at the inside, it is a good idea to clean the inside first. Then as you clean the outside you can tell if any dirt remains on the inside of the glass and at the same time make sure that the outside surface is spotless.

There are several ways in which windows may be cleaned; but these methods really divide themselves into "wet" and "dry" methods. Whichever way is chosen, use long overlapping strokes if the type of window-pane permits. Long swinging strokes are easier for you than short jerky ones.

One should not wash windows with warm water and soap; for although at first glance this appears to be an easy way, it is almost certain to streak the glass. It also means that the window must first be washed in warm, sudsy water, then thoroughly rinsed in clear water, and then thoroughly rubbed dry—three separate operations for every window-pane.

A simple way to clean dirty windows is to use clean warm water and a chamois skin about eighteen inches square. Wet the chamois in the water, wring it well and rub the window with it. Then rinse the chamois in clean warm water, wring it out thoroughly and go over the window again. A wet chamois when thoroughly wrung out has the ability to absorb water, so that the window is left comparatively dry and no further rubbing is necessary. After you are through using the chamois, rinse it thoroughly again in clean, warm water and dry it away from high heat on a bar or line.

A window-brush with a rubber "squeegee" attached for wiping is for outside use

ANOTHER "wet" method is to use either ammonia or kerosene and warm water. Three tablespoons of household ammonia or one tablespoon of kerosene to a quart of warm water is most satisfactory for cleaning. Dip a soft cloth in either of these solutions, wring it out as dry as possible and then go over the glass. Dry it by rubbing it briskly with a soft dry cloth, with paper toweling or tissue-paper.

Rubbing the windows with a cloth moistened with denatured alcohol is a very satisfactory method when you clean on a cold day. However, the present cost of alcohol prevents its general use.

Women are now learning to adopt for their window-cleaning the method employed by professional cleaners of store and office windows. Every one has seen and envied the ease with which these men first go over the windows with soft cloths or a brush on a long handle and then use a rubber "squeegee" for removing all surplus water so that the windows dry without streaks. At last a household-size brush with a long handle has been made. With it is a rubber "squeegee" attachment. The "squeegee" is fastened along one side of the brush so that you use one side of the brush for cleaning, then turn it over so that the rubber part is used for the next step. Warm water, either clear or combined with ammonia or kerosene, may be used. If kerosene is used, be sure to rinse the rubber part carefully each time it has been used, for kerosene will soften the rubber if allowed to remain on it.

"Dry" methods employ some of the many commercial preparations or else use an abrasive such as whiting or tripoli. The whiting or powder preparation may be mixed with alcohol, ammonia or water to form a thin paste. Alcohol and ammonia tend to cut any greasy film, but plain water gives good results.

The easiest way to dust window-shades is to lay them on a flat table

Concluded on page 56

Colorful hooked and braided rugs in this old-fashioned bedroom gain in decorative value against the neutral background of the gray Jaspé floor of Armstrong's Linoleum (Pattern No. 15).

This Dutch tile Armstrong's Linoleum floor (Pattern No. 3041) is quite in spirit with this charming Colonial room in the recently remodeled home of Mrs. E. F. Lilley, Milford, Mass.

How Mrs. Lilley remodeled her Quaint Colonial Home

This simple plan of Mrs. Lilley's can be used by any woman who wants to make her home more artistic, and yet more practical. Its only cost is the time it takes to write us.

THE house was old when she bought it. It had probably been built over a hundred years ago. Yet its quaint Colonial charm acted as a source of inspiration to Mrs. E. F. Lilley of Milford, Mass. Womanlike, she imagined the delight of changing this old house into a really livable home, a home that combined every modern decorative touch with old-fashioned hospitality.

It all seemed so easy until she thought of the floors. Time and countless walking feet had seared and scarred the old cracked boards. Those floors would never do!

Then Mrs. Lilley remembered an Armstrong's Linoleum advertisement she had read. She hunted up the magazine. That night she posted a letter to Mrs. Hazel Dell Brown of Armstrong Cork Company's Bureau of Interior Decoration. Would her plan be successful? Would Mrs. Brown be able to see the hidden charm of this quaint old house?

Imagine her delight a few days later when she received individual decorative treatments for every room in her home. Imagine her surprise to find before her not only samples of linoleum patterns, but also samples of wall paper and draperies to go with each floor pattern. She could easily see now that the floor was the logical foundation for every well-planned interior.

Today, her home is one of which any woman would be proud. She tells us that "Every one who has seen it remarks about the floors," and adds, "They are so easy to keep clean!"

Look for the CIRCLE A trademark on the burlap back

Ⓐ

Many new designs are now on display

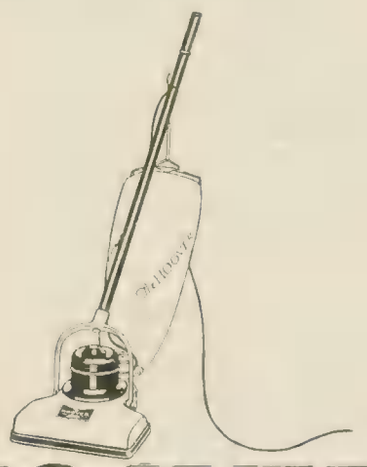
HOME planners, like Mrs. Lilley, will find happy inspiration in the many new Armstrong's Linoleum floors. There are two-tone Jaspé linoleums for living-rooms, spick-and-span Dutch tile designs for sun porches and breakfast rooms, marble and block patterns for hallways and libraries, flowered effects for bedrooms.

All these new designs and colors of Armstrong's Linoleum you can see at any good department or furniture store. Any pattern you select can be laid permanently right over your old floor. No bother, no dust, no danger to your hangings and furniture. And no more time-worn boards, no more heavy cleaning. In a day's time your floors are given a lifetime of beauty.

Mrs. Hazel Dell Brown, in charge of our Bureau of Interior Decoration, will gladly help you plan color schemes that make your floors more than something just to be walked on. Write to her. Ask anything you want to know about the new use of color and design in home decoration. There is no charge.

A new book on the art of furnishing and decorating homes By Agnes Foster Wright

MRS. Wright is a contributor to House and Garden and other magazines you read. She is an authority on home furnishing and decoration. Her new book for home planners, "Floors, Furniture, and Color," will be sent to anyone in the United States for 25 cents postpaid (60 cents in Canada.)



ARMSTRONG CORK COMPANY
Linoleum Division
864 West Walnut St., Lancaster, Pennsylvania

Armstrong's Linoleum for every floor in the house

"Yes, rugs must be beaten regularly"

DIRT—dangerous, destructive dirt!—is being found in rugs that were thought to be clean. A simple test—which you, too, can make* . . . . is proving that rugs must be beaten if the embedded sharp-edged dirt which cuts rug nap is to be thoroughly removed. As a result, The Hoover is the largest selling electric cleaner! For The Hoover BEATS . . . keeping rugs immaculate. The Hoover Sweeps, easily and quickly. The Hoover Air-cleans, even to dusting, dustlessly, its remarkable new attachments serving your every need. Yes, The Hoover is the complete home-cleaning servant. And your Authorized Hoover Dealer will deliver one, complete with attachments, for only $6.25 down.

The HOOVER

It BEATS . . . as it Sweeps as it Cleans

To prove rugs need beating:*

Turn over a corner of a rug; with the handle of an ordinary table-knife, or something of equal weight, give the under or warp side 15 to 25 sharp taps and watch the dirt dance out from the nap depths onto a piece of paper; feel the destructive character of this grit. This is the dirt only beating will dislodge. Correctly cleaned by a Hoover, embedded dirt is thus vibrated to the surface by the rapid, gentle tapping of the Hoover brush, as powerful suction lifts the rug from the floor and draws all the dirt into the dust-tight bag.

THE HOOVER COMPANY, NORTH CANTON, OHIO

The oldest and largest maker of electric cleaners · The Hoover is also made in Canada, at Hamilton, Ontario

MAKING THINGS SHINE

Concluded from page 54

Using a moistened cloth, apply a thin film of the paste to the window. After this has dried completely, rub it off with a dry cloth. This method is easy and efficient. If used, the windows should be finished before the rest of the room is cleaned.

Some of the commercial preparations are sold in cake form. If these are used, a cloth, wet with water, may be rubbed over the cake, and then over the window. Enough of the preparation clings to the cloth to clean the window. After it has dried, remove it in the same way that a paste cleaner is removed.

AND THERE'S WOODWORK, TOO

IT IS sometimes puzzling to know just how to clean woodwork, floors and furnishings. Plain wood, unfinished, is cleaned by scrubbing it with soap and water or with cleaning-powder when necessary. Rinse the wood surface well with clear water and remove any excess water. This, however, is hard work and the results are none too satisfactory, for the scrubbing tends to roughen the wood so that the dirt sinks in deeper again, making the cleaning more difficult.

A cleaning-closet is a convenience which provides a place for everything and everything in its place

If there are ink-spots on wood, they may be bleached or perhaps entirely removed by letting a saturated solution of oxalic acid stand on the spot for some time. Rinse the surface thoroughly afterward and let it dry.

Oiled surfaces should be cleaned with a cloth immersed in clear warm water and then wrung quite dry. If the soil persists, use water that has been made sudsy with a mild soap and then rinse the surface with clear water. Soap removes some of the oil so that after such a cleaning it is best to go over the surface with a cloth moistened with the oil previously used in polishing the furniture; commercial oil polish or a mixture consisting of one part of boiled linseed-oil and three parts of turpentine may be used.

Clean a varnished surface with soft dust-cloths as long as possible, unless spar varnish has been used. When a more drastic cleaning is desired, use a soft cloth wrung from warm water made sudsy with a mild soap. Rinse the surface with clean water and let it dry. Good spar varnish is little affected by water.

It is well to follow up the cleaning of a varnished surface with the oil or polish suggested for oiled surfaces. Do not have the oiling-cloth too moist, for it will leave streaks. Then, later on, rub the surface well with a dry, soft cloth. A warm soapy-water bath, followed by oiling and rubbing, brightens up varnished finishes remarkably. Scratches and other slight marks are scarcely noticeable after such treatment.

Painted surfaces may be cleaned in several ways. In any method where water is employed use a soft cloth and wring it dry. Warm water and a mild soap may be used. If the water is hard, borax or just enough soda to soften the water may be used in addition. Rinse the surface with clear water and let it dry.

Kerosene may be used in warm water in the proportion of one tablespoon of kerosene to a quart of water. It is not necessary to rinse when the solution is used, but the surface should be wiped with a dry cloth. A very mild abrasive or cleaning-powder such as whiting may be used on a very dirty spot. Sometimes a cloth moistened with kerosene is effective if the surface is rubbed until clean and then wiped dry with another cloth.

Waxed surfaces should be cleaned with chemically prepared dust-cloths and mops as long as possible. Do not use oils on waxed surfaces, for they soften the wax. When such a surface is badly soiled, commercial cleaners may be used. These should employed according to directions given for their use. Rub the surface well, then apply a thin coat of wax and polish the surface with a flannel or other friction-giving cloth. One of the joys of a waxed surface is that a small worn spot can be treated without requiring that the rest of the article be rewaxed.

AND METALS AND OTHER ODD THINGS

VARNISHED wall-paper may be cleaned in the way already suggested for varnished wood. Work gently and do not let the water remain long on the paper. The paper will last much longer if it is revarnished from time to time.

Oilcloth coverings are cleaned in the same way as painted surfaces. Ordinary wall-paper is best cleaned by brushing. Wool wall-brushes do not harm the paper in themselves, but bits of soot may cling to the wool and streak the paper as the brush passes over it. This is also true when brooms with cloth coverings are used.

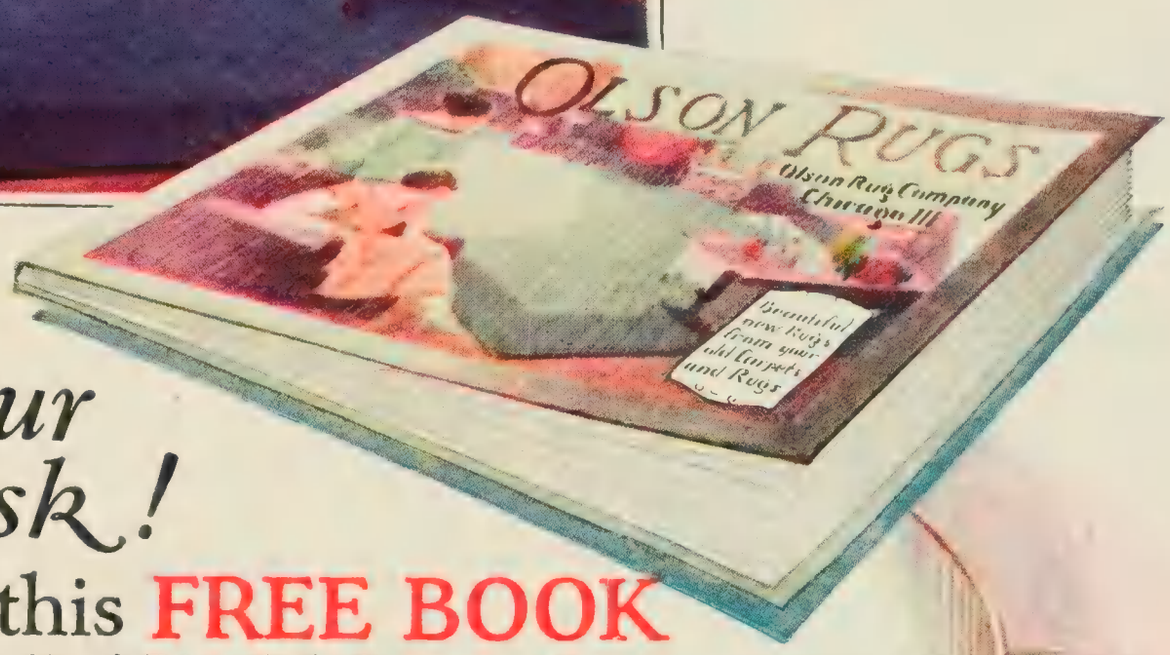
When it comes to polishing metals, whiting or some similar mild abrasive is an all-round standby. Such abrasives are the main ingredients of many of the ready-to-use metal polishes. When using these polishes, the directions given on the container should be followed carefully.

If using the whiting for nickel or silver, the whiting may be made into a thin paste with water, ammonia or alcohol. Allow it to dry on the surface, then rub it briskly, rinse and dry.

Copper and brass may be cleaned by using a good metal polish, or whiting mixed with vinegar, or a solution of vinegar and salt. After rubbing the surface vigorously, rinse it thoroughly and let it dry. In order to prevent quick retarnishing, rub the surface well with a cloth moistened with oil.

Silver, unless it has an oxidized finish, may be cleaned the electrolytic way. This is a very quick and easy method and absolutely safe, although the resulting finish is not quite the same unless the article is vigorously rubbed after the cleaning. Heat water to the boiling-point in a bright aluminum kettle, and to each quart of water add one teaspoon of either baking or washing soda and one teaspoon of salt. Stir these until they have dissolved; then place the silver in the kettle, taking care that the silver is entirely covered with the water. Usually all discoloration is removed in about one minute. Empty the water out of the aluminum at once, as the alkali darkens and stains the vessel. Rinse the silver in hot water and then rub it dry.

CLEANING equipment and supplies are most convenient if assembled in one place. Every home should have at least one cleaning-closet to hold the necessary supplies. Many housewives find an extra one on the second floor very helpful.



Shelves at the side or top of a cleaning-closet are convenient. A short person finds side shelves handy, but a cleaning-closet occupies less width of floor space if the shelves are at the top. A closet which is ventilated with windows of woven metal mesh like the one in the illustration has a very real advantage because ventilation keeps the closet sweet-smelling and fresh.

Beautiful OLSON RUGS

woven from your OLD MATERIALS by patent process

Let us put these popular rugs in your home—at our risk!

Mail Coupon for this FREE BOOK in Actual Colors—Full of Useful Suggestions

Samples (actual size) of wool rug yarn prepared by the Olson Process.

YOUR CHOICE
—of twenty-three up-to-date colors, regardless of the colors in your old materials.

WRITE today for the book that is saving millions of dollars for thrifty women. Rugs in all the fashionable new colors are illustrated in rooms arranged by experts.

This book describes the remarkable new Olson Patented Process by which we guarantee to reclaim like new the materials in your old or out-of-date rugs, carpets and clothing. Your materials are first washed, bleached, pickered, carded, combed and then spun into the finest kind of rug yarn and dyed any color you wish.

This yarn is then firmly woven on immense power looms into brand new seamless and reversible OLSON RUGS with the same smooth luxurious nap on both sides to give twice the wear.

Save ½ the money you had planned to spend for rugs—Send us your OLD RUGS Carpets and Clothing

OLSON RUGS are entirely different from any other rugs made of old materials. Material reclaimed by the Olson Process defies detection.

ANY SIZE OR SHAPE

OLSON RUGS are just the kind you have always wanted—up-to-date rugs that are soft and pleasant to walk on—that do not curl—woven ANY SIZE or SHAPE you want. If you lack enough material, we will be glad to help you out with new wool rug yarn at cost. Every order is completed—

IN ONE WEEK

We pay Express, Freight or Parcel Post from all states. It is just as easy to order from California, Texas or Maine as any other state.

FREE TRIAL OFFER

We will weave new OLSON RUGS from your old materials and send them to you to try on the floors of your home where you can walk on them, examine them and compare them with store rugs that cost twice as much. Then, if you do not think your rugs are the biggest rug value you ever received, send them back at our expense and we will pay you for your old material.

Prominent Women Praise Rugs

From RUTH ROLAND—"My Interior Decorator approved my choice of OLSON RUGS, because the soft, neutral colors and the new one- and two-tone effects set my furnishings off to best advantage. Personally, I love the restful colors and the soft, rich, deep texture of OLSON RUGS."

From IRENE RICH—"OLSON RUGS are a splendid combination of the artistic and the practical, and it seems as though there is no 'wear out' to them."

We have thousands of letters from delighted customers. OLSON RUGS are in over a million homes and in many of the finest hotels and clubs.

Established over half a century ago—in 1874

OLSON RUG COMPANY
Dept. B-17, 28-38 Laflin Street, Chicago, Ill.

TEAR OUT AND MAIL NOW

OLSON RUG CO., Dept. B-17, 28-38 Laflin St., Chicago, Ill.

Gentlemen:—Please mail to me, FREE, your beautiful new catalog on rugs, your latest low prices and complete information.

NAME .....

STREET (R. F. D.) .....

TOWN ..... STATE .....

To those who write promptly we will include, Free, the new Olson Color Guides for home decorating.

© Olson Rug Co., 1925

© 1924 by The Jell-O Company, Inc.

America's most famous dessert

JELL-O

HOW TO DRESS A BED

By Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders

Editor, Department of House Decoration

WHEN attacking the problem of furnishing the bedroom, one naturally begins with the chief feature, the bed, which, after all, is the reason for the bedroom.

There are tall beds, low beds, wooden beds and metal beds, all sanitary, comfortable and in good taste. Each type, according to its design and use, should be dressed in the most appropriate style and material.

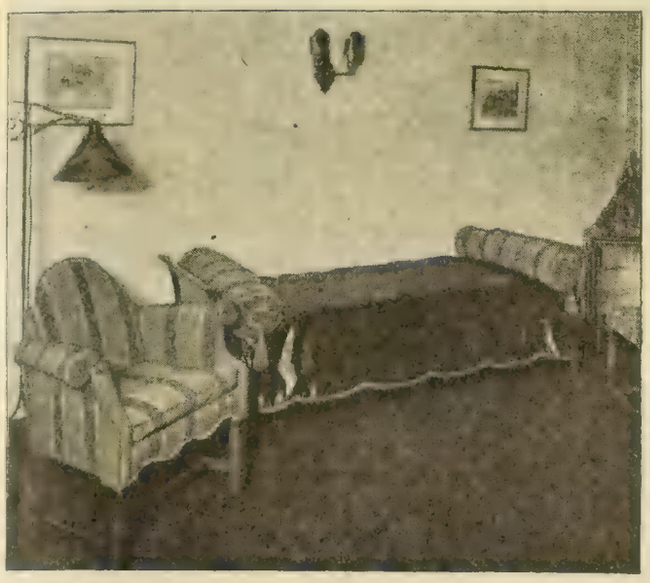
When purchasing a bed, comfort should be the first consideration. Too much care can not be given to the selection of a well-built, comfortable spring and a stout, properly filled mattress. Make sure that the mattress filling is of clean, pure, new hair, felt, cotton or the coil-spring type and that no renovated materials have been used in its making. Many reputable manufacturers guarantee the use of only new materials in the making of their mattresses, and it is well to place one's faith in such an article.

In selecting a bed-spring, see to it that the spring will not slacken or rattle with every movement of the sleeper, and that it has no sharp projections which will tear sheets, ticking and mattresses.

After this the design of the bedstead is next in importance. Simplicity in beds, as in all other furniture, is always the safest choice. Metal beds made along plain straight lines and painted in dull soft colors, or in representation of the grain of walnut or mahogany, are now very popular. With the revival of period furniture the hardwoods have again been put to excellent use as head-boards and foot-boards. The walnut, mahogany and maple grains which are used for this purpose are generally very beautiful, and, therefore, should be complemented by spreads, valances and puffs which are worthy of them.

Do you want individual advice on the newest, the most durable and the most economical house furnishings? Write Mrs. Sanders, at THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped self-addressed envelope

Now that the day-bed is an accepted article of furnishing for the living-room, it has brought into vogue the sturdy cover of stout, decorative material. This should be chosen to match the over-draperies and other upholstery. Cotton or silk velours, upholsterer's satins, sunfasts, damasks, reps and heavy sateens are most suitable for this use.



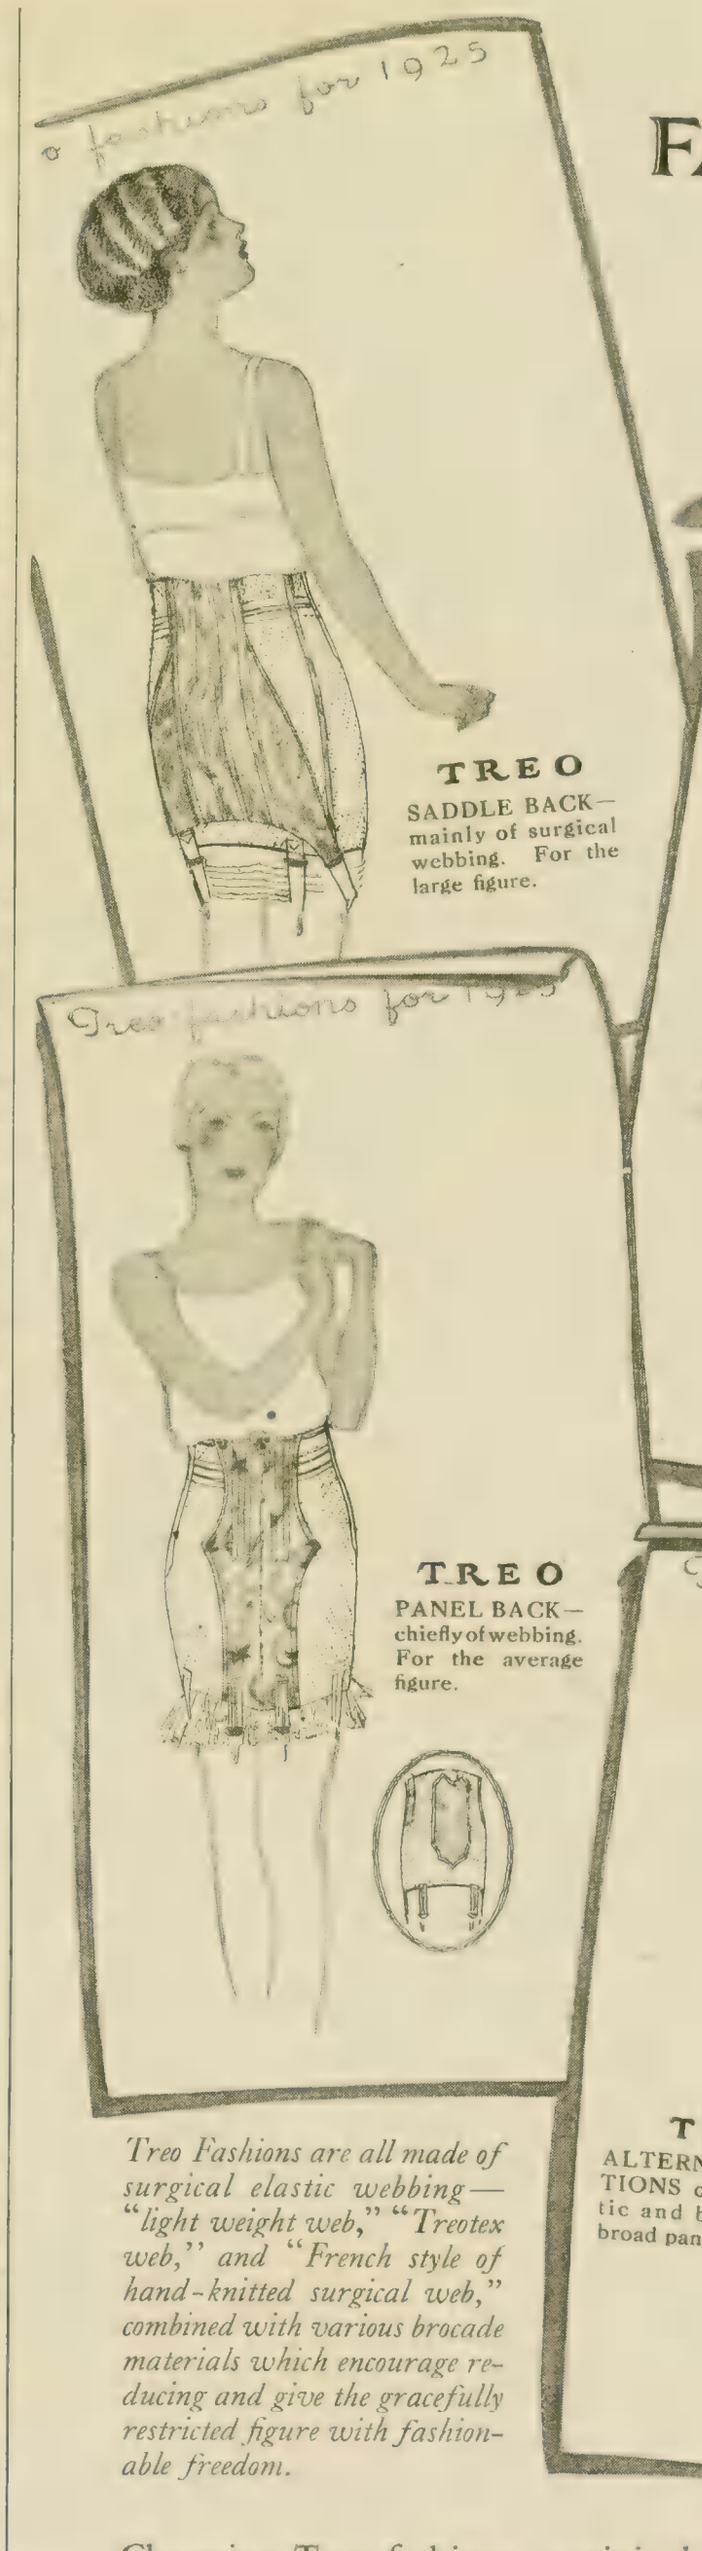
An effective way to trim such a cover is to stitch flat around the edges one or two bands of taffeta or satin of contrasting colors. Also, heavy silk cord, antique gilt braid and silk or cotton fringe sewed to a plain straight edge or to large scallops add individuality. Cushions of various shape, covered and trimmed in the same manner, help decidedly to give the day-bed additional comfort and attractiveness.

Four-posters and other types of Early American beds are appropriately dressed only when the bedspread is made long enough to tuck under the pillow at the head of the bed and to come to the bottom of the cross-board at the foot. Likewise the sides of the spread should be long enough to cover the sideboards. When a spread of this type is properly adjusted, the lower edges hang on a horizontal line around the three sides of the bed.

Sometimes bedspreads for four-posters are designed with wide ruffles. These are stitched with a generous heading to the edges of the spread, the ruffles themselves being finished with wide hems. Materials for this type of spread range from plain heavy white muslin, finished usually with cotton fringe, to sheer dimities and dotted swiss. When the fabric is very sheer, an under sham of sateen or muslin is also used to help conceal the bedding.

Another type of Colonial bedspread is made of muslin ornamented with tufts of candle-wick cotton. Candle-wick spreads are worked in a variety of colors and resemble the Southern knotted spreads.

Seersucker and colored novelty fabrics come already cut and finished in bedspreads to fit any size bed. The weave and design of these materials make them suitable not only for four-posters, but for metal and painted bedsteads as well.



Upholsterer's satin, edged with silk fringe, makes a formal covering for a day-bed

A knotted cotton bedspread looks well on an old four-poster bed

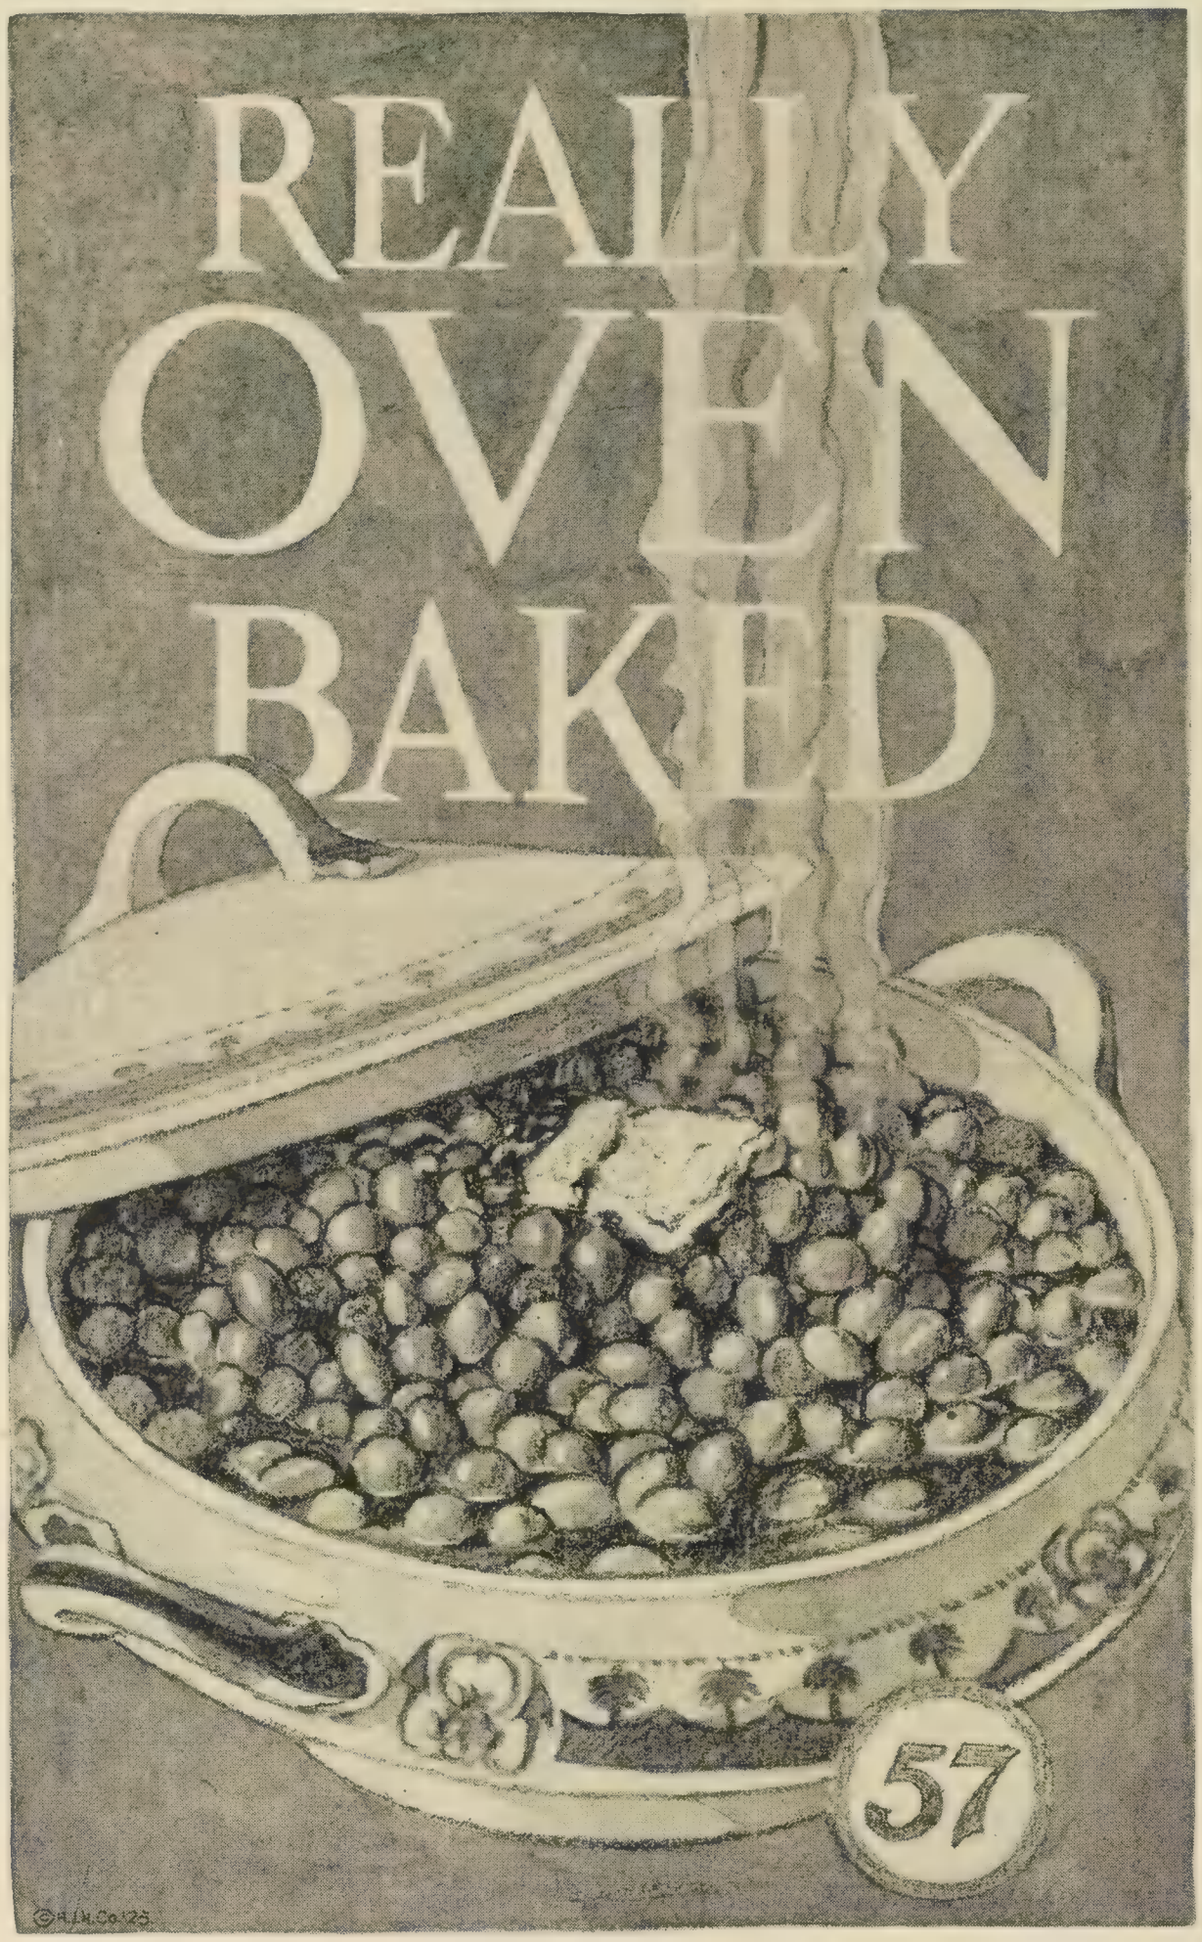
Ribbon-trimmed sateen covers are appropriate for modern painted beds

TREO FASHIONS for 1925

TREO BRASSIERE GIRDLE—a combination garment.

Treo Fashions are all made of surgical elastic webbing—"light weight web," "Treotex web," and "French style of hand-knitted surgical web," combined with various brocade materials which encourage reducing and give the gracefully restricted figure with fashionable freedom.

Charming Treo fashions—original creations superbly suited to the season's styles and to the needs of every figure. The Treo Anchor Band holds the garment in place while the Feature Strip restrains the abdomen and supports the back.



Write for illustrated booklet

TREO ELASTIC GIRDLE

The More Elastic the Corset—the More Graceful the Figure

TREO COMPANY, Inc., Manufacturers, 267 Fifth Avenue, N. Y. C.

Great Britain: Distributing Corp., Ltd., 60 Wilson St., Finsbury Sq., London, E. C. 2
Canada: Eisman & Co., 24 Spadina Avenue, Toronto
Paris: Tribout 20, Rue des Pyramides
Cuba: Havana, Aguiar 122

Real oven-baking makes beans best to eat and best for you.

You can be sure that the beans you eat are really baked in real ovens if you specify Heinz Baked Beans. The label says they are baked. And no beans are really oven-baked unless the label does say baked.

HEINZ
OVEN-BAKED BEANS with tomato sauce

VEGETABLES EN CASSEROLE ARE DELICIOUS

Selected by Alice Blinn

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

Fill green peppers with well seasoned bread crums and top them with eggs, served with cheese sauce this makes a savory casserole dish fit for an epicure

A casserole will save you time and bother—for it can be popped into the oven or the fireless and be forgotten while you spend the afternoon out. And do you know that cheap cuts of meat, and leftovers, too, can be temptingly cooked this way? We have a leaflet of casserole recipes which we'll mail you at once on receipt of a stamped self-addressed envelope. Write the Home-Making Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

DURING this season between Winter and Spring, Winter vegetables fall off in flavor, fresh vegetables are expensive and hard to get, and canned vegetables begin to pall. Now more than ever, the home cook needs to turn to the casserole to make the most in flavor and savoriness of whatever vegetables she finds available.

The French have long used the casserole method of cooking vegetables. To them a casserole is a closed sauce-pan which can be tightly covered to hold the heat well. In such a vessel vegetables are cooked in the steam of their own juices and the best of the original flavors thus preserved. Slow baking also causes the vegetables to absorb the seasonings or sauces, which add so much to the general savoriness.

Casseroles should have covers that set well into the dishes, making them as nearly steam-tight as possible. Then the vegetables may be baked in a slow or moderate oven from 300-350 degrees Fahrenheit. Greasing the casserole before the food is placed in it makes it easier to wash afterward.

VEGETABLE COMBINATIONS

½ cup cooked green peas
½ cup cooked green string-beans
½ cup chopped boiled carrots
½ cup milk
1 cup soft bread-crums
½ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ teaspoon paprika
1 egg

Press the peas through a sieve, cut up the beans in small pieces, then combine all the vegetables. Add the milk, the egg slightly beaten, the crums and the seasoning to them. Turn the whole into a greased baking-dish and bake in a moderate oven until the mixture is firm.

CARROTS DELMONICO

Scrape and cut in dice six carrots. Place them in a casserole, cover them with boiling water in which are 1 tablespoon of sugar and 1 tablespoon of butter, and bake covered for half an hour, or until tender. Drain and add the following sauce: Melt 3 tablespoons of butter, add 3 tablespoons of flour, and when this is smooth, stir into it, using a little at a time, 1 cup of the stock in which the carrots were cooked, ½ a cup of cream or milk containing the beaten yolks of two eggs; when smooth, add ½ a tablespoon of lemon-juice, and season the mixture with salt and pepper. Sprinkle the top with finely rolled crums and let it brown in the oven.

BAKED CELERY IN CASSEROLE

Cut two bunches of celery into two-inch lengths, wash it thoroughly, and let it blanch in equal quantities of boiling water and milk for fifteen minutes. Then remove the celery and let it cool; add one tablespoon of butter blended with one tablespoon of flour, some pepper and salt, to one cup of the milk and water stock. Arrange the celery in a buttered baking-dish and when this sauce is smooth remove it from the fire and beat two eggs into it. Pour the sauce over it, spread the top thickly with crums, and put the dish in the oven. Cook it covered for twenty minutes, then uncover it and let it brown nicely before serving.

CORN AND TOMATO CASSEROLE

Butter a casserole and fill it with alternate layers of canned corn and tomatoes. Season the vegetables with salt, pepper, butter and a little finely chopped green pepper. Spread the top with buttered bread-crums and bake for one-half hour.

STUFFED ONIONS

6 medium to large onions
½ cup chopped ham or chopped green pepper
½ cup soft bread-crums
Fine dry bread-crums
½ cup milk
Pepper
½ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon fat

Remove a slice from the top of each onion and parboil the onions until almost tender. Drain and remove the centers, making six little cups. Chop the onion that was scooped out and combine it with the ham and the soft crums. Add the seasoning and refill the onion cups with the ham mixture. Place the onions in a casserole, cover them with crums, add the milk, bake until tender

TURNIPS WITH CHEESE

3 medium-sized white or yellow turnips
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
1½ cup milk
1 teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ cup grated cheese

Peel the turnips, cut them in slices, and boil them for about fifteen minutes in boiling salted water. Make a white sauce with the fat, flour, milk, salt and pepper Pour this over the turnips in a covered casserole and then sprinkle the grated cheese over them. Bake for thirty minutes and serve hot.

GREEN PEPPERS EN CASSEROLE

Parboil six green peppers for five minutes, then cut off the stem-ends and remove the seeds. Melt two tablespoons of butter in a frying-pan, and add one finely chopped onion and cook until golden brown; then stir in three tablespoons of fine bread-crums and season with salt, pepper, and catsup. Drain the peppers, place them in a deep casserole and fill with the above mixture. Into each pepper break an egg, cover with more of the prepared crums and bake for ten minutes. Serve with a cheese sauce.

The habits of youth make or mar the happiness of the after years

From earliest childhood the individual should be taught the importance of regular habits.

If the human body is to function normally, if health is to be enjoyed in its fullest measure, digestive waste must be eliminated with clock-like regularity.

To neglect this simple law of nature is to open wide the door to sickness and disease.

Too little exercise — too much of the wrong kind of food have inflicted faulty elimination upon all civilized peoples. If we desire health and happiness we must, all of us, fight off this unnatural condition. We must take a daily "Ounce of Prevention" against sickness.

A natural prevention food

The proper way to combat faulty elimination is not by means of drugs or laxatives but with the food we eat.

If there is need for cathartics your doctor will prescribe them. To take them indiscriminately is dangerous.

Post's Bran Flakes, eaten every day, will bring about regular eliminative habits; prevent future troubles.

Bran in this form provides bulk for the intestines and supplies the body with such vital food elements as phosphorus, iron, proteins, carbohydrates and the essential Vitamin B.

Eaten with milk or cream, just as you would eat Post Toasties or Grape-Nuts, Post's Bran Flakes is a delicious cereal. It is equally effective when baked into muffins or bread.

Bran in this form is splendid for children as well as adults. And it is particularly well suited to elderly men and women who should never take habit-forming drugs.

Form the sensible habit of eating Post's Bran Flakes every day, and banish the dangers of faulty elimination. Take a daily "Ounce of Prevention" against sickness.

Send for "An Ounce of Prevention," a free trial package of Post's Bran Flakes and our booklet showing different ways of serving bran. Postum Cereal Company, Inc., Dept. 3-104, Battle Creek, Michigan. Makers of Post Health Products: Post Toasties (Double-Thick Corn Flakes), Post's Bran Flakes, Postum Cereal, Instant Postum and Grape-Nuts. If you live in Canada, address Canadian Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., 45 Front St. E., Toronto, Ont.

JOHN NEWTON HOWITT

HEALTH, the most precious of life's possessions! It gives wings to youth and serenity to age.

A body that is normal in its functions — eyes that sparkle, cheeks that glow and lips that smile — those are the outward signs.

Yet how easily a little carelessness in the springtime of life may mar the happiness of the after years.

Post Health Products

everybody
every day

eat

POST'S BRAN FLAKES

as an ounce of prevention

© P. C. Co., 1925

NAIRN
INLAID
LINOLEUM

Belflor Inlaid, the latest vogue in floor decoration

BELFLOR Inlaid—the newest of the famous Nairn Linoleums — creates "that favorable first impression" in the entrance hall, as well as in every room throughout the home.

It will enable you to have those delightful effects in your floors which interior decorators are all advocating.

Never before have you seen rich, clouded effects like these. For Belflor is an absolutely new thing in inlaid linoleum. Such colors and such enchanting blending are unknown except in rare Old World marbles.

But unlike marble, Nairn Belflor is soft, springy and comfortable to walk on. It possesses all the resilience and sturdy wearing qualities that have won for Nairn the confidence of two generations of merchants and users. And surprising, too, is its moderate cost.

Belflor takes away that cold, cheerless look given by bare wooden floors — and is much less trouble to care for. No refinishing is ever needed. An occasional waxing is all the attention Belflor requires because the colors go clear through to the burlap back — never wear off.

To really appreciate the exceptional, soft-hued beauty of this newest of noiseless floorings that will give the modern touch of color to your floors — whether new or old—have your dealer show you Belflor.

CONGOLEUM-NAIRN INC.

Philadelphia · New York · Boston · Chicago
Kansas City · San Francisco · Atlanta · Minneapolis
Cleveland · Dallas · Pittsburgh · New Orleans

This Three Thistle trade mark is on the back of every yard of NAIRN LINOLEUM

- Belflor Inlaid—a new line of 46 marbleized pattern effects of rare beauty. Made in light and heavy weights.
- Straight Line Inlaid—clean cut inlaid tile patterns, machine inlaid.
- Dutch Tiles and Moulded Inlaids—the mottled colors merge slightly to produce softened outlines.
- Moiré Inlaid—a rich two-tone, all-over effect.
- Granite and Moresque Inlaids—popular all-over mottled effects

The edge shows you that the inlaid patterns are permanent; the colors go through to the burlap back.

- Battleship Linoleum—heavyweight plain linoleum — made to meet U. S. Gov't specifications. In five colors.
- Plain Linoleum—lighter weights of Battleship Linoleum. In six colors.
- Cork Carpet—an extra resilient and quiet plain-colored flooring.
- Printed Linoleum beautiful designs printed in oil paint on genuine linoleum. Has a tough, glossy surface.
- Linoleum Rugs—linoleum printed in handsome rug designs.
- Pro-Lino—attractive patterns printed on a felt base.

Belflor Inlaid Pattern No. 2047/4

Belflor Inlaid Pattern No. 7146/4

Belflor Inlaid Pattern No. 7105/5

Belflor Inlaid Pattern No. 7103/2

Belflor Inlaid Pattern No. 7149/3

Belflor Inlaid Pattern No. 2047/6

Which Pattern Will You Prefer?

So extensive is the variety of patterns in Belflor that they'll suggest all kinds of ways to bring new loveliness into your home. A folder containing life-like reproductions in color of 31 Belflor patterns will be sent you on request. Better by far see them at your dealer's.

WHAT DOES YOUR HUSBAND EAT AT NOON?

By Flora M. Thurston

Edited and approved by Martha Van Rensselaer, Head of the School of Home Economics, Cornell University

HAVE you ever lingered over your lunch in a cafeteria while the business men of the town filed past, each with the meal he had chosen from the bewildering array of food displayed in tempting attractiveness? Have you ever sat on a revolving stool with your arms resting on a railway lunch-counter, waiting, perhaps, for a well-selected meal which you had laboriously chosen from a very complex bill of fare and watched one man after another call for a cup of coffee and a plate of doughnuts and then quickly dash off?

The lunch of the American husband is often to him merely a very unimportant incident of a day's work. If he is an office man, he may stop at any time between twelve and two o'clock and run out to a near-by restaurant or lunch-counter, take a bite to eat and rush back to work again. If he belongs to that great group of men whose business keeps them "on the road," he may consider himself fortunate if he is able to indulge in the ever-favorite ham sandwich between trains. If he carries his lunch in a pail, what he eats may be his wife's choice, not his own, and it may vary from day to day according to the family larder. On the other hand, to the more leisurely husband the noon hour may mean a time to meet friends and business associates for an ample, perhaps too ample, repast. And so it goes, from a sandwich to a three or four course meal, not according to need, but according to convenience and inclination.

The husband who lives on a farm or in a small town may be far more fortunate than his city brother, because he can breakfast, dine and sup at home and so be protected against the temptation of eating irregularly and on the run. The most fortunate husband of all is the one whose wife knows the importance of sound nutrition, selects well-balanced meals for him, and takes into consideration the food he eats when away from home.

IF EATING were merely a pastime, a means of sociability, or a silencer of hunger pangs, we would ask no more of food than that it satisfy these requirements. But since food determines very largely not only the structure of the body but its health as well, we must look upon it as a social obligation which reaches even beyond our own generation. Any individual or organization interested in public welfare can do nothing more fundamental for physical development than intelligently to influence the food consumed.

The problem at present is a complex one. The husband who lunches away from home may have had a busy morning or he may have an appointment during the noon hour. Consequently he selects not only the nearest eating-place, but one that serves quickly. Very possibly this excludes the best ones, because they are likely to be crowded. He orders only a little food of the kind that is ready to serve; he may even argue with himself that he can work best after a very light lunch. Then he consumes hurriedly what he has ordered, keeps his appointment and works hard throughout the afternoon. He may feel faint or hungry or have a headache. On the way home he may eat again. If he does not, he is likely to want his dinner the moment he enters the house.

On the other hand, your husband may be one who believes in spending meal-time in being sociable. If he selects a table-d'hôte meal, it is likely to be really a dinner. If his appetite is good, he may eat another dinner at home at night—until his girth begins to expand and he suddenly realizes that he can not slip behind the wheel of his car with as much agility as he did in leaner years

Who is going to accept the responsibility for a husband's nutrition—his wife, his restaurant or himself? Or must it be worked out on a cooperative plan? Is he going to eat at noon as the spirit moves him, and expect his wife to know somehow what he has eaten and supplement it with the proper breakfast and evening meal, or will he sidestep the responsibility in another way by accepting a ready-made menu and calling it a meal?

EVEN though he may be armed with the best of intentions, the solution is not an easy one. For the man who eats some of his meals away from home, there are two situations to meet: one that involves satisfactory nutrition for himself, and the other that involves the nutrition needs and the convenience of his family. Obviously enough, the food needs of the father and his family must be considered first, and convenience second. If there are young children, the heavy meal will need to be served at noon and only a light supper given at night. But the father and mother may find it undesirable to adopt such a plan for themselves. This will make it necessary for the mother to provide lunch for herself and dinner for the children at noon, with supper for the children and dinner for herself and her husband at night.

What the husband eats at noon may complicate the problem even more. If he has taken a light meal with the idea that he will eat a real meal when he gets home at night, he is likely to go home early and expect of his wife what he demands of a restaurant—that he be served as soon as he arrives. On the other hand, if he has eaten long and well at midday, his arrival may be late, sometimes being so far beyond the children's supper-hour that a separate meal may have to be prepared or the children's supper-hour held too long. The most trying difficulty of all is the one brought about by an irregular husband who either can not or will not keep a schedule that makes regularity possible. To be faced with the uncertainty as to

Concluded on page 64

The girl who was raised to be a beauty

by Carrie Blanchard

THE LOVELIEST GIRL IN AMERICA stood before me. She was beautiful! Slender, clear-eyed, smiling, with a complexion—a real complexion—that almost made me gasp. I had come to learn her "secrets of beauty." Her mother laughed when I asked the question.

"I am afraid Ruth's 'beauty secrets' are not very thrilling," Mrs. Malcomson said. "Fresh air, exercise, plenty of sleep, wholesome food—just the things which everyone recognizes as necessary."

Just the things which everyone recognizes! Simple rules, perhaps, but from my work I know how few, how very few, put these things into practice.

"And have you observed these rules?" I asked.

"Yes, always," she said. "You see, from the very first, I wanted Ruth to be beautiful. So we have not taken any chances. I think carelessness in apparently small details often means the difference between success and failure. Ruth has never tasted coffee or tea, for instance—because the best authorities condemned them. I haven't been an exacting mother, either—Ruth has had a mighty good time. But the things I have encouraged her to do have been so sensible that they have fallen in naturally."

It pleased me particularly that Mrs. Malcomson said this—for this is a point I have always made! There isn't a single thing necessary to attaining our best which is unnatural or "faddish." Of course, every girl cannot be a Ruth Malcomson, but every girl can make the most of her own possibilities—yet so few do! Beauty doesn't just happen! It is developed, like anything else.

That is why I am proud of my work for the Postum Cereal Company—to help in turning thousands, every month, from caffein beverages to a wholesome, delicious drink like Postum. It is a decided step in the right direction—an "apparently small detail" which often means the difference between nervousness, sleeplessness, headache, indigestion, and the buoyant health so necessary to beauty! And Postum, filled with the rich flavor of roasted wheat, is so good to drink!

Miss Malcomson drinks Postum, by the way. I wish you would do this for thirty days, just as a test. Will you accept my offer?

Carrie Blanchard's Offer!

I want you to try Postum for thirty days. I want to start you out on your test by giving you your first week's supply, free, and my own directions for preparing it in the most delicious way.

You will be glad to know, too, that Postum costs much less per cup.

Will you send me your name and address? Tell me which kind you prefer—Instant Postum or Postum Cereal (the kind you boil). I'll see that you get the first week's supply right away.

© 1925, P. C. Co.

Postum is one of the Post Health Products, which include also Grape-Nuts, Post Toasties (Double-thick Corn Flakes), and Post's Bran Flakes. Your grocer sells Postum in two forms. Instant Postum, made in the cup by adding boiling water, is one of the easiest drinks in the world to prepare. Postum Cereal is also easy to make, but should be boiled 20 minutes.

FREE—MAIL THIS COUPON NOW!

POSTUM CEREAL CO., INC., Battle Creek, Mich. D. & D. 3-25

I want to make a thirty-day test of Postum. Please send me, without cost or obligation, the first week's supply of

INSTANT POSTUM . . . . ☐ Check which you prefer
POSTUM CEREAL . . . . ☐

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

In Canada, address CANADIAN POSTUM CEREAL CO., Ltd. 45 Front St., East, Toronto, Ontario

WHAT DOES YOUR HUSBAND EAT AT NOON?

Concluded from page 63

whether one's husband will arrive at six or eight, yet to be very certain that he will want his dinner immediately, is to feel one's enthusiasm and pride in a well-prepared meal flatten out as truly as the food does when it is held too long.

If the entire family can have its dinner at noon, the home-maker's burden is greatly lightened.

SINCE the husband can not secure a satisfactory dietary unless the food he eats at noon supplements that which his wife provides at home, the only solution lies in intelligent planning and cooperation on the part of both of them.

If proper nutrition standards are to be adopted by the family, the husband's problem will be simplified if it can be decided at what meals the different types of food will be served. For instance, one serving of fruit can be provided for breakfast, and if the husband is particularly fond of fruit and can get it in attractive forms at noon, his fruit allowance will be met in this way. This would not mean that fruit would necessarily be excluded from the evening meal, but it would not be among the requisite foods.

If dinner is served at night, it may be assumed that meat, potatoes and another vegetable will also be on the menu. In order to complete the vegetable allowance, the lunch will need to include a serving of vegetable other than potato. If eggs are not served at breakfast, an egg or cheese dish is suitable at noon. For the man who enjoys milk as a beverage, it is very simple to add milk to the lunch menu, while his wife can plan to include the remainder of the milk allowance in the breakfast and dinner meals. The relentless judgment of the scales will help to decide how much cereal and fat food should be eaten throughout the day.

What, then, is the mental list of foods which the well-informed husband must recall when he sets out for lunch? Shall we take him through the most difficult of food-selection experiences, the modern cafeteria? Given a tray, knife, fork and spoons (he should also be well provided with strong arm muscles—not to reach but to hold back), he starts down the long aisle of temptation.

Desserts first! What was that list he and his wife decided upon? Oh, yes, a vegetable (not potato)! But one doesn't find vegetables among desserts. Something was said about fruit and cheese; so why not decide on apple pie with a generous block of cheese and have two items included in one? What a relief to have passed the dazzling dessert-counter and made such a prompt and successful decision! Salads next; one might locate a vegetable here. A few stalks of asparagus laid over a bed of lettuce. He remembers something about leaves and stems being on the front line of the vegetable group. What luck to have struck both at once on the first day! Next the hot dishes steaming with fragrant odors of roast beef, planked fish and a half-dozen vegetables. He glances at his tray, which displays a rather cold meal for a crisp Winter day. He looks longingly at the hot meat, but grips his tray a little more tightly and hurries on. "Milk" pops into his consciousness and he chills at the thought of a cool bottle to add to an already cold meal. But just as he steels his will to live up to the bargain at any cost, he spies a hot milk soup which saves both his reputation and his appetite at a critical moment. The worst over, he finds it easy to reach for whole-wheat bread and butter and to face the cashier. Fortunately his lunch was not expensive. That was one consolation; and he would do better another time.

Only a little less difficult is the à la carte meal; but it permits one to escape the necessity of quick decision, a great comfort when one is new at the game. Also it gives one the advantage of progressing down the card in a sensible order from soup to dessert. Here one has a chance to improve a bit on the menu of yesterday. A clear vegetable soup, the first on the list—a fortunate combination of appetizer, delightful warmth and if one is lucky enough to secure the dregs, a good-sized serving of vegetables. With such a stimulating dish one can well afford to select a glass of milk; but what about a liquid meal? It would be gone long before dinner-time. What could be relied upon to stay by? A cheese soufflé perhaps, an egg salad or a generous fruit cobbler, or perhaps baked apples with cream.

Unless one needs a regular dinner, one can hardly afford to patronize a table-d'hôte meal. Too often the vegetable allowance is largely potato with a suggestion of lettuce or peas. It may appear cheaper than a self-selected meal, but cheapness in food is too likely to be associated with a high proportion of meat, potatoes and bread, a type of diet that is never cheap in the long run. Such places will be maintained only as long as people demand a questionable dietary standard. There is tremendous hope for a healthier generation in the growing popularity of cafeterias, tea-rooms and restaurants where food is selected by an increasingly intelligent public.

THE most difficult place of all to secure a satisfactory meal is the quick-lunch counter, partly because the people who patronize it demand coffee, sandwiches, pie or doughnuts, and partly because it is difficult to keep a more varied and wholesome selection of food in good condition all day. The only hope of improvement lies in a different demand; but until this can be achieved, what can a busy husband choose that can be eaten on the run and that will keep him from being too hungry before the evening meal is ready? Sometimes a vegetable soup is available.

Well-made custards are usually on hand—and fortunately so, because they are wholesome and quickly eaten. If one can stop to chew, a cheese or egg sandwich may be a good choice. A lettuce leaf would be a valuable addition, well worth asking for if it would not upset the lunch-room routine. As soon as there is sufficient demand, whole-wheat bread will begin to make its appearance here as in other eating-places. If one has time to spread it with butter, which is too often lacking, it is both more palatable and more likely to stay by. A glass of milk, perhaps with some cream added, a baked apple or an orange, or box of raisins that one can slip in one's pocket and eat after boarding a train, may complete the meal.

Last of all, and most hopeless of all, is the so-called "hot-dog" stand and rural pop-counter so much to be deplored because here a decent meal, from the standpoint of nutrition, is impossible. How strange that in the country especially, where wholesome food is available, such poor excuses for nourishment are to be found. The traveling public these days is a hungry public and one that appreciates good food. So far, at least, the country is to them a place where food has a peculiar attractiveness because it is linked up in their minds with wholesome and generous living. Why not capitalize this attitude on the part of the city people by offering such savory refreshments as ginger cookies and milk? What chance has a ham sandwich covered with mustard between slices of white bread when compared with one made of cottage-cheese and marmalade oozing from whole-wheat covers? Who would choose a bottle of stinging pop in preference to home-made ice-cream melting under freshly sliced peaches?

There is no substitute for wholesome food and no real competitor of it.

TRY TO THINK of THE DELINEATOR not as a magazine only but as a corps of experts ready and willing to help you in every need. Our Home-Making, House-Decoration, Child Health, Beauty, Entertainment and other departments are

AT THE SERVICE OF OUR READERS
AT ALL TIMES

Quick Stimulation
—hot oats and milk

QUICK QUAKER—For quick energy and quick cooking. Ready in 3 to 5 minutes

HERE are quick oats with a flavor—rich, smooth and delicious—Quick Quaker, a new kind of Quaker Oats. They provide the "oats and milk" breakfasts which authorities now are urging for children and grown-ups—cooked, ready to serve in 3 to 5 minutes. That's as quick as plain toast!

For quick stimulation and all-day vigor, no food surpasses; for savory lusciousness, none compares.

All that rich Quaker flavor is retained. The grains are cut before flaking and rolled very thin. They cook faster. That's the only difference. Try them—you will be delighted.

Your grocer now has two kinds of Quaker Oats—the kind you have always known and Quick Quaker.

Standard full size and weight packages—

Medium: 1¼ pounds;
Large: 3 pounds, 7 oz.

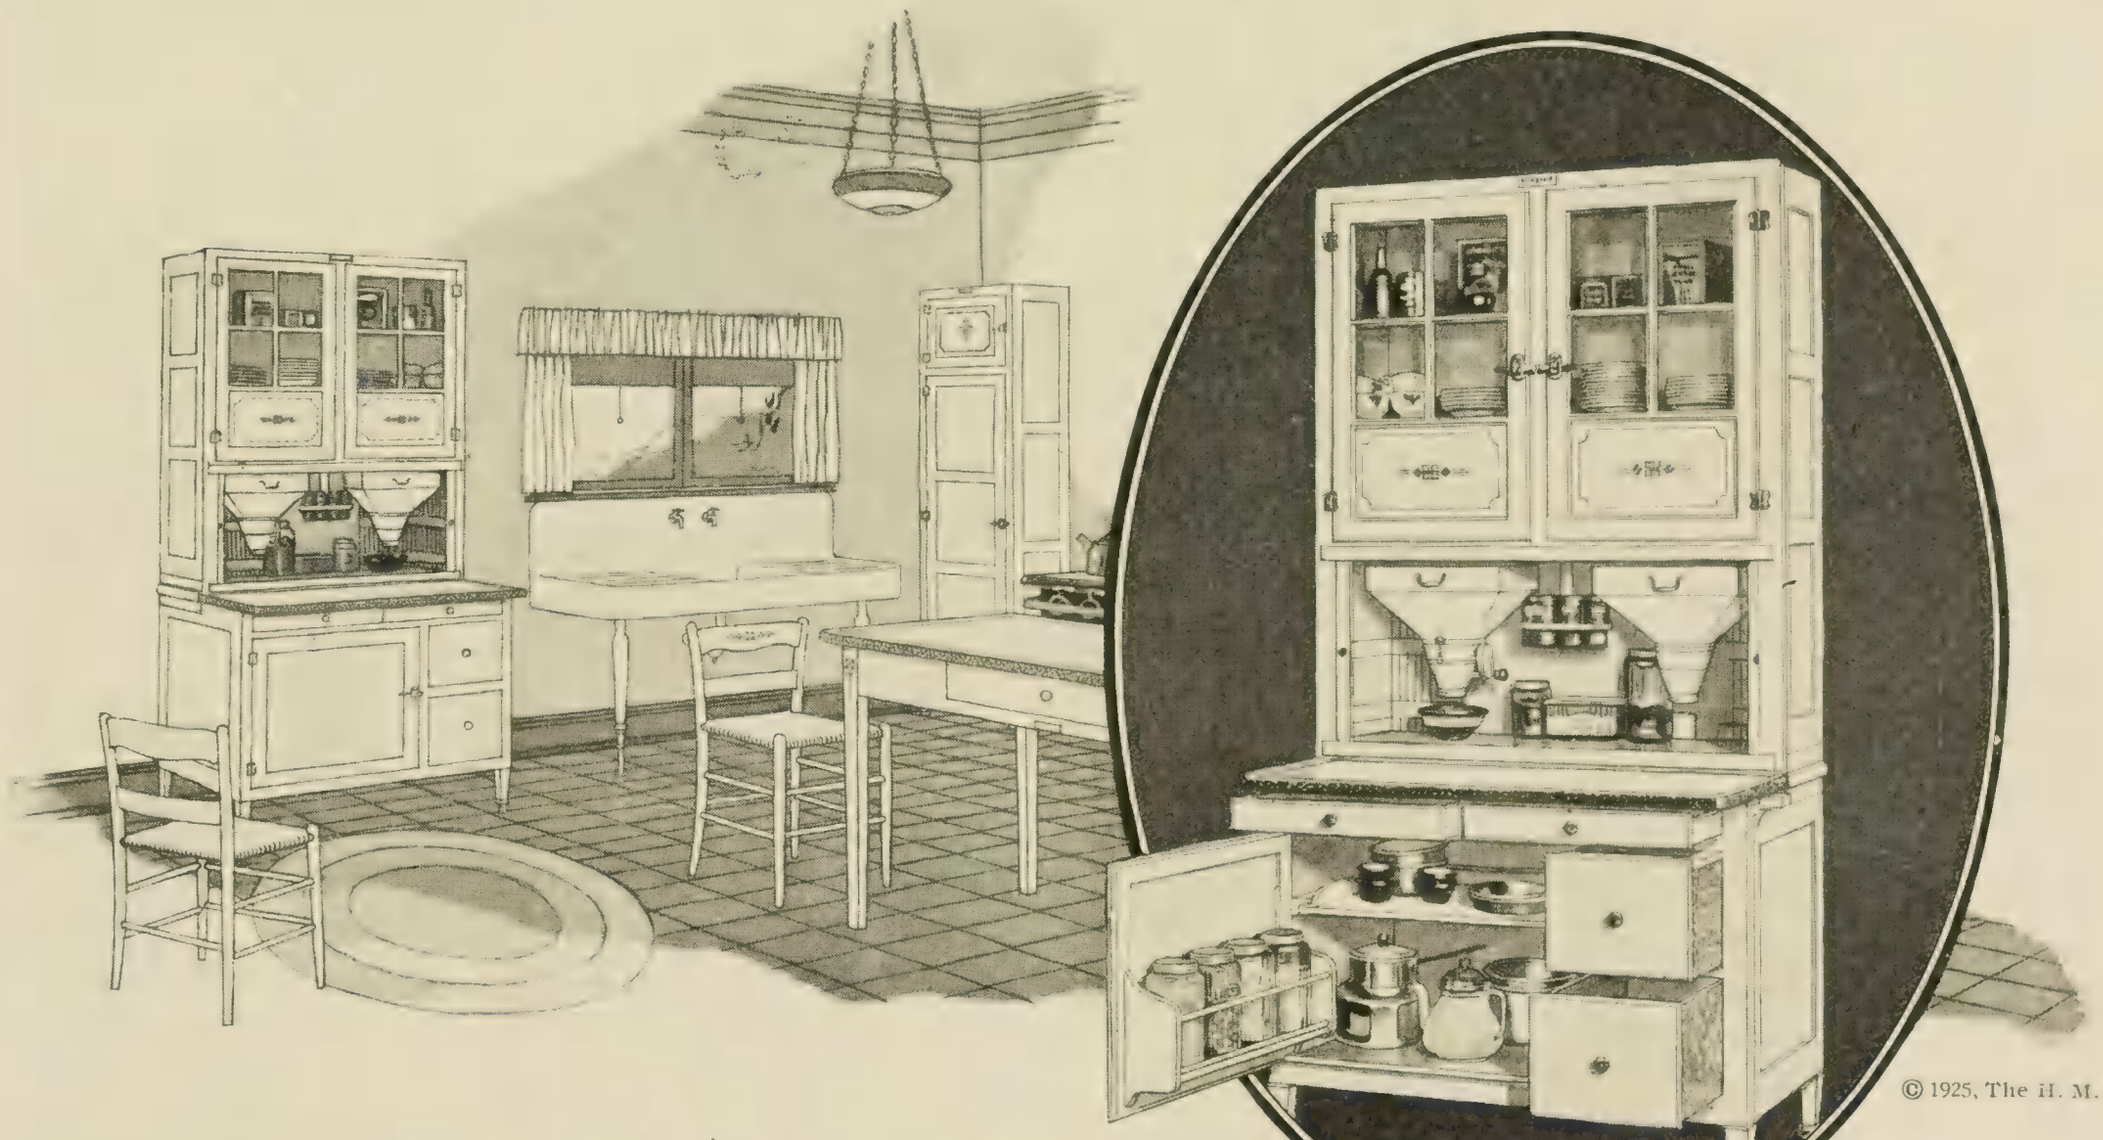
Quaker Oats



The kind you have always known

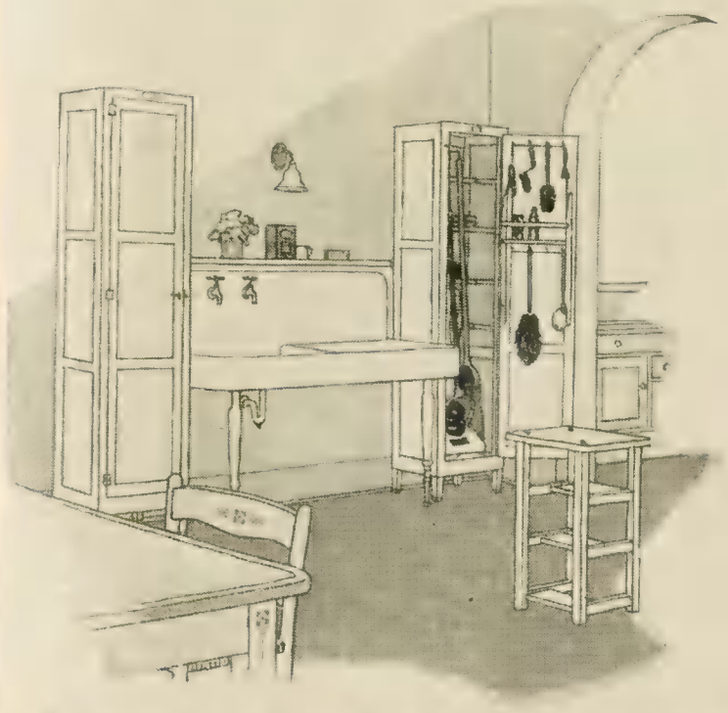
Quick Quaker

Cooks in 3 to 5 minutes

© 1925, The H. M. Co.

The 1925 Hoosier Highboy!

the most scientifically designed model and the greatest value ever offered, say domestic science authorities



The biggest business in the world today—homemaking—cannot carry on without an adequate plant. It must be equipped to do effective work the easiest way.

Kitchens, for instance—can you imagine a really modern kitchen without a working center? As well a bathroom without a tub!

The kitchen cabinet has long been regarded as a necessity. And now comes this necessity in a new garb of beauty; a new form of efficiency.

The 1925 Hoosier Highboy! This is the last word, the model for all cabinets. Never before has a model been designed which offered so many conveniences, so many refinements of appearance as this new Hoosier model.

First of all, in keeping with the modern idea of cheer and beauty in the kitchen, it is a very handsome piece of furniture; in white or French Grey enamel or golden oak. It gives to the room a completely furnished look, substantial and well-ordered. Yet it has a certain daintiness of design, a grace of line appropriately "feminine."

The Hoosier cupboard units afford needed storage space in a roomy shelf cupboard for dishes, utensils and supplies, and in a broom closet fitted to hold mops, broom, vacuum and all cleaning accessories. May be used as an extension of your cabinet or separately

And from its wide working spaces, its accessories assembled right at hand, comes a new household efficiency! Domestic science experts say this new model combines more scientific features and gives greater value than any other cabinet has ever offered!

Notice the new details of design in the Hoosier Highboy

New combination glass and wood panel double doors. An entirely new decorative touch is given by combining glass and wood panels in the upper double doors. The inside of the doors are fitted with handy metal and wood racks; on one, a single rack for extract bottles; on the other, a triple tier of trays.

A new-type flour bin. A new flour bin, with shaker sifter attached—providing ample capacity for all ordinary needs—is suspended from the lower shelf. It is easily accessible and easily filled. A genuine porceliron bin, conveniently located, provides an additional 50-pound capacity.

Enlarged shelf storage space. This arrangement offers unequalled storage capacity above—shelves full 12 inches deep give a total storage space never before possible.

Genuine porceliron storage drawer. The big lower drawer of porceliron is now converted into a wonderful storage bin. It is covered, making an absolutely tight, moist-proof, dust-proof receptacle for flour, potatoes, winter vegetables or for staple fruits such as apples, oranges, etc.

Genuine porceliron bread and cake box. Just above the storage drawer is another porceliron drawer for bread and cake—the most convenient bread box ever designed.

Sliding cutting board. Over the bread and cake box is a new sliding cutting board of rock maple—placed just where you would logically use it.

Other exclusive Hoosier features. Spacious working table with porceliron top, 25 x 40½ inches, operating on roller-spring tension; mouse-proof construction; ant-proof casters; special shaker sifter; 14-piece glassware set; velvet-lined silverware extension drawer; 10-piece Domestic Science cutlery set; extension drawer with compartments for set.

For the extra storage space which every kitchen needs, movable cupboard units have been designed. You may use them as an extension to your cabinet or in other suitable places in the room. They supplant the old, detached pantry—providing compact, roomy cupboards just where you need them most—in the kitchen!

And to give a last touch of cosiness—the Hoosier Breakfast Set! It makes a charming breakfast or rest nook. The table has a fine white porceliron top; the chairs have cane seats.

If your kitchen is old, do not think it cannot still be modern. Hoosier furniture will completely transform it both in appearance and convenience—without bother of tearing out or building in! And for new homes, women are finding that Hoosier equipment is so much more complete than any of their own devising and building. Ask your architect about installing Hoosier furniture.

Enjoy a Hoosier Highboy NOW! —through the Hoosier Easy Purchase Plan

Do not think of the Hoosier Highboy as an extravagance. And do not think you must wait until you have the purchase price in cash at hand. Have a Highboy NOW; pay for it as you use it. A very small down payment will bring it to your kitchen; you can finish paying at your convenience. You really must see this famous model to appreciate it. The Hoosier store in your town will gladly demonstrate it and tell you of the Hoosier Easy Purchase Plan. Or write us for details.

THE HOOSIER MANUFACTURING CO.
325 Delaware Street Newcastle, Indiana

Free for you! This interesting book "Planning the Modern Kitchen"

The Hoosier Manufacturing Co.
325 Delaware Street, Newcastle, Ind.
British Address:
Ideal Furniture Equipment
9 Preston St., Liverpool

Please send me, free, your new booklet: "Planning the Modern Kitchen."

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

Leading Dealers Now Offer

Kirsch Curtain Rods

In Beautiful StippleTone Finish

Three ways to be sure of getting genuine Kirsch Rods

1
Three-Color Box

2
Beautiful StippleTone finish

3
Name "Kirsch" on Rod

"There is no substitute for Kirsch Quality and Service"

Better curtain rods at no higher price

Your dealer has the new Kirsch Rods. They're the most beautiful window draping fixtures you've ever seen. The "Kirsch" StippleTone finish is rich and silk-like. Entirely new and different. More durable as well as more artistic.

Kirsch Rods provide most effective help in window draping: Easy to put up, easy to take down, fit every window, take care of every draping treatment. They tilt on or off the patented Snug-fit Brackets, but never come down accidentally. Kirsch Accessories—heading rings, drapery hooks, draw curtain fixtures—are equally simple and practical.

Look for—The 3-color box—The StippleTone finish—Name "Kirsch" on the rod.

KIRSCH MFG. CO., 140 Prospect Ave., STURGIS, MICH., U.S.A.
Kirsch Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd., 201 Buller St., Woodstock, Ontario

FREE!

Wonderful Book of Window Draping Helps

A 32-page book packed with practical aid for window draping. Ideas for every room and every kind of window—single, double, triple, casement, bay, odd shaped windows and doors, French Doors, etc. 24 color schemes for living rooms, dining rooms, bed rooms, sun rooms, etc. Instructions for measuring windows, making valances, headings, etc.; how to sew on Kirsch hooks and rings; how to put up draw curtains on Kirsch Rods. Our 9th annual book—a book of real service.

If the booklet doesn't give all needed help, write the Kirsch Interior Decoration Service Bureau.

BREAKFAST-NOOKS

By Marion Brownfield

IT IS very probable that the breakfast-nook built in as part of the kitchen has come to stay, for it saves time, labor and heat in the Winter months and can be very attractive as well. For these reasons many practical people feel that the kitchen-nook answers the need for a separate breakfast-room with a minimum of expense and trouble.

If you are interested in House Decoration, send a stamped envelope for our list of bulletins. They present valuable information in attractive pamphlet form at minimum cost

When not used by the family, the breakfast-nook makes a suitable place for the laundress or maid to eat, and when there is company it may prove handy for the children's meal.

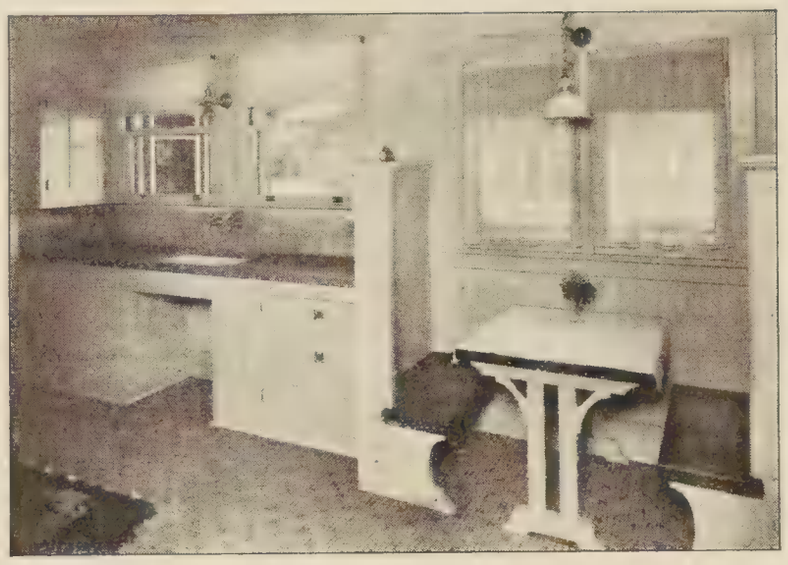
Many a housewife, however, makes other use of the nook besides breakfasting or lunching there, for its very convenience to the stove makes it possible to "watch the pot" while cutting out a dress or even writing a letter on the table.

THERE are many practical points that must be taken into consideration when one is planning this little eating-place. It is essential that it be located in a corner of the kitchen where it will be out of the way and yet near the stove and cupboards. Its size should allow for the maximum number who will sit there daily, and the table that is movable will be appreciated when cleaning—some tables have casters for just this purpose. The exposure of the nook should be east, or at least south, for sunshine is the chief delight of the morning meal. If the sun proves unwelcome in the Summer, there are always opaque window-shades, blinds and awnings to shut it out.

The height of the windows, too, should be taken into consideration. Those that are built rather low and swing open, casement style, are appropriate—especially if the nook looks out on a flower-garden. In a cold climate the window with center sash placed a little higher is better. Some, indeed, like a small window placed very high, Pullman style. The only gain with such a window, however, is privacy.

Other built-in features to be considered are such conveniences as cupboards and drawers. Some tables have a drawer in which to keep the table linen and silver. Cupboards for dishes can be built on the wall above the seat in some locations. The cupboard shown in the illustration makes good use of the space beneath the seat. Canned fruit might well occupy such a space if the nook is not too near the stove. A hinged seat is another suggestion for making use of this storage-space. The cooling-closet at the entrance of the nook shown in the illustration is also very convenient for bringing food back and forth to the table.

The color scheme used for the breakfast-nook depends usually on the kitchen walls and woodwork. White enamel is very popular, as this gives a dainty and cheerful effect, although dove-gray, apple-green and Dutch-blue may lend individuality. The color of the wall is frequently left white, but such tints as buff, blue, pale-green and even pink are seen. Choosing the right color depends, of course, on the amount of light the nook gets. Plenty of windows and sunshine would make white or blue cheerful enough, but if the nook is on the north side of the house, buff walls would be more attractive.



A rather pretty fad is to paper the nook, even though the kitchen walls are tinted. This gives emphasis to the seclusion of the nook—making it a little room apart that seems less like a part of the kitchen. The most popular wall-papers include Dutch, Japanese and quaintly delightful old-fashioned papers sprinkled with small flowers and perhaps birds. An inexpensive flowered paper that will not show grease spots is a wise selection, because, even though the kitchen-range is hooded to carry off surplus steam, the paper will soil more quickly than in other rooms and will have to be replaced about every two years.

If the nook is papered, draperies to match the color scheme are pleasing. Simple white, however, is always good, because it is dainty and easily laundered. Muslin, scrim or cheese-cloth are recommended. Much of the charm of draperies depends upon attractive draping.

If cretonne is used at the windows, this may also be used for pads or cushions on the seats. Rather thin seat-cushions of blue denim tacked like a quilt are very satisfactory, also, for the purpose.

OTHER accessories include the light-fixture and the cloths for the table. A fixture easily washed is best, and, with labor-saving in mind, the oilcloth lunch-mats that are so simply cleaned with a damp cloth are appropriate for the table. Yet the average housekeeper does not find small stringers of Japanese napery or prettily embroidered cloths much of a burden. Perhaps they make one forget that one is eating in the kitchen!

Above—What could be a better way of starting the day than breakfasting in this cheerful, sunny kitchen breakfast-nook!

At the left—This attractive breakfast-nook serves also as the children's dining-room and as mother's workroom while she is cutting out a dress and keeping an eye on the pot

Soap from Trees!

AFRICAN PALM TREE

The only oils in Palmolive Soap are the priceless beauty oils from these three trees—and no other fats whatsoever

That is why Palmolive Soap is the natural color that it is—for palm and olive oils, nothing else, give Palmolive its green color

OLIVE TREE

NOTHING is hidden, for there is nothing to hide. No ordinary soap oils tolerated, no "super-fatting," no "super-anything." Palmolive's only secret is in its blending.

And that secret blend is judged one of the world's priceless beauty secrets. The beautiful, natural complexions one out of every two women has today proves it.

Wash, launder, cleanse with any soap you choose—but when beauty is at stake, use a soap made to protect it.

60 years study to insure women keeping "That Schoolgirl Complexion" makes Palmolive safe to use.

Palmolive Soap is untouched by human hands until you break the wrapper—it is never sold unwrapped.

COCONUT PALM TREE

2684

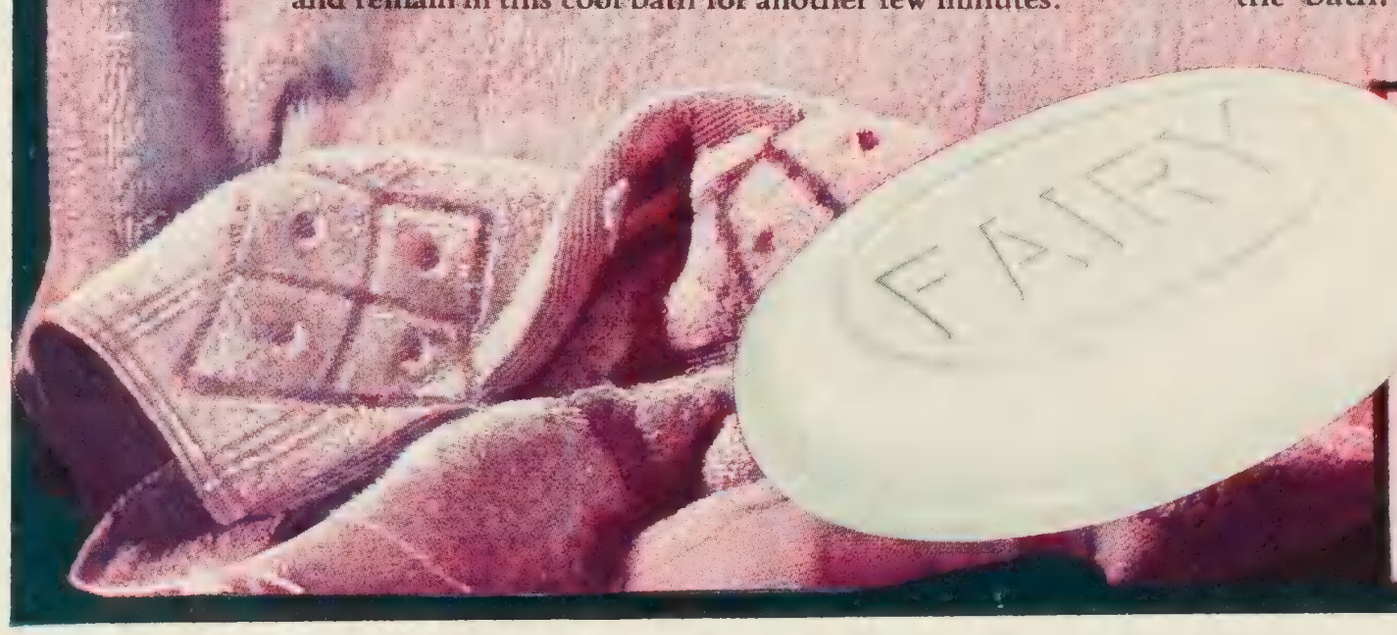
The BATH SOAP

FAIRY SOAP

When you feel "all-in"

WHEN your vitality is low—when the world looks dark—when it's hard to smile—don't nurse your abnormal feeling of weariness and imagine you are "down and out!"

Read and follow what Dr. Edmund C. Gray, noted authority on natural hygiene, says:



> "Remove the nerve-deadening poisons by increasing the circulation, and naturally stimulating the internal secretions that give "pep," by sitting for two or three minutes in a hot bath; then, to continue the good effects, turn on the cold water until the bath becomes cool and remain in this cool bath for another few minutes."

You will be ready for anything after this bath and the vigorous friction of the towel rub.

This bath opens up the six million tiny windows of the skin, called the pores, and through them the deadly fatigue poisons escape.

Fairy Soap is the bath soap! It helps to regulate the pores. Soap the body thoroughly with its velvety lather—thus awakening healthy skin activity.

Lassitude disappears—Life is once more worth living. Fairy Soap is a perfectly pure soap made especially for the bath.

SPECIAL OFFER—LUXURY BATH TOWELS

FAIRY SOAP DIVISION, Dept. J, 239 West 30th St., New York City

I enclose 3 Fairy Soap carton fronts and.....c. for which please send me, postage paid, the bath towel which I have marked below with an X in the square.

Luxury Bath Towel, 20 x 38, thick, soft and absorbent. 35c with 3 Fairy Soap fronts. Worth 65c. Choice of ☐ blue border ☐ pink border

Luxury Bath Towel for the guest room, 25 x 45; Super quality. 65c with 3 Fairy Soap fronts. Worth $1.25. Choice of ☐ all white ☐ blue border ☐ pink border

Name.....

Street Address.....

Town.....State.....

MONEY REFUNDED IF NOT SATISFACTORY

THE RIGHT WAY TO KEEP GOLDFISH

By William T. Innes

THE aquarium is a very old institution. At a remote time the Chinese and Koreans became interested in keeping fish, and decorative goldfish claimed their attention from the start. Many different breeds were produced—strange creatures with grotesque, distended eyes, bizarre heads and feathery floating fins. The fashion of keeping these ornamental fish persisted, and in the eighteenth century one was brought to Europe as a gift to Madame de Pompadour at the Court of Louis XV. It was not until a comparatively late date, about 1878, that these little Orientals were first introduced into the United States.

Since that time interest in them in a professional way has grown apace, and goldfish breeders and fanciers have organized societies all over the country. Fortunately it is not necessary for the amateur who wishes to have the enjoyment of a few goldfish to go into aquarium-keeping on a large scale.

The Scaled Comet

The Chinese Scaleless Telescope

The Chinese Eggfish

The Meteor

The Lion Head or Buffalo Head

Although the aquarium itself is old, the importance of the balanced aquarium has only recently been appreciated In fact, the balanced aquarium was made possible only when science had progressed far enough to find out the conditions suitable for aquatic life. Oxygen, as we know, is absolutely essential to all animal life. It is taken up in inhalation, carbon dioxid is formed and given off in exhalation. Both acts form the cycle of respiration.

In a balanced aquarium the plants take up the carbon dioxid given off by the fish, and in return give off oxygen which the fish breathe. Since a plant can use up only a limited amount of carbon dioxid, plenty of plants should be placed in the aquarium.

ARE YOUR GOLDFISH IN A SMALL ROUND BOWL?

The goldfish globe commonly used is not the proper vessel for an aquarium. The bowl does not allow sufficient room for either the fish or the plant to thrive. The fish are almost always over-crowded, the water becomes quickly polluted and frequent changing to keep it clear is dangerous. If the common round globe must be used, it should be filled only two-thirds full. This will allow more air surface to the water, an important point. But a rectangular glass tank, rather than a round one, is more suitable and more successful for keeping goldfish.

The bottom of the tank should be covered with coarse sand, approximately two inches deep and graded to slope toward one corner. The use of pebbles only to cover the bottom of an aquarium is not recommended, because pieces of food fall between the stones where the fish can not reach them and the water is fouled when the bits decompose.

When arranging the aquarium it should be remembered that various plants have different oxygen-producing powers. Merely ornamental plants should not be used unless a sufficient quantity of oxygen-producers have been provided. Anacharis with its feathery foliage, Vallisneria, a lovely shade of light green, Sagittaria, with its narrow grass-like leaves, and Cabomba, which comes in plumes of red or green, are good oxygen-producing plants.

Planting is usually done by placing the roots directly in the sand, though some people put the plants into pots so that it is not necessary to disturb the roots when the aquarium is cleaned. Spread out the roots when planting, propping a little extra sand about the stems. As long as the fish have room to swim there can not be too many plants. The surplus oxygen they form goes off in bubbles.

HOW MUCH WATER AND HOW MANY FISH?

After the plants have been arranged, water may be introduced into the tank. Water taken directly from the faucet should be allowed to stand several hours before it is poured into the aquarium. Pour the water gently upon a sheet of paper spread over the sand. This prevents the roots of the plants from being disturbed. The use of a sprinkling-pot will answer the same purpose.

To calculate the gallon capacity of an aquarium, multiply the depth, length and width of the water measurement in inches and divide the total by 231.

After the tank has been planted and filled with water, it should be placed near a well-lighted window. Plants function only under the influence of sunlight. The aquarium therefore should be placed either where it will get a strong diffused light or where it will get two or three hours of direct sunshine every day. But care must be exercised lest the aquarium become overheated. The best temperature for goldfish is from 60 to 70 degrees Fahrenheit. They can maintain life down to the freezing-point, but under the artificial conditions necessary in an aquarium this is to be avoided. A temperature higher than 80 degrees is also dangerous.

When the plants have begun to grow, fish may be placed in the aquarium. Allow one gallon of water for every inch of fish, not counting the tail.

It should not be necessary to change the water except at rare intervals, say from six months to a year, but fish are benefited by occasionally taking out a gallon or two and replacing it by means of a watering-can. See that the fresh water is exactly the same temperature as that in the tank. Violent changes in temperature produce contagious diseases known as "white fungus" and "tail rot."

It is an easy matter to remove waste material and filth from a tank with a syphon. A rubber tube of from one-quarter to one-half inch in diameter and about three to four feet long should be used for this purpose. Fill the tube with water, pinch it tightly at one end and put the other end quickly into the aquarium. Be sure to hold the pinched end down as far as possible below the aquarium and then open the tube into a suitable receptacle. The water will run out as long as the lowest point of the discharging end of the tube is lower than the surface of the water. Move the end of the tube around where the dirt has collected and it will rapidly be sucked up. Be careful not to draw in the small fish or pebbles.

Concluded on page 70

The Nestle Home Outfit for Permanent Hair Waving

("LANOIL" Process Patented)

Under the influence of moisture, perspiration, shampoos, fog and bathing, straight hair becomes straighter, but LANOIL-waved hair, like naturally curly hair, becomes even prettier and curlier!

A SINGLE afternoon, spent pleasantly with the Nestle LANOIL Home Outfit will give you charming and lasting waves and curls. Send for free, illustrated booklet.

HAVE your straight hair made permanently curly and wavy in your own room, by your sister, mother, husband or friend. Enjoy peace and comfort, and look tidy and well-groomed, morning, afternoon and evening, every day of the week, month or season, whether it rains or shines. In short, make the closer acquaintance of that famous Nestle invention, the Home Outfit for permanent waving by the LANOIL Process.

A Wonderful Scientific Success

is this Nestle Home Outfit. It makes the straightest, lankiest hair ever grown on the human head curl of itself, naturally, ALL THE TIME, without any further curling means or methods. Once curled, the hair will stay curled, even more steadfastly than does hair which we call "naturally curly" so often seen on men's heads. The Nestle Permanent Wave with the LANOIL Process made the "bob" possible and popular. It has entered royal palaces, millionaires' houses, rural homes, farms, stores, offices and factories, and makes a success wherever it goes.

Easy To Do At Home Thirty Days' Free Trial

All we ask is that you make the personal acquaintance of the Nestle Outfit for Permanent Waving. To do this costs you little effort—and NO money.

Send for the Outfit, try it, and if you are not absolutely satisfied with its results, return it within thirty days, and your deposit will be immediately refunded. The directions with the Outfit are clear and simple. The use of it is interesting. The results wonderful. Think of it! Straight, lanky hair all your lifetime—yet from the very day you apply the Outfit—natural waves, curls and ringlets!

The celebrated scientist, Metchnikoff of Paris, said of the Nestle Permanent Wave, "It is the greatest discovery ever made for woman's comfort, and the benefit and health of the hair."

Each Nestle LANOIL Outfit Contains Free Trial Materials

These you may use to try the Nestle LANOIL Wave in your hair. No charge whatever is made for them, and no deduction taken either for postage or for using the Outfit, should you decide within thirty days that you do not care to keep it.

A Free, Interesting Booklet

If you desire further information before ordering the Outfit, send for our free booklet. If, on the other hand, you desire to give the Home Outfit a free trial immediately, either send us your check, money order, or bank draft for $15, or let us forward it to you C.O.D., and pay the postman when it arrives. The $15 purchase price is considered merely a deposit, subject to immediate refund, if you so decide.

Nestle's are established in New York and London since 1905. They have been sending forth their famous Home Outfit on this basis since 1922, with satisfaction and pleasure to its purchasers, so do not delay. Send the coupon below, or a letter or postal today for YOUR Home Outfit.

NESTLE LANOIL CO., LTD., Dept. 22

Established 1905

12 and 14 East 49th Street, New York City

Just off Fifth Avenue

Fill in, tear off and mail coupon today

NESTLE LANOIL CO., LTD., Dept. 22
12 & 14 East 49th St., New York, N. Y.

Please send me the Nestle "LANOIL" Home Outfit for Permanent Waving. I understand that if, after using the Outfit and the free trial materials, I am not satisfied, I may return the Outfit any time within 30 days, and receive back every cent of its cost of $15.

☐ I enclose $15 in check, money order, or bank draft as a deposit.

☐ I enclose no money. Please send C. O. D.

OR, check HERE ☐ if only free booklet of further particulars is desired.

(From foreign countries, send Sixteen Dollars, check, money order or cash equivalent in U. S. currency. Canadians may order from Raymond Harper, 416 Bloor Street W., Toronto, Canada, $20 duty free.)

*Name*_____

*Street*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

4 out of 5

Dental statistics show that four out of every five over 40—and thousands younger, too—are victims of dreaded Pyorrhea. Will you escape?

Pyorrhea is a disease of the gums—not the teeth

That's one outstanding fact everybody should know. And if everybody did know it, the number of Pyorrhea's victims would soon be greatly reduced.

You may take splendid care of your teeth—brush them several times a day—and still get Pyorrhea. Once Pyorrhea secures a firm hold, pus pockets form, gums become weak and flabby, the teeth loosen and fall out no matter how white and sound they may be.

Forhan's means healthy gums

It contains the right proportion of Forhan's Astringent, as used by the dental profession in the treatment of Pyorrhea. Forhan's protects and preserves the gums, keeping them in a firm, pink, healthy condition; cleans and whitens the teeth, and keeps the mouth sweet, fresh and wholesome. If you don't care to discontinue the tooth paste you are now using, at least brush your teeth and gums once a day with Forhan's.

Forhan's is more than a tooth paste; it checks Pyorrhea. Thousands have found it beneficial for years. For your own sake ask for Forhan's For the Gums. All druggists, 35c and 60c in tubes.

Formula of R. J. Forhan, D. D. S.
Forhan Company, New York

Forhan's
FOR THE GUMS

More than a tooth paste—it checks Pyorrhea

THE RIGHT WAY TO KEEP GOLDFISH

Continued from page 69

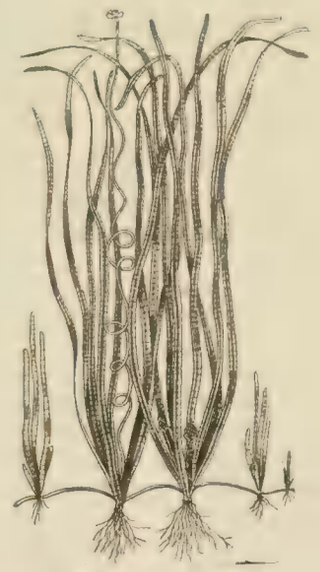
It is a good idea to let the drawn-off water settle, and filter the clearer portion through fine muslin back into the aquarium, as this is better than fresh water. This operation should be repeated every three months.

In order not to stock the aquarium with sick fish, or fish covered with parasites, the amateur should buy his pets from a reputable dealer. It is a good plan, also, to start with inexpensive specimens.

The common goldfish, or wakin as the Japanese call it, comes in a variety of colors. It is the commonest and cheapest. The fan-tail or double-tail is the most common of the fancy varieties. Nymphs and comets with very long fins and tails, telescopes with enormous eyes, and celestials with eyes that continually look heavenward are among the more unusual and expensive goldfish. Lion-heads with great, hooded heads are especially valuable—a single specimen sometimes being worth as much as a hundred dollars.

AND WHAT ARE THEY TO EAT?

In natural ponds, goldfish select both animal and vegetable material for food. This must be kept in mind when feeding aquarium fish. A balanced meal consisting of cereal, dried meat, insects and shrimps, ground up into particles like granulated sugar, gives good results. Prepared foods may be purchased in the stores, but these foods to be nourishing for the fish should have the odor of animal elements. Ground-up puppy biscuit, as it contains some animal matter, may be used as a substitute food when the better ration is unobtainable.



In addition to this, goldfish require some fresh material to keep them healthy. This may be supplied by bits of boiled fish, shrimp or crab. A small quantity given once each week is sufficient. Many fanciers feed their fish certain natural food organisms in order to supply this need, but these are seldom available to the amateur. An excellent food is finely chopped earth-worms. These will often restore a sick fish to health. An occasional dead fly is also looked upon as a choice morsel.

The amount of food goldfish should have is as important as its quality. Guard against overfeeding: more fish die from this cause than from any other. It is difficult to assign a definite amount, but a safe rule is to feed only as much as will be immediately consumed. If any food remains after five minutes it should be removed from the aquarium. Feed daily in warm weather, but only three times a week in Winter. Never allow the apparent hunger of the fish to persuade you to feed them oftener. There should never be any excess food left in the aquarium, for it decomposes rapidly and thus pollutes the water.

Certain kinds of snails—such as the Japanese snail—which do not attack the plants may be used to get rid of decomposing matter in the aquarium. The tadpole is sometimes used as a scavenger, but it is invariably a disturbing element and it is apt to eat the food supplied for the goldfish before turning to the refuse.

When a fish is sick, it hides in an out-of-the-way corner, it is sluggish and its back fin wilts or drops against its side. If the body of the fish is thin, if the fin becomes split, or if the fish persists in coming to the top of the water for air, something is wrong. On cloudy days, however, fish, even in a properly conditioned aquarium, often come to the surface to breathe.

Goldfish are usually hardy, but many people seem to have trouble in keeping them. The principal reasons are overcrowding, overfeeding, sudden temperature changes, lack of proper plant life and insufficient lighting. If none of these seems to cause the trouble, the fish probably has some contagious disease. In any case a sick fish should be placed in a mild salt-water bath for several days. Salt kills plants and snails, so use a separate receptacle as a hospital, and remem-

Sagittaria natans

Wild Anacharis

Giant Vallisneria

These plants grow rapidly and are good oxygen producers

Cultivated Anacharis and Cabomba: two important aquarium plants

ber to have it the same temperature as the aquarium before transferring the fish. A little pinch of epsom salts placed in the aquarium every month helps to physic the fish and keep them in good condition.

If in cold weather it is necessary to heat the aquarium, great care must be taken to distribute the warm water gradually and evenly from some source outside the tank. Tropical aquariums should be covered with a piece of glass to prevent evaporation and loss of heat, as well as to prevent the fish from being disturbed by cats or inquisitive children.

The best way to clean the inside surface of a straight-sided glass aquarium is with a safety-razor blade. For convenience this may be fastened in the end of a stick. Felt or other coarse material is suitable for cleaning bowls.

Following are a few important "Don'ts" for goldfish fanciers:

1. Don't overfeed your fish.
2. Don't overstock your aquarium.
3. Don't delay treating sick fish.
4. Don't start with expensive fish.
5. Don't allow unconsumed food to remain in the aquarium.
6. Don't use a bowl for your aquarium unless it is absolutely necessary.
7. Don't change the water oftener than from six months to a year.

If special advice on the care of goldfish, water plants or aquariums is desired THE DELINEATOR will be glad to have all inquiries attended to. Send your questions to Mr. William T. Innes, care of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped self-addressed envelope.

Free Trial Bottle

Gray Hair—Don't Have It!

Let me tell you the quick, easy way to get back original color

"WHY let gray hair spoil your chances?" is a question I so often want to ask. It is such an unnecessary handicap, when restoration is so simple and easy. And—it costs nothing to learn how.

I invite everyone with gray hair to send for my free trial outfit, which contains a trial bottle of my famous hair color restorer. Test as directed on one lock of hair—learn for yourself that you needn't have gray hair at any age!

A scientific laboratory preparation

Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer is a scientific, reliable preparation which always does the work. It brings back the natural, youthful color of your hair so perfectly that no one will suspect you once were gray.

There is no streaking, artificial dyed look. Just the even, natural, exact shade of early youth.

Apply it with a comb

My restorer is very easily applied—you do it yourself, without help. You simply comb it through the hair and watch the gray disappear.

No interference with shampooing—nothing to wash or rub off. My restorer is a clear, colorless liquid, clean and dainty as water. It leaves the hair soft and fluffy—lovely when waved and dressed.

Absolutely free trial—mail coupon

Remember the trial offer is absolutely free—we even prepay postage. Just mail the coupon—you will receive by return mail my special patented free trial outfit with full directions.

Then when you know what Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer is and just what it will do, get a full sized bottle from your druggist. If you prefer it, you may order direct from me.

Fill out coupon carefully, stating exactly natural color of hair. If possible enclose a lock with your letter. When the trial outfit comes make the famous "single-lock" test. You will be overjoyed by results.

Mary T Goldman's Hair Color Restorer

Over 10,000,000 bottles sold

PLEASE PRINT YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS

MARY T. GOLDMAN,
499-C Goldman Bldg., St. Paul, Minn.

Please send me your FREE trial bottle of Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer. The natural color of my hair is:

Black..... dark brown..... medium brown..... auburn (dark red).....light brown.....light auburn (light red)..... blonde.....

Name.....

Address.....

ROYAL SOCIETY EMBROIDERY PACKAGE OUTFITS

TRADE MARK REG U.S PAT OFF

116
Pillow
60c

101
Buffet Set
75c

123
34" Center
$1.15
Matches
Scarf 122—$1.00
Pillow 124—85c

117
18"x45" Scarf
75c
Matches
Pillow 118—75c
Vanity Set 119—40c

125
18"x54" Scarf
$1.50
Matches
Center 126
$1.85
Pillow 127
$1.25

Matches
Center 102—$1.15
Scarf 100—85c

104
Set
$1.75
Matches
Scarf 103
$1.15
Center 105
75c

147
2 and 4 yr.
$1.65

140
1 and 2 yr
$1.85

162
$1.00
Matches
Boudoir Cap
163—35c

157—$1.75
Matches
Nightgown
156—$2.50

159—85c
Matches
Pajamas 158
$2.50

160
$1.15

109
Bedspread
$4.75
This design made in complete
Boudoir Set

165
Dress
$1.75

149
2 and 4 yr.
$2.25

128
Doll
75c

132
$1.40

150
6 and 8 yr
$1.40

143
2 to 3 yr
$1.50

148
2 and 4 yr
$2.00

The Grey Package of Quality

These delightful and beautiful articles come in Royal Society Embroidery Package Outfits. Their faultless workmanship and dependable quality distinguish Royal Society Package Outfits from all others.

All the wonderful Royal Society creations could not be illustrated on this page but your dealer will gladly show you the exquisite variety of designs.

The articles are made of first quality materials and stamped for embroidery. You do not have to know how to embroider—the lesson sheets and working diagrams guide you; and every package also contains a sufficient quantity of the correct floss in full size skeins.

Send for Complete Illustrated Circular

Prices quoted for U. S.—higher elsewhere.

H.E.Verran Co., Inc.
Union Sq. West New York

Send for New Embroidery Book

Include 10c and we will also send a valuable floss card showing samples of the beautiful colors obtainable in Royal Society Embroidery Floss.

You will find this card most useful for matching and selecting colors, either for embroidering or decorating your gowns.

The Embroidery Book gives lessons in the most used embroidery stitches and contains helpful suggestions for the home. Millions of needlewomen have found complete satisfaction with all Royal Society Needlework Products, which include

Embroidery Package Outfits ~ Stamped Articles ~ Not in Packages
Sweater Twist ~ An Artificial Silk
Fast Color Embroidery and Crochet Cottons
Boil Proof Satin Floss and Monoselle
Celesta ~ The washable artificial Embroidery Silk

Sold by Dealers Everywhere

H.E.Verran Co., Inc.
Union Sq. West New York

MENUS FOR MARCH

By Jessie A. Boys

These menus were planned to provide correct nutritional values within the means of an average household budget. They were edited and approved by Martha Van Rensselaer, Head of the School of Home Economics, Cornell University

Whether March comes in like a lion or a lamb, one thing's certain—your folks will be hungry as bears. So try these nourishing, well-balanced menus on them. And if there are any dishes you don't know how to make—Washington Pie, say, or St. Patrick Salad, "shure an' that sounds good"—just drop a line to our Home-Making Department and we'll send you the recipes. But please don't ask for more than five at once, will you? Address us at THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., and don't forget to enclose a stamped envelope.

THE festive day of this month is St. Patrick's Day. Then you may find occasion for entertaining guests or for pleasing the family with little extras.

Green as a color scheme is easily achieved. If you serve no foods that in themselves are green, then you can decorate the table with green just as a reminder of the day.

Watercress as a garnish is more of a novelty than the constantly overworked parsley, and is usable from cocktail or canapé through the salad course.

Shamrock rolls may be made of baking-powder biscuit dough mixed stiff enough to knead for ten minutes. Then roll, shape, chill and bake them.

The dessert should have a touch of green. Irish Iceberg is simply lemon ice tinted pale green with a green-colored peppermint-flavored sugar sirup which is poured over it.

SUNDAY

BREAKFAST

Orange-Juice
Flaked-Wheat Cereal Hot Milk or Cream
Jelly Poached Eggs on Toast
Milk or Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Oyster Stew Split Crackers
Celery Stuffed with Cheese
Nut-and-Date Bread
Washington Pie Hot Chocolate

DINNER

Tomato Soup Cheese Crackers
Meat Pie Mashed Potatoes
Baked Squash Graham Bread
Mixed Pickles
Fruit Gelatin with Whipped Cream
Milk or Coffee

MONDAY

BREAKFAST

Stewed Figs Hominy Grits with Cream
Wheat Muffins Scrambled Eggs
Milk or Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Cream-of-Carrot Soup
Toasted Triangles of Bread
Fruit Salad Mayonnaise
Nut Bread Milk or Tea

DINNER

Roast Pork Apple Sauce
Sweet Potatoes Cole-Slaw
Buttered Parsnips
Raisin Bread Currant Jelly
Prune Whip Soft Custard
Milk or Coffee

TUESDAY—St. Patrick's Day

BREAKFAST

Apple Sauce
Bran Flakes Top Milk
Toasted Muffins Bacon
Jam
Milk or Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Welsh Rabbit
Lettuce Thousand Island Dressing
Whole-Wheat Bread Jelly
Corn-Starch Blanc Mange with Sour Cherries
Milk Tea

DINNER

Lemon-Mint-Jelly Cocktail
Steamed Fillet of Halibut Fish Sauce
Parsley Potatoes Fresh Spinach
Shamrock Rolls Oil Pickles
St. Patrick Salad Wafers
Shamrock-Decorated Cake
Irish Iceberg
Milk Coffee

WEDNESDAY—Inauguration Day

BREAKFAST

Grapefruit
Oatmeal Griddle Cakes Maple-Sirup
Sausage Cakes Plum Jelly
Milk or Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Casserole Hominy and Beef
Harvard Beets
Buttered Cabbage
Bran Muffins Conserve
Milk Tea

DINNER

Tomato Bouillon Wafers
Roast Chicken
Sweet Potatoes Giblet Gravy
Onions au Gratin
Cranberry Jelly Rolls
Jelly-Cherry Custard
Inaugural Cake
Milk or Coffee

THURSDAY

BREAKFAST

Stewed Prunes
Corn Flakes Top Milk
Muffins Eggs and Bacon
Milk or Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Corn Chowder
Lettuce-and-Onion Salad Mayonnaise
Radishes Baking-Powder Biscuit
Cream Puffs
Milk or Tea

DINNER

Fruit Cocktail
Cheese Soufflé Scalloped Potatoes
Buttered Cabbage
Pickled Beets
Ice-Cream Wafers
Milk or Coffee

FRIDAY

BREAKFAST

Baked Apple
Cracked Wheat Cream
Oyster Omelet
Toast Marmalade
Milk or Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Baked Macaroni and Cheese
Prune-and-Nut Salad
Whole-Wheat Bread
Floating Island
Tea

DINNER

Bouillon Wafers
Creamed Finnan Haddie
Boiled Rice Spiced Crab-Apples
Buttered String-Beans
Parker House Rolls
Mincemeat Tarts with Whipped Cream
Milk or Coffee

SATURDAY

BREAKFAST

Sliced Oranges
Codfish-and-Potato Cakes
Crisp Bacon
Corn Bread Jelly
Milk or Coffee

LUNCHEON OR SUPPER

Creamed Egg on Toast
Baked Potato Stewed Tomato
Hot Biscuit Honey
Cocoa

DINNER

Fruit Cup
Baked Kidney Beans with Fresh Pork
Mashed Potatoes Chilli Sauce
Steamed Whole-Wheat Bread
Apple-and-Orange Salad
Chocolate Junket Cookies
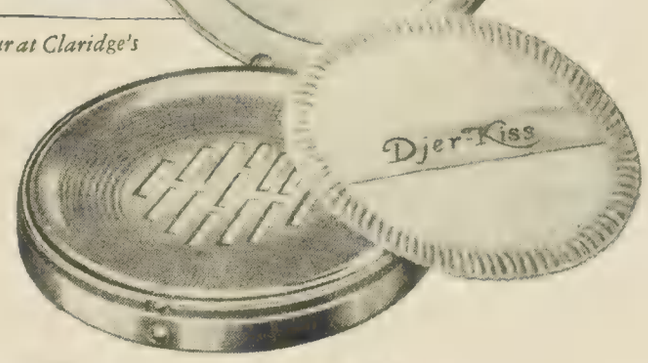
Milk or Coffee



FASHION'S NEW LAW: "Let but a single French fragrance breathe its alluring parfum in each nécessité de toilette." Kerkoff, Paris

In Paris, rendezvous of Fashion: Dinner hour at Claridge's

The Djer-Kiss Aids to Charm

PARFUM
TALC
FACE POWDER
VEGETALE
TOILET WATER
LIP ROUGE
BRILLIANTINE
CREAMS
ROUGE
SACHET
SOAP

Now!

Carry loose face powder

as safely, as conveniently as a Compact

HAVE you not, Madame, often said to yourself: "If only I could carry my loose face powder with me in my handbag! In some neat, safe, convenient way."

Now you can—with the new Djer-Kiss Loose Powder Vanity. Ingenious "powder pockets" (an exclusive Djer-Kiss feature) release, each time, just enough powder for your puff. Just enough; no more—no excess powder can come through.

So easy to re-fill

To re-fill the loose powder compartment, you have but to lift the tray. [Re-fill with Djer-Kiss Face Powder—for this French poudre is of incomparable fineness and quality.] Then snap the tray back into place.

Now, Madame, your Vanity is once more ready for your use!

Ask then today at your favorite shop to see this new aid to beauty. See with your own eyes how now at last you can carry loose powder as safely as you would a Compact!

Djer-Kiss

LOOSE POWDER VANITY

© A. H. S. Co. 1925

Djer-Kiss
ROUGE-&-LOOSE-POWDER
Vanity

A dainty double vanity, exquisitely fashioned of nickel silver. It combines: Loose Powder Compartment with the unique powder pockets; Djer-Kiss Rouge Compact; and a double-faced mirror—on one side, a detail mirror; on the other, a reducing mirror.

82% of these Hospital Dietitians say:

"Cream of Tartar Baking Powder is best from a healthful point of view"

Contains no alum. Leaves no bitter taste

"What kind of baking powder do you consider best from a healthful point of view?"

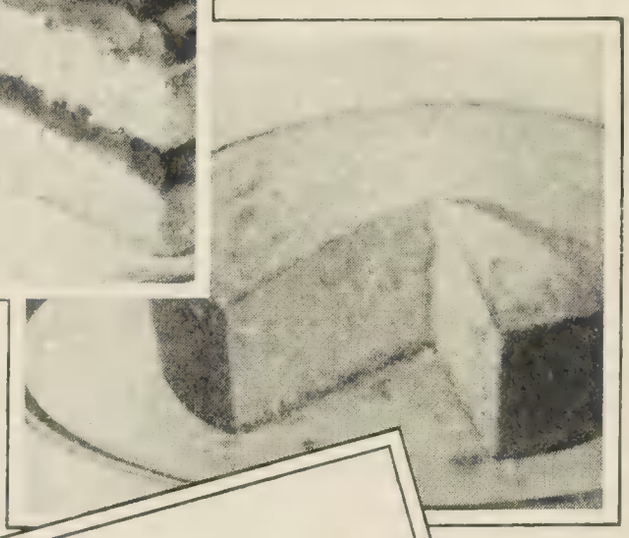
That was the question recently put to a notable group of dietitians in recognized hospitals all over the country.

82% of those replying definitely said "Cream of Tartar!"

HOSPITAL dietitians are especially competent to speak on this subject. For they have wide experience in the chemistry of foods—the work they do demands the most exacting care.

Their overwhelming endorsement of cream of tartar, the principal ingredient of Royal, is of vital interest to every housekeeper.

It is a precious ingredient—this cream of tartar. Every bit of it used in Royal Baking Powder is made from the finest grapes grown, so that for over 50 years there has been no variation in the high health quality of the baking powder so many millions depend on daily.



Cakes and biscuits baked with Royal are not only marvelously light and fluffy but have a fine, even texture, a delicious full flavor with no trace of bitter taste. Yet enough Royal for a large luscious layer cake costs less than 2c!

Send for complete recipe book — FREE

Over 350 practical and delicious recipes of all kinds—including those pictured here. Let us send you a copy free—use the coupon.

FEATHER COCOANUT CAKE—An easy method is to sift dry ingredients in one bowl, mix the liquids in another, then combine.

COCOA CREAM CAKE—Melting chocolate is often troublesome. With cocoa, this cake is easily and quickly made.

Send for the famous Royal Cook Book — It's FREE

The Royal Baking Powder Co.,
111 East 42nd Street, New York

Send me free copy of the famous Royal Cook Book—over 350 delicious, tested recipes for all kinds of foods.

Name .....

Address .....

GELATIN IN THE DIET OF BOTH SICK AND WELL

By Mary E. Bayley, R. N.

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

Though this article was written primarily to show the uses of gelatin in the diet of the sick, the recipes given here will be greatly appreciated by the well members of any family. And a gelatin dish has so many advantages, too! It can be made in a jiffy, it keeps well—and it is cool and enticing to serve during the warmer days that soon will be with us.

We have discovered six new and delectable desserts that use gelatin. They're especially seasonable, too—grapefruit à la St. Patrick, for one. Would you like us to send them to you? Write to our Home-Making Department, THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., and enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope, please.

IN THE preparation of food for the sick, gelatin is a valuable assistant from several standpoints.

First: Sick people having small appetite and little taste for meat often suffer a loss of albumin. Gelatin, being an albumin economizer, protects the body against this loss.

Second: Since gelatin is a dainty, picturesque vehicle for supplying nourishment, it may be used to present familiar foods in new form—that is, its use will often prevent the sick from tiring of staple foods.

Third: Contrary to general opinion, good high-grade gelatin does contain nourishment. It furnishes protein, and since it is readily dissolved it quickly passes through the digestive tract. That is, gelatin makes the least possible demand upon the digestive and assimilating organs, while at the same time it supplies tissues with an almost immediate food.

Fourth: It is rarely used alone; and the addition of other agents, such as sweetening, flavoring and whipped cream, classify gelatin dishes not only as protein, but also as energizers and fats.

In preparing gelatin, care should be exercised not to stir too much when hot, since this may make the gelatin stringy and cause it to refuse to jelly.

The monotony of liquids such as beef-juice or fruit-juice may be varied by presenting them in solid form.

SOLID BEEF-JUICE

Cut the upper or lower part of a round of beef into small pieces and extract the juice. There are two methods for extracting the juice from meat:

First: Cut the beef into slices and, in order to start the juices, sear on both sides over the fire for a few minutes. After the meat is seared, cut it into small pieces and extract the juice by means of a lemon-squeezer or meat-press.

Second: Cut the meat into cubes, place it in a bottle or jar and add a tablespoon of water. Set the jar on a rack in a saucepan over warm water. Let the water surround the jar to the depth of the meat and keep it at a temperature of 150 to 160 degrees Fahrenheit—which does not mean boiling, since water boils at 212 degrees—for at least two hours.

After extracting as much juice as possible from the meat, measure the quantity obtained. Allow three-fourths of a tablespoon of gelatin to each cup of juice. Soak the gelatin for fifteen minutes in half of the cold juice and when the gelatin is softened pour into it the other half of the juice, which should be hot. Season it with salt and pepper and place the container in very hot water and slowly stir the mixture until the gelatin has dissolved. Allow several hours for hardening.

Solid beef-juice may be given either to the convalescent or to the sick, provided, of course, it is in accordance with the diet prescribed. For the convalescent it may be cut into cubes and served with mayonnaise on a lettuce leaf, while for the very sick it should be given plain without the lettuce and mayonnaise.

Chicken broth, veal broth or any other meat stock when jellied makes an agreeable change of food for sick persons.

JELLIED BROTH

Soak one tablespoon of gelatin in one-fourth cup of cold water. When the gelatin has softened, add to it one and three-fourths of a cup of hot strained fat-free meat stock. Heat over hot water until the gelatin is entirely dissolved. Chill.

OTHER GELATIN DISHES

Fat in the diet of the sick is often indispensable. Cream is usually the best medium for supplying fat, yet even this is frequently difficult to give, since it may cause nausea. Cream when combined with gelatin may lose its tendency to nauseate and may be tolerated by even the most delicate stomach.

CREAM MOLD

Soften a tablespoon of gelatin in two tablespoons of cold milk. Whip a cup of cream until stiff. Then heat to the boiling-point one-half cup of milk, sweeten and flavor as desired. Pour the hot milk on the softened gelatin and stir slowly. After the gelatin has dissolved, pour it into a granite pan, place it on ice or in ice-water and stir constantly. When the mixture begins to harden, stir in the whipped cream slowly. Turn it into a glass dish and chill.

APPLE DELIGHT

Peel and core an apple, cut it into eighths and stew it until tender in a cup of water to which has been added a pinch of salt and sugar to taste. Soften one teaspoon of gelatin in four teaspoons of cold water. Add four teaspoons of boiling hot water and stir it until the gelatin has dissolved. To this add one teaspoon of grapefruit-juice and two tablespoons of the sirup in which the apple was cooked. Place the apple in a cup, pouring the prepared liquid over it. After it has been chilled, serve it with whipped cream.

STANDING CUSTARD

Soften one tablespoon of gelatin in two tablespoons of cold milk. Scald a cup of milk in a double boiler. Add one well-beaten egg and stir it until it thickens. Pour this custard on the softened gelatin. Add sugar and flavor and stir it until it is quite smooth; transfer it to a dish and chill.

Fruit-juice, eggs and gelatin also combine into savory concoctions.

JAUNE MANGE

Soften one tablespoon of gelatin in a cup of cold water. When it is softened, add the juice of an orange, the yolks of two well-beaten eggs and a tablespoon of lemon-juice. Sweeten and strain. Place it over hot water and stir the mixture until it becomes hot. Cool, turn it into a mold and set it on ice.

It was her doctor's recommendation

WHEN she was only a few weeks old, this little girl, Cecil Woodman, had to be put on bottle feedings. Her mother tried various prepared formulas, all without success. Nothing would agree with the baby.

Then the doctor recommended condensed milk. They bought a can of Eagle Brand and gave her a feeding. It was the first meal Cecil had digested in weeks. After that they bought Eagle Brand by the case, for it became her regular mainstay.

Today, three-year-old Cecil is as healthy and vital as she is charming. Straight and graceful, with strong muscles and good bones, she is an untiring little athlete.

She is only one of thousands of children who owe their first healthy start in life to Eagle Brand. In fact Eagle Brand is the most successful baby food in the world because it is pure rich milk —a child's most perfect food—combined with refined sugar by a special process which makes it exceptionally digestible.

If you cannot nurse your baby, start him on Eagle Brand today—the food that has been tried and proved by mothers and doctors for three generations.

If you like to compare your experience with that of other mothers send for a copy of the new Borden booklet What Other Mothers Say. You'll be keenly interested in the unsolicited letters, which have been selected from the thousands that pour into the Borden Company yearly. Another book, Baby's Welfare, gives information on the care of your baby. Send the coupon for both. The Borden Company, 504 Borden Bldg., 350 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.

CECIL WOODMAN
Daughter of Mr. & Mrs. Henry Staunton Woodman
Rye, New York

The coupon brings these books free

Borden's
EAGLE BRAND
CONDENSED MILK

THE BABY WELFARE DEPT.
The Borden Co.
504 Borden Bldg.
350 Madison Ave.
New York, N. Y

Please send me my free copies of What Other Mothers Say and Baby's Welfare.

Name.....

Address.....

TEA IS SERVED

And trays are lovelier than ever

By Mary Harrod Northend

But trays can be used for more things than tea. They make artistic and colorful decorations for your hall, your living-room and dining-room. And in their strictly utilitarian sphere, they are one of the most practical articles a housewife can have about for clearing the table, bringing jellies from the cellar, or caring for an invalid. Mrs. Sanders, Head of our Department of House Decoration, will be glad to advise you on the various uses of trays, small or large, old or new. Address her, care of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., and please don't forget to enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope for her reply.

THE present vogue of the friendly afternoon tea has brought about a revival of interest in great-grandmother's trays. Quaint bits are these old ones, varying in shape, material and tone, but wholly adaptable to the usages of to-day.

At the present time the shops are showing trays that range from the imported ones of yesteryear to modern types made of raffia, wood and even papier-maché. Adequate in size to hold the lovely tea-sets that are to be placed upon them, they offer a choice that enables a selection to fit into any background.

A beautiful tray of black lacquer inlaid with mother-of-pearl

Particularly fine in a Colonial atmosphere are Oriental trays. These come in any size you may desire. For ornamentation they show gilt filigree on a black ground, with quaint little mandarins, or a Chinese pagoda reached by crossing a golden bridge. Sometimes these ideas are worked out in mother-of-pearl insets.

Then there is the old-time English tray, painted dull red and showing for picture a hunting scene. This type is being reproduced to-day with such exactness that it is almost an impossibility to tell the old from the new. It is particularly attractive if set with old Spode, for the black and white of the china contrasts admirably with the gay notes of the tray decoration.

Wooden trays painted an ivory hue, outlined with jade green and decorated with pink or red roses, make pleasing backgrounds for gorgeous tea-sets of Italian design.

If one has inherited old Lowestoft, there need be no hesitation in using it in rooms that breathe an old-time atmosphere. This is likewise true of blue Canton china, thin at the edges and heavy to handle. The old pieces transport us in imagination to the shade of the vine-clad arbor, where the Colonial dame sipped her tea amid the fragrance of lavender and mignonette; and as we linger a bit in the shadow of the great tree that wafts a breeze across our living-porch, we dream in retrospect, listening to the hum of the bee or watching the golden-winged butterfly flit from flower to flower among the posy-beds. In the Winter, when Jack Frost lays his icy fingers on the flower world, we sip our tea by firelight. Indoors or out, Summer or Winter, the fragile old china bits are potently romantic. Just to handle them thrills one with their charm.

Many old trays that have become battered and worn through long usage can be done over charmingly and made serviceable again. True, the golden filigree work has to be sacrificed, for only artisans of foreign lands understand its fashioning. But the trays are no less lovely in their fresh ornamentation.

Raffia for a tray is particularly practical in that it lends itself to many tones. Thus if we become tired of our raffia tray stained gray, we can scrape it and stain it again to suit our fancy.

When one is fortunate enough to have an extra tray that can be spared for decorative embellishment, it may be hung as a picture against a tinted wall, or placed in the center of a panel above a fireplace, sometimes with a background of fabric.

So the tray, simple or decorative, fills a unique place in interior decoration. And though lovely old great-grandmother trays are few and far between, there are adequate substitutes to be found in delightful replicas or in very attractive modern trays which the shops are showing in limitless array, and old or new each tray has its use.

No matter whether it be simple or elaborate, old or new, a tray, besides being useful for many purposes, fills a unique place in interior decoration

6 Minutes from package to table

Tempting, golden-brown pancakes while the coffee steeps . . . with Pillsbury's Pancake Flour.

First put on your griddle or pan. While it heats, add water or milk to Pillsbury's Pancake Flour and your batter is done. Pour cakes of this creamy batter on the griddle, let the heat puff them to a delicate brown, and they're ready to serve.

Pillsbury's Pancakes are so quickly made, and so digestible, because the powder fineness of Pillsbury's Pancake Flour insures instant, thorough cooking.

Highest grade flours make fluffy, golden-brown Pillsbury's Pancakes both sustaining and delicious.

Just a postcard request will bring "Better Pancakes and How to Make Them," a little book of helpful recipes.

Pillsbury's Buckwheat Pancake Flour makes equally delicious cakes with a real old-fashioned buckwheat flavor.

PILLSBURY FLOUR MILLS COMPANY
MINNEAPOLIS, U. S. A.

Pillsbury's Family of Foods

Pillsbury's Best Flour Pancake Flour
Buckwheat Pancake Flour Health Bran Wheat Cereal
Rye Flour Graham Flour Farina

Make This Test Yourself

Pour a little Pillsbury's Pancake Flour into your hand. Note the creamy-white color due to Pillsbury's high-grade flours. Rub it with your finger—see how smooth it is—its fine, velvety texture. Now you know why Pillsbury's makes such perfect pancakes.

Pillsbury's Pancake Flour

One of the family

WARREN G. HARDING and the grateful Diplomat

PRINCESS YEDIGAROVA of Russia

Mrs. FRITZ KREISLER and her famous collection

PRINCESS YEDIGAROVA OF RUSSIA

PRESIDENT HARDING

"Official Washington was on its way to a formal White House reception. Motors drew up at the West Gate in rapid succession. Finally one of the proudest of the old world's ambassadors descended from his limousine, his military accoutrements shining, his creamy broad cloth uniform spotless.

"Just then Laddie Boy, fresh from burying a bone, dashed past the diplomat and in a frenzy of high spirits leaped against him leaving the prints of two dirty paws. A footman hurried to the rescue and made matters worse by brushing. Embarrassed aides were escorting the unfortunate gentleman to a dressing room when President Harding passed along the corridor.

"Now, President Harding was one of the most correct and perfectly groomed of our Presidents. White flannels and linens were his joy.

"'My dear sir, please let my valet repair the damage for you. I am sure he can take it out at once with Lux as he uses it successfully for me. I am sure we can make this right.'

"The cordial sympathy of the President restored the somewhat ruffled diplomat to good humor and he appeared in the East Room later as spotless as before Laddie Boy's assault."

MARY MEADER, Massachusetts

PRINCESS MARIA YEDIGAROVA

"Most of you in America have no conception of the intense, penetrating cold of my Russia. Winters are long—snow everywhere. We must wear woolens else we would suffer. It wasn't always easy to keep these garments soft—comfortable. That is why I feel we owe a debt of gratitude to your Lux. With it, all the woolens so important to our comfort are kept soft and elastic."

PRINCESS MARIA YEDIGAROVA

MRS. FRITZ KREISLER

"The number of uses that are found for Lux in my household—not only in New York but in Vienna! It keeps my collection of old Bohemian glass clean and sparkling. It is used, too, for the rare old pieces of Viennese porcelain that form part of my collection."

MRS. FRITZ KREISLER

It is not an accident that Lux is so constantly linked with famous people—all over the world precious possessions are trusted to it. Lux will not hurt anything pure water alone won't harm.

Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

PARIS forecasts for Spring

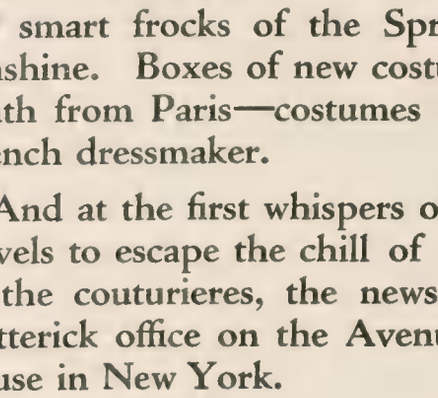
The ensemble is the important costume of the season: A simple frock to match the coat or coat lining. A tunic blouse over a slip, its lower part matching the coat. A composé frock matching both coat and lining.... The new sleeves are long and snug for general wear.... Skirts are extremely short.... When they wear belts at all Parisiennes wear them about the hips— lower than ever.... The straight silhouette varies by means of circular effects, godets and side draperies.

SOMEWHERE beside the blue of the Mediterranean the first smart frocks of the Spring are walking about in southern sunshine. Boxes of new costumes hasten on the expresses bound south from Paris—costumes with the unmistakable stamp of the French dressmaker.



And at the first whispers of the Spring fashions, whether Paris travels to escape the chill of March or returns for the openings of the couturieres, the news is being cabled straight from the Butterick office on the Avenue de l'Opéra to their great fashion house in New York.

IMMEDIATELY Butterick fashions reflect these new and vastly important modifications.

Fortunately you, yourself, can give your things the look of effortless perfection simply by following the Deltor, even if you've never sewed before.

It isn't hard, with the aid of the Deltor. Take, for instance, the delightfully slim frock with the cape back—Pattern No. 5788. You can cut this frock out of an unbelievably small amount of material because the Deltor gives you an individual layout for your size, planned for the precise width you want—something which other patterns fail to give you.

Then the Deltor makes it easy to put the frock together so it will have that all-important smartness of line. The long sleeve—a nice bit of tailoring—will offer no difficulties with the Deltor. Seams, finishing, other details are so carefully described that they can be done with the exquisite perfection of a Paris frock. The Deltor is furnished free with every Butterick Pattern. Butterick of New York, of Paris and of London.

The flower on the shoulder is the latest fad of Paris. These are two of twelve sketches you get in the Deltor showing how to make this smart detail

Pattern No. 5781 Pattern No. 5749

BUTTERICK PATTERNS WITH THE DELTOR

DATES, CURRANTS AND RAISINS

By Lucile Brewer and Alice Blinn

Recipes have been tested and approved by the School of Home Economics, Cornell University—Martha Van Rensselaer

DATES, raisins or currants have such a wide sphere of usefulness that it is an easy thing to make sure that this valuable supply of minerals finds its way into the menu. All three may be used in cooked breakfast cereals, in corn, wheat or Graham muffin mixtures, in cakes and cookies, in cake fillings, steamed breads and nut puddings. They combine well with such things as oranges and celery, nuts and pears, apples and celery, cream cheese or Cheddar cheese for salads. With plum jelly and cream cheese or with nuts, any of them will make a good sandwich.

This group of fruits should never be stewed as other fruits are. They require steaming and are greatly improved if they always have their moisture restored in this manner before they are used in any way. Since they are not stewed, they should not be soaked, as much of their value would be lost in this way.

Some confusion still exists over seeded and seedless raisins. The latter come from a variety of grape that grows without seeds; the others have the seeds removed. The seeded raisins are slightly richer in flavor and are sweeter than the seedless variety.

DATE-BRAN BREAD

2 cups bran
2 cups white flour
1 teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons sugar
4 teaspoons baking-powder
⅔ cup dates cut in small pieces
1½ cups milk
1 egg
2 tablespoons melted fat

Sift the dry ingredients together, add the dates, toss lightly together and add the milk. Mix well and add beaten egg and melted fat. Turn into a greased pan or mold and cover with oiled paper. Steam for three hours.

ROAST PORK WITH APPLE-AND-DATE STUFFING

1 pint bread-crums
1 cup tart chopped apple
1 cup dates cut in small pieces
1 tablespoon minced onion
⅓ cup celery cut in small pieces
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper
3 tablespoons melted butter
Hot water to moisten

Mix the ingredients well together. Dredge the pork with flour, place it on a rack on a roasting-pan, arrange the stuffing around it and place in a hot oven. When it has browned, add one and one-half cups of hot water and baste about every twenty minutes.

CABBAGE-AND-DATE SALAD

1 pint thinly sliced cabbage
1 cup dates cut in small pieces
1 cup celery cut in small pieces

Marinate with French dressing and serve on lettuce.

SNAPPY FRUIT SALAD

Select tart apples, wash but do not pare and cut in dice. Chop an equal quantity of sweet green peppers and add one-third the quantity of steamed currants. Mix with mayonnaise dressing. Have ready green-pepper cases. Fill the cases with the mixture and serve each case on a lettuce leaf.

CELERY-AND-RAISIN BREAD

⅔ cup seedless raisins, steamed until soft
1 cup shredded cabbage
1 pint crisp diced celery
Salt, paprika

Mix well and serve with French dressing in lettuce cups.

CHEESE-AND-RAISIN DREAMS

1 package cream cheese
½ cup chopped raisins
1 tablespoon lemon-juice
Salt, paprika

Mix well and spread on a slice of bread cut one-quarter inch thick. Cover with another slice, pressing together. Cut sandwiches in triangular halves. To one beaten egg add one-half cup of milk. Mix well and dip the bread triangles in the mixture. Sauté a golden brown in fat, preferably butter. Serve very hot.

CURRANT-PUMPKIN PUDDING

2 cups steamed and strained pumpkin
⅜ cup steamed currants
¼ cup sugar
¼ cup molasses
1 teaspoon cinnamon
2 beaten eggs
1½ cups milk
½ teaspoon ginger
½ teaspoon mace
¼ teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon butter

Mix well, pour into small buttered molds, set in a pan of hot water and bake until firm. Serve with whipped cream.

SULTANA BREAD

2 cups corn-meal
1 cup Graham flour
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon soda
1 cup Sultana raisins
1½ cups sour milk
1 egg
½ cup molasses
3 teaspoons baking-powder

Mix and sift the dry ingredients, add the raisins and toss lightly together. Add the other ingredients. Mix thoroughly and steam for two and three-quarter hours.

RAISIN FLOAT

1 cup raisins
1¼ cups boiling water
1 tablespoon flour
1 egg-yolk
⅔ cup sugar
1 tablespoon butter
Juice and grated rind of 1 lemon

Mix the flour and sugar; add the boiling water and other ingredients. Cook until clear. Serve on thin slices of toasted bread.

DATE SURPRISE

Bake any good plain cake mixture in a cake-tin with a center tube or remove the centers from cup cakes. Cover the outside with plain white icing and fill the centers with the following mixture:

1 cup steamed and chopped dates
½ cup chopped English walnuts
½ teaspoon vanilla
6 marshmallows cut in small pieces
1 cup sweetened whipped cream

Garnish with whipped cream and candied cherries.

DATE FRUIT CUP

1 cup sugar
1 cup grape-juice
⅓ cup lemon-juice
⅓ cup cherries
½ cup water
1 cup pineapple
1 cup dates

Mix sugar, fruit-juice and water together, stirring until sugar is dissolved. Remove pits from the cherries, cut the pineapple in small pieces, stone the dates and cut in small pieces. Mix the fruit, place it in service glasses, pour the juice over it, chill and serve very cold.

RAISIN ACORNS

Select small clusters of large raisins. With a pair of scissors make an incision in the blossom end of each raisin and remove the seeds. In each slit push a blanched almond, leaving at least half of the nut exposed. Serve as dessert.

DATE FUDGE

2 cups sugar
1 tablespoon white sirup
2 tablespoons cocoa
1 cup milk
2 tablespoons butter
Salt
½ teaspoon vanilla
1 cup dates, stoned and cut in small pieces

Mix the sugar, sirup, cocoa and milk together. Cook until a little dropped in cold water forms a soft ball. Remove from the fire and add butter, salt, vanilla and dates. Let stand until cool, beat until thick and creamy and turn into a buttered plate. Cut in small squares.

The HEALTH DAY!

Every day, year in and year out, should be "Health Day" for your kiddie.

BLUSTERING winds have no terror for the healthy child—the child kept clean inside as well as out.

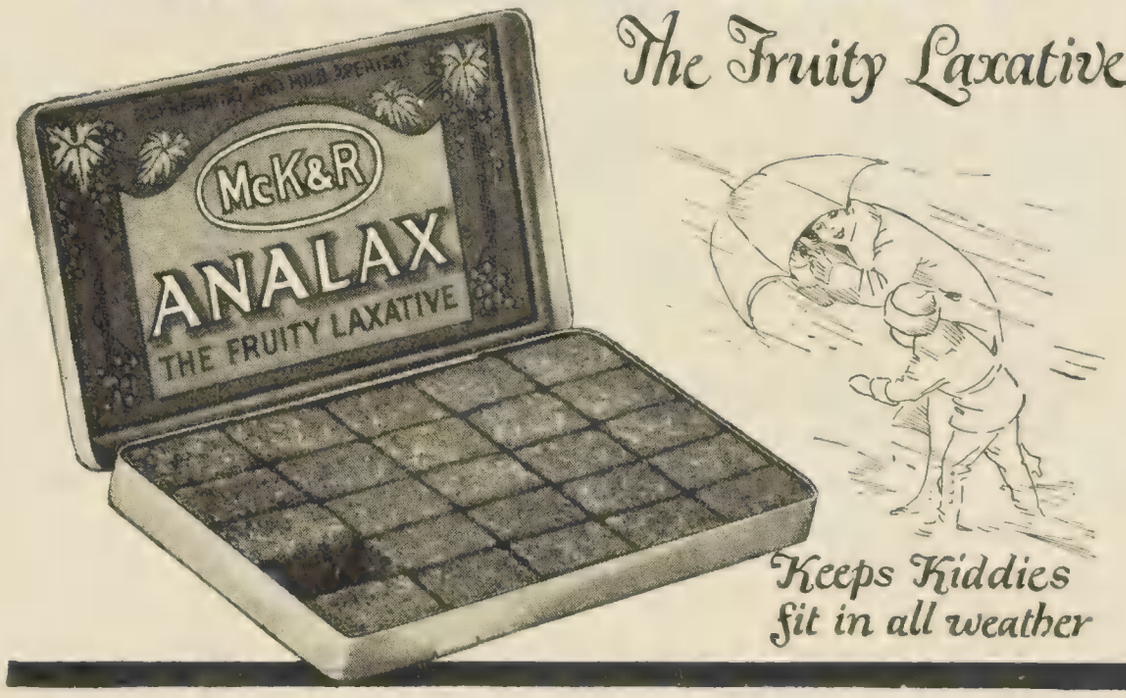
The "regular" child is healthy. Analax regulates the bowels without forming a habit.

It cannot disturb the stomach as it acts only in the intestines.

Every child loves to take Analax, The Fruity Laxative.

Good for every member of the family and especially adapted for women and children.

FREE—A postal card request will bring a Regular 15c Package FREE TO MOTHERS



McK & R

McKESSON & ROBBINS, INC.
Manufacturing Chemists
Established 1833 New York

"Nothing acts like Analax"

ANALAX

The Fruity Laxative

Keeps Kiddies fit in all weather

FREE to Mothers—10-Day Tube
Mail the Coupon

Look, mother, for film on your child's teeth

That's often a danger sign. If the dentifrice you now use doesn't combat it successfully, it's inadequate. How to combat it without harmful grit—the new way in child's tooth care specialists recommend.

FOREMOST dental authorities now advise a new way in caring for a child's teeth. A way different in formula, action and effect from any other method.

As a nation-wide hygienic movement, a 10-day test is offered mothers free. You are urged to make it. To see what modern science is doing for the better protection of children's teeth and health. Simply use the coupon.

What film indicates. Why it must be fought several times daily

Look at your child's teeth. If cloudy, dull, discolored, there's a film. And that film is often a danger sign. The child can feel it by running his tongue across his teeth.

Ordinary tooth pastes won't combat it successfully. Try the one you use now. See if the film does not still remain. To fight it constantly is essential to tooth health and general health. The teeth must be clean—any children's doctor, any dentist will tell you this.

* * * *

Film is a viscous coat that clings to teeth, gets into crevices and stays. It makes pearly teeth ugly, discolored—dingy. Many a naturally pretty child is handicapped in this way.

Film also holds food substance which ferments and forms acid. It holds the acid in contact with the teeth to cause decay. Germs by the millions breed in it. They, with tartar, are the chief cause of pyorrhea.

Now a new way

Now modern science has found a safe way to combat film. Supergritty substances are judged dangerous to the teeth. Soap and chalk methods are inadequate.

This new method, embodied in the tooth paste called Pepsodent, provides the scientifically proved combatants that is being adopted by the people of some 50 nations. Their action is to curdle the film, then harmlessly to remove it.

To millions this new way has proved the folly of dull and dingy teeth. The folly of inviting tooth troubles and all that may accompany them, when scientific prevention is so simple.

Don't you think it worth while, in justice to your children, and in fairness to yourself, to try it for ten days? The test will cost you nothing. What it will do for your children, it will do for you, for every member of your family.

Start today

Use the coupon for a free 10-day tube.

THAT fifty per cent—half the total—of our twenty-four million school children have tooth infections and decay which court the so-called communicable diseases and even mental deficiencies, is the amazing statement of world's hygienic authorities.

Where correct oral hygiene and dental care are practised, children have shown amazing improvement in health, mental activity and immunity to disease.

This tells the most recent and widely accepted method of oral hygiene—the safe combating of the insidious, germ-breeding film where most tooth troubles start.

As part of a nation-wide hygienic movement a 10-day test will be sent free to parents upon receipt of the coupon below.

Protect the Enamel

Pepsodent disintegrates the film, then removes it with an agent far softer than enamel. Never use a film combatant which contains harsh grit.

Canadian Office and Laboratories:
191 George St., Toronto, Canada

1695

FREE Mail Coupon for 10-Day Tube to Pepsodent PAT. OFF. REG. U.S.

PEPSODENT COMPANY, Dept. 469, 1104 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

Send to:

Name .....

Address .....

Only one tube to a family.

ASK US

Ask us anything you want to know about housekeeping and we will answer it personally. From our recent correspondence we publish the following questions and answers as being of general interest to all home-makers

QUESTION—I never know what to do with cold mashed potatoes. Potato cakes seem so dry and uninteresting.

Answer—There are many other things besides potato cakes for which cold mashed potatoes are useful. However, potato cakes may be made very appetizing if the potatoes are carefully prepared, well seasoned and beaten with egg until light and fluffy. A favorite use of mashed potatoes is in cream soup with onion and celery. Rub the boiled onion and celery and potato through a sieve or strainer, and add to this mixture a thin white sauce made with part creamy milk and part of the water in which the vegetables were cooked. Why not have fish cakes for breakfast some morning? You will find that both your husband and your children will consider them a welcome treat. Any left-over fresh salmon, haddock, halibut or mackerel may be used as well as codfish. And a shepherd's pie will use up both left-over meat and potatoes.

Question—When is the best time to preserve eggs and is the process simple enough so that I can do it and be sure of success? Eggs have been very high this winter and I feel that another year I must have some in storage for cooking.

Answer—You may be sure of success in preserving eggs if you use water-glass. Buy eggs in the Spring, when they are cheapest. Be sure they are absolutely fresh and, if possible, unfertilized. Mix thoroughly one and one-half quarts of water-glass with eighteen quarts of boiled water. A stone jar is the most suitable vessel in which to preserve eggs in water-glass. Two six-gallon or three four-gallon jars are sufficient for thirty dozen eggs, using the amount of solution prescribed. After thoroughly cleaning the jars, place the eggs in them and pour in the water-glass solution. The eggs at the top should be covered by at least two inches of the liquid. Cover the jars in order to prevent the water-glass from evaporating, and put them in a cool place where they will not be disturbed during the year. If the solution evaporates or becomes thick and jelly-like, add water.

Question—What is a soup bag, and how is it used in making soups?

Answer—A soup bag is used for adding seasoning to soups. A collection of spices, sweet herbs and seeds are tied in a tiny, round cheese-cloth. There should not be a great abundance of any one kind of spice in a single bag. Three cloves, six peppercorns, four mustard seeds, three branches each of dried parsley, basil, Summer savory and thyme, and one-fourth of a teaspoonful of celery seed will make a fairly good bag.

Question—How often should floors which receive moderate wear be waxed? A friend of mine told me that I used too much wax on mine, and I do not wish to use more than necessary to preserve the floor as wax is expensive and it takes considerable effort to apply it.

Answer—Under moderate use a floor needs rewaxing only two or three times a year. Applying too much wax is a common mistake; the surplus simply lies on the surface in a soft coat that collects dust and is easily marred. Parts of the floor that have the hardest wear may need to be waxed as often as once a month. Clean them thoroughly using a moist cloth, or if the spots are very dirty use a cloth moistened with gasoline or turpentine. Apply a thin coat of wax and polish well. Waxed floors should be cleaned with a soft brush. Do not use an oil-mop as oil will soften the wax.

ASK THE DELINEATOR

We are glad to offer our readers the following services; and we hope they will have no hesitation in consulting our department experts on any personal or household problem. Be sure (1) to address your inquiry to THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.; (2) to give us your return address; (3) to enclose the cost of the pamphlet or other literature (in each case a minimum amount fixed to cover cost of printing and postage)

Babies and Children—In its Happy Child Department, THE DELINEATOR offers mothers the medical advice of nationally known baby and child specialists.

The following pamphlets, which are reprints of articles that have appeared in THE DELINEATOR, may be had for ten cents each: "The Expectant Mother and the New Baby," by Dr. Ralph Lobenstine; "The General Care of the Baby," "Maternal Nursing," "Artificial Feeding" and "Diet Problems of Childhood" (four separate booklets), by Dr. L. Emmett Holt; "Early Childhood," by Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw; "The Mental Health of the Child," by Dr. Thomas W. Salmon; "The School Child," by Dr. William Palmer Lucas; "The Child's Teeth," by Dr. Harvey J. Burkhart; "Three Dread Diseases of Childhood: Diphtheria (by Dr. William H. Park), Tuberculosis (by Dr. L. Emmett Holt), Diabetes (by Dr. Henry Rawle Geyelin)," and "Play, Eyes and Movies," by Dr. Ward A. Holden and Dr. Henry L. K. Shaw. There is also a treatise on "Correct Posture," by Dr. Alan De Forest Smith, to be had for ten cents; and a cloth-bound "Baby's Record Book," by Dr. Bird T. Baldwin, which costs one dollar.

Housekeeping—The Home-Making Department has more helpful leaflets than can be listed here. Write for a list of subjects. Ask any question that troubles you in your household management. Always send a self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

Building and Decoration—If you want to build, write for pictures of all Donn Barber's model houses, costing you only two cents for return postage. Then for one dollar you may order a print of floor-plans and elevations of the house you decide upon.

Ask Mrs. Sanders, the editor of this department, about furnishing and decorating (not more than five questions at one time, please). Be sure to give dimensions, exposure and full description of rooms—and a two-cent stamp for reply.

Special bulletins, "Good Floors," "Curtains and Draperies," "Walls, Woodwork and Ceilings," "Furnishing the Home" and "How to Choose, Frame and Hang Your Pictures," may be had for twenty-five cents each.

Beauty and Health—You can improve your appearance with a little time and careful study. The Beauty Editor will answer personal questions and send folders prepared by experts on the care of the skin, hands and hair, on lotions and cosmetics. These folders are free. Tell us which you want. Be sure to enclose postage.

Etiquette—Don't make social blunders. Mrs. John Cabot Kimberley will answer any personal quandary or send you instructive leaflets on the various phases of etiquette. Some of the most popular are: "Courtesies of To-day between Men and Women," "Introductions, Invitations and Replies," "Entertaining," "Travel," "House Weddings," "Etiquette at the Table," "Letter-Writing," "Calls and the Use of Cards." These leaflets cost you nothing but the postage, which should be estimated at two cents for three folders.

Entertainment—Ask us about any dinner, dance, shower or entertainment that you may be planning This department has some very interesting suggestions to offer you this month, especially a St. Patrick's Party, with appropriate games, An Affair of Forgotten Fads, and a Cross-word Party. Two cents will cover return postage.

Costume by Frances Clyne.
Photograph by Steichen.
Undergarment: Elastic Step-in, from Gossard Line of Beauty.

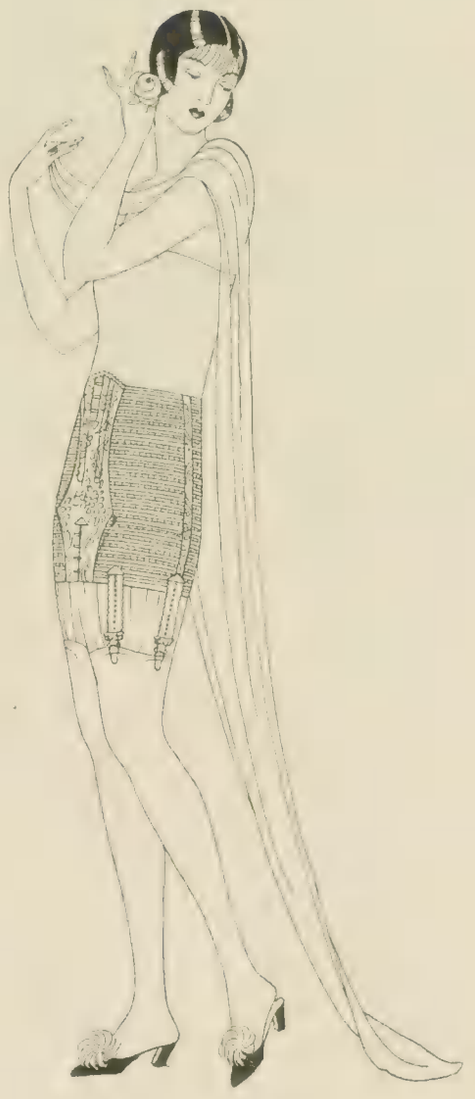


FIGURE . . . is Fashion's Foundation

If you want your clothes to look as beautiful, as smart, as those in the photograph, select one of the delightful garments from

The Gossard Line of Beauty—

Elastic Step-ins Girdles Clasp-arounds
Combinations Reducing Garments Brassieres
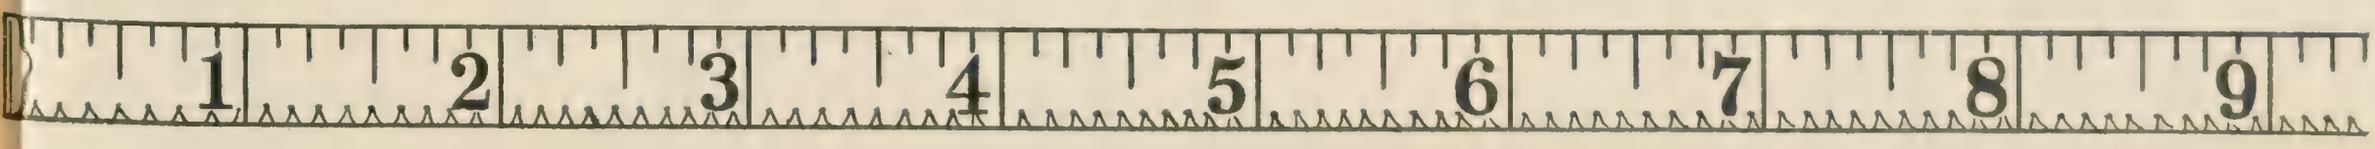
Gossard Front-lacing Corsets

Your Corsetiere will know which garment to recommend for immediate improvement.

And Yet . . . You Can't Tell You Wear One

Jean Patou, Paris couturier, says: "... the American woman ... her figure is ideal for current fashions. She is beautifully limbed, (her ankles are long and slim) and it is needless to mention her beauty and her charm..."



J. Knowles Hare, artist, and judge in national beauty contests, supplies the following interesting average measurements for American girls of 5 feet, 4 inches in height: Neck, 12½ inches; shoulders, 36 inches; upper arm, 12½ inches; chest, 34 inches; waist, 26 inches; hips, 35 inches.

Ask your corsetiere what garments from The Gossard Line of Beauty she would recommend to bring your figure immediately into harmony with the ideal of your type.

Measure Yourself Now— Use this 9-Inch Rule

Take any convenient piece of ribbon, string or tape, and lay it alongside this rule to determine how many inches you measure.

Copyright—The H. W. Gossard Co., 100 E. Ohio St., Chicago. Offices also in New York, San Francisco, London, Toronto, Sydney, Buenos Aires

When the Matron of Honor Outshone the Bride

WHEN Angela French asked me to be matron of honor at her wedding, I felt I positively couldn't. No one can know how it hurt me to refuse. We had been roommates at school. She had been my maid of honor. But since Baby came my face had grown so thin and so sallow and blotched I just couldn't think of taking such a conspicuous part.

Angela continued to plead, "It isn't your looks I want, dear—it's you." So I finally gave in, for I knew she had her heart set on it. But the more I thought of a big church wedding, the more I dreaded it. At last I went to our doctor.

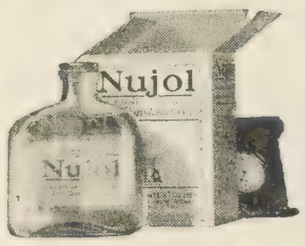
"Doctor," I said, "look at me. My dearest friend is to be married next month and I'm her matron of honor. My skin is so bad that I am ashamed to go anywhere, let alone take part in a wedding. Can't you do something to help me?"

HE was all sympathy. Just a few questions and then he said, "Your trouble can be summed up in two words—'faulty elimination.' Intestinal poisons, carried in the blood all through your body, are responsible for your sallowness, the dullness of your eyes and this skin trouble. Women, especially mothers, suffer these results of faulty elimination much more than men. The way to get rid of them is always to keep clean inside as well as out. Don't you know that a lovely skin comes only from within?"

After some advice about diet and exercise, he told me to take Nujol regularly. "Nujol will help you maintain internal cleanliness all the time," he said. "Nujol is not a laxative nor a cathartic. Continued use of such things gives only temporary relief at the risk of permanent injury. So doctors nowadays are prescribing regular lubrication for permanent internal cleanliness. Nujol lubricates and softens the food waste. Take it every night and you'll soon return to regular and thorough elimination. Then your trouble will all clear up."

I DID everything he told me. The results were simply wonderful. A lovely color came back to my face. My eyes lost their yellowish tinge and grew bright and sparkling. My hair took on a new, soft lustre. My feet, which had felt like lead, began to take me everywhere without tiring. I was a brand new woman.

At last the wedding day came. A woman always knows when she looks well and I felt confident and sure of my appearance. As I slipped into Angela's room to help with the finishing touches to her dress, she started up with surprise and delight.



"GRACE, my darling, you are positively beautiful," she cried, eagerly taking me in, new Paris frock and all. "Why, the matron of honor is going to outshine the bride!"

Nonsense, of course, but that day began a wonderful new life for me. I felt more than ever like going out and Jack seemed proud to take me. We made new friends we were awfully pleased to know. Baby has been better and Jack all the more devoted. In fact, since I learned the Nujol way to health, everything seems to have come my way all at once, and I'm absolutely happy.

What Women Should Know

IF you are subject to complexion troubles, listlessness, headache, etc., you should correct faulty elimination. Don't wait. Even now intestinal poisons may be damaging your good looks and impairing your health. Take Nujol. Nujol is not a medicine—it is simply a lubricant. Like pure water, Nujol is harmless. Hospitals use it. Physicians all over the world recommend it for infants and children and people of all ages. Nujol should be taken as regularly as you wash your face or brush your teeth. Nujol makes internal cleanliness a habit—the healthiest habit in the world. For sale by all druggists. Made by Nujol Laboratories, Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey).

Tested and Approved by the Good Housekeeping Bureau of Foods, Sanitation and Health

"Regular as Clockwork"

Nujol

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

For Internal Cleanliness

4-DAY TRIAL FREE!

Nujol, Room 802-T, 7 Hanover Sq., N.Y.

For this coupon and 10c (stamps or coin) to cover packing and postage, send trial bottle and 16 page booklet, "Internal Cleanliness". (For booklet only, check ☐ here and send without money.)

Name..... .....

Address.....

SAVE DOLLARS AND HOURS

Hints from successful housewives

If you have discovered some clever little way to save time or labor or fuel or food or anything else connected with housekeeping, tell us about it—and if we can use it in these columns we will pay you five dollars for it. Write on only one side of the paper and address your letter to The "Savers" Editor, THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y. (If you wish to have your suggestion returned in case we can not use it, please enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

SAVE TIME GRATING CHEESE

When cheese is too soft to be grated successfully, cut it into small pieces and press it through a potato-ricer. —MRS. O. P., Kelliher, Minn.

SAVE DELINEATOR COVERS FOR PICTURES

A spot in our living-room needed a small bright picture to cheer it up. But, I just couldn't afford to pay the price of a good picture, and I knew a very cheap one would be worse than none at all.

Now, however, I have the much desired effect. I took the front cover of the October DELINEATOR, a beautiful picture of a mass of gay blooms. I touched up the high lights with oil paints, shellacked the whole surface, and placed it in a dark polychrome frame which I purchased at a sale last week.

With cords and all, the total cost was less than three dollars, and I have a picture as pretty as any I saw at the price of seven dollars or so. N. N., Kansas City, Mo.

Delineator covers make fine pictures

SAVE TIME IN MAKING SALAD DRESSING

Adding the oil when making mayonnaise dressing is rather a laborious process if one has no mixer. I make two openings in the top of the can of salad oil—one opening smaller than the other. I then place the mixing bowl in the sink and the can on the drain-board in such a way that the oil runs slowly from the smaller opening into the bowl. When the dressing is well started and the oil may be added in larger quantities I turn the can so that the oil runs from the larger opening.—MRS. A. A. S., Oleum, Calif.

SAVE TROUBLE COVERING YOUR IRONING-BOARD

I have found it very useful to pad both sides of my ironing-board. I make a bag of the cover, which fits the board closely and then fasten it with a few tacks at the wide end. These few tacks keep the cover in place perfectly. If the board is covered in this way both sides can be used and recovering will be necessary only half as many times as when the old system is used. If desired, one side can be padded more thickly than the other, using the thick side for articles that are embroidered or on which there is a pattern.—MRS. F. E. S., Randolph, Va.

SAVE YOUR MIRRORS

Mirrors should never be hung where the sun shines directly on them for any considerable length of time. A mirror exposed to direct sunlight for some time becomes cloudy.—MRS. M. B. K., Leavenworth, Wash.

SAVE EFFORT CLEANING YOUR BROILER-PAN

The broiler-pan is one of the most difficult utensils to clean, as frequently the juice of the meat or other food cooked in it burns on very thoroughly. If the pan is greased before the broiler is used, it will be much easier to clean afterward. The pan is thus protected from the juice of the meat by a coating of fat.—MRS. A. O., Sandusky, O.

THE OIL-CAN AT CLEANING TIME SAVES FUTURE TROUBLE

One morning as I was collecting the necessary implements for the up-stairs cleaning, I slipped an oil-can into the pocket of my house-dress. Before turning on the vacuum cleaner I dropped a little oil into the oil-hole of the cleaner. The casters on one of the beds had refused to work properly for some time and were marring the floor. I put a drop or two of oil on each caster and was delighted with the result. As I opened the door of a clothes-room, the hinge gave a protesting squeak. It was the work of only a moment to apply a few drops of the oil to the hinge and silence it. The oil-heater in the bathroom was beginning to rust. I rubbed the rust spots with oil and off they came. (Needless to say I did not use the oil on the heater while the heater was hot.) Every housekeeper should have a handy oil-can. She will find it useful on many occasions.—MRS. J. A. H., Kitchener, Ont., Can.

SAVE TROUBLE GRATING CHOCOLATE

I need a considerable amount of grated chocolate. I find it much easier to put the chocolate through the food chopper rather than to use the grater. Much less time is required and the hands are not scratched as they often are on the grater.—MRS. W. W. S., Burlington, Ia.

SHIRTS SAVE LAUNDRY BAGS

Men's shirts make rather unique but very satisfactory laundry bags. The shirt should be sewed together at the bottom and more than half way up the front. The body of the shirt then becomes a receptacle for the larger garments and the sleeves may be used for smaller articles such as handkerchiefs, collars and hose. I have one of these improvised bags in every bedroom closet, and each member of the family keeps his soiled clothes in his own particular laundry bag.—MRS. B. E., Riverdale, Md.

SAVE ON THE PLUMBER'S BILL

When the drain-pipe of the sink or bowl threatens to become clogged, attach the garden hose to the nearest faucet, remove the drain-plate and insert the nozzle into the drain, packing cloths firmly around it. Then hold the hose in place while the water is turned on. Any ordinary obstruction can be removed in this way.—MRS. C. L. H., Sigourney, Ia.

The moment he enters the house his health is in your hands

OUT in the world your husband and your children must fight their own battle against germ-infection. But you can make the home their "castle of health." Keep it a health-clean place for their hours of relaxation, and they will be largely protected against the invasion of disease.

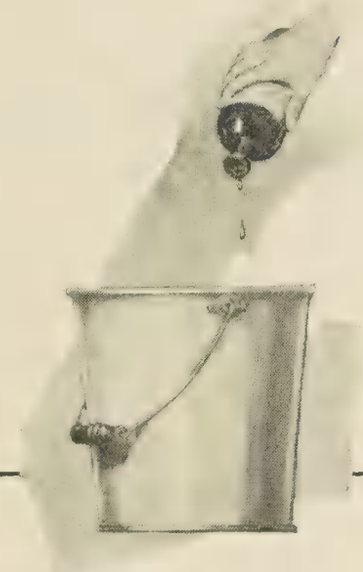
Health-cleanliness is as different from mere soap-and-water cleanliness as radiant sunshine from moon-light. Yet health-cleanliness—the modern method of cleaning—is so easy to obtain.

A few magic drops put in your cleaning water purify all surfaces and crevices, where disease germs may lurk. Health authorities will tell you that if the danger of illness is to be reduced, your home must be free of these germs that abound everywhere—on door-knobs, door-jambs, chair-arms, tables, bannisters, a hundred danger-places where hands, big or little, may rest.

"Lysol" in your cleaning water does these three important things

SOAP and water is powerless to kill germs. But the drops of "Lysol" Disinfectant in your cleaning water do kill them. Your home is freed from hidden menace as well as surface dirt; it is left sweet, clean and safe.

"Lysol" is now used everywhere for modern cleaning because it has three valuable properties:



1. It deodorizes
2. It purifies
3. Its soapy nature helps to clean as it disinfects

NEVER be without it for your daily cleaning. Put a few drops in the water every time you clean. Dip your cloth, your broom, your mop, in this solution. It will not hurt the most sensitive hands.

Continue to disinfect with a stronger "Lysol" solution the familiar germ-breeding spots—garbage pail, toilet bowl, drain pipes. Your home is then made health-clean to safeguard your family.

Be sure you get the genuine "Lysol." It is the standard disinfectant used by hospitals and recommended by physicians. Your druggist has it.

free
a set of the Library of Health
See below

THE MAGIC DROPS

JUST a few drops of "Lysol" in the water whenever you clean, transform mere surface cleaning to health-cleaning. No extra work or trouble.

New facts

about your health in this "Lysol" Health Library

—send for free set

THE span of life has increased fifteen years, within the last generation, through our new scientific methods for the prevention of disease.

The makers of "Lysol" have compiled a library of three booklets, which will give you the facts that scientists have learned about the preservation of health.

You will want these books for every day use and for reference. One, filled with practical methods, is entitled "Health Safeguards in the Home." A second, "The Scientific Side of Youth and Beauty" is written by a woman, for women, on the care of their charm and vitality. The third, "When Baby Comes," should be in the hands of every prospective mother.

This Health set will be gladly sent to you, without charge. Fill out the coupon below, and mail it today.

Manufactured only by LYSOL, INC.,
635 Greenwich Street, New York City

Sole Distributors: LEHN & FINK, INC.,
New York

Canadian Agents: Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd.,
10 McCaul Street, Toronto

Lysol
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off. Disinfectant

LEHN & FINK, INC., Sole Distributors
Dept. J-24, 635 Greenwich Street
New York City

I should like to know all the scientific facts about health protection contained in your Library of Health. Please mail me a free set.

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

A baby's tender skin needs a very special care against chafing

Read what Dr. Holt says about the importance of powder in preventing chafing . . .

NO one can fail to be impressed with the deep seriousness with which young mothers today regard every detail of the preparation for their babies, and every detail of their rearing.

Few today have not learned that the care of the baby's skin is one of the most important factors in maintaining his ease and health.

Chafing and other eruptions easily occur. Fretfulness results. And the nineteen hours a day that a young baby should spend in sleep are at the outset pitiably reduced.

"To prevent chafing," says Dr. L. Emmett Holt, America's great child doctor, "special care must be exercised. The main things to be secured are cleanliness and the free use of toilet powder."

To be safe for a baby's tender skin, the powder must be beyond any possibility of reproach. It must be exquisitely fine — absolutely pure — healing—and safe as only a laboratory devoted to the preparation of antiseptically safe articles for the medical profession can make it.

THE ONLY baby powder that has this authority behind it is, as everybody knows, Johnson's Baby Powder.

Because there was no such safe baby powder to be had, physicians asked the house they knew was equipped to prepare surgically clean products, to make it. According to the physicians' formula, Johnson & Johnson prepare this powder in their marvelous laboratories—the largest of their kind.

The function of Johnson's Baby Powder is to prevent the infections that are caused by the moisture that lurks in the creases of baby's skin, or that come from perspiration or the dampness of wet diapers.

It is prescribed for use after the baby's bath, after the tender body has been dried with soft towels with as little friction as possible. Also for use after every changing of the diaper, the dampened skin being first cleansed, then carefully dried. This final gentle dusting and rubbing with the soothing, healing and absorbent "Johnson's" comes as an incalculable relief where there is any tendency to irritation.

Already Johnson's Baby Powder is being used by more mothers than any other. Get a can for baby as you pass your own drug store today.

But Johnson and Johnson will never be content till all mothers know the goodness and purity of this beneficent powder. They are now offering free, a small can of it together with the concise little book on the care of baby's skin, "The Faith of a Baby."

You have only to send us your name and address on the coupon below and the book and the powder will be sent you immediately.

In creature comforts— his happiness

Johnson & Johnson, New Brunswick, N. J.

Please send me free, the small can of the baby powder made in your famous laboratories, and the little book—"The Faith of a Baby."

Your druggist is more than a merchant E

TRANSFORM YOUR BACK YARD

Concluded from page 19

will visit her when the cherries are ripe, and blackberry blossoms which are as lovely in flower as any clematis. There is real poetry in pies when one has watched the progress of bud and flower through to the luscious fruit—a poetry unknown to the housewife who must buy from the greengrocer.

If annuals were used the first season and the perennials grown from seed, such a garden as this of Mrs. Winegar's could be made at very slight cost. In fact the entire planting expense could come inside of fifty dollars, while the cost of the vegetable-garden, of course, would vary as the housewife wished.

One of the most blessed facts of gardening is that its success is not necessarily in proportion to the amount of money spent on it, but in proportion to the love, the intelligence, the skill, and the exercise of the gardener's special virtues—patience and foresight. It is perfectly possible to spoil a place with a million dollars, and it is possible to make a home and back yard charming with fifty dollars—or less.

Such a little garden, where beauty and utility are met, is a delightful expression of the home-maker's art. The man of the house will take joy in plucking fresh strawberries, in cutting asparagus and in tending roses. A garden will mean something more than a biweekly pushing of the lawn-mower. A backyard garden makes very definitely for happiness, and it gives to little children that priceless heritage—a host of happy memories—a childhood linked with fragrant, towering lilacs, tall hollyhocks with humming-birds about them and all the lovely succession of garden beauty not seen in parks, but that "grew in our back yard at home."

Here follows the Planting List:

TREES

1 Crab-Apple Tree
2 Peach Trees (Rochester)
2 Cherry Trees
2 Plum Trees
1 Maple Tree
1 Elm Tree
2 Walnut Trees

HOUSE PLANTING

5 Tall Evergreens
9 Low Evergreens
3 Hall's Honeysuckle
2 Clematis
7 Japanese Barberry
5 Deutzia Lemoinii
2 Althea
1 Hydrangea
2 Spirea Van Houttei

BORDER BETWEEN THE FLOWER AND VEGETABLE GARDENS

9 Clumps Delphinium Tall English Hybrids
4 Chrysanthemums
6 Shasta Daisies
6 Clumps Delphinium Chinense
5 Phlox
1 Iris
Snapdragon

SOUTH BORDER PLANTING

9 Hybrid Lilacs
2 Spirea Van Houttei
Deutzia Lemoinii
7 Clumps Phlox
50 Darwin Tulips (about)
Snapdragon
1 Iris Dalmatica

FOOT OF THE YARD

6 Climbing Roses — Tausendschon, Pink and White Dorothy Perkins, American Pillar
4 Clumps Delphinium (Pale Blue)
3 Clumps Phlox
Snapdragon

SHRUBS FLANKING THE ARBOR

2 Spirea Van Houttei
1 Rugosa Rose
2 Blueberries

SHRUBS NEXT TO THE GARAGE

3 Rugosa Roses
2 Spirea Van Houttei

VEGETABLE GARDEN

6 Blackberries
9 Everbearing Raspberries
3 Gooseberries
3 Currants
Horse adish (6 roots)
Mint
150 Strawberries (everbearing)
100 Asparagus Roots
12 Tomato Plants
2 Rows of Brussels Sprouts
24 Celery
½ Pound of Peas
1 Packet each of Onions, Beets, Bush Limas, String-Beans, Carrots, Spinach, Endive, Radish, early and late
2 Packages of Late and Early Lettuce
Cucumbers
2 Dorothy Perkins Roses for arched gate
6 Hollyhocks beside garage

WATCH OUT FOR MEASLES

Concluded from page 16

the appearance of the first case of measles. It may be used also in smaller schools or in certain classes of larger schools and under numerous circumstances which may be thought of where an attack of measles at a certain time would be a misfortune, if not a grave danger to life and health.

If your child has been exposed to measles, consult your family physician in regard to the use of convalescent measles serum.

When measles has developed, nothing can be done to modify or shorten its normal course, but very much can be done to add to the patient's comfort and lessen the chances of dangerous complications. To make over an old adage, measles is a case in which not "three" but "two" is a crowd, and patients should, wherever possible, have rooms to themselves. Protection of the eyes from light should not be carried out at the expense of good ventilation.

Although there may be difference of opinion as to the value of cold air as affecting the course of measles, experience has shown that a temperature not much below 70 degrees, and certainly not above that point, has a favorable effect on the nagging cough which always accompanies the disease. Under no circumstances should the patients be allowed to become chilled by drafts or cold bathing during the acute stage of the illness.

Local applications to the eyes and mouth should be given under the physician's direction. A sudden rise of temperature after the eruption has fully developed may mean that bronchitis—which may cause pneumonia—is developing, or it may mean inflammation of one or both middle ears. There should be no delay in seeking medical advice in such cases.

Finally, the patient should be kept in bed until convalescence is fully established. Many serious consequences have followed the neglect of this precaution.

DELINEATOR SERVICE DEPARTMENTS AT YOUR COMMAND

The Home-Making Department

The Happy Child Department

The Department of House Decoration

The Department of Health and Beauty

The Department of Entertainment and Etiquette

If you have a question about cookery or furnishing your home, a query in regard to your child's health or keeping fit yourself, or if you are perplexed by some little matter of etiquette, THE DELINEATOR stands ready and willing to help you. Our various Service Departments are always at your command.

Just write to them, care of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope for their reply.

WHEN IT RAINS – it Pours

Women who know values know that purity, flavor, convenience and economy combined make Morton's the outstanding leader in salts.

Pour a little into your hand; see the snowy crystals tumble one off another. They're all salt, pure salt, with nothing added. And their brisk vigorous flavor is inimitable.

In Morton's you will find no lumps. Hence there is no waste. All of the salt is usable. And for convenience there is nothing like it. No matter what the weather, it always pours.

Your kitchen and your table deserve the best. Give them the nation's favorite—Morton's. You'll find it a sensible habit.

MORTON SALT COMPANY CHICAGO

MORTON'S SALT

To the woman who is not afraid to be frank —in her thinking

FRANKNESS of speech is one thing. Frankness of thought is quite another. And a wholesome thing it is. Nothing more surely gives a woman poise and confidence than the habit of frank, straight thinking about her own physical well-being.

To know the facts about feminine hygiene—that is not indelicacy. It is enlightenment. To know the dangers that come from the use of poisonous compounds—that too is enlightenment.

Throw out the "skull and crossbones"

Women have long been victims of the failure of science to provide a non-poisonous antiseptic which had enough germicidal power to be of practical use. Compounds containing carbolic acid or bichloride of mercury held sway simply because there was nothing to take their place. And both of these are dangerous poisons.

Now all this is changed. Science at last has solved the problem. And the result is the great antiseptic, Zonite, which has proved its value in hundreds of thousands of homes. Mothers need no longer worry that deadly poisons may fall into the hands of their children. In this way, Zonite has proved itself a blessing many times multiplied.

Zonite combines remarkable germ-killing power with complete safety in use. It is actually far more powerful than any dilution of carbolic acid that can be safely applied to the human body, and it is fifty times as strong as peroxide of hydrogen.

Zonite endorsed by hospitals and specialists

Many members of the medical profession, though endorsing the practice of feminine hygiene as a health measure, have long deplored the use of poisonous, caustic fluids for the purpose. No wonder, then, that Zonite has been hailed with satisfaction.

For Zonite, notwithstanding its great germicidal power is, in its many uses, absolutely harmless to delicate membranes and tissues. In fact, its action is beneficial and mildly stimulating. Dental authorities are recommending it highly as a mouth-wash and for oral hygiene generally.

This free booklet offered by the Women's Division

The Women's Division has prepared a dainty booklet expressly for the use and convenience of women. Thoroughly and frankly it discusses feminine hygiene and other affairs of the toilette — mouth, scalp, complexion, etc., and its scientific, impersonal treatment of these matters enhances its value in the eyes of the intelligent reader.

Every woman with a sense of responsibility to herself will want to have a copy or to pass a copy along to her friends. It is a booklet every mother will want to give her daughter. A copy will be mailed in dainty "social correspondence" envelope. Use the coupon below. Zonite Products Co., Postum Bldg., 250 Park Ave., New York City.

In Canada, 165 Dufferin St., Toronto.

Women's Division

ZONITE PRODUCTS CO.
Postum Building
250 Park Avenue
New York City

I should like to have a free copy of the illustrated booklet you have prepared. (N-5)

Name.....

Address.....

A whole medicine chest in itself

Zonite kills germs.

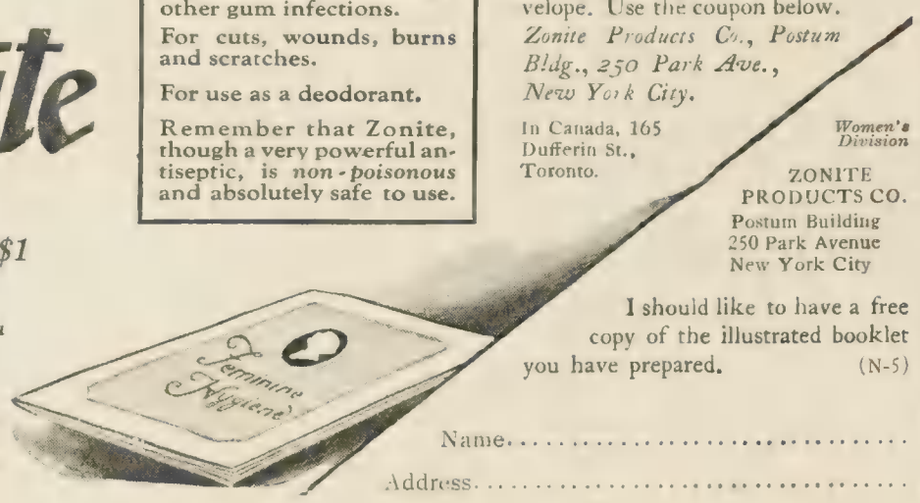
That is why Zonite is valuable for so many different purposes.

For prevention against colds, coughs, grippe and influenza.

For a daily mouth-wash to guard against pyorrhea and other gum infections.

For cuts, wounds, burns and scratches.

For use as a deodorant.



Remember that Zonite, though a very powerful antiseptic, is non-poisonous and absolutely safe to use.

Zonite

In bottles 50c and $1 at drug stores

Slightly higher in Canada

If your druggist cannot supply you, send 50c direct to the Zonite Products Co.

THE PEEL TRAIT

Continued from page 7

common sense for me and the children to come here, don't it?"

Mr. Jenkins looked at Mrs. Jenkins and she looked at him. He was speechless, but she was not. She had much to say and said it. The saying took time and her remarks were personal and pointed. Her tirade omitted few phases of their landlord's character. Eliphalet listened unruffled.

She concluded, husky but still defiant, with a declaration of absolute refusal.

"We won't go," she screamed. "We won't go! Why don't you tell him we won't go, Eben? Haven't you got any self-respect at all?"

Mr. Jenkins tried his best to look as defiant as his wife.

"No," he vowed. "That is, I mean—well, we won't go, 'Liph Peel. You—you can't make us."

Captain Eliphalet pulled at his beard.

"Haven't got a lease, have you, Eben?" he inquired. "No, I thought not. That's where you made a mistake. Always take a lease when you hire a place to live. That's the sensible thing to do. It saves trouble But, bein' as you haven't got any, I guess you'll go. I'll see you again in a day or two. By the way, Gus Mullett's mother-in-law's house is empty, I understand. Maybe you could get that."

The reference to the absence of a lease had wilted Mr. Jenkins as the July sun wilts a plucked water-lily. But Marietta had not wilted—yet.

"We get it!" she sneered. "We get it! If it's empty, why don't you go and live in it yourself?"

Their caller paused at the open door, his foot upon the step.

"Because there'd be no sense in my doin' it, Marietta," he replied calmly. "I own this one and I like it better of the two."

THE Jenkinses moved out of the Coleman cottage and the Peels moved in. Then, after the community had decided that he did not intend doing so, Captain Eliphalet began building upon the site of his and his father's home. But, instead of building one large house upon the strip of land dividing the Back Road and Duck Lane, he built three small ones. He built the A B C houses. In the years to come every one called them that—"the A B C houses."

It was the Reverend James Bodeby, at that time and for long afterward pastor of the Wapatomac Baptist Church, who first gave them that name. Captain Eliphalet built the houses to rent, and rented they were almost immediately. Doctor A. Thacher Atkins, the homeopath, occupied the first one. Israel Bee, teacher of dancing and music, lived in the second, and Mrs. Rebecca Cahoon, widow of Sylvanus Cahoon, in the third. The Reverend Bodeby, who when he first came to Wapatomac was something of a wit (later he recovered from the disease), noted the sequence of initials.

"Bless me!" he exclaimed. "Atkins and Bee—and er—Cahoon. A, B and C, I declare! One might call them the Alphabet Houses."

One might, but few did. In Wapatomac schools of that period we learned our A B C's, not our alphabet. The Peel houses became and remained the A B C houses. And, when Israel Bee died, Captain Eliphalet himself moved into the middle one (the B house) and made it his home. The Coleman cottage he sold at a good price.

WAPATOMAC learned of his intended move at the same time it learned of his second marriage. Margaret Holway was teaching the "downstairs school"—that is, the primary grades—in Denboro, the village next Wapatomac to the east. She was young and pretty and an orphan. She came to Denboro from the academy at Middleboro. She had many masculine admirers and might have married one of them if she and Eliphalet Peel had not met at the county fair in Ostable one October afternoon.

Captain Eliphalet had bought another schooner, the Blue Water, and had been spending a month in Boston, superintending her overhauling, rerigging and painting. The Gloria was on her way to Charlestown, in charge of another skipper. Eliphalet, having come down to the Cape to spend a few days with his children, drove over to the fair to witness the trotting races. Margaret Holway was there also, under escort of a young Denboro gallant named Ryder. Ryder and Miss Holway happened to be standing at the rail next to where Eliphalet had planted himself and Ryder introduced the young lady to the captain. It was a mistake on his part. During the rest of that afternoon he played second fiddle to the masterful mariner from Wapatomac.

Just how deeply Eliphalet was smitten at that first meeting is a question. It may be that he was merely amusing himself at young Ryder's expense. To gain possession of something which another person considered his own was always fun for Eliphalet, whether he actually desired that something or not. The harder the gaining might be the keener the enjoyment. At all events he, figuratively speaking, shouldered the young man out of the way and devoted the hours before sunset to impressing his personality upon Margaret Holway.

She was impressed—there is little doubt of that—but she was no easy victim. She was not a Susanna Coleman, a walking echo, answering yes or no according to the utterance of a stronger will, even one as strong as Eliphalet Peel's. She said no very often. When the captain announced that the trio would drive back to Denboro in his two-seater—the obvious inference being that Mr. Ryder would be sole occupant of the back seat—she flatly refused. She and that gentleman, she said, would return to Denboro, as they had come, on the train. If she imagined that she had squelched the Peel presumptions by that declaration and its fulfilment, she was in error; they merely made her more attractive to Eliphalet. Fruit that was easy picking and thornless was not worth gathering, he considered. He drove home alone that evening, but the following evening he drove out again—and Denboro was his destination. It was a long siege, he was obliged to extend his shore leave by another month, but in the end he won. Margaret Holway became Mrs. Eliphalet Peel, and the Peel family, including Amarias, ten years old, and Susanna, nine, moved into the B house to live.

The year which followed was, in all probability, the happiest of Captain Eliphalet's life. He spent at least half of it at home with his bride. His feelings toward her were as near to unselfish love and devotion as it was possible for a man of his make-up to experience. For Susanna Coleman, after he had won her from Christopher Dadgett, he cherished little more than a kindly toleration, a sort of lukewarm, semi-indulgent affection such as he might have felt toward a well-behaved, obedient dog. She was a necessary part of his household, the mother of his children, and she kept them and him fed and comfortable. When she died, he was genuinely sorry, but his grief was not deep-seated. The housekeeper whom he hired to take her place was adequate and obeyed orders. If he had not met Margaret Holway, he might have lived the remainder of his days a widower and contented to remain so.

BUT Margaret was not Susanna. She was vastly superior to the first Mrs. Peel. In many respects she was superior to her husband. She was educated and refined and he was not. She had book learning, whereas, aside from his eight years in the Wapatomac public schools, he had been taught only in the hard, rough college of out-of-doors. She had a will of her own and, at times, when she deemed it necessary, asserted that will. Her advice, even in business matters, was almost always good, and he learned to recognize that fact, even to the extent of confiding in her and asking counsel. He indulged her, liked to see her well dressed, brought her presents when he came home. For the first time Eliphalet Peel was in love with some one other than himself and found the experience as pleasant as it was novel.

If she had lived, his after life might have been far different. But she did not live. A year after their marriage she bore him a baby girl, Lettice. The baby lived, but the mother died, and once more Captain Eliphalet was a widower.

Lettice Peel is the heroine of this story. She did not count for much when she was born. Her mother's death overshadowed

Continued on page 88

"A SKIN YOU LOVE TO TOUCH"—Painted by Guy Hoff

Begin TODAY- to free your skin from complexion troubles

Each day your skin is changing—You can make the new skin what you will

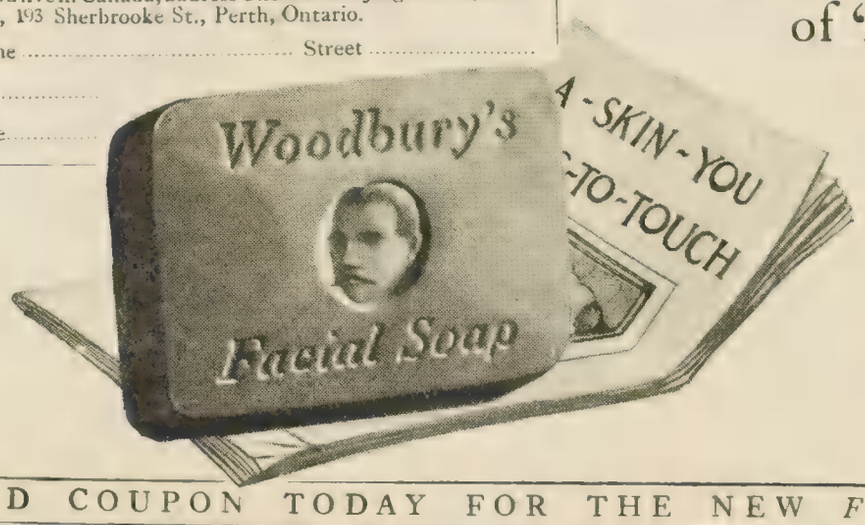
A SMOOTH fine skin, free from blackheads, blemishes, conspicuous pores—you can gain it by the right care!

Each day your skin is changing—old skin dies and new takes its place. This new skin you can make what you will.

Begin today the right Woodbury treatment for your skin, and see what an improvement will follow. Day by day your complexion will grow smoother, clearer, lovelier!



The famous Woodbury treatments for each type of skin and its needs are given in the booklet "A Skin You Love to Touch", which is wrapped around every cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap.

Get a cake of Woodbury's today, at any drug store or toilet goods counter! A 25-cent cake lasts a month or six weeks for general toilet use, including any of the special Woodbury treatments. Or for convenience—buy Woodbury's in 3-cake boxes.

FREE! A guest-size set of three Woodbury skin preparations, with new, large-size trial cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap.

THE ANDREW JERGENS CO., 193 Spring Grove Ave.
Cincinnati, Ohio Please send me free
The new, large-size trial cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap, samples of Woodbury's Facial Cream and Facial Powder, and the treatment booklet "A Skin You Love to Touch."
If you live in Canada, address The Andrew Jergens Co., Limited, 193 Sherbrooke St., Perth, Ontario.
Name ..... Street .....
City .....
State .....

To give your skin the charm of "A Skin You Love to Touch"

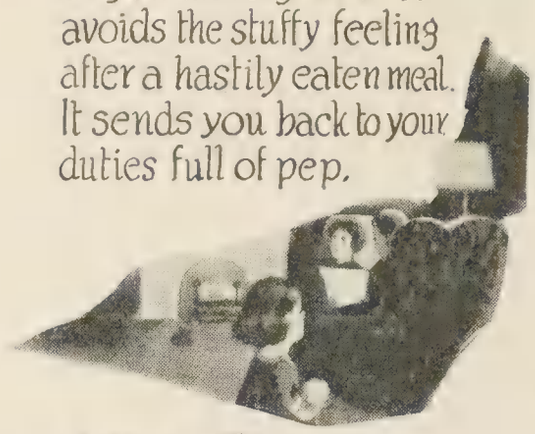
Use this famous treatment to free your skin from blackheads and to keep it smooth and clear:

Each night before retiring, apply hot cloths to the face until the skin is reddened. Then with a slightly rough washcloth work up a heavy lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub it into the pores thoroughly, always with an upward and outward motion. Rinse with clear, hot water, then with cold—the colder the better. Whenever possible, rub your face for thirty seconds with a piece of ice. Dry the skin carefully.

Begin, tonight, the special Woodbury treatment your skin needs, and see how quickly the whole tone of your complexion will improve.

Copyright, 1925, by The Andrew Jergens Co.

SEND COUPON TODAY FOR THE NEW FREE GUEST-SIZE SET OF WOODBURY SKIN PREPARATIONS



After Breakfast

Now before we start the day's work, let us digest our breakfast, sweeten the mouth, soothe the throat and cleanse the teeth with WRIGLEY'S- It will help to start the day right and a good start is half the battle.

After Luncheon

In the middle of the day when possibly time is limited and we may eat too fast, then is when WRIGLEY'S is of greatest help. It makes your food do you more good. It avoids the stuffy feeling after a hastily eaten meal. It sends you back to your duties full of pep.

After Dinner

In the evening, around the lamp, after dinner, with games and books, or before going out to the theater, let WRIGLEY'S sweeten the mouth, remove the odors of food and help your stomach in its work.

"After Every Meal"

F26

WRIGLEY'S

THE PEEL TRAIT

Continued from page 86

her arrival, and her father, when the nurse brought her to him to look at, scarcely gave her a glance. For months thereafter he would not look at her. She had been the cause of Margaret's death, and Eliphalet, stricken and gloomy, cherished resentment toward that cause. He made no fuss over his bereavement. His closest acquaintances—he had scarcely any intimate friends—did not see him shed a tear. During the funeral he sat alone in the little bedroom off the sitting-room, and when the service at the cemetery was over came back to that room to sit alone for hours, smoking and nursing his grief.

Mrs. Olinda Didlow, the nurse—she was Noah Didlow's aunt—came to knock at the bedroom door.

"Are you all right, Cap'n Peel?" she queried nervously.

"Um-hum," was the answer, in the form of a gruff grunt.

"You ain't et a mouthful since yesterday. Don't you want me to fetch you some toast and tea or somethin'?"

"No."

"Can't I do nothin' for you?"

"Yes. You can clear out and leave me alone."

"But—but wouldn't it kind of comfort you to hold the baby just a little spell?"

"No, it wouldn't."

"But she's a real pretty baby and you ain't hardly seen her."

"I don't want to see her. Clear out about your business."

Mrs. Didlow cleared out. A fortnight later she cleared out for good. Eliphalet reengaged his former housekeeper, Sarah Sears, and leaving his three children and his home in her charge, went to Boston and from thence to Buenos Aires in the Blue Water, a voyage which, out and back, occupied many months. When he again made the home port, he came to Wapatomac for eight days only, and then put to sea again. The following ten years he spent, for the most part, on salt water. At the end of that time he retired from active service and settled down in the B house to live on his income. Just how big that income was every one in Wapatomac could have told you, but no two would have agreed as to its total.

MEANWHILE the three Peel children had grown up. Amarias was at work. He was apprenticed to, and likely to become a partner of, Solomon Snow, who bought the remains of the Dadgett business after Christopher went into bankruptcy. Every one said that Amarias was just like his father. This was not entirely true. He was shrewd and keen at a bargain, close-mouthed and inclined to be dictatorial. But there was a taint of Coleman in him, a taint which caused his shrewdness to lean toward stinginess and his Peel abruptness of speech to be tempered with a smooth suavity which might or might not be sincere. When he was twenty-five he married Emeline Newcomb. Emeline had fifteen hundred dollars of her own in the bank and would have more when her grandfather, who lived in Bayport, died.

Susanna Peel was exactly like her brother, two-thirds Peel and the rest Coleman. They looked alike and acted alike and were outwardly affectionate and inwardly jealous of each other. She married when twenty-two. Abner Crusit was her husband. He was much older than she and had inherited from his father, Elkanah Crusit, the Wapatomac general store. The store did a good business, and Abner made money. Susanna took care of the money. She also took care of Abner, when she could spare time from her labors in the Methodist Woman's League, the sewing-circle and the Shakespeare Reading Society. The Crusits were Republicans and Methodists, the Amarias Peels were Democrats and Baptists. Amarias and Susanna publicly agreed in everything. Privately they differed in most matters. They did, however, agree that their half-sister Lettice was being spoiled by Captain Eliphalet, who ought to know better. As time passed and Lettice grew from a quiet, pretty little girl to a pretty and capable young woman, this last point of agreement strengthened.

Lettice, since her sixteenth birthday, had kept house for her father. And she kept it well. Eliphalet came to depend upon her more and more. After Susanna's marriage, the captain and his youngest daughter were alone in the B house. The prejudice which he felt against her when she was a baby had long ago vanished, and as she grew up and the resemblance to Margaret Holway became so striking that people remarked upon it, he began to idolize her. Not that his affection was ever demonstrative. Being Eliphalet Peel, he never permitted his feelings to get the better of the common sense upon which he prided himself. He ruled her as he had been accustomed to rule his crews and issued orders at home as he had issued them aboard the Gloria and the Blue Water. Lettice obeyed these orders, generally speaking, but she was sufficiently like both her parents to have a mind of her own.

On one occasion—she was eighteen then—Captain Eliphalet had had a violent disagreement with Orrin Hart, the local fish-pedler. The captain, as he grew older and his voice in town affairs became more influential, was inclined to quarrel with any one whose opinions did not coincide with his, and to extend those quarrels to matters having no connection with the original cause of difference. There had been a change in the national administration and Wapatomac was in the throes of securing a new postmaster. Orrin Hart's brother-in-law, Ezekiel Foster, was a leading candidate, and the signatures to his petition were numerous. Eliphalet was the chief backer of the other nominee, Henry Fuller, and when Orrin called at the Peel house to sell fish he and the captain proceeded to argue, an argument which ended at the front gate.

"You can take your spiled mackerel and get out," commanded Eliphalet. "Don't you ever come inside this yard again. You hear me?"

Mr. Hart suffered from an affliction of stammering, but, as Ziba Bangs said, he was like an old-fashioned shotgun, he generally managed to shoot, even if he did scatter consider'ble.

"I—I—hear ye," he stuttered, "and so can everybody else in the d-d-district. What do you think you be, a f-f-foghorn? If a mackerel wasn't spiled afore it got here it would be as s-soon as you smelt of it. And Ezekiel is goin' to be pup-pup-postmaster. Don't you forget that."

"Go to the devil," roared the captain. Orrin shook his head.

"I'm goin' away from him f-fast as I can," he retorted. "Whoa, Major," addressing his horse, who had started to move. "Take it easy. Ain't scared of a high wind with n-nothin' behind it, be ye?"

Eliphalet started to open the gate. Then he changed his mind, stooped and picked up a stone.

"Git dap!" he shouted, and threw the stone at the horse. Major departed up the road at a trot, his owner galloping in pursuit, stuttering "Whoas" and profanity. The captain, grinning in triumph, entered the house. Lettice was dusting the dining-room.

"Don't you never let that swab set foot on my premises," he commanded. "He's a fool."

"He is the only fish-pedler that comes around nowadays, father," said Lettice quietly.

"Don't care if he's the only one from here to Boston. Don't you let him on this place. Mind."

BUT fish was Eliphalet Peel's favorite food, and after a week of ham and eggs and corned beef he expressed his yearning.

"They're catchin' a lot of striped bass down off Wellmouth, I understand," he observed, at the dinner-table. "I'd rather eat baked striped bass than turkey any day. Why don't you try to get hold of one, Lettice? You like it, too, don't you?"

"Yes, very much. Mrs. Bassett told me that Orrin Hart had his cart full of them yesterday."

The captain exploded. "Don't you let that fellow into this yard," he ordered. "Don't you buy a pound of fish of him. Understand?"

"I won't, father. But you will have to do without your bass."

"Eh? Why will I? I guess a body with any gumption could get one without buyin'

Continued on page 90

Bouillon in a moment -a cube makes a cup

More tempting than ever and no trouble at all to fix

By
MRS. JANE STARR GRANT

IF everything could be prepared as quickly as bouillon, how easy cooking would be! Yet there was a time when it took hours to prepare. Contrast that with what you do today. You go to the kitchen cabinet and get a STEERO bouillon cube. You unwrap it, drop it into a cup. You pour on boiling water and your bouillon is ready for you. Do you know anything else equally delicious that can be made with equal speed?

There is usually a slight element of risk in preparing food. How often have you followed the recipe ever so carefully and been disappointed by the result! But bouillon—delicious, tempting—can be made without the slightest risk. Just drop a STEERO bouillon cube into a cup and pour boiling water on it. Not a chance for anything to go wrong.

Does bouillon made with STEERO bouillon cubes taste good? There are hundreds of thousands of families where it is one of the favorite items on the menu. The piquancy of its flavor, I believe, is what makes it so popular. This flavor is a wonderful blend of just the right kind of beef, fresh vegetables, and spices, prepared according to the formula of expert chefs. So appetizing and refreshing is STEERO bouillon that many families place a standing order at the store to have a certain number of cubes sent them regularly.

The unexpected luncheon or dinner guest is a problem that every woman has to face. You may not feel as I do about it, but nothing pleases me more than to give my guests the impression that I am entertaining all the time—that their unexpected call doesn't faze me a bit—and put before them easily and quickly a meal with just a wee bit more to it than they thought I could get ready. In doing this, STEERO bouillon cubes are a big help. They make possible an extra course which is a little more unusual than a canned soup, and in these days of small, compact kitchens a reserve supply of cubes can be tucked away in a corner of the cabinet.

free*—STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes. I want you to try STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes. I want you to taste the delicious bouillon they make. I want you to see for yourself what a wonderful flavoring agent they are in dozens of different dishes. I want to send you a sample package. Mail me the coupon and I will personally see that you get the free sample. If you wish the 64-page STEERO Cook Book, send ten cents with the coupon.

Mrs. Jane Starr Grant
American Kitchen Products Co.
Dept. D 3-28, 281 Water St., New York City

☐ Send me the free sample package of STEERO bouillon and flavoring cubes.

☐ Sixty-four-page Cook Book (enclosed 10c).

Name.....

Address.....

.....

Scalding water · · a tender little hand

Save those hours of needless pain!

Today you can have in your own home the remarkable remedy thousands of hospitals are using for burns, scalds and skin injuries!

No surgical dressing has ever approached its amazing power. It has prevented infinite suffering—saved hundreds of lives!

No injury is too serious for its healing properties—no wound too slight to need its safeguarding from infection. If you have never used Unguentine, a free tube is yours for the asking.

Children and injuries —they're inseparable!

INJURIES where the pain is often torturing—where life itself has often hung in the balance—these are among the cases for which Unguentine is used today by leading hospitals and surgeons in the country.

No wonder those who have used it for smaller burns and skin injuries at home are astonished at its effectiveness!

At the rapidity with which it relieves pain—at the quick healing of injured tissues!

For Unguentine is not simply a salve or ointment. It is a surgical dressing whose remarkable power has won for it constant use where the most intense suffering must be relieved!

Its effect, even in serious cases, seems almost miraculous. Relief begins so soon. In smaller injuries the pain in a short time is completely forgotten.

Prevents infection

Unguentine not only stops the pain of burns, scalds, cuts, blisters and similar injuries—it also prevents infection—the danger we are coming more and more to dread even in the most minor injuries.

Yet—although Unguentine is a powerful antiseptic—it has not the slightest harsh or irritating results. Its effect on an open wound is immediately soothing.

Unguentine keeps the wound free from germ life during the entire healing process. It stimulates the quick healing of the tissues and often prevents the formation of a scar.

Keep Unguentine where you can use it quickly!

To save hours of pain, burns or skin injuries of any sort should be treated quickly. To prevent infection the wound should be immediately disinfected.

Unguentine does both.

Keep Unguentine where you can use it as soon as the accident happens! Simply spread it lightly over the injured part, and bandage lightly if necessary.

There is nothing like Unguentine made today. No medicine cabinet should be without it. 50 cents at your druggist's. Or the coupon below will bring you a trial tube free of all charge. Made by The Norwich Pharmacal Co., Norwich, N. Y.

Canadian Agents: Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., Toronto.

Are minor skin injuries becoming more dangerous?

Has 20th Century living reduced the resistance of our bodies to the germs of infection?

Almost daily we read of minor cuts, blisters, scratches, and similar injuries becoming infected—leading to blood poisoning—often ending in the loss of life or limb!

Today Unguentine makes unnecessary the slightest risk of infection in such cases. Unguentine not only kills all germs, but it keeps the wound free from infection during the entire healing process. Because of its soothing effect it can be used on open wounds when many antiseptics would be harsh or irritating.

This baby is well and unscarred—thanks to Unguentine

"One Sunday evening our only child (then less than two years old) set her clothes on fire. I succeeded in extinguishing the fire by wrapping my coat around her tortured little body. But I was too late to save her little face and arms. At last the doctor arrived.

"He bandaged up the horrible burns and gave the baby an opiate. He would not commit himself by saying she would outgrow her burns. He used Unguentine liberally; the first time I had ever heard of it. Her little arms were badly scarred, and so were her right cheek, her neck and behind her ears.

"Inside of one year not a trace of the burns was visible except on cold days when the affected parts showed up red. Today baby is four and a half years old and well. We carry a tube of Unguentine ever since."

——, Kansas City, Mo.

FREE—a generous tube

Norwich —a trusted name on pharmaceutical preparations

The Norwich Pharmacal Co., Dept. B-3
Norwich, New York

Please send me trial tube of Unguentine and booklet, "What to do," by M. W. Stofer, M. D.

Name .....

Street .....

City and State .....

The kind of ASPARAGUS you are proud to serve!

—yet one of the simplest dishes you can have

What a difference it makes—the kind of asparagus you serve!

If you want to be sure, in advance, of its tenderness and flavor, it will pay you well to insist on DEL MONTE.

All DEL MONTE Asparagus is thoroughbred stock—grown in the rich delta lands of California—cut at the moment of perfection and canned at once, before its fibre can toughen or its flavor vanish.

Different sizes of spears, too—Giant, Colossal, Mammoth, where extra large spears are wanted; Large, Medium and Small where a greater number of portions are necessary.

Long spears in large cans; tender tips in smaller cans.

But no matter what the size of spear or can—you will find in each the same uniform tenderness and delicacy of flavor that you naturally expect under the DEL MONTE label.

Be sure you say

DEL MONTE

CALIFORNIA PACKING CORPORATION
San Francisco

THE PEEL TRAIT

Continued from page 88

it of him. Get it somewhere somehow. I'll bet I could!"

"Why don't you?"

"Because I've got other things to do. I ain't runnin' this house and this table."

"Oh, aren't you? I know you told me to run them and you wouldn't interfere, but I thought you must have changed your mind. If you leave it to me, you shall have your bass."

"Yes, I guess so! And you'll buy it of Orrin Hart, I suppose?"

"Of course."

"You'd buy it of a fellow that's trying to shanghai his good-for-nothin' brother-in-law aboard this town for postmaster? Use your common sense."

"I am using it. And it didn't make me see any reason why the matter of a Wapatomac postmaster should spoil our dinner."

Captain Peel pulled at his beard. "See here, Lettice," he said, "I'll tell you what I'll do. I'm too busy electioneerin' for that postmaster appointment to go chasin' from Dan to Beersheba after striped bass, but you can do it, if you've a mind to. I'll give you five dollars to put with the money you've saved to make the price of that new sewin'-machine you've wanted so long, provided you have a baked bass for to-morrow's dinner. Only you mustn't buy it of Orrin Hart. What do you say?"

Lettice looked at him. "That doesn't sound very sensible, father," she said. "You could send to Wellmouth yourself for less than five dollars."

"I could, but I won't. Is it a bargain?"

"It is seven dollars, not five, I need for the sewing-machine."

"Humph! You're pretty sharp after the money, I should say. It is plaguey foolishness, but when I want a thing I want it. I'll make it seven."

His daughter reflected. "All right," she agreed. "I'll do my best to give you a baked bass to-morrow noon, and I won't buy it of Mr. Hart."

THE following noon a seven-pound bass, in a bath of drawn butter was placed upon the table. Eliphalet smacked his lips in anticipation.

"Good girl!" he exclaimed. "Where'd you get it?"

Lettice smiled, but did not answer the question. "Eat it first," she said. "It may not be good."

It was and the captain said so more than once. When the meal was over, he again demanded information concerning the attaining of the bass.

"Well," replied Lettice demurely, "I don't see why you are so anxious. I didn't buy it of Orrin Hart. That is all you cared about, wasn't it?"

"Who did you buy it of?"

"I bought it of Mrs. Cahoon."

Her father stared. "What Cahoon?" he demanded. "Not Becky Cahoon?"

Mrs. Rebecca Cahoon was the next-door neighbor of the Peels. She lived, at that time, in the C house.

"Yes."

"You bought that bass of Becky Cahoon? Where on earth did she get it?"

Lettice shook her head. "I don't know, I am sure," she said. "I saw it on her kitchen table when I went in there to return some sugar I borrowed. I offered her three dollars for it and she took my offer. I didn't ask where she got it."

"You didn't ask? Didn't she tell you?"

"I think she would have, but I told her I didn't want to know."

Captain Eliphalet's fist struck the table. "I see Orrin's fish-cart outside her front gate when I headed down street this very mornin'," he cried. "She bought that bass of him."

Lettice began clearing away the dishes.

"I don't know where she got it," she repeated. "But I bought it of her. If you give me the seven dollars now, father, I think Abner will send up the sewing-machine this afternoon."

Eliphalet's eyes flashed and his mouth opened, but in the very act of speaking he seemed to change his mind. The flash became a twinkle and his lips closed and tightened in a grim smile.

"Humph!" he grunted. "Well, it's my own fault for not bein' more careful when I made the offer. Here's your seven dollars. But don't make the mistake of thinkin' you can lick the old man so easy next time, because you won't do it. Next time I'll recollect I'm dealin' with a Peel. You're more of one than I thought you was, young woman."

He bore no grudge against his daughter for taking advantage of his lapse in driving the bargain, quite the contrary. It was the very manner by which he had got the better of Christopher Dadgett and Eben Jenkins and so many others, the shrewd, common-sense sharpness by which he eventually defeated Orrin Hart and his party and made Henry Fuller postmaster of Wapatomac. He admired Lettice for it, and told the yarn with gusto that evening to the group in the Crusit general store. But he took care that she did not repeat it.

"You're a Peel all right," he told her. "But so am I. After this I'm standin' watch, don't forget it."

CAPTAIN ELIPHALET'S watchfulness extended to his daughter's masculine admirers. These became rather numerous, for Lettice was good-looking and attractive. The majority of those who came to call at the B house or who invited the young housekeeper to dances or parties were Wapatomac youths whose attentions were not meant to be, nor were, taken seriously. But as time went on out of the running emerged two, and these two obviously meant more than philandering. One was David Booker, thirty years old, owner and proprietor of the local livery-stable. He was a keen Yankee, enterprising, pushing, and believed to be a coming man in the community. In his early twenties he had been rather wild, fond of horses, cards, the girls and a good time generally. But of late he had settled down and was attending to business—and Lettice Peel.

The other was Farley Crowell, twenty-one, son of Ezra Crowell, who, as commander of the Baltimore steamer Bay City, was drowned when his ship was lost in the great gale of '98. Farley was an orphan and boarded with his aunt, Miss Sylvia Perry, in a little rented house on the Upper Road. He was clerk in the New York Store on the Main Road, but he did not intend to remain there. He had some talent for painting, and his aunt said that he hoped to be an artist and do "hand-painted pictures and things" some day.

Farley Crowell and Dave Booker were absolute contrasts, except in their feeling toward Lettice. Booker was a trader, quick in his ways, a money-maker, and a practical man. Crowell seemed to care nothing for money, almost any one could get the better of him in a trade, and he was dreamy and moderate. He was well liked and a good fellow, but stories of his absent-mindedness and mistakes as a salesman were numerous about the village, and the knowing ones prophesied that he would never amount to a whole lot. One of these Jeremiahs was Captain Eliphalet Peel.

"What's that young Crowell sprout wastin' his time cruisin' in your wake for, Lettice?" he demanded one evening after the "sprout" had called at the B house. The call this time was a short one. It might have been longer if the captain had shown the least symptom of vacating the sitting-room and leaving that apartment to the young people. This he had not done, but remained planted in the rocker, reading the Cape Cod Item and puffing at his pipe.

Lettice was crocheting a tidy for the rocker. She smiled slightly as she answered.

"Perhaps he doesn't think he is wasting it, father," she observed.

Eliphalet put down the Item.

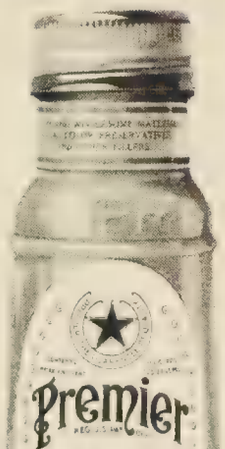
"Eh?" he queried. "What's that? Not wastin' it? Well, he is, ain't he? You don't mean to tell me that you've given him any encouragement to hang around here?"

His daughter, busily crocheting, did not raise her eyes from her work.

"I don't know what you mean by encouragement," she said. "I like him. He's a nice fellow."



The captain straightened in the rocker. "Nice fellow!" he snorted. "He's a nice sissy, that's what he is. Spends his evenin's and spare time, when he ain't chasin' up

Continued on page 92

63 ways to use PREMIER

Before you have your next party, send for the Premier book. It costs you nothing, and thousands of women have found it the most useful recipe book they ever had. Premier is the salad dressing that goes well with meats, vegetables, fruits, and many other delicacies, and can be used in cream sauces, rarebits, and egg dishes to improve their flavor. Always ready to use. You will like it. Get a bottle from your grocer today.

FRANCIS H. LEGGETT & COMPANY
NEW YORK

Egg Sauce made with Premier adds greatly to the enjoyment of any fish dish.

Premier
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
Salad DRESSING

TRY PREMIER COFFEE TOO

ONLY ONE WAY to keep teeth both white and safe

Restore the natural protective fluids of the Mouth Glands

WE brush our teeth more often than any other nation in the world—yet they mysteriously decay.

Dentists now know that this is due to an abnormal mouth condition—unsuspected but practically universal—which inevitably leads to decay.

It is known as Dry Mouth—the natural result, they say, of our modern, soft cooked foods, which require no real chewing.

The mouth glands, which nature intended to flow continuously, now dry up from sheer lack of exercise. And your teeth, no longer washed by their alkaline fluids, are inevitably eaten by the acids of decay.

UNSUSPECTED—Dry Mouth is the real cause of tooth decay. Use the tooth paste that increases the action of your mouth glands and protects your teeth from decay.

After ordinary cleaning —no safer than before

You can remove the acids of decay temporarily by scouring with gritty pastes which endanger the unreplaceable enamel; by washing with soapy substances that damage gums and delicate mouth lining.

By such harsh methods thousands of people succeed in making their teeth white—but not safe. Five minutes after they stop brushing, acids begin to form again—the insidious process of decay goes on.

The only way to prevent decay, it is now known, is to remove the unsuspected, underlying cause—Dry Mouth.

Recently, physicians and dentists have recognized that the mouth glands can be successfully stimulated. Today you can protect your teeth naturally and permanently from the acids of decay by a tooth paste that restores the normal alkaline flow of the mouth glands.

The basic ingredient used in Pebeco was first employed by physicians years ago in the treatment of serious mouth conditions, where the teeth were already badly affected. It proved so remarkable in its effects on the teeth and the entire mouth, yet so gentle in its action, that it was made available in tooth paste form—Pebeco.

Pebeco gently stimulates the glands

Pebeco is the simple, natural way to prevent tooth decay. It acts directly on the salivary glands. As soon as it enters your mouth it starts a full, normal flow of alkaline saliva.

With constant daily use Pebeco completely restores the natural, protective action of your glands. Their alkaline fluids again bathe your teeth day and night. The acids of decay are neutralized as fast as they form. And the deadly mucin and tartar deposits are gently softened and removed. Pebeco leaves your gums clean and soothed—your whole mouth, normal and healthy. And in this healthy mouth, your teeth are kept not only white and shining, but safe.

Start today to overcome Dry Mouth and stop tooth decay. Send for a trial tube of Pebeco. Made only by Pebeco, Inc., New York. Sole Distributors: Lehn & Fink, Inc. Canadian Agents: H. F. Ritchie & Company, Ltd., 10 McCaul Street, Toronto. All druggists.

Steichen

Free Offer

Send this coupon today for a free generous tube of Pebeco. By restoring the natural protective action of your glands Pebeco keeps your teeth not only white but safe.

LEHN & FINK, Inc., Sole Distributors, Dept. B 22
635 Greenwich Street, New York, N. Y.

Send me free your new large sized sample tube of Pebeco.

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

THE PEEL TRAIT

Continued from page 90

here, paintin' pictures of flowers and windmills and stone walls and the Lord knows what. Good job for a grown man, that is! When I was his age, I was first mate of the Gloria and could lick three spindlin' critters like him with my left hand."

"He isn't spindling, father."

Her parent ignored the remark. "Why don't he paint a house or a fence, if he's got to paint somethin'?" he demanded. "I'd enough sight rather see him daubin' whitewash on a henhouse than I would squatted in front of what he calls a weasel—or easel, or whatever 'tis—makin' a tintype of a passel of cows, the way I saw him Sunday afternoon over in Ezra Taylor's pasture lot. Bah! Don't you have anything more to do with him, Lettice."

His daughter did not answer. The captain's brows drew together.

"Did you hear what I said?" he asked sharply. "The next time he comes here, you give him his clearance papers. You understand?"

Still there was no answer. Eliphalet leaned back in the rocker and grunted.

"By godfreys!" he exclaimed. "I guess it is about time I took a hand in this thing. Amarias gave me a hint yesterday, but I didn't pay much attention. And when Susanna came this mornin' she had somethin' to say about it, too. She said the whole town was talkin' and——"

Lettice stopped crocheting. She looked her father straight in the eye.

"Amarias and Susanna—yes, and the rest of Wapatomac—had better attend to their own affairs," she said. "They can't say a word that is true against Farley Crowell. He does paint pictures and he wants to be an artist, but that isn't wicked, so far as I ever heard. And that Mr. Crawford who was here last Summer, and is a real artist, told Farley he had talent and ought to cultivate it."

"Cultivate it! He'd be cultivatin' his aunt's garden if he had sense enough to handle a hoe. Look here, girl! Don't you talk back to me like that. The next time that Farley Crowell comes to this house you tell him to clear out. If you don't, I will."

The young woman's glance did not waver.

"If you do," she said, "I shall meet him at other places."

Eliphalet's red face was redder than ever. He gasped and lifted his hand. But the look upon his daughter's face was sufficiently Peel-like to cause him to check the outburst before it was uttered. Instead he groaned in consternation.

"Good heavens above, Lettice!" he cried. "You—you ain't cal'latin' to marry that Crowell thing, are you?"

She colored slightly. "I haven't said that I was planning to marry anybody yet awhile, father," she declared. "I like Farley and—and I won't have Amarias and Susanna putting you up to treating him like a tramp, that's all. If I ever feel that he ought to stop coming to see me, I'll tell him so myself. They sha'n't—and you mustn't."

Captain Eliphalet said no more that evening. He went up to bed—"going aloft to turn in," he would have called it—but he did not sleep for some time. It had been forced upon his attention, the fact that his only unmarried daughter was reaching the marriageable age and that, unless he steered his course with care and cunning, she might marry whom she pleased even in spite of him. Well, he had handled ticklish situations before, and had, in the end, got what he wanted from them. In this case he did not know precisely what he wanted. But he did know what he did not want.

Continued in the April DELINEATOR.

GLYCERINE TEARS

Continued from page 9

on his case? If there had been one man on that jury with an unprejudiced view-point, I might have had justice. Mr. Carewe says that the men who think they can't afford time to serve on a jury are the very men who can't afford not to. What chance had I with twelve men all sure in advance that this was a case of a rich girl grinding down a poor man? Mr. Carewe says——"

"Damn Carewe!" Blake ground between his teeth. "I suppose it was that lean and hungry Cassius who told you I was planning to get excused from jury duty. I was. There are two Australians due and I wanted to nail their custom. They can go to the dickens. You may tell the Youth's Companion from me that I'll report to-morrow and serve on a jury. Meantime, get on your tennis togs. You ought to be practising."

Constance's shrug was intended to be maddening. By the answering blaze in Blake's eyes she concluded that it had been a perfect thing of its kind.

"Don't worry about my game. I shall not enter the tournament. My attorney and I will cheer you and Nathalie from the stands." With a smile which touched only her lips she entered the cool dimness of the living-room.

The three men gazed reflectively after her. Peter prepared to fill his pipe as with a beatific smile he observed:

"Aren't girls the dickens and all, though?"

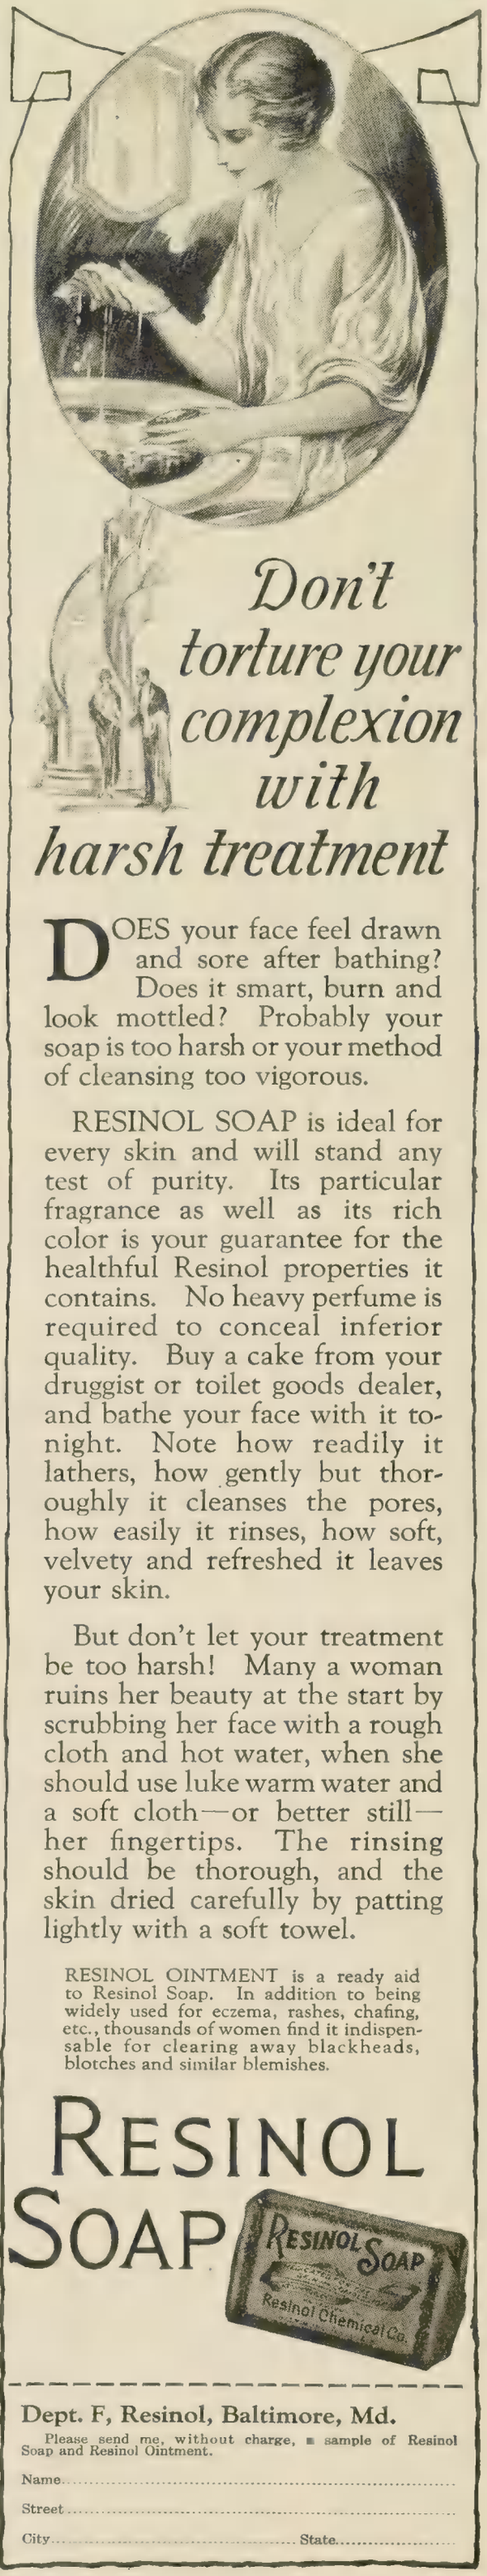
Billy's brow wrinkled.

"She must have picked up your conversation with Nathalie by radio, Stan. It isn't fifteen minutes since you made the arrangement. I warned you that only straight-from-the-shoulder methods would get by with Connie. I know her. She is furious to think that you have turned her down for another girl."

"For another girl? You know better, Billy." Blake's face was white under its tan. The scar stood out with cruel, raw distinctness. "If Connie wins this tournament, she will be acknowledged the best woman player in the country. She can win with Carewe, not against him. She would play with me just through loyalty. I won't have it. I'm sorry the case went against her."

Peter made experimental passes with his racket.

"Glycerine tears, boy, but Con is right. Most of us howl about the miscarriage of justice, but we wriggle out of jury duty if we can. Do you really intend to qualify as juror, Stan?"



"Yes. I can better afford to lose the business of the Australians than Con's respect." He cleared his voice of huskiness. "Let's have a set while we are waiting for her. She'll play in that tournament. I'll suggest to Carewe that he ask her again. Connie's a good sport. She'll play. Come on."

And she had played. Good Lord, how she had played, Blake thought three weeks later, as at midnight he paced the beach which was common to the Weld place and his own. Constance and Carewe had won the championship by the narrow margin of one game. He and Nathalie Shaw were better than ever. It looked now as though the lank attorney would win in a bigger game than tennis.

Blake stopped to light his pipe. He had dined at Stony Brook Farm, but on reaching home had been too restless to remain in the house. The flame between his hands set shadows flickering on his face, lighted his somber eyes. He dropped the match and walked on. His thoughts kept pace with his footsteps. Since their victory the Youth's Companion seemed always with Con, and her manner to her old pal had held the faintest tinkle of ice.

Well, what was he grumbling about? Was he a dog in the manger? Hadn't he vowed, the first time he looked in a mirror after his wound had healed, that never would he ask the girl he had loved since she

Continued on page 94

"Don't worry, my dear"

IT was an important social occasion the younger girl had been planning on for a long time.

And now, just a week or so before the big event, that old throat irritation came back again and threatened to ruin her party.

She was completely upset over it all.

Her older friend knew what to do, however. And everything turned out all right.

* * *

It isn't necessary to let sore throat throw you out of step with work or play.

Guard against this trouble by taking the simple precaution of using Listerine, the safe antiseptic, as a preventive for throat irritations and the more serious ills that so often follow.

Have Listerine handy always in your bathroom. It is the ideal, safe antiseptic. Its dozens of different uses are fully described in the circular that comes around each bottle.—Lambert Pharmacal Company, Saint Louis, U. S. A.

LISTERINE  —the safe antiseptic

LISTERINE Throat Tablets, containing the antiseptic oils of Listerine, are now available. While we frankly admit that no tablet or candy lozenge can correct halitosis, the Listerine antiseptic oils in these tablets are very valuable as a relief for throat irritations—
25 cents

The only superfluous hair remedy which has the distinction of having been "officially decided to be effective."

(New York World—Oct. 28, 1924)

"By simply applying ZIP and easily removing it, the roots are eliminated as by magic, and in this way the growth is destroyed." "These statements are not false," says Hon. Edward M. Averill, Trial Examiner for the Federal Trade Commission, who heard the testimony in the official investigation of ZIP.

Quick as a Wink

you can free yourself of superfluous hair. And remember, you are not merely removing surface hair—you actually lift out the roots with the hairs, gently and painlessly and in this way destroy the growth. The process seems almost miraculous, but my eighteen years of success in giving treatments with ZIP and the thousands of women who are now using it prove that ZIP is the scientifically correct way to destroy the growth.

Lasting Results

Mere surface hair removers give only temporary relief and any method which burns away or rubs away surface hair is very apt to irritate the skin and promote heavier growths. Such methods have the same action as singeing or shaving, throwing the strength back into the roots. Use ZIP once, and you will never resort to ordinary depilatories.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

Guaranteed on Money-back Basis

Treatment or Free Demonstration at My Salon

Madame Berthé Specialist

562 Fifth Avenue
(Entrance on 46th St.) New York

Makers of AB-SCENT

MADAME BERTHE, Specialist,
Dept. 121, 562 Fifth Ave., New York City

Please send me FREE BOOK, "Beauty's Greatest Secret," telling how to be beautiful and explaining the three types of superfluous hair: also a free sample of your Massage and Cleansing Cream, guaranteed not to grow hair.

Name.....
Please print your name

Address.....

City or State.....

CREATIONS JORDEAU NEW YORK

GLYCERINE TEARS

Continued from page 92

was a baby to face that scar every day? He wouldn't be accepted out of pity.

What a night! Too fine to go indoors to sleep. Sleep! Not a chance for him. Always before the eyes of his mind was the picture of Con in her delicate blue gown, her rose-leaf skin, the enchanting curve of her lips. He looked up at the sky. Hundreds of stars seemed like peep-holes through which one might glimpse the glory of the heavens behind the dark curtain of night. He looked off to sea. Never had he seen the tide so low. It was still receding. The float which seemed miles out when one was swimming toward it at high tide now rested in a few inches of water. The air was balmy. Who would believe that it was the middle of October? The month was half over and he hadn't a chance at those Australians. The jury on which he was serving had been requested by the judge to keep out of all places where they would be likely to hear the case discussed. He had written to the visitors explaining his position and had let it go at that. Doubtless some lucky devil had nailed their business while he had been doing his duty.

Duty? Blake felt his face redden. It had been Con's contemptuous "Glycerine tears"—not a sense of duty—which had made him accept the responsibility so inconveniently thrust upon him. Into the limbo of lost opportunities he had flung all chance of establishing the entente cordiale with the Australians and had qualified as juror on the panel drawn to sit on the case of two men being tried for pay-roll robbery. He had welcomed the chance to prove to Constance that he was not a duty-dodger.

BLAKE lighted his pipe again. Hat pulled low, he paced the hard white beach. The judge was to charge the jury at the opening of court in the morning. He went over the evidence. He suspected that witnesses had been intimidated—suddenly he wheeled—he had a vague sense of being watched. He listened. The night was still save for the swish of the tide and the distant eerie wail of a motor-horn. There was no one in sight. He looked seaward. The float was quite aground now.

Hands thrust into coat pockets, he resumed his thoughtful pacing. Not only was he sure that witnesses had been intimidated, he suspected that certain members of the jury had been fixed. He sensed their covert appraisal of him. If he were not mistaken, three men at least on that jury would put up a stiff fight to acquit the prisoners. Let them. The accused men were guilty and he would hold out against acquittal if he were locked up till doomsday. Blake stopped, jaw set, hands clenched, as he mentally addressed the foreman of the jury.

He relaxed with a chuckle at his own expense. Good Lord, but he was taking this thing seriously. The smile on his lips faded. Suppose, just suppose he were not taking it seriously enough? He was certain that he had been shadowed this last week. There had been a fish-eyed man who had bobbed up—was that a step behind him?—he turned——

Blake's next conscious thought was that he had been transported up and up behind the indigo curtain with its innumerable peep-holes. The blaze of light was unbearable. He closed his eyes and shivered. There was no heat in that infernal glare. Then he sensed a gentle rocking. Had he made his ascent in an airplane? He moved a hand. His fingers touched smooth boards. His head, which had felt like an inflated moon, began to shrink with pain. He could think.

He kept his eyes closed to shut out the light. Where had he been when he had shot upward into space? Haltingly his thoughts groped back. He had dined at Stony Brook Farm—Con had been there—Con with the Youth's Companion hovering devotedly—that was all right—Carewe was worthy of her—he had made sure of that himself.

The sensation as of his heart being squeezed to pulp helped clear Blake's mind. He couldn't be far from earth if he could feel pain like that, he decided. He had left the Welds' and had entered his own house—he remembered that—had been too restless to remain indoors—he remembered that—he had paced back and forth on the beach weighing the evidence on the pay-roll case—there had been a step——

A DASH of water in his face shocked Blake's eyes wide open. That was salt on his lips. With the superhuman effort exerted in nightmares he forced himself to his knees. Instantly he dropped flat. Good Lord, he was on the bobbing float fifty yards from shore. The light was sunshine. The tide was on the ebb again. The sea was rough with whitecaps. How long had he been there? With unsteady fingers he pulled out his watch. Eight o'clock. What the dickens had happened? The step behind him! Now he remembered. The crash on his head—had the motive been robbery—his watch was in his pocket. He groped for his roll of bills; that was intact. The figure of the fish-eyed man mocked his blurred vision. The pay-roll case! Of course. Some one had tried to get him out of the way before the opening of court—should one juror default there were nine chances out of ten that the case would go over—there had been nine chances out of ten that he would roll off that float—it might have been days before his disappearance could be explained—a neat job—only he had not rolled off——

The judge was to give the case to the jury this morning—that is, if it were still this morning. Blake consulted his watch. He had wasted fifteen fool minutes getting his bearings when every second counted—court opened at ten——

Resentment burned the last wisp of fog from his mind. He struggled to his feet. His head felt as though it might go bobbing off like a stray balloon on the rippling water. His shiver was one part excitement and nine parts cold. With the turn of the tide Summer had stolen away to be succeeded by a young, swashbuckling October wind which thrust and parried with sword-point of frost. For a second Blake hesitated. Ordinarily that fifty-yard swim to shore would be nothing to him, but he was stiff with cold. Could he make it?

He must. He balanced precariously on the bobbing float as he stripped to his underclothing. He grinned as he looked toward the silver shore and confided to the universe:

"Here's hoping that no female of the species is doing her daily dozen on the beach when I come out of the water. Here goes!"

For one horrible moment after he came to the surface Blake feared that he had lost the use of legs and arms. But was that crooked bunch to win out because he could not make these infernal sticks dangling from his body move? They should obey. They were moving. Feebly—but they were moving. They felt more like arms and legs now—that stroke was better—he had them going. He floated for a moment, then swam steadily for shore.

Ten minutes later he dashed into his room. He bumped into his Japanese servant. The man's face, usually as expressionless as that of a wooden idol, crackled into a hundred interrogation points of laughter. It was the last straw. Blake growled:

"Stop that imbecile grinning, Saki. Get out my clothes. Bring me coffee, then get the roadster. You're going to town with me. If I don't get out of here in twenty minutes, you lose your job."

IT WAS five minutes after ten when Stanley Blake dashed into the court-room. Counsel were gathered in front of the judge's bench. Eleven jurors were in their seats. His honor looked up. His eyes met Blake's eyes blazing in a white face. Their glances held for an instant. The judge settled back in his chair and announced:

"Gentlemen, as the missing juror has arrived, we will proceed with the case."

Blake looked around the crowded room. The two prisoners scowled at him as with one pair of eyes. Their counsel had the stunned expression of one who with a parole almost within his grasp sees it spirited away. Blake grinned at him, but the smile stiffened on his lips as his fish-eyed shadow of the past week slipped into the court-room. The man's face was lined with worry. He met Blake's accusing glance and stood as though petrified. His eyes flew to the district attorney. Blake was puzzled. He was sure that this man was his assailant; but if so, why should he cast apologetic eyes at the counsel for the prosecution? Could that

Hat by Gage
GAGE BROTHERS & CO.

For 69 years the name "Gage" has stood for advance style, originality and quality. And today, more than ever, women who patronize the better shops ask for Gage models simply because they know that they will be shown only Fashion's latest dictates.

A very special collection of unusually smart hat styles is now being shown.

"Look for the Gage Label"

FREE STYLE BOOK

40 Fascinating Models

You can see these smart hats illustrated in our Spring style book which is yours for the asking. Just fill in and mail the coupon below to the nearest address.

GAGE BROTHERS & CO.
20 S. Michigan Ave., Chicago
385 Madison Ave., New York D

Gentlemen: Please send me without cost or obligation, one of your 1925 Spring Style Books.

Name.....

Address.....

Shampoo

In 10 Minutes!

A quicker and safer way to wash your hair

Shampooing used to be a long tiresome task—not always safe—and often leaving the hair unmanageable.

But now with Cleero you can thoroughly wash your hair in 10 minutes! Dry it in 15 minutes! And your hair is clean and sweet—soft and silky. It gleams with new life and sparkle.

And Cleero actually benefits your hair. Because you don't have to rinse with it unless you want to. No fear of catching cold. That's why so many hospitals have adopted Cleero as the standard for their patients.

But find out for yourself how wonderful it is. Used for 20 years by fashionable hair dressers, Cleero is well worth trying. Make the free test. Then note the difference.

FREE Offer

Van Ess Laboratories, Inc.
128 E. Kinzie St., Chicago, Ill.

Print Name and Address Plainly

Mail trial bottle of Cleero, free, to

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

Beauty Culture Course at Home

BE A BEAUTY SPECIALIST
EARN $50 TO $75 A WEEK
OWN YOUR OWN BUSINESS

Earn while you learn complete Beauty Culture Art in spare time. Marcel, Bleaches, Dyes, Waves, Packs, Facials, Manicure, Skin-work, Diet, Formulas, etc., in 8 weeks easy lessons with Authorized Diploma. No experience necessary with our Money Back Guarantee course. Demand for operators is greater than the supply. Get FREE Book, now.

ORIENTAL SYSTEM OF BEAUTY CULTURE
Dept. 253 1000 Diversey Boulevard Chicago

EARN $25 WEEKLY

spare time, writing for newspapers, magazines. Experience unnecessary. Copyright book free.
PRESS SYNDICATE, 1162, St. Louis, Mo.

Sure Way to Get Rid of Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely, and that is to dissolve it. Then you destroy it entirely. To do this, just apply a little Liquid Arvon at night before retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and two or three more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get Liquid Arvon at any drug store, and a four ounce bottle is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

LIQUID ARVON

Corns

Lift Off – No Pain!

Doesn't hurt one bit! Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers. Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the foot calluses, without soreness or irritation.

official be crooked, Blake thought before he forced his attention to the judge, who had begun to review the evidence. In closing his honor rose and turned to the jury:

"The case is yours, gentlemen. Consider every phase of it. Do not let fear of man nor institutions influence your verdict. The person or persons who attempt to intimidate jurors will be punished to the full extent of the law. Mete out justice as you see it. The State has invested you with that power; use it wisely. You have a grave responsibility to God and your fellow citizens. Remember that the honor of this Commonwealth is in your hands."

AN HOUR later through a haze of smoke Stanley Blake regarded the jury in counsel assembled as reflected in a long spotty mirror on the opposite wall. At the beginning of the conference he had suspected that quite half of the twelve were in sympathy with the accused. The first ballot called by the foreman at the end of thirty minutes of discussion had confirmed that opinion. Six had voted for acquittal; six for conviction. Argument had been hotly resumed.

The mirror photographically reflected the foreman, his dynamic personality, his immense figure, his red face and wide nostrils, the row of fountain pens in all stages of gold and mother-of-pearl inlay lined up across his broad chest; it reflected a teamster with too much nose for facial symmetry; a type-setter with colorless eyes; a sign-painter with paint-stained hands; a keen-faced Jew; it reflected the pinched face of a shoemaker whose glances gave the impression that he sensed a penniless old age creeping upon him; reflected a Syrian apron-manufacturer beside a janitor whose glance roamed from face to face as though in dumb search for truth. These last three would be easily swayed by stronger wills than their own, Blake decided.

Would the trio who had argued hotly for acquittal win them over? These three men were registered under the term "clerk," and sat with chairs tilted back against the wall. The mirror reflected undertones of loose living in their too ruddy faces, too much assurance in the fingers tapping their waistcoats, too much aggressiveness in the posture of thumbs thrust in armpits.

From outside the room came the distant sound of elevator doors clanging, the pat-pat of hurrying footsteps. On the ledges of the windows pigeons strutted and preened in the sunshine. Inside discussion raged on. Impatience cut sharp lines between Blake's eyebrows as he listened. It was all so futile. Quite suddenly through his mind echoed Constance Weld's passionate protest:

"Had there been one man on that jury with an unprejudiced view-point I might have had justice."

Was it up to him to clarify the present situation in the minds of the jurors? He had entered the case unprejudiced, now he had convictions. Would those three with oily heads against the wall hold out? At least he could test them.

He rose and thrust his hands hard into his coat pockets. He fixed a disconcertingly direct gaze on the Knight of the Order of the Fountain Pens. Unconsciously into his voice crept a tinge of the tone in which he had commanded men in the trenches of France.

"Mr. Foreman, before we ballot again I have something to say which may—or may not—have a bearing on this case. Last night I was sandbagged. I was thrown on a float to die or drown. Robbery was not the motive. What was? When it becomes known—it is probably known even now—that attempt was made to make way with one of this jury the night before it was to render verdict on a criminal case, the strong hand of the law will reach out and clutch somebody's collar. The record of every man here will be put under a microscope. Justice will be meted out good and plenty to any member of this jury who is proved to be in league with the prisoners—who, you know from the evidence submitted, are guilty. I am accusing no man present. I am stating facts. I was sandbagged. Only by luck, I reached court in time to prevent the adjournment of this case. You may draw your own conclusions. I call for a second balloting."

The fore legs of one chair after another of the three tipped against the wall thudded to the floor. Blake caught the flash of consternation in their eyes. Indignation sputtered from the foreman like sparks from a newly ignited rocket. Then he went off with a roar:

"Gentlemen, I heard what Mr. Blake said and I believe him. There's been something crooked. Now there ain't goin' to be no dirty work at the cross-roads while I'm boss. We'll ballot now. Them in favor of acquittal stand."

Not an eyelash moved in defense of the accused.

"Them in favor of conviction stand."

The uprising had the effect of a convention blown to its feet by concealed mechanism. The foreman glowered at his judicial family-cleared his throat portentously, and announced: "The vote is unanimous for conviction. Be seated. I'll ring for sheriff." As the brass-buttoned official thrust his cheery face into the room, he said: "We've decided——"

"You have! Well, I'll say you're some little speedsters, you are. The last jury I had out took three days, and then disagreed. Fix up your paper while I go tell the judge you're ready. He's opened a new case, but I guess he'll sidetrack it to let this express jury through."

He departed chuckling. With a nice sense of importance the foreman detached his most resplendent fountain pen. He breathed stormily through his great nostrils as he painstakingly wrote the word "Guilty" and signed his name. The room settled into the silence of a house in which some one lies dead. No one spoke. No one smoked. The promenading pigeons shone with iridescence. Their monotonous cooing was pierced by a child's high-pitched voice, singing a kindergarten ditty in the corridor outside:

"And every little wavelet had a white-cap on, Night-cap on——"

Some one checked the happy song. The words swept Blake's thoughts back to the morning, to the white-caps upon which his blurred eyes had rested when he sensed his predicament. Thank God that he had not been too dazed to realize what depended upon his getting to shore Never before had he shed his clothes with such dexterity.

HIS clothes. He had forgotten them until this moment. Unless some one had retrieved them they were bobbing up and down on that float. Suppose some crazy loon found them and spread the alarm that he had disappeared? No one could be such a darn fool until inquiry had been made at his house—but there was no one there to answer questions—Saki had driven him to town. Billy and Peter Weld would keep their heads—he would telephone them as soon as he was free—Con would be worried, even if she were in love with the Youth's Companion—he must reach her—the door swung wide. "Come on," said the sheriff.

The jurors filed to the court-room. The place was crowded to the doors. The news that the verdict was to be handed in had spread. Court, prisoners, attorneys and officers looked as if they had been there, spellbound, for days—so identical were their positions with those assumed at the opening of the case. The judge with the fingers of one hand tapping the bench in front of him nodded to the clerk. That functionary addressed the foreman of the jury, and the transfer of the written verdict pursued its slow and formal course. The clerk faced the prisoners. His voice was non-committal as he announced· "The defendants will rise."

The accused men rose with cocky assurance. The clerk intoned evenly.

"Gentlemen of the jury, hearken unto your verdict. On your oath you find the defendants' guilty of assault and robbery? So say you all?"

"We do."

The judge rose and addressed the jurors.

"Gentlemen, your verdict is just and in accordance with the evidence. I commend your judgment, the courage with which you have defied consequences. Justice must and shall prevail in this Commonwealth."

He pronounced sentence and dismissed the jury. In the corridor the fish-eyed shadow caught Blake by the lapel of his coat. His whispered words were hoarse with sincerity:

"Your friends had one horrible hour, Blake. Your clothing was found on the beach—there was no one at your cottage. The Welds were wild with anxiety. I feared some dirty work of the defense in this case. When Billy and Peter located you here soon after the opening of court. Miss Weld started for town. She insisted upon seeing you. She's in that room——"

He turned away. With heart and pulses racing Blake entered a room where a girl stood at the window. Sunlight outlined her slender figure in gold.

"Con!"

She turned. He had a glimpse of eyes

Concluded on page 96

May Breath FREE

Present coupon at your store

Now Pure Breath

wherever, whenever you need it

A breath pure as Maytime—instantly

MAY BREATH is science's newest contribution to protect against a grave social offense. It is an antiseptic mouth wash in tablet form; a scientific purifier, not a mere perfume that cries out your effort at concealment.

You carry it with you wherever you go. Let a single tablet dissolve in your mouth—that's all. Your breath will breathe the fragrance of Maytime.

* * *

Bad breath is a universal offense. The causes are many and hard to avoid.

Certain foods cause it. Smoking is another cause; decaying food in the mouth another, stomach disorders, etc.

No one is immune. Few realize they have it. Careful people guard against it. This in fairness to themselves and their friends.

* * *

The object of May Breath is to provide constant protection.

It comes in thin tin boxes that you carry with you. No matter what the cause of your bad breath, May Breath corrects it.

Never go to a dance, theatre, to any social gathering, without first taking this simple precaution.

A box free

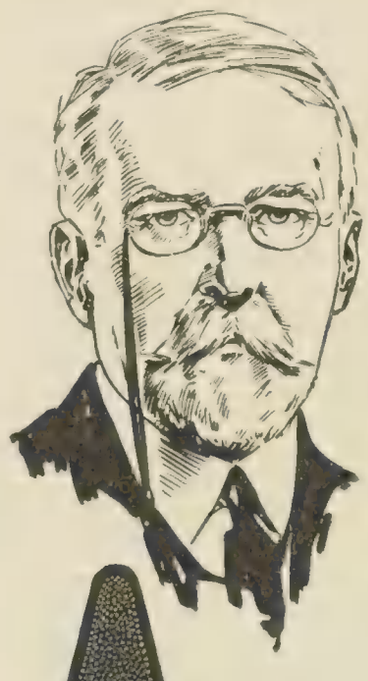
Let us give you a box to try. You will be delighted. Simply use the coupon.

May Breath is now on sale in Canada

M-142

GOOD FOR A 15c BOX

Present this coupon to any druggist for a 15c box of May Breath free. He will charge to us.



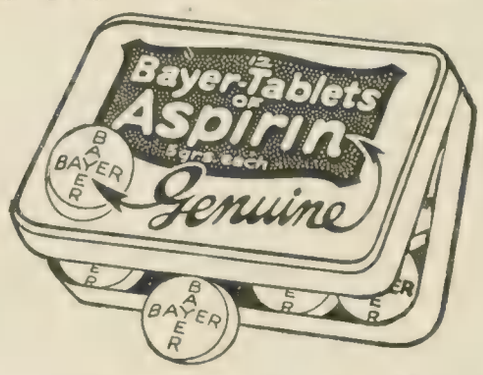
All leading druggists and most others now have May Breath. If your druggist fails you, send coupon to us. Only one box to a family.

TO DRUGGISTS: These coupons will continue to appear. Redeem as per our offer, send to us as they accumulate, and we will pay you 15 cents each in cash.

MAY BREATH COMPANY

1104 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago

Canadian Branch: 191 George St., Toronto

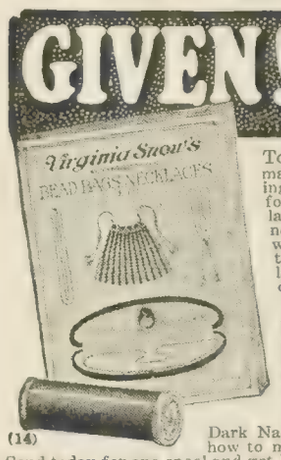


Demand BAYER ASPIRIN

SAY "BAYER ASPIRIN"—Genuine

Unless you see the "Bayer Cross" on tablets you are not getting the genuine Bayer Aspirin proved safe by millions and prescribed by physicians 24 years for

Colds	Headache
Pain	Neuralgia
Toothache	Lumbago
Neuritis	Rheumatism



Safe — Accept only "Bayer" package which contains proven directions.

Handy "Bayer" boxes of 12 tablets. Also bottles of 24 and 100—Druggists.

Aspirin is the trade mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

GIVEN! BEAD BAG and NECKLACE BOOK

To acquaint every reader of this magazine with the superiority of Collingbourne's Water-proof Purse Twist for stringing beads to make the popular new bead chains, bags, purses, necklaces, dress trimmings, etc., we will send this big new illustrated book Free and Postpaid to any lady sending only 25 cents (stamps or silver) for 150-yard spool.

Collingbourne's Water-Proof Purse Twist

Specially processed to give strength and durability — smooth and water-proof—best for all bead stringing and sewing. Colors, Black, White, Jade, Steel, Purple, Periwinkle, Old Gold, Brown, Dark Navy and Scarlet. Free Book shows how to make many beautiful new designs.

(14)

Send today for one spool and get Book Free. State color wanted.

Collingbourne Mills, Dept. 941, Elgin, Ill.

Make Art Objects Like These Yourself

Do This Profitable New Work at Home

You can easily make extra money at home in spare hours, decorating candlesticks, lamp shades, toys and novelty furniture. Many do it solely for artistic pleasure; thousands make fine incomes supplying enormous demand.

Send for Free Book

Tells how you can become a member of Fireside Industries, national organization of home-workers. Outfit furnished without extra cost. Send 2c for postage on beautiful book giving full details.

FIRESIDE INDUSTRIES
Dept. A-293, Adrian, Mich.

Superfluous Hair Roots Now Removed at Home

Glorious news for women troubled with disfiguring hairy growths! By means of an entirely new and very simple method you can now remove not only the surface hair, but the roots as well! Just get a $1 stick of Phelactine at any drug store or toilet counter, follow the easy instructions—see the hair roots come out before your very eyes! Yes, you can hardly believe your eyes, it is done so quickly, completely, harmlessly. Phelactine is non-irritating, non-odorous, non-poisonous.

Dearborn Supply Co., 2358 Clybourn Av., Chicago

Every Girl Can Earn a BRACELET WATCH

By Selling Normandy Chocolates

Watch is the newest, dainty rectangular shape, 25 year white gold-filled case. Exquisitely engraved. 6 jewel regulated and adjusted movement. Silk grosgrain ribbon with 14 Karat white gold-filled clasp.

Normandy chocolates are of the highest grade, fresh and pure and sell easily as it is widely advertised. Send for plan. Tells fully how you can become the proud owner of one of these watches.

HOME SUPPLY COMPANY
133 Duane St. Dept. 358, N. Y. C.

WEDDING INVITATIONS and ANNOUNCEMENTS

That are distinctive, yet inexpensive. Mail coupon—Free samples and prices

THE EDUCATIONAL SUPPLY CO.
Painesville, O. Dept. 33.
Please send me your free samples of engraved and printed wedding invitations and announcements with prices.

Name _____

Address _____

ROSY CHEEKS kept smooth and free from chaps by applying Mentholatum before retiring

Write for free sample

Mentholatum Co., Buffalo, N.Y., Wichita, Kans.

GLYCERINE TEARS

Concluded from page 95

turbulent with emotion, lovely tremulous lips before she flung both arms about his neck and pressed her head against his shoulder. Hard little sobs caught at her whispered words:

"Stan, they said that you had been drowned because you were on this jury—I—I have been hateful to you these last weeks—" The sentence trailed off in a shudder.

Blake held the girl close. Not daring yet to believe in what seemed a miracle, he demanded, with an unsteady attempt at raillery:

"Are those real or glycerine tears, Connie?"

She twisted herself free. Her eyes blazed.

"Your question shows how little you care, Stanley Blake." Angrily she brushed away the telltale tears and started for the door. Blake skilfully kicked it shut as he caught her hands, soft and warm and slim. The throb of the pink finger-tips beat against his heart. His voice was husky as he said:

"We'll have this out now, dearest. Don't you know that I love you? Don't you know that never has there been any girl but you in all my life? Don't you know that I have suffered the tortures of the damned these last weeks? Look at my face! You must. Can you endure seeing that for the rest of your life?"

A light glowed in brown eyes which met his steadily. With sudden passion the girl pressed her soft lips to the disfigured cheek. Her voice shook as she tried to protest gaily:

"Silly! Don't you know that when I notice it—which isn't once in a blue moon—I'm as proud as I feel when you wear your croix de guerre? Don't you know that I think you the best-looking—" Blake crushed her close as he stopped her words with compelling lips.

The door-knob rattled. The sheriff poked his head into the room and retreated with an explosive: "Well, I'll be ——"

The girl's cheeks were crimson as she adjusted her hat before the mirror. Blake laughed when his eyes met her defiantly radiant eyes in the glass.

"Don't mind him; he's a sympathetic old scout. He had our jury in charge. This is the very room in which we fought to a finish this morning. I remember sizing the bunch up in that mirror."

"Mark Carewe says——"

"I thought that you cared for him, Con."

Her long lashes hid sudden tears.

"I liked him, but when I heard that you—" right off he knew——

"You needn't tell me any more, dear. But what did Carewe say?"

"That you must have been a deciding force on that jury. If you were, I am glad that I lost my case, glad that Brown won. If he hadn't, perhaps I shouldn't have goaded you into serving. I hated myself for it after I cooled down."

Blake frowned. "I wonder if I was the deciding force on that jury."

For the first time in years the buoyancy of a boy flooded him. With a swift look at the open door he caught the girl close and kissed her before he laughed:

"Good Lord, I wonder—I wonder if by any chance I could be accused of having intimidated those jurors?"

NIGHT WATCH

Concluded from page 11

seemed to approach her slowly. Suddenly she knew what he was doing. He was going into every pew, not waiting for the lightning, to feel about for her. He was looking for her, then—she had heard that he sometimes followed young girls, thinking they were his "lost Annie." If he caught them, he held them with one hand and stroked hair and face fondly with the other, mumbling foolish, senile endearments. He had never harmed any one, but he had never let one go until rescued by some other person. It was said that Mary Paxton had never been quite the same again; her nerves had never recovered from the shock.

Emily knew that it was only a question of time before he would reach the pew where she crouched—feeling about with those hands. All that kept her senses in her frozen body was the thought that if she lost consciousness those hands would touch her—hold her—caress her. The next lightning-flash showed him entering the adjoining pew. Emily sprang up and out and rushed to the other side of the church. She hid again. He would search her out, but she could again elude him. This might go on all night; a madman's strength would outlast hers; at last she might fall exhausted and he would pounce on her.

For what seemed hours to Emily this mad game of hide and seek lasted. In reality it was about half an hour. She was hardly a rational creature at all, any more than her demented pursuer. She was merely a crouching, springing, shrieking thing of horror. Time after time he hunted her out with his implacable patience. The last time she was near one of the porch doors and in desperation she sprang through it and slammed it in his face. With the last ounce of her strength she tried to hold the knob and gave a despairing cry as she felt it turning in his grasp.

And then—was she dreaming?—she heard Teddy Kent's voice calling to her from the steps outside the outer door.

"Emily—Emily—is that you?"

She did not know how he had come—she did not wonder—she only knew that Teddy Kent was there.

"I'm locked in the church, Teddy," she shrieked. "And Mad Mr. Morrison is here—oh, quick—quick—save me!"

"The key of the door is hanging up there on a nail at the right side," shouted Teddy. "Can you get it and unlock the door? If you can't, I'll smash the porch window."

THE clouds broke at that moment and the porch was filled with moonlight. In it she saw plainly the big key hanging beside the door. She dashed at it and caught it as Mad Mr. Morrison wrenched open the door and sprang into the porch, his dog behind him. Emily unlocked the outer door and stumbled out into Teddy's arms just in time to escape that outstretched blood-red hand. She heard Mad Mr. Morrison give an eerie groan of despair as she escaped him.

Sobbing, shaking, she clung to Teddy.

"Oh, Teddy, take me away—quick—oh, don't let him touch me, Teddy—don't let him touch me!"

Teddy swung her behind him and faced Mad Mr. Morrison on the stone step.

"How dare you frighten her so?" he demanded angrily.

Mad Mr. Morrison smiled in the moonlight. All at once he was not wild or violent—only a heart-broken old man who sought his own.

"I want Annie," he mumbled. "Where is Annie? I thought I had found her in there. I only wanted to find my beautiful Annie."

"Annie isn't here," said Teddy, tightening his hold on Emily's cold hand.

"Can you tell me where Annie is?" entreated Mad Mr. Morrison wistfully. "Can you tell me where my dark-haired Annie is?"

Teddy was furious with Mad Mr. Morrison for frightening Emily, but he was touched by the piteous entreaty of the old man with the ageless quest in his sunken eyes.

"No, no, I don't know where she is," he said gently, "but I think you will find her sometime."

Mad Mr. Morrison sighed.

"Oh, yes! Sometime I will overtake her. Come, my dog, we will seek her."

Followed by his old black dog he went down the steps, across the green and down the long, wet, tree-shadowed road. Emily looked after him understandingly and forgave him. To himself he was not the repulsive old man he seemed to her; he was a gallant young lover seeking his lost and lovely bride. The pitiful beauty of his quest intrigued her, even in the shaking reaction from her time of agony.

"Poor Mr. Morrison," she sobbed, as Teddy half led, half carried her to one of the old flat gravestones at the side of the church.

They sat there until Emily recovered composure and managed to tell her tale—or the outlines of it. She felt she could never tell—perhaps not even write in a Jimmy-book—the whole of its racking horror. That was beyond words.

"And to think," she sobbed, "that the key was there all the time! I never knew it."

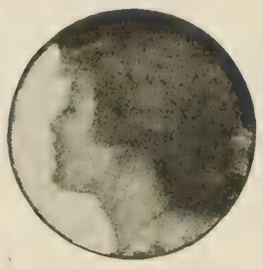
"Old Jacob Banks always locks the front door on the inside and hangs it on that nail," said Teddy. "Then he locks the choir door with a little key, which he takes home. He's always done that since the time when he lost the big key and was weeks before he found it."

"How in the world did you happen to come, Teddy?"

"I went home with Jim Walters after meeting to borrow a book he said he'd lend me. I stayed till the storm was over and was just on my way home. I heard a scream in the church—I thought it sounded like your voice—I ran up the steps just as you called out again. I'm glad I got here in time. If I hadn't, that crazy old man might have frightened you to death."

EMILY shivered. Teddy thought she was cold, and having nothing else to put around her he put his arm—somewhat tentatively, since Murray pride and Murray dignity had to be reckoned with.

They sat so for a few minutes in silence. Everything seemed very wonderful and beautiful—and a little unreal. Emily thought she must be in a dream or in one of her own wonder tales. The storm was over and the moon was shining clearly. The cool fresh air was threaded with beguiling voices—the fitful voice of raindrops falling from the shaking boughs of the maple woods behind them—the soft voice of the Wind Woman around the white church—the far-off voice of the sea—and, still finer and rarer, the little, remote, detached voices of the night. Emily heard them all, more it seemed with the ears of her spirit than of her body, as she had never heard them before. Beyond were fields and groves and roads, elusive, as if brooding over selfish secrets in the moonlight. Silver-white daisies were nodding and swaying all over the graveyard above graves remembered and graves forgotten. An owl laughed delightedly to itself in an old pine. At the magical sound Emily's mystical "flash" swept over her, swaying her like a strong wind—that fleeting moment when her soul seemed to see all the unsung beauty of the universe. She felt as if she and Teddy were all alone in a wonderful new world created for them only out of youth and mystery and delight. They seemed a part of the faint, cool fragrance of the night, of the owl's laughter, of the daisies blowing in the shadowy air.



As for Teddy, he was thinking that Emily Starr looked very sweet in the pale moonshine, with her fringed mysterious eyes and the little dark love-curls clinging to her ivory neck. He tightened his arm a little more—and still Murray pride and Murray dignity made not a particle of protest.

"Emily," whispered Teddy, "you are the sweetest girl in the world."

THE words have been said so often, by so many millions of lads to so many millions of lasses, that they ought to be worn to tatters. But when you hear them for the first time, in some magic hour of your teens, they are as new and fresh and wondrous as if they had just drifted over the hedges of Eden. Madam, whoever you are and however old you are, be honest, and admit that the first time you heard those words on the lips of some shy sweetheart was the great moment of your life.

Emily slipped into New Moon and up to her room without waking any one. Time enough for a horrified Aunt Elizabeth in the morning. As she drifted off to sleep she recalled the events of that bewildering night—her imprisonment in the church—the horror of touching the dog—the worse horror of Mad Mr. Morrison's pursuit—her rapture of relief at Teddy's voice—the brief little moonlit idyl in the graveyard—of all places for an idyl!

"I feel as if I'd grown up all at once tonight," she thought drowsily. "Yesterday seems years away. What a chapter this will make for my Jimmy-book. I'll write it all out—all but what Teddy said. That's too dear to write. I'll—just—remember it."

NINE RAHS FOR THE MOTHERS

Concluded from page 14

Food generates energy, which is expended by action. This brings the need for rest and sleep. Food, work or play and rest should be so coordinated that the child will maintain his body in what is known as equilibrium.

Next in importance to food comes exercise. I say exercise is second because the growing child is bound to get some exercise. Otherwise it would rank with food in importance. Exercise develops the body along lines that make it handsome, graceful, healthy and efficient. Every child should do some work every day and should have a liberal time for play. Regularity in the schedule is important as regards eating, sleeping, work and play. It cultivates good bodily habits. Too much food, too much sleep or too much play are alike injurious. The program for each child should be selected to suit that child's individual needs.

Out of the play life come most of the habits and permanent traits of character of the child. Success, mediocrity or total failure is usually determined by slight differences in education and character rather than by any remarkable inherent variation in individuals. The things that will make a child a success in adult life not only can be, but must be, taught early.

The qualities and habits that make up the character must be cultivated in the cradle itself. It is only a short step from the spoiled "tempery" baby to the spoiled headstrong child, and an even shorter one from the spoiled child to the selfish, ill-natured and indolent man or woman.

Almost every mother hopes that her child will be the best man or woman that she has ever known. But dreams that are to mature in the future seldom come true unless there is some effort in the present. It may be that there is something of an accidental nature about a man's becoming President, but there is absolutely nothing accidental about his developing himself in character and attainments so that he can be considered as presidential timber if opportunity ever knocks at his door.

WE COME into the world without habits. We have predilections and inclinations, perhaps, but these become habits only when they are indulged. We acquire habits just as we acquire physical growth. A group of habits constitutes our life. If we leave the formation of habits to chance, they may be good or they may be bad. Each kind has about an even chance. The mother's business, therefore, is to eliminate the element of chance and to see that as many habits as possible are good ones—good for society and good for the individual.

Good habits may be cultivated by insisting that the child dress quickly and carefully instead of slowly and in a slovenly manner; that he eat the right things properly instead of the wrong things improperly; that he speak correctly and pleasingly; that he play fairly and with good spirit, instead of half-heartedly or with the desire to get the better of his playmates; that he think logically and with due consideration for the rights and feelings of others, instead of whimsically and with the prejudiced point of view that the world revolves around him alone. In short, the constant repetition of doing things in the right way means the formation of good habits, and good habits develop good character.

To invade Slumberland—use your flashlight!

In the children's bedroom, in the dark of night, use your flashlight! No blinding glare in its soft, reflected rays . . . no clicking electric switch to wake the sleeping one. Keep an Eveready up-stairs for night duties and emergencies. Keep another near those dark cellar stairs. And another in the automobile. Silent sentinels of safety, with countless uses.

Reload your flashlights and keep them on the job with fresh, strong Eveready Unit Cells. And if you haven't a flashlight, see the nearest Eveready dealer at once. Buy the improved Eveready Flashlights from electrical, hardware and marine supply dealers, sporting goods and general stores, garages and auto accessory shops.

Manufactured and guaranteed by NATIONAL CARBON COMPANY, Inc., New York—San Francisco
Canadian National Carbon Co., Limited, Toronto, Ontario

EVEREADY FLASHLIGHTS & BATTERIES
—they last longer

The type illustrated is No. 2604, the Eveready 2-cell Tubular Flashlight with bull's-eye lens. Handsome ribbon black-metal case. Safety-lock switch, proof against accidental lighting. Octagonal, non-rolling lens-ring. Sold complete with battery and bulb—everywhere.

* * *

Eveready Unit Cells fit and improve all makes of flashlights. They insure brighter light and longer battery life. Keep an extra set on hand. Eveready-Mazda bulbs, the bright eyes of the flashlights, likewise last longer. When replacing either battery or bulb, read on the side of your flashlight what numbers to buy.

"What a Relief!"

It's Wonderful How Pinex Eases a Cough

The moment you take a spoonful of Pinex, you feel it take hold of your cough, soothing the membranes and bringing marked relief.

And it makes a difference in your drug bills. A small bottle of Pinex, mixed at home with plain sugar syrup, makes a whole pint—a family supply—of pure, wholesome cough syrup, the best that money could buy, for adults or children. Tastes good, too—youngsters take it willingly. Used by millions of people for over 20 years.

Insist on genuine Pinex, 65c, at all druggists. Money promptly refunded if you are not glad you tried it.

The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

For Coughs PINEX

Earn $20 to $40 a week at home

Take up Dressmaking and Millinery. The work is easy and fascinating and it pays splendidly. Good dressmakers and milliners are always in demand.

No need to go away to school or spend long weeks of practice work to learn dressmaking and millinery. Right at home in spare time you can learn to make pretty, becoming clothes and hats as they are made in the best shops and for one-half or one-third the usual cost.

Through the new easy method of learning Dressmaking and Millinery now offered by the Woman's Institute you will soon become so skillful that you can get a position as fitter or teacher, or earn $20 to $40 a week as a dressmaker or milliner.

WRITE FOR FREE BOOKLET

Mail the coupon today for the attractive 32-page booklet which describes the Woman's Institute courses in detail, gives experiences of students, and tells how you, too, can have pretty clothes and hats at small cost and go into business as a dressmaker and milliner. Free on request.

WOMAN'S INSTITUTE
Dept. 41-Q, Scranton, Penna.

Without cost or obligation, please send me your 32-page booklet and tell me how I can learn the subject which I have marked below—

☐ Home Dressmaking ☐ Millinery
☐ Professional Dressmaking ☐ Cooking

Name .....
(Please specify whether Mrs. or Miss)

Address .....

Cheat the season

SERVE APRICOTS NOW

Why let winter dictate your menus?

Serve fruit often. For fruit—more than anything else—puts health, variety and goodness into cold-weather meals.

Take DEL MONTE Apricots as an example. Luscious and full-flavored as the day they were picked! Irresistible—in their own rich syrup just as they come from the can. And nothing better—in tempting treats like baked apricot pudding, apricot shortcake, or apricot charlotte russe.

But however you serve them, make sure of their goodness. Ask your grocer for DEL MONTE—and get the quality you want.

Many new apricot dishes are given in "The DEL MONTE Fruit Book"—a picked collection of the favorite fruit recipes of America's best known cooking authorities. For a free copy, address Department 28-E, California Packing Corporation, San Francisco, California.

Be sure you say

DEL MONTE

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Continued from page 13

he liked, "but catch me doing it," wrote Tom, in his large, sprawling hand—and the travelers had gone into Mexico.

Then they were in San Francisco again, and David, with a muffled hammering going on steadily in his heart when he thought of seeing Gay again, had been expectant of a wire saying that any day might find them turning eastward. But no, for Tom had caught sight of all the huddled masts in the San Francisco harbor, the mysterious thrilling hulls that say "Marseilles," and "Sydney," and "Rio de Janeiro," and he had been all for Australia—all for South America—had compromised finally upon Panama.

That was two months ago. Now, perhaps still feeling that the late New England Spring would be chilly, they were apparently off for Guatemala and Honduras.

The mail to David, nowadays, meant either nothing or everything. Usually it was nothing. Once a month, perhaps, it glowed and sparkled with one of those disreputable and miscellaneous little envelopes that Gabrielle affected: sometimes a hotel sheet, sometimes a lined, shiny page torn from an account-book—but always exquisite to David because of the fine square crowded writing and the delicious freedom and cleverness of the phrases.

For two or three days a letter would make him exquisitely happy. He always put off the work of answering for a fortnight if possible, to savor more fully the privilege he felt it to be and to lessen the interval before the next letter from her.

WHAT David suffered during these crowded months that were yet so empty without her only David knew. He knew now that whatever his feeling was, it was the only emotion of any importance that he had ever known in his life. The departure for the war-front, five years ago, somewhat reminded him of it, but, after all, those feelings had been faint and vague compared to these.

This other thing was the realest in the world—the devouring need of a man for the one woman, the beautiful, inaccessible, wonderful woman who could never again—lost or won—be put out of his life.

He felt that nothing about him was suitable or desirable. No woman could possibly contemplate marriage with him with any enthusiasm; least of all this beautiful woman of twenty, whose wealth was the smallest of her advantages.

Wastewater was all hers now, for Tom did not care to live there, even if it had been the wisest thing in the world for him to do. He had deeded it all to her, and she and Rucker had held a casual correspondence regarding the new barns and John's house, and the prospect of a new Wastewater. It must be "rambly and irregular," Gabrielle had stipulated; "perhaps a little like one of those French farmhouses of creamy white brick, with the red roofs." It must have "one long nice room, with an open fireplace at the end, where supper or breakfast could be brought in, if it was snowing." And she "would love a hall with glass doors and fanlights at the front and back, so that, when you stood at the front door on a hot Summer day, you could see wallflowers and gillies and things all growing in the back yard, right straight through the house."

Rucker, who did a great deal of this sort of thing, had been immensely interested; indeed he and his wife and the tiny baby were established at Keyport with David now, so that his Summer holidays and week-ends might be spent in the neighborhood. He had submitted certain plans to Gabrielle in Los Angeles, and Gabrielle had wired her approval from Mexico City. Now they were to commence building.

"THERE'S Mr. Rucker now," Etta said disconsolately, as a Ford came in the service-gate and turned toward the barns. "No, it isn't," she added, peering.

They all looked in that direction as the car stopped and a young woman jumped out, dismissed it and came toward them with a beaming face. She was tall and wearing a dark-blue suit under a belted brown coat, a loose rich sable-skin about her shoulders and a blue hat, bright with corn-flowers, pressed down over her sunny hair.

David's heart gave a great plunge, raced, stopped short and began to plunge again. It was really Gabrielle.

But she was so beautiful, she was so graceful and swift and young and radiant as she came toward them, that David was incapable of speech, bereft of all emotion except the overpowering realization of what she meant to him.

The day became incredibly glorious, became Spring indeed, when she put both her warm hands in his and held him at arm's length and looked at him and then at the reconstruction and the young green about her with a great sigh of relief and joy that was half a sob.

Perhaps her own emotions were also unexpectedly overwhelming, for even while she laughed and greeted Etta and John and the dog with quite her usual gaiety David noticed an occasional break in her eager voice and a film of tears in her shining eyes.

"Oh, David—Wastewater again!" she said. "If you knew—if you knew how hungry I've been for the old place! Oh, David—what a wonderful barn—but isn't it delicious! And that's your house, Etta, and it looks so comfortable, like a little English inn—and the arch—David, it's all so wonderful! Oh, do tell me everything, every one! I'm so glad to get home!"

He had known that he loved her, but David had never dreamed that he could love her like this. To see her take off the heavy brown coat and consign it and the fur to Etta, and to have her straighten the little white frills at throat and wrists of the trim little dark-blue suit in just her old busy way, and to have her fairly dance along at his side, excitedly inspecting all that had happened and that was to happen, was to be transported—for David—straight into a country of no laws and no precedents. Gay, sweet and blue-eyed and husky of voice; Gay, slender and eager and responsive; Gay—home again!

"But let me tell Etta and John my news before we leave them," she had said in the first rush of greetings. "Who do you think has just gotten married?"

"Not you, Miss Gabrielle, although goodness knows you look happy enough for anything," Etta had said.

"Not I—do you hear her, David? No, I'm to be next," Gabrielle had answered with a gaiety that stabbed David to the heart. "No, but Miss Sylvia and Mr. Tom were married a month ago, before we ever left San Francisco."

"Good grief!" Etta said in a hushed voice. David only fixed astonished and suddenly enlightened eyes upon the girl's face.

"Married in San Francisco," Gabrielle repeated, nodding triumphantly. "You're not one bit more surprised than I am. Well, yes, for I did suspect it," she added more moderately. "I knew that they were falling in love with each other, of course. But I never dreamed that they had done it, until we were three days out. Then Sylvia wouldn't let me wireless, because she said everybody on the boat would know. So we went to Panama, and then she and Tom wanted to go on farther, and Margaret and I wanted to come home—and here I am."

ETTA was by this time sufficiently recovered to ask for further details, and David, watching Gabrielle as she half-laughingly and half-seriously gave them, had time to appreciate how the girl had grown to womanhood in this time of absence. With a sort of negligent readiness and yet with a certain dignity, too, she satisfied the eager questions of the older man and woman, all the while reserving, he could see, the more intimate narrative for his ears alone.

They were not to be alone immediately, however, for Etta and John accompanied them through the barns.

"I had breakfast with Mrs. Rucker—isn't she always the nicest person?" Gabrielle said. "And what a ducky baby! We got in to New York yesterday morning, you know, and came up on the night train. I went straight to your Keyport house, hoping to find you, but you'd just gone. I left all my things there, and of course I'm to stay there to-night——"

"You won't be going away again, Miss Gabrielle?" John asked.

Out with the Old— In with the New!

Are you moving this year? Or simply moving things around? In either case, it is an ideal time to replace wornout furnishings or add some needed pieces—and here's the way:

If, on inspecting the stock of your NeighborhoodFurnitureDealer,you do not find what you want, ask to see his copy of our 448-page catalog. If you prefer, ask him for a Card of Introduction and make your selection in person from one of our mammoth displays.

Deliveries are made through your dealer. This permits both dealer and manufacturer to serve you at reduced cost and means economy for you.

32-Page Booklet Free

"Correct Care of Home Furnishings" is filled with valuable information about wood and fibre furniture of all kinds, carpets, rugs and linoleums, draperies, etc. Address nearest office.

BOSTON·NEW YORK·PHILADELPHIA·CHICAGO·DENVER
Peck & Hills FURNITURE CO.
DEPENDABLE FURNISHINGS
LOS ANGELES·OAKLAND·SAN FRANCISCO·PORTLAND·SEATTLE

Savory

KITCHEN BOUQUET

The Chef's Flavoring for Home Cooking

Adds rich color and delicious flavor to soups, gravies, stews, sauces and meat dishes. Prepared from the aromatic juices of fresh garden vegetables. Pure, wholesome, nourishing.

If your grocer can't supply you, send 10c for generous size sample bottle. Recipe folder sent free.

KITCHEN BOUQUET, Inc.
522 Fifth Ave., New York

LADD EGG BEATER
4 SIZES
8 BEATING BLADES·SMOOTHER & QUICKER
ENTIRELY SUPERIOR·TAKE NO OTHER
ALL DEALERS or UNITED ROYALTIES CORP. 1133 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Big Profits in Home Cooking!

Alice Bradley, famous expert, shows just how to make home cooking, cake-making, candy-making give big profits. How to cater, run profitable TEA ROOMS, motor inns, cafeterias, etc. Write for free booklet, "Cooking for Profit."
American School of Home Economics, 846 E. 58th St., Chicago

It's the Poison in coffee that harms

CAFFEINE, you know, is the drug that harms, when coffee does harm people. That's why children can't drink coffee. Why doctors so often forbid it. Why thousands must stint on it, and thousands drink substitutes. And why many must omit it at night.

Yet caffeine is almost tasteless. It adds to coffee no delight. Even its stimulation does not come until two hours after drinking. So all the flavor and aroma, all the quick bracing effects, remain the same without it.

Kaffee Hag is pure coffee with the caffeine taken out. It is a super-coffee, an exquisite blend. It is coffee at its best.

Its removal takes out all coffee harm, but leaves every coffee joy.

Millions of homes now serve Kaffee Hag. So do fine hotels the world over. It means a coffee which all can drink —all they want and at any hour.

Not a makeshift, not a substitute, but the finest coffee you can serve. When this blend is served with and without caffeine, expert tasters cannot tell the difference.

KAFFEE HAG

Pure Coffee without Caffeine

Some one in your family wants this harmless coffee. Write for free ten-cup test package.

KAFFEE HAG CORPORATION
1464 Davenport Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio

A LITTLE LEMCO GOES A LONG WAY

The economy of Lemco is as marked as its rich concentrated goodness.

One 4 oz. jar makes 32 cups of delicious bouillon, or enough for 2 people for 16 days.

LAMONT, CORLISS & Co., 131 Hudson Street, New York, U. S. Distributors for OXO LIMITED, LONDON, ENGLAND.

Liebig Company's Extract of Beef

LEMCO

INFORMATION WANTED! REWARD!

50.00 in cash for the name, with proof, of the composer of a beautiful lullaby. Music free with the new Allen Book of Beads, 36 pages, illustrating, actual size, over 500 beads. Ten cents brings the music and book with patterns for new beadwork. Offer expires March 31, 1925. Allen's Boston Bead Store, 8 Winter St., Boston, Mass.

"Why, that depends—" she looked at David in a little confusion, looked back into the sweet open spaces of the barn. "I may go to England—" she began.

"Looks like you might be surprising us, too, one of these days," Etta said, shrewd and curious.

David glanced quickly at the girl; she was walking beside Etta, and although she immediately changed the subject by speaking of the kitchen yard of the new house, he was certain that he saw the color creep up under her clear skin and the hint of a mysterious smile.

"Don't shock us with too many surprises in one morning, Gabrielle," he warned her, trying to smile naturally.

"Ah, no! I shall save something and let things appear by degrees." she answered. "Brick wall here, David."

"Brick wall here, joining the stable wall in a long line, with the poplars back of it," he agreed, with a suddenly cold, heavy heart.

"And the dining-room windows looking out here where all the lilacs are——"

"With a sort of portico—an open court, tiled, here on the north front—where it will be cool in the afternoon."

"David, it's so much more wonderful than I dreamed it would be. Imagine a new Wastewater, all sunshine and happiness, instead of that terrible old barrack full of jealousy and secrets and plots. Isn't it like a fairy-tale? To think that life can be so sweet——"

"Gay, there's no sweetness that you don't deserve," David said suddenly as they followed the others. "After that defrauded childhood and all the shocks and sorrows you had when you first came home two years ago, nothing could be too much."

"I feel now," the girl answered seriously, "as if, on that last night of fire and horror and bewilderment, the whole dreadful thing had been burned out—cauterized, made clean once and for all, and that now we start with a new order."

"Etta," Gabrielle said suddenly, "have you some chops? David and I are going to have our lunch down on the shore. And will you make us some coffee, Etta, and give us matches and butter and all the rest of it? It's half-past eleven now, and we'll want to start about one—now, show me everything, David, and tell me ten thousand things about everything."

"John, have those blue-prints—?" David, out of whose sky the sun had dropped, leaving everything dark and gray, asked the foreman.

"The plans for the house that looks sorter slumped down, with the roof two stories deep?" John asked, as one anxious to cooperate intelligently.

"Certainly. The only ones we have—" David answered impatiently. Gabrielle bent suddenly down over the dog, but when she and David were strolling away through the perfumed warmth of the sweet young green of the garden, she asked, with her old wide-eyed delighted smile:

"John and Etta don't approve of Mr. Rucker's plans?"

But David's heart was too sick for laughter.

"You really may be following Sylvia's example one of these days, Gabrielle?"

Instantly the clear warm skin was flooded with color, and an oddly troubled look came into her beautiful eyes.

"Well, I suppose so——"

"You got over—you forgot—the man of whom you told me more than two years ago?"

"No," she answered briefly.

"You mean that you have seen him again?"

"Oh, yes."

"Ah," David said, blindly trying to say something that should avert her too-close scrutiny, "I see."

He felt his heart leaden. It was with an actual sort of physical difficulty that he guided her through the new Wastewater that was yet in so many ways the old.

SO MUCH was his anyway, he told himself. This day of her dear companionship, this luncheon on the rocks, this monopoly of her husky and wonderful voice, her earnest, quick glances, her laughter, were his for a little while. Even over the utter desolation of his spirit he was won to an exquisite and yet agonizing happiness by this nearness of all her sweetness and charm again.

First, she must see the plans. They sat down upon a pile of clear lumber in the trembling green shade of overhanging maple branches and pegged the fluttering blue sheets with bits of rock and bent over them.

And now, as she eagerly identified the placing of casement windows and bricked terraces, she was so close that David got the actual flowery fragrance of her, and her warm, satin-smooth hand occasionally touched his. She had laid aside her big coat and looked a little less impressive in the plain little suit and delicate white frills—and somehow all the more her own wonderful self, the eager, busy, interested little Gay of years ago.

"David, see here, dear—" she added the little word so unconsciously, he thought with a pang: "See here, dear, these two rooms up-stairs will be almost empty—this with a north light, in case my smart cousin should want to do some painting——"

"Do you mean that you and Tom and Sylvia really plan to make your home here?" David asked.

"As for Tom, I can't say—he and Sylvia will surely spend their Summers here. But this will always be home, headquarters, for me," Gay said. And she laid her beautiful hand upon the blue-prints almost with a caress. "My little house," she said lovingly, "with its chimney-seats and casement windows—we must have roses and hollyhocks jammed up against them in Summer—and with its darling white woodwork and pink-and-blue papers, and with its little breakfast-room looking over the sea——"

"Not so little," David warned her. "You will have a dozen rooms, you know, besides the servants' quarters, in that high roof that John dislikes so heartily——"

"Little, beside all those high brick walls and wings and windows of the old Wastewater," she countered. "Poor unhappy Wastewater!" she said more than once, as they walked slowly about in the increasing warmth of the day. The late morning was so still that they could hear an occasional distant cock-crow. Silence, fragrance and the sweetness of expanding life lay upon the world like a spell.

"Do you see that angle of land there," the girl asked presently, when with their lunch-basket they were going toward the shore; "there just beyond the spit, with its own little curve of bay? That never seemed quite to belong to the rest of the place."

"You could sell it," David suggested, catching her firm hand in his as she cautiously followed him down the rocky path.

"Oh, no! I don't mean that. But you see what a cunning little homestead it would make all by itself," Gabrielle said, making her way to their old favorite spot and beginning the preparations for a little driftwood fire.

"It has good trees and that line of silver birches, and it has dogwoods. I was wondering if Tom and Sylvia wouldn't like a house there all their own—a place they could shut up and leave when they wanted to wander——"

"Then they are not going to live with her," David thought with his heart sinking again.

SHE had been talking about them in a desultory fashion all morning, but when the coffee was boiling and the buns toasted and the chops dripping and sizzling, she settled herself back comfortably against the rocks and gave him the story consecutively.

"Sylvia is a changed person in lots of ways," said Gay with relish. "And in other ways she is exactly what she always was and always will be. She has the—she has the family pride. Only it takes a rather nice form with her, the form of self-respect. Sylvia must—she simply must respect herself. And after poor Aunt Flora died, what with having lost her fortune and then having to bear what she considered—and what really was—a terrible blow to her pride, poor Sylvia really suffered terribly. She kept trying to analyze how she felt and convince me about it, and I know that's what made her ill. She couldn't quite get used to not being—what shall I call it?—admirable, superb, superior—that was always my old word for her.

"She talked about college courses, and I think she must have written the dean about it, but perhaps she wasn't much encouraged. After all, Sylvia's only twenty-two, and perhaps professors have to be a little older.

"So we drifted down to southern California, Sylvia in mourning of course, and not taking any interest in anything, and Tom worse. But when we got to La Crescenta, suddenly we all felt better. Tom began to eat and sleep, Sylvia and I took long walks, we even went into Los Angeles to concerts.

"And in no time she found that she could still be—superior with Tom. He began to admire her tremendously—he thought she

Continued on page 100

Real Fruits full of Vitamins

SERVED A HUNDRED DIFFERENT WAYS

ALL THE vital elements of fruits with the wonderful health properties of pure unflavored, unsweetened gelatine are combined in the delicious desserts and salads so easily prepared from real fruit and Knox Sparkling Gelatine.

Science says that Knox Sparkling Gelatine should be a part of the family daily menu. It is most economical because it goes four times further than the ready flavored kinds. One package of Knox Gelatine will make four different desserts or salads, each sufficient for six servings.

Orange Charlotte

½ envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine
¼ cup cold water ½ cup boiling water
1 cup orange juice and pulp
2 tablespoonfuls lemon juice 1 cup sugar
Lady Fingers Whites of three eggs

Soak gelatine in cold water five minutes and dissolve in boiling water. Add sugar, and when dissolved add lemon juice. Strain, cool slightly, and add orange juice and pulp. When mixture begins to stiffen beat, using a wire whisk, until light; then add stiffly beaten egg whites and beat thoroughly. Turn into mold lined with lady fingers or stale cake. One pint whipped cream may be used in place of whites of eggs.

KNOX
SPARKLING
GELATINE
"The Highest Quality for Health"

Helpful Books Free

We will mail Mrs. Knox's "Dainty Desserts" and "Food Economy"—two very useful books for the woman who wants to feed her family properly—if you will send your grocer's name and 4c for postage.

Charles B. Knox Gelatine Co.
166 Knox Avenue, Johnstown, N. Y.

Both packages contain the same plain Sparkling Granulated Gelatine, but the "Acidulated" has an extra envelope containing lemon flavoring, but not mixed with the gelatine.

"Don't let your face touch its pillow until your skin has been thoroughly cleansed"

. . . . Here so soon and so clear-skinned!

—then she asked me, "How in the world do you manage to look so fresh and clear skinned this early in the morning?"

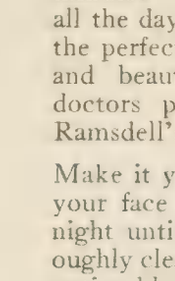
So I told her of my "three golden minutes" at bedtime, when I wipe all the day's dirt from my skin with the perfect cold cream that cleanses and beautifies; the one so pure doctors prescribe it—Daggett & Ramsdell's Perfect Cold Cream.

Make it your rule too, never to let your face touch its white pillow at night until your skin has been thoroughly cleansed—and it will soon be noticeably more lovely.

For sale at department and drug stores—the white package with red bands. Tubes 10c, 25c, 50c. Jars, 35c, 50c, 85c and $1.50.

There's a "Try-It-Yourself" trial tube for you—Free. Just send the coupon below.

* * *



How to use those "Three Golden Minutes"

I—Smooth a coat of this perfect cold cream over your face and neck.

II—Leave it on a minute to sink in.

III—Wipe off the cleansing cold cream with a smooth cloth and finish with a dash of cold water.

Daggett & Ramsdell's

PERFECT COLD CREAM

Daggett & Ramsdell, Dept. 3017
214 West 14th St., New York

Please send me the free trial tube of the Perfect Cold Cream you offer above.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

In Canada: Daggett & Ramsdell, 105 Dufferin St., Toronto.

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Continued from page 99

knew everything! But never in my life have I seen Sylvia so—well, so gentle with anybody as she was with Tom. She began to make much of what he knew—regularly draw him out: he speaks very good Spanish, you know, and you can use Spanish a good deal there. Sylvia talked to him about boats. navigation, places he had been and we hadn't, and all the time—" and Gabrielle's eyes danced—"all the time it was just as if she was afraid of breaking the spell she had put on herself—if you know what I mean, David?"

"I think I do."

"Meanwhile," the girl resumed with keen enjoyment, "Tom was changing too. He's gotten—finer in a funny sort of way. His voice has grown finer, and he—he just stares at Sylvia whatever she does and smiles at whatever she says, and he is like a lion on a string."

Her joyous laugh was infectious, and David laughed in spite of himself.

"About—this is April. About Christmas time," Gay resumed, "I began to notice it. Tom was funny and humble and quiet with Sylvia, and Sylvia was bent upon making much of Tom; she'd quote him—I don't know whether I can convey this to you—but she'd say to me so seriously, 'Tom says the rain isn't over. Tom doesn't like Doctor Madison—he thinks his manner with us is a little too assured'—that sort of thing.

"Well, we went to San Francisco, and there I really did have the best time I ever had in my life," Gabrielle said. "The Montallen girls were there with their brother, and we had some wonderful parties—we went through Chinatown, and out to the beach, and up the mountain and everywhere. And I suppose I hadn't been noticing Sylvia very closely, because, after the Montallens left——"

"Oh, they left, did they?" David, interested in the brother, asked.

"Yes, they came straight home. It's the Montallens," Gabrielle said parenthetically, "that want me to go abroad with them in June."

"I see. Will the brother go?"

"Oh, I think so."

"I see. But go on—about Sylvia."

"WELL, when they left, Sylvia suddenly seemed so odd. She cried a good deal, and she was quite cranky—not a bit like herself. By this time we were all getting ready for the Panama trip. Margaret thought that perhaps it was young Bart Montallen, who is a perfectly stunning fellow—in diplomacy—" Gabrielle elaborated.

"I remember him," David said briefly.

"But one day Sylvia broke down and cried for an hour," Gabrielle said. "It was the day before we sailed, and we were at the Fairmont. I coaxed Sylvia, and finally she told me that it was Tom who had asked her to marry him—and there I made my first mistake," Gay added, widening her eyes so innocently at David that he laughed aloud. "I said—trying to be sympathetic, you know—'And of course you wouldn't,' and she got rather red and looked straight at me and said, 'Why shouldn't I?' I said, rather feebly, 'Well, I didn't know you cared about him,' and she said, 'I don't. But I consider him in every way one of the finest men I ever knew.' Of course I said I did, too.

"Then she began to cry again, and said that she was entirely alone in the world—all that," Gay resumed, "and she said that any woman would be proud to marry Tom, but that she was afraid every one would think she was influenced by the thought of his money."

"And what did you say to that?" David asked, diverted.

Gabrielle gave him her gravely wise look, and the beautiful face, flushed with the warmth of the day and shaded by the blue hat, was so near that David lost the thread of her words for a few seconds in sheer marveling at her beauty.

"I said I did not think that should be a consideration. I said that no one had thought that of you, when you were engaged to her," she added with a sudden smile.

David, who was leaning back against a rock and had his arms folded, flushed a little in his turn.

"I don't think that was ever, really, an engagement."

And remembering suddenly that he had terminated what had been a rather definite understanding with Sylvia simply that he might offer Gabrielle his name and his protection, he had an instant of being hardly able to believe himself the same man.

"SO THEN we all left the next morning. That was fun," the girl went on. "The ship was delightful, and nobody was sick, and it was a January day as warm and green as June—and Tom was just wild with high spirits; I never saw him so gay. And well he might be, for he and Sylvia had been married that morning.

"Sylvia, on the other hand, acted very queerly, cried a good deal—stuck close to me—seemed cross. She would hardly speak to Tom—and I can tell you, David," the girl interrupted herself to say, "I didn't anticipate a particularly pleasant trip to Panama.

"I remembered afterward that Sylvia talked a good deal about the annulment of marriages on those first few days. She kept telling me that for a woman an annulment had no value, because any 'honorable' woman would feel herself just as much bound after it as before, but it would at least set the man free. That was two days after we sailed and it was that very night that I was playing cribbage with the old captain—who was a perfect old Scotch darling—and afterward went up on the bridge with him. And when I was slipping down to my room I passed a man and a woman at the rail.

"It was midnight, and there was no moon, but as I went by I heard the man's voice, and it was Tom. And then I saw that the woman was Sylvia and that she was crying. Tom was sort of growling—you know how he talks when he is a little angry and a little ill at ease—and I heard Sylvia say the word 'annulment.' 'I can't stand it, Tom, it was all a silly mistake,' she said. 'You can't talk like that, Sylvia,' Tom said, in a sort of shocked voice.

"Suddenly the whole thing came to me," Gabrielle said, with all a child's wondering, delighted stare fixed upon David, "and I went straight up to them, and put my arm about them from behind, and said, 'Tell me about it. I know you're married——'

"Of course I was delighted—much more so than you can believe—I didn't have to pretend that! Because I had had a sort of fear that once they both got back to their natural surroundings Sylvia would get proud and collegy—and you know what I mean?—again," the girl went on, "and that Tom would begin to feel awkward and nothing would come of their affair. So I made a great fuss—cried, really I was so excited. And just then Margaret came along the deck, afraid I'd gone overboard or something, and we told her—and she laughed and cried. And Sylvia began to seem more normal, especially when we went to our cabin, and I said what a dear old fellow Tom was, and how he adored her. She began to smile—the way she does, you know, when she really doesn't want to smile—and began to talk pityingly about a very pretty English girl on board who had taken an immense fancy to him——

"Well, after that—" and Gay's laugh was delicious to hear—"you should have seen Sylvia. She—glowed! I never saw her so handsome, and so happy, and so—well, you know her—so superb. She was all the proud wife. Everything Tom did was mysteriously perfect, and everything he said she listened to with as much attention as if it were his dying words.

"It seems as if Sylvia must be a little superior on some count or other to be happy!" Gay commented, affectionately and amusedly. "Now she's infinitely happy. She is Mrs. Tom Fleming, and she has a handsome, rich husband who adores her, and presently they'll have the most superior children—and believe me," the girl finished laughing, "Sylvia will feel that just what those children do is the astonishing thing; if any other child is taller, she'll say it is weedy and has outgrown its strength, and if any child is smarter, she'll say it is unpleasantly precocious."

"So you got to Panama—?" David prompted.

"So we got to Panama, and by this time Mr. and Mrs. Tom Fleming only wanted to be left alone," Gay resumed, raising her blue

I go thru the rub of the tub and come out like new . .
Says PETER PAN

Soak me and soap me. Rub me on the board. Run me thru the wringer. Wash me and iron me as often as you please. No fading. No streaking. I always look bright and fresh and beautiful, for I HOLD my colors and crisp silky lustre. You will find my name on

"Peter Pan Fast Color Prints"
and
"Peter Pan Fast Color Gingham"

When you buy either of us you get this

GUARANTEE
We are ready to replace any garment made of "Genuine Peter Pan Fast Color" if it fades
HENRY GLASS & CO.

For your own safety and satisfaction, refuse all substitutes and insist on the fabric that bears this mark on the selvage of every yard.

"Genuine Peter Pan Fast Color"

If your dealer cannot supply GENUINE PETER PAN FAST COLOR GINGHAM, in plain shades, yard wide; in woven checks, 32 inches wide; in PRINTS, 32 inches wide; with my name on the selvage, write to Henry Glass & Co. for the book of

42 LARGE AND BEAUTIFUL SAMPLES FREE

They will have your order filled promptly by a reliable retail house. When you write for these FREE SAMPLES be sure to give the name of your dealer and say if he sells

"Genuine Peter Pan Fast Color"

HENRY GLASS & CO.
46 WHITE ST. NEW YORK

$1000.00 IN CASH PRIZES
For the Best Reasons Why SKINNER'S is The Superior MACARONI-SPAGHETTI AND PURE EGG NOODLES
PARTICULARS IN FREE BOOKLET.
DUPLICATE PRIZES IF TIES.
SKINNER MFG. CO. OMAHA, U.S.A.

CLAY CLOTHES DRIER
Dries washing spotlessly clean. Folds like an umbrella to store away, 135 ft. line. Revolves in 15 ft. space. No dragging of basket. A proven success. Durable, rust proof, light weight. Guaranteed. Circular D2-21 Free.
IOWA GATE COMPANY, Cedar Falls, Iowa

My Standbys

By Mrs. Gene Carter

"My bottle and Handy Can of 3-in-One are my real housekeeping standbys.

"I use 3-in-One out of the bottle when making dust cloths and polish mops or cleaning and polishing furniture and woodwork.

"I find the Handy Can more convenient and economical when lubricating vacuum cleaner, sewing machine, etc. I can oil things just right without waste or muss."

3-in-One

The High Quality Household Oil

has 79 valuable uses in every home, lubricating, cleaning, polishing and preventing rust. If you are not familiar with all these uses you are overlooking some of the conveniences that 3-in-One can give you.

At all good stores in 1-oz., 3-oz. and 8-oz. bottles; also in 3-oz. Handy Oil Cans. The 8-oz. bottle is the economical size. Contains more for the money.

FREE— Generous sample and Dictionary of Uses. Write for both on a postal.

THREE-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY
130LE. William St., New York, N. Y.
Factories: Rahway, N. J. and Montreal
HR373

Relieve sore throat

Your throat feels a little sore tonight. You hope it will be better in the morning—but hope may fail where prevention wins.

Gargle with Absorbine, Jr. before retiring! Give the muscles of your throat a rub with it—then wake up after sound sleep, with the danger past.

A daily gargle with dilute Absorbine, Jr. fights off germs, and keeps the mouth clean. It's health insurance against winter ills.

Absorbine, Jr. is a complete liniment and masterful antiseptic—stainless and agreeable. It is a tonic to tired, lazy muscles, a healing force for cuts, bruises, sprains.

At all druggists', $1.25 or postpaid
Liberal trial bottle, 10c., postpaid.

W. F. YOUNG, Inc., Springfield, Mass.

Absorbine Jr.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

eyes to smile to him. "They didn't want to wire you because such a wire is very apt to be noticed, and they didn't quite want to come home—in fact, they planned this southern trip as a sort of supplementary honeymoon. So, as there was a charming navy woman, a Mrs. Stephens, coming all the way up, I was delighted to put myself and Margaret in her care. And that's all."

"You've told me everything—except your own affair, Gabrielle," David presently prompted, when they were making their way up the cliff path to the garden.

"My—own affair?" Perhaps she had not understood, for although she turned scarlet suddenly, she made no further admission.

"There is—somebody, you told me once?" continued David.

"Oh, yes," she dismissed it with a shrug.

She added no more at the time. The enchanted hours of the day moved to three o'clock. But when David, knowing her to be tired from the long trip and probably confused with all the changes and impressions, suggested their return to Keyport she showed a reluctance as definite as his own.

GABRIELLE had given him, on this Spring day of lingering lights and soft fragrance, such a revelation of her own sweetness, her own personality as made all his other recollections of her seem pale and dim. Every turn of her head, every movement, every direct look from her star-sapphire eyes, had deepened the old impression that there was nobody quite like her in the world.

They talked of the old Wastewater as they went to and fro busied with problems of the proportions and the placing of the new—of the family, with its passion and hates, its jealousies and weaknesses.

"The new house," Gabrielle said whimsically, "will stand as much for the new order as the old one did for the stupidities and affectations of the old. It's all to be simple, no affectations, no great big gloomy basement regions for the servants—they'll have their own sections as comfortable, as sunshiny as the other. There will be open fires instead of the old hideous grates, and rugs and clean floors instead of the old dirty, hard-and-fast carpets, and bathrooms full of tiles and sunshine, and sleeping-porches instead of all that horrible rep curtaining, and there'll be——"

Her voice lowered. "There'll be people loving each other," she said. "After all, isn't that the answer to the whole problem? Women being loyal and generous, instead of jealous and watching all the time, men thinking of other people's happiness, instead of having themselves painted in picturesque attitudes——"

SHE finished laughing, but her face was presently serious again. They were idly wandering through the ruins of the garden now, Gabrielle a little flushed and tumbled from the efforts of raising a bent rose-bush or straightening, with a little air of anxiety and concentration that David thought somehow touchingly motherlike, a sheaf of timidly budded whips that would some day be sweet with white syringa bloom.

She stopped at the old sun-dial and cleared the fallen packed damp leaves from its face with a stick and busied herself so earnestly about it that David thought her more like an adorable child and more like a responsible little housewife than ever. He thought of the wife she would make some man some day, and felt suddenly that he must get away—out of the country—anywhere—before that time came.

"You can't tell me your plans yet, Gabrielle, dear?" he said with a rather dry throat when they were beside the dial.

The girl's color deepened a little under the creamy skin, and for a moment she did not answer. Then she said with a look straight into his eyes:

"I could tell you—as far as they have gone."

"Not unless you want to," David answered from the other side of the dial, which he gripped with fingers that were suddenly shaking.

"The man of whom I spoke to you, so long ago," Gabrielle said presently, "I saw again—this Spring."

"I see," David said, with a nod, as she paused. "He did not marry the other woman, then?"

"What other woman?" the girl demanded, amazed.

"I thought you said that he had cared for another woman?"

"Ah—? Ah, yes, so he had. No, he didn't marry her. He is—quite free," said Gabrielle, working busily.

"You're very sure you care for him, dear?" David asked, already relegated in his own mind to the sphere of the advisory, loving older brother.

"Yes," she said with another upraised look. "I am sure. I have never felt to anybody else what I do to him, and I know now I never will. When I first saw him—more than two years ago——"

"You saw him first then?"

"Well, I had seen him as a child. But after I got home from Paris I saw him again," the girl offered lucidly.

"I see." She was so radiant, she was so wonderful! If he should be some utter good-for-naught, David thought.

"Then I did not see him, except occasionally," Gabrielle resumed. "And when I did not see him, then I knew that logically, actually, he was everything I could love; a gentleman, kind, wise, admirable, in every way——"

"Rich?" David asked, in a silence and with a faint frown.

"No. Not—exactly poor, either."

"But does he know that you are rich, Gabrielle?"

"I don't think that it makes any difference to him," the girl said thoughtfully, after a moment.

"I don't suppose, of course, that it would," David agreed immediately.

"No. So that when I was away from him, I had time to think it out logically and dispassionately, and I knew he was—the one," the girl resumed. "And when I saw him, whenever we were together, although I couldn't think logically, or indeed think at all," she said laughing and flushed, and meeting his eyes with a sort of defiant courage, "I knew, from the way I felt, that there never could be and never would be any one else."

"I see, of course," David said slowly.

"Both ways," Gabrielle went on, smiling a little anxiously, "I feel safe. When I'm not with him I can reason about it, I can look forward to all the years, thinking of myself as older, as the mother of children," the girl went on seriously, her voice lowered to the essence of itself, her eyes upon the softly heaving and shining sea, "thinking of the books, the tramps, the friendships we will share. There is no moment of life that he will not make wonderful to me, poverty, change, sorrow, travel—everything," she finished, looking up smilingly, yet with the glitter of tears in her beautiful eyes.

"I—" David cleared his throat. "I am so glad you can tell me, Gay," he said gruffly.

"I love to tell you," the girl said with an illuminated look.

"It—is settled, Gabrielle?"

"No. Not exactly. That is—" She colored violently, laughed, and grew suddenly pale. "No, it's not settled," she answered confusedly.

"You can't tell me anything more?" David asked, after a pause.

"Not—now, very well. At least, I think I can soon," Gay said, laughing and flushed, yet oddly near, he could see, to tears, too. "I know that he—cares for me," she added, after another brief silence.

"He has told you?"

"Well, no. Or yes, he has, too—in a way But all that—" she broke off appealingly.

"Yes, I know," David reassured her. "You shall tell me when you're ready."

"David, I suppose we should be going back," the girl said reluctantly. But she did not change her comfortable position, resting against the dial and looking alternately at its blackened old stone surface and across the shining sea.

"Presently. I hate to end—to-day," David answered simply.

"So do I. Hasn't it been a wonderful day? Doesn't it seem like the beginning of heavenly times?"

"One of the happiest of my life," David said, trying to lighten the words with his old friendly smile and failing.

GABRIELLE was silent, and in the stillness all the sweet sounds of a Spring afternoon made themselves heard. The sun was sending long slanting rays down across the torn earth and the old garden and the piled bricks. John's and Etta's house, joined by the simple curve of the arch to the long, low roofs of the barn, looked everything that was homelike and comfortable in the sinking glow.

"I see Summer supper here in the court," Gabrielle said presently in a low voice as if

Concluded on page 102

A Quality Seal on Every Wheel!

Your Baby, Too

Our 99 years of manufacturing experience has produced an assortment of Heywood-Wakefield Baby Carriages which will attract every mother.

Whether your ideas involve price, quality, beauty or Baby's comfort, the new line has met them.

A Quality Seal on Every Wheel (the red and gold hub-cap) not only adds to appearance but testifies that yours is best of its kind. None but a genuine Heywood-Wakefield Baby Carriage, Stroller and Sulky has this identifying mark.

Leading stores will show you our latest Baby Carriage models.

Heywood-Wakefield Company

Six Factories and Eleven Warehouses in the U. S. A.
Canadian Factory, Orillia, Ontario

Heywood-Wakefield

Baby and Doll Carriages, Bassinets and Cribs, Children's Furniture, Reed and Fibre Furniture, Porch and Lawn Suites, Cane and Wood Chairs, Cocoa Brush Door Mats and Cocoa Floor Matting

Prices of Butterick Patterns with the Deltor

Buy patterns at the nearest Butterick agency. But if this is not convenient, they will be sent, post free, from the Main Office of The Butterick Publishing Company, Butterick Building, New York, or the branch offices listed below, at the following prices:

No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.	No.	Cts.
425	25	5716	45	5776	35	5836	40	5896	45
5657	30	5717	45	5777	45	5837	30	5897	45
5658	45	5718	45	5778	40	5838	40	5898	45
5659	35	5719	45	5779	45	5839	35	5899	30
5660	45	5720	45	5780	30	5840	40	5900	40
5661	35	5721	45	5781	45	5841	35	5901	35
5662	45	5722	35	5782	45	5842	50	5902	45
5663	35	5723	45	5783	45	5843	45	5903	35
5664	45	5724	35	5784	45	5844	45	5904	25
5665	35	5725	40	5785	40	5845	35	5905	45
5666	45	5726	35	5786	45	5846	45	5906	50
5667	35	5727	40	5787	35	5847	30	5907	30
5668	45	5728	35	5788	45	5848	40	5908	35
5669	35	5729	45	5789	30	5849	45	5909	35
5670	45	5730	30	5790	45	5850	45	5910	50
5671	35	5731	45	5791	25	5851	40	5911	30
5672	45	5732	40	5792	45	5852	45	5912	45
5673	35	5733	45	5793	30	5853	35	5913	45
5674	45	5734	35	5794	45	5854	40	5914	30
5675	30	5735	45	5795	35	5855	35	5915	45
5676	45	5736	35	5796	45	5856	45	5916	45
5677	35	5737	45	5797	35	5857	35	5917	45
5678	45	5738	35	5798	50	5858	40	5918	45
5679	35	5739	45	5799	35	5859	35
5680	50	5740	35	5800	45	5860	40
5681	35	5741	50	5801	35	5861	35
5682	45	5742	35	5802	45	5862	45
5683	25	5743	45	5803	35	5863	35
5684	45	5744	25	5804	45	5864	45
5685	35	5745	45	5805	35	5865	45
5686	45	5746	30	5806	45	5866	45
5687	30	5747	45	5807	35	5867	35
5688	45	5748	30	5808	45	5868	45
5689	35	5749	45	5809	30	5869	30
5690	45	5750	35	5810	45	5870	45
5691	30	5751	35	5811	35	5871	45
5692	45	5752	35	5812	45	5872	45
5693	35	5753	35	5813	35	5873	35
5694	35	5754	35	5814	45	5874	40
5695	30	5755	50	5815	25	5875	30
5696	45	5756	30	5816	40	5876	45
5697	30	5757	50	5817	35	5877	35
5698	45	5758	35	5818	45	5878	40
5699	35	5759	45	5819	35	5879	30
5700	45	5760	30	5820	45	5880	45
5701	30	5761	45	5821	45	5881	35
5702	45	5762	35	5822	45	5882	45
5703	30	5763	45	5823	35	5883	35
5704	45	5764	35	5824	45	5884	45
5705	30	5765	45	5825	35	5885	30
5706	50	5766	35	5826	45	5886	45
5707	35	5767	45	5827	35	5887	35
5708	50	5768	35	5828	45	5888	45
5709	35	5769	45	5829	45	5889	35
5710	45	5770	30	5830	45	5890	40
5711	30	5771	50	5831	35	5891	45
5712	45	5772	30	5832	45	5892	40
5713	35	5773	45	5833	35	5893	35
5714	45	5774	35	5834	45	5894	45
5715	35	5775	45	5835	35	5895	35

TRANSFER DESIGNS

No.	Cts.
10297	30
10298	30
10299	30
10300	30
10301	40
10302	40
10303	30
10304	30
10305	40
10306	50
10307	30
10308	30
10309	30
10310	30
10311	40
10312	30
10313	30
10314	40
10315	30
10316	50
10317	40
10318	40
10319	50
10320	30
10321	40
10322	30
10324	50
10325	25
10326	30
10327	50
10328	30

We guarantee every Butterick Pattern to be correct in every detail

Every new Butterick Pattern contains a Deltor and the price of the Pattern includes the Deltor

CHICAGO, ILL., 2231-2249 South Park Avenue
ST. LOUIS, MO., 1201-3-5 Washington Avenue
BOSTON, MASS., 105 Chauncy Street
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., 350 Mission Street
ATLANTA, GA., 79-89 Marietta Street
TORONTO, CAN., 468 Wellington Street, West
WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, 319 Elgin Avenue

Plant
Kunderd Gladioli
THEY STAND SUPREME

WRITE for a copy of my 1925 Gladioli Catalog. It describes my new origination—Laciniated, and hundreds of the Ruffled, Plain-petaled and Primulinus Hybrid types of glads. Planting time is not far off. Don't face disappointment. Send for your catalog and then order promptly. Now is the time to buy gladioli.

A. E. KUNDERD
Box 49-C Goshen, Ind., U. S. A.
The Originator of the Ruffled and the Laciniated Gladioli

A Rainbow Garden of Gladiolus Flowers for $2.00

A Vaughan Bulb means a Flower Certain.

VAUGHAN'S Gladioli are grown on our own farms in Michigan where soil, climate and cultural skill born of forty years' experience unite to produce the finest of flowers and bulbs. Our Rainbow Collection for $2.00, postpaid anywhere in the United States, includes 50 bulbs of ten or more beautiful varieties, all 1-1¼ inch size. Vaughan's Gardening Illustrated, a seed catalog unlike others, containing 90 full color illustrations sent with each order, or mailed FREE on request.

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE
10 West Randolph St. CHICAGO
41 Barclay Street NEW YORK

Safe Milk
For Infants, Children, Invalids, Nursing Mothers
Avoid Imitations

PISO'S for COUGHS
Quick Relief! A pleasant effective syrup 35c and 60c sizes.
And externally, use PISO'S Throat and Chest Salve, 35c

THE BLACK FLEMINGS

Concluded from page 101

to herself. "Guest-rooms all fresh and airy, Sylvia's children and my children drawing others here for picnics on the shore—white dresses and the harvest moon coming up there across the sea—as we have seen it rise so many hundreds of times. I don't know which will be more wonderful, David, the long Summers with the hollyhocks and the twilights or the Winters with big fires and snow and company coming in, all cold and laughing——"

"Think of going abroad," she added, as for sheer pain David was silent. "I found myself thinking most often of getting home again, with all the trunks and excitement, to settle again in Wastewater."

"You really are going abroad, Gabrielle?" David asked, and to himself he added: "Honeymoon."

"Why, I don't know. To-night I don't feel as if I ever wanted to go outside these gates again; I feel as if I wanted to stay right here watching them put every brick into place. But—you would like to go abroad again some day, wouldn't you, David?" she continued.

"Oh, I? Yes, but that's different," the man answered, bringing himself into the conversation with a little self-consciousness. "Yes," David said slowly, frowning into space with narrowed eyes. "I think I may go, one of these days. I would like to do some painting in Florence——"

ANOTHER silence, so exquisitely painful, so poignantly sweet, that David felt he might stand so forever, watching her leaning in all her beauty and her fragrant youth against the grim old dial, looking sometimes at him and sometimes off to sea, with her glorious and thoughtful eyes.

"David, I got your message," she said, suddenly, in a voice oddly compounded of amusement and daring and a sort of fear.

"I'm glad," David answered mechanically. And then rousing himself he added in surprise, "What message?"

"On the little draft of the house-plans," Gabrielle answered serenely.

"Which plans were those, dear? The ones Jim sent to San Francisco?"

"He sent them to San Francisco too late, but they sent them on and we got them in Panama."

"Did I send a message with them?" David asked, not remembering it.

"Scribbled on the margin of one of them," Gabrielle nodded.

"A message—to you?" David said in surprise.

"Well, I read it so." The girl fell silent, and a robin with a warmly stained breast and a cocked head hopped near and nearer to them.

"I don't remember," David admitted after thought. It was obvious that she wanted him to remember it, but stupidly enough he seemed to have no recollection of it whatever.

"I think it must really have been to Jim Rucker," Gabrielle added innocently. "It began 'Dear Jim——'"

The blood rushed to David's face, and he laughed confusedly.

"I—did I scribble something to Jim on the margin? I remember that we sent the plans back and forth a good deal," he said, in a sort of helpless appeal.

"I'll show it to you," Gabrielle answered suddenly. She put her hand into her pocket and brought out a curled slip of paper that had been cut from the stiff oiled sheet of an architect's plans. "Here, David," she invited him. "Read it with me——"

And she flattened it upon the old dial and glanced at him over her shoulder.

David, hardly knowing what he did, let his eyes fall upon the penciled words.

"Dear Jim," he read. "No letter, but a message of her in one from Sylvia. Tell Mary I'm sorry I cut her dinner-party."

It was signed with David's own square, firm unmistakable "D."

"When I read that," said Gabrielle, looking up with her face close to his as he leaned at her shoulder, "I knew that the man I loved loved me. And after that I couldn't get home fast enough——"

"Gabrielle!" David said, trembling—and now she was in his arms. "Is it really so, dear? Dearest and loveliest of women, do you mean what you say?—do you know what you are doing? I'm not the brilliant sort of man that you might marry, dear—I'll never be rich, perhaps I'll never be successful——"

"Ah, David," the girl answered, facing him now with both hands upon his shoulders, as he held her with his arms lightly linked about her, "do let's not have any more misunderstandings and silences and half-said things at Wastewater. Tell me that you love me."

THERE was a milky Spring twilight in the old garden now; the sea had mysteriously blended itself with the sky and a mild great moon was rising before the last of the sun's radiance had fairly faded from the west. As the enervating warmth of the day died, delicious odors began to creep abroad in the dusk, and the plum-tree that had burst prematurely into bloom shone like a great pale bouquet against the gathering shadows.

There were smells of grass and earth, the sweet breathing of a world wearied after the unwonted hours of sunshine; there was the clean smell of new paint from the regions back of the farmhouse and barn. The birds were still now, and the very sea seemed hushed.

And to both David and Gabrielle, as they dreamed of the days to come, the golden days of responsibilities and joys unthinkable now, it seemed that no hour would eclipse this hour, when they two, children of the old place, found love among its ruins and planned there for a better future.

All the terrors, all the whispers, voices, fears and hates, all the secrets and conspiracies that had shadowed Wastewater in its old and arrogant days were gone. Roger with his vanity and arrogance was gone, Lily with her tears, Cecily frightened and saddened in her youth, Flora with her dark repression and thwarted love.

The old Sylvia was gone, too, and in her place was the much more human Mrs. Tom Fleming. And David was gone; never again would he be only the dreamy, detached painter, the amused older brother and audience for the younger folks, the philosopher who looked at love dispassionately. David was a man now, and the thought of having this woman for his wife, the thought of the future, when they two would make a home together, forever and forever, as long as life should last, made him feel as shaken, as awkward, as humble and ignorant as the boy he had never really been.

ALL gone. But there remained, steadfast, blue-eyed, sometimes all a mother, sometimes all a child, always simple, direct, loving, anxious for peace and harmony, this tawny-headed waif who had drifted in among the black Flemings so mysteriously; who had flourished upon neglect and injustice; who had borne sorrow and shame courageously and unfalteringly; and who was now, of them all, left to be mistress here, to begin the new history and the new line.

"David, we will go to Florence together in the Fall—if we can tear ourselves away from our new house, and you shall copy little Dizianis and Guardis!

"But we'll come back for a house-warming at Christmas time, David, and not miss one instant of the Spring!"

"Yes, my darling," David said.

"And we will have days in the city, David, buying towels and muffin-rings," the girl said rejoicingly, "and then you'll have an exhibition in April, and won't you be proud of your nice, furry wife, walking about among the pictures and listening to what people say!"

"I can hardly be prouder of her than I have always been, Gay."

Silence. Her right hand was upon his shoulder and his arm was strong and warm about her. David had only to bend his head to kiss the crown of her tawny, uncovered hair; the whole gracious fragrant woman was in his arms. Their left hands, clasped, rested upon the dial.

So resting, they obscured the blackened old face that had serenely marked the hours under thin Scotch suns, under more than a hundred passionate years of the hotter suns of the new world. They hid the old legend:

"Turn, Flemynge, spin agayne,
The crossit line's the kenter skein."

THE END

it means less work

SANI-FLUSH has made cleaning the toilet bowl easier than any other household task. Simply sprinkle Sani-Flush into the bowl—follow directions on the can—and flush. Then watch how quickly and thoroughly it does its wonderful work. The bowl is white and shining.

Sani-Flush removes every mark, stain and incrustation. It cleans the hidden, unhealthful trap. It destroys all foul odors. It leaves the entire toilet clean and sanitary.

Sani-Flush will not harm plumbing connections. Always keep a can handy in the bathroom.

Buy Sani-Flush at your grocery, drug or hardware store, or send 25c for a full-size can.

Sani-Flush

Reg U.S. Pat. Off.

Cleans Closet Bowls Without Scouring

THE HYGIENIC PRODUCTS CO.
Canton, Ohio

SWEETER SONG

and continuous singing, vigorous birds depend on correct feeding ■■A Geisler's Roller Seed and Maizena Biscuit

"The Scientifically Balanced Feed" is not ordinary bird seed. It keeps every bird in perfect health, turns silent birds into lovely, sweet toned singers and makes them sing all year round. At all druggists or direct from us postpaid per pkg. together with sample box Maizena Biscuit.. 35c

Mapc GEISLER BIRD CO. EST. 1888

120 Geisler Bldg., Omaha, Neb. or 50 Cooper Sq., New York City

Free bird book for dealer's name.

New—Different—Beautiful

"Star Guide to Good Roses" lists America's 100 best roses—first time such a list was ever published. 100 pages, 18 in full color. The short-cut to rose selection and rose satisfaction. New "Star Guide" describes roses as never before. It's free; write today!

"Star" Roses bloom or your money back.

THE CONARD-PYLE CO.

★ Formerly Conard & Jones Co. ★

STAR ROSE GROWERS Box 127, WEST GROVE, PA.

BARGAINS FRUITS-TREES ORNAMENTALS

Write today for my big catalog that saves you 50 per cent on nursery stock. Filled with information on planting and ways to increase your property several hundred dollars in value, by investing a few dollars in nursery stock.

3 Evergreens FREE

(3-yr. Seedlings) if you send 2 names of friends who own homes.

EARL FERRIS NURSERY CO.
680 Bridge St., Hampton, Iowa

NOW BUYS

8 Iris, or 100 Gladioli, or 3 Roses, or 5 Phlox, or 10 Blackberries, or 12 Concord Grapes, or 20 Red or Black Raspberries. Choice of any for $1, any six for $5.

SEEDS GROWN BY A WOMAN

Try my new collection of Petunias. Handsome sweet-scented flowers, delicate and gorgeous colors. Bloom all summer until frost.

For 10c I will send 5 liberal packages: white, pink, striped, blue, red. Makes a beautiful, attractive Flower Garden.

GUARANTEED TO PLEASE

Order today, send 10c to help pay postage and packing and receive the 5 new varieties of Petunias and my bargain Seed Book.

Charlotte M. Haines
Dept. 734 Rockford, Illinois

HOPE AHEAD FOR RURAL HOMES

Continued from page 20

"As one goes around the island he can not help but see the great number of improvements that have been made," reported one of the canvassers. "On fourteen plantations visited, there were twenty-six new homes, one hundred and seventy-one families who had made improvements of some kind since 1923, and nine hundred and ninety-eight improvements made."

A scale for judging improvements was worked out, giving fifty points for a new house complete, ten for a garden, ten for whitewashing, ten for a fence, ten for fruit-trees planted, and ten for new furniture. A prize of three dollars was given to the family which had made the greatest number of improvements, and this went to a former student of Penn School. A fifth-grade girl got a second prize, and a local doctor set the island a good example by screening his porch, and coming to report that he had built "a mosquito house."

The Better Home built from the plans drawn by the chairman was a six-room cottage, the third building in a model rural unit of schoolhouse, industrial shop, teachers' cottage and girls' practise house, adjoining the Penn School grounds. The boys who built the Better Home, under the supervision of their instructors in carpentry, proudly used some of the old lumber originally used in the first school for negroes in the South. The boys also planted the grounds, setting out not only Cherokee roses and flower beds, but eleven kinds of vegetables, a fig-tree and a pecan tree. Most of the furniture and all of the hangings, bed linen and towels were made by the students, as were the rag rugs, and the layette in the pretty nursery.

"To have just what Island housewives could afford," was the rule in furnishing the house.

Surely no demonstration evoked more voluble expressions of admiration than were voiced by the negro citizens of St. Helena Island, who came eagerly and with shining faces up the flower-bordered walk, past the Cherokee roses at each side of the porch, through the hospitable door of the Better Home.

"Sho, dis is a sight fo' eyes ter see," cried an Island grandmother in the bathroom, as her eyes rested for the first time upon a white porcelain tub.

The convenient kitchen, very cheery with its canary-colored walls and its blue linoleum, drew exclamations from the woman, as did the sunny nursery with its yellow geese all but quacking on the unbleached muslin curtains. But the men were interested most of all in the barrel chairs and the cretonne-covered packing-boxes that served as bureaus. Men and women alike were interested in the house budget, showing the low price for which the home and its furnishings had been obtained.

"We'll have a home like this ourselves some day," was a sentence often heard among the departing guests.

"ARE the people of the rural sections and the villages really interested in the subject of better homes?"

"They are," comes the answer from Conway, Arkansas, winner of a third prize in the demonstration of communities of ten thousand or under.

They proved it by making the demonstration their own, doing all they could to aid the plans of the chairman, Mrs. C. D. Turner, the home demonstration agent, and her committee.

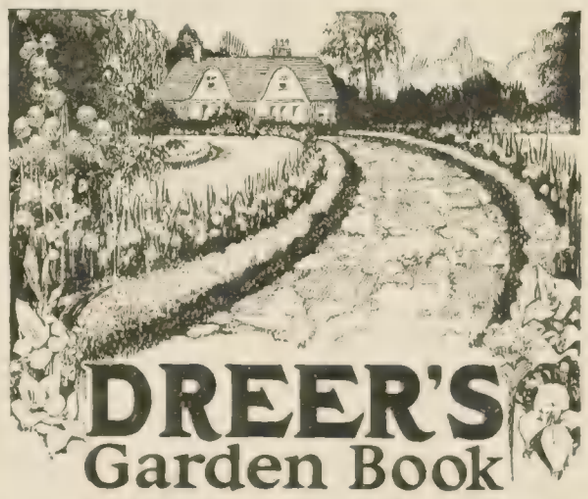
"This demonstration will show that a person of small means can live in a well-built, well-equipped, beautiful home," was the high promise set for it ahead of time.

And it did show just that. The Conway Better Home deserved every letter of the three adjectives promised for it. It was well built, it was well equipped and it was

Concluded on page 105

For all wood finishes

O-Cedar Polish



It cleans as it polishes

COLOR IT NEW WITH "DIAMOND DYES"

Beautiful home dyeing and tinting is guaranteed with Diamond Dyes. Just dip in cold water to tint soft, delicate shades, or boil to dye rich, permanent colors. Each 15-cent package contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint lingerie, silks, ribbons, skirts, waists, dresses, coats, stockings, sweaters, draperies, coverings, hangings, everything new.

Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—and tell your druggist whether the material you wish to color is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods.

DREER'S Garden Book

ANY woman can make her garden the envy of the neighborhood if she has Dreer's 1925 Garden Book for a guide. It contains explicit cultural directions as well as a complete list of the best Flower and Vegetable Seeds, Lawn Grass, Roses, Hardy Perennials, Dahlias, etc.

A copy mailed free if you mention this publication

HENRY A. DREER

1306 Spring Garden Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

SPECIAL OFFER of TESTED SEEDS

If you write now for our 1925 Catalogue we will send the famous HENDERSON Collection of seeds—one packet each of Ponderosa Tomato, Big Boston Lettuce, White Tipped Scarlet Radish, Henderson's Invincible Asters, Henderson's Brilliant Mixture Poppies, Giant Waved Spencer Sweet Peas.

HOW TO GET THEM

Simply state where you saw this advertisement, enclose ten cents for mailing the Catalogue, "Everything for the Garden," and the seeds will be sent without extra charge.

EMPTY ENVELOPE COUNTS FOR CASH

These tested seeds come in a coupon envelope which, emptied and returned, will be accepted as a 25-cent cash payment on any order amounting to $1.00 or more. Don't delay; write at once.

1925 Catalogue Now Ready

Bigger and better than ever, the most beautiful and complete horticultural publication of the year, a book of

208 Pages

16 color pages, 72 pages in Rotogravure and over 1000 half-tone illustrations direct from photographs of results from Henderson's seeds—the finest Catalogue we have ever issued.

PETER HENDERSON & CO 35 & 37 COURTLANDT ST. NEW YORK CITY

Are You Keeping Up With Other Women

—or letting gray hair make you look old?

Thoughtful women always keep themselves looking years younger than they really are!

Gray hair, however handsome, denotes advancing age.

We all know the advantages of a youthful appearance.

Your hair is your charm. It makes or mars the face. When your hair fades, turns gray and looks streaked, just a few applications of Sage Tea and Sulphur enhances its appearance a hundred-fold.

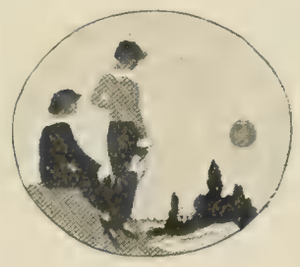
Don't stay gray! Look young! Either prepare the recipe at home or get from any drug store a bottle of "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," which is merely the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients. Thousands of folks rely upon this ready-to-use preparation, because it darkens the hair beautifully; besides, no one can possibly tell, as it darkens so naturally and evenly.

You simply moisten a sponge or soft brush with it, drawing this through the hair, taking one small strand at a time. By morning the gray hair disappears; after another application or two its natural color is restored and it becomes thick, glossy and lustrous, and you appear years younger.

WYETH'S
Sage and Sulphur

Are You Clever Enough To Save This Money?

Clever women have learned to redecorate their homes now—in the off-season—before the spring rush begins. You will be surprised to find how much money can be saved this way. Just ask your decorator to show you the exact figures.



* * *

If you are interested in a comprehensive resume of the great historical periods of decoration, send ten cents in currency or stamps for "Walls and their Decorations" by Major Arthur de Bles, international authority on decorations.

WALLPAPER MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION
of the United States
461 Eighth Avenue New York City

At any store that displays this sign you will find good wallpapers, competent workmanship and fair prices.

TOURISTS ACCOMODATED

Concluded from page 15

for remedial legislation before very long.

Meantime the situation presents unlimited opportunities to the clean, honest home woman. From flower-garden and clean front steps to sanitary back yard, from shining front hall with bright linoleum on the floor to the daintiest top bedroom, she can make her house an oasis. Her little home may be tiny, but if it offers fresh air and clean bedcovers, plenty of towels and hot water, neat rugs on shining floors, spotless curtains, a glistening bathroom, a bright garden, and—above all things—the flower of true hospitality, the average tourist will gladly pay hotel rates and will depart blessing his hostess.

There are dozens of little kindnesses a woman can show her guests which they will never forget. And it is thus that a thriving business is built up in this friendliest of all industries.

The pitcher of ice-water or cold well water, for instance, in the dog days; the offer of a cool sitting-room down-stairs on hot evenings; the little open fire in chill weather; the extra towel or bedcover brought to the door with good wishes for a comfortable night; even the hot broth and crackers carried to the room at bedtime—these are the inexpensive, motherly little attentions which all travelers delight in, and which enable a hostess to charge more for her rooms with perfect satisfaction on the part of her guests.

BUT—enough for the moderate-priced lodging. We are ready now to consider the third branch of this teething young industry—that which feeds the motorist under the same roof that shelters him.

This undertaking, because it involves the complicated problem of supplying meals to a transient public, should be approached with caution. And it must be placed on an "order-in-advance" basis. Only in very large inns or small hotels with refrigerating plants can a proprietor safely cater to the "drop-in" motorist. For the home woman to attempt it is to court disaster.

The order-in-advance plan, however, has made and is making this branch of the industry a very profitable one for numbers of women with large country homes. One of the most remarkable examples of success is that of two charming, conservative women (a widow and her spinster sister) living in their luxurious old home near a famous battle-field. These women one Summer threw open their house to a few friends, motorists from a near-by city, who needed accommodations for a day and night while visiting the battle-field.

That first experiment proved so successful and these paying guests clamored so for permission to send others that the two women never gave up the work. To-day their home is crowded to capacity whenever they wish it to be.

No weekly rates are ever given there. Everything is on a strictly transient basis, two dollars and fifty cents a plate being charged for dinner without lodging, and thirteen dollars a night being the rate for two persons in one room, with dinner and breakfast. The house is a very large one, with three floors, and there are seven bedrooms which can be rented.

To run this establishment no regular servant is employed; first, because good men servants are very difficult to get in that section; second, because the State law limits the number of hours a day a woman servant can be on duty. Catering to a transient trade means irregularity of hours. It means working fourteen hours one day and eight the next. So these sisters have no regular servant except a cleaning-woman who comes every day and works by the hour. One sister does all the cooking and the other does all the serving, except when the house is crowded, when they engage a neighbor to help serve and wash the dishes.

We come now to the fourth and most elaborate phase of the business of roadside hospitality—that of providing de luxe accommodations for the wealthy motorist in a setting so picturesque, so rich with historic memories, that it is an adventure even to stop there overnight. One woman, whose inn in a New England college town is famous to-day, had the vision—years ago—to detect the sentimental streak that exists in the average motorist and to believe she could cater to it. She moved to an old college town and leased the most famous house in the locality, a beautiful place, hoary with tradition. At first she took the overflow from the college and an occasional tourist, charging only five dollars a night for lodgings and breakfast for two persons. But she soon became dissatisfied with this, and then it was that she conceived the idea of providing de luxe accommodations.

Borrowing some money, she procured a few fine pieces of antique mahogany. She succeeded in persuading a dealer to lend her a number of other pieces in exchange for free storage. With this start she began to convert her simple rooms, one by one, into luxurious ones, as she did so advancing her prices to twenty dollars a night for two.

She concentrated first on a certain famous room known as the Governor's Room. This was to be her leader, her drawing card, and she spared no pains in restoring to it the flavor of the Colonial period when its first famous occupant was helping to create American history. The effect of the room was almost startling. Stepping into that beautiful, stately old chamber was like stepping back through the centuries.

SUCH was the adventure this hostess had to offer the wealthy, jaded tourists motoring past. And though for a few days she held her breath for fear she had laid too much stress on historical atmosphere, the results soon justified her experiment. The room was more than a success—it was a sensation.

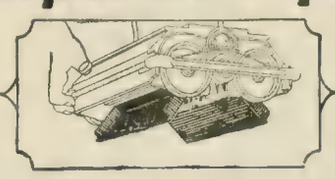
After this, naturally, the transformation of the rest of the house followed quickly. Every one of her rooms was made reminiscent of the romantic past and every one was given a striking name. In all, her house when full to capacity brought her—and is bringing her to-day—a nightly income of from one hundred and fifteen dollars to one hundred and twenty dollars.

These rates may seem exorbitant. But for the money she gives accommodations unique in the history of inn management. What she offers is all of the very best, regardless of cost. Her sheets are extra large, so that they tuck in at the foot of the bed and turn over at the top. She furnishes extra-heavy bath-towels—these spell luxury to most men—and quantities of other towels. There is always plenty of covering on the beds and extra coverings available. She uses only the finest of hair mattresses, down quilts and pillows, with four pillows on each bed, two hard and two soft. She is gradually replacing all her beds with four-posters, as these are, in her opinion, the greatest drawing card any inn can have. The breakfast is served always in the guest's room, on a Colonial table, with a linen spread thrown across it. It is brought in on a handsome tray fitted with attractive china. And she sends her guests away with a carefully planned box lunch.

A bowl of flowers is always standing on the table in each room, and as these flowers come from her garden they cost her practically nothing. Yet guests comment on them with delight.

Any woman, this successful proprietor declares, who will give the public de luxe accommodations in a right location and setting can fill her house. But the choice of a locality for its historical interest or because of a large college or other attraction for wealthy travelers, the choice of an adequate house and of an attractive name for it are most important. The location should be romantic, the house old and picturesque (though an attractive modern house can be used) and the name easy to remember.

All over the United States inns and taverns are springing up, one by one, along our motor highways. On all our California motor roads are appearing taverns reminiscent of Spanish and Indian days. And throughout the South, wherever the soft-voiced touring car can make its way, newer and better roadside inns are becoming the rule. Many an old plantation home, long closed, is now opened and restored to the splendor of its antebellum days, for the benefit of history-loving, luxury-seeking motorists—motorists armed with cameras, eager imaginations, and real zest for the adventures of the road.



Clean Rugs and Carpets

WOMEN who take pride in keeping their homes immaculate are devoted users of Bissell sweepers. There is no substitute for a Bissell for the everyday sweeping. A few minutes' use and the rugs and carpets are speckless. Crumbs, lint, threads, litter, that accumulates every day in the best kept house, vanish like magic before it.

The Bissell saves work and time. It does not rough the hands or strain the back. It runs quietly, efficiently on its perfected "Cyco" Ball Bearings. And it lasts. Ten to fifteen years is the average life of a Bissell. Often longer.

"Cyco" Ball Bearing Bissells at around $6. Other grades for less. Play-size (toy) Bissells for a few dimes. At furniture, hardware, housefurnishing and department stores. Booklet on request.

BISSELL
CARPET SWEEPER CO., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.
Carpet Sweeper

Empties with a thumb pressure

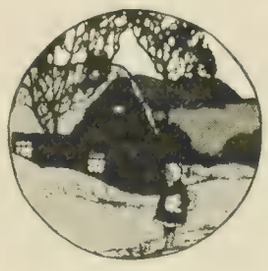
Milder Musterole for Small Children

Thousands of mothers tell us they would not be without Children's Musterole, the new and milder form of good old Musterole especially prepared for use on babies and small children.

In the dead of night, when they are awakened by the warning, croupy cough, they rub the clean, white ointment gently over the child's throat and chest and then go back to bed.



Children's Musterole, like regular Musterole, penetrates the skin with a warming tingle and goes quickly to the seat of the trouble.

It does not blister like the old-fashioned mustard plaster and it is not messy to apply.

Made from pure oil of mustard, it takes the kink out of stiff necks, makes sore throats well, stops croupy coughs and colds. In jars, 35c.

The Musterole Co., Cleveland, Ohio

CHILDREN'S MUSTEROLE
WILL NOT BLISTER
MILD
BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

HOPE AHEAD FOR RURAL HOMES

Concluded from page 103

beautiful—and three thousand eight hundred dollars covered the cost of the house and its furnishings.

"But could a person do any work in such a pretty place as this?" demanded one sadly cynical housewife, who had the fixed belief that the atmosphere of labor must necessarily be ugly.

"Could she!" exclaimed the committee, and led her in triumph to the kitchen with its built-in cabinets and ironing-board, and its wise juxtaposition of table, sink, cupboards and stove. "Of course, she couldn't do as much work here as in an old-fashioned, inconvenient house," admitted the committee, "because there isn't as much work to do."

"The influence of this demonstration in home owning and building will be far-reaching," Mrs. Turner reported to the national headquarters of Better Homes in America.

YOU couldn't really call Coxton, Kentucky, another third prize-winner, a rural community. As a matter of fact, it is only a coal camp, with a population of one thousand, fifty per cent. negro. All the property is owned by the Melcroft Coal Company, but the women's club didn't consider that any reason why better homes shouldn't prevail.

"We want to give a Better Home demonstration in one of your houses," Miss Flora Williams, the chairman, informed the company.

"Go ahead!" said the company cordially, "we are heartily in favor of it."

"Then you'll fix up the house for us?" asked Miss Williams.

So the company, acting upon suggestions from the women's club, had the exterior of the Better Home painted white, and the interior repaired, plastered and painted a light fawn color, with white woodwork. The committee did the rest. The four-room cottage was furnished and equipped according to the Better Home rules of comfort, convenience and beauty, from its front porch, with its big oak swing, straight through to its back stoop. Women in coal camps sometimes get a bit discouraged in their efforts to beautify their homes, and not without reason. But none in Coxton could remain discouraged when they saw the transformation that had been wrought in the Better Home.

"NOW guess what the repairs and the furnishings cost," said the committee.

An electric iron was given the "guesser" who came within a reasonable distance of the correct price of $1,398.55. Almost every one guessed far too high. The real value of the guessing contest, as the committee cleverly judged, was in the fact that it drove home the truth that comfort, convenience and beauty within the home are in the reach of all.

This account might go on and on, through all the pages of THE DELINEATOR. All over the country, in every State in the Union, rural communities and villages and little towns held Better Homes demonstrations similar to those recorded here. In spite of all the difficulties that confronted them they went quietly and mightily to work to prove that no part of the United States exists, no matter how remote or how small, in which American families, whatever their incomes, can not have homes that are convenient, comfortable and beautiful. The rural home, the village home, the home in the little town, has waked up to its own possibilities.

And so the simple story of their Better Homes in America demonstrations and their far-reaching effects becomes a mighty epic not yet complete.

And what one farm woman wistfully wrote to the headquarters of Better Homes in America becomes a prophetic fact for the nation:

"Maybe there's hope ahead for rural and village homes!"

Your Daughter

How much of her life must be spent in filling oil lamps, scrubbing clothes and pumping water?

None.

For our generation has made a great contribution to human progress: it has transferred to electricity the burdensome work that women used to do. Your daughter entered the world at a fortunate time.

On many of the motors that make hard housework easy you find this monogram. It stands for General Electric Company, a nation-wide organization which produces apparatus and machines that have made electricity into a servant that works for all.

GENERAL ELECTRIC

Mother Nature—and the Silver-haired

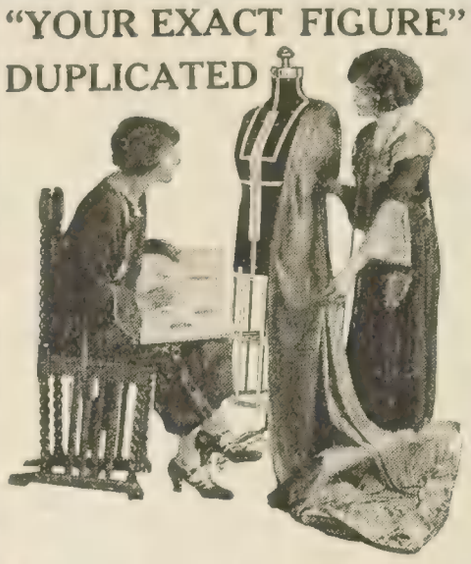
THE heritage of advanced years should not be sickness, constipation, indisposition, biliousness, headaches. That is an old-fashioned idea. In this generation people "grow old gracefully," retaining natural buoyancy, spirit and vigor of health by avoiding defective elimination. The grandmother of NOW dances with the youngest of them. People JUST REFUSE TO GROW OLD—and that's the right idea.

But time takes it's inevitable toll. More than ever, then you require the sustaining hand of Mother Nature. Her ways are wise—safe—harmless.

For over thirty years Nature's Remedy [NR Tablets] has helped to keep the flame of health akindle in those who have passed the meridian of life—for it is MOTHER NATURE herself, expressed in terms of vegetable correctives.

All Druggists Sell The Dainty 25c. Box.

NR JUNIORS—Little NRs. The same Nature's Remedy in one-third doses, candy-coated. For children and adults. Send stamp for liberal sample and copy of "Well and Happy."



A. H. LEWIS MED. CO.,
Dept. 4-B, St. Louis, Mo.

WANT WORK AT HOME?
Earn $18 to $60 a week RETOUCHING photos. Men or women. No selling or canvassing. We teach you, guarantee employment and furnish WORKING OUTFIT FREE. Limited offer. Write today. ARTCRAFT STUDIOS, Dept. K, 3900 Sheridan Road, Chicago.

Kill The Hair Root
My method prevents the hair from growing again. Easy, painless, harmless. No scars. Booklet free. Write today enclosing 3 stamps. We teach beauty culture. D. J. Mahler, 433A Mahler Park, Providence, R. I.

DRESS MAKING MADE EASY

"YOUR EXACT FIGURE" DUPLICATED

Makes Home Dressmaking a Pleasure and a Satisfaction

YOU have the satisfaction of making perfect fitting dresses with individuality over an Acme Dress Form. With it you can easily and accurately reproduce the most stylish fitting dresses.

It makes fitting the easiest part of dressmaking. It's as necessary as a sewing machine.

ADJUSTABLE AND COLLAPSIBLE

The Neck, Shoulders, Bust, Waist, Hips, and Skirt are each independently adjustable to any required measurements. More than a hundred independent "combination adjustments" so that it will exactly reproduce any desired size, style or figure. When not in use it COLLAPSES to half its size like illustration below.

$3 WILL BRING THIS ADJUSTABLE AND COLLAPSIBLE Acme DRESS FORM INTO YOUR HOME

SPECIAL SALE OFFER

In order to encourage Home Dressmaking and help you to economically reproduce the most stylish fashions shown in this magazine, we are manufacturing 25,000 improved Acme Forms to be sold on

Easy Payment Terms

Remit $3 and we will send you our guaranteed $15 Acme Collapsible Dress Form. Pay the balance of $12 at only $3 per month.

Ten Days' Trial

If unsatisfactory return form and we'll gladly refund your $3.

Latest Style 1925 Improved Model

Indispensable for Home Dressmaking

More Than 300,000 Satisfied Users

An Acme Form is guaranteed to last a lifetime. It is adjustable to any size and style change. It will enable you to reproduce quickly and easily all the latest fashions. You can have good-looking dresses and be the envy of your friends.

Take advantage of this Special Sale offer and send your order today.

MAIL COUPON TODAY

ACME SALES CO., Dept. 3-R
380 Throop Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Gentlemen:—Send me at once full illustrated catalog with detailed information, or better still, I enclose $3 for immediate shipment of an Acme on "10 DAYS' TRIAL" AND 'EASY PAYMENT TERMS."

Name.....

Address.....

.....

WRITE TODAY FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOG

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 26

5915—5878—For this coat, which may have a frock of the lining silk to make an ensemble costume or be worn separately, use soft twills, light-weight short-nap fabrics, heavy silk crêpe or crêpe satin. It has a straight lower edge, a novelty tucked collar and cuffs, a pocket on the lining and a choice of a tucked band at the bottom. The one-piece slip-over frock has a detachable collar and cuffs. Lower edge of coat 44½ inches.

36 bust requires 2⅞ yards 54-inch soft twills and 3 yards 39-inch printed silk crêpe. Costume for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5918—Striped wash silks, pongee, cotton crêpe or cotton broadcloth with plain to match make a smart slip-over dress. The straight skirt is joined to a long body. One may use printed silk crêpe with plain to match, plain silk Canton crêpe, wash silks, light-weight flannel with same material in contrast, etc.

36 bust requires 2¾ yards 32 or 35 inch soft striped wash silk. Lower edge 48 inches.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5917—5800—10138—Use twills, cashmere suitings or kasha for the coat and two-piece lower part, and heavy silk Canton crêpe or crêpe de Chine for the long upper part of this narrow slip-over frock. The coat, which can be worn in wrap-around or straight-line style, may have puffed or plain sleeves. The dress has a close-fitting hipline. The embroidery is effective.

5917 5800

19 years or 36 bust requires 5⅛ yards 39-inch satin (including lower part of dress, etc.) and 2 yards 39-inch silk crêpe.

Coat is for ladies 36 and 38 bust, also misses 16 to 20 years; dress for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses 5865—5498—5873—Use tweeds, mannish suitings, etc., for this coat, which fits snugly at the hipline, and the two-piece skirt with an inverted plait at the center front and back. The slip-over blouse of silk broadcloth, heavy crêpe de Chine, etc., may have a detachable collar and cuffs and a shoulder yoke. Lower edge, plaits out, 1¾ yard.

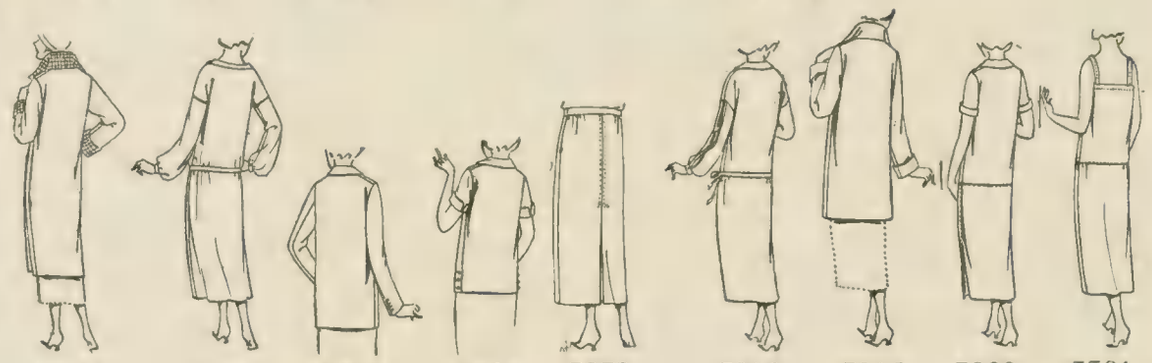
36 bust and 38 hip require 3⅜ yards 54-inch tweed and 2⅜ yards 35-inch silk.

Coat and skirt are for ladies 33 to 44 bust, and 35 to 49½ hip, coat also for misses; blouse for ladies 33 to 42 bust, also misses.

5916—5880—Use ribbed wools, etc., for the three-quarter-length coat and the straight wrap-around lower part of this slip-over dress. The long upper part is of plain silk crêpe. The coat may have a set-in pocket or a pocket on the lining. The dress has a close-fitting hipline. Lower edge 43 inches.

36 bust requires 3 yards 54-inch soft twill and 1¾ yard 39-inch silk crêpe.

Coat is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses; dress for ladies 32 to 44 bust.



5913—5508—5581—You may use homespun, kasha, etc., for this double-breasted coat and the step-in three-piece skirt of the wrap-around type. The coat is new and can be used as a separate coat, has an inverted plait at the back. The slip-over blouse of heavy crêpe de Chine or tub silks, has an attached or detachable collar and cuffs.

5913 5508

36 bust and 38 hip require 4½ yards 54-inch homespun and 2¼ yards 35-inch silk. Lower edge of coat, plait out, 54 inches; of skirt 43½ inches.

Coat is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses; blouse and skirt for ladies 32 to 44 bust and 35 to 47½ hip.

5915 5878 5865 5498 5873 5918 5916 5880 5581

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 27

5818—For an ensemble wardrobe you can use the same coat with different silk or wool frocks planned to go with it. For this one-piece slip-over dress you may use soft twills, cashmere dress goods, wool rep matching the coat and trimmed with faille silk matching the lining in color.

36 bust requires 2⅜ yards 54-inch kasha. Lower edge 44½ inches.

The dress is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5863—5724—10318—A tunic blouse and a costume slip faced with the same wool as the coat make a second frock for the ensemble wardrobe. This slip-over tunic blouse may be shorter and has inverted dart tucks or shirrings at the shoulders. The collar and cuffs may be detachable. The embroidery is effective.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 39-inch crêpe satin, 2⅝ yards 32 to 35 inch material for slip, and ½ yard 54-inch ribbed wool for facing slip. Lower edge of slip 44 inches.

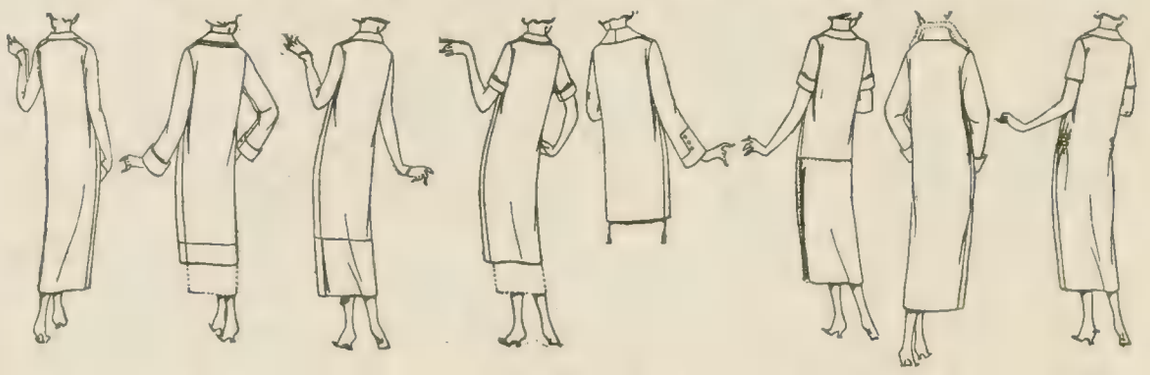
Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5843—5880—Use ribbed wool, etc., for the coat and the straight wrap-around lower part, etc., of the slip-over dress. The long upper part is of plain silk crêpe in a lighter shade of the same color or contrasting or self color. The hipline is close fitting.

36 bust requires 3½ yards 54-inch ribbed wool (including lower part of dress, etc.), 1¾ yard 39-inch silk crêpe. Lower edge 43 ins.

Coat is for ladies 32 to 44 bust; dress for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5871—5862—A long-body dress with a wrap-around lower part of the coat-fabric makes a third frock for the ensemble wardrobe. The coat collar and front facing of the lining fabric are detachable. The narrow slip-over dress is close-fitting at the hipline. Lower edge of coat 45½ inches; of dress 44 inches.



36 bust requires 3⅛ yards 54-inch ribbed wool (including lower part of dress, etc.) and 2¾ yards 39-inch silk crêpe (including facing and collar).

Coat is for ladies 33 to 46 bust, also misses; dress for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5846—5882—This full-length coat of cashmere coatings, twills, ribbed wools, ribbed silks or kasha trimmed with narrow fur banding and novelty braid is lined with the same printed silk as the frock. For the one-piece slip-over dress use printed heavy crêpe de Chine or silk crêpe or broché crêpe satin with plain.

36 bust requires 3 yards 54-inch soft twill and 3⅛ yards 39-inch printed silk. Lower edge of coat 49½ inches; of dress 46 inches.

Coat is for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses; dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5818 5871 5862 5863 5843 5880 5846 5882

To Be Prettier Than Your Picture

By Mme. Maree

Your artist photographer has his chemicals and retouching brush to take off all the wrinkles, lines, spots and blemishes and thus work up a portrait that is perfect. But you can do even better than that by making yourself naturally just as beautiful or even more so than the artist can make you. And here are some beauty secrets to enable you to do so.

First the Hair

To make each hair alive, to stand out alone, and collectively to make all your hair look like a crown of glory you can get an ounce of beta-quinol from the drug store, mix it with a pint of water and half a pint of rubbing alcohol. Rub this mixture into your scalp and your hair will fairly gleam with beauty.

If there is much dandruff wash it out once a week with eggol crystals. The beta-quinol will cost 65 cents and the eggol 25 cents, but they will last several months.

For a Perfect Complexion

Each night and morning you should rub into your face all over as much of some simple creamy mixture as the skin will absorb. I would suggest that you get two ounces of eptol for 65 cents at the drug store, mix it with two tablespoons glycerine and a pint of water. It makes a thick, heavy cream of satiny feel and wonderful perfume. It fills up the skin cells, plumps it out, smooths the wrinkles and tightens the pores. Your skin looks as smooth and delicate as an infant's. It is marvelous and acts as a skin food.

Rub Off Blackheads

On a cloth dipped in hot water sprinkle some neroxin powder. Rub this over the blackheads and they instantly dissolve, not a trace left. Your druggist will sell you an ounce of neroxin for 65 cents and it will last a long time. You thus won't be tempted to squeeze out the blackheads. It is a dangerous practice.

Remove the Blemishes

The best way to bleach out muddiness, redness, blue and red lines, or oily skin is with an application of zintone. This you can get at the drug store for 65 cents an ounce. Mix one ounce with two tablespoons glycerine. It makes a large bottleful. Put it on liberally over the face, neck, arms and hands and you will soon have a lovely skin all of one shade of natural flesh color. It is a beautiful effect.

The Call of Spring

That you may be sure to look your prettiest when the warmth and sunshine of summer arrive, if your druggist cannot supply you, send the price of what you want to me and I will have it mailed postpaid direct from the makers. Address Madame Maree, 752 Thompson Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Coughs-Colds

IT IS not what we say, but what our patrons say of Vapo-Cresolene that conveys the strongest evidence of its merits.

Vapo-Cresolene Est. 1879 "Used while you sleep"

Our best advertising is from the unsolicited statements of those who have used Vapo-Cresolene. For coughs, colds, bronchitis, influenza, whooping cough, spasmodic croup, asthma and catarrh.

Send for our testimonial and descriptive booklet 70 C

Sold by Druggists

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO.
62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Bldg., Montreal, Canada

PISO'S for coughs

Quick Relief! A pleasant effective syrup 35c and 60c sizes. And externally, use PISO'S Throat and Chest Salve, 35c

Beauty Of Hair and Skin Preserved By Cuticura

Soap to Cleanse Ointment to Heal

Beauty

A Gleamy Mass of Hair

35c "Danderine" does Wonders for Any Girl's Hair

Girls! Try this! When combing and dressing your hair, just moisten your hair-brush with a little "Danderine" and brush it through your hair. The effect is startling! You can do your hair up immediately and it will appear twice as thick and heavy—a mass of gleamy hair, sparkling with life and possessing that incomparable softness, freshness and luxuriance.

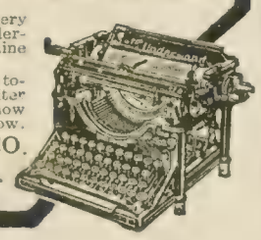
While beautifying the hair "Danderine" is also toning and stimulating each single hair to grow thick, long and strong. Hair stops falling out and dandruff disappears. Get a bottle of "Danderine" at any drug or toilet counter and just see how healthy and youthful your hair appears after this delightful, refreshing dressing.

BOURJOIS
JAVA

The Wonderful French Face Powder
A TINT FOR EVERY TYPE

DEMAND it at your druggist's. Send 10 cents for samples of JAVA* with either Ashes of Roses* Rouge, dark and rich, or Rouge Mandarine*, light and bright.

A BOURJOIS & CO., INC. *Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.
PARIS 37½ West 34th Street, NEW YORK



$3 DOWN BRINGS YOU GENUINE UNDERWOOD TYPEWRITER

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL. Try it, test it yourself, then decide.

EASY MONTHLY PAYMENTS. So small you will not notice them.

5 YEAR GUARANTEE with every Shipman-Ward factory rebuilt Underwood, a late model, perfect machine that will give you years of service.

FREE BOOK OF FACTS. Write today, inside story about typewriter business, typewriter rebuilding, how we do it, our wonderful offer. Act now.

SHIPMAN WARD MFG. CO.
3993 Shipman Bldg.
Montrose and Ravenswood Aves.
CHICAGO, ILL.

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 28

5859—Light-weight flannel or wool jersey with detachable or attached collar and cuffs of same material in contrast or white piqué, rep or linen, makes a smart two-piece frock. It has a slip-over blouse and a straight skirt plaited in clusters, joined to an underbody.

12 years requires 1¼ yard 54-inch plain flannel, ⅞ yard 54-inch novelty flannel.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5817—5557—The one-piece slip-over dress of her ensemble costume has a yoke and short sleeve cut in one piece, and a cluster of plaits at each side of front and back. Her hat of corded silk, satin, etc., has a four-gored crown.

12 years requires 2⅜ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine for dress.

Dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15; hat for girls 2 to 12 years.

5861—5817—5557—You may use kasha, broadcloth or twills with braid, or soft pile fabrics or cashmere coatings with stitching for this coat. For an ensemble, line it with the silk to match the dress (described above). Her hat has a four-gored crown.

12 years requires 1⅝ yard 54-inch kasha and 4⅛ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine for coat-lining and dress.

Coat and dress are for juniors and girls 8 to 15; hat for girls 2 to 12 years.

5853—10312—Embroidery is an attractive trimming for this one-piece slip-over frock. Use soft twills, serge, wool crêpe, flannel or wool poplin with same material in a color to harmonize with embroidery for the bound buttonholes and sleeve-trimmings.

12 years requires 1½ yard 54-inch soft twill.

Dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15 years.

5857—Light-weight twills, serge, light-weight flannel or wool crêpe with the same material in contrast are suitable for this two-piece dress with a tunic and one-piece slip. Or use heavy silk crêpe, or plaid or checked wool with plain to match.

12 years requires 1¾ yard 54-inch soft twill.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

5837—For this slip-over dress and separate bloomers use pin-check gingham or light-weight cotton prints with plain colored cotton to match or white cotton poplin or linen; or use colored fine cotton crêpe with white, etc. It has a straight lower edge and the collar and cuffs may be detachable.

5 years requires 2½ yards 32-inch gingham.

The dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5867—This suit has a jacket with detachable vest and cuffs, and straight trousers. Use satin, pongee, velveteen, chambray, linen, linen-fihished cottons, crash, gabardine or tweeds with piqué or rep vest and collar.

5 years requires 1⅝ yard 35-inch linen and ⅝ yard 35-inch piqué.

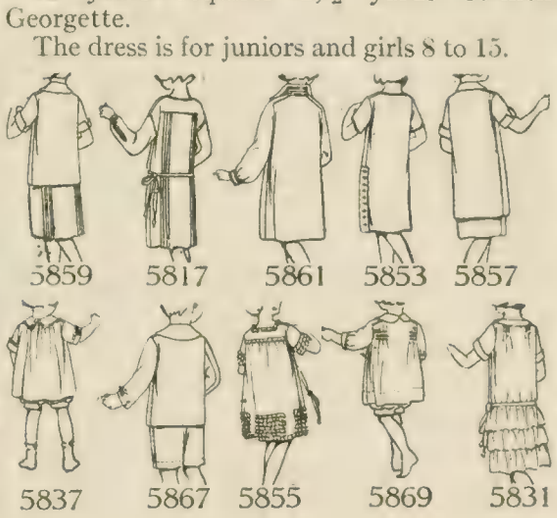
The suit is for boys 3 to 10 years.

5855—The yoke with a square neck and frills make this one-piece slip-over dress very dainty for parties. It has a straight lower edge. Use Georgette, crêpe de Chine, net, taffeta, organdy or cotton voile with ends and loops of ribbon in contrast and ribbon flowers the same color as the dress.

7 years requires 1⅞ yard 39-inch Georgette.

The dress is for girls 2 to 12 years.

5869—10870—This adorable slip-over frock with a straight lower edge has the epaulet shoulder and attached or detachable collar and cuffs. The bloomers are separate. One may omit smocking. Use crêpe de Chine, pongee, light-weight wool jersey, chambray, cotton pongee with contrasting color, etc.



5 years requires 2⅜ yards 32-inch chambray.

The dress is for little girls 2 to 6 years.

5831—Use Georgette, crêpe de Chine, chiffon, cotton voile, cotton Georgette or organdy with a ribbon girdle and flower for this slip-over frock. It has a ruffled straight skirt joined at a low waistline and the collar and cuffs may be detachable.

13 years requires 2½ yards 39-inch Georgette.

The dress is for juniors and girls 8 to 15.

You Cannot Afford to be Gray

PRESENT day hair dressing makes no allowance for Gray Hair. The shingle, the boyish bob, the masculine pompadour, the chic coiffure of closely bound hair, accents gray, faded, streaked or unevenly colored hair. You cannot afford gray hair no matter how you dress your hair because this is the Day of Youth.

It's so easy to keep your hair youthful. Just a little Brownatone combed or brushed through and you have natural looking locks. You can tint gray, faded or bleached hair any color from lightest blonde to the varying shades of brown or black.

Shampoo or bath do not affect the permanency of color. No rubbing off or washing out. Easy to apply, acts quickly, no muss, fuss or day after day procedure. Apply Brownatone once and thereafter only as new hair grows in.

Brownatone is safe. It is guaranteed to be harmless to hair, scalp or skin. Millions of bottles used with uniformly gratifying results.

Sold by over 50,000 drug and department stores, or direct if preferred. Two colors: golden to medium brown and dark brown to black. Two sizes, 50c and $1.50.

THE KENTON PHARMACAL CO.
1054 Coppin Bldg., Covington, Ky.
Canada Address, Windsor, Ont.

GUARANTEED HARMLESS
BROWNATONE
TINTS GRAY HAIR ANY SHADE

SPECIAL OFFER! Trial Bottle for testing will be sent anywhere in plain package (no publicity) on receipt of 10c to cover cost of packing and postage.

We recommend NaTone Lemonated Shampoo for washing the hair. At dealers or direct, 50c.

Warner's

Correct Weight Distribution

The expansion of the waistline, the snug, smooth swathing of hips, thighs and diaphragm—this is the secret of Warner designing. A Warner Wrap-Around* does not—cannot—push out of place. There is a Warner Wrap-Around* which will give smart lines to every woman, irrespective of her age or weight.

*Trademark Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

This model, 0420, in figured cloth is $3.50

This Warner Brassiere of velour crepe is designed in the new French manner.
No. 2980
$2.00

IN CORSET DEPARTMENTS

Send for Booklet D-1

THE WARNER BROTHERS COMPANY

347 Madison Avenue, New York
367 West Adams Street, Chicago
28 Geary Street, San Francisco

The Ceinture Complé a

BIEN JOLIE

PRONOUNCED BE-ANN-JO-LEE

STEP-IN CORSETTE

FAVORED by many—the Ceinture Complé. A BIEN JOLIE one piece Step-In and Brassiere which comfortably flattens the lines of the body and affords a perfect foundation for the modes of the day. Waist measure sizes 26 to 40. At all good stores.

Benjamin & Johnes
358 Fifth Avenue - - New York

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 29

5872—5218—This one-piece slip-over dress is plaited at the sides and has a straight lower edge. The collar and cuffs may be detachable. Use plain wash silks with same material in contrast, printed silk crêpes or wash silks with plain, and plaid silk for hat and scarf.

16 years requires 2¾ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine. Lower edge, plaits out, 58 inches.

Dress is for misses 16 to 20, also small women; hat and scarf for misses and ladies.

5866—With the coat (described below) she may wear a one-piece wool frock to match. It has the close-fitting hipline and slips on over the head. The collar and cuffs may be detachable. Kasha, cashmere, soft twills, etc., are suitable. Lower edge 44 inches.

17 years requires 1⅞ yard 54-inch kasha and ½ yard 35-inch crêpe de Chine.

The dress is for misses 15 to 20 years, also small women.

5807—5726—The same coat (described below) a tunic b ouse and slip make this ensemble costume. The blouse has a convertible collar and may be longer. It is worn over a slip with a straight lower edge faced with the coat fabric. Lower edge 43 inches.

34 bust or 17 years requires 2¾ yards 54-inch kasha (including coat and facing for slip), 2¼ yards 39-inch faille silk and ⅝ yard 39-inch crêpe de Chine for blouse, 2⅜ yards 32 to 35-inch material for slip.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for misses 16 to 20 years, also small women.

5821—5870—10138—The coat has a straight lower edge and is smart in kasha, cashmere, soft twills, ribbed wools, etc. If you carry out the lining to the edge of the coat, the coat may be reversible (i. e. worn with either the silk or the wool fabric outside). It may be worn with a narrow slip-over frock with a wrap-around lower part to match the coat-fabric. The long upper part of the dress is of Canton crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine. The embroidery carries out the two-color scheme of this ensemble costume.

17 years or 34 bust requires 2⅝ yards 54-inch kasha for coat and lower part of dress, etc., and 1⅞ yard 39-inch crêpe de Chine. Lower edge of coat 44 inches; of dress 41 inches.

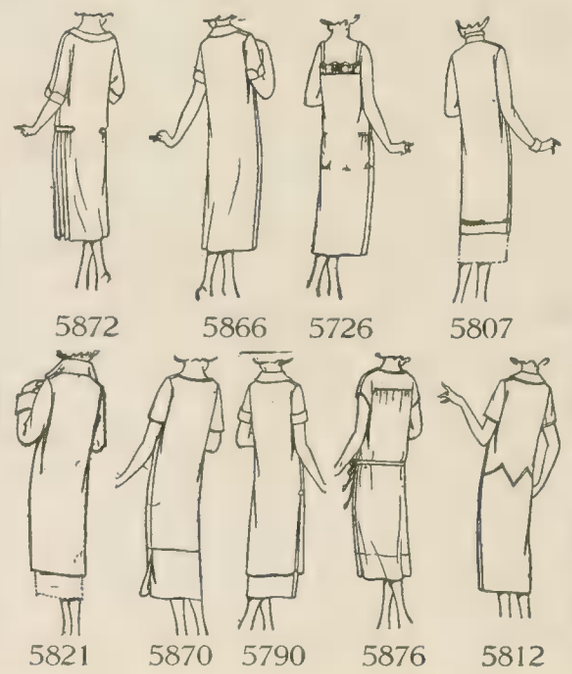
Coat is for misses 15 to 18 years or 32 to 35 bust, also ladies; dress for misses 16 to 18 years or 33 to 35 bust, also ladies.

5790—This frock has a tunic blouse with inserted plaits at the front and side seams and a narrow one-piece slip. The collar and cuffs may be detachable. Use soft twills, kasha, wool crêpe or light-weight cashmere with lower part of slip, tie, etc., of black satin.

16 years requires 1¾ yard 54-inch kasha and 1 yard 35-inch satin. Lower edge of slip 41 inches.

Dress is for misses 16 to 20 years and ladies 38 to 40 bust.

5876—This slip-over frock has a yoke and short sleeve cut in one and a straight lower edge lengthened by a straight band. Use printed Georgette, crêpe de Chine, silk crêpe, chiffon, chiffon voile, etc., with plain to match, etc. Lower edge 51 inches.



17 years requires 1⅞ yard 35-inch printed and 1⅝ yard 35-inch plain silk.

It is for misses 15 to 20, also small women.

5812—Use cashmere dress goods for the wrap-around straight skirt, etc., of this slip-over dress and satin or silk Canton crêpe to match or in a lighter shade for upper part. Use the same silk bound with self for the attached or detachable collar. The skirt is joined at a low waistline. Lower edge 42 inches.

17 years requires 1⅝ yard 39-inch crêpe de Chine and 1⅛ yard 54-inch cashmere.

Dress is for misses 16 to 20 years, and ladies 38 bust.

SULPHUR Heals Skin Eruptions,

Mentho-Sulphur, a pleasant cream, will soothe skin that is irritated or broken out with eczema; that is covered with ugly rash or pimples, or is rough or dry. Nothing subdues fiery skin eruptions so quickly, says a noted skin specialist.

The moment this sulphur preparation is applied the itching stops and after two or three applications, the skin is delightfully clear and smooth. Sulphur is so precious as a skin remedy because it destroys the parasites that cause the burning, itching or disfigurement. Mentho-Sulphur always heals rash, skin eruptions and pimples right up.

A small jar of Rowles Mentho-Sulphur may be had at any good drug store.

FREE SAMPLE

Send coupon for sample of Rowles Mentho Sulphur

Whitehall Pharmacal Co., Dept. K, New York, N. Y.
Send me free sample of Rowles Mentho Sulphur

Name.....

Street.....

City.....

Women at Home Make Big Money This New Way

Fireside Industries offers a wonderful opportunity to make big money—in spare hours or full time—at home. Delightful artistic work. Absolutely no previous experience or ability necessary. We show you exactly how to do everything, and furnish outfit of materials. Your success is assured

Free Book Shows How

Write today for free book giving full particulars. Enclose 2c stamp. Don't miss this chance!

FIRESIDE INDUSTRIES, Dept. 293, Adrian, Mich.

THEY hold more securely, without winding; cannot injure the most delicate materials; and permit the most exquisite needlework. Approved by MODERN PRISCILLA Proving Plant, NEEDLECRAFT MAGAZINE and FARM & HOME Testing Station. Accept no imitations—look for protective sliding shield. "ADJUSTO" hoops, 4, 5, 6, 7" rounds, 25c each, $1 set; "EMBRO", 3, 4, 5, 6, 7" rounds, 20c each, $1 set. If your dealer cannot furnish, send his name, price, state style and sizes wanted, and we will send postpaid (add 5c each west of Rockies). Fine for gifts, prizes, etc.

THE EMBRO MANUFACTURING COMPANY
Canton, Ohio

BECOME A NURSE

THIS school during 25 years has taught nursing to 30,000 women in their own homes—beginners as well as practical nurses.

Our Graduates Earn $30 and $35 a Week

Ideal vocation for self-supporting women. You can try our course without cost if dissatisfied. Write today for catalog and specimen pages.

THE CHAUTAUQUA SCHOOL OF NURSING
309 Main Street Jamestown, N. Y.

An Elizabeth Arden Treatment

Says ELIZABETH ARDEN

Next time you want your skin to be quite lovely, give yourself this little afternoon Treatment at home. Cleanse the skin gently but thoroughly. Pat with Skin Tonic, to awaken circulation. Then apply Anti-Wrinkle Cream and leave it on the skin for fifteen minutes. This cream, a mellow blend of fresh eggs, nourishing oils and astringents, fills out lines, tightens the skin and leaves it smooth and velvety. Remove with Skin Tonic.

Arden Venetian Cleansing Cream. Removes impurities from the pores. $1, $2, $3, $6
Ardena Skin Tonic. Tones, firms, whitens, refines. 85c, $2, $3.75
Venetian Anti-Wrinkle Cream. $2, $3.50

ELIZABETH ARDEN
NEW YORK: 673 Fifth Avenue
LONDON: 25 Old Bond Street
PARIS: 2 rue de la Paix
Arden Venetian Toilet Preparations are sold at smart shops everywhere.

Handiest thing in the house

For Burns and Scalds

Scalds and burns quickly cease to bother and pain when they are dressed with "Vaseline" Petroleum Jelly. It soothes the pain, keeps out air and dirt so that nature can do its healing work undisturbed. Keep it handy in case of need.

• • •

For fifty years "Vaseline" Petroleum Jelly has been a standard supply in every hospital, used by every physician and nurse. Have it handy in your first aid kit or medicine cabinet.

Chesebrough Manufacturing Company (Consolidated)
State Street New York

Vaseline
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
PETROLEUM JELLY

Look for the trade-mark "Vaseline". It is your protection.

Keep "FLU" away with FLORIDA
MENTOPINE
COUGH DROPS

5c

THEY are a delicious confection and at the same time keep your throat and nasal cavities sterilized against sore throat, coughs, colds and "flu". Pure Pine Oil combined with Menthol are the ingredients in Mentopine that keep your voice vibrant and your throat healthy.

At all drug and confectioners' stores

THE MENTOPINE CORPORATION, Philadelphia, Pa.

Have a Satin-Smooth Hair-Free Skin

Science has finally solved the problem of removing hair pleasantly without discomfort to the skin or complexion. This with NEET, a mild and dainty cream. You merely spread it on and then rinse off with clear water. That's all; the hair will be gone and the skin left refreshingly cool, smooth and white! Old methods, the unwomanly razor and severe chemical preparations, have given way to this remarkable hair-removing cream which is the accepted method of well-groomed women everywhere. 50c at Drug and Department stores or by mail. Money back if it fails to please you. Buy now.
HANNIBAL PHAR. CO., 601 OLIVE ST., ST. LOUIS, MO.
TRY IT

Maybelline
DARKENS and BEAUTIFIES EYELASHES and BROWS INSTANTLY, makes them appear naturally dark, long and luxuriant. Adds wonderful charm, beauty and expression to any face. Perfectly harmless. Used by millions of lovely women. BLACK or BROWN, obtainable in solid cake form or waterproof liquid. 75c at your dealer's or direct postpaid.
MAYBELLINE CO. CHICAGO

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 30

5888—The shiny side of crêpe satin is a smart trimming for a slip-over dress made of the dull side. It has a one-piece back, a tunic and skirt joined across the front at a low waistline. One may use printed heavy crêpe de Chine or silk crêpe of not too pronounced a design. With embroidery use flat crêpe, Canton crêpe, heavy crêpe de Chine, satin crêpe or crêpe faille.

36 bust requires 4 yards 39-inch crêpe satin. Lower edge 46½ inches.

The dress is for ladies 36 to 52 bust.

5842—A draped tunic worn over a one-piece slip makes a very distinguished two-piece frock of the slip-over type. Use crêpe satin, silk Canton crêpe, heavy crêpe de Chine, flat crêpe or crêpe faille with the upper part of the slip of lining silk to match and flowers of self-material. For evening one may omit sleeves and use lace with a slip of satin to match and flowers of metallic ribbon, etc.

36 bust requires 3½ yards 40-inch crêpe satin (including lower part of slip). Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

The dress is very distinctive for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5890—This one-piece slip-over dress has a straight lower edge and a yoke and short sleeves cut in one piece. Make it of flat crêpe, Canton crêpe, heavy crêpe de Chine or crêpe satin with lace; of printed heavy crêpe de Chine or silk crêpe with plain to match, etc.; of crêpe satin with the reverse side.

36 bust requires 2½ yards 39-inch silk crêpe, ⅝ yard 32-inch lace for yoke and 1⅜ yard 9-inch banding. Lower edge 46½ inches.

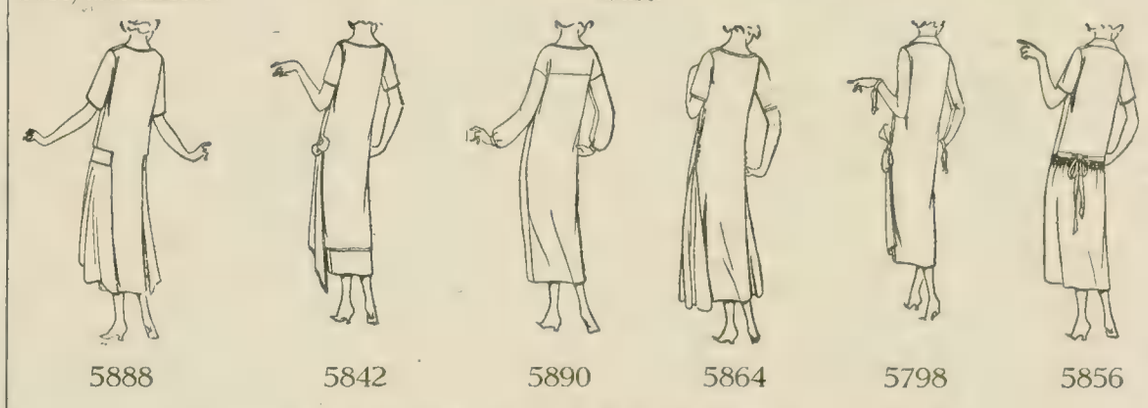
The dress is becoming to ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5864—10253—The flared frock is exceedingly graceful and is a change from the narrow dress. Circular side pieces give the flare to this one-piece slip-over dress. Use crêpe satin, Canton crêpe, heavy crêpe de Chine, crêpe faille, flat crêpe or soft satin with Georgette in contrasting color, or the two sides of crêpe satin, etc. The beading is an effective trimming. Lower edge 44 inches.

36 bust requires 4⅛ yards 39-inch satin crêpe, ¾ yard 39-inch Georgette.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5856—10258—It is very new to embroider the front of your silk frock. The design on this slip-over dress is very easily done. The dress has a shirred or gathered straight skirt joined to a long body. Use crêpe satin, Canton crêpe, heavy crêpe de Chine, crêpe faille or flat crêpe with same material in a color to harmonize with embroidery and buttons to match contrast. One may use printed heavy crêpe de Chine or silk crêpe with plain to match.



36 bust requires 3¼ yards 39-inch Canton crêpe. Lower edge 1¾ yard.

The dress is for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5798—Heavy silk crêpe or silk moire makes a distinctive draped gown on wrap-around lines. It is the one-piece type and may have a body lining. One may use light-weight twills or cashmere with moire, satin or corded silks, faille silk or crêpe satin all one material.

36 bust requires 3⅞ yards 39-inch heavy silk crêpe. Lower edge measures 43½ inches.

The dress is good style for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5888 5842 5890 5864 5798 5856

OTHER VIEWS ARE ON PAGE 31

5908—5827—This slip-over tunic blouse has a convertible neck worn in Chinese effect, or open. Use crêpe faille, crêpe satin, Canton crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine with novelty braid and metal buttons, wool rep or soft twills with silk braid, etc. For the costume slip, which may have a deep shadow-proof or a three-inch hem, use satin, etc.

36 bust requires 2½ yards 39-inch corded silk and 2⅜ yards 35-inch satin. Lower edge of slip 44½ inches.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5909—5724—For this slip-over tunic blouse and the costume slip use crêpe satin with trimming bands on the blouse of the reverse side. One may use silk crêpe or faille silk with satin bands, heavy crêpe de Chine with a darker shade. The blouse may be shorter. The slip has a straight lower edge with either a three-inch or a deep shadow-proof hem.

36 bust requires 5½ yards 39-inch crêpe satin, including slip (using the dull and shiny sides). Lower edge of slip 44 inches.

The blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 32 to 44 bust.

5862—10233—The long upper part and the wrap-around lower part in contrast gives the tunic blouse effect to this narrow slip-over dress. It has a close-fitting hipline. Use ribbed wools, cashmere suitings, fine twills, kasha, ribbed silk or satin with silk Canton crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine. The embroidery is effective in color.

36 bust requires 2¼ yards 39-inch crêpe de Chine and ⅝ yard 54-inch kasha. Lower edge 44 inches.

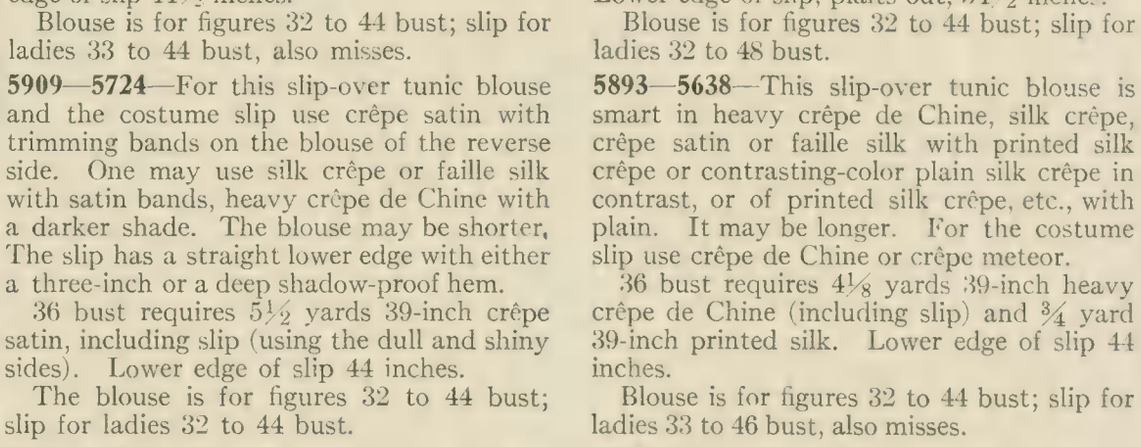
The dress is becoming to ladies 33 to 44 bust, also misses.

5895—5631—Use bordered silks or faille silk, crêpe satin, silk crêpe or heavy crêpe de Chine with same material in contrast, for this slip-over tunic blouse. It has a straight lower edge and may be longer. One should wear it over this costume slip of crêpe meteor, etc., with inverted plaits at each side below the low waistline.

36 bust requires 1¾ yard 40-inch bordered silk and 2⅝ yards 35 or 39 inch crêpe meteor. Lower edge of slip, plaits out, 54½ inches.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5893—5638—This slip-over tunic blouse is smart in heavy crêpe de Chine, silk crêpe, crêpe satin or faille silk with printed silk crêpe or contrasting-color plain silk crêpe in contrast, or of printed silk crêpe, etc., with plain. It may be longer. For the costume slip use crêpe de Chine or crêpe meteor.



36 bust requires 4⅛ yards 39-inch heavy crêpe de Chine (including slip) and ¾ yard 39-inch printed silk. Lower edge of slip 44 inches.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 33 to 46 bust, also misses.

5863—5631—One may have inverted dart tucks or shirrings at the shoulders to give a perfect fit to this slip-over tunic blouse. It may be shorter. Use crêpe satin, heavy crêpe de Chine or Canton crêpe with crêpe de Chine in contrast for the detachable or attached collar and cuffs. The slip has inverted plaits at each side below a low waistline.

36 bust requires 2⅝ yards 39-inch crêpe satin and 2⅝ yards 35 or 39 inch material for slip. Lower edge, plaits out, 54½ inches.

Blouse is for figures 32 to 44 bust; slip for ladies 32 to 48 bust.

5908 5827 5909 5724 5862 5895 5638 5893 5863 5631

Fame and Glory came to me, through these beauty aids

By Edna Wallace Hopper

I MADE myself a famous beauty and the rage. I have lived for 40 years a glorious career.

Now I remain at my height—as young and beautiful as ever. The envy of thousands who see me daily on the stage.

All that because I searched the world for aids to youth and beauty. I found the best that science offered. Then all the later, better helps.

Now those supreme helps are at every woman's call. All toilet counters have them. In four preparations are combined 52 matchless ingredients.

Learn what these helps do for women. You owe that to yourself.

My Youth Cream

My Youth Cream is a remarkable creation, combining many factors. It contains products of both lemon and strawberry. Also all the best helps science gave me to foster and protect the skin.

It comes in two types—cold cream and vanishing. I use it as a night cream, also daytimes as a powder base. Never is my skin without it. My velvet complexion shows what that cream can do.

The cost is 60c per jar. Also in 35c tubes.

My Facial Youth

Is a liquid cleanser which I also owe to France. Great beauty experts the world over now advise this formula, but their price is too high for most women.

It contains no animal, no vegetable fat. The skin cannot absorb it. So it cleans to the depths, then departs. My Facial Youth will bring you new conceptions of what a clean skin means. The cost is 75c.

White Youth Clay

A new-type clay, white, refined and dainty. Vastly different from the crude and muddy clays so many have employed.

It purges the skin of all that clogs and mars it. Removes the causes of blackheads and blemishes. Brings a rosy afterglow which amazes and delights. Combats all lines and wrinkles, reduces enlarged pores.

No girl or woman can afford to omit it. It multiplies beauty. My White Youth Clay costs 50c and $1.

My Hair Youth

The cause of my luxuriant hair, thick and silky, finer far than 40 years ago. I have never had falling hair, dandruff or a touch of gray.

A concentrated product combining many ingredients. I apply it with an eyedropper directly to the scalp. It tones and stimulates. No man or woman will omit it when they see what Hair Youth does. The cost is 50c and $1 with eyedropper.

My Face Powders

They are supreme creations. No face powders you have used can compare. Any face powder branded Edna Wallace Hopper is exquisite. They come in two types. One is a heavy, clinging, cold cream powder, in square box, $1.00. That is the type I like best. The other is light and fluffy, in round box, 50c.

All toilet counters supply Edna Wallace Hopper's beauty helps. If you send the coupon I will mail you a sample of any one you choose. Also my Beauty Book. Clip coupon now.

Your Choice Free

Insert your name and address. Mark sample desired. Mail to Edna Wallace Hopper, Inc., 536 Lake Shore Drive, Chicago, Ill. 719A-BC

White Youth Clay Youth Cream
Facial Youth Hair Youth

Name.....

Address.....

THE LAST WORD

A Page of Shop-Talk, Gossip, and Comment

We Are Honored by Proxy

A graceful tribute to the editor of THE DELINEATOR and a most satisfying recognition of one of this magazine's greatest contributions to public service were incidents of the official observance of Armistice Day in France last November. President Herriot conferred upon Mrs. William Brown Meloney the French Medal for State Service in appreciation of her years of work in developing the Better Homes in America movement. It will be recalled that this important national campaign for better homes, house furnishings and household equipment was originally a DELINEATOR editorial idea, then a service department of the magazine, finally growing to such proportions that only a specially organized public service institution could realize its full possibilities. Such an organization was perfected, with Herbert Hoover as President, Dr. James Ford of Harvard University as Executive Director, and with Mrs. Meloney carrying on as a member of the Advisory Council. Over in France, where unprecedented housing problems have had to be solved since the war, the Better Homes in America movement has been closely watched and many of its most successful features adopted by the French Government officials in charge of reconstruction. A characteristically courteous acknowledgment of Mrs. Meloney's contribution followed when the President of the Republic honored her publicly on his country's most sacred holiday.

Lincoln's Seafarin' Folks

If there is one American who is thoroughly identified with all the quaint charm of the New England seacoast community, typified by Cape Cod, it is Joseph C. Lincoln. Thanks to more than a score of novels preceding "The Peel Trait," which begins in this issue, Mr. Lincoln's Cape Cod folks are known the length and breadth of the land. Their drawling turns of speech, homely wisdom and whimsical individuality have become part of our universal knowledge of a sturdy strain of pioneer stock that has given much to shape and color our national character. Ask any American at random for his conception of the seafaring Down East Yankee and his answer will almost invariably be traceable to the same source—one or more of Mr. Lincoln's books. No other author we know of is so wholly at one in feeling and spirit with the character he draws, or so wholly saturated with the atmosphere and traditions of the one locality that provides an inexhaustible supply of material for his pen. All the reading world knows that the author is a native of the Cape and descendant of a long line of seagoing New Englanders, so his knowledge of their hearts and minds is obtained at first hand by a sympathetic observer who has the tremendous advantage of also being "an old-timer." A characteristic quality that marks all his work and that has a special appeal for the reader tired of cynical and "superior" fiction about small-time life is appreciatively recognized in the following comment by Hamlin Garland: "Joseph Lincoln is not only a novelist of wide reputation, he is a public benefactor. His success has in it something heartening and corrective. In the midst of work which appeals to the base and cynical in human life (American city life) his clean, wholesome, humorous stories of Cape Cod sea captains and their neighbors give evidence of the fact that there is a huge public for decent and homely fiction. His books can be read aloud in the family circle with joy to all the members of it—I know, for I have myself read eight or ten of them to my wife and daughters. They make no pretense of being profound, or new, or 'smart.' They are filled with the characters and the humor which are native to the Cape. Lincoln knows these Cape towns and their inhabitants as Irving Bacheller knows his men of the North Woods, for he was raised among them and lives in their neighborhood several months of each year. He looks like one of them, like an old skipper, hearty, unassuming and kindly. The task which he has set himself is one which calls for a keen sense of character, democracy of sentiment and a fancy which never—or very seldom—loses its hold on the solid ground of experience."

Personality in the Nursery

What is personality? Dr. Arnold Gesell, about whom more later, tells us in next month's issue that it is a compound of countless impressions and habits, likes and dislikes, of prejudices good and bad, of more or less conscious motives and compunctions, of wishes and striving and above all of habits of feeling. Having defined personality as it is understood by the psychologist, Doctor Gesell discusses its growth and direction in young children, pointing out that marked differentiation in personalities may be observed in infants before they are a year old. To a parent the problem is how to develop a child's personality to the best advantage, and Doctor Gesell's advice is explicit and authoritative. Doctor Gesell is Professor of Child Hygiene at Yale University and Director of the Yale Psycho-Clinic. His contribution to the "Happy Child" series has an important bearing on physical as well as mental health, for in childhood many of the traits that will be marked in later life depend on habits of eating, sleeping, rest, toilet and play.

And He Isn't the Only Man!

Our thanks are due to the anonymous reader who sent in the following anecdote in the form of a clipping, evidently taken from a Buffalo, N. Y., newspaper.

"Buffalo folk who were on a motor tour found themselves one evening in a rather sparsely settled farming country with the nearest village some twenty miles away. They were weary from having driven all day, and as the shades of night were falling fast, they determined to seek rest in the first available place that looked all right. Down the road a bit they came upon a farmhouse in front of which was a sign announcing that tourists might find lodging there. The farmer's wife said she could take them in if the young man—the party consisted of father, mother and son—would sleep on a couch in the parlor. He said he would. At the supper-table they discovered that the farmer's family was caring for another traveler, a tall, sad-looking gent who seemed to be touring alone. When the youth got ready to retire, he made his way to the parlor. He found the tall, sad-looking gent had preceded him to that room and was reading. The young man took a turn down the road and smoked three or four cigarets while waiting for the tall, sad-looking gent to vacate the parlor. When the youth returned, the farmer's wife encountered him and said cheerily: "Well, haven't you gone to bed yet?"

"No," said he, "I'd like to but I can't. That tall, solemn-looking guy is in my room. He's been in there for two hours reading THE DELINEATOR."

Reducing in Spots

In a letter written recently to Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders, head of THE DELINEATOR's Department of Home Decoration, a Charleston, West Virginia, woman wrote: "I am beginning to realize that I have not used my DELINEATOR as much as I should have." The writer of the letter was acknowledging assistance received from Mrs. Sanders's department by mail and had reference to her neglect of the supplementary service offered to readers aside from and in addition to the articles that appear in these pages. An excellent example of a service feature that will be of permanent value long after the article describing it has been lost or forgotten will appear in next month's issue, when Mr. Yost will write about "Reducing in Spots." There is now in preparation a pamphlet that will be offered to readers interested in the article who will take the trouble to write for it. Dr. Lillian E. Shaw, a woman doctor who has specialized in physical training for women, prepared a special set of reducing exercises for this pamphlet. The exercises have the indorsement of Mr. Yost and of Dr. George A. May, director of the Waterman Gymnasium at the University of Michigan, and are designed to reduce fat, safely and quickly, in the following specific places—with a separate exercise for each:

Lower Legs and Ankles
Abdomen and Waist
Hips and Thighs
Double Chin and "the Dowager's Cushion," i.e., the pad of fat at the back of the neck
Upper Arms and Shoulders

The exercises are illustrated and explained in detailed description that would require a disproportionate amount of space in Mr. Yost's article. When you read it next month and find a note referring to the service pamphlet, remember that to those interested it is an important supplementary feature and only one of the hundreds on special subjects available to any reader of THE DELINEATOR.

CONTENTS for March, 1925

		PAGE
FICTION
The Peel Trait	Joseph C. Lincoln	5
Glycerine Tears	Emilie Loring	8
Night Watch	L. M. Montgomery	10
The Black Flemings (serial) Part Six—Conclusion	Kathleen Norris	12
ARTICLES AND SPECIAL FEATURES
The Odd Child	Angelo Patri	2
Nine 'Rahs' for the Mothers	Fielding H. Yost	14
Tourists Accommodated	Vera L. Connolly	15
Watch Out for Measles	Dr. Matthias Nicoll, Jr.	16
THE LITTLE DELINEATOR	Harriet Ide Eager	17
Build a Bungalow	Donn Barber	21
What Jane Cowl does for Beauty	Celia Caroline Cole	22
Ask THE DELINEATOR		80
The Last Word		110
HOME ECONOMICS
Transform Your Back Yard into a Garden	Frances Duncan	19
Hope Ahead for Rural and Village Homes	Blanche Brace	20
The Knack of Making Good Omelets	Lucile Brewer	46
When You Buy Silver	Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders	48
Meatless Dishes for Lent	Alice Blinn	53
Making Things Shine	Ruth M. Kellogg	54
How to Dress a Bed	Mrs. Charles Bradley Sanders	59
Vegetables en Casserole are Delicious	Alice Blinn	60
What Does Your Husband Eat at Noon?	Flora M. Thurston	63
Breakfast Nooks	Marion Brownfield	66
The Right Way to Keep Goldfish	William T. Innes	69
Menus For March	Jessie A. Boys	73
Gelatin in the Diet of Both Sick and Well	Mary E. Bayley	74
Tea is Served	Mary Harrod Northend	76
Dates, Currants and Raisins	Lucile Brewer and Alice Blinn	79
Ask Us		80
Save Dollars and Hours		82
FASHIONS AND EMBROIDERIES		26-38, 43-44, 106-109

MIX and SERVE

Edited with Willing Hands and a Mean Pencil by a Mere Man

ONE of the largest Chicago mail-order houses has discontinued the sale of firearms in the interest of decreasing crime and protecting the public. Our personally compiled statistics show that solitaire diamonds start more trouble than all the shooting hardware in Christendom, so we stand by ready to applaud the first public-spirited diamond merchant who discontinues selling them ◈◈◈ The tottering tradition of chivalry has received two black eyes since the last gathering of our fair pew-holders. An obliging New York City young man offered his assistance to a young lady whose waist had become unfastened on the street. She had him arrested, and the judge nicked the young man's roll for twenty-five green certificates. Another knightly gallant, this time a conservative business man of Pratt, Kansas, took a suburban lady home in his automobile following an entertainment that concluded at 1 A.M. Our latest report indicated that he was expected to recover from the gunshot wounds inflicted by her unappreciative husband ◈◈◈ Our sympathy goes out to the Jersey City, New Jersey, salesman who became so moved at a motion-picture show that he reached out and squeezed the nearest hand. Unfortunately, the hand was attached to the arm of a sturdy policewoman who did her duty as she saw it, and the young man got ninety days in the hoosegow ◈◈◈ A native Hindu student, who prided himself on his familiarity with the idiomatic usage of English, lost his mother. His English-speaking friends thereupon received the following telegraphic report of her demise: "The hand that rocked the cradle has kicked the bucket" ◈◈◈ Little Miss Doris Emma Foss, age twelve, of Tooting, England, won first prize of 10 guineas in the 1924 "Safety First" Essay competition participated in by 183,000 children in the elementary schools of London. Here are some excerpts from her essay: "Women are far more careless than men in stepping off the pavement. A woman sees perhaps a hat in a shop-window on the other side. It is the right colour and the right price. Eagerly she steps into the road, straight in front of a cyclist perhaps. She goes home a sadder, but, we hope, a much wiser woman. If, however, it is a motor lorry she meets, she has no longer any use for hats. . . . I saw a man severely injured in his haste to greet a friend whom he had passed while in the bus. Instead of a pleasant conversation his friend gave details to the ambulance men. . . . Children, too, are often careless in crossing the road. They are very, very careful sometimes, but there comes a day when their ball or hoop rolls into the road, and after it they dash all in the midst of the traffic. Many parents have deeply regretted the day they bought the toy and did not warn their children to risk losing their plaything rather than their life. Children, especially boys, are persistent in that extremely dangerous game of hanging on the back of carts. Warning after warning has fallen on deaf ears—and it would be interesting to know exactly how many of the 6,000 children who were injured in London were so through this very game" ◈◈◈ During the last hotly contested parliamentary elections in England, politicians adopted the American custom of sending automobiles for tardy and incapacitated voters. A London newspaper reports that a woman voter at Woking, hearing that free rides were obtainable, went twice by omnibus to the polling-place to ask that a motor car be sent to fetch her ◈◈◈ Of late we have been making some scientific investigation in the direction of applying labor-saving efficiency methods in the home. As a result we find that a great deal of energy is wasted in stirring tea and coffee beyond the point necessary to dissolve the sugar. We find that the average person makes 17 complete circuits of the cup per two lumps of sugar, whereas 7½ are all that are necessary. Besides the unnecessary wear and tear on spoon and cup, it is estimated that this amounts to 3,467 lost motions per cup per annum ◈◈◈ A New Bedford, Massachusetts, woman has applied for a divorce after waiting 41 years for the return of her husband. After three days of married life the man shipped on a whaling vessel and has never been heard from since ◈◈◈ A farmer of Ebersbach, Bohemia, enjoyed smoking so much that in his will he requested that his pipe and tobacco pouch be buried with him. When he died, his wife not only honored his wishes but generously contributed a box of matches.

If about to build or remodel write for 64-page catalogue "Standard" Plumbing Fixtures for the Home.

"Standard"
PLUMBING FIXTURES

Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co.
Pittsburgh

Her face,...her hands,...her hair...

this simple care safeguards their beauty

THE girls of the present generation have been accused of a willingness to try any kind of beauty treatment, preparation, or method that anyone is ingenious enough to devise.

We can't help thinking, "Well, why shouldn't they try them?" For that is how the spirit of youth works—it learns by trying, it grows by adventure. The scientific fact that a girlish complexion ordinarily needs nothing but pure soap and water to keep it glowing with health is too simple an idea for youth —there's no fun in it.

Probably little permanent harm will often come of these youthful experiments because young skin has marvelous powers of recuperation. The real risk is run by the woman who has passed early youth.

As one grows older, the skin gradually loses its ability to resist damage. Proper care will preserve its beauty, but dermatologists agree that constant strenuous treatments and the use of "foods" and "revivers" enlarge the pores, stretch the tissues, and make the skin tender and supersensitive.

These same authorities say that if all these artificial efforts are supplanted by daily face baths with warm water and a pure soap, the skin has been given as fine a treatment as it can have. Proper rinsing, a dash of cold water, thorough drying, and a bit of pure cold cream complete the simple operation. If Ivory is used, you are sure of thorough, yet safe and gentle cleansing, for Ivory is pure—as fine a soap as can be had at any price.

For youth, maturity and age; for face, hands, hair and bath, Ivory Soap offers all that you can rightfully expect from any soap. Yet its cost is negligible.

Procter & Gamble

The scientific basis for the use of SOAP

The following set of principles has been endorsed by 1169 physicians of highest standing and is offered as an authoritative guide to women in their use of soap for the skin:

1 The function of soap for the skin is to cleanse, not to cure or transform.

2 Soap performs a very useful function for normal skins by keeping the skin clean.

3 If there is any disease of the skin which soap irritates, a physician should be seen.

4 To be suitable for general daily use, a soap should be pure, mild and neutral.

5 If the medicinal content of a soap is sufficient to have an effect upon the skin, the soap should be used only upon the advice of a physician.

6 In all cases of real trouble, a physician's advice should be obtained before treatment is attempted.

PHYSICIANS consider these principles fundamental:

"In my opinion the platform to present the essential information about soap and its use for the skin is correct. The facts therein should be given to the public."

"This sort of education is sorely needed and ought to do much good."

"This is a timely presentation of the case."

IVORY SOAP

99 44/100 % PURE IT FLOATS

New Size

Guest IVORY

the dainty new cake of Ivory, made especially for face and hands, costs but 5 cents. 5¢

© 1925, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati

THE DELINEATOR

APRIL 1925

FROM A PAINTING BY FLORENCE GARDINER

HERBERT HOOVER JOSEPH C. LINCOLN SOPHIE KERR

ANGELO PATRI FIELDING YOST

EASTER FASHIONS

TWENTY CENTS THE COPY

THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, NEW YORK, N. Y., U. S. A.

$2.00 A YEAR $2.50 IN CANADA

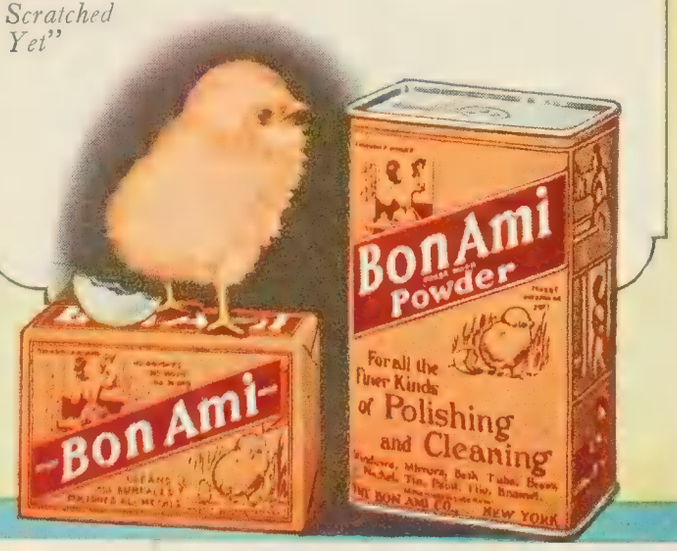
Bon Ami

It's fun to clean with it!

"Isn't that fun, darling? That's just the way your grandma taught me to use Bon Ami when I was a little girl like you!"

With a damp rag, cover the glass with the soft, filmy Bon Ami lather. In a minute it dries. A whisk with a clean, dry cloth, and away goes all the dirt and Bon Ami. And see how clear and sparkling the window is—you really have to look twice to see if it's still there.

"White Magic"—that's what Bon Ami truly is! It blots up dust and grime without hard rubbing, never scratches, nor does it redden or roughen the hands. For over thirty years women have used Bon Ami to clean and polish many things about the house. See the list at the right.



THE BON AMI COMPANY, NEW YORK

Principal uses of Bon Ami—for cleaning and polishing

Bathtubs, Tiling	Windows
Fine Kitchen Utensils	Mirrors
Glass Baking Dishes	White Shoes
White Woodwork	The Hands
Aluminum, Brass, Copper and Nickel	Linoleum and Congoleum

Cake or Powder
whichever you prefer

"Hasn't Scratched Yet"

THE DELINEATOR

MRS. WILLIAM BROWN MELONEY Editor

W. MARTIN JOHNSON Art Director

VOLUME CVI APRIL, 1925 NUMBER FOUR

Published monthly by THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY
Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., U. S. A.

UNITED STATES BRANCHES:
2231-2249 South Park Avenue.....Chicago, Ill.
350 Mission Street.....San Francisco, Cal.
79-89 Marietta Street.....Atlanta, Ga.
105 Chauncy Street.....Boston, Mass.
1201-3-5 Washington Avenue.....St. Louis, Mo.

FOREIGN OFFICES:
27 Avenue de l'Opéra.....Paris, France
83 and 84, Long Acre.....London, W. C., England
468 Wellington Street, W.....Toronto, Ontario, Can.
319 Elgin Avenue.....Winnipeg, Manitoba Can.

George W. Wilder, President Truman S. Mersereau, Secretary Chas. D. Wilder, Treasurer

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION: The price of THE DELINEATOR is $2.00 per year, or 20 cents per copy in the United States and its possessions, also Mexico and Cuba; to Canada, $2.50 per year; to all other countries in the Postal Union, $3.00 per year.

Copyright, 1925, by The Butterick Publishing Company, in the United States and Great Britain. Entered at Stationers' Hall, London, England. All rights reserved. Entered as second-class mail matter July 12, 1879, at the Post-Office at New York, under the act of March 3, 1879. Additional entry at Los Angeles, California, San Francisco, California, and Portland, Oregon

OUR GUARANTEE: We absolutely guarantee the reliability of every advertiser in THE DELINEATOR. If any reader incurs a loss through misrepresentation of goods in any advertisement in THE DELINEATOR, we guarantee that this loss will be refunded. If the advertiser does not make it good, we will. G. W. WILDER, President of The Butterick Publishing Company.

FROM the EDITOR'S POINT of VIEW

THE WOMAN'S WORLD FAIR

ON THE eighteenth of April" in—not "seventy-five" but—nineteen twenty-five there will be a commemoration of the famous ride of Paul Revere—with changes. Chicago will be the place, instead of Boston and its environs. The rider will be a woman, one of America's daredevil rodeo champions. And the occasion will be the opening of an exposition dedicated entirely to woman and her work, and called "The Woman's World Fair."

This is the first time that woman has held the stage exclusively in a national exposition. Every exhibit will be about her, showing what she does, what she uses, and what she achieves.

Prominent women from all corners of the country who have achieved eminence in specific activities—political, executive, literary, professional—will be present themselves as living exemplars of feminine progress. There will be many eyes opened and brows lifted to see how far they have forged ahead in their specialized endeavors.

What the less spectacular group of farm women has done is of particular interest. One of them has established a delivery of goat's milk for babies. Mothers whose children have ever been put on a diet of this milk will appreciate this service, for they know how difficult it is to obtain in pure, good condition.

Another woman produces certified cows' milk that has a record of keeping sweet for twenty-two days. A quantity of it which was shipped to a sick baby in London was used and found fresh on its seventeenth day. Sixteen hundred quarts leave this woman-managed dairy daily, to carry their weight in nourishment and health to infants within a radius of many hundred miles.

Women who are in banking will stage an exhibit of their activities, including a budget section to give expert advice on the necessary financial regulation of household expenditures.

Well-known department stores will show the part that women employees have in running their businesses, not only in buying and selling, but in actual store management.

Clubs will exhibit their activities: social, educational and political. And philanthropic societies will demonstrate the good work that they are doing to lighten the sum of human misfortune.

From the ends of the country during that week of April eighteenth to twenty-fifth, inclusive, women will be flocking to Chicago to see their very own show. For it is planned to have every State in the Union represented, so that the Fair may be as inclusively national as it is intensively feminine. It promises great results: a complete demonstration of a multitude of facts, every one of which is essentially interesting to women; an education to the whole world of what women are using, what they are thinking, what they are doing. It should be of interest to manufacturers as well as to individuals. It should point the way to progress in little things as well as in big things.

THE GIRL WHO WON A HOUSE

ONE of the most constructive forces in American democracy is the public-service spirit which has grown up in our great industries.

During the past year all of the lighting associations of the country combined to establish an educational commission to teach the principles of correct lighting. This commission found that the eyesight of America was being damaged by the wrong use of artificial illumination. It set up, therefore, at the cost of a large fortune, a national headquarters in New York City and a laboratory for research work in Cleveland, Ohio, where scientists were brought together to study lighting problems.

Then a campaign was planned among the children in our public schools, and a primer was prepared to show the simple truths about correct lighting. Prizes of a fifteen-thousand-dollar house and of ten separate scholarships were offered to those children who wrote the best essays on home lighting and filled out information sheets reporting the correction of lighting facilities in their own homes and in the home of one neighbor. Finally, educators and engineers from various parts of the country met in New York City to make the final awards.

The first prize was won by Julia Groo, of Portland, Oregon. This schoolgirl's essay will be printed in newspapers over the country and will be the subject of comment by Dr. Matthew Luckiesh, an eminent lighting specialist whose articles have appeared in THE DELINEATOR.

There were, in all, 45,000 district prize compositions submitted from 4,784 cities and communities. One million primers were filled out and submitted by interested school children. It took months for a corps of lighting specialists and teachers to sift these entries, which finally were brought down to forty-eight. The choice of the first winner was a difficult task.

The good accomplished by The Lighting Educational Committee can not be estimated. At least one million school children have learned that light on their reading and study books should fall over the left shoulder, that a certain strength of light should be used for a given space, and that no electric-light bulb should ever be left unshaded. They know also that a light at the cellar steps saves many a fatal fall; and they can tell you where the hall light should hang in order to make the use of the stairs safe. They know that father has two sides to his face and that a double light is needed in the bathroom where he shaves. They know that a closet light which automatically shuts off by the closing of the door costs very little to install and practically nothing to maintain. They can tell their mothers where the kitchen light should be so that she may work safely and comfortably at both stove and sink. And they know how many inches the dining-room light should hang above the table.

These are just a few of the important lessons that school children have learned from The Lighting Educational Committee. The public owes a vote of thanks to the industry which has made this contribution to education.

SPRING SONG

Who, walking in the world, shall see
New green upon a white birch tree—
Let him look up as he passes by,
For there is beauty to his eye.

And who walks where a brook is flowing
And comes upon wild iris growing—
Let him be stopped, and let him stand,
For there is beauty to his hand.

But who, in the drawn dusk, shall hear
A wood-thrush singing, lone and sheer—
Let him be healed, let him be whole,
For there is beauty to his soul.

DANA BURNET

FROM AN OHIO KITCHEN

EVERY honest effort bears fruit. We do not always live to see the maturity of our dreams, but if we have dreamed honestly and worked earnestly, there is left behind us some monument in stone or wood or that divine spark, the human soul.

So it was with a little group of women in a small Ohio town five years ago, who worked against obstacles and with little support toward the unpretentious exhibit of a model kitchen. At the end of their campaign they at least had the compensation of the approval of a few local people and praise from their distinguished visitor, the President of the United States. And now——

"And now that is over," said one of the weary women.

But it was only the beginning. Out of the earnest efforts of that small group striving to better their own little community grew an idea which became an international movement—Better Homes in America. This work is now four years old. It has spread into every State of the Union and into foreign countries. It was organized with exhibits in two thousand seven hundred communities last year. It has brought about a change in public-school education in many cities. It has put the teaching of home-making on an equal footing with the teaching of chemistry, carpentry, stenography or any other occupation.

This work, begun in an Ohio kitchen, was launched in 1921 by THE DELINEATOR and grew until it was necessary to incorporate it as a public-service organization, with Herbert Hoover as its president. Harvard University has loaned Dr. James Ford for National Director.

If there has never been a Better Homes campaign in your town, write to Doctor Ford at 1653 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C. And read "What Men Should Know About Homes," by Herbert Hoover, on page eleven of this issue of THE DELINEATOR. It has a message for you and your husband and your son.

HEALTH AND POUNDS

EVERY little while some woman drops dead on a tennis-court, or dies of tuberculosis or some other wasting disease, and she and the family doctor know that death began when somebody said to her, "Why don't you reduce?" or "Have you heard about the new diet that will make you thin?"

Too much weight can be as dangerous as too little—but that is no reason why you should take the advice of an amateur about your diet. Surely you wouldn't get a carpenter to take out your appendix!

Life depends upon food. The intelligent use of it can preserve health, and in many cases cure those who are ill.

But perhaps you have too much weight. Perhaps you are worrying because the scales register another added pound.

THE DELINEATOR has asked Dr. Lillian E. Shaw, a woman physician who has specialized in physical education, to prepare a book for its readers on how to reduce pounds and increase health. Turn to page fourteen of this issue and read the article entitled "Reducing in Spots," by Fielding H. Yost.

Next month, Mr. Yost begins a series of articles on health clubs; why you should join one or organize one, and how to do it.

A COMPLETE TABLE OF CONTENTS WILL BE FOUND ON PAGE 108

Taking Boarders

By

VERA L. CONNOLLY

Edited and approved by Martha Van Rensselaer, Head of the School of Home Economics, Cornell University

THE DESK IN MY ROOM IS THE ACTUAL HEADQUARTERS OF MY BUSINESS

CAREFUL MARKETING IS MOST IMPORTANT IN RUNNING A BOARDING-HOUSE

Are you a landlady—or a mere boarder—or neither? You'll want to hear what Vera Connolly says about the modern variations of that ancient institution, the boarding-house

Drawing by Courtney Allen

THE HANDY BUFFET STOCKED WITH GOODIES IS ONE OF THE THINGS THAT MAKE OUR BOARDERS FEEL AT HOME

"OH, DON'T live in a boarding-house! Take a furnished room and cook on a gas-jet. Do anything! You know what boarding-houses are!" Thus, twenty years ago, one's friends received the news that one intended to board.

To-day all that is changed. Indeed, one might say it is comically different.

"Yes, I know of a lovely boarding-place, my dear," a fashionably gowned silver-haired woman was heard lamenting to her niece in a city tea-room one day last Fall; "but you'll never be able to get in there. They always have a waiting-list. It's a big farmhouse two miles out on the Rosedale trolley. One family has lived there for generations. The service is perfectly remarkable. They use their own old silver and mahogany. And, my dear, they serve dinner with tall white candles in candlesticks that have been in the family for a hundred and fifty years."

Boarding-house? Tall white candles? Has the world gone mad?

That was what the writer of this article—who had shamelessly eavesdropped—asked herself as the two ladies rose and departed. It had been fifteen years since she had had occasion to board. And meantime, apparently, the industry had undergone an amazing transformation.

Consumed with curiosity and friendly interest, the eavesdropper rose, left the tea-room and caught the next trolley for Rosedale. She would see some of these newfangled boarding-houses. White candles and mahogany! It seemed incredible. Or, if all that loveliness, what of the food?

She stepped from the trolley and looked around her. All about lay the beauty of hills and fields. No house was near except the one she had come to visit: a big green-shuttered white farmhouse with an upper and lower gallery across the front and a big ell at the side. It stood in stately dignity on a rise of ground partly screened from the road by old trees.

The visitor strolled up the path, crossed the lower gallery, with its comfortable rockers and rugs and tip-top tables, and rapped on the open front door, peeping meantime into a wide Colonial hall and two parlors furnished in rare old mahogany.

Presently a little colored maid appeared, seated the stranger in the left-hand parlor, and departed with the assurance that her mistress would be in in a moment.

The visitor looked about her, spellbound. Where, oh where, was the mustiness, the dingy carpet, the smell of last week's food, the nasal gramophone, the "joshing" drummer, the raucous din and clatter of the boarding-house of a past day? Gone!

"You wanted to see me?"

The hostess had entered; a charming woman of middle age, with her white hair in a quaint braid around her head.

The visitor explained her errand. For the sake of other women who might wish to enter the work, she had come to see this most modern of all boarding-houses and to get the facts about it. She also wished to learn whether this house was an exception, or only one of many up-to-date boarding-houses which were, in one way or another, smashing the gloomy old traditions of the past.

"You know what boarding-houses used to be," concluded the visitor. "Stew, dark halls, dirty rooms, bad food, worse tempers."

The proprietor smiled and nodded. She knew.

"But that kind has almost passed out of existence. Nowadays the proprietors keep up to date. They buy the best and charge enough to maintain decent standards. Besides, most of them specialize. Specializing—that's the newest trend in this business."

When asked what she meant by "specialize," she explained that in a community near by there was an attractive boarding place where only elderly folk were taken. To get accommodations, one had to be over sixty and of such social status as to be acceptable to the others. As a result, the place was full of distinguished old people, some of them former celebrities. The rates ranged from fourteen dollars to twenty-five dollars a week for one person.

"Then I know of a boarding place that caters particularly to people with stomach disorders," she went on. "And one that has a tea-room connected with it, and serves meals to seventy-five government clerks a day. And one where there isn't any dining-room, but the meals are sent up on trays. And one where the bedrooms are all furnished like living-rooms, so business girls can receive their beaus—if they leave the door open. And still another that caters to bachelors only. Then there are the quiet country places like this."

Questioned as to when she began to take paying guests, she replied that she had begun it thirty years before, when she wanted money of her own to spend on improvements which her husband, a successful farmer, considered non-essential. At first he had opposed her plan, but she finally won out. She and her husband and son moved into a cottage on the place, she inserted an advertisement in the newspapers of a near-by city, and as a result she had the big house filled all Summer.

For fifteen years the family made this move each Summer, and she ran her business in the big house. As fast as the profits came in, she began to renovate the shabby interior of the old house and then to improve the grounds. Finally she helped build the ell which the family has had as a permanent house for fifteen years.

"Now," she concluded, "I keep the big house and the cottage full of guests all Summer, and the house full all Winter as well. I charge from twelve dollars to eighteen dollars a week for room and board for one person, and from twenty-four dollars to thirty-two dollars a week for two in one room. The guests eat here; and usually I have about twelve at table. I do all my own cooking. The little maid you saw does the serving. I wash the dishes and she dries them. And we both clean the house."

She added that, as a result of her work, she and her husband now own a home beautiful outside and in, property which will some day fetch a big price; and besides she has a comfortable bank account of her own.

"You'll stay for dinner, of course!" she insisted.

And the visitor accepted, curious to know what sort of food was served in this quaint, artistic substitute for the stodgy boarding-house of a past day.

The question was answered two hours later, when she found herself seated at the oval table, lighted only by the white candles, listening to the chat of a group of cultivated, traveled people, and sampling course after course of the delicious dinner brought in by the little maid.

As she hastened trolleyward later with some addresses of other up-to-date boarding-houses in her pocket, she thought of that perfect establishment, and marveled.

The next day the spinster proprietor of one of the most successful boarding-houses in a near-by city—the place which caters particularly to people with stomach ills—said to the visitor: "I think people need plenty of fresh air, properly cooked food, and a cheerful atmosphere. And though this isn't a sanitarium—it's just a boarding-house—still I do try to keep the healthy people healthy and to help those who have ruined their stomachs with wrong eating."

She declared that the opportunity she offered her guests to eat properly was so appreciated that some of them had been with her since the dining-room had opened, many of them having been cured of serious stomach ills.

This proprietor has one cook who comes to help get breakfast, goes away and returns to help with dinner. No lunch is served. The proprietor has carefully trained this woman to cook and combine foods digestibly. But she never fails to supervise the preparation of the meals herself. A colored boy serves the tables. The proprietor does all the up-stairs work.

She caters to about forty table-boarders: fourteen of whom live there in the house, sixteen of whom live near by in two four-room apartments she rents for the purpose, and ten of whom come in from the neighborhood. She charges from six dollars to twelve dollars a week for table-board (two meals a day) for one person. A separate dinner is sixty cents on week days, seventy-five cents on Sunday. No special rates are made for children.

"Men are usually the most difficult to please, aren't they?" inquired the visitor.

"Oh, no! Quite the reverse. I much prefer catering to men. In the morning they hurry up and get out. And in the dining-room they don't talk personalities. They discuss the big subjects of the day, and I love to listen to them. I always ask my guests when they come to help us keep the dinner-hour cheerful by entering into the friendly discussions we have. We avoid personalities

Continued on page 102

The thrill of a home health-cleaned this modern way

THE MAGIC DROPS

JUST a few drops of "Lysol" in the water whenever you clean, transform mere surface cleaning to health-cleaning. No extra work or trouble.

A great satisfaction that may be yours without effort

EVERY woman knows the joy and relief of a house just cleaned and in order. But this satisfaction is twice as keen to the modern housewife whose work is not a mere surface soap-and-water removal of dust, but a health-cleaning that purifies her home of the invisible germs which daily threaten the health and safety of her family.

This highly important health-cleaning entails no additional work or trouble, requires no extra energy. One very simple operation is sufficient to accomplish it. Just put a few drops of "Lysol" Disinfectant in your cleaning water every time you clean.

It protects your family from disease

HEALTH authorities will tell you that to reduce the danger of illness, your home must be kept purified of the myriad of tiny germs that abound everywhere. These germs do not linger long in the air. They alight on all surfaces. They are to be found on your tables, chair arms, door knobs, door jambs, bannisters—a hundred danger-spots where hands, big and little, may rest.

You must destroy these germs if you would protect your family from them. Soap-and-water is insufficient to kill them, but the magic drops of "Lysol" Disinfectant destroy them instantly.

"Lysol's" three valuable properties

"LYSOL" has three valuable properties that make it indispensable to the modern housewife. 1. It deodorizes. Your home is left sweet and fresh. 2. It purifies. 3. Its soapy nature helps to clean as it disinfects.

You will be surprised to find how the "Lysol" solution helps you in cleaning white woodwork. Finger spots are disinfected and removed like lightning. Floors are cleaned, nickel and white tiling are polished. Your home is cleaned better and more quickly by the added help of these magic drops.

Never be without "Lysol" for your daily cleaning. Put it in your cleaning water—a tablespoonful to a quart—every time you clean. Thus your home is kept safe to guard the precious health of your family.

"Lysol" Disinfectant is manufactured only by LYSOL, INC., 635 Greenwich Street, New York City. Sole Distributors: LEHN & FINK, INC., New York. Canadian Agents: Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Ltd., 10 McCaul Street, Toronto.

New facts

about protecting your health in this "Lysol" Health Library

—send for free set

THE span of life has increased fifteen years within the last generation, through the new methods scientists have learned for the prevention of disease.

The "Lysol" Health Library is a set of three pocket booklets, containing the latest suggestions of health authorities for protecting the health and prolonging the lives of yourself and your family.

The first book, "Health Safeguards in the Home," is filled with simple practical suggestions. The second is for wives themselves, "The Scientific Side of Youth and Beauty," while the third, "When Baby Comes," should be in the hands of every prospective mother.

A free set of this Health Library is waiting for you. Fill out the coupon and we will send it by return mail.

CONTINUE—as you have always done—to disinfect with a stronger "Lysol" solution the familiar germ-breeding spots, garbage pail, toilet bowl, drain pipes.

Lysol Disinfectant
Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.

LEHN & FINK, INC., Sole Distributors
Dept. J-25, 635 Greenwich Street
New York City

I should like to have a free set of your Library of Health. Please send it to me by return mail.

Name .....

Street .....

City ..... State .....

OHIO

"I am so impressed by the many good qualities of P and G The White Naphtha Soap, that I am moved to send this note of commendation. The use of this soap not only makes clothes whiter but at the same time lends such a clean odor and makes cleaning so easy, that I am sure there is no soap quite so good for the general household. P and G means 'perfectly great' to me."

Mrs. W. J. S.,
Dayton, Ohio

OHIO and ARIZONA

2,000 miles apart, but neighbors in their choice of this white laundry soap

IF you should travel from Cleveland, say, across Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas to Tucson, you would scarcely expect to find the women in Arizona enthusiastically using exactly the same laundry soap as those in Ohio used.

Nevertheless, as you looked out upon the lines of glistening white clothes, you could be sure that the majority of them had been washed with P and G The White Naphtha Soap, because P and G is the largest-selling laundry soap in Ohio and Arizona, just as it is in most of the other states covered by your trip, and in the country at large.

What a recommendation for a soap! And how much it really means to you!

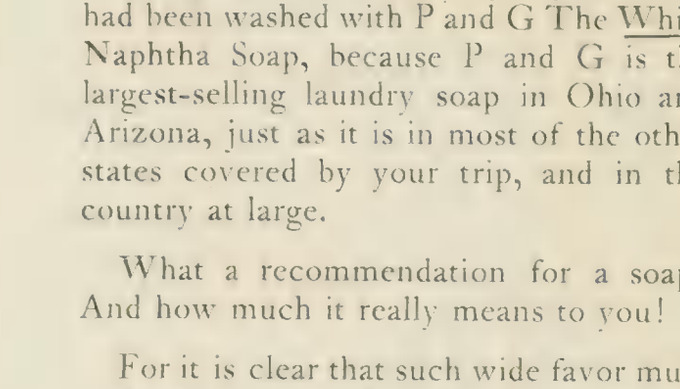
For it is clear that such wide favor must be based upon good reasons.

And it is. Here are the outstanding ones, as given to us by women themselves—women who have used all kinds of soaps and have decided for P and G.

P and G is white, and women who are careful and discriminating seem instinctively to prefer a white soap.

P and G keeps clothes white and colors fresh, because it washes clean.

P and G washes clean with less labor because it gives a fine, rich suds—in any kind of water, and in water of any temperature.



P and G requires much less hard rubbing, much less frequent boiling. Yet it is safe—it acts on dirt, not on fabrics or colors.

Finally, P and G rinses out thoroughly, thus preventing all grayness and soap odors.

Just try P and G for a few weeks and watch your clothes regain their fresh, new look. See how much time and labor it saves. Use it for all your household cleaning, too.

There is no mystery about the national supremacy of P and G—it is simply a better soap.

PROCTER & GAMBLE

ARIZONA

"When I first began to keep house, laundering and dishwashing were two of my biggest worries. Finally someone suggested that I try P and G Naphtha Soap. I did and found it entirely satisfactory as my using it for the past three years will testify. It cleans the clothing with less rubbing and does not injure delicate fabrics; it makes a suds in the hardest of water without the additional use of washing powders; and it does not hurt the hands."

Mrs. L. D. S.,
Globe, Arizona

© 1925, by The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati

Drawing by Joseph Simont

DAWN

The tale of a radiant Easter faith

By

MONTANYE PERRY

"PHILIP! Awake now, my boy, I have news for thee."

Sleepily the boy turned, stretched his slim figure to full length on the narrow mat that was his bed, opened his dark eyes and lay for a moment smiling up at his mother. She was moving with quiet briskness about the small room, neatly rolling the mat on which she had slept, bending to stir the porridge which bubbled over a fire of charcoal, placing wooden bowls, goblets and a jar of milk on the low bench close to the open door.

"It must be good news, my mother. Hast found a bag of gold with which to pay the tax?" he asked mischievously

"A way has been opened to earn a sufficient sum," she answered. "Last evening, after you slept, came a servant from the great house of Abidan. He, with his family, will start this morning for Jerusalem. He can not take his mother, who is old and of little strength, and he would have me stay in his house and care for her until his return."

"It will be pleasant there in the big house, with the green gardens and fountains inside. I am glad for thee," said the boy quickly, "and I can care for little Rhoda. Thou knowest I will let no harm come near her."

The woman's eyes filled with quick tears. "I know thou art always thoughtful and kind to our poor little blind one," she said. "But it is a long time to leave two children alone. Still thou knowest how to bathe and dress thy sister, and how to cook the porridge and the eggs and to cut the bread and fruits. Should there be any need, our neighbor Anna will advise thee. Bring water from the spring to-day that there may be no need to go from our gate after the sunset brings the Sabbath."

"I will be faithful, my mother," the boy promised.

He had risen now, rolled his sleeping-mat, placed it on the shelf beside his mother's and donned a long blouse of linen, the color of his bare tanned legs. A scarlet belt caught the blouse at the waist. His cheeks were flushed with the adventure of this new trust

At a bench by the open door they ate, seated on cushions placed on the rush-strewn floor. The tiny cottage stood near the city of Jericho, facing eastward, and they could see now the blue and gold of the morning sky, and the Jordan, a silver splinter through the green forests.

"Next year thy uncle will take thee up to the Holy City to the feast," the mother said.

Quick color sprang again to the boy's cheeks. His eyes darkened, as if even now he looked on splendid walls, and snowy terraces and roofs of gleaming gold. His lips shaped themselves to the words of one of the pilgrim songs, and as he rose with his mother to clear away their simple meal he sang:

"Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem!
For there are set thrones of judgment,
The thrones of the House of David!"

Continued on page 72

NO MAN'S GIFT

If love be not given, shall it be snatched?

Don't miss this absorbing answer to a big human problem

By SOPHIE KERR

Drawings by S. George Phillips.

"WHY—WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH ME?" HE ASKED HIMSELF. BUT HE DIDN'T TAKE HIS EYES OFF THE GIRL

THE taste of his success was honey in Alec Bard's mouth. He held his back straight as a ram-rod, he looked at the crops of the men round about—his neighbors and good farmers, too—with mingled pity and insolence. Try as they would they could not reach his abundance. Their corn was not so tall nor its ears so heavy and full-ringed. Their oats made a lighter stand. The heads of their wheat did not hang down, as did his, with the weight of the grain. Their clover-fields were not so deep and thick with the rich green and rose which would presently be transmuted by knife and sun into a dried and perfumed food for his placid blooded cattle. No, the other men were good—but not so good as Bard. He was the live one, he was the clever one, he knew how.

Looking at these things, thinking of these things, Alec Bard was intensely happy. "There's not a thing in the world I want," he told himself as he rode one day across the farm.

When a man says that there is nothing in the world he wants, he is tempting the gods, the high ironic gods that find something very mirthful in disproving all positive statements. Toward Alec Bard and his boast they turned their darkling laughter. Here was a man who avowed he wanted nothing! Ho, ho—a jest indeed!

Alec Bard then entered his house—his good, clean brick house, set among trees and flowering bushes. When she heard his step, his housekeeper, a spare and dignified colored woman, her head bound with a scarlet-and-gold handkerchief tied in a voodoo knot, hastened to bring his dinner.

Having dined and rung the one-o'clock bell that called his hired men back to work, Alec Bard went up-stairs to his bare, clean room, shaved and put on a white shirt and ready-made suit and his town hat. It was Saturday afternoon and he was going to town for money to pay his help and for such supplies as Elvira needed. He would not ride, but would go in his little car, though he hated it and only used it because it meant real economy of time and afforded a carrier for his purchases.

Elvira said briefly: "Soap, couple cans lye, new broom, sugar, coffee, sirup, hominy and salt herrin'," and gave her voodoo knot a still higher pitch over her placid brow. By thus warding off evil influences Elvira helped to maintain the prosperity of her employer.

UNAWARE of Elvira's easy magic, unaware of the ironic gods leaning to take up his challenge of the morning, Alec Bard wrote down the list of groceries and started his car.

Other cars were on the road, but they were mostly going townward, too, and he met few people.

He did not mind being alone, but thought again of his clean, smart farm, his house, his orchards, his cattle, his money in the bank, his riding-horse, his plentiful good food, and he knew that he himself had wrought these solid satisfactions. No one had helped him. He had worked—Lord, how he had worked, but who minds working when it gets you what you want? And now he'd got everything! And he was thirty-five.

Ten years ago he had come through this peaceful long-settled country. He'd had a few hundred dollars in his pocket, and the old Tabler place was for sale. No one wanted it. The crowd at the auction agreed that it was worn out. Still, it was a real bargain, for the heirs to the old farm would take most anything.

Alec Bard listened to all the idle chatter at the town auction-rooms and, moved by an impulse he did not try to check, had bid on the place and bought it, sight unseen.

"No Man's Gift." Maybe it was that name, relic of the day of the Cecils, that touched his imagination, his pride. He, Alec Bard, wanted no man's gift. "No Man's Gift." It was a fine name, a name to pull every cent out of a man's pocket and harness him to labor.

In the store there was the usual Saturday afternoon crowd, and he had to wait. And, as he waited, a girl entered and brushed against him, a girl in a blue dress that matched her eyes, a slim girl, a sweet girl, a serious girl and quite unconscious of Alec Bard. And something made a quick, confused clamor in his bosom, and his head seemed to be whirring round madly like a paper windmill. "Why—what's the matter with me?" he asked himself, amazed at these phenomena. But he didn't take his eyes off the girl.

She walked past him and stood beside a farmer's wife who was buying gingham and, as that good lady took her parcel, the girl gave her order to Tom Willets, the second clerk. Alec Bard knew that he would remember to his dying day every word she said.

"A pint bottle of vinegar, please, Tom, and half a pound of butter, and—well—I suppose I'll have to have a pound of sugar."

Alec Bard stared at her. She was delicately made. Her colors were flowers' colors. Even her hair, reddish brown, suggested the tones of the scented wallflowers that grew in clumps along his back fence. But who was she? He waited, breathing impatience until she had gone.

"Who was that lady you just waited on, Tom?"

Tom welcomed a space of conversation to break the rush of Saturday trade.

"That was Miss Kitty Pratt, Mr. Bard—old Judge Pratt's daughter. You know—judge died couple years ago." He lowered his voice to confidence. "Between you and me, I reckon Miss Kitty and her mother are havin' a right hard time to get along. Judge didn't leave much. Miss Kitty's tryin' to get a school to teach come Fall. Now, what's your order, Mr. Bard?"

"I tell you what, Tom. You put up an order of everything you think maybe Mrs. Pratt might need and send it up to the house and charge it to me. Old Judge Pratt was mighty kind to me once when I needed it—I don't like to think of his wife and daughter being scrimped."

But Tom knew better. "My Lord, Mr. Bard, I wouldn't dast do it. They'd fly right in my face. You can't send them two ladies food—no, sir. They're real blue-bloods. I'd love to do as you say—but it'd only mean carting the stuff out there and cartin' it back."

ALEC BARD was disappointed, yet he liked the thought of those two women, hungry perhaps, but not objects of charity. He understood.

Instead of going to see about a tractor, after he had finished at the grocery store, he walked out to the residence end of the town and presently neared the Pratt place. He knew it, its white columns beginning to rot, its old-fashioned wooden-gate with ball-topped posts falling in decay. The grass was not cut, the shrubbery was untrimmed, but through a thicket of spirea he saw a flash of blue, and he went in.

She was trying to nail a broken step together and she rose, hammer in hand. The composed, questioning gaze of her eyes embarrassed him. He did not know how to speak to her.

"Let me do that, miss," he said. "It won't hold that way."

She surrendered the hammer. "Oh, but—why should you trouble—it's very kind——"

He did not answer until the step was sound again. "Nobody'll trip on that," he assured her, still oddly eager and tremulous and uncertain.

"But who are you?" asked Kitty Pratt. "Do let me thank you. Did you want to see—mother, perhaps?"

"I'm Alec Bard," he said awkwardly. She made him feel ignorant and common. "I've got a farm seven miles out Tuckahoe way. I heard that your mother'd like to sell this place, and I thought I'd drop by and find out."

"I only wish mother would sell!" She put her case frankly before him. "But she won't." Her blue eyes sheeted with thin tears, but she winked them away. "Mother can't bear to leave this place—but we can't keep it up—it's all falling to rack and ruin—" she made a gesture of hopelessness with her slender hands. "Who said we wanted to sell?" she asked.

"I overheard some people talking in the post-office. You don't think, maybe, if she got a good price——"

"No, she wouldn't. Women live on sentiment, you know."

"I don't know. I don't know any women."

"You don't know any women—you're not a native here, then."

"No, I'm not. But I've lived here ten years. I've got a farm out Tuckahoe way—" he stopped, confused. He had said that before.

"I believe I've heard of you," said Kitty Pratt. "You're the Mr. Bard who takes all the prizes at the fair, aren't you?"

"I get a good share," admitted Alec, with unusual humility.

"And grows the enormous corn and sweet potatoes, I've read about you in the Weekly. Well, if you've got such a place, what do you want to buy a home in town for?"

"It was more—more as a kind of speculation," he improvised. "Besides, I hate to see good property go down."

"So do I. And I did try to cut the grass. But the mower's broken, and there's nothing but an old sickle that wouldn't cut jelly."

"Let me see the mower—maybe there's just a screw loose or something." Any excuse to stay in her presence, to look at her, to hear her speak.

"Why—" She hesitated, amused. This strange man who wanted to buy the house, who nailed the steps, who demanded to see the lawn-mower, was something outside of Kitty Pratt's experience, though it had not been narrow.

"I'm used to tools and machines," he went on, and the pressure of his will, his eager, uncertain will, forced her to turn and lead the way round the house to the tumble-down shed where the lawn-mower lay rusted, disconsolate. Alec Bard lifted it to the light, turned the creaking knives, tested the wheels. He seized a nail from the floor and scraped at various spots, shook the handle. It was rusty and dusty, but it was sound.

"You got any oil?" he asked. "Machine-oil?"

"I really don't know—old Unc' Zeb always took care of things—the best old darky—but he died last Winter—and I've not had any one else——"

Hadn't been able to pay any one else, he knew it. He glanced about, and there on the beam sat the oil-can, unmistakable. He lifted it down, shook it, tilted it here and there expertly. The knives began to revolve with unwilling ease.

"It just needed oiling," he said. "Lawn-mowers have got to be oiled a lot." He was conscious of her near him, the blue skirt almost touched his shoulder. "I'll just try it, if you don't mind."

HE BEGAN to cut the grass where it was worst. Up and down he went, and the sound brought a frail old lady to the veranda.

"Kitty," she asked, "who is it—who's cutting the grass?"

Kitty resolved herself into firmness, still tinged with that flicker of amusement. She nodded to her mother and approached the lawn-mower and its attendant. "You really mustn't go on—I can't let you," she said. "Come and meet my mother. No, you must not—" she planted herself directly before the machine and stopped it. He hesitated, smiled sheepishly, and followed her toward the veranda.

"This is Mr. Bard, mother," said Kitty. "He came in on business and has been staying to take pity on my ignorance of the lawn-mower. He lives down in Tuckahoe."

The old lady's eyes were as blue as Kitty's, but cold. Under their criticism Alec Bard felt his big hands sticking out from his sleeves, was conscious that his suit did not fit, that he needed a hair-cut.

"That's very nice of him, I'm sure," said Mrs. Pratt, as if she were speaking of a servant. "Very nice and kind. And what business did you come on, Mr. Bard, if you please?"

And he, Alec Bard, let this little old half-fed aristocrat awe and confuse him. There wasn't a trace of his dominance, his boasting, left in him. She had something he hadn't, that he never had, that he couldn't get. The ironic gods had begun their work well.

Then his native confidence reasserted itself. He had something they hadn't, too. He had money, food, warmth, proper shelter. They were two helpless women in a crumbling house. "I came to see if you wanted to sell your place here, ma'am," he said. "I heard you did."

"You have been misinformed," said old Mrs. Pratt. "I have no intention of selling." She turned from him toward Kitty, answering an unspoken accusation. "No, not if it tumbles down on my head," she said vehemently.

Alec Bard was afraid of her. "I've got to be going."

Kitty Pratt followed his retreat toward the gate. "Mother feels so badly about selling," she said. "The house is all she's got left, you see, of the old life."

Her kindness, her wish that he would not be hurt or offended, touched him, helped him. "She's got you, Miss Kitty," he blurted out.

"But I'm not much," she said, with a little spice of gaiety. "I didn't even know the lawn-mower needed oiling. Thank you ever so much for fixing it, and for mowing such a huge place. It was awfully good of you."

SHE held out her hand. To touch it was like touching a flower. That was it. She looked like a flower, she felt like a flower, as fragile, as easily broken. He could hardly say a decent farewell, but he managed to get off his hat again and stammer something. And then he was out on the street, mopping his forehead, trying to pull himself together. Something had happened to him, and he was not yet sure of its identity.

Others, however, were not so ignorant. Kitty Pratt, returning to the house, met her mother's sardonic gaze. "I congratulate you on your conquest of one of nature's noblemen," said the old lady sourly. "And he wants to buy Anna Pratt's house."

"He wasn't so bad, mother. Anyway, he got the lawn-mower to going. After supper to-night I'm going to mow the back yard."

If she had thought to soothe or divert her mother, she was deceived. The old lady went on, working herself into a flame of anger. "That you should do things like that, because we can't pay a nigger! But it's your own fault. You don't care. I know what you're up to, sneaking in that sewing from Tillie Jenkins, and sitting up working on it after I'm in bed to make a couple of dollars a week. And all you'd need to do would be to marry James Carter. You're undutiful, ungrateful!"

Kitty came up on the porch and put her arm around her mother. "Let's don't," she said gently. "It's no good, mother. I simply can't stand Jimmy, and you

Continued on page 74

SO SHE WENT HAPPILY TO WORK. THE COST RAN UP AND UP, BUT SHE PAID NO ATTENTION

The story of an American Singer

By

MADAME LOUISE HOMER

A prima donna who finds that motherhood does not conflict with an artistic career

THE YOUNG PRIMA DONNA MOTHER WITH LITTLE LOUISE

OFTEN THE WHOLE FAMILY GATHER ABOUT THE PIANO FOR AN EVENING OF SONG

THE HOMERS LOVE THE SIMPLE JOYS OF OUTDOOR LIFE

FROM my earliest days I was passionately fond of music. There was, however, not the slightest consciousness on my part that I should ever become a singer. It was just a natural devotion to music—a devotion shared by all my brothers and sisters.

On my mother's side I am descended from a long line of Presbyterian clergymen. One of my earlier ancestors, Elisha McCurdy, was a preacher of great force, and it is told of him that when he went through the country in an evangelistic effort to "gather in the Lord's harvest," his eloquence so moved his hearers that he brought about marvelous conversions. My own father, William Trimble Beatty, was himself a Presbyterian minister of Pennsylvania, and founded the Pittsburgh College for Women, one of the first institutions of its kind in this country. It was while he was pastor of the Shady Side Church in Pittsburgh that I was born.

My early home life was, therefore, in its trend and purpose, scarcely one from which an operatic career would be thought to come. It was happy and intimate in its surroundings, just as my married life has been. And just as I found that my early life was of immeasurable help in my work, so now I have found that there is nothing in an artistic career which should conflict with the united life of a happy home the upbringing of children—I have six of my own—or that privacy and protection so dear to every woman, which is popularly supposed to be unattainable when she enters professional life.

My father and mother were very fond of music. We children were always singing and playing. We even had a family orchestra of our own. We sang together a great deal, and I had a natural second, which was a source of great pride and joy to me. There was scarcely a moment that the piano-stool was empty. We would often gather around the open fire, my sister at the piano, my father with his flute, one of my brothers with the "bones," and I with the triangle. Many were the evenings we spent in this way.

We moved to Minneapolis for my father's health, and here it was that I first sang outside the four walls of my own home. In our church some song services were held after prayer-meeting in order that we might give closer study to the hymns. I was promised that if I prepared my school lessons promptly I might remain for what to me were regular song festivals.

But my own first public appearance just happened, without any forewarning. Our church people came to my mother and asked if I would sing the part of Ruth in the cantata of "Ruth and Naomi," which they were planning to give. My family were very much amused at the offer, for while I had sung in duets, trios, quartets and choruses at home, I had never before sung alone, nor did I ever dream of doing so. I told them that, if they really wanted me, I would try. This was in West Chester, Pennsylvania, after my father's death. There had never been a professional singer or musician in our family. But my mother's mother had possessed a rare voice noted for its beauty, and she had been the one to "raise the tune" in my father's church at a time when the Scotch Presbyterians thought to have an organ was a sinful thing. My father too, was known for the charm of his speaking voice.

I threw myself into the rehearsals with zest and loved the performance. I not only sang Ruth, but also the bassoprofundo part of Boaz. That came about through accident. When I arrived at the church on the evening for the cantata, I was met with intense excitement. Boaz had missed his train! "Oh!" I said calmly, "I'll sing his part, too." Such is the self-confidence of fourteen!

Thus, for the first time, I learned that I had what was termed a "voice." Every one hastened to assure my mother that my voice was extraordinary and should be cultivated. We had no visions of big achievement. I was a schoolgirl still busy with my studies. I lived an hour away from Philadelphia, which was far from being then the musical center that it is to-day. And at that moment there must have been some conflicting doubts in my mother's mind; for up to the time that she came to the Academy of Music in Philadelphia to hear me sing she had herself never entered a theater. She was always happy about my work, even though I believe that she felt somehow that her pride in my singing was something that should be forgiven. I doubt whether I myself would ever have dreamed of going beyond the realms of the oratorio had I not been assured repeatedly that I possessed a theater voice.

AN AMERICAN WOMAN WHO HAS COMBINED A CAREER WITH MOTHERHOOD AND A DAUGHTER WHO IS FOLLOWING IN HER FOOTSTEPS

I WAS fifteen when I began to study singing, though I invariably advise young singers to wait until at least seventeen before using the voice. Later I studied in Philadelphia, and also sang there in a church. Then it was that I made the most momentous decision of my life. I determined to go to Boston to study. There I could have fine teachers; there I could hear great music. I became possessed of a longing to study music deeply. I lived with my married sister, and to her I tried to explain what it was I craved—something that would help me to understand music itself—something that was greater than the voice or the piano. She understood. "Why it is harmony and composition you want," she said, "and I know the best teacher here; his people have a home near me." So it was that that very afternoon, so eager was I to enter on my new experience, she took me to the studio of Sidney Homer.

Opera was far from my thought during the time I studied in Boston. I devoted my entire time to harmony, counterpoint and score reading with Mr. Homer. I attended his lectures on the symphonies and the Wagner operas, and in addition continued my singing. A busy life it was, and at the same time a happy one, for Mr. Homer and I were soon married and began to plan together a trip to France. He wanted me to have the privileges which he had had abroad, and I was most anxious that he should have time to devote to his composition. It is from his songs that I have always made the third group on my concert programs—not because he is my husband, but because the songs appeal. You see, no matter how much a singer thinks of her husband, the songs she sings must please her audience. And Mr. Homer's do.

"HOMELAND," THE HOMERS' BEAUTIFUL COUNTRY PLACE ON LAKE GEORGE

It was during this time that a memorable thing occurred. Mr. Homer took me to hear my first grand opera. It was "Faust," with Emma Eames, Jean and Edouard de Reszke. What a revelation—what an existence wholly apart from life as I then knew it! I seemed to be in a dream: these great singers before me were beings of another world. Yet—to show how swiftly move some of the currents of life—I was singing with these very artists within five years.

When we finally went to Paris, our little daughter Louise was but seven months old. We found a cozy apartment in the Trocadero quarter, furnished it simply and made a real American home for ourselves. Here we could do what we wanted, compass five years' study into two, but at the same time live sensibly. Never was there such intensive living: study, study, study from morning to night, lessons in French, lessons in diction, lessons in acting and lessons in singing. Being always under the supervision of teachers, I escaped the evils which befall the student who practises too much alone. It speaks well for the method we pursued that within two years of our arrival in Paris I was able to make my début in big contralto rôles.

In the Summer, however, we cast work aside and went to the mountains. It was thus that I learned to stop singing altogether for three or four months every year, to give myself up to the big outdoors, and breathe in the health which is so essential to the singer. We all love the country and turn with the regularity of migratory birds to our "Homeland," on Lake George, New York, where from early Spring to late Fall we are free to do as we please. Sometimes this vacation stretches into a jolly country Christmas, with greens gathered from our own place, with the crackling birch fires, and with the happy consciousness that we are far removed from any neighborhood shops for last-minute hurried purchases to distract from the fun and cheer. As Mr. Homer so often exclaims, "We are a great crowd when we get together."

DURING the Winter of my second season in Paris my teacher, M. Fidèle Koenig, one of the truly great masters for the voice, told me that Maurice Grau, who was then impresario of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York and managing director of Covent Garden, was passing through the city. "I will arrange to have him hear you sing," he exclaimed.

This was one of the great moments of my life. When I stood alone upon the stage of one of the largest concert halls in Paris, with the lone figure of the great Grau seated by my husband in the orchestra, I was as one in an unreal, remote and romantic world. "It will be all over after I have sung two arias," I thought. M. Koenig was at the piano. But when I was through Mr. Grau asked for other songs, and the minutes slipped by into the second hour.

MADAME HOMER AS AMNERIS IN "AÏDA"

Mr. Grau was very encouraging, but he made no promises of any kind. "Of course," he said, "we never bring out débutantes at the Metropolitan. You must have at least one year's experience over here. If you go to the Paris Grand Opera, you will have to sign a three-years'-contract. Your best plan would be to sing in one of the French provincial theaters. You may not find it very agreeable, but it is the only way for you to get experience."

I followed Mr. Grau's counsel to the letter. "From time to time, I would like to hear from you," he said to my husband. And to me he said, "Learn your rôles at once." It was thus that my first ordeal came to an end.

M. Koenig did not allow more than a few weeks to elapse before I had a hearing at the most important operatic agency in Paris. The grand aria from the fourth act of "The Prophet" is the traditional test in France for the contralto voice: it has tremendous range and difficulties. While I was singing this aria, a gray-haired man stepped into the room. He stood there listening. "He is only a member of the agency," I thought. But to my amazement he came to me when I was through, and asked: "How would you like an engagement for the Summer season at Vichy?"

M. Koenig was more elated than I. Excitement and joy were written on his face, for he knew—as I did not at the time—that the Summer season at Vichy was second only to that of the Grand Opera at Paris. For to Vichy came the cultured audiences from the capitals of Europe.

Within three days the contract was signed. "You will prepare eight rôles," said M. Bussac, the director of the Vichy Opera. Among these were Ortrud in "Lohengrin," Venus in "Tannhauser," Dalila in "Samson et Dalila," Leonore in "La Favorita" and Margared in "Le Roi d'Ys."

This, of course, meant a tremendous amount of work. It also meant that I might not sing all these rôles, as M. Bussac did not know at that time how many of these operas he would produce; but he must be able to choose and feel sure that I would be ready with all of them. I think he did say that I should make my début in "La Favorita," which is, perhaps, the most difficult vocally of all the rôles in this list.

WHAT a thrilling sensation it was to know that the contract was signed and that I was surely going to sing in some great operatic parts! The disadvantage, almost paralyzing in its effect, which confronts most girls in studying these great rôles, is the uncertainty as to whether they will ever have an opportunity to sing them.

It was then January, and I was to make my début in June. We plunged into the preparation of these eight operatic rôles. M. Koenig was a past master in the vocal interpretation of them, and Paul Lehrie, my teacher in dramatic action, was generally spoken of as the greatest singing actor in France.

We went to Vichy in May with the comforting knowledge that I could go on the stage and feel at home in any of my rôles. We found a furnished home in the lower half of the "Villa Violette," where there was an attractive garden in which baby Louise could romp and play. Our surroundings were charming. But there was one disquieting feature. This was the year of the Spanish-American war. An arena for bull-fights had been built in the town, and in the house directly opposite us lived the matadors, picadors and all. On the days when there were no bull-fights, they would sit in front of

Continued on page 84

HER DOG DAY

But evening brings to Emily a message in the stars

By L. M. MONTGOMERY

Drawing by Joseph M. Clement

THERE SHE SAT, A STATELY, ALOOF FIGURE. CHU-CHIN PERCHED ON THE PLUSH DAVENPORT, COCKILY LOOKING FROM ONE TO THE OTHER

SHREWSBURY had a mild sensation in May when Janet Royal came home to Prince Edward Island from "the States," with her wonderful dresses, her brilliant reputation and her chow dog. She was the literary editor of a big woman's magazine, published in New York.

Emily Byrd Starr, who was in her third year in the Shrewsbury high school and had literary ambitions, held her breath when she heard of Miss Royal's arrival. Oh, if she could only have a talk with her! When Mr. Towers, of the Times, for whom Emily had done odd reporting, told her to interview Miss Royal, Emily trembled between terror and delight.

"We both worship at the same altar, but she is high priestess and I am only the humblest acolyte," wrote Emily in her journal.

But Miss Royal sent back a charming letter in answer to Emily's timid note of request. Emily has that letter to this day.

Emily thrilled to the ends of her toes over this letter. "Yours fraternally" it had ended—oh, heavenly! And on Friday she was bidden to see and talk intimately with her high priestess.

Mrs. Angela Royal, who called that evening to see Aunt Ruth, with whom Emily was living during term-time, didn't exactly seem to think Janet Royal a high priestess or a wonder; but then, of course, a prophetess is apt to have scant honor in her own country, and Mrs. Royal had brought Janet up.

"I don't say but what she's got on well," she confided to Aunt Ruth, while Emily listened in secret indignation. "She gets a big salary. But she's full of foreign notions. And it really makes me sick the fuss she makes over that dog of hers—Chu-Chin, she calls him. He rules the house. My poor cat can't call her soul her own. And Janet is so touchy about him. When I complained about him sleeping on my plush davenport, she was so vexed she wouldn't speak for a day. That's a thing I don't like about Janet. She gets so high and mighty when she is offended, and when she's offended with one she's offended with everybody. I hope nothing will upset her before you come on Friday, Emily. But for pity's sake, keep on good terms with that chow. If you offend him, Janet wouldn't have anything to do with you, supposing you were Shakespeare himself."

EMILY awoke Friday morning with the conviction that this was to be one of the crucial days of her life. She had had a terrible dream of sitting spellbound before Miss Royal, unable to utter one word except "Chu-Chin," which she repeated, parrot-like, whenever Miss Royal asked her a question. It poured rain all the forenoon, much to her dismay, but at noon it cleared up brilliantly. Emily, pale with the solemnity of the occasion, made of her toilet an important rite. It was so necessary that she look her best. How glad she was that she had a new hat! And it was very becoming, with its cascade of purple violets that fell from it over her lovely unbroken waves of black hair, just touching the milk-whiteness of her neck.

Emily went up the gravel walk of Ashburn as a worshiper approaching a sacred shrine. A fairly large, fluffy, white dog was sitting half-way up the walk. Emily looked at him curiously. She decided that Chu-Chin was handsome but not clean. He had evidently been having a glorious time in some mud-puddle. Emily hoped he would approve of her, but keep his distance. Probably he approved of her, for he trotted up the walk with her, amiably waving a tail that would have been plumy had it not been wet and muddy. He stood expectantly beside her while she rang the bell, and as soon as the door was opened he made a joyous bound on the woman who stood within, almost knocking her down.

It was Miss Royal herself. She had, as Emily saw at once, no beauty but unmistakable distinction, from the crown of her gold-bronze hair to the toes of her satin slippers. She was arrayed in a marvelous dress of mauve velvet.

Chu-Chin gave one rapturous slobbery wipe at her face with his tongue, then rushed on into Mrs. Royal's parlor. The beautiful mauve dress was spotted from collar to hem with muddy paw marks. Emily thought that Chu-Chin fully deserved Mrs. Royal's bad opinion, and mentally remarked that if he were her dog he should behave better. But Miss Royal did not reprove him in any way, and perhaps Emily's secret criticism was subconsciously prompted by her instant perception that Miss Royal's greeting, while perfectly courteous, was very cold. Emily had somehow, from her letter, expected a warmer reception.

"Won't you come in and sit down?" said Miss Royal. She ushered Emily in, waved to a comfortable chair, and sat down on a stiff and uncompromising Chippendale. Somehow, Emily, sensitive at all times, and abnormally so just now, felt that Miss Royal's selection of a chair was ominous. Why hadn't she sunk chummily into the depths of the big velvet Morris? But there she sat, a stately, aloof figure, paying not the slightest attention to the mud-stains on her beautiful dress. Chu-Chin perched on the plush davenport, cockily looking from one to the other. It was all too evident that something had "upset" Miss Royal, and Emily's heart suddenly sank like lead.

"It's—a lovely day," she faltered. She knew it was an incredibly stupid thing to say, but she had to say something when Miss Royal wouldn't say anything. The silence was too awful.

"Very lovely," agreed Miss Royal, not looking at Emily at all, but at Chu-Chin, who was thumping a beautiful silk-and-lace cushion with his wet tail. Emily hated Chu-Chin. It was a relief to hate him since as yet she did not dare to hate Miss Royal. But she wished herself a thousand miles away. Oh, if she only hadn't that little bundle of manuscripts on her lap! She would

Continued on page 80

"Her Dog Day," copyright, 1925, by L. M. Macdonald

What Men should Know about Homes

By

HERBERT HOOVER

Secretary of Commerce of the United States

THE discovery that human happiness hinges upon many prosaic factors is not a new one. But the prosperity and contentment of the American family to-day depend largely on the realization of this very truth.

Nowhere is this fact better demonstrated than in the conduct of the home and in the business affairs of the family. It is the human and spiritual fruit of home life that must be accepted as the final measure of a home's success. If as a business institution the home is inefficiently managed and perpetually in financial difficulties, there is little about it that is conducive to a happy family life.

It is probably easier to-day than ever before for a family of America to have a comfortable, attractive and sanitary home, and to operate it with less drudgery. But many a family is failing to take advantage of this opportunity. Every year American families lose heavily because they fail to understand the simple principles of family economics. For some families these losses mean a foregoing of luxuries; for others they mean inability to educate the children properly, dependency in old age, actual want and privation. Poor budgeting, inexperience in shopping, lack of thrift, and failure to participate in civic affairs are some of the causes of this.

TOO often our young people expect to build a secure marriage on high hopes and dreams alone. Splendid as this is, their chances for happiness are small unless sooner or later they learn the every-day business of living.

The highest type of family life has the best chance of developing, it seems to me, in a home in which the wife and the children have suitable material comfort, in which all members of the family enjoy good health and plenty of wholesome recreation, and in which the father, after he has provided his children with an adequate education, has saved enough to be able to contribute his share to charity and public service. No family can achieve all these things without intelligent planning and without careful management on the part of both the husband and the wife.

Men and women who have studied the home life of the American people believe that frequently too much of the responsibility rests upon the wife alone and that the husband has not been adequately prepared to shoulder his share of the duties of the home. If the husband were better equipped to care for the problems of home management, the wife would be relieved of continuous and often unshared worry over financial matters, and she would be better able to exert the spiritual influence which is so great a part of the woman's contribution to home life.

WITH a few exceptions, the boys of America are not trained in the subjects which the head of every family should understand. The young husband learns them by experience—often a costly process for himself and his family. The average couple start in married life by spending their funds as their immediate wants seem to demand. But unless they both completely understand the principles of household and family expenditures, the wife soon finds too little money left for housekeeping, or they find themselves confronted with a deficit. It is greatly to the advantage of both young people if they share their financial responsibility from the start. Neither should be kept in ignorance of how much money there is or where it goes.

Every boy, before he marries, should have some idea of budgeting and of properly accounting for the expenses of the home. He should know something of the various types of insurance; the precautions and steps involved in acquiring and financing a home; how to make a will; and how to plan, furnish, equip and repair the home.

This is one place where our educational system stops too short. The aim of high schools, colleges and universities is to equip a man for life—and life to the normal boy means eventually a home and family. Great numbers of young men marry during their early twenties, and yet there has been no training to fit them for this most important job.

When Herbert Hoover speaks, thousands of people all over the country stop to listen, because they know his wise foresighted advice is based on fundamentals. His remarkable experience as Food Administrator in Europe, his duties as Secretary of Commerce, and his extraordinary understanding of human nature enable him to view the economic status of the American family to-day with unusual perception and sympathy. This month he cuts deep into the stubborn roots from which spring unhappiness in the home and discontent in the nation. THE DELINEATOR is proud to announce that Mr. Hoover has written two other equally penetrating articles for later issues

IT WAS not until twenty-five years ago that we began systematic school training of our girls in the method of running a home. How long will it be before we start with our boys?

It should be done at once. It would be entirely possible to start this training in a simple way in the grammar or high school. The fundamental principles of family economics would then become an integral part of the boy's equipment for life. The training might be given in a separate course or might be linked with other studies, such as civics, or with the new courses developing in social science.

A college course in domestic, community and civic relations might be given jointly under the departments of political science, economics, sociology or social ethics, hygiene, and pedagogy, or under some one of them. Its object would be to prepare men students for practical life and responsibilities in a systematic, not a hit-or-miss, way.

Recently the dean of a famous old college in New England was asked his opinion on the addition of a course in family economics to the curriculum of his institution.

"It could be done, of course," he said, "and it would be a splendid departure. But before such a radical step could be taken, some name for it other than 'home economics' would have to be determined upon. Otherwise the undergraduate would laugh at it and cynically pass it by."

Yet this same college official told of the unhappy experience of his own son who came to grief through lack of just this sort of training. The boy married immediately after he graduated, when he was fortunate enough to be earning fifty dollars a week. This was in June, and despite the fact that both the young man and his bride had enough clothes to last them for a year and although their apartment had been given to them, in October they were eight hundred dollars in debt. Neither the man nor his wife had the faintest idea how to budget their expenses. They did not know what they could do with or what they should do without on fifty dollars a week.

IT IS gratifying to learn that such a prominent institution as Cornell University now has a home-economics course for men students. When this course was opened, there were thirty-four enrolments. The men studied budgeting the home, family nutrition, and the scale of rents and mortgages safe to carry on a given income. They also obtained practical information on zoning and its relation to the home, on town assessments, and on social conditions affecting property. Not a man dropped the course, an evidence of genuine interest.

No boy who actually faces the problem will think that a course in family economics is beneath his dignity or his interest. On the other hand, many a young man is aware of his uncertainty about the details of homemaking. Sometimes this very lack of confidence goes so far as to make him avoid marriage. When a young man has learned just what are the responsibilities of a family and home, he can proceed intelligently to equip himself for the task of assuming them.

The reasons for the maintenance of good schools, of adequate parks and playgrounds, and other responsibilities of the local government, often seem intangible to a young man until he finds himself face to face with the problem of educating his children and of finding a home with the right kind of surroundings. Then he feels in them vital personal interest, but finds it difficult to cope with them effectively because neither he nor others like himself have studied the means of influencing public action.

THE happiness of our people rests upon the happiness in each individual home, and happiness in the home depends to a great extent upon the absence of worry. If good management lessens financial difficulties, provides comfortably for both parents and children and permits regular savings, it reduces the occasions for discord and so tends to reduce the number of domestic disagreements and unsuccessful marriages.

Training young men as well as young women in family economics will also undoubtedly lessen the divorce evil. Young people who begin life together adequately trained and equipped are surely more likely to become useful citizens and achieve real happiness and contentment.

There is also this special consideration. We have dilated for years on the superior value of farm life for the development of character and health. Yet our civilization is steadily transforming us from an agricultural to a town people. One hundred years ago we needed fifty per cent. of our people to be on the farms in order to supply the nation with food. To-day, due to the improvements in agricultural skill, we need only thirty per cent. So seventy per cent. of our people are town-dwellers. If we are to build up character and health in the towns, we have got to do it through the home, for the home is the unit of the nation, its moral and its spiritual foundation.

THE PEEL TRAIT

By JOSEPH C. LINCOLN

Love and heredity at war in a Cape Cod fishing village

THE STORY SO FAR

CAPTAIN ELIPHALET PEEL was sartin-sure to get what he went after—and the natives of Wapatomac knew it! He snatched his first wife (later the mother of Amarias and Susanna Peel) from under the nose of her avowed fiancé. After her death he snatched at love again, winning a young school-teacher, who bore him a daughter, Lettice. Cap'n Peel sailed always bows-on to victory by means of a single watchword—common sense. It brought him ships, wealth, retirement from the sea. He then lived serenely for a time in Wapatomac with Lettice, who was now motherless. His older children, grown up and married, felt bitterly jealous. As time went on, two suitors came to the captain's cottage—David Booker, the sporty young hotel-keeper, and Farley Crowell, an artist—and Lettice loved the latter. Storm clouds began to pile up in her bright sky, for her father, used to ruling above and below decks on sea and land, intended that she should marry Dave Booker, whom he viewed as a good investment. Vaguely he felt mutiny in the air. So he set about, with guile, to apply his old-time common sense.

PART II

SO CAPTAIN PEEL changed his tactics utterly. He said not another word in Crowell's disfavor and, when the young man called the next evening but one, greeted him in a manner which was not so pleasant as to excite suspicion on his daughter's part, but was, on the other hand, not so rude as to arouse resentment. Farley called many times thereafter, but never once did Eliphalet offer an objection. Lettice wondered, of course; but she was forced to believe that her declaration of independence had had the effect she hoped for. Which was precisely the belief her father wished her to have.

David Booker was calling, also. The captain did not say a word against Dave, but, profiting by experience, neither did he say a word for him. Booker was years older than Lettice and was clever and a man of the world, even if that world was pretty exclusively enclosed within the borders of Ostable County. He sensed the situation in regard to his rival, and was always good-natured and friendly when they met, particularly when the meetings were in the presence of the object of that rivalry. Crowell was not always as diplomatic, for he did not like Dave Booker. When he ventured to refer to some well-known incidents in Booker's history, incidents in which other girls had figured, she turned upon him and told him he ought to be ashamed of himself. A quarrel which lasted three days began then and there. It ended, naturally, by Farley's begging her pardon, and, through her, that of his rival, Dave Booker.

Amarias Peel and Susanna Crusit were growing anxious concerning Crowell's intimacy with their half-sister and held conferences. When they approached their father with the result of those conferences, he shut them up in a hurry.

"You leave the handlin' of the cruise to me," he told them. "I ain't so old yet but what I can see ten feet ahead of the jib-boom."

"But, father" protested Amarias, "you're lettin' it go too far altogether. This Farley Crowell is good lookin' and—and what the books call romantic, and the first thing you know—the very first thing that's goin' to happen—"

"That'll do. It ain't the first thing that counts. It's the last thing that does the trick in the long run. You leave this to me, I tell you. And stop talkin', you and Susanna. Keep your hands off the wheel."

Mrs. Crusit put in a word. She was vice-president of the Methodist County League by this time, and was not easily silenced.

"Father," she snapped, "you make me cross. You let Lettice wind you around her finger. Can't you see what that Crowell is after? He's after your money—Lettice's share of it, anyhow."

Captain Eliphalet smiled. He nodded with deliberation

"YOU and Amarias are mighty anxious about my money, ain't you?" he observed. "Well, it is mine and I'm pretty average healthy, so far as I know. As for Farley Crowell marryin' Lettice—well, I say he shan't. I'm skipper of my own ship yet a while, and so far I've generally managed to make the port I set out for. I don't need you two to take observations and keep me from runnin' ashore."

"But, father, what are you going to do?"

"Do? I'll do same as I've always done—keep my eyes open and use common sense."

Crowell continued to call and so did Booker, and, as far as Wapatomac could see, the race was neck and neck. What determined the winner was an offer which came to Farley from a Boston business house, a chance brought about through the influence of a Summer visitor who had taken a fancy to the young fellow and was trying to help him get on in the world. Crowell told Lettice about it the very morning of the day when the letter came. The pair had reached a more definite understanding than even Captain Eliphalet realized, although he suspected and feared almost as much.

Lettice was above all things practical. Being a Peel she could not help it. The offer impressed her.

"It is a splendid chance for you, Farley," she said. "It would mean—why, it might mean almost anything."

Farley was doubtful. "If I was a business man," he said, "I couldn't ask anything better. They'll take me into the office up there and, if I make good, they'll push me ahead as fast as I'm fit to go. But I'm not a business man at all, Lettice, and you know it."

"I don't know anything of the kind. I know you don't like office work, accounts, and that sort of thing——"

"Don't like 'em! I hate 'em. I'd rather die than keep books."

Lettice ignored the interruption. She finished her sentence.

"But in time you might learn to like them better," she went on. "You might force yourself to like them. People can force themselves to Drawings by Charles R. Chickering.

BEFORE THEY SAID GOOD NIGHT HE VOWED THAT HE WOULD ACCEPT THIS CHANCE OF EARNING MONEY WHICH SHOULD BRING THEM TOGETHER IN A LITTLE HOUSE OF THEIR OWN, WHERE SHE COULD BE HIS COMPANION AND COMFORT WHILE HE PAINTED HIS WAY TO FAME

MISS SYLVIA TOLD HIM ALL ABOUT IT. WHEN SHE FINISHED HE SHOOK HIS HEAD. "A MAN CAN'T CAP'N TWO VESSELS IN THE SAME RACE," HE SAID. "HE CAN'T FISH AND CUT BAIT AT THE SAME TIME. NOT AND DO EITHER JOB WELL, HE CAN'T"

like things they don't like at first. Father says the first voyage he made he hated the sea and everything connected with it. But, after a while, he learned to like it better than anything else. It might be the same way with you in business."

"No, it wouldn't. Besides, I don't want to be a business man. I wouldn't give a cent to be boss of the biggest store in Boston. I want to paint pictures. You know I do. And Mr. Frazier told me——"

"He told you he thought you had some talent. But he said he couldn't tell yet how much you had, and that, unless you had a lot, a picture painter always had a hard struggle to get along on what he earned. And, even at the best, it was a long, long fight. He said you may turn out to be the kind that makes a living from his painting. Or you may be like so many others, just the quarter-way kind. And they never get anywhere."

FARLEY'S eyes flashed. "I'm going to get somewhere," he declared. "You bet I am!"

"I am betting on it. I'm betting as much as you are, it seems to me."

"Look here, Lettice. You believe in me, don't you?"

"Of course I believe in you. If I didn't, do you think I should—should say what I have said to you?"

He was conscience-stricken and penitent.

"I'm sorry, dear," he exclaimed. "I know you're forty times smarter than I am and a hundred times too good for me. And it is because you do believe in me—and—and care for me—that I am so anxious to make good. It may take time. Mr. Frazier said I should have to study and study. You would have to wait. But you've told me you were willing to wait."

"So I am. But as long as you stay down here you can't do much more than you are doing now, just keep practising on your own hook. And I don't see how you can afford to give up work altogether and go to Boston and study. That would cost money. And, besides——"

"Well? What besides?"

"Besides, you might not succeed—not succeed enough, I mean."

"Lettice, you don't believe in me."

"I do. Please don't say that. What I mean is this: Here is a chance, a good chance, for you to get to Boston and earn money enough to pay your way and for your painting lessons. You could try hard at the office—you must do that. But I'm sure there are places where you could study at night, study painting, I mean. And in that way we—we might not have to wait so long."

He took her in his arms. Before they said good night he had vowed that he would write acceptance of the Boston offer the very next day. It was to be accepted, not as a finality, of course—he was to be a great artist in the end—but as a means of earning money, money which should bring them together in a little home of their own, where she could be his companion and comfort while he painted his way to fame and fortune.

Much of this was said in the dining-room on the way to the side door. Captain Eliphalet's bedroom was at the top of a flight of stairs opening off that dining-room. The door at the foot of the stairs was ajar and that of the captain's room open. Eliphalet happened to be awake, and, although he did no deliberate eavesdropping, he could not help hearing. He heard enough to make him realize that the crisis was upon him, and that if he wished to succeed in his accustomed and boasted habit of getting what he started after he must start immediately and work fast. But he also realized that here was a case when his usual straight-ahead methods must be modified.

The following forenoon he dropped in—casually, of course—upon Miss Sylvia Perry, Farley Crowell's spinster aunt. Miss Perry was forty-one, librarian at the Wapatomac public library, prominent in the Shakespeare Reading Society, and romantic. She idolized her nephew and in her day-dreams saw him classed with Rembrandt and C. D. Gibson and the man who painted the "flower pictures" which came as colored supplements with the Christian Templar's Monthly. Captain Eliphalet was quite aware of her tastes and failings, and had more than once referred to her as a "soft-headed old maid." But no trace of this estimate was apparent in his manner on this particular morning. Miss Sylvia, arrayed in a gingham gown and a very youthful garden hat—trimmed in accordance with instructions printed in the Christian Templar's Monthly—was pruning her double row of sweet peas. Eliphalet, pausing at the gate, commented favorably upon the weather. Miss Sylvia agreed that it was a lovely day. He praised the sweet peas. She admitted that they did look sort of pretty and Summery. She invited him to inspect the rest of the flower-garden. He accepted the invitation.

THE conversation moved, with the conversers, about the garden, and after a time centered upon Farley Crowell. Miss Perry, always delighted to sound her nephew's praises, sounded them now. The captain spoke of the young man's talent for painting. It ought to be developed, he said, or words to that effect.

Miss Sylvia agreed. It was precisely what she had always said. "Farley is gifted," she declared, "real, right up-and-down gifted, and those who have gifts given 'em are duty bound, it seems to me, to cultivate 'em. I tell him so. But he gets kind of discouraged sometimes. He is anxious to make money, of course. He——"

She paused. The name of Lettice Peel was at the tip of her tongue, but she discreetly kept it there. "He wants to make money," she hurried on, "and learning to paint is, of course, a long and painstaking work. 'But think of the reward when you have learned,' I tell him. He says, 'Yes, but perhaps I never can really learn.' 'Nonsense!' I said——"

Her visitor broke in here. "Nonsense is what I say, too," he announced. "Learn! Why, he is as good as learned already. Look at that signboard he painted for the New York Store. That's the best sign in Ostable County. A boy that can paint a sign like that hadn't ought to think of doin' anything else. No, he hadn't."

The lady's eyes shone. "I'm so glad to hear you say so, Cap'n Peel," she exclaimed. "And just now, especially, when poor Farley is so troubled, not knowing what is the right thing for him to do. Cap'n Peel," she added, lowering her voice, "if I was to tell you something that was a great secret, would you promise not to tell a soul? Of course I know you won't— Well, Farley has had an offer from a big wholesale firm in Boston to be a clerk with them. He is thinking of taking the offer. Do you think he ought to take it and give up his painting? I don't."

CAPTAIN ELIPHALET was shocked at the idea. Only diplomatically shocked at first. Before expressing a definite opinion, he said, he thought maybe he ought to hear a little more about the offer. Miss Sylvia told him all about it. When she had finished, he shook his head.

"The way I look at a thing like that is just this way," he said. "A man can't cap'n two vessels in the same race. He can't fish and cut bait at the same time. Not and do either job well, he can't. That's sense. If Farley's goin' into trade, let him go and drop his picture paintin' altogether. If he wants to and means to paint for a livin', let him do that. If I was he, I'd—well, but I couldn't paint a hen so's anybody could tell it from a horse. If I could, I'd keep on paintin' and nobody should stop me."

Miss Sylvia beamed. "There! I hoped you'd feel

Continued on page 92

Drawing by J. Scott Williams

Reducing in Spots

By FIELDING H. YOST

Director of Intercollegiate Athletics, University of Michigan

A TENDENCY to accumulate superfluous flesh is the bête noire of so many women that it might almost be called one of our national troubles. It is hardly diplomatic to tell a woman that she is "fat," but if you call her adipose tissue by some gentler name she is usually willing to listen to any kind of a "cure," no matter how fantastic it may be.

There seems to be an idea that fat is a mysterious disease, mysterious as to cause and as to cure. The result is that any kind of a reducing method, no matter how absurd, dangerous or disagreeable, will find somebody who will "try it once." As a matter of fact, fat is just the natural result of a cause or a combination of causes, and the way to actually get rid of the fat is to fight the cause.

Fat in excessive quantities is due to overnutrition, underoxidation, or both. In plain blunt terms, this means that if you are too fat you eat too much and exercise too little. Obviously you will have to make a change in your eating and your exercise program if you wish to get rid of your excess weight and to avoid piling up a fresh store. There is no secret about reducing. A woman who is really in earnest can take off practically any amount of flesh down to the point where nature has fixed a minimum consistent with good health. Of course she could actually starve herself to death if she had the moral courage to do so.

Nature intended the body to be kept in a state of physiological equilibrium. That formidable sounding term means simply that the amount of food absorbed should just balance the amount of energy expended. Bear in mind that it is the amount of food absorbed that counts toward maintaining this equilibrium, not the amount eaten. When the building process and the wearing-away process just balance, the body is in equilibrium, and assuming that the individual has attained full growth she neither gains nor loses weight.

I have known healthy, active persons to maintain the same weight, without variation of more than a pound or two, for years at a time. I do not mean that every time they were weighed they would be the same to the ounce. But if their weight were taken every week under the same conditions, there would be practically no difference in the reading of the scales.

Now, if we have been in a state of approximate equilibrium and then suddenly increase the building process without increasing the wearing-away process to a corresponding degree, we naturally gain in weight. Conversely, if we increase the "burning up" without supplying more fuel, we lose weight. In other words, excessive fat means that you eat too much and exercise too little, the two terms being relative to each other. One might eat tremendously and yet work off so much tissue by exercise that one would grow thin. Or one might eat moderately and by avoiding all wearing away—physically and mentally—put on flesh.

Having settled the causes for the accumulation of fat, it ought to be easy enough for any one to put an end to the distasteful process. However, one should remember that in order to do so it is necessary to follow out a program of self-denial and conscientious work.

There is no short cut to getting thin and staying thin. Massage, special soaps, baths and other artificial methods that are held up as "painless processes" are about ninety per cent. buncombe, while some of them are actually dangerous. Undoubtedly, special treatments of various kinds will serve to remove fat from some portions of the body, but unless one goes right to the roots of the trouble and regulates diet and exercise, the fat is bound to come back.

In general, when the body's building process is faster than the wearing-away process the surplus fat is stored in those tissues that are least active. This accounts for the fact that adipose deposits are generally first seen in the region of the abdomen, the hips, the neck, the chin and the lower part of the back. In some cases the fat is accumulated in a general, evenly distributed layer throughout the subcutaneous tissue. In the latter case the reducing treatment must be entirely general in nature, while in the former the stopping of the supply of tissue-building foods and local treatments will usually bring about the desired result.

A writer has divided obesity into three classes—the enviable, the comical and the pitiable. The first is a pleasing rotundity; the second, a jovial embonpoint of the Falstaffian type; and the third, a sad and unsightly deformity.

Many women who picture themselves as fat—though they wouldn't like to hear any one else say so—are in the enviable stage. All that they need to do is to watch their diet and take enough wholesome exercise to prevent putting on more weight. In other words, if they can maintain the status quo, they have nothing to worry about.

In the second or comical stage, which always reminds me of a pug-dog, and in the third stage, also, drastic methods are necessary. Obesity has then passed from a threat to an actuality, and it is time to regard it as an affliction that must be cured. A radical reduction of diet and as great an increase in the exercise program as the health of the person will permit are in order.

Reducing "courses" may be divided into three classes, measured by the rapidly of reduction desired. In the first, or "easy stage," the individual loses two or three pounds a month. This requires no great sacrifice. The woman merely alters her diet by the reduction of fat and starchy foods and of sugar, substituting for these things foods of smaller caloric value. An increase in the exercise program must accompany the altered diet.

In the second class, where a loss of from five to ten pounds a month is expected, the diet is more strict and the exercises are more varied. This class is recommended for strong, plethoric persons. It is also especially valuable for those of the very heavy type in whom disorders of the heart, arteries, bronchi or digestive apparatus would render it dangerous to undertake the more strenuous program of the third class.

In the third class, careful supervision is necessary, and the "cure" can best be taken at an institution. As much as thirty pounds a month can be lost with safety, but the course should not be extended beyond five or six weeks. Strict dieting and strenuous exercise longer than that will often prove injurious. When the desired amount of flesh can not be lost in one "dose," a rest of a month or two with less exercise and a little more liberal diet is prescribed. Then the severe program can be resumed and the process repeated until the subject is "down to weight."

It is an easy matter for any one to obtain an authoritative dietetic table to be followed in connection with a reducing program. In general, the rules call for a substitution of foods of low caloric value for those previously used as staple articles of diet. It is entirely possible for a person to "get enough to eat"—that is, to feel satisfied—without taking more calories than are consistent with a reducing process. Vegetables that grow above the ground, except in the pod, are valuable because they are bulky in comparison with their caloric value. They fill the stomach and produce a sensation of satiety, and also act favorably upon the digestive tract. With the exception of bananas, sweet grapes, figs, dates and raisins, fruits may be eaten without reserve.

Since the weight of an obese body is rapidly reduced by restricting the intake of liquids to a minimum, any reduction program should provide for a sparing use of water, milk and other beverages. When pugilists want to "make" a certain weight, they "dry out" on the last few days of the training course, and thus are able to get within the desired poundage without sacrificing too much strength. It is a fact, too, that one is inclined to eat less when the amount of liquids taken into the stomach is restricted.

The foregoing statements deal with the subject of general reducing. For the purpose of removing fat that has accumulated only on certain portions of the body, without having spread to other parts to an appreciable extent, there are numerous special exercises. These are to

Concluded on page 68

THE BOOK THAT WOMEN HAVE BEEN WAITING FOR

Are You Too Plump in Spots?

Does a too fat arm, a double chin, a thickened ankle—or some other plump spot mar your beauty? THE DELINEATOR is offering you a means to reduce, not by harmful, dangerous drugs, but by healthful, easy and effective exercise, the one way to achieve really permanent results. Doctor Lillian E. Shaw, a woman doctor who is also a specialist in physical education, has written a booklet on "Reducing in Spots" that every women will want to own and use. Its price is ridiculously low—only twenty-five cents. Send for it today to the Health Department of THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y.

GOOD SPORTS

A father and mother who fought their fights instead of each other

By

CHRISTINE WHITING PARMENTER

"RUN ALONG, KIDS, AND ENJOY YOURSELVES, IF THOSE STICKY DRUG STORE MIXTURES ARE WHAT YOU CRAVE. BUT DON'T PITY US"

Drawing by Charles R. Chickering

DON CARTER was but a three-months' bridegroom when he began to wonder if his hasty marriage had been a mistake. In three years he acknowledged, with a sense of shame and disloyalty, that it was; but three years more had passed before he faced the question squarely, and asked himself: "What are you going to do about it?"

This question was forced upon him by a disagreement that began at breakfast, a trivial enough thing in itself, but he had spoken angrily, and Elizabeth had answered in the same tone. It was Mary, their sensitive little daughter, who brought about the climax by bursting into a storm of tears at sight of her beloved parents quarreling. Elizabeth had caught the child to her in an agony of self-reproach, and Don had knelt by her chair, kissing the small hand and assuring the child that he and Mother were "only playing." Mary, her tears dried at last, had demanded that he "kiss Mother, too," and Don had obeyed, thinking afterward that more real feeling had gone into that kiss than in any he had given his wife for years.

Peace was restored when he left for his train half-an-hour later. He had kissed Elizabeth again at parting, and apologized with a hasty: "Sorry, dear. It was all my fault." Yet he knew, even as he made it, that the statement was far from true, and wondered, wearily, if Elizabeth realized it herself.

This was on a Saturday, and Don was booked for an afternoon of golf. Usually on these occasions he went straight to the country club from the train, and sometimes Elizabeth came out later in the car and picked him up. Often she brought the children with her, and Don never failed to experience a thrill of pride in his two sturdy youngsters and their undeniably pretty mother. For, whatever her shortcomings, Elizabeth had managed to "keep her looks," Don once said boastfully, and "without the aid of a paint-box, either!" She appeared very little older than the girl who had taken his heart by storm at a senior prom, and whom he had married only a month after his graduation. There were times when he was conscious of a feeling of resentment toward the uncle whose generous legacy had made this early marriage possible.

Don did not play golf that afternoon. He took a boat down the harbor, and going ashore at the last landing, tramped up the beach till he lost the Saturday crowd, and found a deserted sand dune. All day the question he had asked himself: "What are you going to do about it?" had been hammering for an answer. It was not to be side-tracked longer.

He settled down comfortably on the sand dune, and looked off thoughtfully at the restless sea. Once, in the days of their brief engagement, he had come here with Elizabeth. They had brought a picnic supper—toasted sandwiches over a bonfire—planned the rosy future that was to be theirs. Gosh! How long ago that was! he thought, a bitter look creeping into his honest eyes. It came to him clearly that he hadn't known the real Elizabeth at all—until he married her. Possibly no man knew the girl he married—till it was too late! Don pulled himself together impatiently. That line of thought wouldn't get him anywhere. And all marriages weren't failures. His father and mother——

Don choked up a little. They were gone now, but their memories would be forever green in the hearts of their children. What a home they had made together! Together! That was the gist of the whole thing. If a team were forever pulling in different directions, how could it expect to get along without a wreck eventually?

As if in an effort to gather strength, Don drew a deep breath of the refreshing air. What were they going to do, Elizabeth and he? There was nothing vitally wrong with either of them. The trouble lay in an utter lack of congeniality. Don loved music. A symphony concert bored Elizabeth to tears. She frankly adored the movies—the sort of movie that drove Don to profanity! She could dance all night and never tire. Well, Don didn't object to dancing, but a little of it went a good way, and he had to take an early train every morning. He liked to read aloud. Elizabeth didn't object to the reading, but her taste in literature was a far cry from his. What had they in common, anyhow? Was there anything on which to build? Any one thing that they both loved?

SUDDENLY Don laughed, a dreary laugh with a hint of tears behind it. He had forgotten the children! It was safe to say that however uncongenial they might be, both he and Elizabeth would oppose divorce because of the unhappiness it would bring to the little son and daughter. Don knew. His chum at Exeter had been the child of divorced parents. Poor little Ted! Six months with a mother whom he adored—another six with a father whom he worshipped—not knowing whom to believe—not even understanding——

"No," vowed Don grimly, his eyes fixed on the far horizon, "my boy shall never go through what Ted did; but that's not the whole thing, either. It's something bigger—the reason why I'll fight to keep my home together. I was pretty young when I made my marriage vows, and Elizabeth, poor girl, was younger still. Perhaps we didn't know what we were doing; but I want my kids to remember the sort of home that I remember, and unless I love their mother—and she loves me . . ."

It was after seven o'clock when Don reached home. Elizabeth met him at the door, accompanied by the children who were in their nighties.

"You were late," said little Mary reproachfully, "and we had a shortcake!"

Don kissed her; lifted his two-year-old son to his shoulder, and would have saluted his wife as well, but she moved away.

"Didn't Ted phone you I'd be late?" he questioned. "I asked him to let you know."

"He forgot till supper time. The children were disappointed, so I let them wait for you. Have you had anything to eat? I saved some shortcake."

"Good girl!" said Don approvingly. "I had a sandwich, but I've room for a bit more. Let the kids stay up until I swallow something, and then I'll help tuck 'em in."

Later, when the children were safe in bed, Don sought

Continued on page 88

Moulding your Child's Character

"The world is mine!"

By ARNOLD GESELL, PH.D., M.D.

Director of the Yale Psycho-Clinic and Professor of Child Hygiene, Yale University

WHEN a psychologist uses the term personality, he means something real, not a mysterious psychic force which is completely beyond our comprehension and control. He thinks of that actual living web of impulses, feelings and motives which make a child what he is. Although we can not photograph that web or even draw a diagram of it, we can trace some of its important strands, and perhaps we can also prove that the pattern for the web is not woven by blind fate.

Parents sometimes take a rather hopeless attitude toward the personality faults of their child. "He acts as though he were possessed," "He is beyond me," "There is no reason whatever why he should behave that way," "He has brains enough to do better," we hear them say.

True—there may be faults of personality even in tiny children which are vexatious enough to tax the most patient parent, but they never justify a fatalistic despair. We must get away altogether from those primitive notions of the spirit which regard it as implanted and foreordained. From the standpoint of child training we must take the rational view that the personality traits of a child are at least no more predetermined than is his physical health. Just as his physique can be modified by proper care, so does his personality respond to hygiene.

The statement "He has brains enough to do better" reveals a wrong point of view. A child's intelligence is not something altogether apart from his personality, nor is his personality apart from his brains. The child's brain or nervous system is the basis of all his behavior, emotional as well as intellectual. The nervous tissue in some way or other has registered all his previous experience and prompts him in his present behavior. His conduct is not lawless, it is the logical outcome and product of his training. The child in the very nature of things, therefore, can not act either better or worse than his brains. After all, is it not comforting to reflect that even personality is not beyond the domain of natural law?

The personality of a child is plastic for the simple reason that it grows. If it simply unfolded like a complicated jack-knife or expanded from small to large like a toy balloon, it would be outside of those influences which we call training. But it grows like an organic structure which reflects in a marvelous manner the impress of the home and the social environment. Original nature, so called, provides certain tendencies or materials, but the final patterns of personality are the result of education or experience. Take the matter of fear, for example. Nature fortunately supplies every individual with a certain general tendency to fear. But what the child shall fear, how intensely and how wisely he shall fear, depends upon all sorts of regulations both from within and without. So it is with all the many traits of personality. They are not altogether premade.

And of what is personality made? This is a fair question, because the psychologist himself uses the expression personality make-up. Well, it is made up of countless impressions, habituations, likes and dislikes, of prejudices good and bad, of more or less conscious motives and compunctions, of wishes and strivings, and above all of habits of feeling. Personality is compounded out of the child's every-day experience. Personality is always in the making. And in the early stage of childhood it is peculiarly responsive to wise training.

WHAT FORMS A BABY'S PERSONALITY?

THE formation of personality begins at birth. Even the newborn babe is not an absolutely vegetative being. He has a remarkable capacity for learning and for making associations. First these associations gather about the fundamentals of life, such as feeding, sleeping, dressing, shelter and bathing. Mother and nurse give him constant care. Every ministration for his comfort and protection leaves its impression, and out of these impressions emerge certain expectations or tendencies of behavior. At first he may cry indiscriminately at every ministration. In two weeks, however, he may cry "in order" to be picked up, and then subside abruptly into silence the moment he is held. We need not ascribe any self-conscious personality sense to him in order to recognize the important fact that he is being conditioned to certain modes of behavior by the kind of treatment he is receiving.

Due to this ceaseless conditioning process he grows as rapidly in mind as in body. At the end of the first month he is much less of a little unreasoning animal than he was at birth; he is more of an individual.

At four months he is beginning to raise his back from his pillow, to take notice of people, to follow objects with his eyes, and to make struggling gestures toward them.

In two more months—that is, when he is half a year old—he can sit up and his head no longer wobbles. He can grasp an object, lift a cup, bang, crumple and tear things. He can hold a bottle while nursing and, if it slips, restore it to his mouth. This is the beginning of self-help. And it is apparent that his numerous reactions are suffused and bound together by emotional attitudes. Personality is in the making.

At twelve months he has made many gains. He can stand up. He can articulate and scribble with a crayon. He can unwrap a box from its paper wrapping. He even tries to put on his shoes. Emotionally he is indeed a little person. He has fears, reluctances, inhibitions; he has his tempers and his tantrums; he is assertive, self-preservative. He may be jealous; he has his affections, preferences and prejudices. He tries to do what he sees others doing; he even pretends to do what he can't do—to read or to comb his hair. He may show imitative sympathy. He may hold his breath and turn blue when something is taken away from him.

Even at the tender age of one year a child may be the victim of fictitious habits and of vicious up-bringing. On the other hand, we have seen any number of year-old babies at our clinic whose personalities could only be described by such adjectives as good-natured, poised, executive, independent, wholesome, amiable or alert.

WHAT ARE BAD PERSONALITY HABITS?

EVEN very fine babies may be spoiled in a few years if the influences which make for the healthy development of personality do not prevail. Recently we made a study of fifty four-year-old children—ordinary, "normal" children from moderately prosperous homes. In every case a careful interview was conducted with the mother to learn how well her child was behaving, not in the moral sense but in the broader, psychological or mental-hygiene sense of the term behavior.

What did we find among these fifty normal children? We found many delightful and promising personalities, to be sure, but we also found the following cases of faulty behavior:

A girl who had to be coaxed to eat.

A boy who sucked his thumb.

A girl who vomited if forced to eat anything she did not like.

A boy who always protested against going to bed. (He had always been rocked to sleep when a baby.)

A girl who was curiously afraid of feathers and pieces of cotton.

A boy who was excessively shy before strangers. He refused to go into other children's houses.

A girl who would not touch potatoes. She had tantrums regularly. "You can't reason with her until they are over," said her mother.

A boy who ate and slept whenever he wanted to. He lived on a very irregular schedule. He had tantrums, too, and he would wet himself during the day as well as at night. He talked in his sleep, and had to have a light in his room to sleep by. He had also formed the habit of grinding his teeth.

A boy who dominated his mother by fussing. He showed jealousy by biting his father.

All these children were just four years of age when these behavior records were made. Do we need further proof that the parents' vigilance must begin early—that the growth of personality must be protected even in the nursery?

It is interesting to note that most of the behavior problems listed above relate to such simply "physical" matters as eating, sleeping and elimination. Yet these are not purely physical matters after all—it would be just as true to say that they are personality matters. Take the case of the little girl who would not touch potatoes. She ate them later when she went to the hospital. She really had no physical intolerance for potatoes, but rather a personality intolerance for them. She was "mentally" conditioned by some previous experience to resist potatoes at home. A child like that should be and could be reconditioned—that is, given a new set of personality habits.

I am always much interested in the common case of the child who will not eat vegetables at home, but will eat them readily when away from home. It must mean that there are some mental factors in the family situation which reach the boy's personality make-up and cause him to be different and difficult at home.

We also often see the child who "simply won't drink milk," but who will do so after a few days or weeks of training in a good nursery school where his personality pattern is literally reconditioned.

Then take the child who wets his bed. Now there may be medical factors which must always be considered in such a case; but often a child can be promptly reconditioned by a simple process of suggestion, such as offering him a little "gold star" reward for each successful control. By this simple method of approach he will take a new attitude and acquire a new set of habits. He will be reeducated. Personality faults frequently yield to such reeducation if we apply the simple rules of habit training and awaken a favorable attitude. Still better, many bad personality faults will not develop at all if we keep the one-year-old baby in good psychological trim by preserving wholesome habits of eating, sleeping, elimination, rest and play.

HOW CAN CHILDISH PERSONALITY FAULTS BE MANAGED?

WE HAVE discussed the early growth of personality traits because in the recognition of the importance of these early stages lie the practical keys to prevention and to cure. Prevention is, of course, the easier and the wiser of the two.

Therefore the first rule is to begin right. Don't try to make a paragon of your child. Don't try to instil obedience and self-control and good nature as so many special virtues, but let these be gradually built up as the by-products of wholesome habits of every-day living.

Continued on page 86

THE HAPPY CHILD DEPARTMENT

Directed by

DR. HENRY L. K. SHAW

Recently President of the American Child Hygiene Association; Consultant of the Division of Maternity, Infancy and Child Hygiene in the New York State Department of Health

ARE YOU A "HAPPY CHILD" MOTHER?

That's to say are you a member of "The Happy Child Clubs," and do you get Doctor Shaw's monthly letters?

They're letters from this eminent child specialist, warning of seasonal epidemics, discussing important problems of hygiene, and helping you bring your little one up in health and strength. Every month four different letters go out according to the ages of the children: one for Expectant Mothers, one for New Babies, a third concerning little Runabouts, and a fourth about School Children. Four clubs - four letters!

Membership in a single club is only fifty cents a year, and in all four the special price of one dollar. Send your dues to "The Happy Child Clubs," THE DELINEATOR, Butterick Building, New York, N. Y., stating which membership you wish, and your first letter will go to you at once.

MY LITTLE PAGE

DEAR EASTER FLOWERS: Well, one Easter I called you chick-chick-chick-a-dees, and you didn't mind; so this time, I'll call you Easter flowers, and I hope the boys don't mind! You boys can pretend you're Johnny jump-ups and Bachelors' Buttons, Ragged Robins, Jacks-in-the-Pulpit and Sweet Williams, while the girls may be Roses, Hyacinths, Violets, Daisies, Marigolds and Black-eyed Susans.

Your Easter editor (who loves flowers),

HARRIET IDE EAGER.

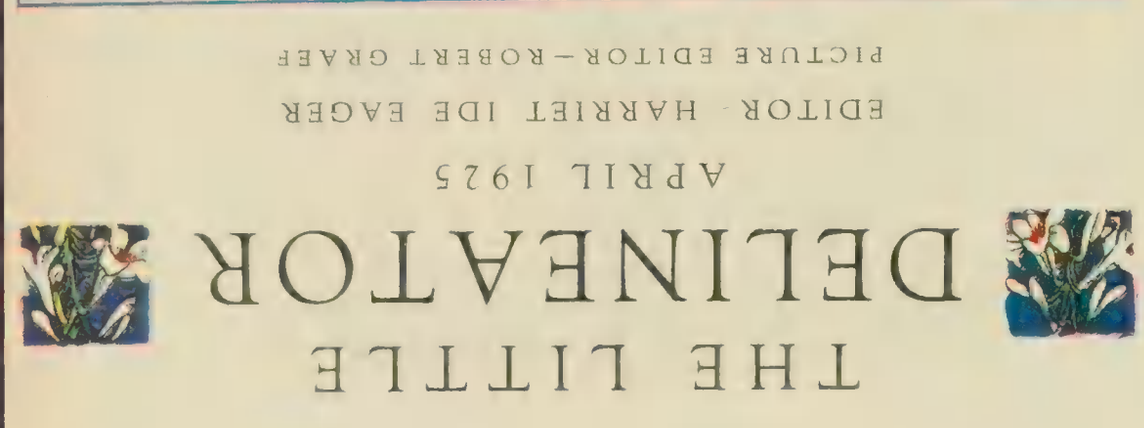
HERE IS AN EASY EASTER CARD TO TRACE OR COPY. YOUR EDITOR WOULD LOVE TO GET ONE FROM YOU

The Deli-Club

New readers, come and join! Just send a two-cent stamp, to pay for your blue D. C. badge. And both new and old members, send also a stamped envelope, addressed to yourself, for the April Club-Secret Letter. Address Deli-Club, THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, New York, N. Y.

Copyright, 1925, by The Butterick Publishing Company.

A BIG BUNNY PICTURE LIKE THIS, FRAMED, IS SECOND PRIZE IN THE RAINY DAY CONTEST ON PAGE SIX



THE LITTLE DELINEATOR

APRIL 1925

EDITOR · HARRIET IDE EAGER

PICTURE EDITOR—ROBERT GRAEF

Hello, four-legged insect! Don't you let her fool you! (Imitates MISS DRAGON-FLY'S voice): I was bor-rn on a r-rainbow and I have always been bee-yoo-tiful, bee-yoo-tiful, bee—Haw! Haw! Haw! I know something about your past, young lady!

TOMMY TIPTOE: Who are you?

MR. WATER-SKATER (still racing all over the water): Me! Excuse me, I should say, I? Mr. Water-skater, at your service. Shall I catch you a nice bug for your lunch? No? Well, sir, I'm Mr. Water-skater. And I've got eight little hearts a-pumpin' inside of me, sir——

MISS DRAGON-FLY (haughtily): So have I!

MR. WATER-SKATER (paying no attention): And I breathe through little openings in my sides, like buttonholes——

MISS DRAGON-FLY (angrily): So do I!

MR. WATER-SKATER: And my body's made in hard rings with skin between, so my skeleton's my skin and my skin's my skeleton——

MISS DRAGON-FLY (almost crying): So—so's mine!

MR. WATER-SKATER (paying no attention and skating in zig-zags as he chants to himself): My skeleton is my skin and my skin's my skeleton and my skeleton's my skin and my skin's my skeleton and——

MISS DRAGON-FLY (crying to TOMMY): So's mine! So's mine! All insects are made that way! He needn't act so stuck up.

MR. WATER-SKATER (skating past and nudging her with his elbow): Who's stuck up! (Imitates her again): 'I'm the Lovely Lady of the Pond! I was born on the rainbow and' —(to TOMMY): Boy, she was the ugliest baby! Big gray head and bull-dog false-face with a sharp tongue hidden away, and a little gray body like a spider's——

TOMMY TIPTOE (putting his arm around MISS DRAGON-FLY, who has fluttered to his side): How do you know?

MR. WATER-SKATER (cheerfully): Saw her at the bottom of the pond, of course, in the slime and mud. Her dear (he sniffs) mother dropped her there with four hundred and ninety-nine other eggs before (he draws a big red handkerchief out of his pocket, wipes his eyes and blows his nose very loud) before she—(he sniffs) she died. I watched her crawling about on all fours, ugly little gray wretch, fooling water bugs with that false-face of hers and gobbling 'em up for dinner. Oh, I know her!

TOMMY TIPTOE: How could you get under the water?

MR. WATER-SKATER: Me? Excuse me, I mean I? I've little extra breathing gills, like fish, so I can dive down easy. I know lots of people at the bottom of the pond.

Voice of LITTLE GRAY DRAGON (wailing far away): My time has come! My time has come! My time has co-o-o-me!

TOMMY TIPTOE (excited): What's that? (He nearly falls off the leaf looking over the edge down into the water.)

(MISS DRAGON-FLY clasps her heart, frightened and darts about, peering down.)

MR. WATER-SKATER: Sh-h!

Voice of LITTLE GRAY DRAGON: I'm climbing up, I'm climbing up, I'm climbing u-up—a water we-ee-eed!

TOMMY TIPTOE: What——

MR. WATER-SKATER: Sh-h!

Voice of LITTLE GRAY DRAGON: I'm almost there! I'm almost there! I'm almost there—at the top of the pond!

(The ugly head of LITTLE GRAY DRAGON appears above the stone.)

MISS DRAGON-FLY (starting back with her nose in the air): Ugh! You ugly thing!

MR. WATER-SKATER: Better be polite, young lady!

(MISS DRAGON-FLY shakes herself indignantly and flutters away.)

TOMMY TIPTOE: Oh, look! look! What's it doing?

LITTLE GRAY DRAGON: I'm shedding my last skin! I'm shedding my last sk-i-n!

(It wriggles out of its old gray suit, and crouches behind the stone. Suddenly as music begins to play, LITTLE GRAY DRAGON leaps up. She is dressed exactly like MISS DRAGON-FLY, but she is smaller and even more beautiful. She flits about the water, joyfully chanting the song: "Oh, I, Oh, I am the dragon-fly, Here I fly, etc.")

(MISS DRAGON-FLY stands stock still, watching in surprise.)

TOMMY TIPTOE (excited): She's more beautiful than Miss Dragon-fly! (He tries suddenly to grab her as she flits past.)

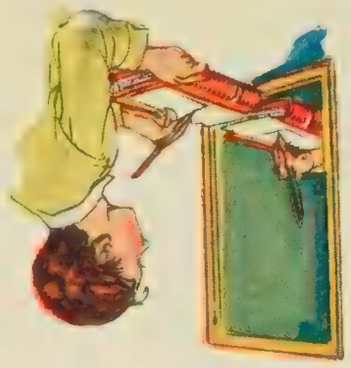
MR. WATER-SKATER (chasing merrily after her and calling back over his shoulder to MISS DRAGON-FLY): Go kiss her! She's your own little sister from the bottom of the pond.



MISS DRAGON-FLY: My own little sister! From the bottom of the pond! (She stands hesitating, then suddenly she smiles, holds out her arms, flies to her sister and kisses her lightly. Then hand in hand the two flutter and dance about on the water, chanting: "Oh, I, Oh, I am the dragon-fly, Here I fly," while MR. WATER-SKATER skates comically after, imitating them, and TOMMY TIPTOE keeps time to the music with his feet. As they all flutter off the stage TOMMY jumps upon his tiptoes and across to the bank with a leap in the air.)

TOMMY TIPTOE: Isn't it fun to be one inch high! (He runs off as the curtain falls.)

For a special Easter program of recitations for school or Sunday school, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to "Easter Program" THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, New York, N.Y.

How do you while away a rainy day? Your editor will give a first prize of two dollars for the most interesting, different, simple idea for something pleasant to do or make on a rainy day. Second prize—a big picture like this month's Easter Bunny cover, framed. Contest closes April 20th. Address Rainy Day contest, THE LITTLE DELINEATOR, New York, N. Y.

DEAR MISS EAGER: I am sending a drawing trick. Stand in front of a looking-glass with a board or book in front to make it level. Place a paper on the book and try to draw a square and its diagonals on the paper, looking only in the glass. It really is very hard. FREDERICK WHEELER.

Here is a bean-bag game for a rainy day indoors

